Vol. 23 No. 29 — TABLE ROCK, NEBR., MAY 8, 1914 — Whole No. 1662

John W. Hastings Passes Away

John W. Hastings was born in Richland county, Ohio, February 16, 1840, and passed away at his home, four and one half miles northeast of Table Rock, May 2, 1914, at the age of seventy-four years, two months and sixteen days.

While not very strong, he seemed as well as usual, Saturday morning and was helping with the chores, but when he did not respond to a call to breakfast, his son Emery hurried out, and found him lying unconscious in the yard. He lived only a few minutes after the arrival of the doctor, who was called immediately.

On December 24, 1868, Mr. Hastings was married to Miss Martha M. Grieve, at Tipton, Cedar county, Iowa, and to this union ten children were born. Three of these were called home before their father's summons came, Elmira C., Charles H. and George H.

The remaining children are, Mrs. Nora M. Marquett, Albia, Iowa, Esrom W., Portis, Osborn Co, Kansas, Eva J. Dalkey, Humboldt and Warren H., William B., Emery H., and Frank E. of Table Rock, all of whom gathered at home as soon as possible to comfort their sorrowing mother, who has been very sick for two weeks.

John W. Hastings served his country faithfully as a soldier, enlisting in Company F, 24, Regiment Volunteer Infantry, at Lisbon, Iowa, August 8th, 1862 and was honorably discharged after serving two years and six months.

At the time of his death, he was officer of the day in John N. Gere Post No. 165 Table Rock Department of Nebraska and he had at various times filled other important offices, being one year junior vice, one year senior vice, and two years commander of the post.

Since coming to Pawnee County in 1891, Mr. Hastings, has made many warm friends, and will be greatly missed in the home, and the community.

The relatives who came from a distance to attend the funeral services beside the children are Mr. Warren Hastings, Gillman, Ill., brother; Mrs. Samuel Hastings, Jesse Hastings, Mrs. Lizzie Bramburg, all of Kansas City Kansas, sister-in-law, nephew, asd niece; Mr. George Grieve and John Grieve of Portis, Kansas, brother-in-law, and nephew; Mrs. Emma Millage, Alva, Okla., niece; and Mr. James Barclay, Humboldt, Nebr., nephew.

The funeral service was held at the family residence. Rev. Wimberly had charge of the services. The old soldiers were pall bearers.

DON'T GET INTO DEBT ON A RENTED FARM

Get into the dairy business on your own farm. I can put you in touch with the owners of fine prairie lands of rich soil, from 300 to 400 miles west of Omaha, which can be bought on very easy terms at from $15 to $40 per acre. You are sure to make money by modern dairy practice, because the silo is the solution of the dairy problem and feed crops are heavy on these lands. If you haven't money at first to build a silo, dig one. Good farmers with proper equipment and feed can secure cows on time.

These owners make these special terms to dairy farmers, because they know that a good dairy farmer can make money by corn-dairy farming and will soon clean up his obligations. Then hogs and poultry fit right in and round out the profits. These 160-acre tracts are located among improved farms in established communities.

Give me your name, let me help you become the owner of a dairy farm, no matter whether you want to buy on easy terms in Nebraska or Eastern Colorado, or whether you want to homestead a 320-acre Mondell tract in Wyoming.

A PRAYER FOR MOTHERS

By Rev. C. P. W. Wimberly.

O, God, our heavenly Father, we offer the gratitude and benediction for the sweet ministries of motherhood in human life. We bless Thee for our own dear mothers who built up our lives by theirs; who bore us in travail and loved us more for the pain we gave; who nourished us at their breast and hushed us to sleep in the warm security of their arms. We thank Thee for their tireless love; for their voiceless prayers, for the agony with which they followed us through our sins and won us back for the Christly power of sacrifice and redemption in motherlove. We pray Thee to forgive us, if in thoughtless selfishness, we have taken their love as our due without giving the tenderness which they craved as their sole reward. And if the great treasure of a mother's life is still spared to us, may we do for her what she did for ours.

We earnestly pray for for all good women who are now bearing the pain of maternity. Grant them strength of body and mind for the new task. Widen their vision that they may see themselves, not as mothers of one child alone, but as the patriot women of their nation, who alone can build up the better future with fresh and purer life. Put upon the girls of our country the awe of their future calling, that they preserve their bodies and minds in purety and strength for the holy task to which God has called them.

Bestow thy special grace, we beseech Thee, on all women who have the yearnings of motherhood, but whose lives are barren of its joys. If any form of human sin has robbed them of the prize of life grant them righteous anger and vilaint hearts to fight that sin on behalf of those who come after them. Help them to overcome the bitterness of disappointment, and to find an outlet for their thwarted motherlove in the wider ministrations of all the lonely and unmothered hearts in thy great family on earth.

As the protecting motherlove wrought blindly in the earliest upward climb of life, may it now, with open eyes and strong with Christly passion, set its tireless strength to lift humanity from the reign of brutal force and to found the larger family of men on the blessed power of love. For the sake of the Devine Christ who was born of a woman we offer this prayer. Amen.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR Social

In the rush and hurry last week we failed to mention the C. E. social held at the home of Rev. and Mrs. Wimberly on Friday night April 24. We certainly did not forget the event or even overlook it. It was a case of "let something go" and we had to let that go that we couldn't get to, and it just happened that we could not get time to write up this social. Mr. Wimberly has always boasted of what a good cook he was and the young people have given him a test and they are willing to take him at his word. The young people are real admirers of Mr. Wimberly and he is so friendly to the young people that it was considered a rare treat to go to a social at his house for they knew that Mr. and Mrs. Wimberly would make the evening a very pleasant one and they certainly did.

THE OPENING OF THE C. C NEUFIELD STOCK AT TABLE ROCK A GRAND SUCCESS.

The opening of the C. C. Neufield store with their big Opening Sale was a success far above their anticipation. The crowds swarmed the big store every day and the enthusiasm in the piano contest was keen from the start to finish. One of the features of the sale was the giving away of a $350 piano on the last day of the two weeks opening. The contest waxed warm with 11 contestants But in the final count the fight dropped off to 2 contestants; the M. E. church and the Presbyterian church. The crowds waited the final count which was at midnight Saturday night, the Presbyterian church getting the award by having the greatest number of votes. The Presbyterian crowd then moved the piano to their church for the Sunday service. Other features of the sale were the one hour specials and the Broon Bragade. The sale was a success in every way.

SYNOPSIS.

Rudolph Van Vechten, a young man of leisure, is astonished to see a man enter No. 1313, a house across the street from the Powhatan club, long unoccupied and spoken of as the House of Mystery. Several persons, at regular intervals enter No. 1313. Van Vechten expresses concern to his friend, Tom Phinney, regarding the whereabouts of his cousin and fiancee, Paige Carew. A man is forcibly ejected from the house. Van Vechten and Tom follow the man and find him dead in the street. Van Vechten is attracted by the face of a girl in the crowd of onlookers surrounding the body. Later he discovers the girl gazing at him with a look of scorn from the windows of the mysterious house. Detective Flint calls on Van Vechten to get his version of the tragedy. Tom Phinney goes alone on a yachting trip. He recognizes among some persons in a passing motor boat two men whom he had seen enter the House of Mystery. He sees one of them, a Mr. Callis, on shore later and follows him. Tom is seized, blindfolded and taken to a house. He hears a girl named Jessie, evidently the daughter of the man in authority, question his captors. A sweet-voiced girl later protests against the roughness of his captors. Van Vechten calls on his uncle, Theodore Van Vechten, big man in Wall street and known as the "Man of Iron," in search of information regarding the whereabouts of Paige Carew. Detective Flint shows Van Vechten a gold mesh purse found in the House of Mystery. Van recognizes it as belonging to Paige Carew. The sweet-voiced girl helps Tom Phinney escape. Detective Flint tells Van Vechten he has a theory that Paige has been kidnaped. Messages are sent to Europe in an effort to trace Paige. Tom tells Van Vechten he is in love and relates his adventure. A message from London reports that two ladies resembling Miss Carew and her companion, Mrs. Devereaux, sailed for New York some time previously. A reward of $2,500 is offered. It develops that the ladies visited the English home of Temple Bonner, owner of the House of Mystery. Flint has a theory that they are connected with the mystery of No. 1313.

BOOK II.

CHAPTER VIII.

The Ghost of Romance.

Van Vechten's admission was accepted by Mr. Flint quite as a matter of course; as if he would have been exceedingly surprised if the young man had identified the lady of the taxicab with some other entirely different person. Said he:

"I shall sketch briefly as much of the Schuyler-Bonner history as I have learned; then, Mr. Van Vechten, you will see what I want to know.

"In the seventies and early eighties, Compton Schuyler was a prominent figure, a man of affairs, in the New York commercial world, and as fortunes went in those days, a wealthy man. Besides, he was of the old Dutch stock; his home was a center of the fashionable life of the city. Two beautiful, charming daughters greatly enhanced this attraction, so that the name was really better known socially than in a business way. At that period his home was looked upon as a mansion, and that young man who stood in the family's good graces counted himself fortunate indeed.

"It was only an inevitable consequence that the two Schuyler sisters carried a long string of suitors in their train, they were social favorites and enjoyed the supremacy which for several years discouraged all idea of matrimony.

"Then conditions began to change. One misfortune followed another so that in a remarkably short time the family sank into comparative obscurity, and, in the cruel way society has of giving her erstwhile favorites the cold shoulder, speedily forgotten.

"First, through a series of bad investments, Schuyler lost the bulk of his fortune. A few months previously Josephine had married against her father's consent, and her husband, Percy Devereaux, showed the sort of specimen he was by promptly deserting her when the loss became known. Next, Mrs. Schuyler died suddenly.

"Hope of rehabilitating the family and of recouping its dwindling fortunes was now all centered in the remaining sister—Henrietta. Among her suitors was one young man who was not only her social equal, but heir to one of the largest fortunes in the world. Every mother in New York with a marriageable daughter, to say nothing of many abroad—especially in England—had marked this young man for her legitimate prey; but he loved Henrietta Schuyler and was so devoted and open in his preference that the matrimonial schemers were one and all discouraged.

"But with all his wealth and superior position, the course of true love did not run smooth for Temple Bonner. The facts would make a plot for a novel. There was yet another young man among those who came a-courting at the old brownstone mansion, but one vastly different in many respects from Bonner. This man's name was Willard—Max Willard."

"I've heard the name," muttered Van Vechten.

"It was an irony of Fate," pursued Mr. Flint, "that Bonner and Willard should not only be friends, but the closest sort of intimacy existed between them, a genuine Damon and Pythias attachment.

"Willard lacked about every advantage possessed by his rival; he was poor, unattractive in appearance, and had many peculiar traits which made enemies where Templer Bonner won friends. He was regarded as a visionary, a crank, a man who would never make his mark. However, he must have possessed some unusual quality, because Temple Bonner had implicit faith in him—believed that he was a genius of some sort; but it was characteristic of Willard that he would accept no assistance from his more fortunate rival.

"Bonner, it would seem, felt his own position keenly. He realized that his friend was almost overwhelmingly handicapped, and as well as I can piece out from what actually happened, he withdrew temporarily from the field and gave Max Willard every opportunity to advance his suit. I suppose the idea was, that if Willard was successful, Bonner would abide by the consequences; if not, then Willard was to stand aside and give Bonner his chance. Much of this is guesswork; it is hard to arrive at the truth at this late day; but certain circumstances exist which indicate that what I am telling you is what actually happened.

"It would appear from the sequel that Max Willard had been the favored one all along. Temple Bonner went abroad; within two months Willard and Miss Henrietta had eloped and were married; within ten minutes after he received news of the runaway wedding Compton Schuyler had blown out his brains.

"There are the naked facts.

"Temple Bonner never returned to America, and Max Willard, instead of justifying his friend's confidence in his talents—whatever their bent might have been—had dropped entirely from sight. His wife, you tell me, has been dead a long time; but were there no children? Is Max Willard still alive, where is he, has he any family, what is his occupation? Those are the things I want you to find out. I fancy the runaway match, with all its attendant circumstances, created something of a stir at the time; some of your older friends should be able and willing to supply you with the facts."

"Oh, I have no doubt that I can learn all you want to know," agreed Van Vechten. "Most of what you have just told me is not exactly news; but I had forgotten it—it all happened before my time, you know. Josephine is generally regarded by her friends as a woman who has suffered much, one deserving pity and sympathy, but—heavens and earth—she is no martyr to tribulation; she's the jolliest sort imaginable. . . . But how will this help you to solve your murder problem, or—what more nearly concerns me—find some trace of my cousin?"

For some moments Mr. Flint sat silent, gazing meditatively through the window. Number 1313's dingy front loomed dingier than ever in the late afternoon sunshine; but Mr. Flint had no eyes for the old house just at present. After a bit he turned to Van Vechten.

"Before answering your question, Mr. Van Vechten, I am going to lay another matter before you," said he gravely; "it may seem impertinently personal, but there are occasions when the ordinary civilities and amenities must be laid aside and disregarded. I know that you and Miss Carew are engaged to be married; I do not mention the sentiment that usually accompanies such a conventionality, for perhaps I shall pain you; but isn't there a possibility that she has become interested in another more recent love affair?"

"Flint," was the prompt response, "you are not trespassing upon my feelings in the least, and I am going to be frank with you. The engagement you speak of has always been more or less of a tacit understanding in our family. Paige is only a distant cousin, you know; but we are a clannish set, we Van Vechtens, and she and I have always been awfully fond of each other.

"But as for love. That's another matter. In strictest confidence, Flint, I have an idea that we shall never marry—simply. I am convinced, because I could not insist without forcing myself upon her. No, no; I am much too fond of her for that. And as for another love affair, what earthly reason is there for her making a secret of it? She is not a girl given to romantic fancies or school-girl sentimentality; she is of age, her own mistress; and were she to learn, as I have, that it is possible for either of us to care for somebody else in a way different from our present feelings toward each other, why, she couldn't let me know it fast enough. That's Paige—if anybody must be hurt, have it over and done with as soon as possible."

"I am beginning to form a pretty fair idea of your cousin," observed Mr. Flint. "Her intelligence, courage and independent character make it all the more necessary that I learn everything possible about Max Willard. I suppose that she and Mrs. Devereaux are very much attached to each other?"

"Paige and Josephine? I can't say they are like mother and daughter—Josephine's heart is much too young for that—chums would be more nearly accurate. Yet Mrs. Devereaux has been a mother to Paige, and the very strongest ties of affection and confidence bind them together."

Mr. Flint slowly nodded his head, as if these disclosures were right in harmony with whatever theory he was evolving.

"One thing more," said he. "It is strange that it has never occurred to you, with your intimate understanding of your cousin, that nothing at all has happened to her, that her prolonged absence without communicating with relatives or friends is an act of her own free will."

"But it did occur to me," Van Vechten contradicted. "And it is my knowledge of Paige that renders such a hypothesis wholly absurd."

Again Mr. Flint nodded understandingly.

"Now," said he, "I'll answer your question, as to why I attach so much importance to finding Max Willard; although what I have already told you should supply the explanation. I want to discover the motive that influenced Temple Bonner to disregard his own iron-bound system of doing business and establish a precedent by interposing personally in the case of the house across the street. It is remarkable that he should do such a thing for anybody. If Max Willard is alive, the old friendship would supply that motive. Then it would be high time to get in touch with Willard and learn what he's up to."

"Perhaps," Van Vechten reflectively offered, "Temple Bonner's sentiment about the house extended to preserving everything just as it was when he was attentive to Miss Henrietta. But he has never come back to it."

"That was precisely the impression I gathered. Aside from the gold purse, I found nothing whatever of any interest to my investigation."

Van Vechten asked carelessly:

"If one were minded to, could one get in?"

The detective smiled. "Are you thinking of attempting it?"

"Maybe I shall—if the obstacles in the way are not insurmountable. You see, Flint, I may stumble upon something of value as a clue; something that was meaningless to you with your scant knowledge of family traditions."

The detective passed a flat key across the table, saying merely: "The back door; you reach it through the alley."

Van Vechten pocketed the key.

Turning to Tom, Mr. Flint had just asked him to recount his Rocky Cove experience, when the arrival of another messenger boy with a fresh bundle of cablegrams interrupted him.

These messages were the remaining replies to those sent by Van Vechten in the morning, and, in addition, a notification from the telegraph company of failure to deliver the cablegram to Paige at Paris.

They proved to be similar in tenor to those received earlier in the day—one and all they declared entire ignorance of Paige Carew's whereabouts.

CHAPTER IX.

Un Enfant Perdu.

Whether Mr. Flint attached any particular importance to anything in Tom Phinney's recital, Van Vechten was unable to determine, either from the detective's fixed expression (or absence of expression), or the few questions he asked when Tom had finished. These interrogations were aimed solely at aiding Tom to remember the motorboat's occupants; but excepting the suppositious servant and the sandy-complexioned man—now identified as John Callis—Tom's description was exceedingly vague.

Before leaving, Mr. Flint said to Van Vechten:

"I am liable to be looking you up almost any minute of the day or night. I expect to be pretty busy, but it is impossible to foretell precisely in what way my efforts will be directed. May I count on you spending as much of your time here as you can?"

The young man nodded. "If I am not here I shall leave word so you may know where to find me."

Tom, after the detective was gone, reverted to a topic which he had broached earlier in the day.

"Are you going to use the motor for a while, Ruddy? I want to take a run down to Maiden Lane if you're not."

The other roused sufficiently from his puzzling reflections to give the speaker a questioning look. "Maiden Lane?" he repeated.

Tom amplified.

"Chap down there—wealthy diamond importer—was wanting a skipper for his steam yacht. Brownlow's his name—met him at the Payne-French's last week. He was asking me about it; suppose he heard that I was interested in yachting. I have a master's certificate, you know; that's one job I can hold down."

Tom was moody, and for the time being Van Vechten laid aside his own perplexities.

"So," he said, "you are still determined to go to work?"

Tom nodded. "Most of the time you chaps were talking I was thinking the whole thing over. It's really not likely I shall ever meet that girl, Ruddy; it's too deuced improbable to hope such a thing. Just the same, I mean to get busy. I want to get away. I want to feel that I am doing something worth while. I can run old Brownlow's yacht just as well as anybody I might recommend, if not better, and I'm going after the berth myself. Can I refer him to you?"

"Certainly," said Van Vechten. "Take the car for as long as you want it; if I have to go anywhere I'll use a taxi. Send Mr. Brownlow to me if he wants any recommendations of your qualifications to handle a yacht, steam or sail. And you would be safe in mentioning Fred Carteret, too. Good luck, Tom."

And Mr. Tom Phinney departed to call on the wealthy diamond importer.

Left thus to himself, Van Vechten took from his pocket the key which Mr. Flint had given him, and sat contemplating it for some minutes. By and by he returned it to his pocket, then pushing back his chair, rose and fell to pacing to and fro the width of the lounging-room. As he passed each of the big plate-glass windows—they were screened, however, at this season—he would glance across the street at the silent house. At last he halted and, hands in pockets, stood staring at the dingy facade, his mien pensive.

"Why not?" his thoughts presently crystallized. "Now is as good as any time. It's too late in the day to undertake anything else; besides, there is nothing to do but wait. Lord—wait! It would be a relief to have the universe come tumbling around one's ears. After Flint's yarn, it will be interesting to have a squint inside. Queer, queer."

Now perhaps he forgot his promise to Flint to leave word respecting his movements, or else he did not consider a brief absence merely across the street of sufficient consequence to be mentioned; however that may be, he left the club without a word to anybody.

A minute or two later he stood in the indescribably littered and filthy backyard of Number 1313. In truth, the place was no more than a small brick-paved court. It was walled all about, and a short flight of stone steps leading downward to a basement door bore the only evidence of recent use. Here, patently, was the door to which the key belonged.

He unhesitatingly went down the half-dozen or so steps, and when he stopped to insert the key in the lock received the initial surprise of his adventure.

Before he succeeded in getting the key into the keyhole, the door swung open at his touch. Besides being unlocked, the latch was not even caught.

FOUND HAPPINESS IN LABOR

Sensible if Unusual Course Followed by Man Who Had Millions at His Command.

A forceful lesson in the human nature which rules us all may be gathered from the experience of the young man who, inheriting a large fortune, was wise enough to realize that no man, rich or poor, can find happiness except in work and accomplishment.

This man, while still in college, fell heir to several millions, but tired of the futility of an existence in which there was no element of difficulty, left his home and college, obtained employment on the construction line of a railroad, rose on his own merits to be a section boss and now reports himself thoroughly happy.

His action was futile and foolish for one who might use the power of wealth for his pleasure and others' good, it may be said, but it shows that he realized the real unhappiness of those who try to be happy without the stress of work, be it self-imposed or necessary for self-support.

No men are more unhappy than those from whom circumstances have removed the pressure which requires hard work, and who have not had either the willingness or foresight to force themselves to tasks which call for their best and utmost endeavor. Often, indeed, it may seem that nothing would be pleasanter than a life of luxurious idleness, but one has only to see the victims of such living to be disabused of this delusion.

In this country the privileges and responsibilities of great inherited wealth have been but recently experienced, and the very newness of such possessions has led many to waste their lives in the futile quest of pleasure. Luckily today more and more of the sons of rich men have grown to understand that they can lead a satisfactory existence only if they live much as others do, using their wealth rather to enlarge the results of their work than to escape its call.

PROFIT FROM FAMILY COWS

Important Animal Be Vigorous and Sound and Be Submitted to Tuberculin Test Annually.

(By LAURA ROSE STEPHENS. Copyright, 1914.)

A question often asked is: "Does it pay to keep a cow for family use." If there is a fair sized family, if no extra help is needed to look after the cow and if there be a convenient place to house and pasture her, then keep a good cow.

A Jersey, Guernsey or Ayrshire might be chosen. The Jersey and Guernsey give rich milk, which readily creams owing to the fat globules in their milk. The Ayrshire gives a well sustained flow for table use, as it contains the smallest fat globules and does not cream so readily.

If a family is to consume the milk of one cow it is important that she be vigorous and sound and be submitted to the tuberculin test once a year, for the danger of drinking milk continuously from a diseased cow is apparent. That is the reason why herd's milk is to be preferred to the individual cows unless the health of the cow is assured.

Regular hours for milking and feeding are necessary, and a cow must be liberally fed. Often the owner of one cow is an amateur and has no idea of the immense capacity of a cow's stomach, for a good sized animal's stomach holds 35 gallons. So give her all she will eat in two hours twice daily and provide some form of succulent food for winter in order to maintain the milk flow. Roots, beets, carrots and mangels make a splendid substitute for silage; so also does steamed hay. Put the hay through a cutter, then put into a water-tight box and pour over it hot water, cover tightly and leave till next day. On top of this moist hay feed meal, from four to eight pounds per day, according to the milk flow. Crushed oats, three pounds; bran, four pounds and oilcake, one pound, make a good mixture also. Feed some uncut clover hay at noon.

Give the cow twice daily all the water she will drink, for there is a vital connection between the milk flow and the water supply, milk being 87 per cent water.

One cow's feed for a year amounts to from $45 to $60, varying with food prices and cow's appetite.

The lactation period should be ten months, allowing the cow to be dry two months to recuperate herself and properly nourish her unborn calf.

During this resting period reduce the meal ration to one and one-half pounds bran and one-half pound oilcake. The cow must be in good condition at freshening time.

WILL STOP PETTY THIEVING

Automatic Device Locks Milk Bottle In Such Manner That Only Owner Can Remove It.

It is more than a suspicion that some people endeavor to reduce the high cost of living by taking bottles of milk from door steps of late risers. To discourage this form of thrift a device has been invented which automatically locks the bottle in such a manner that it can only be removed by the occupants of the house upon opening the door, says the Popular Mechanics. The contrivance is fastened to the door jamb with screws. When the milkman makes his delivery in the morning, he slips the bottle under two projecting flanges. As the bottle is pushed further in, it comes in contact with a pivoted plate, the outer end of which is bent downward and, when released by the bottle striking the other end, drops, effectively locking the bottle in place. The locking device can only be released by opening the house door.

Plant Grazing Crops.

Milch cows will need succulent food this spring and next winter. Plant crops for early grazing and build a silo and fill it for winter feeding. Succulent food is indispensable to economical milk production.

Microbes Lodge in Seams.

The seams of all pails and cans should be soldered inside and out flush with the surface of the tin. It will last longer and be easier to keep clean. It is in the seams that the microbes lodge and cause mischief.

FEELS LIKE A NEW WOMAN

As Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Dispelled Backache, Headaches and Dizziness.

Piqua, Ohio.—"I would be very ungrateful if I failed to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound the praise it deserves, for I have taken it at different times and it always relieved me when other medicines failed, and when I hear a woman complain I always recommend it. Last winter I was attacked with a severe case of organic weakness. I had backache, pains in my hips and over my kidneys, headache, dizziness, lassitude, had no energy, limbs ached and I was always tired. I was hardly able to do my housework. I had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound on one other occasion, and it had helped me so I took it again and it has built me up, until now I feel like a new woman. You have my hearty consent to use my name and testimonial in any way and I hope it will benefit suffering women."—Mrs. ORPHA TURNER, 431 S. Wayne St., Piqua, Ohio.

Women who are suffering from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

SCALP ITCHED AND BURNED

Greenwood, Ind.—"First my hair began to fall, then my scalp itched and burned when I became warm. I had pimples on my scalp; my hair was falling out gradually until I had scarcely any hair on my head. I couldn't keep the dandruff off at all. My hair was dry and lifeless and I lost rest at night from the terrible itching sensation. I would pull my hat off and scratch my head any place I happened to be.

"For several years I was bothered with pimples on my face. Some of them were hard red spots, some were full of matter, and many blackheads. I was always picking at them and caused them to be sore. They made my face look so badly I was ashamed to be seen.

"I tried massage creams for my face and all kinds of hair tonic and home made remedies, but they only made things worse. Nothing did the work until I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I washed my face with the Cuticura Soap, then put plenty of Cuticura Ointment on. Three months' use of Cuticura Soap and Ointment has made my face as smooth and clean as can be." (Signed) C. M. Hamilton, Sept. 24, 1912.

Have You a Bad Back?

Does your back ache night and day, making work a burden and rest impossible? Do you suffer stabbing, darting pains when stooping or lifting? Most bad backs are due to hidden trouble in the kidneys and if the kidney secretions are scant or too frequent of passage, proof of kidney trouble is complete. Delay may pave the way to serious kidney ills. For bad backs and weak kidneys use Doan's Kidney Pills—recommended the world over.

Finally I used Doan's Kidney Pills and the first box helped me. I kept on until cured and I have been well ever since."

SYMPOSIUM OF SALADS.

A dinner or luncheon without a salad would be as noticeable as to leave out the coffee or tea. The refreshing crisp salads are an aid to digestion, and also add much nutriment in the way of accessories, such as the dressing.

Sweetbread and Cucumber Salad.—Parboil the sweetbreads and put into cold water until ready to make the salad. Pare two medium sized cucumbers and cut into half-inch dice, cut the sweetbread into the same sized pieces. Whip a pint of cream until stiff, stir in gradually a half cupful of boiled dressing, season well with lemon juice, salt, paprika and onion juice, and mix with the meat and cucumber. Heap on lettuce leaves or in cups of head lettuce.

Benares Salad.—This is a most delicious and unusual salad, if it is prepared with fresh cocoanuts. Two cupfuls finely diced cocoanut, a cupful of sour apple diced, a finely chopped red pepper and two tablespoonfuls of finely cut onion or onion juice, a sprinkling of parsley, and serve with a salad dressing made of four parts of oil, one part vinegar, a seasoning of salt and pepper and a teaspoonful of powdered sugar.

Cucumber Salad.—Select large sized cucumbers and without peeling cut a good slice from the side, scoop out the pulp, chop fine, mix with onion and parsley and bits of firm, ripe tomato, cover with French dressing, and heap into the cucumber shells, which are placed on a bed of lettuce leaves.

A very pretty salad, and one which will appeal to a great many tastes, is that of sliced cucumbers and tomatoes laid in overlapping rows on a platter lined with lettuce leaves. The salad dressing is passed after each one has helped himself to the desired vegetables.

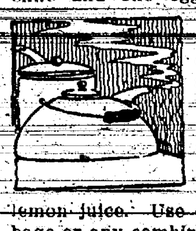
Sliced tomatoes, laid on a lettuce leaf, one slice to a person, heaped with celery and onion finely chopped and served with French dressing makes a most delightful salad.

To be equal, physically and mentally, to our day's work depends upon the food we eat.

The palate is the janitor; unless he be reconciled the most nutritious food will find no welcome.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

When you are looking for a change in salad dressings try the following: Take two rounded tablespoonfuls of mashed potatoes which has been put through a ricer, add a half teaspoonful of mustard, a half teaspoonful of powdered sugar, a few dashes of cayenne and one egg without beating. When well mixed add a cupful of olive oil very slowly. When all the oil is added season with salt and add two tablespoonfuls of vinegar and one of lemon juice. Use on celery and cabbage or any combination of vegetables at hand.



Chicken Cutlets.—This is a dish which will be ideal for a company, and will not prove very expensive. Cook a four-pound fowl in six quarts of boiling water with a carrot sliced, two slices of turnips, salt, a small onion, and a stalk of celery, one bay leaf and three sprigs of thyme. Cook slowly until tender, then remove the fowl, and chop it, not too fine. Make a rich cream sauce, using a quarter of a cupful each of flour and butter, and a cupful of rich milk and a half teaspoonful of salt. The chicken broth may be used instead of the milk, if so desired. Moisten the chopped chicken with the sauce, add a beaten egg and set away to become cold. Then mold into cutlet shapes, roll in egg and crumbs, being sure they are well crumbled or they will break open when fried. Cook in deep fat and garnish with parsley. Serve with currant jelly or with a lemon jelly.

Banana Fritters.—Bake sufficient bananas until soft, remove them from their skins and roll in macaroon dust, and serve.

Jelly Sauce.—Melt half a cupful of currant jelly in two-thirds of a cupful of boiling water. Thicken with a tablespoonful of arrowroot, mixed with tablespoonful of cold water and add directly to the jelly. Just before serving add a tablespoonful of butter, a tablespoonful of lemon juice and one of powdered sugar to the sauce. This makes a most delicious dessert, and one which will be easy to prepare.

Consider well the portions of things. It is better to be a young June-bug than an old bird of Paradise.—Mark Twain.

CHAPTER ON FOREIGN PUDDINGS

The boiled pudding is the great English dessert, and it is found in all places. They are mostly boiled in cloth; molds are seldom used except for a very elaborate pudding.

Baroness Pudding.—Chop very fine three-fourths of a pound of suet, add the same amount of seeded raisins, mix with three-fourths of a pound of flour, a half teaspoonful of salt and a cupful of milk. Beat well and tie in a pudding cloth wrung out of hot water. Put the pudding into a kettle of boiling water and boil without ceasing for five hours. Serve with powdered sugar.

Queen Elizabeth Pudding.—Sweeten a pint of milk to taste, add a little grated lemon peel and four well beaten eggs. Line a buttered mold with raisins cut in half. Spread slices of sponge cake with marmalade and place in the mold. Pour in the custard, tie the pudding down with paper and a cloth and boil gently for one hour. Let cool slowly and when cold turn out of the mold and serve.

West Indian Pudding.—Crumble half a pound of sponge cake and pour over it a pint of hot sweetened cream. Beat eight eggs and add to the cream. Butter a mold and line with three tablespoonfuls of thinly sliced preserved ginger. Carefully pour in the pudding, tie down with a floured cloth, and boil or steam for an hour and a half. Serve with whipped cream flavored with the ginger sirup.

Staffordshire Fig Pudding.—Chop six ounces of suet and make a smooth paste with three-fourths of a pound of flour and milk to moisten, add salt, roll out a half-inch thick and spread with a pound of finely chopped figs. Roll up, pinch both ends, tie in a pudding cloth and boil for two hours.

The art of cooking when not allied with a degenerate taste or with gluttony, is one of the criteria of a people's civilization.

A good dinner sharpens wit while it softens the heart.—Doran.

THE KITCHEN SHEARS.

A pair of scissors or shears is the greatest convenience imaginable in the kitchen. They will cut up much quicker than a knife, vegetables, such as celery, lettuce, beans and any number of other things.

To hollow out a tomato to be stuffed a pair of shears is much better to use than a knife, for it may be done much more evenly. The cutting of a grapefruit to prepare it for the table may be done entirely by the use of shears. First cut out the center pulp, then clip the sections along the edge and the grapefruit is ready. When dicing green peppers cut them in long slivers, then take a few in the hand and clip through the entire bunch. When preparing fruit for salads the sections of orange and grapefruit may be easily cut away with the shears.

The more often the shears are used the more ways will occur to use them. We need not limit scissors to fruit and vegetables, however, as they work equally as well on chicken, fish of various kinds, cutting the joints of game and lobster shells.

The hard parts of oysters and clams are neatly removed by a pair of shears, while slices of cold boiled tongue and ham are often much improved by trimming with scissors.

Cabbage Salad. — Shred cabbage very fine and mix with one or more finely cut green peppers and a small bunch of celery, finely chopped. Add a boiled dressing made as follows: Cook together equal parts of egg and mild vinegar. When smooth and thick add equal parts of whipped cream, sugar, and a bit of cayenne pepper, a little mustard, if liked, and a seasoning of salt. This dressing may be kept indefinitely and the cream and seasoning are added just as it is ready to use.

Tales of Tennyson.

The London Times at two cents would have relieved Tennyson of one of the minor annoyances of his daily life. Lady Taylor once took a friend to see the poet and was rather coldly received. On Lady Taylor rallying him on his manner, he said: "Madam, I am a poor man, and as I can't afford to buy the Times I have it from the stationer. He charges me two cents for it, which entitles me to keep it an hour. Why will people select just that hour to come and call on me?"

Ingenious Smuggling Trick.

The smuggler's ingenuity is inexhaustible, as M. Gernez, a customs inspector at the frontier station of Feignies, France, has recently discovered. He was inspecting a goods train, one of the wagons of which was filled with sacks of potatoes, when his suspicions were aroused, and on taking out some of the supposed tubers he found that they were packets of tobacco cleverly done up in wrappers closely imitating potato skins.

CANADA'S TELESCOPE

Canadian Government Soon to Have Powerful Instrument.

Referred to as "The Largest Telescope in the World" and Will Cost Nearly $100,000—Its Location Not Yet Determined.

Ottawa, Can.—The Canadian government will soon possess a more powerful reflecting telescope than any now in existence. It has been referred to in the newspapers as "the largest telescope in the world," but this description is misleading for two reasons; first, because its aperture, 72 inches, is to be the same as that of the famous Parsonstown reflector, built by Lord Rosse in 1842; and second, because by the time the Canadian instrument is completed it now seems likely that the 100-inch reflector which has long been under construction for the Mount Wilson Solar observatory will also be ready for use. The Canadian telescope will, however, be a much more efficient instrument than Lord Rosse's. Not only will the mirror be much superior, but the mounting will enable the telescope to be worked to the full advantage. The Parsonstown reflector has an altazimuth, not an equatorial, mounting and is operated under such difficulties that comparatively little use has ever been made of it.

Contracts for the new telescope have just been awarded to J. Brashear for the mirrors and other optical parts, and to Warner & Swasey for the mounting. The disk for the principal mirror will be made by the St. Gobain glass works, in Paris, but all the grinding and figuring will be done in this country. The total cost will be nearly one hundred thousand dollars. Inasmuch as the instrument is intended primarily and notoriously for work of no immediate practical benefit, viz., the spectrographic measurement of radial stellar velocities, this sum represents a very notable contribution to pure science on the part of a government.

The telescope will have a parabolic mirror of 72 inches clear aperture and 30 feet focal length, with a central hole ten inches in diameter. The mounting is to be similar to that of the Ann Arbor and Melbourne reflectors, with a skeleton tube at one side and nearly midway between the bearings of the long polar axis, the balance being restored by the declination motion mechanism and by counterweights at the other side. Both polar and declination axis will be carried entirely on ball or roller bearings, in place of the usual plain bearings for collimating and a complicated system of counterweighted rollers for relieving the friction. The construction will also be simplified in other respects, e. g., all fine circles will be omitted, as will the slow motion arm in right ascension. It is characteristic of twentieth century technique in astronomy that, although the new telescope will have a full set of oculars for visual observations, no program of visual work is contemplated. Nowadays the camera takes the place of the human retina. The main purpose of the instrument will be the measurement of motion in the line of sight of stars fainter than the fifth magnitude; a task beyond the light-gathering power of nearly all existing telescopes. For such work the telescope will generally be used in the Cassegrain form; the light from the main mirror, converging toward a focus, will be received by a second hyperboloidal mirror of about nineteen inches aperture and ten feet focus, placed about twenty-three feet above the main mirror. The light passes thence down through the hole in the main mirror, and the star images are formed about three feet below the latter. Here the spectrograph will be placed. For the fainter stars of low dispersion the spectrograph will probably be placed at the prime focus. An investigation of the atmospheric conditions in different parts of Canada is now in progress, to determine where the telescope will be located.

Our Debt To Motherhood.

Of all the people who are placing heavenly mortgages upon the tomorrows of life the Christian mothers are foremost. They shape the future for God and humanity by shaping their children according to high ideals. Our children are the most potent people in the world today. We do not understimate the work of the statesman, the physician the ministers, the bankers, the educators for all workers together, but we can not overestimate the importance of the mothers. Tell me what a nation mothers are and I will tell you what the nation itself is. God has indeed called motherhood to awful responsibility; but the majority of mothers I like to think, are accepting in the sincerelty and in holy joy the significance of their call. I love to think with grateful heart of the humble women whose fame is not great on the earth; but who are well known in those radiant and invisible spheres where earth's shadows are never cast. No blocks of marble do they mould into statues; no canvass do they adorn with burning colors; no books do they write with scholarly taste; no music do they compose with sweet strains; no platforms do they occupy with persuasive speech. Yet they do all these, and more because they are Gods desciples of the unexplored and the unexpressed. Sculptors, they evisit the vein marble of flesh and blood into living, breathing human statues; artists, they point the colors of righteousness on undying souls; authors they write the liturature of Godliness on the hearts of their sons and daughters; musicians, they sing the white songs of chastity into the souls of their children; orators, their lives speak so eloquently of invisible things of God that after quitting the world, they being dead, speak on from the high places of eternity. So today we chant the beauty of these mothering lives which, like angel-watered lilies grow close to God, and are quiet, sometimes quaint and always queenly.

There is an old but beautiful legend running thus: An angel came down to earth and looked for something beautiful to carry back to heaven. There were three things that attracted his attention, a bouquet of fragrant flowers, the smile of a little babe and mothers love. These three the angel carried away but when he reached the pearly gates the flowess had withered, the babys smile had vanished, only the mothers love had remained the same. "A mothers love is the only thing on earth pure enough for heaven", exclaimed the angel.

Next Sunday is Mothers Day, and in celebration of the event, the Baraca class will present every one attending the morning service a beautiful souvenir folder. We shall endeavor to provide a flower for every attendant who is not already provided with one.

Rev. J. W. Embree will preach next Sunday morning. The sermon will be in harmony with the thought of Mothers' Day. A hearty invitation is extended to all.

We appreciated the attendance of so many of the members of the Presbyterian congregation in our last Sunday night's service, owing to the absence of Bro. Wimberly from the city.

The official members of the church will please remember the third quarterly conference at the church on Saturday evening at 8 o'clock. These quarterly business meetings are important, as they afford an excellent opportunity for noting progress and gathering inspiration for new victories.

The subject of the sermon Sunday evening is "The Policy of Honesty," one of the popular ten commandment talks.

Mrs. W. W. Lake of Aberdeen, Miss., says: "The grippe had left me in a weak, run-down condition from which I suffered for some time. I tried different remedies but nothing seemed to do me any good until I took Vinol, from which I received great benefit. My cough is almost entirely gone and I am strong and well again, and I am glad to recommend Vinol to others who suffer as I did."

Mrs. Lake's recovery was due to the combined action of the medicinal elements extracted from cods' livers combined with the blood making and strength creating properties of iron, which are contained in Vinol, and her cough disappeared as a natural result.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By the Rev. P. B. Fitzwater, D. D., Chicago.

LESSON FOR MAY 10

THE UNJUST STEWARD.

LESSON TEXT—Luke 16:1-13. Memory verses, 10-13. GOLDEN TEXT—"Make to yourselves friends by means of the mammon of unrighteousness, that when ye fail, they may receive you into the eternal tabernacles." Luke 16:9.

In a very real sense we are stewards of all that we have. Jesus Christ is the Master's name for the relation of the unjust steward and the rich man and laborers—both are parables of warning against the common sins of aggressiy and gluttony. Luke links this teaching with the events in connection with our Lord's teaching about the lost things. There is clearly a close connection. The parable of the lost things was spoken directly to the Pharisees and scribes, that now before us to the disciples. The failure of the Pharisees as stewards of the things of God, the divine law, calls from Jesus, for those gathered as his disciples, teaching that will prepare them to fulfill perfectly the stewardship responsibilities. The story is both positive and negative in its direct application to two kinds of men. Its main purpose to us is how to use money, while we have it, so that it may bring us a recompense in the eternal world when it is gone (v. 9).

Immoral Acts Not Approved.

The Unrighteous Steward, vv. 1-3. Our Lord does not, of course, intend that this steward is to be our pattern in every respect. He is taking a son of the world (v. 8, R. V.) and showing us that in the use of money entrusted to his care, he is making provision for the future. He is preparing himself against the time when his stewardship is taken from him. How much more shall a "son of the light" be shrewd, so to use the money entrusted to his stewardship, that when it is taken from him, he has provided for the future. The record does not imply that Jesus approved of the man's immoral actions. He is using the example of an unrighteous steward as a contrast to emphasize how much more is to be expected from God or godly men, Luke 16:8, 9; 11:5-8; Matt. 12:11, 12. Recognizing these facts, the story is perfectly simple and straightforward. The dishonest "son of his age" has a wrong method, though his motive from the point of view is a wise and prudent one, clever in our modern use of that word. This does not condone his fraud, nor does our Lord commend him. The contrast is established in the parable between men wholly of their age, and men, consciously, at least, sons of light. In their dealings with eternal things they had not shown the same astuteness as the former. Luke 16 deals with the heartless contempt of the Pharisees for those who are lost, while the parables of this chapter deal with stewardship—faithfulness (1 Cor. 4:2).

On Higher Level.

II. The Use of Money, vs. 9-13. The value of this parable is in the actual teaching of Jesus which follows the parable. That is introductory, emphasizing the need for wisdom on the part of all stewards. After that we are on a higher level and in a clearer atmosphere. "Unrighteous mammon means" money, and to make friends "by means of the mammon of unrighteousness" (R. V.) is to so use our money for the godly poor as to win their love and that they may receive us into the eternal tabernacles to which they shall go, see Matt. 19: 21; 25:32-40; 6:19, 20; Luke 6:37-38; Prov. 19:17. As has been said, Jesus does not commend this steward for his wrong use of his master's money, but the steward of God has the right to bestow his Master's goods upon the needy, as that is the very reason they have been bestowed upon him—entrusted to his care. Matt. 24:45-47; Col. 4:10. Our entrance into the kingdom will be more abundant because of our liberality with God's money, Matt. 19:21). This does not preclude faith, but rather, real faith worketh by love, Gal. 5:6. James 2:18 (R. V.). If we are faithful with that entrusted to our stewardship, God will entrust us with "the true riches." Our earthly riches belong to another (v. 12 R. V.), and we cannot serve "two masters." This story moves within the realm of material wealth, e. g., of mammon. It illustrates the higher wisdom of how mammon is to be used by the stewards of the kingdom of God. Verses 15 and 16 of this chapter reveal to us our Lord's reason for such an illustration. It was directed against the covetous and false stewards, the Pharisees, who "scoffed at him because they were lovers of money." We are to use money so as to make friends, not friends for this present life, but for that life which lies beyond the grave.

Stewardship principles are always the same, no matter what the amount, "he that is unrighteous in a very little is unrighteous also in much." This argument is followed by two questions. The answer to the first is that no one ever commits the stewardship of spiritual things to those who are unfaithful in material things. A man shows by his faithfulness in material things whether he is to be entrusted with spiritual stewardship. The second question is answered in that men do not give that which is their own to those who have not been faithful as trustees.

MEXICANS ATTACK AMERICAN OUTPOSTS

ENDS WITH EXCHANGE OF HALF DOZEN SHOTS.

VILLA WILL PUSH CAMPAIGN

Steps Being Taken to Assault Saltillo —Envoys Ask For Conference— Rebel Forces Are Massing.

Western Newspaper Union News Service.

Vera Cruz.—A considerable force of Mexicans attacked the American outpost at the water plant nine miles out at 11 o'clock Saturday morning, according to a wireless message received here which asked for aid.

Supporting troops were at once ordered forward by train from Vera Cruz to El Tejar, where the waterworks are situated.

No intimation was given in the wireless message as to size and identity of the attacking force.

What had promised to be the first fight between the United States army and the Mexican troops ended in the exchange of not more than half a dozen shots. The Mexicans threatened to "attack immediately" unless the Americans surrendered their position at the waterworks at El Tejar, within ten minutes, but failed to fulfill their threat.

No Orders to Advance.

The Mexicans are still holding a position beyond the waterworks station and the American troops have received no orders to advance. A Mexican force estimated at from 300 to 500 men appeared a mile beyond the waterworks station. As Major Russell, of the marines, had received orders not to assume the offensive, he and his men watched the Mexicans with much interest.

Suddenly a Mexican lieutenant and a non-commissioned officer bearing a white flag advanced and presented a demand for the Americans to surrender within ten minutes.

Major Russell's reply was: "Hurry right back, and do not waste any of the time your commanding officer has stipulated."

Major Russell then made preparations to resist any attack, at the time sending a message to headquarters in Vera Cruz that his outpost was threatened.

Envoys Ask For Conference.

Washington. — The three South American envoys who have undertaken the task of pacifying Mexico by diplomacy have made another decisive move in their plan by requesting the United States government, General Huerta and General Carranza to appoint representatives to confer with them in Washington.

Ambassador de Gama of Brazil and Ministers Naon and Suarez of Argentine and Chile, respectively, called on Secretary Bryan asking him to designate the United States representative to attend conferences of the mediators. At the same time they telegraphed the head of the government in Mexico City, as well as the constitutionalist chief, to the same effect.

Brief Statement Issued.

No announcement of the subjects to be considered by the representatives of the three parties to the mediation, or of the powers or functions of the new envoys, was made, except for the following brief statement, which was issued through the state department on the authority of the three diplomats: "The mediators have delivered to this government and are sending out to General Huerta and General Carranza requests that representatives be appointed to confer with the mediators."

The proposal to bring together specially designated representatives who would be conversant with the viewpoint of all factions in Mexico and the position of the United States government was the result of an all-day session of the South American envoys. The suggestion had been made to them from various quarters that much time would be saved and the problem of exchanging views simplified by such a process.

Orders to Suspend Mobilization.

Mexico City.—War Minister Blanquet has issued orders to General Maas, commanding the Mexican federals near Vera Cruz immediately to cease all military operations looking toward the recovery of the seaport now occupied by General Funston's fighting Fifth brigade of regulars and marines. The same order contained instructions to all commanding officers in Huerta's army throughout the republic to suspend further mobilization of forces. Minister Blanquet explained that the order was a result of the agreement to an armistice.

Carranza Has Declined Armistice.

El Paso, Tex.—General Carranza has formally declined the suggestion of the mediators that he cease hostilities against Huerta pending the outcome of the plan of mediation. His note, sent to Washington, was made public here Sunday.

No importance is attached here to the report that the rebels and federals at Tampico are arranging a truce. It is assumed that, if there is any cessation of hostilities, it is for the purpose of burying the dead or removing the wounded.

VILLA PUSHES CAMPAIGN.

Takes Immediate Steps to Attack Saltillo.

Chihuahua—General Villa has taken immediate steps to mobilize his entire fighting force, estimated at 15,000 men, around Saltillo.

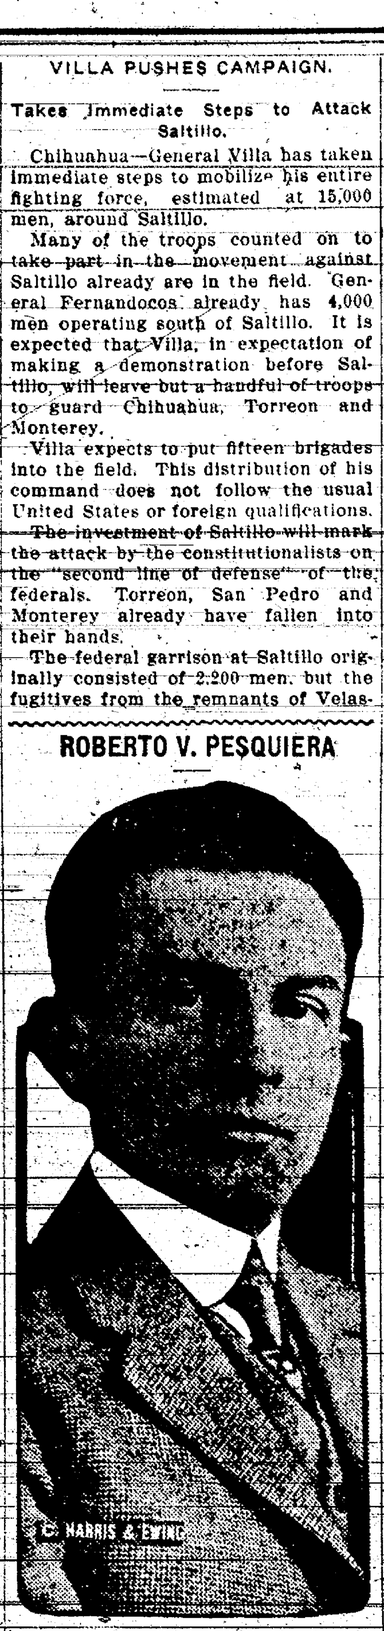
Many of the troops counted on to take part in the movement against Saltillo already are in the field. General Fernandocos already has 4,000 men operating south of Saltillo. It is expected that Villa, in expectation of making a demonstration before Saltillo, will leave but a handful of troops to guard Chihuahua, Torreon and Monterey.

Villa expects to put fifteen brigades into the field. This distribution of his command does not follow the usual United States or foreign qualifications.

The investment of Saltillo will mark the attack by the constitutionalists on the "second line of defense" of the federals. Torreon, San Pedro and Monterey already have fallen into their hands.

The federal garrison at Saltillo originally consisted of 2,200 men, but the fugitives from the remnants of Velasco's Torreon army and the fleeing garrison of Monterey have increased that force to 10,000. The present federal line of defense runs through Zacatecas, Saltillo and Tampico.

ROBERTO V. PESQUIERA



Roberto V. Pesquiera, confidential agent in Washington of the Mexican constitutionalists.

Look For Huerta to Resign.

Mexico City.—The situation in Mexico City has every appearance of becoming serious for the administration, and in well informed circles it is expected that Provisional President Huerta may resign at any moment.

El Paso, Tex.—Constitutional leaders here are convinced that Victoriano Huerta is ready to step down and out under pressure from his cientifico supporters, who, with an accuracy of knowledge denied the masses in Mexico, are said here to regard complete rebel success as inevitable. For this reason the constitutionalist leaders will make no concessions before the Argentine, Brazilian and Chile mediators.

The mediation of South America is believed by constitutionalists to have been accepted by Huerta as a means of "saving his face." Out of the negotiations the supporters, according to the rebels, hope to save for themselves what they can of their vast properties in Mexico and possibly some of their privileges.

Stole $150,000 from Railway Offices.

New York.—Mexican federal soldiers helped themselves to $150,000 they found in the offices of the Tehauantepec National railway after the fall of Vera Cruz, according to William B. Ryan, vice president of the road, who with thirty-three other refugees arrived here on the liner Oregonia. The men of the party were in working clothes and the four women and eight children wore the clothes they were in when they started their flight.

Dr. Ryan Has Been Released.

Ver Cruz.—Authoritative information was received here from Minister of Foreign Affairs Portillo y Rojas, in Mexico City, that Dr. Edward Ryan, an American Red Cross official, has been released at Zacatecas and is now on his way to Mexico City. President Huerta says he will insure the safe passage of Dr. Ryan to Vera Cruz.

Oil Wells Will be Protected.

Washington.—Assurances have come from both the Huerta government and General Carranza that the oil wells at Tampico will be protected during the fighting there. While there has been no formal agreement to neutralize the wells, the character of the assurances from both factions has removed fears that the wells would be destroyed. Secretary Bryan communicated to the British embassy advices that the constitutionalists and Huerta government would endeavor to protect the wells.

Are Skeptical of Rebel Success.

Vera Cruz.—The situation at Tampico and the effect of the Mexican governor of the state to cut off the food supply of Vera Cruz is dividing attention. The reported massing of the rebel forces against Tampico is regarded as important because it is felt to be certain that the fall of the city will have some bearing on the immediate policy of the United States. Many persons who are well informed of the federal preparedness in Tampico are skeptical of the predictions of an early rebel success. They point out that three federal gunboats have thus far easily repelled the attacks.

The situation of the town is such that a force cannot approach without exposing itself to the fire of four-inch quick-firing guns except from one direction. That point is defended by a triple line of trenches and many machine guns and field artillery. Gunboats and soldiers are plentifully supplied with ammunition.

Rebels Without Artillery.

The rebels heretofore have been without artillery. Unless guns have reached them from the northern rebels it is believed impossible for them to drive out the federals.

The fall of Tampico into rebel hands might help solve the food situation in Vera Cruz. In that event it is presumed that trade between Vera Cruz and Tampico would be resumed and that the territory about Tampico would supply the market here to some extent.

Optimistic at Washington.

Washington.—While the attention of the American government for the most part was concentrated on restoring order at Vera Cruz and expediting the departure of Americans from all parts of Mexico, a watchful eye was trained on the transcontinental boundary between Mexico and the United States for signs of hostility from constitutionalists. President Wilson and his cabinet had a long meeting, after which optimism was conspicuously apparent in both their demeanor and informal discussion of the situation. There was no particular development to which the feeling of hopefulness that real war would be averted could be traced, but General Villa's friendly pronouncement, it was admitted, had impressed many officials here with the possibility that the constitutionalists would remain neutral while the American government sought reparation from Huerta.

Washington.—Restrained, but none the less steady, preparation for any military eventualities and the quiet progress of the mediation program now being worked out behind closed doors are now the two outstanding features of the Mexican situation. The three mediation envoys of Argentina, Brazil and Chile continued their private sittings. Their first move for an armistice was succeeded by the practical suspension of hostilities or by a truce between the forces of the United States and the Huerta regime, although there still was ominous sounds of conflict between the Huerta and Carranza forces.

Secretary Bryan formally notified the three South American envoys that the American government took it for granted that there would be no hostilities during the mediation proceedings and had intended no further acts of aggression while the conferences were being held.

While the envoys are not yet ready to make any announcement, several interesting phases of what has come up during the discussion were learned from authoritative sources. It appears that, while the attitude of General Huerta was definite in accepting intermediation as between the United States and the Huerta government, it has not been made clear that his acceptance will apply also to intermediation which includes Carranza. It is expected this question will be cleared up by inquiries now under way, so that it may be definitely established that Huerta not only accepts intermediation with the United States, but also with Carranza.

Constant Danger Menaces.

Washington.—Whether General Huerta countenanced the near fight at the Vera Cruz water station is troubling officialdom. The president and his advisers are inclined to believe that he had not. That the fact that another fight was only averted by the American show of force, has served to indicate the constant danger confronted while waiting for the South American mediators to solve the Mexican problem.

Severe in their Criticism.

San Diego, Calif.—Amazed because the people of the United States are displaying so little excitement over the Mexican situation and severe in their criticism of the government for its failure to rush troops into Mexico, the 259 American refugees who arrived here from Guadalajara were either seeking employment in San Diego, or leaving for cities where they have relatives or friends.

Washington.—The scope of mediation plans for the settlement of the Mexican crisis has suddenly broadened so as to include the entire range of Mexican affairs, not alone the critical issue between the United States and the Huerta regime, but also the conflict between the elements of northern and southern Mexico which have rent the republic. This signal enlargement of the mediation program followed the receipt of a formal acceptance by General Carranza, chief of the constitutionalist forces, of the principle of mediation as proposed

TURNING OVER ARMS

SURRENDER GUNS TO FEDERAL TROOPS IN COLORADO.

BLAME FOR THE LUDLOW FIRE

Jury Finds Militia or Mine Guards Responsible for Burning of Tents —Governor Issues Mothers' Day Proclamation.

Western Newspaper Union News Service.

Trinidad, Colo.—Forty-two guns, the first to be given up by either party to the Colorado labor strike, are in the headquarters of Captain C. C. Smith in Walsenburg. They were turned over to the regulars by the guards at the Colorado Fuel & Iron company's Walsen mine. The surrender of the guns was the result of an agreement between Captain Smith and B. J. Matteson, as the general manager of the company. Mr. Matteson agreed that the guards should give up their guns if the federals troops would take charge of the mines and assure the property's protection.

In accordance with this understanding Lieutenant Crowley, with ten men, went to Walsen, while Lieutenant Cuningham, with twenty men, went to the big coal camp at Rouse. Lieutenant Crowley upon his arrival found the forty-two guns in the mine office, where they had been collected by the officers of the company. A few guards then on duty did not turn in their guns, but these arms were to be collected later.

Mothers' Day Proclamation.

Lincoln, Neb.—Governor Morehead has issued the following proclamation regarding the observance of Mothers' day next Sunday:

"We have no more commendable custom than that which sets aside one day each year as Mother's Day.

"It is well to be called back in memory to the happy days of childhood, when we played around mother's knees, and it is fitting that we make acknowledgement of the debt we owe to her who sacrificed so much for us.

"That we may, for a time, turn our hearts and minds to her, who has blessed, loved and sacrificed for us; that we may pay tribute to her memory, if she be gone, and that we may manifest our love and devotion to her, if she be living, I proclaim Sunday, May 10, 1914, Mother's Day, and recommend a suitable observance of the day throughout the state.

"Given under my hand and the great seal of the state, this 2nd day of May, 1914.

BLAME FOR THE LUDLOW FIRE.

Militia or Mine Guards Held Responsible by Jury.

Trinidad, Colo.—The fire which destroyed the Ludlow tent colony on the night of April 20, causing the deaths of thirteen women and children, was started by militiamen or mine guards, or both, according to the verdict rendered by the coroner's jury here. No responsibility for the killing of Louis Tikas was fixed by the jury, which contented itself by finding that he, with seven other men, were shot in battle. It had been charged by strikers that Tikas received a blow on the head which fractured his skull.

The verdict of the deaths of women and children decided that: "Cecilia Costa, Petra Veldez, Rograta Pedregon, Clovin Pedregon, Lucy Costa, Orafirio Costa, Elvira Valdez, Mary Valdez, Eulalia Valdez, Rodolfo Valdez, Frank Petrucci, Lucy Petrucci and Joe Petrucci came to their death of asphyxiation or fire, or both, caused by the burning of the tents of the Ludlow tent colony, and that fire on tents was started by militiamen under Major Hamrock and Lieutenant Linderfelt, or mine guards, or both, on the twentieth day of April, 1914."

More than 75,000 acres of virgin soil will be turned over in the vicinity of Sidney within the next few days, according to Joseph Oberfelder of that city. And consequently, thinks the optimistic western Nebraskan, the state's crop budget for the year will be enriched by many hundreds of thousands of dollars by that activity. Children Pass to Board of Control.

The state board of control will soon assume the management of the state school for dependent and delinquent children in Lincoln. Under a decision given by Deputy Attorney General George W. L. Weatherly and Rev. H. H. Harmon, has had control of the home. Dr. Hall asked the attorney general for an opinion.

WHAT MEXICANS HAVE FOUGHT FOR

Agrarian Democracy Has Been the Aim of the Peon Class for Past Century.

STRUGGLE STILL GOING ON

Position of Revolutionists and Constitution of 1857 for Which They Stand, Set Forth in Book by Senor de Lara.

In the confusion and lack of exact knowledge that attend the embroglio with Mexico the big issue that has moved the Mexican people to revolt against Huerta has been lost sight of or is not known to most Americans.

What the people of Mexico have fought for from the first war of independence, and what they are fighting for now under Carranza and Villa is the right to buy and till farms. For a hundred years the peon class has waged a continuous struggle to achieve agrarian democracy. Time after time the revolution has been carried to the verge of success, and time after time the Mexican ruling class has invoked foreign intervention in order to prolong its power.

All this and a great deal more is made clear in a book just published by Doubleday, Page & Co., "The Mexican People, Their Struggle for Freedom," by L. Gutierrez de Lara and Edgcomb Pinchon. It is frankly a statement of the position of the revolutionists, and shows why they believe American intervention in Mexico at the present time would only bring about more loss of life and worse conditions in the long run.

Senor de Lara has much to say about the constitution of 1857, that has been ruthlessly set aside by successive governments, and he gives a digest of that instrument, the heads of which follow:

Article 1. The Mexican people recognize that the rights of men are the foundation and the purpose of social institutions. In consequence they proclaim that all the laws and authorities of the country must respect and sustain the warranties stipulated by this constitution.

Article II. In the republic every one is born free. The slaves who step into the national territory recover their freedom by this mere fact, and have the right of the protection of the law.

Article III. All education is free. The law will determine which profession needs a diploma for its exercise, and what requisites are to be fulfilled.

This fundamental principle was later amplified to make education universal, free, non-sectarian and compulsory.

Article IV. Every man is free to adopt the profession, trade, or work that suits him, it being useful and honest; and to enjoy the product thereof.

Article V No man shall be compelled to work without his plain consent and without just compensation. The state will not permit to become effective any contract, pact or agreement with the purpose of the curtailment, the loss or the irrevocable sacrifice of the liberty of any man, may the cause be for personal labor, education or religious vows. The law in consequence does not recognize monastic orders, and will not permit their establishment, no matter what may be the denomination or purpose for which they pretend to be established. Neither will be permitted a contract or agreement by which a man makes a pact for his proscription or exile.

Article VI. The expression of ideas shall not be subjected to any judicial or governmental prosecution except in cases of attack upon the public morality, the rights of a third party, or the prevention of a crime or a disturbance of public order.

Article VII. The liberty of writing and publishing writings upon any matter is inviolable. No previous censorship nor imposition of bonds upon the writers nor the publishers for the purpose of curtailing the freedom of the press can be established by any law or authority, such freedom being restricted to respect of private life, morals and public business.

Article VIII. This deals with the right of petition to the government.

Article IX. This gives the right of assembly.

Article X. This establishes the right of every man to possess and carry arms for his safety and legitimate defense.

Article XI. This deals with immigration to the country and other traveling both from the country and into the same.

Article XII. This establishes the invalidity of all titles of nobility, prerogatives and hereditary honors.

Article XIII. In the Mexican Republic no one shall be subjected to private laws nor special courts. No man or corporation shall enjoy fueros or receive emoluments unless they be a compensation for public services and already fixed by law.

Article XIV. This establishes the principle that no one shall be tried by retroactive laws.

Article XV. No treaties can be made for the extradition of political offenders; neither for those criminals whose crime was committed in a country where they had been slaves; neither can a treaty or agreement be made by which the warranties or rights that this constitution gives to man or citizen be altered.

Article XVI. This article establishes the principle that the family and domicile are inviolable, except for the purposes of arrest under a warrant from a proper court expressing the charge.

Article XVII. No one shall be arrested or imprisoned for debts of a purely civil character. No one shall exercise violence to claim his rights. The courts will always be ready for the administration of justice. This will be free, the costs being abolished.

Article XXVII. Private property shall not be taken without the consent of the owner, except in case of public utility, and by just payment therefor. Religious corporations or institutions, no matter of what denomination, character, durability or purpose, and civil corporations when under the patronage, direction or superintendency of religious institutions, or ministers of any cult, shall not have the legal capacity to acquire or manage any real estate except the buildings which are used immediately and directly for the services of the said institutions; neither will the law recognize any mortgage on any property held by these institutions.

Article XXVIII. State and church are independent. Congress cannot make any law establishing or forbidding any religion.

The practical abrogation of the constitution under Diaz and Huerta has resulted in the building up of a privileged class and the cruel exploitation of the people. Vast territories have passed into private ownership. The disinherited peon has become the virtual slave of the land owners, and freedom has been a privilege purchased from the government by those who had the means.

These are the conditions that De Lara pictures, and it is to end them the present fight of the constitutionalists is waging.

FORCED TO BUY PROTECTION

Refugees Arriving at Vera Cruz Tell of Paying Money to Huerta's Soldiers.

Vera Cruz.—Sixty-three members of the Medina colony in the state of Oaxaca are among the refugees who have arrived here. They were held two days in Cordoba and report they were well treated, except that they were obliged to sleep on the floors of the barracks. They were relieved of guns, but not of the scanty belongings which they were able to bring with them.

J. W. Elliott, a locomotive engineer, was in Tierra Blanca when news of the occupation of Vera Cruz reached him. With his wife and children he started for Cordoba under guard of Mexican soldiers. At Cordoba the guards said they were hungry and demanded 50 pesos on the threat to surrender Elliott and his family to a howling mob which surrounded the station and filled the streets.

The money was paid and Elliott and his family were marched more than a mile through the streets to the barracks, hounded all the way by the mobs. They were kept in the barracks six days, during the first two of which crowds surrounded the place demanding their lives. On two occasions members of the mob forced their way into the barracks and except for the efforts of the colonel and two other officers Elliott and his family would undoubtedly have been killed. Toward the end of their stay the demonstrations ceased to a large extent.

Manager Boyd of the Motzorongo Hacienda, when he arrived at Cordoba, was forced by the federal guards to pay 1,050 pesos for protection through the streets to the jail.

Circulars containing the words "Kill the Gringoes" and urging the people to rise and massacre the prisoners were posted about Cordoba.

One of the refugees who have arrived here from the interior is F. W. Lehmer, a ranch manager from Tuxtepec, whose home is in Omaha and who was on his way to Vera Cruz for a visit, not knowing of the developments here. He was picked up at Tierra Blanca by federal soldiers.

"I was placed with ten others in a train which was standing overnight, surrounded by a mob which continually threatened to attack us," he said. "The guards ate up everything available on the train, compelling us to go hungry. At every station up to Cordoba, on the following day, similar crowds looted the train and threatened us.

"While being taken through the streets of Cordoba a squad of young volunteers who had just been presented with a flag swept down upon us and tried to run us down. This happened at the corner where the municipal palace is located or otherwise we would not have escaped as well as we did. As it was, I was hit on the head with a flagstaff and a man walking beside me was struck on the head with a rock. His scalp was badly cut.

"It was due to the fine conduct of the Mexican colonel that we ever reached the palace. He rushed from the door with a squad of police and soldiers and plunged into the crowd, scattering them and surrounding us.

"Later we were put in the penitentiary, and for six days we slept on the stone flagging. There were two women in the party, one with a little baby. We were allowed to send out and buy blankets, and managed to get enough to eat, such as it was.

"Monday we were placed on a train and brought down to Soledad. We spent that night on the tracks. There was one passenger coach left for us and in this the women and children slept, the rest of us sleeping on the ground."

Midsummer Dreams in Flower Hats

If you are fretting your mind in trying to make a decision as to what sort of hat you will have for midsummer, let it rest upon one similar in general style to the two pictured here. Have the prettiest, most becoming and most fascinatingly feminine of all millinery, with laces and flowers and ribbons making up a confection to be worn upon the head. For the midsummer hat will sit at the top notch of style when it is a means of wearing a good-sized bouquet fastened to a fair head at some slightly dashing angle.

Roses and small flowers in the natural sizes, the lilac and the violet, forget-me-not, heliotrope, and heather, and small daisies betoken the love for garden flowers which lies in the mind of many wearers of flower hats. But the flower hat bedecks itself with flowers common and uncommon. From the yellow field daisy to the most unusual orchid, like and unlike their prototypes, everything in flowers is fashionable.

One of the hats shown here is a round crown covered with maline, in brown, of the shade of its wearer's hair. Over the crown a brim is slipped, covered in the same way as the crown. It is narrow at the right side, widens and flares up at the left. A fine machine-made lace is laid smoothly over crown and brim. There are plateaus of lace made for this purpose, but milliners fashion for themselves plateaus of laces which they buy by the yard.

The lower part of the brim is covered with lace also in this particular hat, although in others part of the millinery braid is used or part of a body hat, as shown in the second figure. The crown here is of leghorn with the brim, covered with horsehair braid, set in.

The lower crown (or bandeau) of the first hat is trimmed with velvet ribbon in brown and a shaded fancy ostrich feather is in the same coloring, shading off to a very light tint. Deep cream roses, with pink hearts, and natural colored silk wheat, are placed in groups about the brim, with one cluster at the base of the plume on the bandeau.

The second hat is trimmed with silk roses in yellowish pink. They are marvels of delicate coloring, with the shadings and even the veins of the natural petals simulated in the half-opened buds. The foliage also in dark, glossy green is made with loving fidelity to nature.

As types of midsummer millinery these hats may be regarded as criterions. They are not merely modish, but the mode.

Colonial Ties and Pumps

The shoes of today distinguish their American makers, for they are brilliant achievements in the realm of footwear. When one considers that the fashionable shoe is wide of the mark in shape when it comes to following the natural lines of the foot, and yet is comfortable, it is possible to realize something of the ingenuity which is demonstrated in its making.

The most popular shoe for ordinary wear, the neatest and most shapely, is the Colonial Pump, like that shown in the picture. It is developed in many different styles and combinations of leathers or of leather and fabrics. These embody the patent leather vamp and the quarter of other leather or of plain or brocaded fabrics. Contrasting color is used in the quarters sometimes; light gray or white, and light tan are among the more pleasing effects.

The pumps are fastened (apparently) under buckles of cut steel or silver filigree or enamel. Pumps for evening wear are often made with vamp of satin and quarter of patent calfskin, with finish of rhinestone buckles or ornaments. The pump shown here is ideal in style and may be considered a criterion by which to measure others.

There is almost as great a variety in ties as in pumps. They are shaped on much the same lines and made of the same materials. For semi-dress and for dancing shoes they insure clever effects. The style of the tie indicates small rhinestone ornaments and buckles, and these one finds upon them. The tango tie, with ribbon lace, shown in the picture, is a conception in ties that could hardly be excelled for beauty.

In many of the pumps and ties the buckles or ornaments are placed at the sides. The effect is elegant. A simpler tie is shown in the third figure, very quiet in design and graceful in shape. It is furnished with patent colt vamp and black brocaded quarters. It has a lightweight sole, easy for dancing and a new Spanish heel flattering to the foot.

American women grow more exacting with each season in the matter of footwear. And American manufacturers keep up with all these demands and foster others, in fact, create them, by showing marvels of fine finish and elegant taste in shoes. In this particular article we excel all other people in clothing the feet of the moderns and the civilized, appropriately.

Now we are beginning to depart from black and to insist upon clean streets, that lighter colors may walk without becoming too soon begrimed.

SAVINGS BANK FOR SCHOOL

Pennies and Nickels Accepted by Teacher and Boy Officers of Savings Association.

Chicago.—More than one hundred children of the Wicker Park school proudly displayed "bankbooks." They are depositors of the first public school savings bank in Chicago.

At the start of banking hours—8:15 to 9 a. m. and 3:30 to 4:30 p. m.—a score of youngsters stood in line in order to deposit their marble and candy allowance in the care of their fellow pupils.

Thirteen-year-old Frank Koraleski, son of the county assessor, who has been appointed cashier, was kept busy taking the pennies, nickels and dimes handed to him by the boys and girls of the seventh and eighth grades of the school. He has an errorless record at the present time after receiving more than one thousand pennies and hundreds of other coins.

Her First Business Lesson.

"How much interest do I get?" asked Annie Globert, a twelve-year-old miss of the seventh grade, as she handed two nickels and fourteen pennies and told her name to Milton Cohler, the clerk.

"Same as any regular bank," was the answer. "When you get five dollars we put it into a big bank and you get 15 cents more at the end of the year."

Philip Simon, the best writer in the school, is signature clerk. He does not expect any forgeries, but he will be on the watch for them, anyhow.

Miss Clara M. Utter, teacher of the eighth grade, is in charge of the bank, assisted by Principal Fred Smith. The bank has received the approval of Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, superintendent of schools, and is expected to be taken up by other schools in the city.

NO MORE PET ANTS WANTED

Department of Agriculture Appeals to Amateur Scientists to Taboo Like Imports.

Washington.—Those little pet ants recently brought to this country by Mrs. Charles W. Morse are made the basis of an appeal to travelers not to bring dangerous insects into the United States, issued by the department of agriculture.

"Tourists and amateur scientists are continually endeavoring to introduce additions to the flora and fauna of the United States which the United States is happy to be without," the department said.

"It is estimated that fully one-half of the pests that afflict farmers and stock have been imported from abroad, many, of course, by accident in the course of commercial shipments, but some brought in deliberately by misguided enthusiasts or thoughtless travelers."

on many farms in Western Canada in 1913, some yields being reported as high as 50 bushels per acre. As high as 100 bushels were recorded in some districts for oats, 50 bushels for barley and from 10 to 20 bus. for flax.

J. Keys arrived in the country 5 years ago from Denmark with very little means. He homesteaded, worked hard, is now the owner of 320 acres of land, in 1913 had a crop of 200 acres, which will realize him about $4,000. His wheat weighed 68 lbs. to the bushel and averaged over 35 bushels to the acre.

Family of Twelve Drink Postum.

"It certainly has been a blessing in our home" writes a young lady in regard to Postum.

"I am one of a family of twelve, who, before using Postum, would make a healthy person uncomfortable by their complaining of headache, dizziness, sour stomach, etc., from drinking coffee.

"For years mother suffered from palpitation of the heart, sick headache and bad stomach and at times would be taken violently ill. About a year ago she quit coffee and began Postum.

"My brother was troubled with headache and dizziness all the time he drank coffee. All those troubles of my mother and brother have disappeared since Postum has taken the place of coffee.

"A sister was ill nearly all her life with headache and heart trouble, and about all she cared for was coffee and tea. The doctors told her she must leave them alone, as medicine did her no permanent good.

STATE SUFFRAGISTS REPORT PROGRESS IN CAMPAIGN.

MONSTER PETITION IS FILED

Activities All Over the State Well Under Way—The Campaign Committee at Lincoln Doing Effective Work.

The filing last month of the initiative petition to have the question of equal suffrage amended to the constitution submitted to the voters was the first successful stage of progress in a campaign for suffrage which has been going on in dead earnest since last October, and which has been remarkably free from bitterness and uncomfused with any other issue. For six months the Nebraska Equal Suffrage association and its allies have been talking straight "Votes for Women" through the counties. And the counties have responded with the largest initiative petition that has ever been filed in Nebraska; 42,523 names it had. This was 5,000 more names than the legal Nebraska requirement of 5 per cent of the total vote for governor cast in the last election. In Massachusetts, where the anti-suffragists have been working for nineteen years collecting names from a population three times that of Nebraska, they have only obtained about 21,000 signatures.

The active work of this last Nebraska campaign began in October, just in time to prepare for the state convention of the Woman Suffrage association, which was held in Lincoln in November. At this time a fully developed plan of organization for the campaign was presented and adopted. W. E. Hardy, of Lincoln, one of the strong allies of the Nebraska suffragists, appeared before the convention with a fully developed plan for financing the campaign. His plan, which has come to be known as the "Hardy plan," called for a division of the state into twelve campaign districts, and the organization of a state finance committee made up of one member from each district. $26,045 were to be raised for this committee in the 92 counties, according to a pro rata apportionment. The suffragists of Douglas county had already pledged $5,000 to state suffrage work, and Lancaster $2,200. The state committee was to name for each county a chairman, who would undertake to raise the money apportioned to each county.

At the beginning it was only Douglas and Lancaster counties which came forward with their assignments. The others were not organized. But the money from Douglas and Lancaster financed the campaign through the opening months, and now the other counties are paying back what has been spent on them.

In the six months of the suffrage campaign, suffrage speakers have gone into practically all the counties where winter campaigning was possible. Suffrage organizations have been formed in several towns of each county with a central organization at the county seat and co-operative committees at the other towns. The campaign committee at the state headquarters in Lincoln has kept in touch with the county organizations. This committee thinks counties, talks counties and draws counties. A corps of volunteer speakers put into the state on call. As soon as the schools are out, the list of available speakers will be increased by a good number of teachers and university men and women who have volunteered for summer work.

Nebraska is a state where the attitude to cause has always been comparatively. In the state university there has never been the contempt for "co-eds" that undergraduates in other universities have so often exhibited. The women have had a vote in school elections for over twenty years now. There have been prominent Nebraska men working for equal suffrage for years. It is said at the state headquarters that as the petition sheets came in from the far counties in the last months one could locate every neighborhood in which a good old suffragist had been living for forty or fifty years. Contagion spreads from house to house just as it spreads from state to state.

Chadron Women Vote.

In the recent city election at Chadron an unusually big vote was polled, largely due to the fact that the Chadron women were determined to have representation on the board of education. Mrs. Weymouth and Mrs. Hyde, who were elected on the Independent ticket, received a mesel larger number of votes than the other candidates for places on the board. "This is a good year for women's votes all over the country," the Chadron Journal concludes, and "the Independent caucus did a wise thing for the ticket when they nominated the women."

Jewelry and Barbarism.

Even in the stone age woman was fond of jewels. But it was man, the brutal master, who wore them. The heavy necklace that descended upon his breast was an emblem of his superiority and power. Even before he had progressed so far as to cover himself with the skin of the stag he wore a necklace of shells, or teeth of animals or glittering flint. The elegant dame or demoiselle who rolls by in her limousine is not so distant a relative of the cave man as she may try to appear. She likes jewels better than dress, since each season we see her more and more bejewelled and less and less clothed. The joy of jewels is of the same infantile quality with the coquette of today, that he was in the early primitive times. A thread of metal upon which are strung some shining pebbles, a thread of silk over which is placed some small round cover there of lime, found rolling in the desert, is a dressed oyster!

Price of Quinine to Double.

TWO BIG FIRES LAST WEEK

Wymore and DuBois are the towns that suffer a great loss.

Last Friday morning the little town of DuBois had a big fire which took out all but two buildings in one of the main business blocks. The U. S. Post Office and the drug store were two of the buildings that burned. The fire started between the ceiling and roof of the drug store belonging to D. E. Cunningham. Before the flames could be checked the following buildings were in ruins. A restaurant, pool hall, drug store, an empty building, the postoffice, and a music store.

The loss will amount to about ten thousand dollars and it is estimated that the insurance will not cover half that amount. The only buildings left standing in the block are the brick buildings occupied by the State Bank of DuBois and J. A. Hawkins & Co., general merchants.

On Saturday a fire broke out in one of the main business blocks of Wymore and owing to the high wind destroyed several buildings before the fire department was able to get control of the flames. We understand that the postoffice was one of the first buildings to go.

Undoubtedly these two big fires will inspire some of the local fire departments to look into their fire fighting apparatus and see that it is in working order. Perhaps in some places they may be so energetic as to have fire practice.

Why Not Celebrate July 4th?

This year it is Table Rock's turn to brighten up a little and celebrate the 4th of July. Surely we have enough patriotic citizens to boost a movement. When Table Rock does anything it does it right. Why not celebrate this year and show the other towns how to put on an up-to-date 4th of July celebration. We know we can get the crowds here for we've seen it done.

The time to get the celebration going is early and before other towns decide and when they see Table Rock on the list of patriotic towns to celebrate the Independence Day they will make preparations to attend our celebration. Say something to the next fellow and get the talk started.

Disorders of the stomach may be avoided by the use of Chamberlain's Tablets. Many very remarkable cures have been effected by these tablets. Sold by all druggists.

"The Little Politician" will be one of the most clever comedies ever staged in Table Rock. Every character in this play will be one that you have met and you will feel perfectly at home among these people that you meet in every day life.

Health a Factor in Success

The largest factor contributing to a mans success is undoubtedly health. It has been observed that a man is seldom sick when his bowel are regular—he is never well when they are constipated. For constipation you will find nothing quite so good as Chamberlain's Tablets. They not only move the bowels but improve the appetite and strengthen the digestion. They are sold by all druggists.

Mother's Day Observed

'Mother's Day' was observed in Table Rock by the churches and by a great majority of our citizens and many red and white carnations were in evidence. Some wore the red flower to show respect to a living mother and others wore white in the memory of a mother who is gone.

At the Methodist church Rev. J. W. Embree preached a sermon "In Honor of Mothers." At the Presbyterian church Rev. Wimberly had for his subject "Mother."

Undoubtedly there many who did write home to mother, but "Nobody Knows But Mother." Surely every young man and women should have done so if they were away from home.

Since 'Mother's Day' has been set aside as a day to honor the mother it has met with the approval of nearly everyone everywhere and was this year proclaimed a National Holiday by President Woodrow Wilson, which it will hencefourth be.

Mother's Day

One brave little woman in our broad land,
In a quiet, gentle way,
Picked out a date and set it down
As being "Mothers' day."
There always are some scoffers round
Who dearly love to jeer;
They'll say: "Why one day set aside?
We've mothers all the year."
Yes, so we have; they are quite right so
And that's the very reason
We need a gentle waking up
For day is Mothers season!
In story, song and epic poem,
We hear the praises rung
Of heros of great deeds and small,
In each and every tongue.
And we do not regret oft times,
Those heros cannot know,
We hold them in such reverence
Admire and love them so.
Are not our mothers oft as great
In life's heroic birth?
Can we do less than show them, then,
We realize their worth?
This is a whirling, busy world,
But take this one small part
And show your mother on that day,
The love within your heart.
For can you honestly believe
'Twil answer up above,
To say, "I was so busy, I—
Why, I forgot to love?"
May's second Sunday every year;
It is your mother's day.
White flowers will soften graves grown hard;
Bright flowers will cheer life's way.
Oh! Don't forget it. It's a dance in Fellers' hall Friday night May 22.

CLAIMS ARMISTICE BEING VIOLATED

HUERTA OBJECTS TO LANDING TROOPS AND WAR MATERIAL AT VERA CRUZ.

EXPENSE ON ACCOUNT OF WAR

House Receives Estimate of Nearly $3,000,000 for Maintenance of Troops, Transportation and Other Items.

Western Newspaper Union News Service.

Mexico City.—Eztava Ruiz, acting minister of foreign relations has complained to the South American mediators that American troops were landing in Vera Cruz and other military preparations were in progress there, thus breaking the armistice.

The South American mediators announced they would make representations regarding the matter to President Wilson.

The foreign office has issued a statement thanking the mediators. It says:

"The Mexican government, in view of the mediators' attitude in the cases of the Carranzista refusal to suspend hostilities and the new landing of American troops and war material in Vera Cruz, is much obliged for the prudence, impartiality and good willingness of the mediators."

Washington.—Secretary Bryan admits that this government had received a note from the South American mediators relative to solving the Mexican crisis, in which complaint is made by the Huerta government operations at Vera Cruz are in violation of the armistice.

Asked as to the details of the mediators' note, Mr. Bryan said: "It simply sets forth what Huerta says. A reply to the note will be made."

Desperate Battle at Tampico.

Juarez, Mex.—The most desperately fought battle of the present Mexican revolution was fought Sunday at Tampico, according to reports reaching constitutionalist officers here. It is reported some of the oil wells and tanks are burning, and that a portion of the town is on fire.

All Americans, it is said here, have been taken aboard the United States warships, but other foreigners are scattered throughout the oil well district. It was this section of the oilfield that the United States government suggested should be made a neutral zone, but the general refused to adopt this suggestion.

By the light of the blazing oil tanks, fired by stray shots, the rebel artillery men hurried shot after shot from twenty heavy field guns against the strongly entrenched position of Gen. Ignacio Morelos Zaragoza, the federal commander, who defended the town, sweeping the breastworks with a storm of shot in an effort to open the way for a dash by Gen. Pablo Gonzales' infantry.

COST OF THE WAR

Nearly $3,000,000 Required to Pay Maintenance Two Far.

Washington.—The first big memorandum of expense on account of the Mexican crisis sent to congress was submitted when the house received estimates regarding $2,701,327 to pay subsistence, supplies, horses, barracks, transportation and engineering work for the troops now at Vera Cruz and the border under Funston. The memorandum briefly says that the necessity for these deficiency appropriations could not have been foreseen when previous estimates were submitted. There is no reference to army plans. Congress was asked to make the appropriation immediately.

The largest item is $1,485,074 for transportation of the army, which is additional to $2,842,342 estimated on March 17. This amount the war department says, is required to cover the expense of moving troops, of keeping certain transports in commission, of chartering vessels, purchase of coal and water and of stevedoring in connection with chartered vessels and the purchase of additional draft and pack animals required for proper equipment of troops in the field.

For horses for cavalry, artillery, engineers, etc., the war department asked $406,824. Another $200,000 is asked for mounts to replace unserviceable animals and to equip the troops to the authorized strength.

"The mediators have notified the different parties that Niagara Falls, Canada, has been selected as the place where the mediators will confer with representatives of the different parties interested in the mediation, and that the 18th of May has been fixed as the date when the conference will begin."

Washington.—General Carranza and the constitutionalists have been practically eliminated from proceedings of the three-South American envoys who have undertaken to solve the Mexican problem by diplomacy. In a telegram to General Carranza the mediators announced that in view of his refusal to agree to an armistice with General Huerta they withdrew their invitation to him to send a personal representative to participate in the mediation negotiations.

MORE HUERTA ARMS.

Two More Vessels Bound for Puerto Mexico.

Washington.—The navy department has made an investigation of a report that two German vessels loaded with arms and ammunition for the Huerta forces in Mexico were bound for Puerto Mexico, south of Vera Cruz. An effort will be made through the state department to have the German government prevent the landing of any munitions of war in Mexico from German ships.

Puerto Mexico is at the eastern terminus of the Tehuantepec railroad and is the only eastern Mexico port in direct communication with Mexico City since the American occupation of Vera Cruz. No American warships are at present at Puerto Mexico.

Arms Returned to Germany.

Washington.—Danger of complications in the Mexican situation by landing of munitions of war for Dictator Huerta at Puerta Mexico from two German ships has been averted. Secretary of State Bryan announced that he had received a message from Consul Rogers at Havana, stating that the arms aboard the Kronprinzessin Cecelie variously reported at or near Puerta Mexico, would be returned to Germany, and that agents of the vessel have recommended the same treatment for munitions aboard the Bastadia, another German vessel, due at the same port on the 13th.

Bryan did not state whether the German government had intervened to stop sending of this war material to Huerta, or whether the act was a voluntary one by the steamship companies.

It was admitted, however, that the return of the arms will ease a situation that has been regarded by army officers as exactly similar to that existing at Vera Cruz before the American occupation.

Rear Admiral Fletcher acted in the custom house to prevent a German vessel landing arms ordered by Huerta.

There has been considerable feeling in official circles over the hopeless impotency of this government to stop receipt of arms by Huerta brought in three German vessels.

It was recognized that such munitions of war would greatly strengthen Huerta and give him more power against the United States. It is also known that since there was no formal blockade in effect the German vessels could not be prevented from landing their cargoes, and that if any attempt was made to stop their shipment out of Puerto Mexico for Huerta ports it would be construed by Huerta as an act of war, and a violation of the implied armistice now in effect.

Secretary Bryan said he had no knowledge of the exact whereabouts of the Kronprinzessin Cecelie. His announcement was the one which Assistant Secretary of the Navy Beekman Winthrop said would clear up "wild stories."

Carranza Wants to Be Friendly.

El Paso, Tex.—Speaking before a cheering crowd that greeted his entrance in Torreon, General Carranza declared the success of the constitutionalists had been due in a large measure to the friendly attitude of the United States, according to delayed dispatches received here. Carranza, the dispatches said, even outdid Villa in expressing friendship for the United States. "Some of the ill-timed remarks sounded strangely like the words spoken by Villa in a recent interview at Juarez.

"The American people are too good, able to let Huerta provoke them into a war so that he can save himself," Carranza is quoted as saying. "We are friends of the United States."

The constitutionalist cause owes much to their friendly attitude."

The general conviction here is that the constitutionalists will accept the repeated utterances of friendship to the United States that the embargo on arms and ammunition by the United States will be lifted.

Newspaper Men Under Arrest.

New York.—The New York Tribune, for which Richard Harding Davis is correspondent in Vera Cruz, prints the following dispatch:

Vera Cruz, May 5.—Richard Harding Davis, correspondent of the Tribune, and Medill McCormick, correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, are under arrest in Mexico City, according to information reaching Brigadier General Funston tonight."

The tribune also carries the report of the arrest of Walter C. Whitton and the photographer of the Washington Post.

Washington.—Admiral Mayo said he was in receipt of reliable information to the effect that constitutionalists were ready to bombard Tampico and that no heavy artillery is placed in position and that it was reported the rebel forces numbered more than 5,000 men.

The admiral said the rebel leaders had requested all Americans to be removed from Tampico, the constitutionalist leader basing his request upon the fear that Americans in the city would be in danger of maltreatment by the federals. Every effort is being made to protect foreign property.

Mexico City.—The situation in Mexico City has every appearance of becoming serious for the administration, and in well informed circles it is fluenta may resign at any moment.

It was learned from an authoritative source that Carranza would not further telegram to the mediators, inquiring as to their request for the appointment of a Carranza delegate, the extent of his functions and whether this would be limited to the controversy between the United States and Huerta, beyond which Carranza has shown no signs of negotiating.

OVERTHROW OF HUERTA IS IMMINENT AND SERIOUS.

Villa Says War Would End Quickly if Embargo Were Lifted—Suffering from Lack of Ammunition.

Washington.—Upon receiving a long cipher cablegram from General Funston at Vera Cruz, Thursday, Secretary Garrison called into conference at the war department General Wintherspoon, chief of staff, and the entire general staff of the army. No intimation as to the nature of the dispatch was made public.

The conference lasted until nearly midnight. Secretary Garrison said there would be no announcement at present. He and the army officers wore grave faces and it was no secret that news of importance had been received.

Later Secretary Garrison said General Funston had transmitted some information which refugees had brought from Mexico City as to conditions in the Mexican capital. He said that no aggressive movement of any kind by the American forces was ordered.

Danger of Anarchy.

It was understood that the refugees from Mexico City had informed General Funston of the critical aspect of affairs in the Huerta regime; that a collapse might be expected momentarily, and that conditions of anarchy might ensue. The purpose of General Funston in making known these reports was believed to be to advise the Washington administration of the possibilities which might develop from a fall of Huerta in order that if the American army is compelled to rescue foreigners or restore order it may be fully equipped.

Although not officially stated it is known that high officials of the war department are anxious to place at Vera Cruz on transports within striking distance a large enough force, perhaps 20,000 or 30,000 men, to make an expedition to Mexico City if it becomes necessary.

Officials of the war department are known to believe that if in advance on Mexico City is ordered it will be necessary to guard every mile of the railroad as the army moves forward and that a large force would show the natives the futility of resistance whereas a division of 15,000 men might be subject to several attacks along the route with possibly big losses.

Needs More Troops.

The American army officers also regard the situation at Vera Cruz as likely to become desperate in the event that anarchy breaks out in Mexico City or the forces of General Maas should make an attack on the Mexican capital. Intelligence received by Huerta government's promise of a suspension of hostilities against the United States.

Plea for Lifting Embargo.

Torreon, Mex.—A plea for the lifting of the embargo on arms as the swiftest, surest and most humanitarian method of bringing peace to Mexico, was made in an interview by General Francisco Villa, general in chief of the constitutionalist army.

"The embargo is protracting this struggle uselessly and is putting a burden on the whole of Mexico which can serve no good," he said. "I hope the American government understands that the placing of the embargo is interfering seriously with the plans of the constitutionalists. See what we did in the brief time the embargo was lifted. Gomez Palacio, Torreon, San Pedro de Las Colonias, and even Monterey were constitutionalist successes and due to the lifting of the embargo. Mexico must be pacified and should be pacified immediately. We cannot gain this end quickly while we suffer from lack of ammunition.

After the ceremony the wedding party proceeded to the red room, where they received congratulations and good wishes of the company. The Marine band furnished the music. Supper was served at small tables in the state dining room. The decorations of the blue room were lilies and ferns, and the decorating of the dining-room were pink and white roses.

Handsome Wedding Presents.

In spite of the small list of invited guests the wedding presents were numerous. Prominent among them were the beautiful silver tea service given by the members of the house of representatives, a piece of jewelry from members of the senate, twelve silver plates and a platter from the cabinet members and their wives, and a handsome gift from the justices of the supreme court. From the diplomatic corps, no member of which was invited, came flowers and good wishes.

The bride's bouquet was of orange blossoms, white roses and lilies of the valley. The flower girls wore white chip hats, hung by ribbons, filled with flowers.

Miss Margaret Wilson's gown was of soft blue crape with panniers and waist of blue tulle. The neck was finished with a cream lace ruff and a flowered sash completed the costume. With this costume was worn a blue lace hat, trimmed with pink roses and touches of black. Mrs. Sayre's costume was exactly like Miss Wilson's except that the color was pink. The gowns of the little flower girls were white, with blue and pink ribbons.

Beautiful Wedding Gown.

The wedding gown worn by Miss Wilson is made of ivory-white satin and trimmed with real old point lace. The bodice is softly draped with satin, which crosses in front and is brought to a point below the shoulders, front and back. The V-shaped neck is finished with folds of soft tulle. The long transparent sleeves are made of tulle. The real old point lace is gracefully draped over the right shoulder to the left side of the waist and is fastened with a spray of orange blossoms. The lace then continues as a border to the long transparent tunic of tulle, which graduates to the side of this skirt at the train. The sweeping train is three and a half yards in length.

A cap effect bridal wreath, with orange blossoms and long draped veil was very effective.

The old point lace used on the gown is a masterpiece and a work of art in lace making. It is a part of a world famous collection.

Her Going-Away Dress.

The bride's going-away dress is a three-piece suit of navy blue whipcord gabardine. The coat is made of corbeau-blue charmeuse and gabardine. The front and upper part of back of coat is of charmeuse. The charmeuse back is gathered at collar. The three-quarter sleeve of gabardine is topped with the blue charmeuse, the edge of the sleeve is finished with a satin black silk braid. The soft girdle of gabardine ends in front with an oval charmeuse buckle. The bodice is dark blue chiffon over white. It is braided straps of gabardine over the shoulders, with 12 rows of braid over belt of blue gabardine. A white organdie vestee and collar are edged with a fine and green-flowered narrow ribbon, fastened in front by three ribbon buttons. Long blue sleeves over white chiffon end in wide cuffs of 16 rows of narrow black braid.

The short skirt is of gabardine, with three circular flounces starting at sides, and far are edged with a fine braid back with a strap of gabardine attached to which are four small black silk tassels. Between the flounces, corresponding with the tassels, are attached, showing about one inch of charmeuse between each flounce. Flounces and bottom of skirt are edged with black silk braid.

Mrs. McAdoo Absent.

Mrs. McAdoo is the only one of the three daughters of the president who has evinced no inclination to pursue an accomplishment or perfect herself in any branch of study. Like her mother, she has talent as an artist in oils and has spent two seasons at the Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia. She has been a keen student of music and is much of a diplomat. She is the only member of the White House family who has a nickname. She is called "Nell."

In appearance, Mrs. McAdoo is tall, slender, with a girlish figure, and a light, swinging gait. She has a pleasing smile, fine teeth, a rather large mouth, blue eyes topped with dark brows and fringed with dark lashes, a fine clear white skin and quantities of soft, auburn hair. She rides, dances, swims and rows well and is quite a linguist. Her place in society as the wife of the secretary of the treasury will now be next to that of Mrs. Bryan.

Career of the Groom.

Mr. McAdoo was born in Georgia in 1863, of a family which had been prolific, but had lost their all in the Civil war. At twenty-one years Mr. McAdoo was admitted to the bar and five years later he came to New York. There he formed a partnership with William McAdoo, who was no known relation.

In 1885 Mr. McAdoo married Miss Sarah Fleming of Chattanooga, Tenn., who died four years later, leaving her six children. Mr. McAdoo's principal residence is at Irvington-on-the-Hudson, not far from New York.

Height of Contempt.

Flora Anne Steele, the English novelist, said at her hotel in New York:

"I, as a successful writer, am accustomed to be treated with respect. But your immigration department treated me with such contempt that it reminded me of your story about the Indian.

"A Sioux Indian, according to this story, went to a storekeeper of his reservation and said he would like to buy a gun.

"'Oh, but,' said the storekeeper, jocularly, 'I don't like to sell you a gun —you might kill a settler with it.'

"Huh,' grunted the impassive Indian, 'for kill soldiers Indians use a stick.'"

ERUPTION ON CHILD'S BODY

R. F. D. No. 2, Jackson, Mo.—"Our daughter who is ten months old was suffering from a rash which broke out on her body. In the beginning they were small red spots and afterwards turned to bloody sores. We tried all sorts of ointments but they did not procure any relief for our child. She cried almost day and night and we scarcely could touch her, because she was covered with sores from head to foot.

"We had heard about the Cuticura Soap and Ointment and made a trial with them, and after using the remedies for a month and a half we noticed a change. Before one cake of Cuticura Ointment only a few days passed and our child could sleep well and after the first week she was totally well." (Signed) August F. Bartels, Nov. 25, 1912.

STOP THAT BACKACHE

There's nothing more discouraging than a constant backache. It makes you so tired when you awake. Pains pierce you when you bend or lift. It's hard to rest and next day it's the same old story.

Pain in the back is nature's warning of kidney ills. Neglect may pave the way to dropsy, gravel, or other serious kidney sickness.

Don't delay—begin using Doan's Kidney Pills—the remedy that has been curing backache and kidney trouble for over fifty years.

A MICHIGAN CASE

Peter Lotzke, Lieutenant, Preston, Mich., says: "I had awful backache and my kidneys caused me much trouble. I could not get any rest day or night. My back ached so I could hardly stoop or lift anything. Doctor's medicine failed to help me. Then I got Doan's Kidney Pills and almost two boxes cured me."

ELIHU ROOT'S PLAN

AGREEMENT OF THE MONITOR NATIONS WAS FIRST FORMULATED BY HIM.

ORIGIN OF MEDIATION OFFER

Mexico Itself Was First Called On to Settle a Dispute Over Boundary Between Nicaragua and Honduras.

By GEORGE CLINTON.

Washington.—It was said in March in this correspondence that Argentina, Brazil and Chile were in a position of power with stable governments under the direction of constructive statesmen and it was added that there were diplomats in Washington who believed that if, when the Mexican situation first became acute, the United States had asked these countries to join in representations to the Mexicans the shadow of the war would not lie across the Rio Grande.

Argentina, Brazil and Chile finally did make their effort to stop trouble in Mexico by an offer of mediation. No matter what the outcome, these three Spanish-American governments apparently have acted in good faith and by their offer for the first time have made themselves moving powers in diplomacy in the western hemisphere.

This offer of mediation from what are called the A-B-C countries of South America, a name given them because A, B and C are the initials of their names, was the development of a plan which was laid in the days of the Roosevelt administration and which largely was formulated by Elihu Root, who was then secretary of state. It certainly is curiously interesting that the development should take the form which it has today in view of the original facts in the case.

Cabinet Members Looked Ordinary.

When Secretary of State Root went to South America he made a good many public speeches, but in the interrals between them he talked quietly to the officials of Argentina, Brazil and Chile about a plan which he hoped they would adopt to make them more substantially powerful. Root remainded me of your story about the Indian.

"A Sioux Indian, according to this story, went to a storekeeper of his reservation and said he would like to buy a gun.

"'Oh, but,' said the storekeeper, jocularly, 'I don't like to sell you a gun —you might kill a settler with it.'

"Huh,' grunted the impassive Indian, 'for kill soldiers Indians use a stick.'"

The officials of all four countries were pleased with Mr. Root's suggestions, for it gratified their pride to be asked by the administration of the government of the United States regarded them as fitted in every way to exercise equal influence with the United States in the settlement of disputes, in preventing war and in laying foundations for permanent peace.

Mexico Called on First.

Curiously enough Mexico which first was requested to use its influence as a monitor nation to settle a trouble between two of the smaller Spanish-American governments, Nicaragua and Honduras became involved in difficulties over the matter of a boundary line. Hostilities were imminent when the representatives asked Mexico, the fifth monitor nation, to use its good offices, which it did and Nicaragua and Honduras have been at peace ever since. The preparations for hostilities, but their peaceful settlement, made a deep impression on the minds of the diplomats.

Finally as a result of the development of the monitor nation plan the country which proposed and another country which ably seconded its adoption, were asked by the three South American countries, which had been invited to mediate in the trouble between the two republics, to act with them to mediate in the trouble between the two republics of Central America, which had been at war with Mexico. The exigencies of the situation in Washington caused some of the metropolitan newspapers of the country to send additional men to the capital city to help out the regular correspondents in their work.

Every newspaper man who came to Washington sees things from a new viewpoint. He brings a fresh receptiveness to the scene. One young newspaper man who came here from New York was asked to write just how the whole thing struck him—the excitement of the occasion, the way of handling things and anything else that came to his mind. Here are some of the things that he set down on paper after he had had time to print on his mind the deceptive things as they came to him. It must be confessed that this youth of the metropolis saw things in a much more peaceful light than others were able to view them, but the story has the virtues, it is thought, of interest and picturesqueness. He writes in the third person.

"He happened to come to Washington yesterday, when there was a moment's lull in the Mexican hostilities. He saw the president looking very calm, with his mind on thoughts of peace again. He heard the secretary of the navy say with what appeared to be a perfectly careless smile, that he guessed it was a case of more watchful waiting.

"The man sat down in a chair in the White House lobby and, in the distance corner of his mind's eye, he saw the American sailors landing at Vera Cruz and the American soldiers blasting a way to Mexico City with their artillery. Then his eye wandered out the window over the White House grounds, where the grass was green, the trees covered with draperies of tender spring leaves, the magnolias alight with their pink blossoms, the tulips and hyacinths making bright spots in the lawn—and, like the man who couldn't believe in the giraffe, he said, 'there ain't no such thing.'

"Later somebody told him that the tender hues of spring had no bearing whatever on the question of war with Mexico. It appears that Washington always looks lovely at this time of year. And for several nights before that, the President, the army and navy departments, and the newspaper correspondents had sat up till nearly dawn, listening to the telegraph instruments as account of the doings of the day. On several occasions the president had been aroused from bed during the least-well-known hours of the morning.

"The man from New York, as he noticed the external calm that seemed to exist everywhere, could not help thinking how a war would have been run by the typical men of affairs in New York. The headquarters would have been in some 40-story building, in the heart of the seething, boiling downtown, which would have seethed and boiled ever so much more to match the occasion. Men difficult of access, behind partitions, doors and railings, guarded by office boys, haughty to callers, inordinately important in mien, and dressed in the clothing prescribed by 1914 New York fashions, would have been at the head of things.

Cabinet Members Looked Ordinary.

"With one or two possible exceptions, the members of the cabinet do not look as though they had thrown and tied all the weightiest questions in the universe and pinned a row of orders on themselves therefor. When the cabinet came out from the three hour meeting they had been holding—more to talk about Colorado than about the Mexican situation—the man from New York could almost have named the state from which each member came by his clothing and haircut.

"Since the situation became acute in Mexico the president's schedule had been almost completely abandoned. On the occasion mentioned above, after he had finished what he had to say—it is congressman, he turned to a number of newspaper correspondents who had arrived in Washington overnight—men who he recognized from campaigning days—and gave them a handshake and a word of welcome. He even answered a few questions about Mexico—a proceeding which was unusual, which was the usual custom of reserving what he has to say for the set occasions when all the men are present.

"Meantime autumn—Washington pays no great attention. Toward nightfall the crowds gather around the bulletin boards in front of the newspaper offices to read the sensational reports are bandied about in the hotels and shops. The bootblack says that regardless of what the president expects to do with Vera Cruz, Walter Johnson is undoubtedly the greatest pitcher in the history of the world."

Getting the "Big News."

The government of the United States is not a strict censor of news. Frequently the White House and offices of the secretaries of navy and war, for instance, withhold important information which comes from the front but eventually they give it out in order that the country may know just what is going on.

Night and day newspaper men have been working in Washington in relays. Ordinarily night and day in newspaperdom means working for one shift and then another. Here go the typical men and the working of another shift until the morning papers are put to bed, but in Washington recently night and day work has meant 24 hours' labor. One relay of correspondents goes on the scene, when another takes the post of duty and remains until the sun rises.

Activity and System.

"Signs of activity" is an expression which has been used upon numerous and hundreds of occasions in the prints of the United States. It has become so common in its use that perhaps it does not mean anything much in a day. The activity in the White House and in the state and war departments has been so great recently that one must go to the Chicago board of trade or to some other stock exchange during the hours of business in order to get a fitting standard of comparison. Only the experienced and business like in the service departments at Washington, everything has been systematized. No one correspondent, and no two correspondents, can monopolize a helping hand, has fallen over the heels of another in the rush of things.

The war and navy departments have furnished a bulletin service giving the news from Vera Cruz, Tampico, Mexico City and the Rio Grande. Occasionally the White House has given out statements prepared by the president not for use as a direct quotation, but to guide the correspondents when they wish to comment upon Mr. Wilson's feelings in this matter or that matter.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels is an experienced newspaper man. Personally he prepared a plan by means of which proper news instantly could be given to the correspondents, who, in large measure, could be depended upon to interpret it properly.

Long Pine—Hundreds of letters are pouring into this city asking for information concerning the big spring in Long Pine Canyon park. Most of the letters are from physicians in Nebraska and adjacent states. It has developed only recently that several of the campers in the park last year had been greatly benefited by the spring water. Nebraska's state chemist has found by analysis that the canyon park spring water is within a fraction of being 100 per cent pure, and that its only rival in that respect is a spring in Europe, but until recently it was not known that the water here had any special medicinal quality. Now Long Pine people are much excited over the possibility of making this thriving city a great health resort.

Summer School of Missions.

Omaha.—The summer school of missions will be in session here from June 22 to 30. The school will present an opportunity for church workers seldom offered for Bible study, the solution of many problems in mission study, and community betterment and child study from the church standpoint. Many able speakers and teachers will be present, and present views gathered from practical research along the lines of the various subjects to be discussed.

NEWS FROM STATE HOUSE

Dr. Charles Brown of Yale delivered an address at a university convocation one day last week.

The Ivy day festivities of the state universities were celebrated by a holiday and all day program last Wednesday.

Because of the mild weather of the winter just past, the state has been able to save thousands of dollars on the coal used at the various state institutions.

The injunction sought for against the submission of the $20,000 appropriation for an armory at Nebraska City was denied by Judge Stewart in district court at Lincoln.

All commissioned officers of the Nebraska national guard are being examined at the present time in 1913 army regulations, 1911 infantry drill regulations and small arms firing manual for 1913. Circulars are being sent out to all branches of the service containing instructions on mobilization.

One of the most successful short courses of the boys' and girls' clubs ever held at the Nebraska college of agriculture closed Friday, May 1. Young people from a large number of counties came to make their first visit and to receive elementary instruction concerning seeds, soils, dairying, animal husbandry, farm machinery, and home economics.

Cooperative pruning and spraying demonstrations are being made by the horticultural department of the Nebraska College of Agriculture with many of the farmers of the state. Skilled men are being sent out from the University Farm who are at present treating 3,000 trees. In the counties being treated demonstrators the work is being done in cooperation with the farm management associations.

Five hundred people leave Lincoln every year for Europe or some other foreign country, according to the estimates of railroad and steamship agents. Agents in the city sell more than one ticket a day to some traveler going back to the "old country," or off on a sightseeing tour of the world. All year round people leave for the seaports to embark for some land across seas.

Farmers and townsmen are showing more than ordinary alacrity this year in their purchase of automobiles. Records at the office of the secretary of state show that for the final number of registrations in Nebraska, including the seven-thousand motorcycles, has reached 61,385. April 24 a total of 120 automobiles were registered and from April 30 and May 1 a total of 153 cars were licensed.

Educational trust funds of Nebraska have accumulated almost to the $10,000,000 point, according to the monthly report of State Treasurer George at the close of business for April. The total amount in these funds is $1,661,364, and more than four-fifths of this belongs to the permanent school fund. There are few other funds in Clay county, designated known respectively as permanent university, agricultural college, university building and normal endowment funds.

Total collections of the food commission for the month of April amounted to $4,729. Of last amount $4,697 was derived from oil and gasoline inspections. During the month 1,646 inspections were made, 206 being at soda fountains, 186 hotels, 426 restaurants, 390 grocery stores, sixty-eight bakeries, fifteen cold storage houses, two dairies and eleven drug stores. Sanitary orders were written in 152 cases and ten prosecutions were instituted. There were 123 seed analyses made.

Those acquainted with the situation declare that a system of honors such as is being advocated at the university would have a general tendency to broaden the knowledge of the students trying for them. It is the plan to make the receipt of honors conditional upon the recipients doing a certain amount of work outside of class. For instance, if the person striving for honors were doing a certain amount of work in American history he would also be required to get a general knowledge of both European and ancient history.

Food Commissioner Harman is sending out a bulletin to ice cream manufacturers, calling their attention to the fact that standard of quality for ice cream must contain not less than 14 per cent of butter fat, and fruit ice cream at least 12 per cent. Artificial flavors must be labeled on the containers of ice cream whenever they are used. The containers must also show the net contents. This does not apply to packages sold by a retailer. The bulletin also directs the notice of manufacturers to the sanitary requirements of the law. In a bulletin issued to all companies, Mr. Harman gives warning against the branding of containers with a greater capacity than they actually hold. If a barrel is branded, it must be with the amount of oil actually inside, and not with the capacity of the barrel if filled.

WHITE HOUSE BRIDE

A SIMPLE CEREMONY, BRIEF BUT SOLEMN.

MANY VILLAGES DESTROYED

Eruption of Mount Etna Brings Death and Destruction to Number of Italian Villages.

Western Newspaper Union News Service.

Washington.—Miss Eleanor Randolph Wilson, youngest daughter of President and Mrs. Wilson, became the bride Thursday night of William Gibbs McAdoo, the secretary of the treasury, in the historic blue room of the White house.

Less than a hundred persons—and but few officials—heard the low-toned voice of Rev. Sylvester W. Beach pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Princeton, N. J., where the Wilson family has worshipped for years, as he united in marriage a member of the cabinet and the daughter of the president of the United States.

It was a simple ceremony, brief but solemn—the radiant faces of the bride and groom reflecting the happiness of the hour. For the president and Mrs. Wilson it was a touching moment as they gave a daughter for the second time within a year.

In contrast, nevertheless, to the wedding of last November. There were no uniformed diplomats, no members of the senate or house, or representatives of the state. Only those of the bride and groom, and except for an afternoon of gaiety among the young folks with the busy anticipations that always precedes a wedding, the day and evening moved by quietly and quickly.

The ceremony started at 5 o'clock and lasted but fifteen minutes. The reception was brief, the wedding supper was followed by a brief dance, and at 8 o'clock the bride and groom had left, all the wedding guests had departed and the White house resumed its normal appearance—interrupted but a few hours.

MANY VILLAGES ARE DESTROYED

Eruption of Mount Etna Brings Death and Destruction.

Catania, Sicily.—An earthquake Friday night brought death and destruction to many villages near Mount Etna. The number of dead is officially given as 139, with about 300 injured, but as yet a large portion of the devastated territory has not been inspected.

The disturbed zone extends from Zafarina, the highest village on Mount Etna, to the sea between Acireale, on the south, and Girre on the north. It includes fifteen villages in this area of disturbance; Pisano, and Santa Venerina.

In Linera alone 110 persons were killed and 300 injured. The village of Bongiardo thirteen dead and twenty-seven injured have been taken from the ruins. At Cosentini sixteen were killed and many injured. These villages and many smaller places were practically leveled.

Doctors Feared Lung Trouble, Restored to Health by Vinol.

The medical profession does not believe that lung troubles are inherited, but a person may inherit a weakness or tendency to them.

Mrs. Kate Hoeltzman, Springfield, Ohio, says: "A few years ago I was in a very bad run-down condition, and the physician told me I had consumption. I tried another physician, and he told me I had ulcers on my right lung. I quit the physicians and started on Vinol. Today I am perfectly healthy, and that is why I recommend Vinol."

Vinol soothes and heals the inflamed surfaces and allays the cough. Vinol creates an appetite, strengthens the digestive organs and gives the patient strength to throw off incipient pulmonary diseases.

Try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that your money will be returned if it does not help you.

HONOR TO SUFFRAGE

SECOND OF MAY CELEBRATED THROUGHOUT UNITED STATES.

NEBRASKANS GIVE TALKS

Rain Postpones Outdoor Programs, but State Suffragists Make Rapid Changes of Plan and Celebrate Anyway.

On May 2, all over the United States Suffrage Day was celebrated. The largest demonstration was in Chicago, where 10,000 women and 4,000 men formed a pageant by way of marching the Lincoln Park Boulevard. Rain poured, but this occasion only made women and men more determined to see the cause triumph. Other cities had similar demonstrations, but in this occasion how that women and men have joined hands and have marched with enthusiasm and confidence.

In New York open-air meetings were held throughout the five boroughs. Borden Gerdes and Judge Foley, Other cities had local celebrations suited specially to their needs and resources. It is noticeable that in the western enfranchised states where the question has come on before the voters and the suffragists are most busy, the demonstrations were not so spectacular. With the suffrage in the campaign state every day has to be suffrage day. In Nebraska the rain interfered with some of the plans for outdoor demonstrations. The automobile tour of Lancaster county which had been planned by the Lincoln suffragists had to be postponed until May 9. The York parade could not be held. Outdoor speeches and entertainments had to be given under a roof.

In Omaha a luncheon was held at the Hotel Loyal, at which ways and means for the campaign were discussed. Officers from Springfield, Hesman, Papillion, Arlington and other nearby towns were present. Mrs. James Richardson presided and talks were given by John F. Kennedy, Mrs. Draper Smith, president of the state suffrage association; Mrs. J. T. Lindsay, Mrs. C. F. Copper of South Omaha; Mrs. W. H. Shoetzer of Arlington and others.

In Lincoln the four of the county was turned into an impromptu picnic supper at Brownell hall, at which the fifty or more men and women who had intended to stump the county got together and exchanged ideas and inspiration and worked off some of the speeches with which they had fortified themselves. Before the meeting had closed almost everybody had broken into oratory. J. C. F. McKesson was the chairman of the evening. Among the speakers were W. B. Price, T. J. Doyle, J. L. Claflin of University Place, Sam Homans, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Harrison, Mrs. F. M. Hall, Miss Grace Ballard, president of the senior law class of the state university, George L. Davis and Gilbert Brown.

In York, Mrs. H. H. Wheeler of Lincoln spoke at the Y. M. C. A. and Mrs. Robert Elliott gave appropriate readings. The parade planned in Broken Bow was spoiled by the rain. But in spite of the weather the suffragists marched to a meeting place, where speeches and moving pictures made up the program.

At Falls City, Reid Green spoke at the court house square in the afternoon and inside in the evening. At Merna, Ainsworth, David City and many other Nebraska towns the day was celebrated.

BRISTOW-MONDELL RESOLUTION.

Puts Suffrage for First Time on Calendar of Both Houses.

The reporting a few days ago of the Mundell suffrage amendment to the United States house of representatives by the judiciary committee marked an epoch in suffrage work in this country. This report puts the Bristow-Mondell measure on the calendar of the house as well as the senate, where it received a favorable report on April 7th. Woman suffrage has never been debated on the floor of the United States house of representatives and it has never since 1890 got beyond the committee stage in the house; never before has it been on the calendar of both houses of congress.

College Men Are Helping.

The interest which university and college students are taking in the campaign for equal suffrage is one of its most notable features. Youth and zeal make these students very useful to the work. School will soon be over and the scholars of the colleges and universities will go home to the four corners of the state carrying with them the convictions and habits of scholars longing to exercise the newly-strengthened muscles in the world outside of college.

One state university student is a young minister taking post graduate work. Meanwhile he is preparing a revival in the church which he is serving. He goes about this as a good merchant acquires customers provided he has good goods to sell—by advertising. Across the top of the county papers, in display type, his meetings are advertised, and he has sent a printed postal card with his name written in ink to every citizen of the town where his church is located, as well as to every farmer within five miles of his church. This young man who has demonstrated his organizing ability has offered his services to the state suffrage association for the summer. He will still preach Sundays, but the other six days will be given to work for equal suffrage.

In David City.

In the last six weeks the sentiment in David City has perceptibly warmed up. Some kinds of coal heat slowly, but when once thoroughly ignited it throws out more heat than coal which burns quicker. This is the case with David City. Mrs. Case reports that the people there are cordially, warmly interested in equal suffrage, anxious to do their part in helping to bring it about, willing to spend themselves and their money in the cause.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By O. E. BRIGGS, Director of Every Member Department, The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

LESSON FOR MAY 17

THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS.

LESSON TEXT—Luke 16:14-15; 19-31. GOLDEN TEXT—Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he shall also cry, but shall not be heard.—Prov. 21:13.

Verses 14 and 15 link this parable with the teaching of Jesus about covetousness and stewardship. Verse 15 is a most heart-searching one. It demands that we look well in the standards by which we measure our own conduct, I Sam. 16:7. That the teaching of Jesus was effective is evidenced by the statement of verse 14. These Pharisees were naturally cool, cynical, calculating and their scoffing shows that Jesus had probed them deeply. Their love of money—service of mammon—made them unfaithful in their professed stewardship. In the intervening verses (16-18) Jesus condemns their attitude of seeking to justify themselves in the sight of men, declaring such an attempt to be useless in the sight of God. The methods men exalt are an abomination to him. No jot or tittle of the law can fail. He emphasizes by an illustration about the binding nature of the marriage relationship. We get our suggested twofold division of this lesson from I Tim. 4:8.

Why He Is Condemned.

I. The Life That Now Is, vv. 19-22. The revised version for verse 19, "now there was a certain rich man" indicates even stronger than the King James version that this is the story of a historical incident. Jesus did not mention the rich man's name, nor does he enumerate his moral delinquencies. Even morality cannot save a man from punishment in the next life. Nor is the rich man condemned because he is rich. He is condemned because he sought to enjoy his pleasures in this life, squandering his time and his money upon sensual pleasures, ignoring the need of those at his door. Jesus had just told these Pharisees how to use money (v. 9), see I Tim. 6:17-19. A wrong use of money damns a man. A few paltry charities or even larger gifts given for ostentatious display will not suffice. There was, however, no real joy to the rich man in his life as he sought sensual satisfaction, Eccl. 1:8. Lazarus lying at the door was a living rebuke to his selfindulgence. Here is another of those vivid pictures that not alone reveals the misery but makes an indelible impression on the mind. It is better, however, to be a beggar sore and hungry in this life and go to heaven hereafter, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season and be forever in torment in the life to come. The name Lazarus means "God his help" and is an instance of the shortening of a longer name. It does not look as though God were "mindful of his own" but the sequel abundantly corrects such an idea.

Positions Reversed.

II. The Life Which Is to Come, vv. 23-31. Unconscious of the need of others here the rich man is very much conscious of his own need in hades when subject to torment and anguish. There is no end of irrigation in this life or to "explain" nor to deny these words of Jesus. Hell is for the willfully disobedient, and was never prepared for man (Matt. 25:41). On earth he saw Lazarus "at his gate," now with Abraham, resting "in his bosom." Their positions are reversed, the petitioner is now the rich man who begs for "mercy," though in life he showed none at all. His plea was for his tongue; that organ had been pampered in the lust now it is in misery, because deprived of earthly satisfaction. The solemnity of this lesson is very great. As we have suggested this does not call this a parable. It is possible that Jesus' auditors knew the very people of whom he was speaking, some notoriously wealthy citizen recently deceased, and some well-known almsseeker. For a moment our Lord withdraws the curtain to let those about him rent the story, cater, for an instant, a glimpse. He shows us that the attitude of today determine the destinies of tomorrow. The experience of life beyond death is determined by the use of the life "that now is." The gate of heaven is without our self-centered life and often takes the form of a beggar. To wrongly employ our wealth, to live within the gate of selfishness will shut the gate of heaven in our own faces. If we pass without that gate of selfishness and minister, presently we find we have made a friend in the life beyond. It is not the crumbs we give the beggar, that which we do not miss, it must be self-emptying service.

This lesson raises the question, "are the ruling desires of our lives such as shall develop gratification and satisfaction in the life to come?" If not, we do well to heed this story, Col. 3:1-2. Memory is also active in that future existence and it will be either a source of gratifying joy or else of unspeakable anguish. We are taught that education is largely developed art of memory and the Scripture tells us that as a man thinketh so is he, Prov. 23:7. Small wonder Paul should exhort us to think on holy things, Phil. 4:8, with such a prospect in view for all.

M. E. Church Notes.

The young people of Mrs. Andrew's Sunday school class had a very enjoyable class social at Mrs. Gertude Cotton's on Monday evening.

There was a large congregation present Sunday morning to hear Rev. J. W. Embree. The Baraca's furnished printed souvenirs and flowers for the occasion. Our thanks are extended to Mrs. W. Shaw for beautiful flowers donated.

Next Sunday morning will be our communion service. All members should be present and unite in this memorial of the death and sufferings of our Lord. All christian people of whatever evangelical belief are welcome at our communion. The pastor will deliver a heart-message appropriate to the occasion. The general public is invited.

Next Monday night the members of the Epworth League will have an anniversary social in commemoration of the 25th birthday of the League. All members of the league should be on hand, and all other young people of our congregation are welcome.

Tuesday, the 19th, has been appointed as house cleaning day at the church,—a fine opportunity to demonstrate our practical belief in the old adage "Cleanliness is next to godliness."

Sunday evening the pastor will speak on the subject, "The False Witness." You are invited to hear this plain story of the struggle between truth and error.

SYNOPSIS.

Randolph Van Vechten, young and wealthy, is astonished to see a man enter No. 1111, a house across the street from the Powhatan, and, being unconvinced and spoken of as the House of Mystery. Several persons at regular intervals enter No. 1111. Van Vechten expresses concern to his friend, Tom Pilsbury, regarding the whereabouts of his cousin and fiancee, Paige Carew. A man is forcibly ejected from the house. Van Vechten and Tom follow the man and find him dead in the street. Van Vechten is attracted by the face of a girl in the crowd of onlookers surrounding the body. Later he discovers the girl gazing at him with a look of scorn from the windows of the mysterious house. Detective Flint calls on Van Vechten to get his version of the tragedy. Tom Pilsbury goes alone on a yachting trip. He recognizes among some persons in a passing motor boat two men whom he had seen enter the House of Mystery, all these one of them. Mr. Challis, on shore later and follows him. Tom is seized, blindfolded and taken to a house. He hears a girl named Jessie, evidently the daughter of the man in authority, question his captors. A sweet-voiced girl later questions Tom as to what was of his captors. Van Vechten calls on his uncle, Solomon Van Vechten, a banker in Wall street and known as the "Man of Iron," in search of information regarding the whereabouts of Paige Carew. Detective Flint makes a search of the house. London reports that two ladies resembling Miss Carew and her companion, Mrs. Devereux, sailed for New York some time previously. It develops that the ladies visited the English home of Temple Bonner, owner of the House of Mystery. Flint has a theory that they are connected with the mystery of No. 1111. It is recalled that Temple Bonner was in love with a daughter of Compton Schuyler who married Max Willard. The other daughter married a man named Devereaux. Bonner and Willard were intimate friends. A search is started for Willard.

BOOK II.

"Humph! Shouldn't think Flint would have been so careless," was his immediate conclusion. It did not occur to him that somebody already might be within, but contented himself with the belief that the detective had neglected to make fast the door after his visit Sunday afternoon.

Settling the incident thus to his own satisfaction, he entered and closed the door behind him.

He glimpsed into the kitchen and promptly withdrew with a shudder. Off on one side a huge range stood, rusty with rust, and everywhere were cobwebs and layer upon layer of dirt. A sleek rat darted into the denser shadows, and the opening door disturbed hundreds of enormous cockroaches. Some scuttled away, but others remained motionless and watched him with malignant eyes that sparkled weirdly in the half light.

He shook off his feeling and advanced toward the stairs, which loomed dimly before him. But thenceforward he moved with utmost circumspection, pausing frequently at some imagined sound, or to determine the nature of some shape unexpectedly confronting him in a darker corner.

And scarcely had he arrived at the first floor than his strained attentiveness was rewarded by a sound that was unmistakably human. It brought him up short—a sound of human voices. A distinctly unpleasant tingling sensation played over his scalp as he drew back of his neck. The hallway, however, instantly vanished, and instead he was filled with wonder and curiosity at this unlooked-for interruption.

Who could have chosen a spot so desolate and God-forsaken in which to carry on a conversation?

He recalled the unlatched door; manifestly whoever was inside with him had entered by means of a key. Evidently he had been equipped to do, and had neglected to fasten the door after them. At any rate, the matter was worth investigating; then, if he saw that he was an intruder, he could quietly withdraw.

When they first startled him the voices were so low that he was unable to determine anything about them—how many were talking, or in what portion of the house the speakers were. Then of a sudden he received a fresh shock of surprise. One of the voices rose in a note of anger.

It was a woman's—nay, a girl's.

And now he was able to locate the source of the sounds. They came from somewhere in the second story and toward the rear of the house. With infinite caution, he crept up the front stairway to the upper hall.

The voices sounded incessantly, first a man's, hoarse and rumbling, then the girl's, that sometimes both together. Van Vechten paused at a realization that the two were quarreling and that the girl's voice was quivering with intense indignation.

He advanced more rapidly, and presently came to a halt before a closed door, on the farther side of which the two disputants without doubt were engaged. And then perforce he became an eavesdropper.

"Go, go, go!" cried the feminine voice, shrill with exasperation and anger. "I tell you, I will not stand this annoyance. Whatever in the world possessed you to follow me I can't imagine. Get out of my sight. I don't want to hear a word you have to say!"

At the next words Van Vechten started so violently that, had the unseen couple been less absorbed in their quarrel, they must have heard him. The girl was still speaking.

"You have done many things to anger me that I have overlooked, John Callis; but your following me here is just a bit more than I can endure. Now I mean to tell father just how you have been harassing me, and, mark my words, he will put a stop to it. Why did you come after it was decided that I was to do the errand alone?"

"You know," Callis' deep voice growled. "You take precious care that I don't get to talk to you anywhere else."

"And why?" returned the girl, witheringly. "Because you can't be sensible. No, no; don't interrupt," she commanded. "If you have followed me here to learn what I think of you, then listen to me. I'll make my meaning so plain that it will penetrate even to your dull understanding."

"There was a time that I liked you, John—how could I help it when in so many ways you have been loyal? Even now I admire that loyalty."

"A dog's!" the man contemptuously interjected; but the girl ignored the interruption.

"But you are so obtuse that you cannot see when your familiarities are distasteful! I am sure I have never encouraged you by word or look. Can't you realize that by persisting in them you only excite loathing and fear—"

"Bah, no, I am not afraid of you." The voice abruptly softened. "And I don't loathe you, John; it's wicked for me to say such a thing; but you will drive me to loathing you if you persist in making love to me. I do not love you, I never have, I never can."

"I Can Hold This Ruffian—at Least Until You Make Good Your Escape."

A roar from the man cut short her words.

"Damn it, I'll make you love me!" The voice was rattling harshly in his throat. "Do you think I have been working and waiting all these years from any sense of duty or loyalty to your father? Then you're a fool, for it was for you—do you hear me? You! I meant at the first that you should be my wife, and I mean it still. I mean it now more than ever. And by God, you shan't turn me down in this way! I won't—I can't stand it!"

There was a pause. The stillness of the mouldering corridors and empty chambers seemed to gather and weigh down upon the listener like a palpable substance. What should he do; retreat without letting his presence be known, or open the door and intervene? So far the girl had demonstrated her ability to handle the situation, and he shrank from appearing as an officious meddler; yet, for the life of him, until he was convinced at least a trifle of the altercation's outcome he could not depart.

The silence was quite abruptly broken by the girl's voice, cold now and biting.

"John, stand away from the door and let me by."

No response from the man.

"Are you going to let me pass?"

And again, apparently, he was unable to contain himself.

"No!" he burst forth. "If all my months of waiting and giving—myself, y'understand—giving the best of me for you—if my only payment is to be scorn and contempt I suppose you'd call it—then, by heaven! I'll make you suffer! I'll break your spirit; I will—I'll—"

"John!" in a shocked voice.

He did not heed; all restraint was thrown to the winds, and he drove on in a reckless frenzy of speech.

"You think I care what you oppose to me, do you? Huh! Blame little you know about John Callis. If I can't have you I don't care a whoop in hades what becomes of me. If I can't have you nobody else shall. Scream, if you want to—yell at the top of your voice—there's nobody to hear you."

"John!" The girl was now genuinely alarmed. "Don't talk so wildly! You'll regret this. And don't—don't look at me like that!" Another brief pause and she concluded pleadingly: "Please, John, let me go!"

"I shan't"—doggedly.

"What do you mean to do with me, John?"

"I don't know. I haven't made up my mind. Maybe I'll kill you—if you drive me to it."

The girl must have rushed toward the door, desperately striving to win past him, and just as certainly he must have caught her and stayed her steps. What followed was pretty much confused in Van Vechten's mind. There was a sound of scuffling; the incensed listener in the hall heard the girl cry out in an agitated voice: "Oh! You are hurting me!" which was immediately followed by a stifled shriek that chilled the blood in his veins.

Next instant he had grasped the knob and thrown all his weight against the door.

It was unbolted and crashed open with explosive violence. His impetus both promptly quieted the disturbance. The man—it was the sandy-complexioned man—stood with dropped jaw, staring blankly at the intruder.

And the girl? His heart leaped. His whole being was suffused with a warm glow. The girl that he had despaired of ever seeing again, what unhappy mischance had brought her to this peril? And what unrecognized message had prompted him to arrive upon the scene so opportunely?

After the first shock of pleased surprise, Van Vechten flamed, then turned to ice. His regard traveled to the man in a narrowed look of anger that left him white to the lips. It was a hard look, an ugly, wicked look that spelled danger.

But his lifelong habit of repression checked any violent display of feeling on his part. The spell was broken when he composedly advanced a step farther into the room, not for an instant moving his steely regard from the man. All of a sudden his chin lips twisted in an odd little smile that was at once all-pleading and no-secure.

"Well?" he said quietly. Save for the unmistakable undercurrent of menace, the tone might have been affable.

So profound was the other man's stupefaction that he mechanically released the girl's wrists and fell back a pace. Only a quick anticipation of act saved her from falling to the floor as it was she staggered backward until a dust-coated library table stayed her. At this she clutched, clinging to its edges, and, wide-eyed, stared from one to the other of the men. Her tormentor's brain, obviously, stirred only sluggishly; but all at once the sullen features were contorted with blood, the veins on his forehead swelled, and all his fury—now redoubled—was directed at Van Vechten.

"Where in hell did you come from?" he snarled venomously.

"Anyhow, not the same neighborhood that bred you," Van Vechten eyed him a moment longer with inexpressible disfavor. "Good Lord!" he added, "what a nasty brute you are!"

Nothing less than paralysing amazement, apparently, restrained Callis from leaping upon Van Vechten and beating him out of hand—and perhaps, too, there was a quality in the young man's bearing that had something to do with it—his unflinching glance, the manner of his look, the inevitable dominance of caste and breeding. With a little bow, Van Vechten turned his back to the girl.

"You are at perfect liberty to depart," he said, with calm, dignified deference. "And, really, I think you had better do so at once. I can hold this ruffian—at least until you make good your escape. Once you are in the street, you know, and you are safe."

By this time she had regained something of her own composure, but the cool assurance of this punctiliously bred young man, the obvious determination and air of authority that lay behind his courtesy, evoked from her a look of startled wonder. The heavy lashes half-veiled her dark eyes as they wavered to Callis, then back again to him; it was a covert, all-appraising glance. Then her lips curled scornfully.

What was passing in her mind was only too plain to Van Vechten. He flushed hotly. Already he had made the same comparison; and he fostered no illusions respecting the possible outcome of a combat.

Never before had he been confronted by any man so irresponsible with rage, or one with whom it was so hopeless to attempt to reason; never in all his life had he struck a man in anger; but he knew there was just one way in which he could succor this disdainful beauty, and that would be to pit his endurance against the bully's strength, to guard himself as much as possible against his repeated onslaughts, and delay pursuit of the girl until he (Van Vechten) was pounded into insensibility—or maybe plain. He did not blink that contingency. Yet, without the slightest hesitation, he had resolved to offer himself to the sacrifice.

He was guilty of no error of judgment now, however; Callis gave him but scant time to reflect, then rushed, not at him, but at the girl. Simultaneously Van Vechten plunged headlong forward, interposing his lighter body between.

Amid the stress and confusion of violent situations, the human mind is capable of the most ridiculous pranks. And at this critical moment Van Vechten's prompted him to commit such an absurdity.

"Get out of here, you little idiot!" he yelled at the girl, who seemed frozen to the table.

She hesitated one second longer, then, with a stifled scream, slipped into the hall and closed the door after her.

It would not be pleasant to record what happened in that room. There is nothing heroic in a bated rat darting desperately from a trap into the jaws of a waiting terrier, nor in the spectacle of a lamb being prodded to the shambles. For perhaps five minutes Van Vechten succeeded in preventing Callis from grasping the door-knob—a period in which he was reduced from a correctly dressed, rather handsome young gentleman to an object that was no more than a tattered, bloody semblance of humanity—and then he sank into oblivion.

Callis stared at his motionless adversary. Why didn't the fool move? The answer came promptly, unbidden: Because he couldn't. He would never move again. Callis' parchmen, it should be to rise up and follow him—out of the room, along the echoing halls, down the dusty stairs, into the street, whithersoever he went, turn and double, twist and dodge, there would be that thing at his side, until at last—

And there was yet another shadow in this silent house, one other fearsome shade: suppose it should detach itself from the rest; suppose the two shadows should get together and enter into an unholy pact to work his undoing!

John Callis clenched his teeth to stop their chattering. His startling silence skirted the room and sought to penetrate the shadows of the corners. The menace of possible eavesdroppers was looming larger and larger and more obscure, then was irresistibly drawn back to the shapeless blurred shape in the corner. He did not look away from it again.

Swallowing convulsively, licking his dry lips with a dry tongue, he backed noiselessly, step by step, until he brought up against the door. Never for an instant did the horrible dread of the two shadows blending and following him pause. It is upsetting suggestion.

He felt for the knob like one in a nightmare. Finding it, he stealthily opened the door and slunk away.

SOME REMARKS ON INCOMES

Pertinent Just Now When the Subject Is a Matter of General Discussion.

Incomes are now being taxed. It is, therefore, desirable that something should be known about them. An income is anything which you cannot live upon expressed in terms of lawful money. Lawful money is anything which will be accepted by the members of a state legislature, or a police captain, or your wife. Incomes were created for two purposes; to lie about and to live beyond. Many people who seem to have to pay are complaining to their friends and neighbors about the way they are oppressed by the income tax. This is one of the unnatural phenomena which no scientist has been able to explain.

Incomes vary in size according to how many people have worked for you in the past or are working for you at present. No income is without honor somewhere, except in the family it is vainly attempting to support. Here it is generally despised and looked down upon.

An income tax is an effort on the part of the government to make you feel that you are wealthy. Also to support the government in its main business in life, namely, living beyond its income.

The government, which receives a larger income than any one else, should be taxed upon it. The process might go toward relieving millionaires in distress.

Every income is known by the company it keeps.—Life.

LANDMARKS OF PARIS

Many Historic and Tragic Spots in French Metropolis.

Hotel de Ville Holds Abundant Memories of History of Capital City of France, Though Present Structure Is Comparatively New.

Paris—Let us continue the exploration of old Paris and the search for historical landmarks. The day is still wet and gloomy, quite suitable for an expedition about the scenes of tragedy which any journey of this sort through the ancient section of the French capital inevitably includes.

We leave the spot where the last barricade of the short-lived insurrection of 1832 was so heroically defended and pass down the Rue St. Martin to the old Church of St. Merry, once known as St. Medéric, started in 1520. Its striking but unfinished portal looms darkly through the rain and offers no invitation to enter, although the interior is in some respects attractive. A detour around the building affords an interesting conception of the narrowness and crookedness of the streets of old Paris, and gives an idea of the manner in which strictly secular establishments were huddled against the very walls of the sacred edifices of former days.

Returning to the St. Martin, a few yards back from the river, we encounter the sinister opening of the Rue de Venise, five centuries ago notorious as the home of usurers and cutthroats. It is still darksome and repellent in aspect and one feels no call to penetrate its mysteries, which, however, doubtless consist chiefly of low grog shops. Repeated warnings about the unwisdom of venturing off the highways in this city of supposedly policeregulated crime recur to the mind and prohibit an excursion, however timid, into the street—nay, now be of law, lessness.

Back toward the Seine we now go, making for the Hotel de Ville, which holds abundant memories of French history. It is not the old building which rises before us, however, but a replacement on the site of the ruins left in 1871 by the destructive commards, who after the collapse of the government incident to the German siege formed a "committee of public safety," which, establishing headquarters here, set fire to the buildings, and, regardless of the lack of means of egress, sat idle to the pite. Fifty six hundred thus perished.

So passed a structure that had been the scene of stirring happenings. It was always the democratic center, as opposed to the aristocratic Louvre, a few squares westward. Here the "third estate," so troublesome, developed its power. Here the captors of the Bastille were welcomed triumphantly on the 14th of July, 1789, when they returned with head-decorated pikes from their successful attack upon the prison stronghold of the state. Here three days later the unhappy Louis XVI went reluctantly, accompanied by a dense mob, and showed himself at a window wearing the cockade of three colors—reputed to have been designed by Lafayette.

Priceless Egyptian Papyrus Lost.

Paris.—It is stated by the Matin that an Egyptian papyrus of great value, which was acquired by the Louvre, cannot be found. It was presented to the museum in 1887 by the widely known Egyptologist, M. Adolphe Catinin. Recently M. Catinin asked to consult it in connection with some work upon which he was engaged, but no one knew anything about it. The papyrus is a magnificently illuminated manuscript of the Dead." It was of the best period and measured over seventy feet in length.

READY TO MEET THEM ALL

Girl Had Idea That Introduction to Distinguished Englishman With Peculiar Name Was a Joke.

Colonel Younghusband, hero of the British expedition to Lhassa, and the first white man who ever entered Thibet's sacred city, is rather embarrassed at times because of his unusual name.

"The trouble is," he said the other day, "that I cannot resist the temptation to refuse to take your hands seriously. At first, I think I have the advantage over Lord Sandwich, whose name also seems to be a subject for jest. While in Washington once Lord Sandwich attended a reception at the British embassy. He was introduced to an American girl, who labored under the delusion that the introduction was a joke. But she was not to be taken in. 'Lord Sandwich!' she exclaimed. 'I'm delighted to meet you. I suppose Lord Spongecake or Lord Pie will be here next!'"

When Confidence Returned.

The young bride was exchanging costume for a traveling suit.

"Inez," she asked of the rather envious housemaid who was assisting her, "did I appear at all nervous at any time during the ceremony?"

"Just a little at first," replied Inez, "but not after Gerald had said 'I do.'"—Ladies' Home Journal.

HAYNES

Motorists Who Drove Haynes Cars in the Early Days Still Drive the Haynes

Twenty-one years ago, Elwood Haynes built the "horseless carriage"—the little machine that gave birth to the American automobile industry. Ever since then, Haynes cars have been built, year in, year out, without interruption.

And during these twenty-one years Haynes owners have been demonstrating in "road races," "reliability runs," in "hill climbs" of every description, under all conditions, in this country and abroad with themselves the only "competitors," that the is a good car, and that given ordinary care and attention, the Haynes remains a good car, a mighty good car—indefinitely.

That's why these owners, after years of service, again purchase a Haynes. That's why such a large percentage of the Haynes annual production is sold every season to owners of old Haynes cars. That's why you should investigate the Haynes before you buy any car.

Elwood Haynes was ahead of the times when he built the first Haynes. Years ahead. He is ahead of the times now in adopting the greatest automobile refinement in recent years—the Vulcan Electric Gear Shift. This device eliminates the hand-shifting lever entirely, and so simplifies the control of the Haynes that anyone may readily drive it. With it, the Haynes is electrically controlled throughout; manual gear shifting, starting, lighting and ignition are accomplished by electricity.

Her Kind Offer.

James K. Hackett, the actor, tells the story of a gentleman who had been traveling some months, and upon his return was informed of the death of a valued friend.

Several days later he called on the bereaved widow to offer his expressions of sympathy. During the visit he remarked:

"I was a good friend of your late husband. Is there not something of his which I could have, as a memento of him?"

She raised her velvety brown eyes to his, twist and dodge, there would be that thing at his side, until at last—

Worse to Come.

The regular trombone player of a Scottish orchestra was laid up with a cold—and the conductor reluctantly accepted the services of a home-made amateur. He was a little doubtful, however, as to the suitability of his substitute.

After the first performance the new player asked the conductor how he had done.

The conductor replied that he had played very fairly, but that perhaps he would do better next night.

The newcomer, eyeing him gratefully, answered:

"Man, ye see, the music is a' strange tae me the nicht, and I'm no' jist shair o' yet, but you wait tae the morn's nicht, an', ye'll no hear ane o' thae fiddles at a'."—London Telegraph.

Strange, Indeed!

"For the making of billiard-balls five hundred elephants are needed every year," said the famous big-game hunter in his lecture on India. "How strange," whispered Mrs. Wiggs, "that only lady who sat next. "that people can teach such great beasts to do such delicate work!"

Age of Talent.

According to some recently compiled statistics, the most chemical and medical discoveries have been made by men of forty years of age. Forty-four is the age at which a poet may expect to do his best work; soldiers and explorers tend to distinguish themselves most at the age of forty-seven; our forty-eight years of age the composers and actors are at the summit of their powers; politicians excel at fifty-two years, philosophers at fifty-four and humorists at fifty-six. These figures preach patience to the young.

The Conference.

Charles F. Murphy was talking to a reporter about home rule.

"The Liberal party," he said, "sat tight while Ulster bragged and blustered. But at the psychological moment the Liberal government made a show of force. And where was Ulster then?

"It reminds me of the conference of the physical force and anti-physical force parties in Dublin. They conferred a long time, the anti-physical force party was very patient, the physical force party was impassioned, obstreperous and violent, but nothing came of it till the antiphysical force party threw the physical force party downstairs.

"The liberal government seems to be the anti-physical force party."

No Lamp.

A three-year-old lad was out walking with his grandfather when he noticed the first star appear in the sky. Looking as it does at night, he remarked, very solemnly, "Well, there's the moon, but it ain't got any lamp in it now."

First False Teeth.

Most people probably regard false teeth as a very modern invention, but Peter du Preez, who has been in existence for more than a century. The first successful maker was a certain Italian dentist, Giussepangelo Fonzi. He began practising in Paris in the year 1788, and thanks to his skilful treatment of Lucien Bonoparte, soon made his way intimately society as a gold medal from the French Academy of Science.

Among the distinguished persons whom Fonzi fitted with false teeth was the empress of Russia. After the battle of Waterloo he migrated to London. Thence he went to Madrid, where he provided King Ferdinand VII with so excellent a set of teeth that the grateful monarch rewarded him with a handsome annual pension.

So They Can.

Patrice—That's funny. I should think they could use powder and arms without joining the army.

Survival of Superstition.

Madagascar natives have a strange idol. It is a piece of wood covered with grime and adorned with two of the priests' pull in a certain way. The god performs movements in all directions, to the great terror of the faithful, who believe it is really alive. The priests dwell in houses of wood, as the god will have neither stone nor brick. To distinguish themselves from the other natives, the faithful wear their hair rolled in curl-papers like women, and keep it in the shape of a horn by means of pins.

The KITCHEN CABINET

"Work is the artist that builds a splendid arch; worry, the enemy which removes the keystone, allowing the structure to fall.

HOUSEKEEPING HINTS.

When you are roasting or baking set the alarm clock at the time you desire to look at your dishes and you can freely give your mind to other work.

Put a silver knife in a glass fruit jar down into the fruit to let out every bit of air. See that the knife is well scalded and clean.

After the rubber and lid has been placed on a jar and screwed as tightly as possible with the handle of a knife or fork, press the edge of the lid down all around, pressing firmly down on the rubber. You will never have a leaky jar if you have good rubbers and tops well put on.

When wiping the jars use a special cloth for the purpose, not the dishcloth.

A delicious sandwich filling is chopped almonds which have been blanched and two parts of finely chopped celery with a dash of salt and a little mayonnaise dressing.

Flour sacks make good dish towels. To remove the lettering rub well with soap and put into cold water with a little kerosene. The paint will soften and come out in boiling will do the work. If not entirely removed, soap again and boil up once more. Rinse and hang out on the line.

Keep a can of cream of tartar on hand. It will clean polished silver like magic. Rub the surface to be cleaned with a cloth dampened with kerosene, and it will not injure the surface.

Rub the cork which is used in the glue or cement bottle with vaseline, and it will always be removed easily.

Wheat paper is a great convenience in the home. It will preserve eatables from the air and keep them moist.

It is indispensable in the lunch basket. Cheese well wrapped in waxed paper will keep moist and eatable.

Fruit wrapped in it will keep fresh, and if kept on ice will be most attractive when served.

Try using a small piece of mosquito netting basted under the large hole of the child's stocking and weave the darning cotton in and out of its meshes. This will prove a great help to a tired mender of many hose.

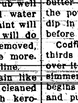
Economy no more means saving money than spending money. It means spending and saving, whether time, money or anything else, to the best possible advantage.—John Ruskin.

EASY DESSERTS.

There is no dessert which is easier made than the frozen one, especially that which needs no stirring in the freezer. The following one is a great favorite with those who are fortunate enough to have the recipe.

Take the juice of two oranges, two lemons, two cupfuls of sugar, two cupfuls of milk and two cupfuls of cream; mix well and stir slowly in the freezer at first. Let stand to ripen for two hours or more after freezing.

Orange Parfait.—Cook two cupfuls of sugar and a cupful of water together until it threads, pour this hot syrup over the well beaten whites of six eggs, beat until cool, cut two and a half cupfuls of cherries into bits, roll in powdered sugar, beat a quart of cream to a stiff froth, add the cherries to the egg whites, add a tablespoonful of vanilla. Pack in a pail if no freezer is at hand, and let stand four hours. Serve with the following sauce:



Orange Sauce.—Beat the yolks of six eggs and add one cupful and a half of sugar, the juice of two oranges, and cook over hot water until thick, cool and fold in the cup of reserved cream.

Duchesse Loaf.—Boil a pint of cherry juice with the juice of half a lemon and a cupful of sugar, ten minutes. Whip a pint of cream, add half a cupful of sugar, a half teaspoonful of vanilla and a half cupful each of finely minced candied cherries. Put into a mold and pack in ice and salt for four hours.

Velvet Sherbet.—Take the juice of four lemons, a quart of milk and two cupfuls of sugar, mix well and freeze.

A plain ice cream will become a most elegant dish with the addition of some chopped nuts, candied ginger, chocolate sauce or a maple sauce.

In fact, a sauce of any preserved fruit is always an addition.

When strawberries are reasonable in price there need be no question of dessert, for this queen of fruits makes a most delectable sauce, as well as an ice with water or a sherbet with cream when frozen.

Have patience; here are flowers and birds,
Beauty and fragrance, wealth of sound and sights.
All summer's glory time, from morn till night,
And life too full of joy for uttered words.

CODFISH SPECIALTIES.

The people of New England know how to prepare the fresh and salt cod in a great number of simple and delicious dishes.

Codfish Balls.—The salted fish is of course never so good as the fresh, but we must be satisfied with it when the fresh fish is unobtainable. Pick up two cupfuls of the fish and pour over it cold water to cover and simmer slowly for 15 minutes, then pour off the water. Have prepared three cupfuls of hot mashed potatoes, season with salt, pepper and three tablespoonfuls of butter and three of cream. Stir into the potato the fish, form into balls, dip in egg and fry in deep fat just before using.

Codfish Porterhouse.—Pick up two-thirds of a cupful of salt cod, pour over it two cupfuls of cold water and simmer three minutes after it begins to boil. Drain the water off and put into the pan with the fish two tablespoonfuls of butter. Put into it three cupfuls of good, rich milk, or one of cream and one of milk is better. Stir two tablespoonfuls of flour smooth in half a cupful of milk, pour this into the pot milk and stir it until smooth, allowing it to simmer for five minutes after it is thick. Just before taking from the fire break into three fresh eggs. Let the whites set before the yolks are broken and then stir them in lightly. Take from the fire at once and pour into the serving dish, dot with bits of butter and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Serve with baked potatoes.

Health and good digestion are dependent objectively upon appetizing flavor due to skilful preparation of food, and subjectively to a cheerful and harmonious state of mind on the part of the eater.—James.

HINTS TO STORE FOR USE.

When traveling in a sleeper and too much draft is felt from a window open over the head, it is useful to put a lead pencil under the sash, and the small crack will let in enough air to keep the air in the berth pure. Keep an old comb to remove lint and hair from the sweeping brush.

When bathing the baby lay him on a pad and towel on a sewing table, and be sure he is put into a bath, as the little one is much easier bathed and not apt to have his back influred as when held on the lap.

Keep a pan handy by paper gets on wood or the floor soak it with vinegar.

Always carry a few dry seeds in your purse, and if you get a spot on your dress, put the moistened fast and will slide in so easily and gather up the painful foreign body.

A shelf over a gas stove or just above the kitchen table is a great convenience, as one may keep the seasoning there. The shelf may have hooks underneath on which may be hung the most used utensils, all near at hand.

Cotton crepe is becoming the ideal house dress material, as it is also for the kitchen. It is cool, easily laundered and needs little ironing. A bit of lace or embroidery for finish is effective. The fabric may be put upon the skirt which can be starched and ironed if so desired, but the dress simply needs washing and drying on a hanger, when it is sweet, clean, and ready for wear.

Iodine marks may be removed with ammonia. Put it on until the spot disappears, then wash well.

For mud stains, allow the mud to dry, then brush briskly with a whisk broom, and the spots will usually disappear.

Ink stains, as well as paint, may be removed by turpentine and soap.

When you find cocoa or chocolate stain on linen, soak in cold water, rubbing well to loosen any fat, then wash in hot suds.

Had Made a Good Start.

"If a certain family there is one of those necessaries—a grandmother—is almost extinct. Two sad-love affairs have made life appear rather curdled, and she's about as cheerful as a rainy day—to the source. A disappointed grandniece is her one confidante, because she's the "only one who understands me." The other day at dinner, after casting a reproachful glance at the other members of the family, she murmured: "Yes, darling. I never thought enough of myself. I'm only now beginning to. I hope when you grow up, child, you'll think more of yourself." "Oh, auntie!" exclaimed the little one, "I don't have to wait till then, 'cause I think a whole lot of myself now!"

Beyond the Scope of Women.

The judges of the imperial supreme court at Leipsic have defined what constitutes "sincere resistance" to a kiss.

As no expert testimony seems to have been demanded, the learned judge's own knowledge of the subject was evidently sufficient.

ANCIENTS KNEW OF GLAZING

Proof That Early Inhabitants of Mexico Used Process in the Manufacture of Pottery.

The discovery by Henry C. Mercer of Doylestown, Pa., that the ancient inhabitants of Mexico used a glazing process in the manufacture of their pottery has revolutionized the views of ceramic experts at the University of Pennsylvania, and may lead, says American Art News, to the discovery of beds of clay suitable for use today.

Mr. Mercer, who is an expert on tiling and a former curator of the University museum, during a recent study of Mexican potteries at the museum, had his attention called to the variance in workmanship in certain collections. He promptly classified the potteries as possessing two different kinds of clay, and was surprised to find that a distinct glaze was still apparent.

The ancient Egyptians, says Mr. Mercer, did not glaze their works, the Chinese adopting this precaution at a later date to make their vessels impervious to water. Civilization has been established by this time, however, and the use of the glazing art by prehistoric Mexicans may unfold interesting ceramics.

PAWNEE CHIEF & REPUBLICAN

C. D. Robinson is getting around with the aid of crutches while nursing a severe flesh wound on his right limb a few inches above the ankle. The injury was sustained last Friday while he was driving a stake with an axe at his farm a couple of miles northeast of Pawnee City, where he has a force of workmen getting the posts from his twenty acre osage orange grove in readiness for the market. He struck the stake a glancing blow and the axe turned over, the sharp edge making an incision about three inches long and penetrating to the bone. The injury has been very painful, but seems to be healing nicely. It is thought no lasting ill effects will result.

Emerson Carmichael and wife drove over from their home near Summerfield in their car Wednesday to meet the former's brother, W. R. Carmichael and wife, of Pittsburg, Pa., who arrived on the afternoon train to make an extended visit with relatives and friends in this locality.

Judge J. R. McNair and family are this week moving into the home recently purchased north of the Rock Island depot. Since they purchased the property they have had it entirely remodeled and made into a splendid modern home.

County Treasurer Schappel paid off and had cancelled Monday five one thousand dollar court house bonds. This makes a total of $45000 of the court house indebtedness which has been taken up. It will be but a few years until Pawnee county will be again without a cent of bonded indebtedness.

Mr. and Mrs. Jno. F. Wilson went to Lincoln Monday to attend the annual meeting of the Nebraska Photographers Association of which they have long been prominent members. They expect to return today.

IN THE GARDEN.

Come into the garden, Maud, from your divan soft and snug; for the summer is abroad, and the garden must be dug. Come into the garden do, and you'll know what labor means we'll toil the long summer through, and harvest a pint of beans. The winter's an also ran, spring's here, with it's wrens and doves; so come with your leather gloves. The call of the soil, is heard, the call that Adam knew, and, though it's a thing absurb, we'll toil as our neighbor's do; our labor is all in vain, we know, ere we do a stroke, all useless the stress and strain, and the garden is a joke. For outworms will take the corn, and chinch-bugs destroy the peas, as sure as that we were born to fool with such tasks as these. The hail will destroy the beets and also the succotash, and when we clear green oats, we'll buy them, and pay the cash. But come to the garden, Maud, regardless of things like these, get close to the fertile sod, and crawl on your hands and knees. Come forth to this verdant scene, away from Persian rugs! Oh, come with your Paris green, to kill the potato bugs! Walt Mason.

IS SILLY OLD SUPERSTITION

Belief Connecting Friday the Thirteenth With Disaster, However, Seems to Have Strong Hold.

Every time Friday falls on the thirteenth of the month there are headlines in newspapers owned and edited by intelligent and decently educated persons connecting this conjunction of dates with ill luck and misfortune. The reason for the practise does not clearly appear. It may be that in some cases the perverse perpetrators of these scare heads know no better or really think that disaster may be expected when Friday and the thirteenth come together. There are people of good abilities and even high standing in the business world who are haunted by this ancient superstition; but it is fair to suppose that in most cases it is a mere journalistic trick to attract attention, or even a joke not supposed to be seriously taken by anybody. The truth is, however, that for many thousands of people who are educated enough to read the newspapers such paragraphs are as seriously taken as an account of an earthquake or a blizzard in the West. The practise feeds on superstition, encourages it and does more harm than thoughtless editors know. Many accidents, anxieties and regrets would be avoided if all such superstitions could be swept out of the popular mind. The harm they do is incalculable, and their effects are seen in all the most important concerns of the common life, especially in morals and religion, to the enrichment of the speculator solutions who make the public pay a heavy tax on its superstitions.—Christian Register.

HIS NATIONALITY MADE PLAIN

Auditor's Shrewd Comment on Hearing Peculiar Statement of Celebrated Astronomer.

Sir David Gill, the Scotch astronomer, was no dry-as-dust scientist. His greatest contributions to science, perhaps, were his measurements of stellar space, and to bring home to his audiences just what progress had been made in this branch he frequently told a good story on himself.

He was speaking once on the accuracy of mechanical operations as compared with those of fifty years ago. He pointed out that half a century ago an error of a second of arc was considered a very small quantity in measuring the distance of a star, "that being equivalent to the measurement of the diameter of a three-penny piece at one mile off, whereas we could now measure within one-hundredth of a second of arc, which was like measuring a three-penny piece at a distance of one hundred miles."

Then a voice was heard from one of Sir David's listeners.

"YOU KNOW HOW A Scot," said the voice. "Na'an else'd bother his head about a three-penny bit a hundred miles off."

One Disadvantage.

It was the day that Uncle and Aunt Lewis had set apart for their annual visit to the city and among their valued and prospective purchases was a clock.

"Now," said the dealer, "we have an elegant line of clocks. Here is something particularly attractive. When the hour begins, a bird comes out from the top and sings 'Cookoo!' For instance, I turn this hand to seven o'clock, and the bird comes out and sings 'Cookoo!' seven times."

"Waal, waal! Don't that beat all!" cried Uncle Lewis, enthusiastically. "Mother, let's have one!"

But mother was more conservative.

"No, no!" she replied, meditatively, still eying the clock longingly. "That sort of thing might do for folks that have got lots of time on their hands, but it'd take me half the forenoon every day to take care of that bird."

Family Pride That Kills Ambition.

The discovery of a carpenter whose father, grandfather and great-grandfather practiced the same craft has been commented upon in several newspapers, and in Lamberhurst, in Kent, England, there is a family who have been innkeepers for four centuries. In mentioning other like instances it would be thought utterly insignificant. Grant Duff notes in his diary the answer made by a punkah-puller in Madras to an English lady who suggested that he might improve his position. "Memsahib, my father pulled a punkah, my grandfather pulled a punkah, all my ancestors for four million ages pulled punkahs, and before that the god who founded our caste pulled a punkah for Vishnu."

Ignorant Butcher.

Mrs. Patton-Ayres had picked up a few French phrases which she worked into her talk on every possible occasion. Entering the butcher shop one day, she inquired if he had any "bon vivant."

"Boned what, ma'am?" asked the butcher, puzzled.

"Bon vivant," she repeated. "That's the French for good liver, you know."—Boston Transcript.

Near Kind.

"Is there any meat in that fellow's arguffient for racing bets?" asked the legislator, sternly.

"Well," admitted the pleader for bets, cautiously, "there may be a few stakes in it."

PHYSICIAN IN ENGLAND.

When the national insurance act went into operation in Great Britain, there was great opposition at first on the part of the doctors, who felt that too much was required of them for the compensation which they were entitled to receive. A year ago Lloyd-George announced that 15,000 doctors had joined the panels under the medical benefit provision of the act, and the other day he gave an account of the effect on the profession. Out of 23,000 general practitioners in Great Britain, 20,000 are now enrolled and they divided last year nearly $25,000,000 from the government. The average for each doctor was stated to be $1,150, while in London it reached $1,650 and in Liverpool, $1,850, with further receipts due to drugs and prescriptions. As but one-third of the population is insured under the act, and the remaining two-thirds pay at least as high for medical attention, Lloyd-George estimated the average physician's income in London at $8,000, in Liverpool at $5,500 and in Manchester at $4,850. Some make considerably more, some considerably less, but undoubtedly it has raised the level of the remuneration of the profession.

How many steps do you take to the mile? If you think a thousand you will probably reply, "I don't" but that I take leave to doubt. Should you be an infantryman in the British army your pace will be the longest of any infantryman in the world, says a writer in the London Chronicle. The Russian pace is the shortest, being only 27½ inches; the French, Italian and Austrian solid is manage 25 inches; the Germans do 31 inches and the British 30½ inches. But your own pace, what is it? To discover upon what pace you are a "hitcher" or not. Put a stick across your eyebrows and see how long the piece of string is which reaches from that level to the floor; hold the length of this string to the length of your pace. And that length you will find to be between 30 and 32 inches, so that between 2,000 and 2,100 paces are needed to make a mile.

A correspondent of County Life sends some particulars about an extraordinary pench house which took place on October 25, 1664. The biggest brew on record was made at the house of the Right Hon. Edward Russell, commander in chief of his majesty's forces in the Mediterranean. A garden fountain, placed where four walks met, was used as a bowl, and in it the following ingredients were mixed: Four hogsheads of brandy, 20,000 lemons, 3 gallons of lime juice, 1,000 cwt. of white Lisbon sugar, 5 pounds of grated nutmegs, 300 toasted biscuits, and 4 pipes of dry sack from Malaga. Here, indeed, was a punch bowl worthy of the heroes of the seventeenth century. A boat was specially built so that a boy might row about in it and fill the cups of the assembled guests, which, according to our authority, probably numbered more than 6,000 men.

Doctors who are too ready to cut out tonsils were sharply denounced by Dr. William B. Griggs in a lecture before the Mother's clinic in the Children's Homeopathic hospital, Philadelphia. Dr. Griggs condemned the wholesale practise of the modern physician in the case of the most unfortunate tonsils, which he regarded as an act of barbarism and unworthy of a doctor of good reputation. Clipping and cutting out the tonsils, he said, was a crime, and those who practise such surgery should be treated as criminals. "Don't allow any one to remove the baby's tonsils," he repeated. "The God of nature, who knew what he was about, placed them there, and they have a function to perform."

SPELLING AND THE SCHOOLS.

The average business or professional man perhaps believes that the public schools no longer drill into pupils the stern, character building stuff that he got as a lad. The feeling is natural. But it leads at times to generalities which show nothing else quite so much as that the critic has forgotten his own boyhood. A man writes that "the shame of the public schools of New York becomes most apparent" in advertising for an office boy. One lad says he will "except" $5 a week; another declares he is "fifteen" years old. It is unfortunate that applicants for such positions often cannot spell, but a fair-minded man will not declare that misspelled applications indicate "shame" in the schools, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer. A reasonable investigation, one believes, would reveal that the average pupil of today in any grade of the public school can spell better, figure better, read and write better, that he knows more geography, grammar and language, than the average of the same age and grade 25 years ago. The public school is an easy target, requiring no special fitness in those who fire at it, and a proneness to false assumption is perhaps natural. But let no one assume that, because a man of affairs can spell better than an applicant for office boy, the schools have deteriorated since his own boyhood days. There is a serious flaw in that argument.

Professor David Rothrock of Indiana university has found that students from rural districts are better in mathematics than those from urban schools. Is this evidence of the weakening influence upon the intellect of too many fads in the city schools?

The stock of gold reported by the banks and treasuries of the world, Mr. Roberts said, is greater by $240,000,000 than in the preceding year, although the production of gold in the last five years has diminished.

THE BLUE AND THE GRAY

Francis Miller Finch.

These tender lines were written in 1867 by Judge Finch, a resident of New York State. The heart of the country, yet torn and bleeding as a result of the war just closed was softened by the fast-spreading news that, on Decoration Day of that year the women of Columbus, Mississippi had strewn flowers "Alike for the friend and the foe"—on the graves of Confederate and Union soldiers. If the women of the southland, in the anguish of defeat, could forgive, who could longer cherish bitterness and hatred? Judge Finch seized upon the suggestion of this beautiful deed of the southern women and wrote this poem, so full of tenderness and forgiveness, which made the chords that were broken vibrate once more; for he says, "They banish our anger forever, when they laurel the graves of our dead." Victor and vanquished clapsed hands across the chasm, and all bitterness of heart was dissolved in a deluge of "love and tears."

By the flow of the inland river,
Whence the fleets of iron have fled,
Where the blades of the grave-grass quiver,
Asleep are the ranks of the dead;
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting for the judgment-day;—
Under the one, the Blue,
Under the other, the Gray.

These in the robings of glory,
Those in the gloom of defeat,
All with the battle-blood gory,
In the dusk of eternity meet:—
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day!
Under the laurel, the Blue,
Under the willow, the Gray.

From the silence of sorrowful hours
The desolate mourners go,
Lovingly laiden with flowers
Alike for the friend and the foe:
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Under the roses, the blue,
Under the lilies, the Gray.

So, with an equal splendor,
The morning sun-rays fall,
With a touch impartially tender,
On the blossoms blooming for all:
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment-day;—
Broidered with gold, the Blue,
Mellowed with gold, the Grey.

So, when the summer calleth,
On forest and field of grain,
With an equal murmur falleth
The cooling drip of the rain:
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Wet with the rain, the blue,
Wet with the rain, the Grey.

Sadly, but with upbraiding,
The generous deed was done;
In the storm of the years that are fading,
No braver battle was won;
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment-day;
Under the blossoms, the Blue,
Under the garlands, the Gray.

No more shall the war-cry sever,
Or the winding rivers be red;
They banish our anger forever
When they laurel the graves of our dead!
Under the sod and dew,
Waiting the judgement day,
Love and tears for the blue,
Tears and love for the Gray.

The Memorial services will be held at the M. E. church Sunday morning at 11 oclock, sermon by Rev. Wimberly. Decoration Day the G. A. R. and W. R. C. will meet at the hall at 10 o'clock and arrange flowers then march to the cemetery where short service will be held. Conveyances will be provided for the G. A. R. and W. R. C.

Play A Success.

The play given in the opera house by the Presbyterian C. E. S. on last Friday evening was a success and a good crowd was present to witness one of the best little comedies ever staged by locals in Table Rock. The band played a few pieces in front of the opera house before the doors opened and also before the rise of the curtain and between acts. The reserved seats were well filled when the curtain went up the audience was in laughter, Mr. Harmon Chambers sang between the first and second acts and between the second and third acts. The players seemed encouraged at the good house and did well from the beginning. We have heard some say "The Little Politician" was the best home talent "stunt" ever pulled off in Table Rock. The object of the play was to create a fund to cover the expenses of the home work of the Endeavor and went to that cause alone. Mrs. A R. Kovanda selected the play, assigned the parts and trained the players and the C. E. S. can attribute the success of the play entirely to her. Mrs. Kovanda has for some time been coaching home talent plays and every one has met with success. The members of the C. E. are glad to express their appreciation to Mrs. Kovanda and also to all who attended the play

Mrs. Rach and Morrigal of Council Bluffa Iowa, sisters of C. W. Clark were guests at the Clark home Sunday. They drove over in their new car.

Janet White, son Fred and daughter Freida of Filly, Nebr, and Mrs. Earl Sawyer and son Vernon of Seattle Wash were visitors at the G. E. Bedea home Sunday and Monday.

It is permanent—never needs repairing—is quickly and easily cleaned (saving labor)—and is decidedly cheaper in the long run. But it is important to select the right cement. To be safe, insist on

HANGS IN BALANCE

FUTURE OF MEXICO TO BE DECIDED THIS WEEK.

INTERVENTION THE SOLUTION

Many Mexicans Anxious for the United States to Take Control.

Shortage of Arms a Problem.

Western Newspaper Union News Service.

Washington.—Peace delegates of the Huerta government who departed from Washington Sunday for Niagara Falls, Canada, to attend the mediation conference, are confident of the success, which, it was learned, is the broad question of pacifying all of Mexico. The three Mexican envoys have little idea how long the arrangement of a settlement will keep them at Niagara Falls, but they are confident that their trip will not have been in vain. The Mexican delegates are said to realize that the present administration in Mexico City is fast crumbling and that the choice of some one to succeed Huerta is inevitable.

Purchasing Agents Get Busy.

El Paso, Tex.—The attitude of the American administration with regard to the embargo on arms has caused immediate activity along this section of the border. The shortage of ammunition has been occasioned by those in close touch with constitutionalist affairs to be the greatest problem the government of northern Mexico had to face. When the announcement came over the wires that there was no prohibition against shipping arms and ammunition into Tampico from the United States or elsewhere there was an immediate exodus eastward of constitutionalist purchasing agents.

INTERVENTION ONLY SOLUTION.

Many Mexicans Praying for United States to Take Control.

St. Louis.—American intervention is the only solution of the Mexican troubles, according to Warren A. White, grand master Mason of Mexico, who is here to attend a conference of Masonic grand masters.

"Some of the Mexicans who are allied with Huerta for protection," he said, "are praying that the United States take control of affairs in Mexico so they will be sure their business is safe.

"The impression that Americans are cowards has become so prevalent that Mexicans do not hesitate openly to insult our citizens. But they respect the flags of Great Britain and of Germany."

Fighting For Possession.

Juarez, Mexico.—Actual fighting for the possession of Saltillo has begun. News brought here via Torreon from El Parras, said constitutionalists composed of Gen. Francisco Villa's advance guard had encountered federal outposts north of Saltillo. After an hour's engagement, the federals withdrew. Villa's main Torreon division of more than 15,000 men began leaving Parras, forty miles from Saltillo. They are marching overland for the onslaught on the federal stronghold.

Demand Details of Parks' Rites.

Washington.—The United States has demanded of the Huerta government details of the fate of Private Parks, the American infantryman who strayed into the Mexican lines near Vera Cruz, declaring that unless information about him was given immediately the American government would consider that an "unfriendly and hostile" act had been committed in violation of the understanding for a cessation of hostilities pending mediation.

Determined Huerta Must Go.

Washington.—General Victoriano Huerta may choose between safety in Europe or death before the guns of a revolutionary constitutionalist army. But he will have to make the choice. His reign as dictator of Mexico is about to end. No matter what the result of the mediation conference in Canada—whether they succeed or Carranza or a commission shall succeed Huerta—it is already a certainty the mediators will agree that Huerta must go.

Says Huerta Has Fortune in Europe.

San Francisco.—That President Huerta of Mexico has $2,000,000 pesos in Paris ready for him whenever he finds it necessary to flee his own country was the declaration of Captain Fred J. Ebson, commander of the steamship Masatlan, which came into port from West Mexican ports. Captain Ebson says the 8,000,000 pesos were obtained from the government through the organization of a trading company, in which Huerta held most of the stock and his cabinet officers the balance.

New York.—The second quota of nurses to be sent to the front will be from New York city, according to Miss Annie Rhodes, secretary of the National Red Cross Nursing society, who said that each of the large cities of the country would be expected to furnish fifty-one nurses for service if conditions in Mexico require the presence of more troops. Washington has already furnished its quota, Miss Rhodes said.

Several Red Cross nurses have been inoculated against typhoid fever and next week will be vaccinated

NEWS FROM STATE HOUSE

The Ivy day festivities of the state universities were celebrated by a holiday and all day program last Wednesday.

Professor Persinger of the state university will sail May 30 for South America, where he will spend three months studying life and conditions in that country.

H. W. Smith, editor of the Seward Independent-Democrat, and a member of the 1912-13 legislature, has filed for the nomination for state auditor on the democratic ticket.

The Nebraska soil survey in conjunction with the government will make a survey of Gage and Thurston counties this summer.

Assessment of the seven railroads of the state has been completed by the board of assessment and equalization. No changes were made over last year. The Union Pacific's total will be increased because of added mileage, but that will be the only change for the state.

State Treasurer George has issued a call for $150,000 worth of general fund warrants, effective May 15. The call is for warrants up to No. 8934, and the last was registered January 26. In all there are $170,000 in warrants outstanding and the state board of assessment may have to levy a 1 mill assessment to call them in.

The question of whether or not a member of the Nebraska national guard should be exempt to pay regular poll tax is one which has been put up to assessors several times lately. Guardsmen claim they are exempt from either petit or grand jury duty and also from payment of poll tax and refer to section 6493 of the Nebraska statutes.

Candidates for appointment to the boys' fair encampment have been busy in a number of counties. Selections are made by a committee consisting of the county superintendent of schools, the chairman of the county board of commissioners or supervisors, the members of the state board of agriculture, the president of the county agricultural society, and the county farm demonstrator.

The committee in charge of the outing of the Nebraska press association, to be held at Epworth Lake park June 18 to 25, is still hard at work, although they have already arranged for the most elaborate and enjoyable program ever planned or presented to the newspaper people of the state. There will be eight days of relaxation, each succeeding morning ushering in a series of events, every one of them of increasing interest.

The loss of the equipment of company F, Fifth regiment, Nebraska national guard, at Wymore is estimated at nearly $5,000. Major J. M. Birkner of the adjutant general's office was sent to Wymore to investigate the loss and the fire which destroyed the property. He brought back with him two rifle barrels that had gone through the fire. They were melted and twisted and showed the effects of great heat.

That a law placed on the statute books fifty-nine years ago when Nebraska was a territory is still the law of Nebraska the state, and that law prohibited the sale of liquor as a beverage, and therefore the state is legally dry, despite the fact that there has been saloons in it for many years, is maintained in the brief of H. C. and Ada M. Bittenbender, in the case of the State of Nebraska ex rel. Henry C. Bittenbender and Ada M. Bittenbender vs. The Excise Board of the City of Lincoln, filed in the supreme court.

A vast food products show, portraying many food establishments in operation, including a retreat dining car, will be kept at this year's state fair. The state food commission will have charge. The old agricultural building has been allotted to the commission for the purpose. Secretary Mellor of the board announces that reports of no implement display withdrawals had been forwarded to him thus far. On the other hand, he decided that an unusually large entry list had already been secured and space reserved and paid for by many of them.

The first manuscript for volume No. 95 of the Nebraska supreme court reports, which will be printed by a firm at Columbus, Mo., has been received by the clerk of the supreme court. Clerk H. C. Lindsay, Printing Commissioner Ludi has gone to Columbia to see that the right material is furnished for the job. Under the contract awarded the next two volumes will be printed by a firm there. The price to be paid is $1.45 per page for 500 copies. Each volume contains in the neighborhood of 900 pages, making the total cost of the ten volumes $15,000.

Those acquainted with the situation declare that a system of honors such as is being advocated at the university would have a general tendency to broaden the knowledge of the students trying for them. It is the plan to make the receipt of honors conditional upon the recipients doing a certain amount of work outside of class. For instance, if the person striving for honors were doing a certain amount of work in American history he would also be required to get a general knowledge of both European and ancient history.

MUST STOP FOOLING

FEDERAL TROOPS MAY BE WITHDRAWN FROM COLORADO.

TO SERVE OUT SENTENCE

Dynamite Men Out on Bond, to Be Returned to Leavenworth Prison —Much Mortality in Canal Zone.

Western Newspaper Union News Service.

Denver, Colo.—An ultimatum hinting that United States troops might be withdrawn from the Colorado strike zone unless the Colorado legislature ended its "inaction," has been served on the state of Colorado by President Wilson. In spite of it, the legislature adjourned sine die Saturday evening without undertaking further legislation, but not until a fierce debate had been provoked in the senate during which Governor Ammons was denounced by several progressive democrats. The governor, after receiving the president's message and replying to it, refused to present either communication to the assembly. As a result of this situation it is inevitable by many that 2state militiamen will be put back into the coal strike districts within a few weeks and that the federal troops will be recalled.

Much Mortality in Canal Zone.

Washington.—Nearly 2,200 workers on the Panama canal died from accidents and fevers between May 1, 1904, and March 31, 1914, according to statistics read by Representative Young of North Dakota in the house. The total of 2,190 victims, Mr. Young asserted, was greater than the mortality from wounds and on the battlefield in the war of 1812 and the Mexican war combined, the Revolution or the Spanish-American war.

MUST GO TO JAIL.

Dynamiters Will Have to Serve Out Sentences.

Chicago.—The twenty-four labor leaders sentenced in the "dynamiting cases," who are at liberty on bonds, have but a few more weeks of liberty. The United States circuit court of appeals has ordered them to surrender on June 6 to the warden of the federal prison at Leavenworth, Kan., or be taken to the penitentiary from Chicago on that day. Orders will affect only nineteen of the twenty-four men, five of them having returned voluntarily to the penitentiary after the United States circuit court of appeals denied them a new trial.

Sporting Event of Interest.

Lincoln, Neb.—A sporting event of unusual interest will take place Thursday evening, June 4, when Owen Daily, champion light weight of the state, will meet on the mat with Johnny Dempsey Toledo, O., recognized world's champion for the lightweight title. Frank Gotch, world's champion, will referee. The contest will be staged at the Antelope ball park, at 8:15. The KITCHEN CABINET

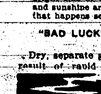
The comfortable and comforting people are those who look upon the bright side of life, gathering roses and sunshine and making the worst that happens seem the best.

"BAD LUCK" IN COOKERY.

Dry, separate grains in rice are the result of rapid boiling and careful draining. Soggy rice is so because of improper cooking. Rice that is more than a year old takes much "longer to cook."



Mayonnaise dressing separates when too much salt has been added to the yolks or the oil has been added too fast, or the materials are warm.

Batter puddings are soggy and heavy when too little flour has been used, or they have stood too long before being steamed, or they have been chilled while cooking.

Cakes which "fall" or "sink" flat are not well baked. Before removing a cake from the oven touch it with the finger; if it springs back without leaving a depression it is done.

Sauces or gravies that have a layer of fat over the top have had too much fat used in proportion to the flour. Measure equal parts of flour and fat and to a tablespoonful of each add a half cupful of liquid.

A brown gravy is so made by browning the flour in the fat before adding the water or milk, and also by adding a bit of "kitchen bouquet."

A large proportion of mishaps in cooking is due to carelessness in measuring. Always use a measuring cup which holds half a pint. When a cupful of flour is called for, it means a cupful after it has been sifted and lightly filled into the cup. A tea or tablespoonful means a level one.

Never measure by guess. Do not begin a dish until you have carefully read over the recipe and see that you have all the materials.

Collect all the materials before beginning to put the food together.

Cake should be separated, and given one's whole attention.

Coffee and sponge bread cake are slow to rise because of the fruit and shortening, so they should be kept in a moderately warm place to rise.

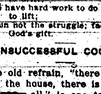
All the ingredients for coffee cake should be warmed before adding, except the eggs.

Learn how to have a good, dark warm place where they can be risen.

Fruit cake to have a good, dark color, should bake slowly a long while.

Be strong!
We are not here to play, to dream, to drift.
We have hard work to do and loads to lift;
Shun not the struggle, face it. 'Tis God's gift.

UNSUCCESSFUL COOKERY.



The old refrain, "there is no luck about the house, there is no luck at all," is one too well and often sung by the new housekeeper, as well as many careless older ones. Bad luck in cookery is almost always one of three things—poor materials, poor measuring or mixing and poor cooking.

When meat soup has a strong, unpalatable flavor, it is because the fat has not been skimmed from it.

Thin, watery soup is either undercooked or too much water has been added.

Cabbage that is strong and scents the house has been cooked in a covered kettle.

When stewed or boiled meat is tough it is because it has been boiled, not simmered long and slowly.

Angel cake and sponge cake are tough if too much flour, or one coarse if not well mixed. Both should be baked in a slow oven, about 240 degrees Fahrenheit.

Fondant grains if the sugar is allowed to grain on the side of the pan when boiling, add cream of tartar or a small amount of glucose.

Cakes crack open when too much sugar has been used or the oven is too hot at first.

Popovers need strong heat at the bottom and should be baked a long time.

Whole wheat bread should be as light as white flour bread. If not, too much flour has been used.

When pineapple is used with gelatin a little more should be added, as there is a ferment in pineapple which digests gelatin.

We should not be merely an influence, we should be an inspiration. By our very presence we should be a tower of strength to the hungering human souls around us.—William G. Jordan.

SERVING POTATOES.

Cut in quarter-inch slices and fry carefully in a small amount of hot fat.

Cut in half-inch cubes to cover; season with butter, salt, pepper and parsley.

Fry a slice of onion a golden brown, add potatoes and cook until well browned; season with salt and pepper and serve.

Mix with white sauce; add crumbs and bake until the crumbs are brown.

Add onion and potatoes to a hot frying pan, with a little fat; when well browned and hot, add a little hot vinegar.

German Balls.—To a pint of hot mashed potatoes add two tablespoonfuls of butter, two tablespoonfuls of cream, and salt and pepper to taste. Form into balls, dip in beaten egg and fry in hot fat until a golden brown. Garnish with parsley.

Fill a hollow mold with seasoned and cooked potatoes; turn the molded potato out on to a dish, drizzle with egg and brown. When ready to serve, fill the center with creamed chicken or sweetbreads, and all piping hot when served.

Potato Puff.—Boil until tender, then mash a half dozen potatoes, add a half cupful of cream, season and heat until light; fold in the whites of two eggs beaten stiff, and bake in a dish in which it is to be served until it is brown.

Sweet Potatoes Baked.—Boil sweet potatoes in their skins, peel and put into a baking pan with the water in which the potatoes were boiled; add sugar and bits of butter and lay in the sliced potatoes. They should be sliced in French slices. Baste while baking with the liquid in the pan.

Potato Croquettes.—Beat an egg until thick, then add a cup of mashed potato, one tablespoonful of cream, a teaspoonful of onion juice, a teaspoonful of chopped parsley, a bit of grated nutmeg, and salt and cayenne to season. Mix and stir into a pan until it leaves the sides of the pan; turn out to cool, and when cold form into cylinders; roll in egg and crumbs and fry in deep fat.

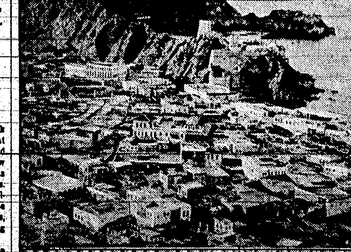
THROUGH THE PERSIAN GULF



HADES is built just under the Persian gulf, and keeps its waters hot, Arabs will tell you. To prove their claim they point to the luminous, phosphorescent balls which lazily float beneath the waters at night, and say they are fragments of the everlasting flames.

Maskat, the picturesque pirates' retreat on the rocky Oman coast, is called the hottest place in the world. The sailors say a man who has spent a summer in this blistering cove may walk barefoot into Hades—and feel a chill. It was 124 degrees Fahrenheit in the shade of our awnings when we dropped anchor in Maskat harbor, five days out of Bombay. Lord Curzon, who visited Maskat, said: "In the heats between June and August the ordinary thermometer bursts; those graded high enough have placed the solar radiation at 189 Fahrenheit. The rainfall is only three and one-half inches, and this all comes within a period of two or three weeks."

A new American consul to Maskat got in the same day I did, writes Frederick Simpich in the Los Angeles Times. In the silent, quivering heat of noonday the old muzzle-loading guns of the sultan's fortress, perched high on the red rocks above the baking town, crashed forth a salute. The Stars and Stripes, in honor of the new consul, appeared for an instant above the picturesque old fort, built by the adventurous Portuguese when they held this boiling inlet ages ago.

Aspect Is Uncanny.

Gibraltar looks tame beside the wild, scowling cliffs of Maskat. Sharp, splintered rocks rise hundreds of feet high, straight up from the hot sea. From the north a narrow bay opens into this mass of peaks and crags, at whose feet clings Maskat. The whole aspect of the place is uncanny and weird—like Dore's pictures of Dante's "Inferno." Not a trace of vegetation exists. Food is largely brought from India.

Near the beach stands the sultan's palace, a pretentious structure for this part of the world. A huge lion from the Arabian desert is kept in an iron cage near the entrance to the palace. When Lord Curzon was in Maskat he saw a Persian, who was accused of murder, confined in a similar cage very near the lion.

In the narrow, crowded bazaar, every Arab I met carried a long curved knife, or a flintlock of some pattern. Their rifles were often inlaid with silver, and had the stocks wrapped with leather. Slavery was abolished—officially—by treaty with the British Empire years ago, but so many blacks had been previously brought in that they have left their impress on the people of Maskat, with whom they have intermarried. Maskat, consequently, is much darker than those farther north. Scores of thick-lipped, woolly-headed blacks from Abyssinia and Zanzibar were mingled with the market throng; many of these were slaves, belonging to wealthy Arabs. The bazaar trade itself, which seemed to consist largely of guns and ammunition, besides of course, the usual articles of food, skins and food, is in the hands of Hindu traders. Guns of every description were for sale, and it is from this traffic that the sultan derives much of his income. Camel caravans take the guns inland from Maskat, and carry them around by land to Koweit, and even across to Baluchistan. All the tribes of the Arabian peninsula arm themselves through this source, which they afterward use against one another, the Turks or the English in Baluchistan, as the case may be.

At Maskat is heard all a city of song and dance, of good times and high living—as Arabs know it. In all Arabia, it is said, no maids are so fair as those of Maskat. Here, too, flourish the black arts and superstitious sorceries which are openly avowed and practised. "Baled-es-Soharah" the natives call Oman, which means "The Land of the Enchanters." The water front is alive with weird yarns of fancy magic and occult mysteries. Half the fiction of the Arabian Nights could have been lifted bodily from any of the same sort of stories which are told and retold in the coffee shops of Maskat any night, when the blazing sun is set.

From Maskat north the heat by day aboard the Kola became more intense, reaching 126. Sailors slopped sea water on thick grass mats, and spread them about the burning deck, beneath the scorching canvas awning. Heat apoplexy kills more quickly on such days of suffering; one lives each day in fear of the heat. Our dizzy heads and dry skins warned us of danger as we walked with shaky steps about the boat, seeking some spot sheltered from the soul-destroying sun. At 8 p. m. the glass still showed 118, but we felt some slight relief.

Tales of Marine Monsters.

The morning of the third day from Maskat we anchored in the delta of the Shat-el-Arab, or River of the Arabs. This is the name given to the Tigris and Euphrates rivers, after they unite on their way to the gulf. A few miles upstream lay the Persian town of Mohammereh. Braving dangers from sharks, stingrays and other pests to which men swimming in the gulf, we bathed long and luxuriously in the cooler waters of the great stream which comes all the way from Armenia. Marine monsters of many sorts swim in the hot Persian gulf, and the tales Arabs tell of them would fill an Atlantic City reporter with honest envy. One writer says: "Our dhow passed through shoals of giant gerfish, dozens of which, attracted by our lantern, leaped aboard. They had long, pointed noses and one of our party was nearly blinded, the point just missing his eye."

At Mohammereh I quit the Kola—joyfully. Redolent of horses, reeking with filth, rats and roaches, she went her way. On the mudbank of the Shat-el-Arab, 50 miles below the Turkish river town of Bassorah, I found myself facing Fay's quarantine station at Mohammereh. Back of me, on either bank of the Karun—which comes down from the Persian hills at this point and flows into Shat-el-Arab—was a flat, mud-hut town of Mohammereh itself, a monotonous, sun-baked village blown to fragments by British guns in their war on Persia a generation ago. Near by, half hidden in the changing mud banks, I observed an old wreck. Later I learned her history; she was the famous old Fox, once a blockade runner in the American Civil war. But how she got to Mohammereh, 15,000 miles away by sea, I do not know.

ASHES TO FILL OLD MINES

City of Scranton, Pa., Believes It Has Plan That Will Accomplish Two Purposes.

Scranton, Pa., has struck upon a plan which it is believed will solve two of the most difficult problems that have faced the city for years. Several abandoned mine workings have caved in recently near the city, causing damage to property and endangering the safety of persons living near them. It is the intention of the officials to fill the old workings with ashes collected in the city, thereby making the surface about the city safe and solving the ash-disposal problem at the same time.

In a paper read at a conference in city hall J. C. Hayes, director of public works of Scranton, devoted a moment from the subject under discussion to tell of the new plans. He said: "To eliminate entirely the possibilities of surface disturbance and subsidences in Scranton many plans have been tried and all have failed. Commissioners have been appointed and attempts made to have the mine laws changed so as to force the mining companies responsible for damage to the surface, but without success. At the present time, however, we are contemplating the flushing of millions of ashes, which our city collects annually, into the old mine workings, under hydraulic pressure. By this method the city will be beautified externally and rendered safer interiorally. If our plan is a success, in the near future we will have the surface of Scranton as safe as any city in the country."

Of Course Not.

"I can't find my wrench," bawled the plumber.

"You waste a good deal of time looking for your tools," criticised the bookkeeper of the establishment.

"Now, I always know where to find my pen."

"Well, a fellow can't stick his monkey wrench behind his ear."

WESTERN CANADA'S PROSPECTS FOR 1914

Excellent Spring for Work and Wheat Seeding About Finished.

The writer has just returned from an extensive trip through the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, in Western Canada. The crop conditions are the very best, and no one locality seems to have an advantage over another in this respect. The uniformity in growth is remarkable, and in all parts of the three provinces spring wheat at the time of writing, May 10th, is well above the ground from two to three inches. Considerable fall plowing was done last year, and this, with the summer fallow, is already seeded, so that practically all wheat seeding is over by this date. Everywhere the farmers are busy and the whole country presents one great scene of activity—three-horse, four-horse and five-horse teams are busy preparing land for barley, oats and flax. On some of the larger farms batteries of steam and gasoline outfits are at work, but in a great many districts where these have been operated in the past they are being displaced by horses, owing no doubt partially to the scarcity of help and experienced men to operate them. Anyway, there is being put into agriculture in Western Canada, greater efforts with more promise than for many years past. The soil is in the best possible condition; moisture has been sufficient; there have been no winds to dry out the surface, and the farmers have had to lay up for a day or so now and again, it was merely that the ground might have the advantage of a rain and so conserve moisture, which promises so much for the growing crop. With some warm weather the grain will come along in a manner that will equal the best years Western Canada has ever had.

It must not be thought from this that the farmers are full bent on securing a grain crop alone. In nearly every district there is more and more the indication and inclination to go into mixed farming. Herds of cattle now dot the plains that up to the present had been fully given up to grain growing, hogs and sheep are in evidence. New buildings are to be seen on a great many places, these being all houses and corn cribs, and though protection of cattle is not regularly required, excepting for calves and such cows as it may be necessary to fodder from time to time.

The growing of alfalfa and other fodder grasses is an industry that is being rapidly developed.

During the spring a splendid class of new settlers have gone in, many of them from the eastern states. These have seen what success the western and central states man has achieved in Western Canada, and are now going in in hundreds. The movement from Ontario, Oregon and Washington to Canada continues without abatement as to numbers and value of effects, while the central and eastern states are still sending an excellent class of farmers with means sufficient to begin farming on a scale that will pay from the start.

Those who contemplate visiting the Panama Exposition next year will find that one of the most interesting tripe they can make will be via the Canadian West. There will be three lines of railway they can use—the Canadian Pacific, Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk Pacific, all of which will have through to coast lines completed. These will be given a view of prairie, woodland and mountain scenery unexcelled in America.—Advertisement.

What He Feared.

It was during a very violent thunderstorm, in which the lightning flashes were particularly vivid, terrifying and frequent.

"Do not be afraid, Tommie," said his mother, "our Father in heaven holds the lightning in his hands."

"Yes, I know, I know, mother, but then, you see, lightning is so quick and slippery that I am afraid he might let some of it get away from him when he don't mean to."

Easily Satisfied.

Sick Women Made Well

Reliable evidence is abundant that women are constantly being restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

The many testimonial letters that we are continually publishing in the newspapers—hundreds of them—are all genuine, true and unsolicited expressions of heartfelt gratitude for the freedom from suffering that has come to these women solely through the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Money could not buy nor any kind of influence obtain such recommendations; you may depend upon it that any testimonial we publish is honest and true—if you have any doubt of this write to the women whose true names and addresses are always given, and learn for yourself.

Read this one from Mrs. Waters:

CAMDEN, N.J.—"I was sick for two years with nervous spells, and my kidneys were affected. I had a doctor all the time and used a galvanic battery, but nothing did me any good. I was not able to go to bed, but spent my time on a couch or in a sleeping-chair, and soon became almost a skeleton. Finally my doctor went away for his health, and my husband heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and got me some. In two months I got relief and now I am like a new woman and am at my usual weight. I recommend your medicine to every one and does my husband." Mrs. TILLIE WATERS, 1136 Knight St., Camden, N.J.

And this one from Mrs. Haddock:

UTICA, OKLA.—"I was weak and nervous, not able to do my work and scarcely able to be on my feet. I had backache, headache, palpitation of the heart, trouble with my bowels, and inflammation. Since taking the Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I am better than I have been for twenty years. I think it is a wonderful medicine and I have recommended it to others."—Mrs. MARY ANN HADDOCK, Utica, Oklahoma.

Now answer this question if you can. Why should a woman continue to suffer without first giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial? You know that it has saved many others—why should it fail in your case?

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No one sick with woman's ailments does justice to herself if she does not try this famous medicine made from roots and herbs, it has restored so many suffering women to health.

Write to LYDIA E.PINKHAM MEDICINE CO. (CONFIDENTIAL) LYNN, MASS., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

No Celebration?

A meeting of the business men of Table Rock was held in W G Carters office Tuesday night for the purpose of condering a 4th of July celebration. At this meeting the sentiment of a few was heard and many wanted to drop the idea of Table Rock celebrating and a motion made by Dr. McCrea to drop the celebration and commence work on the carnival at an early date was carried. The meeting was then adjourned, but inspite of this meeting we learn that there is still hopes of a celebration and some who are persistant say yet that Table Rock must celebrate the 4th this year.

M. E. Church Notes.

The Epworth League meeting last Sunday night was of the nature of a celebration of the 25th anniversary of the organization of the Epworth League. The history of the League and some interesting reminiscences of the early days of the local organization were given. The meeting closed with the installation of the new officers, the list of which was published in THE ARGUS.

The members of the League and church will be interested in some history of young people's work in Table Rock M. E. church twenty years ago. Dr. P. C. Johnson was then pastor and the facts here given are taken from church notes published in The Argus, and preserved in his scrap book. "The years 1893-5 were years of considerable activity in the League. The officers were as follows: President, John Sutton; Spiritual work, 1st V. P., B. W. Ballou; Mercy and Help, 2nd V. P., Clyde Barnard; Literary, 3rd V. P., Mrs. Allie Sutton; Social, 4th V. P., Louis Johnson; Sec'y, A. C. Boyd; Treas., Grace Clift. Others who held office at other times, were: Henry Shaw, secretary; Mrs. Cora Schurr, mercy and help; Mrs. Laura Covert, social; B. F. Norris, treasurer; Mrs. Jennie Johnson, junior league superintendent. Among the leaders of meetings, in addition to some of the above names, the following are given: Mrs. Abbie Philbrook, Della Mumford, Nellie Cotton, Maud Bain, Maggie Sutton, Emma Wood, Wilson Turman, Anna Dimon, Geo. Hamilton, Belle Bankson, S. E. Roberts, Chas. Minnick, Mattie Fellers, and Gertie Norris(of Junior League). The meetings were held Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Mention is made of a district convention held at Nebraska City in the spring of 1894. The spirit of the local leaguers is shown in that the delegates—Mrs. Boyd and Mrs. Johnson—were instructed to invite the next convention to Table Rock. The prize was however captured by Weeping Water and the hospitable folks here were denied the privelege of entertaining. The League held successfully an occasional Sunday evening service, on one occasion the names of F. H. Taylor and Prof. Utterback appearing on the program. Much effective work was done by the various departments. The League was evidently a live wire in the local church.

The memorial sermon in honor of the departed veterans will be preached in the Methodist church Sunday morning by Rev. C. P. W. Wimberly, at 11 o'clock. In the evening the baccalaureate sermon will be preached at the Methodist church at 8 o'clock. These are both union services, and everyone is invited.

Tuesday and Wednesday were cleaning days at the church. The response of the male portion of the church to the call for help was something remarkable, and the work of the ladies was as usual very faithful and efficient.

A party of Philathea girls, chaperoned by Mrs. Young, had a very enjoyable picnic party at the Rock last Saturday afternoon.

A very pleasant evening was spent by about forty young people at the Epworth League anniversary social in the church basement Monday evening.

SEVERE BRONCHIAL COUGH

Doctors Feared Lung Trouble, Restored to Health by Vinol.

The medical profession does not believe that lung troubles are inherited, but a person may inherit a weakness or tendency to them.

Mrs. Kate Heckman, Springfield, Ohio, says: "A few years ago I was in a very bad run-down condition, and the physician told me I had consumption. I tried another physician, and he told me I had ulcers on my right lung. I quit the physicians and started on Vinol. Today I am perfectly healthy, and that is why I recommend Vinol."

Vinol soothes and heals the inflamed surfaces and allays the cough. Vinol creates an appetite, strengthens the digestive organs and gives the patient strength to throw off incipient pulmonary diseases.

Try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that your money will be returned if it does not help you.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. E. SELLERS, Director of Evening Department The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago)

LESSON FOR MAY 24

UNPROFITABLE SERVANTS.

LESSON TEXT—Luke 17:1-10.
GOLDEN TEXT—"He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord." I Cor. 1:31.

This lesson is closely connected with that of last week; while spoken especially to his disciples it was most probably at the same time and in the same atmosphere as that of the other lesson. The teaching is a continuation of that just given and which grew out of the hospitality Jesus received in the Pharisee's house. The heart of Jesus was filled with compassion for the needy multitude. He, the Good Shepherd, was seeking the lost sheep. His anger was kindled against the men whose love of money and of self had calloused them in the presence of this multitude. It was in this spirit that he turned and taught his disciples.

A Special Warning.

I. "Take Heed to Yourselves," vv. 1-4. It is inevitable that occasion of stumbling shall come. Satan is not going to lose his spoil without putting forth his best endeavor to hold, to ensnare, to trap men. God, however, has taken this into his plan and makes them to work out for the good of his people, Ps. 76:10; II Cor. 12:7. Why does God permit evil in the world? He uses these stumbling blocks to test us and we who are approved are made manifest, I Cor. 11:19. This does not mean that we are guiltless if through one we fall, nor minimize the guilt of the one through whom they come, see Matt. 18:7. We as followers must go to every possible length to avoid being an occasion to another, I Cor. 8:9, 13; 10:32; Rom. 14:13. In this lesson (v. 2) Jesus sounds a special warning against those who cause one of his little ones to stumble, e. g., those weak in faith, this hungering multitude who follow him, those "babes in Christ," as well as children of tender years. Particularly, however, is this doom pronounced upon those who divert from paths of righteousness the course of childhood. Not only men who prey upon those of tender years, who exploit their labor or cause their moral corruption, but careless and indifferent parents should ponder these words. To hinder a child from accepting Christ or cause it to stumble through a sinful example will result in awful retribution. The word "these" as here used is another indication of the nearness of childhood to our Lord in his earthly life.

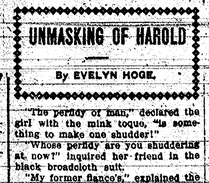
To avoid such a danger each individual life must "take heed" (v. 3), (I Tim. 5:10). Appealing to his disciples Jesus showed them their true attitude towards a sinning man was to rebuke him, Lev. 19:17, and if he repented he should be forgiven. It was here that the Pharisees and rulers had failed. They were "blind leaders of the blind" and failed to see the greatness of the sinners and publicans to hear Jesus, a movement which indicated a desire to reach a higher moral plane. Understanding this, they would have forgiven them even though it is to be unto "seven times in the day." Forgiveness here means to dismiss or to send away.

Nothing Impossible.

II. "Increase Our Faith," vv. 5-10. Such a program as that just outlined must have staggered the apostles as they thought of their own inability so to conduct their lives. This exclamation reveals their sense of the importance, superiority and difficulty of his ideals. As we come into personal fellowship with our Lord that the eyes of our understanding are opened and we see our impotence and the necessity of having him faith in us that which is lacking of his ideals. Their petition was a recognition of ability as well as of their need. In response to our cry he will supply, Mark 9:24-27. Nothing is impossible to him (v. 6), Phil. 4:13. The illustration is one easy to remember. The insignificant little seed of the mustard has in it tremendous power of growth and development, many thousand times its own weight and bulk, see Matt. 13:31, 32, because it is linked with God's tremendous laws of life, with omnipotence. Our Lord contrasts such power with the removal of a sycamore tree; small wonder we receive such a vivid and lasting lesson of the power of faith, even the weakest faith. Faith is a principle necessary to overcome the obstacles in the way of measuring up to his ideals if it is of the right quality, it is equal to the doing of the most mighty things. Passing from this contrast Jesus uses the parable which follows (vs. 7-10). The word "but" would suggest an apparent departure from this subject. It is, however, a correction of any false idea that may have arisen that the doing of duty can be the cause of boastfulness or create any rights whereby we may expect any special reward for service. The disciples, as has been suggested, realized the difficulty of obeying his commands, yet they knew that such obedience would assure them the highest rewards of faith. His words implied and warranted such a conclusion, hence he warns them not to make the reward the motive of their service.

UNMASKING OF HAROLD

By EVELYN HOGE.



"The perfidy of man," declared the girl with the mink toque, "is something to make one shudder!"

"Whose perfidy are you shuddering at now?" inquired her friend in the black broadcloth suit.

"My former fiance's," explained the girl with the mink toque. "Harold, in other words. When I think that I might have married that man, not knowing his true character, how thankful I am that I found him out in time! And I trusted his every word!"

"How could you find the time, this busy season of the year?" demanded her friend, skeptically. "Harold is such a talker. What did he do?"

The girl with the mink toque sighed. "He vowed that Edith was nothing to him!" she declared. "He was sort of devoted to her when he first met me, you know. I saw right away that she was not the kind of girl for him—not up to his standard at all. He was just wasted on her. Edith really is perfectly dreadful, she said such things about my trying to get Harold away from her! My trying! Why, I simply couldn't escape him after he once had seen me! As though I had to try!

"She was awfully bitter about Harold's getting engaged to me and prophesied that he would come back to her and everything like that. I made Harold promise that he never, never, would go near her!"

"Of course you did right," agreed the girl in the black broadcloth suit. "One can't be too careful about guarding one's fance sweetest. They're scarce, like other luxuries with the high cost of living!"

"He said he wouldn't," declared the girl with the mink toque. "He insisted that nothing would make him go within a mile of her—that he simply couldn't see her when I was on earth. No matter how sweetly they talk, dear, never believe them! I never shall again! Then one day recently, when Harold came to pass the evening as I supposed, it rained."

"What of it?"

"He had to have an umbrella, didn't he?" snapped the girl with the mink toque. "He looked sad and said he was terribly upset, but there was a man in town whom he had to meet that evening—business appointment and all that—and he had expected to have a cozy evening with me, but that a man was often called upon to sacrifice his own wishes and he hoped I would understand.

"I didn't care so awfully much about Harold's going out, because I had been up late for four evenings and was so sleepy that my head ached, so the chance to get nine hours of slumber appealed to me. I told Harold that while he had completely spoiled a happy evening for me I would bear it patiently for his sake.

"Next morning when father found his pet umbrella with the gold knob gone—the directors presented it to him for something or other—he had spasms until I told him that Harold must have taken it. I telephoned Harold to return father's umbrella double quick—and Harold began making the weirdest excuses. With father fuming and Harold shilly-shallying over the phone I nearly lost my mind—and in the midst of the excitement the umbrella arrived by special messenger with a note addressed to me!

"The note was from Edith—and she said she knew that my father must be anxious about such a valuable umbrella, so she was sending it back at once —it had his name engraved on it, you know. She said Harold was so forgetful and that he had left it at her house the evening before.

"Harold came on the gallop when I phoned him that evening. I held the umbrella up before him and murmured that Edith had sent it. He turned purple. 'I phoned her this morning,' he gasped miserably, 'and she declared that I hadn't left it!'

"You thought you'd get it back here and I'd never know, didn't you?' I demanded.

"My dear, that man had the audacity to say that he had gone to Edith's because she insisted that she was going abroad for years and would never see him again, and he couldn't get out of going to see her. Well, I turned him off with scorn. Any man who is as easy as that is not smart enough to be trusted with my future. Fate found out his duplicity and so we parted. However, we've got the gold knobbed umbrella back in the family and that's something."—Chicago Daily News.

INCUBATOR OF QUEER DESIGN

Chinese Device Does the Work of Hatching, but Its Defects Are Easy to Perceive.

Certain of the Chinese in the interior districts adjacent to Amoy employ a unique method for hatching both hens' and ducks' eggs. In this connection it may be of interest to note that some years ago a missionary living near Amoy suggested to the natives that the patent American incubator might be of great service to the local Chinese—only to learn of their own process, which is very economical. Usually a large percentage of the eggs produce live chicks.

The breedor first takes a quantity of unbusked rice and roasts it, cooling it down by fanning or by allowing the wind to blow through until it is lukewarm. He then spreads a three-inch layer of the rice in a wooden tub and places about 100 eggs thereon; another layer of rice, this second and subsequent layers being but two inches in thickness, is spread over the eggs. Each tub will have six layers of rice and five layers of eggs, so that there will be 500 eggs in each tub. The rice should be heated once every 24 hours, the eggs being taken out at such times. When the eggs are again put in the rice the bottom layer is placed on top and each of the other layers one row lower down, while the eggs previously in the center of the tub are placed at the edge. The entire tub is covered with a cotton mattress. The chicks and ducklings are produced in 20 to 30 days.

One of the great difficulties with this method is the inability to tell just when the eggs will hatch, which of course renders the smothering of the young very possible.

TOO QUICK WITH HIS ANSWER

Response of Court Witness Put Him Unnecessarily in a Somewhat Unfavorable Light.

At a session of county court in an outlying country, a village merchant was prosecuted for "arson." It developed that the business men of the town had retained a "special prosecutor" to assist in the case. The attorney for the defendant invariably asked each witness if he had ever contributed anything toward the support of the "special prosecutor." One old man was very zealous in his efforts to convict the defendant. The attorney started to ask him the regular "contribution" question, but the witness interrupted him and gave his answer in the middle of the question, with the following result:

"Q. Have you ever contributed anything toward the support—"

"A. No, sir; I never did—not a cent!!!"

"—of your family?"

The witness was excused amid the laughter of the court, jury and audience. He left the room, mad as a hornet, and was heard to mutter: "I ain't got no family."—West Publishing company.

A company has been formed to establish a spineless cactus farm in California, using the product in the manufacture of stock food. A curious thing about the cactus is said to be that when given water it dies. On desert soil which will produce no other vegetable growth the cactus thrives. If the projected experiment prospers, there will be other cactus farms, and the cheapening of feed no doubt will tend to lower the price of cattle.

SYNOPSIS.

Rudolph van Vechten, a young man of leisure, is astonished to see a lorry enter No. 1118, a house across the street from the Powhatan club, long unoccupied and spoken of as the "mystery of Murray." Several persons at regular intervals enter and exit. Van Vechten expresses concern to his friend, Tom Phinney, regarding the whereabouts of his cousin and fiancée, Paige Carew. A man is forcibly ejected from the house. Van Vechten and Tom follow the man and find him dead in the street. Van Vechten is attracted by the face of a girl in the crowd of onlookers surrounding the body. Later he discovers the girl gazing at him with a look of scorn from the window of the mortuary house. Detective Flint calls on Van Vechten to get his version of the tragedy. Tom Phinney goes alone on a yachting trip. He recognizes among some persons in a passing motor boat two men whom he had seen enter the house of Mystery. He sees one of them, a Mr. Calvin, on shore later and follows him. He is seized, blindfolded and taken to a house. To his astonishment he discovers recently the daughter of the man to authority question his conduct. The two confer two comfortable leathern chairs faced each other. Two or three dark purple velvet pads and a couple of jewel-encrusted daggers lay here and there upon the whereabouts of Paige Carew. Detective Flint shows Van Vechten a cold mesh purse found in the House of Mystery. Van Vechten recognizes it as belonging to Paige Carew. The sweet-voiced girl helps Tom Phinney escape. A message from London reports that two ladies resembling Miss Carew and her companion, Mrs. Devereaux, sailed for New York some time previously. It develops that the ladies visited the English home of Temple Bonner, a cousin of the Phinneys, but this was during the absence of Bonner in the interior. It is recalled that Temple Bonner was in love with a daughter of Algernon Schuyler who married Max Willard. The other daughter, Agnes, a man named Devereaux. Bonner and Willard were intimate friends. In search of the home of Willard, Van Vechten enters the House of Mystery by the back door. There he hears John Calhe threaten a girl. He rescues and helps the girl escape, but is overcome by unseen forces in the struggle with Calhe.

Aboard the Kohinur.

CHAPTER I.

Tom Finds Employment.

It was in an exceedingly dejected frame of mind that Tom Phinney, alone in Van Vechten's huge six-cylinder car, made his way to Maiden Lane in search of Mr. Brownlow. The loss of his darlings was in a large measure owing to a condition that had grown really imminent and personal only during the last few minutes; one that meant renunciation of all that mode of living and realization of a necessary readjustment to an uncertain future; he had turned over a new leaf, forsworn idleness and frivolity, and was going to work.

Gloomy meditations darkened his handsome face, and in his preoccupation he wasted a good quarter of an hour searching for Brownlow's number. In harmony with a faceted portrait of the latter's establishment, he directed his attention to the smarter, more modern structures, and it was quite by accident that his eye alighted upon the right place—an indescribably shabby building, age-worn and decrepit, pinched between two sky-scrapers. He stopped the motor and viewed the entrance with doubt and disfavor. But there was no mistaking it; from the curb, Brownlow's name could be seen on the directory board just inside the entrance.

There was not even an elevator, so Tom was obliged to climb two flights of stairs, dark and dirty, to a suite of dingy offices, in the outer of which two old, white-haired clerks bent over ponderous ledgers without so much as deigning him a glance, and a trim young lady, affording a sharp note of contrast to her surroundings, pounded upon a typewriter. It was she who recognized his presence with a bright, smiling reward, who took his card and disappeared into another room, and who returned presently to say that Mr. Brownlow would see him at once in his private office.

The farther Tom went, the more incredible it became that this could be the business habitat of the Kohinur's owner—for Tom was familiar with every private craft that acknowledged New York as its home port—and far from being dazzled by a bewildering display of precious stones, the sparkle of a diamond here would have been so conspicuous as to be startling.

To his unobservant eye there was nothing to indicate what manner of business might be carried on here. Brownlow's private room was even dingier and more uninviting than the outer office—for all the world like the back of a frost-bitten nut, of which Brownlow was the wrinkled kernel.

But could Tom have been present while the importer was entertaining a prospective customer, he would have obtained an insight into Brownlow's methods. In front of the only window that was scrupulously clean stood a wide table. Across the polished top two comfortable leathern chairs faced each other. Two or three dark purple velvet pads and a couple of jewel-encrusted daggers lay here and there upon the

SHE DREAMED DREAMS

By BRYANT C. ROGERS.

It was about two years after the death of Amos Taylor's wife that he sat on a sawlog in his mill yard one day with Deacon Goodhue.

"Brother Amos," the deacon began, "there are reports about that you are to take another wife."

"Reports be darned!" replied the hearty widower.

"It is reported that you have selected Miss Hannah Rathburn."

"The report lies, deacon!"

"A very estimable lady."

"She's an old maid!"

"Yes, she has arrived at years of discretion."

"You mean years of silliness and homliness."

"Then if any one should ask Mrs. Goodhue—"

"She can tell them that I'm getting along too well to want to marry any woman on earth. I can cook, sweep, make a bed, darn my own socks, and patch my own trousers, and what do I want to get married again for?"

Mrs. George Ross, widow of the late George Ross, the village carpenter, had been a widow about as long as Amos Taylor had been a widower. A few people had wondered if she would marry again, but no one had connected her name with any widower.

It came to the ears of Mrs. Ross that the old maid Rathburn had set her cap for Amos, and that Amos seemed rather willing to be caught.

On the third day after the talk on the sawlog the widow Ross appeared at the sawmill and found Amos stacking lumber. He cheerfully left his job, and as they sat down on a plank she said:

"Mr. Taylor, this is not a business call."

"No?"

"You may think it a very silly one."

"I guess not."

"Last night I dreamed that you fell into the millpond here."

"I've come mighty nigh it several times lately."

"You were being swept over the dam when—when—"

"By thunder!"

"When Hannah Rathburn appeared. She waved her hands and screamed. It seemed that she was about to faint when she braced up and plunged in to your assistance."

"And was drowned herself!"

"No; she reached you and swam ashore with you, and you were so grateful that you married her within an hour."

"Then I must have had all the brains soaked out of me!" he exclaimed as he pounded the plank with his fist.

"I never did attach much significance to dreams," said the widow as she prepared to move off; "but I should take it from this that Hannah is going to save your life in reality. If she does your gratitude would—"

"It would do nothing of the kind! If she saves it I'll give her the lumber to build a chicken coop, but she need not expect anything further."

Three or four days elapsed, and then she repeated her call. Amos saw her a long distance down the road and was ready to greet her.

"By George, but have you come to tell me that you have been dreaming again?"

"One can't help what she dreams, can she?" she smiled.

"Was it about Hannah?"

"Yes, poor girl. In my dreams last night I saw her save your life again. Surely her thoughts must be on you."

"She can think and be darned, but how did the dream go?"

"You were walking across a field with your hands under your coat-tails and your eyes watching the clouds. Suddenly a precipice yawned at your feet. You did not see your danger. Three steps more and you would be dashed to the rocks a thousand feet below. At that critical moment a voice cried out:

"Hold, Amos—back, my love!"

"And I backed?" asked Amos.

"You did."

"And it was Hannah that hollered at me?"

"It was. She not only shouted at you but dashed forward and grabbed you by the coat-tails and hauled you back from the brink of death."

"The brink of a mud puddle! Did I marry her again?"

"You did."

"Then I ought to be kicked, even if it was a dream. Do you figger that it's Hannah's thinking of me all the time that makes you dream?"

"Poor, poor Hannah!" was the tribute of the widow as she turned homeward.

When four days had passed without another call at the sawmill Amos appeared on Mrs. Ross' doorstep. On being invited in he almost whispered: "Any more dreams?"

"You have a water jug at the sawmill, haven't you?"

"Yes."

"A lot of potato bugs which had been eating Paris green might crawl into it and poison the water if the cork was left out?"

"And if you were about to drink and Hannah Rathburn suddenly appeared and dashed the jug from your hands?"

"Butted in again, did she?"

"But poor Hannah couldn't stand by and see you poison yourself."

"Poor Hannah to Texas! This evening I'm coming to ask you to marry me! Think it over."

"Who can fathom a widow's heart?"

"Who can guard against a widow's wiles?"

MAHER ON SUFFRAGE

CANDIDATE FOR GOVERNOR FEARS FOR NEBRASKA'S SAFETY.

POINTS TO COLORADO RIOTS

Give Nebraska Women the Ballot, Predicts the Colonel, and Like as Not We'll Have an Awful Miners' Strike.

Colonel John G. Maher has announced his candidacy for governor on the democratic ticket and his unalterable opposition to prohibition and woman suffrage. "The right to vote," declares the colonel, "has been no advantage to women where the right has been given. We are entitled to be guided by the experience of other states. Women have voted in Colorado for twenty years, and one stands today as the worst governed commonwealth in the union, the only state unable to maintain law and order and compelled to call for federal troops to preserve the peace. The experience of Nebraska is not likely to be different than that of Colorado if we give women the ballot."

Mr. Maher furnishes a text for giving a few facts about Colorado.

Of course Nebraska could not possibly repeat the tragic experiences of Colorado unless our prairies should suddenly take to bearing copper and silver and iron instead of wheat and corn. Colorado's troubles are industrial. Accident of mineral wealth has made her one of the storm centers in the world-wide fight for industrial democracy. It has determined the character of her population. Her richest men have been rich as much from luck as from achievement. A great number of her poor men are illiterate aliens, herded together in rough camps and engaged in a monotonous and exhausting occupation. Wealth has changed hands rapidly in Colorado. Men have been made millionaires over night. Great power has come into the hands of gamblers. Woman suffrage could no more give Nebraska Colorado's battle of Walhenburg than it could give us Australia's Ringaroos.

There is one field, however, in which Colorado's laws lead the world, and those are the laws which are a direct result of woman suffrage. They are the laws bearing directly upon the protection of women and children. The Interparliamentary Union has declared them the most advanced laws of the kind of any state or country in the world. Colorado's juvenile court law, compulsory education law, laws for the prevention of cruelty to children and the enforcement of fathers to support wife and child are models for the legislators of other states to study. They are admirably enforced. Today the interests in Colorado that condemn equal suffrage are the vicious and predatory interests, the corrupt politicians, gamblers, keepers of immoral resorts and most of the saloonkeepers. They are crying it down there just as they are flahting it in Nebraska.

It is true that equal suffrage has not brought about peace between miners and mine owners in Colorado. But the best men and women are working together to secure such peace. It was after delegations of women had gone to Governor Ammons to insist that an appeal to President Wilson for federal aid that he took that wise step. The good citizens are uniting in a campaign to secure legislation for the "peaceful and orderly settlement of all industrial disputes." Colorado may be at the present moment the most disorderly state in the union. That does not prove her the worst governed. And if the men who are working more faithfully to bring peace out of strife and order out of chaos, it would be hard to find one who would agree with Colonel Maher that equal suffrage has resulted in a single evil.

Howard's Nine Reasons.

Dr. George Elliott Howard, professor of political science and sociology at the University of Nebraska, and a socialist with a national reputation, gives nine reasons further sense in suffrage and for his efforts to make it come to pass in Nebraska next fall. Dr. Howard at present is giving a series of lectures in Lincoln on "Why I Am for Suffrage." "Giving" is the right word for it, since in spite of the high cost of living and the not-too-generous salaries paid to university professors, Dr. Howard is not charging the Lincoln suffragists for the best campaign lectures that most of them have ever heard.

Here are Dr. Howard's nine reasons for being a suffragist:

Because it is humanly right and socially just.

Because it will benefit woman herself. Human nature is developed by use. Woman cannot do her full share of the world's work without an equal part in social control; especially in the making of law and government.

Because more and more modern law and administration concern the things in which from the beginning of the race womah has been expert; the welfare of the mother, infant, and child, and the ordering of the household life.

Because the ballot is needed to stop the exploitation of the labor of women and children through low wages for high service, thus driving men out of employment.

Because, when in the struggle for bread, women are not so often forced by industrial conditions to underbid men in the labor market, they may safely devote themselves more to the household without lowering the aggregate family income. This is why men's labor organizations want votes for women.

Because eventually it will do away with the dual standard of morality and thus tend to lessen social disease and the sacrifice of womankind to male prostitution.

TREE AND PLANT DISEASES.

Congressman Lever, author of the bill appropriating large sums for federal aid to farmers, ventures to assert that the loss by plant disease amounted the world-wide fight for industrial last year to 10 per cent of the total value of all crops raised in the United States, or approximately $500,000,000. He goes into minute detail to show the character and species of these losses and draws the general conclusion that for the most part these diseases are preventable. He pleads for federal assistance in combating the various plant and tree diseases—for he shows that trees, too, are grave sufferers—and certainly challenges the serious attention of the country. Mr. Lever conceives it to be necessary to show what the farmer has been to and done for the country in order to impress on congress the country's duty toward the farmer. Surely it will be granted that, aside from our debt to the farmer, his prosperity is essential to that of his country. His country ought to more clearly than ever at this particular time see the extreme importance of affording him every reasonable aid and co-operation in improving the quality and quantity of his output, says the Omaha Bee. And, as intimated, we may do that purely from a selfish standpoint if from no other, and yet do no more than should be done.

The henceforth historic "haze of 1912" appear to have registered itself unmistakably in the evaporation records of the great plains and the intermountain districts of our western states. This subject has been discussed in a memoir of L. J. Briggs and J. O. Belz of the United States bureau of plant industry on the basis of measurements made at a number of evaporation tanks during the last five years. As compared with the "normal" for the whole period of evaporatiln, the average evaporation measured at 15 stations during the four months following the eruption of Katmai was generally deficient, the average reduction amounting to about 10 per cent. This corresponds fairly well with the reduction in solar radiation observed by Abbot and Fowle and by Kimball during the same months.

So that surgeons may escape the humiliating experience of leaving sponges sewed in the bodies of patients, a new method of accounting for sponges used in operations is being employed with success, according to the Journal of the American Medical association. Sponges which measure a yard in length and two and four inches wide are now used. To the fringe at the end of each is securely sewed a piece of narrow tape eight or ten inches long. To this the nurse ties a numbered metal check the size of a silver dollar. By arranging the sponges consecutively on a square table the nurse may account for every sponge at the end of the operation. Few surgeons of large experience have escaped the experience of leaving sponges in incisions, according to the article.

On one little island in Gatun lake, formerly known as Lion Hill before the impounded waters of the Chagres river isolated it from the rest of the canal zone, are more species of birds than in any one locality in the Western Hemisphere. E. A. Goldman of the biological survey, department of agriculture, in two short collecting trips to Panama has procured about 300 different species of birds, and it is estimated that 900 varieties are to be found within the limits of the canal zone. This is a larger number than in any one state in the United States in the neighborhood of Gatun at the Atlantic entrance of the canal, alone, no less than 250 species have been found.

TABLE ROCK WILL CELEBRATE.

A meeting was held in the Hnizda store last Thursday night to discuss a fourth of July celebration. At this meeting it was decided that Table Rock would celebrate the fourth of July and W. C. Fellers and S. C. Bicknell were named to solicit donations to create a fourth of July fund. The next day Mr. Bicknell started out to see what success he would have and was greatly encouraged to see how freely the donations came from the merchants. The amount necessary was not so great as some had contemplated and this committee will not have the least trouble to raise the required amount. The program for the fourth is now being worked out and will soon be ready for publication. This will be the first big celebration of the fourth in ten years and they will celebrate it right this year. The celebration will undoubtedly be the biggest ever had in Pawnee county. Make preparations to celebrate in Table Rock this year; for there will be no place where life and patriotism are in evidence as clearly as in Table Rock. Get ready for this great event. The people of this town are going to do everything that they can to make this undertaking a grand success and there is no place on the face of the earth where people do things like they do in this town. They all fall in line and work together and that is why we proficy a good celebration. Undoubtedly the parade will be one of the big things of the day and every auto owner should prepare to enter this parade with his car decorated so as to win some of the honors of this event. In all probability the committee will have a prize to give to the one who is most artistical and original in the decoration of the car. Watch for announcements in the columns of this paper and for the big bills which will soon go out.

Health a Factor in Success

The largest factor contributing to a mans success is undoubtedly health. It has been observed that a man is seldom sick when his bowel are regular—he is never well when they are constipated. For constipation you will find nothing quite so good as Chamberlain's Tablets. They not only move the bowels but improve the appetite and strengthen the digestion. They are sold by all druggists.

THE WIND.

The wind comes singing from the south, as hot as though 'twere fried, suggestive of a furnace mouth, and blazing coal inside. And now the wheat will die the death, the corn will say goodbye; for in that fierce and fiery breath all growing things must die. The wind comes nosing from the north to see what it may see; and when that sort of wind comes forth, I murmur, "Hully chee! 'Twill kill the blossoms on the trees the garden sass must go; when nature trots out such a breeze, the poor man has no show. The wind comes wailing from the east, and floods will soon appear; I hoped to see my store increased in goodly shape this year, but endless rains will spoil the oats, and drown the geese and ducks, and give the mildew to the goats, and I'll lose many bucks.' Thus speaks the kicker and his wail is rising every day; he's sure that every thing will fail, that grief is on the way. If he were farming Canan's land, with milk and honey near, he still would kick to beat the the band and shed the briny tear. Walt Mason.

Christian Endeavor Social

On last Friday evening the young people of the Presbyterian Christian Endeavor Society gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Asher west of town.

Quite a number were present and after the buisness meeting the members enjoyed themselves in out-door games until a late hour, when refreshments, consisting of lemon-pineapple sherbert and cake were served. Everyone partook of these delicious refreshments which were very nice and refreshing.

At the business meeting a nominating committee was appointed to nominate offices for the election which will be held at the next business meeting some time in June. The new officers will be installed about July 1st.

The Christian Endeavor Society express their thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Asher for the delightful evening and the fine refreshments served to them.

Tecumseh is making preparations for a big celebration of the Fourth and invite the people of this community to spend the day there. Nearly a thousand dollars has been raised for the expenses of the amusements, etc., and everything is going to be absolutely free to all comers. Open Air Meeting

Saturday afternoon Mrs. Baldwin of Kas., who had been touring thru Richardson county reached Pawnee City where she lectured on the street. Autos were at the train to meet Mrs. Baldwin, also Madams Kovanda Cotton Seism and A. H. Fellers of Table Rock. The suffrage badgeres were flying from each car as they marched thru the streets. Mrs. Condon presented the speaker to a large and enthusiastic crowd of about 500. The speaker handled her subject in a very able manner when Dr. Collins made a speech which was appreciated. The crowd was then invited to the Court house where a short program was given and light refreshments were served. The Pawnee ladies did everything to make it a success.

SYNOPSIS.

Rudolph van Vechten, a young man of leisure, is astonished to see a man enter No. 1313, a house across the street from the Manhattan club, long unoccupied, and spoken of as the House of Mystery. Several persons are under surveillance, enter No. 1313. Van Vechten expresses concern to his friend, Tom Phinney, regarding the whereabouts of his cousin and fiancee, Paige Carew. A man in a limousine calls from the house. Van Vechten and Tom follow the man and find him dead in the street. Van Vechten is attracted by the figure of a girl in the crowd of onlookers surrounding the body. Later, he spends hours the girl gazing at him with a look of horror from the windows of the mysterious house. Detective Flint calls on Van Vechten to get his version of the tragedy. Tom Phinney goes alone on a yachting trip. He recognizes among some persons in a passing motor boat two men whom he had seen enter the House of Mystery. He sees one of them, a Mr. Calm, on shore later and follows him. Calm is seized, blindfolded and taken to a house. He hears a girl named Jessie, evidently the daughter of the man in authority, question his captors. A sweet-voiced girl later protests against the roughness of his capture. Van Vechten calls on Miss Theodora Van Vechten, big man in Wall street and meets Tamplo Honnar "on a search of information regarding the whereabouts of Paige Carew. Detective Flint shows Van Vechten a "gold cure" nurse found in the House of Mystery. Van Vechten is astonished to find Paige Carew. The sweet-voiced girl helps Mr. Calm escape. A French newspaper in London reports that two ladies resembling Miss Carew and her companion, Mrs. Devereaux, sailed for New York from Cherbourg. It proves that neither the ladies visited the English home of Vampire Bonner, owner of the House of Mystery. Flint has a theory that they are connected with the mystery of No. 1313. It is recalled that Tamplo Honnar was in love with a daughter of Compton Schuyler who married Max Willard. The other daughter married a man named Devereaux. Bonner and Willard were intimate friends. Calm is a partner of Willard. Van Vechten enters the House of Mystery in search of Miss Carew. Bonner calls Tamplo Honnar a thief. He interferes and helps the girl escape, but is rendered unconscious after a struggle with Calm. Tom Phinney gets aboard as master of Bonner's yacht Kohinur, which has been chartered for some mysterious mission.

BOOK III.

By which episode it may be seen that Tom Phinney of the Powhatan, and Captain Phinney of the yacht Kohinur, were two distinctly different personalities—a detail worth remembering in the light of what is to follow later on.

When Tom swung aboard at the head of his recruits, his appraising eye took in at once the deck's untidy appearance, the indolent attitudes of the watch and the men forward, and in the face of so many evidences of lax discipline he utterly ignored Brownlow's demonstrations of joy at his appearance. He addressed his mate:

"Will you look at this rummage, Mr. Mercer! Put those loafers to work at once, and make 'em jump. Charterer's coming aboard tonight, and I'd be ashamed to look him in the face if I had to meet him in a pig-pen like this. Get down the accommodation-ladder—he can't climb a rope. The bo'sun will take the launch ashore after supper and wait for the party." He wheeled abruptly upon the sailor of the launch. "What's your name?"

"Charlie Winnard, sir."

"Very well, Charlie Winnard; you know what you have to do, so step lively. And you might pass a word along to your mates; the first man that shows himself above-deck in a rig as filthy as yours will do his watch's laundry for a week. Get along with you."

Mr. Brownlow Got Down to Business Immediately.

"Aye, aye, sir." And the man saluted and stepped away with alacrity.

A moment later Tom and the owner were alone in the charthouse away from the confusion. Mr. Brownlow got down to business immediately. He furnished Tom with a list of steward's supplies, comprising everything from gasoline for the launch to champagne for the passengers, a glance at which made the skipper open his eyes.

"Whew!" he whistled. "That reads like a Rector menu; we won't go hungry or dry in the officers' mess anyhow."

"I'd like to do things right," returned Brownlow, rubbing his spare hands with obvious satisfaction. "There will be ladies in the party, and they are very particular people."

"Ladies!" exclaimed Captain Phinney, scowling. "On a secret cruise? I don't like that."

The other nodded. "But you won't have to worry about them.

Now I want to give you your final instructions; they are brief and not difficult to follow; then I must be getting along."

"First, the charterer and party will want to come aboard somewhere around nine o'clock tonight; he will bring you a note from me.

"Second, it is uncertain when you will sail; but fires must be kept banked in readiness to clear at any time."

"Third, after nightfall the boat must be kept dark—all interior lights closely shaded—none whatever displayed on or above deck except your regulation port and starboard lights.

"Fourth, nobody is to be permitted to come aboard or go ashore without the charterer's express permission. I believe that's all."

Tom stared at the slight figure opposite him, and ran his fingers through his thatch of close black curls.

"Is this going to be a smuggling stunt?" demanded he, frankly bewildered. "Or are we going to kidnap an heiress?"

"Kidnap an heiress!" echoed Brownlow. "God bless my soul! What put that notion into your head? I told you that I am ignorant of the nature of the charterer's object—save that it is honest!"

"Humph!" Tom grunted. "It doesn't sound honest."

"I'll admit that there is a good deal of mystery about the affair that I do not like; but—" And Mr. Brownlow waved a hand in a gesture that recalled to the other the Name which could not be mentioned.

The owner, after a final outburst of gratitude and satisfaction at having been, as he expressed it, "saved" at the last moment, took his departure; and it was not until he had gone that it occurred to Tom that the charterer's name had not been once mentioned. At this neglected detail he expressed his wonder in the classic language of the men of New York city's former police chiefs:

"Now wouldn't that blow your hat in the river!"

He then took over the personal supervision of the cleaning-up process to such good purpose that by nightfall the yacht was as spick and span as a battleship.

It was perhaps close to ten o'clock—or four bells of the first watch—when Tom, arrayed to his satisfaction, heard the officer of the watch respond to the launch's hail. He hurried on deck and stationed himself at the head of the accommodation-steps, mentally deploring the absence of lights.

A stir came up from the river, but the launch was invisible. In a moment a man's head and shoulders loomed dimly in the gangway. He stepped upon the deck and, leaning toward Tom, peered into his face in a vain attempt to make out his features. To Tom, the man's face was quite indistinguishable—merely a denser blot against the darkness.

"Is this the captain?" inquired a voice strangely familiar.

Tom started with surprise. Where had he heard that voice before? He could not recollect in the spur of the moment, but for some inexplicable reason it seemed so necessary that he should—and he tried so hard to do so, that the man was obliged to repeat his question.

"I beg your pardon," Tom stammered. "I am Captain Phinney."

"It is only natural that he should expect to hear his name mentioned in return, or to be handed the note of introduction mentioned by Brownlow. Then the man walked away without another word.

The others were following one another rapidly, until five dim shapes were ranged along the deck, wholly invisible to the shadow of the superstructure.

All at once the now very alert skipper directed his attention to a murmur of feminine voices in the launch. The ladies, manifestly, were making considerable amusement in pretending a hazardous embarkation, for their transfer from the smaller craft to the steps was accompanied by much merried shrieks and much subdued laughter. In a moment one came quickly and agilely up to the deck, halted and turned around. Her outline presented only the vaguest sort of blur.

"Welcome to the Kohinur!" she called back gayly to whoever remained below.

And if Tom had started at sound of the man's voice, what words are adequate to describe his sensations now? None, it is to be regretted. Reeling backward until he stayed himself by a mechanical clutch at the rail, he clung there, electrified with amazement—stupid with incredulity. If the sun had suddenly burst into view overhead he could have been no more completely overcome.

Next instant, however, conviction was hammered home. Two other laughing figures had joined the first, the three blending in one faint outline, when he again heard the voice.

"Dear me!" it complained. "How dark it is! Aren't we to have any lights?"

Then, in the mulatto stewardess' mellow accents:

"This way, please, follow me. I'll show you the way to the saloon."

And by the time Tom had collected his scattered wits sufficiently to curse his awkward tardiness and ineptness, he was alone.

Incredible as every law of probability might try to make it appear, nevertheless there was no gainsaying the fact that the fresh, sweet girlish voice, which had just fallen upon his hearing was the same that, only a few nights previously at Rocky Cove, had set his pulses to leaping and his imagination to revelling in an ideal, ridiculous, rose-colored dream of the future.

CHAPTER III.

The Kohinur's Charterer.

Is it to be wondered at that for the rest of the night Tom remained in a state of such feverish excitement that he forgot to sleep? Here, in the most amazing manner imaginable, he and the Girl once more were thrown together—and, too, under circumstances that not only promised the most delightful sort of intimacy, but were not likely soon to be terminated. An unwonted light shone in his eyes, and his tanned jaw settled into lines of determination that were not without a degree of grimness.

"What's the use!" he morosely growled. "She'll have nothing to do with me. I made seventeen different kinds of fool of myself Monday night when she got me out of that dark room. . . . Unless she realises that a scrap like that is enough to turn any fellow's head."

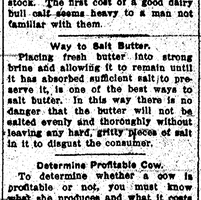
And this led him to ruminating on the strangeness of his adventure, and to a consideration of the rest of the party, which he indulged briefly only because he remembered how inexplicably their doings had become identified with Miss Carew's disappearance—for undoubtedly they were the same people who had inhabited Number 1313—and how greatly Ruddy was interested in their movements. This reflection also soon became completely—

Should he not at once notify Mr. Flint? Did the allegiance he had only today assumed outweigh the obligations of a lifelong friendship?

Here was a problem that was a little too much for Tom to decide offhand, and he began to be conscious of a vague, growing sense of doubt and misgiving. He began to perceive the possibility of future complications that would keep him floundering helplessly in all sorts of predicaments; either interference or non-interference by him might be the occasion for any amount of future regret and lasting remorse and mental suffering, but he had arrived at the decision before turning in, that, considering everything, he should be filled with a sense of gratitude for the fortuitous chance that had moved him to call on Brownlow.

Captain Phinney was again astir long before sunrise. He took it upon himself to see that the decks had such a scrubbing down, the brasswork and glass such a polishing, as, in all probability, they had never before received. He had himself well in hand now, and every man-jack aboard recognised in the calm, forceful individual who directed so concisely what was to be done, a skipper who thoroughly understood his business and whose orders were to be obeyed with prompt thoroughness.

So, at four bells of the morning watch—or six o'clock by land time—when he and the Girl came unexpectedly face to face, outwardly Tom was perfectly composed, though his heart straightway commenced a mad pounding; and he was filled with a conviction that a sudden unaccountable difficulty in his breathing was going to make him speak as if a tremolo stop had been pulled out in his vocal apparatus.



A Holstein Cow.

cow breeds. He says there is an advantage in having but one breed represented in private dairy herds; that no two breeds of cows have the same kind of milk. The speed of a separator that will skim Jersey milk clean, will waste butter fat in a Holstein cow's milk. And the temperature of cream in churning Holstein cream, if applied to Jersey cream, would keep the churn on the go for an unreasonable time, while the same temperature of Jersey cream, if applied to Holstein cream, would sour it, a great loss of butter fat and a soft butter, lacking grain. There is no difference in churn ability of all breeds of cows, and also in the separation of butter fat from the milk. Choose your breed and stick to it.

RESULTS FROM GOOD SIRES

Decided Contrast Shaven to Those Districts Where Scrub or Beef Bulls Are Still Used.

One county in Iowa where the use of pure-bred dairy sires was introduced 20 years ago now produces 7,400 pounds of creamery butter per square mile each year. This is decided contrast to those districts where scrub bulls are still in use, or where beef bulls are used in dairy herds. Because the result of using a well-bred sire cannot be seen for a year or two, beginners are inclined to become discouraged. One case is known where a Hereford sire was being used in a herd of high-grade Guernseys because a man who had the Hereford bull for sale said they were pretty good milkers. Such changes and mixing of blood never improve, but invariably weaken the stock. The first cost of a good dairy bull cost seems heavy to a man not familiar with them.

Way to Salt Butter.

Placing fresh butter into strong brine and allowing it to remain until it has absorbed sufficient salt to preserve it, is one of the best ways to salt butter. In this way there is no danger that the butter will not be salted evenly and thoroughly without leaving any hard, gritty pieces of salt in it to disgust the consumer.

Determine Profitable Cow.

To determine whether a cow is profitable or not, you must know what she produces and what it costs to produce that feed.

BUDDHIST CULT IN EUROPE

Monastery Recently Established in Switzerland Is Said to Create a Precedent.

What is said to be the first Buddhist monastery set up in Europe is that which not long ago was established in the canton of Ticino, in Switzerland, high above the village of Novaggio, overlooking Lakes Maggiore and Lugano. It is a curious circumstance that the founder of Buddhism in Switzerland should be not an Oriental, but a German. A native of Wiesbaden, he now bears the name of Kikkhu Nyanatikoka.

It appears that this devotee decided, at an early age, to renounce the vanities of the world, and that during the nine years of his seclusion in Ceylon he became absorbed in the study of Buddhism. In time he attained the rank of a bikkhu, or priest, and received the name of Nyanatikoka, which means "the man who possesses the wisdom of the three worlds."

This priest was assisted in the organization of the monastery in Switzerland by a German co-religionist, by a priest from Burma, and by English and Dutch converts. Thus five men formed the first Buddhist brotherhood in Europe. All wear the traditional yellow robes of the Buddhist monks. Upon learning that the community would undertake no active propaganda, the Swiss authorities placed no obstacles in their way.

Return Address.

One small boy of my acquaintance will be careful when he grows up about that business of writing his address legibly. It he retains his present sense of importance of making the point clear. He was saying his prayers the other evening, and, after the enumeration of those upon whom he invoked a blessing, concluded: "And make me a good boy"—and then, after a pause, "14, Ladysmith avenue, Amen." There was to be no mistake about the destination of the answer.—London Chronicle.

DAIRY FACTS

POSSIBILITIES OF DAIRYING

No Line of General Agriculture Will Pay So Large a Profit—There Are Many Details.

(By WILBER J. FRASER, Professor of Dairy Farming, University of Illinois.)

The population of the United States has practically doubled in the last 26 years. If this rate of increase continues for the next 25 years we will have nearly two hundred million people to feed. Since milk is one of the cheapest animal foods, rightly conducted dairying is certain to be profitable.

There is no line of general agriculture in which well-directed effort will pay so large a profit as in dairy farming, yet its possibilities are little realized, even by the best men engaged in that occupation. The profits on most dairy farms might easily be doubled. Like any other business, it is made up of an infinite number of small details, and unless all of these operations are conducted on business principles, the best results will not be obtained. The cow is the most economical producer of human food of any of our domestic animals, and as she is the machine for converting crops into dairy products, the surest profit and wisest economy is in securing the best machines obtainable. One cow may not pay for her board, while another, with the same amount of feed and care, may yield a profit of $75 a year. The wise dairyman keeps the latter kind.

ERUPTION SPREAD ON FACE

810 East Elm St., Streator, Ill.—"A running sore broke out above my right eye, which spread over my entire face. It started as a small pimple, and I scratched it open and the contents of this small pimple ran down my face. Wherever this ran a new sore appeared. They itched and burned terribly; I couldn't touch my face it burned so. It disfigured my face terribly and I couldn't be seen for everyone was afraid of it. It looked like a disease of some kind; it was all red and a heavy white crust on it. Everybody kept out of my way, afraid it would spread. I lost rest at night and I couldn't bear to have anything touch my face, not even the pillow. I had to lie on the back of the head. I was always glad when morning came so I could get up. It was extremely painful.

Japan's new Prime Minister, Count Okuma, has a wooden leg. It replaces a limb which was blown off by the bomb of a political assassin. In connection with that outrage, a story is told which goes far to support the claim that is made for Okuma that he is the best-mannered man in Japan. After the explosion, which had killed his servants and horses, besides shattering his leg, he was put in his office in an agony of pain, yet he was able to say smilingly to a foreign statesman who was taking leave of him, "Excuse me, sir, for my impoliteness in not seeing you to the door."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Novelist's Romance.

Mr. S. R. Crockett, the Scottish novelist, whose death is announced, was fond of relating among his intimates how he met his best of wives. It was his day of early struggles. He had written for a London daily a review of one of George Milner's books. Pleased with the review, which was unsigned, Mr. Milner communicated with the writer of the notice, and finally invited him to visit his home in Manchester. In time the invitation was accepted. The future novelist of tales fell in love with Miss Milner, and a marriage of perfect happiness was the result.

Shamrock, Mo.—"I feel it my duty to tell the public the condition of my health before using your medicine. I had falling, inflammation and congestion, female weakness, pains in both sides, backaches and bearing down pains, was short of memory, nervous, impatient, passed sleepless nights, and had neither strength nor energy. There was always a fear and dread in my mind, I had cold, nervous, weak spells, hot flashes over my body. I had a place in my right side that was so sore that I could hardly bear the weight of my clothes. I tried medicines and doctors, but they did me little good, and I never expected to get out again.

"I got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier, and I certainly would have been in grave or in an asylum if your medicines had not saved me. TAKE THINGS EASY WITH BROOD MARES

A Strong, Healthy Mare That Has Come Through the Foaling Period in Fine Condition. Her Colt Has a Good Start in Life, but There Is Always More or Less Danger in Allowing Mares With Very Young Foals to Run Together.

(By C. S. MILLER.)

Every year thousands of colts are lost through the bad handling of brood mares. As a general rule it is safe to say that farmers do not appreciate how easily a mare with foal can be injured.

It does a brood mare no harm to be worked gently up to within ten days or two weeks of foaling, but if she is subjected to sudden strain by being forced to pull a big load out of a tight place or is driven through heavy mud or deep snow drifts, trouble is almost sure to follow.

One of the most common causes of injury to mares in foal is slipping on the ice in the early spring. If the mare must be driven she should be shod with light, sharp shoes, but she should never be used on the road when it is avoidable.

Swinging doors of box stalls are also prolific sources of danger as a mare may be caught in a half closed door. A blow on the body with a heavy halter in the hands of a bad-tempered man may cause the loss of a foal. Mares with foal should never be driven, but always led.

Mares with foal, particularly when close to the foaling period, are apt to be quarrelsome, and if two or more are permitted to run together, there is always danger that they may be injured in a fight. A kick in the abdomen has caused the loss of thousands of foals.

The mare with foal should have light exercise, but it is always better to work her gently than to allow her to run in the pasture with other horses, particularly if they have free access to the open door of the barn.

Mares are frequently injured by being crowded against the door jamb by other horses when entering or leaving the barn.

If the mare is with foal in the stable keep the premises perfectly clean at all times, with plenty of clean, soft bedding. As soon as the foal arrives, all the bedding which is comes in contact with must be burned, and the floor should be thoroughly cleaned and sprinkled with disinfectant.

The colt should have constant care for several days immediately after birth to insure a good start in life.

Contrary to the prevailing opinion among farmers, the hot which infests the stomach of the horse is often harmful to both young and old animals, and may be especially disastrous to colts. The bot is the larval stage of the horse botfly. The botfly reproduces by depositing light yellow, oval eggs, which are attached by the adult female to the hair of the legs, breast, and neck. The eggs hatch; then the horse licks itself and some of the small larvae are taken through the mouth into the stomach, where they attach themselves firmly to the lining.

By their parasitic tendencies a large number of bots covering the lining of the stomach damage the interior of that organ, prevent digestive action, and in some cases cause the horse to remain in such a poor condition that death may ensue. It is probable that many cases of poor condition in horses thought to be due to worms are really due to heavy infestation with bots.

A very effective treatment which will remove bots within 24 to 48 hours is as follows: The day preceding the treatment a small amount of hay and a moderate amount of oats is given in the morning; in the evening food is withheld and a purgative given—Barbados aloes, 1 ounce; or raw linseed oil, 1 pint. The day of the treatment, at 6 o'clock in the morning, give 2 drams of carbon bisulphid in a gelatin capsule; at 7 o'clock repeat the dose in the same manner; and at 8 o'clock give the third and last dose, making in all 9 drams of carbon bisulphid in three gelatin capsules.

The above treatment is for the adult horse. For a yearling colt half the quantity of carbon bisulphid is used; a mature horse will give the desired results.

If properly administered, the gelatin capsule reaches the stomach intact, but soon dissolves, and the carbon bisulphid rapidly evaporates, suffocating all bot larvae and other parasites with which it comes in contact, but not injuring the horse. Worms are quite often expelled as well. This remedy has been used with a large number of animals, and has proved successful.

GETTING SPRING ONIONS TO FRONT

Fresh Vegetables Put Up in Neat Packages Are Always in Demand in All Big Cities.

(By LAVILLA WRIGHT MACOMBER.)

Having discovered, after several seasons of experience, that large size sets yield better than the small ones and occupy no more space, we sort out the small, even sized sets in early spring and sell to the stores, retaining all the medium or large left over onions to set for marketing.

Often grocers who have a large amount of unsold onions left over in their cellars are glad to get rid of them for little or nothing and they make the best of sets even when the sprouts are spindled for they soon straighten out of their own accord in a week the start of those not already sprouted.

We set our onions just as soon as the ground can be plowed and roughly leveled, leaving enough space between the closely set rows to cultivate with a wheel hoe. A cold snap or light snow does not hurt them except to retard growth, and after the last sets must be placed in the ground and pushed along for market at the earliest possible date to meet the first demands, which, before town gardens begin to bear, are brisk.

Our onions are placed on the market as soon as the bulbs begin to show slightly rounded bottoms and our customers like them at that stage rather than when the bottoms are nicely rounded and the onion flavor more pronounced. The extreme tips of the bunch only are clipped to give a neater appearance and they are tied well down onto the tops that the string may not cut into the tender white part.

As our orders are usually sent in the day before, the onions are pulled in the evening and left standing, bottoms down, in tubs of water over night. The water loosens the rotten outside skins which may be easily slipped down and the roots clipped (not too closely or the cut ends will curl back) with a stout sharp knife. The soaking over night is a valuable labor saver especially when large or tore must be delivered for the early morning trade.

Our onions are sent to market in lots of a dozen bunches each, wrapped in plain wrapping paper and tied loosely with stout cord, to prevent dust from settling on them in transit. The yellow Danvers variety is our favorite for green onions because of their quick and uniform growth, fresh white color and mild flavor.

Sprouts of red onions are tougher and streaked with purplish color which dealers do not like, invariably preferring a pure white onion for green onions.

Unquestionably it pays to be particular when preparing vegetables for market for those of the freshest and neatest appearance are always sought for while the careless peddler who brings in half cleaned, uneven bunches sometimes gone too fresh and covered with dust, has some to take back.

Failures in Poultry.

Failures in poultry of course there are, and also in every other line of business. In poultry failures, however, the blame is laid on the fact that it is a business in which the men who failed to make good. The same holds good in all poultry operations. It is the man behind the gun who either makes a success or a failure.

Training the Heifer.

If the heifer intended for the dairy herd is trained to come right into the stable and is haltered, handled and fed as the cows are, you will experience much less difficulty with her at her first calving period. Her milking producing capacity also will be greater than that of the wild, neglected, unruly heifer.

Value in the Soil.

Farmers do not realize the immense value there is in the soil. This is partly due to their ignorance of the fertility and the permanent possibilities. Conditions will not materially change until farms are cut into smaller tracts and more diversified farming is produced.

SEEK BIG SEA PRIZE

Fortunes Spent to Recover Treasure on Sunken Craft.

Many Try to Secure $1,000,000 in Gold Ingots Which Went Down With British Warship Off Coast of Holland in 1799.

London.—The greatest prize of the sea, and one which has excited the mind of man for well over a century, is the British warship Lutine, which sank off the coast of Holland in 1799. In her strongroom were stored ingots and coin, estimated to be worth over £1,000,000. Just after she was wrecked the Dutch fishermen were said to be able to get to her at certain times, and they recovered a portion of the precious cargo.

Then, however, the set of the current changed, and the Lutine was bottled up. Since then several fortunes have been spent in efforts to recover the treasure. At one of these attempts the ship's bell was brought up, and it now hangs in Lloyd's, the underwriters, where it is tolled on very special occasions. Altogether, about £100,000 has been got out of her.

Some little while ago another attempt was made to retrieve the remainder of this huge fortune from the grasp of the ocean. All of the latest machinery of modern submarine engineering science was concentrated to this end.

Now, although the Lutine's position had been marked fairly accurately for over a hundred years, a terrific gale blotted out the most important landmark—and where was the Lutine? The salvors did not know. Divers went down and searched on the spot where she was supposed to be, but they could not find her.

Then the leader of these modern treasure hunters decided on a plan for ascertaining her whereabouts.

Among the appliances of the expedition were powerful new sandpumps, one of which was capable of shifting 2,000 tons of sand an hour. Dropping the end of this giant pump over the side of the steamer, he set it going, and started to suck up the sea bed at a rapid rate, moving, of course, all the time. He knew more or less where the wreck should lie, and his idea was to cut a deep trench right across this area, and to keep on cutting and cross-cutting until he had found her. For hours the dredging went on; sand poured ceaselessly from the pump; thousands of tons of it were removed. Then the Lutine was rediscovered, buried 30 feet deep in a sandbank.

In this manner the first difficulty was overcome. But many more had to be met, the chief being the strong tides which are continually altering the shape of the shoals, and the rough seas which seem to rage along that coast to an abnormal degree. Whenever the sea subsided and made it practicable for work to continue, the dredging went on. Erected over the stern of the salvage steamer was a queer-looking arrangement, something like a giant birdcage, and through this was poured all the sand sucked up. The contrivance was in reality a tremendous sieve, with a mesh so small that not even half a sovereign could escape through it. The aim of this apparatus the salvors literally sifted the bed of the sea, and in the sifting many coins and other things came to light.

But the treasure was doomed not to be withdrawn from its deep-sea bank. A storm arose and effectually stopped operations, after the hunters had created a record by shifting one million tons of sand. That they were very near to the treasure is beyond all doubt, for one day a lump of rust was brought up containing an impression of the exact shape of a gold bar, and when this rust was treated with acids it resulted in five grains of gold being recovered.

Deep Breathing.

"Learn to sit or stand erect and breathe deep," says a health expert. "Round shoulders should cannot be properly washed with half enough air any more than you can take a proper bath in a few pints of water."

Every body must know what a joy there is in the deep breathing of the pure air of the morning. The lungs respond to the stimulus much as the body reacts from a dash of cold water.

The law provides: "That the second Sunnay in June in each year shall be known as Pioneers Memorial Day and the same shall be set apart for holding suitable exercises in schools and churches of the state, and when possible in the cemeteries and over graves of departed pioneers in and that the present inhabitants and future generations may not forget the spirit and the achievements of the men and women who settled these plains and prairies and established the institutions which we now enjoy" The ministers of the Gospel are especially requested to hold appropriate services in the churches on this day, and old settlers associations should provide for decorating the graves of pioneers, and to do honor to these men and women by uniting in appropriate exercisers

To Tell Time at Night.

Awaking in the night and wondering what time it may be, who has not longed to see the clock without getting up and striking a light? To make this longing easy to satisfy, a firm in Paris has just put on the market a clock that by pressing a button is made to project a picture of its face in a ray of light upon the ceiling. This clock, which looks like a young cannon, stands upon a box containing three dry batteries. Its mechanism is in a metal tube, at one end of which is an ordinary dial. The push-button can be placed under the pillow or upon a table beside the bed. When one wants to see the time in the night one presses the button; this lights the lamp, which projects upon the ceiling or upon the wall a greatly magnified picture of its face, so that one can lie comfortably in bed and read the time at a glance. Another push of the button extinguishes the lamp.

TREE AND PLANT DISEASES.

M. E. Church Notes.

Last Sunday two union services were held in the Methodist church. In the morning, with the old soldiers and Woman's Relief Corps occupying seats at the front, and a large congregation present, Rev. C. P. Wimberly preached the Memorial sermon. It was on the general theme of vicarious suffering, and was thoughtful and eloquent. In the evening the house was crowded to the doors, the occasion being the class sermon to the class of 1914, Table Rock high school. The graduates occupied seats together, and platform was tastefully decorated with the class colors. The order of exercises was as follows:

A MESSAGE TO WOMEN

Who Are "Just Ready to Drop."

When you are "just ready to drop," when you feel so weak that you can hardly drag yourself about—and because you have not slept well, you get up as tired-out next morning as when you went to bed, you need help.

Miss Lee Dumas writes from Malone, N. Y., saying: "I was in a badly run-down condition for several weeks but two bottles of Vinol put me on my feet again and made me strong and well. Vinol has done me more good than all the other medicines I ever took."

If the careworn, run-down women, the pale, sickly children and feeble old folks around here would follow Miss Dumas' example, they, too, would soon be able to say that Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron remedy, had built them up and made them strong.

It is wonderful; strength creator and body-builder, and we sell it under a guarantee of satisfaction. You get your money back if Vinol does not help you.

HIS PRIOR CLAIM

By C. D. OWEN.

At the fork of the road the big gray touring car halted. There was no sign post. It was beginning to rain a fine misty drizzle. Back in the tonneau Florence slept comfortably, her head on Dick's shoulder. He opened the door cautiously.

"Don't you know the way?" he asked.

De Voux shook his head, peering out at the hill road to the left.

"I think it ees nine mile up zere, but I am not positive. It ees four year since I travel dis way."

"Try it, anyhow," Dick ordered. "It doesn't look as much traveled as the other one. Take it easy going, up. The ground's muddy and treacherous."

He closed the door and settled back, looking down at the face upturned to him. She looked very young and childlike asleep. He had never seen her asleep before, and vaguely it troubled him.

Florence stirred and opened her eyes, as the machine dragged heavily over the uneven ground. She looked feverish.

"Dear, darling old treasure girl," murmured Dick, gathering her into his arms by main force. "I'm awfully sorry, but don't you see once we'd started, we couldn't go back? You would be the first one to rebel at falling now."

"Lights ahead, sir," called De Voeux. "It is to hotel in ze distance."

"Dick, we mustn't. They're sure to catch us if we stop over night. I don't mind sleeping this way, truly I don't."

Dick smothered her protests in his own way until they drew up before the little mountain hotel. It was evidently open. He had been half afraid they would find it boarded up for the winter. He lifted Florence out in her long fur cloak, and carried her up to the porch, where it was dry. Inside the long, quiet hall it was absolutely silent except for the slow ticking of a tall clock on the wall. Log fires smoldered in the great rock fireplace. In an armchair by the door dozed the proprietor, his spectacles pushed back on his forehead, and a black and white kitten curled up on his knee. But Dick never noticed them. He looked at the two figures seated at the long, narrow table in the little adjoining dining room. They were Rollingson Robb and old Colonel Damer. De Voux had said there were tire tracks in the roadway before the old inn.

Florence had seen them at the same instant, and they must surely have heard the machine, she thought, standing back in the shadows near the door. All her fatigue and weariness seemed to drop off like magic. She had her hand on the door knob with a wild impulse to get away without being seen, but the colonel had discovered her. He said something to Robb, and came out into the hall.

"It's all right, Kathbun," he told the startled proprietor. "These are the people we were looking for. Florie, will you just step into the parlor for a time, and close the door, like a good child?"

But Florence never stirred from the side of the tall, boyish figure in the long coat. Instead, she slipped her hand in his, and waited.

"So," said the colonel thoughtfully. "You have made progress in disobedience." He turned to Dick. "We have a warrant out for you, sir, Mr. Robb here has been sworn in as a deputy sheriff, and is ready to serve it."

"I'm nineteen, dad," Florence broke in.

"What's your object, colonel, in all this?" asked Dick suddenly. "You've been down on me ever since I came home from South America last spring, and told you I wanted to marry Florie. If you'd been half-way decent to us we'd never have gone away. I can take good care of her."

"I believe Mr. Robb has a prior claim," said the colonel dryly. "He has had my full consent to marry my daughter for two years."

"I'm mighty sorry, colonel, you feel that way about it. We never thought of this trip until Florrie told me that you and Mr. Robb here were making preparations gradually for the wedding."

"You're an unmitigated young scamp," sputtered Robb, digging down in an inside pocket after the warrant. "Colonel, will you telephone to the nearest town for their local sheriff?"

"Just a minute," said Dick. "I have a paper here that beats that one, Robb. Take off your gloves, strike, and show dad the nice, new, shiny ring." He spread the white marriage certificate out on the old table.

"By George, the boy's right," murmured the colonel, after a minute's inspection of the paper. "Rollinson, your warrant's got its back broke. You can't arrest a man for running away with his wife."

AN UNDERSHOT CUPID

By FORBES DWIGHT.

Perhaps the best description of William Bolos that can be given is to say that his idea of a highly hilarious evening was to spend it searching for certain illusive Greek roots. That perhaps gives a very proper idea of the gentleman and renders it unnecessary to mention his heavy-lensed tortoise-shelled spectacles, his baggy clothes, his absurd ties, and his air of always having something very important on his mind.

Besides Greek roots there was one thing worthy of mention in William's rather austere and ascetic life; and that was a bow-legged undershot, 70-pound bulldog, relocating in the mighty un-Hellenic name of Frazzles.

William Bolos sat alone that April evening in his study at the house of his widowed sister with whom he boarded and who was inordinately proud of William's bulging forehead and his success with Greek roots. Frazzles was capering joyfully somewhere about the yard below, and William should have been on the trail of the usual Greek root. But instead he was staring moodily at a bit of paper before him. On the paper were sundry lines, each beginning with a capital. One would never have thought of the austere William as breaking out into metrical thought; indeed, it surprised William as much as it would have done any one else.

New neighbors had moved into the house next door, and one of the said new neighbors—the daughter of the house—had a most amazing pair of violet eyes. William had first noticed them when he had seen her making friends with Frazzles through the fence one day. They were most disturbing eyes.

William had known by certain all too apparent sighs that he was rapidly descending into paths of insanity, but the crowning climax of it all had come. He had written a poem, a poem about her eyes—28 lines of soulful drivel in iambic hexameter.

"William, oh, William!" called his sister's voice from the hall below. "Here's Frazzles coming up to you."

A moment later Frazzles was clawing vigorously at the door. William opened it and in bounded 70-odd pounds of animation, fresh from a romp with the girl next door. William abstractedly watched him scurrying about the study.

He stepped to the table and picked up his recent assault upon prosody. Her eyes were starry—and liquid—and like the stars and all the rest of it.

Frazzles ceased growling at a hassock and cocked an ear. When the paper hit the floor he bounded forward, in another moment it was in his mouth.

"Here! Here, sir! Come here!" William commanded in his most domineering voice. But Frazzles, remembering many a gambol with an old shoe in his mouth and William in pursuit, bounded joyfully about the room, bolted down the stairs with the howling William in pursuit, edged through the front door which was open, and sped down the front path.

William went to the gate and whistled.

Then on the next porch he heard words that fairly froze his blood.

"That's the good Frazzles! Give it to me! That's the good old fellow!"

William felt his knees giving way beneath him. He had headed those verses—headed them like a sentimental fool he was, he now remembered—"To Margaret's Eyes."

Quite involuntarily he whistled for Frazzles again.

Footsteps sounded on that next porch. The vines were pushed aside. She stood there looking over at them.

"Where you looking for Frazzles, Professor Bolos?" she asked.

Every one called him "professor," although he was not a full-fledged one as yet. It seemed so natural, and so eminently fitting.

"No—or yes—that is, is he there?" he stammered miserably.

She leaned farther across the porch railing.

"He's just brought me—what you sent me," said she.

"I didn't send it," he cried in anguish.

"You didn't? Didn't you write it?"

"Yes; I'll have to admit I wrote it, but I never intended you to see it."

"Oh," she said in disappointment. "It's such a lovely poem, too."

William gripped the gateposts harder. Was she having covert fun with him?

"I—I—good heavens, what do you think of me?" he groaned.

There was a little embarrassed laugh.

"You've—you've flattered my eyes awfully," she said softly, "but—about what I think of you—suppose you come over and see."

She had Frazzles in her arms. She was burying her flushed face in his ugly wrinkled face. William Bolos forgot there was such a thing as a Greek root.

And for the first time in his life Frazzles found that one and the same moment two of his staunchest friends would pay no attention whatever to him, despite all his frolicsome cavortings about them.

HAD A SPIRIT OF KINSHIP

Chance Meeting About Decided New Yorker That All Women Really Are Sisters.

Caught downtown umbrellaless on a rainy afternoon, I waited in one of the Broadway hotels for two hours, then, deciding to risk my best bonnet in the slightly slackened shower, I started across to a Sixth avenue shop to purchase an umbrella. As I stood under the elevated getting what protection I could and waiting for a hold-up in the traffic, a young girl stepped up beside me. With her skirt slit to the knee, her hair forming "ear flops" down over her too-pink cheeks, and blue, blue eyes peering through a fringe of flaxen yellow, above which was a bow thrée times as big as the hat it adorned, she was in every detail the latest cry of her type.

One glance and she seized me by the arm to draw me beneath her umbrella.

"Come in out of the rain, girlie," she said.

Even if my mind had not been on my very extravagant hat, I should have met half way her spirit of friendliness. After thirty "girlie" has a rare and soothing sound, anyway.

Chatting as to an old comrade, she sheltered me to my shop door and, with a bright nod, passed on whence she had come—into the unknown.—New York Evening Post.

Which Leg?

In a small town in the west of Scotland the town clerk, who was a bit of a "character," had the misfortune to lose his leg in a railway accident.

As a mark of appreciation and esteem for his long service, the council unanimously agreed to replace his loss with an artificial limb, which they did as soon as he was sufficiently recovered.

A few months afterwards the town clerk, who was generally known by his Christian name, Paul, was unfortunate enough to have his other leg fractured in a trap accident.

Naturally the mishap became food for town gossip, and one old wife, in discussing the matter with a neighbor, was overheard saying:

"It's very bad business for Paul, puir man, but is't his ain leg or the leg that belangs to the toon that's broken?"

In Fashion's Jungle.

A big game hunter, just back from six months between Kilimanjaro and Victoria Nyanza, was walking on Fifth avenue, New York, with a companion. In one block he passed a furrier's shop with mounted skins of tiger and lion in the window and immediately thereafter three women, one wearing a leopard skin coat, another a wolf skin set, and still another whose furs might have been borne by an animal of mammoth shape. The hunter's arms twitched.

"I say," he remarked, "there's nowhere a chap misses his rifle more than on Fifth avenue. And," he added vengefully, "such a hunt mightn't be amiss, you know."

Might Have Liked Them.

At a reunion of the Adams family the chicken croquettes gave out, so the maids carefully neglected the young children. After vainly trying to attract the attention of his mother, one of the little boys at the lower end of the table called out in a loud tone of voice: "Mother!"

"What is it, Albert?" she replied. "Do you think," went on the child, "I should have liked the croquettes if I had one?"—Lippincott's.

WOMEN CALL ON PRESIDENT

Women from Colorado Strike District Plead for Governmental Protection—Funds Provided for Agricultural Colleges.

Western Newspaper Union News Service.

New York.—Charles Becker, for the second time, Friday was held responsible by a jury for the Rosenthal murder which nearly two years ago awoke New York to a realization of corruption in the police department and opened a new era of police reform. Becker, a former police lieutenant, was found guilty of murder in the first degree. Only a pardon or interference again by the court of appeals can save him from following to the electric chair the four gunmen who shot Herman Rosenthal, the gambler, early on the morning of July 16, 1912. The jury decided that the gunmen were Becker's agents.

Funds for Agricultural Colleges.

Lincoln, Neb.—In response to a letter from Secretary of Agriculture Houston, Governor Morehead will designate the agricultural college to receive the funds provided by the Smith-Lever co-operative agricultural extension law. On May 8, President Wilson approved the act, which provides federal funds to state agricultural colleges to aid in diffusing among the people useful and practical information on subjects relating to agriculture and home economics. Each state must duplicate the money above $10,000 per year appropriated to it by the government. The money raised by the state may come from the legislature or from any other source within the state. Each state, however, receives $10,000 annually without additional appropriations from the state.

An order issued by the railway commission last year directing the railroad companies not to accept improperly packed eggs for shipment is believed to have greatly reduced the $2,000,000 loss, which is said to take place annually in Nebraska on account of breakage and rotting of eggs. The egg crop of the state is estimated at $20,000,000 a year.

The second annual beef producers' day will be held at the state agricultural farm May 22. A large number of stockmen from over the state are expected to attend. During the forenoon guests will be on hand at the farm to explain the work and equipment of the different departments of the college of agriculture and experiment station.

The supreme court has handed down an opinion of what may prove to be of far-reaching importance to the future of the state railway commission. It declared the physical connection and "direct appeals" laws constitutional and asserted in a positive way that it would not change the orders brought up from the railway commission unless prejudicial error was found or the commission was discovered to have grossly exceeded its powers.

He obtained an order from the department of interior for a resurvey of Grant and Hooker counties.

The question of whether or not a member of the Nebraska national guard should be required to pay regular poll tax is one which has been put up to assessors several times lately. Guardsmen claim they are exempt from either petit or grand jury duty and also from payment of poll tax and refer to section 5693 of the Nebraska statutes.

The convict attendants of the night school at the state penitentiary will be presented with a three months' summer vacation corresponding to the vacation of the public schools. Warden Fenton says that in spite of the willingness of the men to study during the hot months, he feels that they will derive more benefit from out of doors recreation during the warm weather and will be prepared to start their school work with renewed vigor in the fall. Baseball will be a feature of the summer's recreation at the penitentiary.

While members of the state board of control are debating the matter of spending the $150,000 appropriated for the establishment of a reformatory in Nebraska, they have practically decided by a unanimous vote to allow the $35,000 appropriation for a twine factory to lapse. It is not believed such an activity could be attached to the state penitentiary without the outlay of considerable money, and besides the marketing problem would be one to meet under frequently adverse conditions.

The question that has been put up to the attorney general by Chairmen Epperson and Currie of the opposing republican state committees as to the basis of apportionment was recently raised by those chairmen as furnishing a serious problem, on the solution of which might readily depend whether another factor will be interposed to keep the factions from completely joining forces this fall. Since the question has been made public it has been a subject of much comment among those taking an active interest in politics.

REBELS ASK FOR RECOGNITION

CONSTITUTIONALISTS ASK FOR PLACE IN PEACE MEETING.

THE EVACUATION OF SALTILLO

Constitutionalists Have Withdrawn from Tampico—Possibility of Clash in Neighborhood of Vera Cruz.

Western Newspaper Union News Service.

Niagara Falls, Ont.—After a long conference, participated in by the South American mediators and the Mexican delegates, the former declined to say what would be their attitude toward a representative of the constitutionalists said to be en route here from Montreal. This question was the subject of a discussion which began shortly after 11 p. m. and continued until 1:15 a. m. It is not generally believed that the constitutionalist representative will be admitted at this stage in the proceedings.

EVACUATION OF SALTILLO.

Constitutionalists Have Withdrawn from Tampico.

Washington.—Despite conflicting reports regarding the resignation of General Huerta, assurance persisted in official circles that Huerta had placed himself unreservedly in the hands of his delegates at Niagara Falls and that, if necessary as a last resort, they would be found able to ultimately announce his retirement, although on conditions.

While these mediation negotiations were developing the constitutionalists' campaign was vigorously in progress. Senor Zobaran, General Carranza's Washington representative, received an official message announcing the evacuation of Saltillo. It gave no details concerning the retreating garrison, estimated at some 12,000 men, but it was believed here that the federals were reatreating on San Luis Potosi, whither the federals who evacuated Tampico and Tuxpam were understood to be making their way.

The constitutionalist force which captured Tampico had withdrawn, except for a small garrison, and is hurrying by railroad back to Monterey to participate in the general campaign against Huerta's strongholds in central Mexico. This will be accelerated by the unexpectedly early federal retirement from Saltillo without attempting to defend that place.

Rebels Near Vera Cruz.

Vera Cruz.—The possibility of a clash between federals and constitutionalists in the neighborhood of Vera Cruz is indicated by a persistent rumor that 400 constitutionalists from Tampico have landed at Nautla de Chiconiaca, at the mouth of a small stream about twenty miles north of the American outposts. Headquarters officials, however, are inclined to place little faith in the reports. If constitutionalists have landed in sufficient force to move to the interior, they would threaten Jalapa, by way of the Interoceanic railway, as the landing point is within twenty miles of the San Francisco bridge across the Santa Anna river, on the Interoceanic. This movement would place a hostile force directly in the rear of the federal outposts along the north line of Vera Cruz.

Have Power to Eliminate.

Authentic advices brought diplomatic sources several days ago stated that the Mexican commissioners were clothed with full power to act, and had been empowered to agree to the elimination of Huerta, if necessary to bring about a settlement.

Juarez, Mexico.—The news that General Huerta had authorized his delegates to the conference with the South American mediators to present his resignation should that act be necessary to secure peace was not received with marked enthusiasm by constitutionalists here.

The news was wired to General Carranza, who is on his way from Monterey to Durango and his headquarters required that the first chief would make statement outlining his attitude toward the situation as developed in Washington.

To Send Representative.

Washington.—The constitutionalists are preparing to send a representative to Niagara Falls to confer with the South American mediators who are endeavoring to settle the Mexican problem. This will be done with the distinct understanding that the representative is to give information as to the attitude of the insurgents without committing the constitutionalists to any plan for the pacification of Mexico that the mediators may determine upon.

El Paso, Tex.—The attitude of the American administration with regard to the embargo on arms has caused hardship and misery among the exiles of the border. The shortage of ammunition has been recognized by those in close touch with constitutionalist affairs to be the greatest problem the face. When the announcement came over the wires that there was no prohibition against shipping arms and ammunition into Mexico, many United States or elsewhere there was an immediate exodus eastward of constitutionalist purchasing agents.

CANADA'S PLACE AS A PRODUCER

Canada Is Getting a Great Many Americans.

"Three young provinces, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta," says a New York financial journal, "have already made Winnipeg one of the greatest primary wheat markets of the world. In 1904 they raised 58,000,000 bushels of wheat. Five years later they produced 150,000,000 bushels. In 1913 the crop approximated 300,000,000 bushels. At the present rate of progress Canada must soon pass France and India, and stand third in the line of wheat producers. Ultimately it will dispute with Russia and the United States for the first position. Wheat has been the pioneer of our development. Undoubtedly it will prove the same with Canada. In the last calendar year our trade with Canada amounted to 497 million dollars. Only with two countries—the United Kingdom and Germany—is our trade greater. No vivid imagination is needed to see what the future development of Canada means to the people of the United States."

The influx of American settlers to the Canadian prairies is now in full swing. Within the past few days over 80 of those arrived at Bassano carrying with them effects and capital to the value of $100,000. Fifty-eight from Oregon arrived in Alberta a few days ago; while 15 families of settlers from the state of Colorado arrived at Calgary on their journey northwards. The goods and personal effects of this party filled 20 box cars. Of live stock alone they had 175 horses, 75 cows and 2,000 head of poultry. Another class of settler has arrived at Peers, 110 miles west of Edmonton, where no fewer than 200 German farmers have taken up land. These are from good farming families and brought with them a large amount of capital.

Then in South Western Saskatchewan, there are large numbers settling, these from the United States predominating, while in the Peace River and central portions of all these provinces, the settlement of new people is going on steadily. Early in April, Peter Goerts arrived in Cardiff after a six-day journey from McPherson, Kansas. Mr. Goertz who had purchased land here was in charge of a party of 58 people from the same part of Kansas and they came through with a special train which included all their stock and implements. The equipment was 31 Rock Island cars, and was the first full immigrant train ever sent out by that railroad. The farms purchased by the members of the party are amongst the best in the district.

When the Panama exposition opens next year any of the three transcontinental lines in Canada will make convenient means of transport for those going to visit, and in doing so agricultural districts of Western Canada can be seen, and ocular demonstration given those who have heard but not before seen, of that which has attracted so many hundreds of thousands of American settlers.—Advertisement.

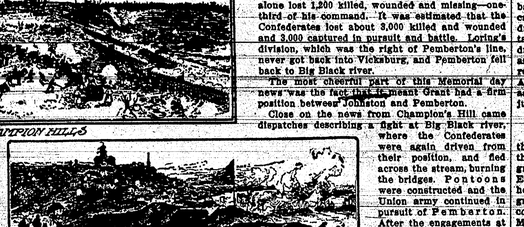
MAY 30 FIFTY YEARS AGO



THE ranks—piteously thinner ranks this year than they were last—of veterans file through the crowded streets of hundreds of American cities on Memorial day, the minds of those who fought beneath the blue or for the gray will turn to a May 30 of 51 years ago, when ashore and afloat men were doing those deeds which will be commemorated by Memorial day.

Memorial day was not dreamed of then. North and South were busy with the grim business of war. The land shook with the tramp of armed forces and the rumble of artillery, and America was the scene of some of the mightiest battles which history records.

The news which came to the North in those stirring days was not all good. Lee was threatening the second invasion of the North and the Shenandoah and Cumberland valleys were threatened with becoming seats of war and being ravaged by hostile armies. The little town of Gettysburg had not yet awakened to the fact that it was to be the center of the most colossal struggle of the war, and in Arkansas and Virginia the Union arms had not before seen, of that which has attracted so many hundreds of thousands of American settlers.—Advertisement.

Memorial day was the day of the living and the dead, the day of comrades whom no sting of death nor lapse of time can sever. It is the day when the Grand Army militant salutes the Grand Army triumphant. It is the sacramental day of nationality. It is the day we acknowledge each and all our debt to the boys of '61, who are now the patriarchs of '14. It is the day of neither North nor South, nor East nor West, but of Union and Liberty, now and forever, one and inseparable.

Left Capital Vulnerable.

One hundred years ago the residents of Washington were seriously disturbed by rumors that the British were planning an expedition for the capture of their city. Grave as was the danger, the authorities were slow to move. After considerable delay a fleet of gunboats and barges were assembled and placed under the command of the veteran Commodore Barney, who had served with distinction in the Revolution. But the land defenses were almost totally neglected. Though the government called for 15,000 troops, the actual defense force was the national capital consisted of but a few hundred militia. In consequence, when the British finally marched on the city in midsummer they encountered little opposition.

Very Old Copper Mine.

If not absolutely the oldest, the Stora Kopparberget in Sweden is the oldest copper mine of which any official figures can be found. It has been worked continuously for nearly eight hundred years.

For Memorial day is the day of a glorious heroism. For Memorial day is the day of comrades who no longer march in the ranks, but who, in an hour after sending this dispatch Steele's division was under way. The Union forces moved cautiously, with pickets thrown in advance, by several roads. Smith's division on the southernmost road was the first to encounter the enemy's pickets. They were driven in, as were the pickets confronting Osterhaus on the middle road and Hovey on the northernmost road. By the time Grant arrived Hovey's skirmish had assumed almost the proportions of a battle.

Pemberton selected a position on Champion's Hill to meet the Union forces. General Grant at once realized that the position was a strong one. The hill commanded a view of the surrounding country and was protected by a ravine and heavy shrubbery. The battle of Champion's Hill lasted about four hours, during which time every man of Hovey's division and McPherson's two divisions was engaged. General Grant drove Pemberton from his position and the city of Vicksburg was near or to its doom. Had it not been for neglect on the part of subordinates to promptly obey, General Grant felt that he could have almost completely disarmed Lieut. Gen. Pemberton's force.

Tempering this bit of hopeful news was the sad news that the battle of Champion's Hill fought through the bayous and swamps back of the city.

Dispatches printed on May 20 gave rise to considerable anxiety in Washington when more than fifty miles in his rear with an army about the size of his own, and Pemberton had the advantage of the fortifications and outworks about Vicksburg. A day or two after May 30, 1863, reports were received in the North of desperate hand to hand fighting outside of Vicksburg and general assaults on the works. Several fortifications fell, but were retaken by the Confederates.

In the end of May the marine divisions under Porter did some excellent work at Hayne's Bluffs, under Grant's direction. News of this was printed shortly after the date which is now set apart for Memorial day.

There had been much criticism of the administration in the North and the Union arms had come in for their share of popular opprobrium and the news of Grant's successes in the West was sorely needed.

It heartened the troops serving in other campaigns and it heartened those at home.

It was not long before what is now Memorial day that New York, in 1865, received news of the gallant charge of the Eighth Pennsylvania cavalry at Hazel Grove, where "Stonewall" Jackson turned the Union right. Infantry, artillery and cavalry lost heavily in this engagement in Hooker's Chancellorsville campaign.

DAY OF UNION AND LIBERTY

This Is the Time the Nation Should Remember the Debt It Owes to the Veterans.

On May 30, 1863, there was no such smiling land as we see this day. Then the booming of the guns alternated with a dead silence. Now, years later, today we see an exultant republic, running eagerly forward to meet its fuller and more glorious destiny.

And whom shall we thank for this? The venerable man who walk or ride on Memorial day beneath their sacred battle flags, and the men who sleep today beneath the blue of the sky and the green of the sight. How great their sacrifice! Some gave literally all they had—even their names. They lie in unmarked trenches, their very place of sepulture forgotten. Their names are lost, and they have gained a name the which neither man nor time can wrest from them—the name of Patriot.

Their prowess gave us peace;
Undying be their fame.

It is for us of the younger generation, whose eyes opened on a country wrapped in peace, to fill up our hearts as urns with the precious wine of gratitude and offer them, brimming over to the Grand Army of the Republic which marches in flesh and spirit on Memorial day. As there shadowy and invisible reunions at Bull Run, and Spottsylvania, and the Wilderness, and Manassas, and Malvern Hill, and Cold Harbor, and Gettysburg, and Atlanta? Well, might there be when the nation at this time rises on memory's wings to the heights of

WHEN THE WAR WAS OVER

Child Learns That Joy Sometimes Finds Deepest Expression in Tears.

It was a morning in early spring, the spring of '65. The orchard was in full bloom and on the wind was the odor of the blossoming crabapple trees in the woods pasture. I was sitting on the back doorstep eating a bowl of bread and milk and pausing between spoonfuls to note the glory of woods, pasture and blue sky. I was but four years old and the beauty of the world was just dawning on me, when to my ears came sudden, far-off, dull booms like sudden echoes of thunder. The sky was without a cloud. Again I heard the dull boom. Ah! I had it!

"Mother," I called, "someone's pounding on the side of Uncle Dave's barn!"

She came to the door and listened. Again came the dull, thunderous sound. For a moment she listened and then burst out sobbing.

"What's the matter, mother? Does it scare you I'm not afraid!"

She stooped over and gathered me to her breast. "The war is over. The war is over," was all she could say; but she said it over and over. "The war is over and your father is coming home."

Why, I'd think you'd laugh instead of cry! I'd think you'd be glad instead of sorry." Child that I was, I knew not that joy sometimes finds deepest expression in tears.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By O. E. SELLERS, Director of Evening Department The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

LESSON FOR MAY 31

THE GRATEFUL SAMARITAN.

LESSON TEXT—Luke 17:11-19.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Were there none found that returned to give glory to God save this stranger?" Luke 17:18.

Jesus and his party are on their last journey to Jerusalem, a most eventful journey. It led him between Samaria and Galilee (v. 11, marg.) and into, or through, an unknown, unnamed village. To us—this is the most heroic and momentous moment in his story. Jesus knew that his hour was at hand. He knew all that awaited him in Jerusalem, yet he "set his face as a flint" and nothing could turn him from his purpose, his crowning work. Jesus, however, was never too busy or in too great haste to do a deed of compassionate mercy.

The Type of Sin.

I. A Great Need, vv. 11-14.—We are familiar with the awfulness of leprosy and that it is a type of sin. Like sin, leprosy begins within, is insidious in its progress; it defiles, shuts men out of the society of the clean. It renders its victims helpless and hopeless, has no remedy and receives no help from men. In consumes and finally kills. This was a terrible spectacle that greeted Jesus' eyes as he entered the village, for these lepers were compelled to live in the outside. Notice (v. 12) that they stood "afar off" (Eph. 2:13), indeed, so far off that they were compelled to "lift their voices" in order to make known their request, although it may have been that the disease had reached their vocal organs. The Mosaic law compelled the leper thus to stand afar off (Lev. 13:45, 46). Their salutation was the cry of the needy made to one in authority. The word "Master" here used is not that which usually means teacher, but rather one that would be applied to one in authority, an appointee or a commander. They must have either recognized his power or, having heard of his miracles they appealed to him to exercise a like power on their behalf. There was no other who could possibly give them relief, even so the sinners only hope is to meet Jesus. He, and he alone, can cleanse them from their uncleanness and wretchedness. Jesus never passed that way again, this was their only opportunity. Their need drove them to him. Ofttimes our distress and need are blessings in disguise in that they drive us to Jesus. Though afar off, and though only one drew nigh (v. 16), yet it was the privilege of them all, as it is also our privilege to "draw nigh." Heb. 9:19. Their cry did not fall upon deaf ears (Isa. 59:1). It was a brief, but to the point, petition. They knew what they needed and drove straight to the point. Their appeal to his mercy met with immediate response, so also will the cry of the needy sinner meet with a like response (Rom. 10:13). The record does not tell us about the faith of these men and it is useless for us to speculate. The cry of faith will have its answer, Matt. 9:29. Their prayer was brief, it must have been humble, believing, earnest and specific, for when "he saw them" (v. 14) he gave directions as to the manner whereby they might be cleansed. He could have spoken or have touched them, but his way at that time was to utter a command. This resulted in (a) a fulfilling of the law, (b) a test for their faith, (c) a testimony to the priests. They showed their genuine earnestness by immediate obedience, they took him at his word. The record is wonderfully suggestive, "as they went they were cleansed." Faith and works, obedience and results. When we act upon his simple yet sublime word we, too, will receive a blessed answer to our every need. As we look to him, our great high priest, as we take our eyes off of self, we shall be cleansed, John 14:21,23.

Bore Witness Before Men.

II. A Grateful Heart, vv. 15-19.—The revelation of cleansing brought different results to these lepers. "One of them" came back at once to express his gratitude. Before he could scarcely speak his petition, now he cries with a "loud voice." This is a suggestion as to the completeness of his cure. He at once uses his restored voice to "glorify God," and it looks as though he bore this witness before he testified to men: (a) being healed seems also to have opened his eyes as to the character of Jesus. He not only returned thanks, but "worshiped him." Nor does Jesus refuse to accept such worship—an evidence of his deity, see Acts 15:25,26; John 5:23 and Heb. 1:6.

The nine were too occupied in rejoicing with their friends, too busy with fulfilling duties from which they had long been separated, to express their thanks. It is significant that this one was a Samaritan—"a stranger." This is the one whom less would be expected, yet Luke records other good things about the Samaritan, ch. 10:33-35. (Luke, as the companion of Paul, shows us not only in his gospel, but in his life of Paul Christ's outreachings towards the Gentiles.) The Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans (John 4:9), but sin makes strange companions.

ALL DREAD HARMLESS MOUSE

Instinctive Fear of Women is Well Known, but Is Not at All Easy to Explain.

Once more there is excuse for asking how much of sincerity there is in the fear of mice to which so many women give such vehement expression. A night telephone operator over in Jersey saw one of the little creatures steal out on the floor of the room in which she was keeping her lonely vigil, and, though his attack was not on her, but on the crumbs of her luncheon, she promptly fainted. On recovery she rushed into the closet, where she was imprisoned till morning by the spring catch on the hastily slammed door.

Yet this young woman, like all others, knows that mice are perfectly harmless; that they never did hurt anybody and never will.

The wicked suggestion has been made that feminine outcries on the appearance of mice are a mere fashion-or habit, nevermore now, but originating in nothing better than a desire to show an interesting sensitiveness and timidity and to give rescuing man a chance to show his superiority. There must be something more to it than that, however, for not a few women, even when quite alone, as this one was, manifest almost convincing indications of this, perhaps not the less real because so unnecessary.

Apparently the fear is instinctive, but nothing in ancestral history explains the instinct, since in the line of mothers running back through the troglodytes to merely anthropoid forbears, never a one was dismayed at a mouse and not more than half a dozen in all can have been bitten by one. And instincts are not so easily made.

FROM DOCTRINE OF GALEN

Use of Term "Man of Spirit," Etc., May Be Traced Back to the Second Century.

"Few persons even stop to consider when they speak of 'a man of spirit' that they are unwittingly employing the language of the days of Galen," says the Journal of the American Medical association. "Yet this is evidently the survival of the old doctrine of spirits. We may believe that Galen had a conception of the nerve trunks as conductors of something—he called it spirits—to and from the brain and spinal cord.

"The natural spirits were that undefined property which gave to blood the capacity of nourishing the tissues of the body. The vital spirits were acquired in the heart, and when at last the blood with its vital spirits went to the brain and experienced a sort of refinement for the last time, the animal spirits were separated from it and carried to the body by the nerve trunks."

Such was the idea of the vital functions in the second century. Today, after 1,800 years, we know that there are no "spirits" in our blood or nerves, but we still speak of being in "high spirits" or "low spirits," of being full of "animal spirits," of a "spirited answer" or a "spirited horse."

While the Fire Burns.

On a cold night how comfortable it is to sit in reverie before the leaping, fantastic flames of a wood fire! One enters the chilly solitude of a room and by the tiny magic wand of a burning match—presto, change! one calls into existence the cheerful society of a troop of genial spirits! They dance upon the wall like fairies in the moonlight on a midsummer eve; they are here, there and everywhere; we are alone no longer.

In the warmth and light of a wood fire—cozy, snug and sheltered—let us not forget those who are outside in the whirling storm or pinched and blue in their narrow beds for lack of fuel.

We can enjoy the comforts that we have only when we have done our utmost to the end that others may enjoy them, too. "The best things any mortal hath are those that every mortal shares."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Moles a Real Pest.

Hitherto moles have been tolerated in our gardens in spite of the ravages that they make on the lawns and in the flower beds, because of the belief that they fed upon the insects that destroy the plants. M. Xavier Raspail, the French naturalist, is to be credited, we shall have to give up this idea, for he says that moles eat nothing but earth worms and an occasional grub of a harmless beetle.

Every one knows how valuable the worms are, for the holes they make permit the air to permeate the soil. Therefore the mole may be regarded as an enemy and not a friend of the gardener.

No Problem at All.

Holding up a globe before a bright little boy in school, the teacher asked what country is opposite to us on the globe. "I don't know, ma'am," was the reply. "Well, now," pursued the teacher, "if I were to bore a hole through the earth and you were to go in at this end, where would you come out?" "Out of the hole," replied the pupil, with an air of triumph.

Couldn't.

"Has it ever struck you there is one way in which girls' colleges have never attempted to rival the men's?"

"What way is that?"

"They never attempt to apply the silent treatment."

TALK ABOUT THE WEATHER

Declared in These Days to Be the Only Safe Topic of Conversation.

Perhaps the chief reason why the weather is a suitable topic for conventional conversation is its usefulness. Nothing can be done with the weather except talk about it, so the talk is not liable to interruption by a call to action. Hard times are a topic of general interest, common alike to millionaire and workingman. But if you say to a perfect stranger the times are hard he may take advantage of that admission by asking for a subscription for some charity or by demanding that you vote the socialist ticket.

The weather is, in fact, almost the only safe topic left for pure conversation in this energetic and practical age, says the New York Independent. However much you may deplore the blindness of the weather, nobody is likely to hold you responsible for it or call upon you to remedy it. If you run across a crank who is raising a fund to bombard the heavens for the production of rain or the dissipation of ballstorms.

Leading off with the weather inspires confidence because it is a traditional and established opening. If a man on being introduced to a young woman is asked by her if he is married, or on meeting a stranger in a dark and deserted road is asked what time it is, his suspicions are aroused at once. In fact, any conversational opening except the conventional one is liable to raise the inquiry, "What does he mean by it?"

If, however, one begins with the weather we know that he means nothing by it, and we may continue the conversation with ease of mind. Being then both useless and useful, the weather is unequaled as a topic of conversation in its formal and preliminary stages.

CHURCH BUILT FROM A TREE

Single Giant Redwood of California Furnished Enough Material for the Whole Structure.

In Santa Rosa, Cal., is a Baptist church building, the product of a single giant redwood tree which grew in the neighborhood of Guerneville, a few miles distant from where it now stands. Not only is the main structure built from the one tree, but the interior finishings—except the floor, which is of pine—are of the same wood, beams, pulpit and pastings, not a particle of plaster or other similar material being used in this remarkable building.

The tree, when sawed yielded 78,000 feet of lumber, and after the building was finished in every particular, enough material was left to manufacture several thousand shingles, besides a quantity of scantlings, joists and other dimension stuff. So carefully were the details planned and so skilfully was the framework put together, that the builders of this one-tree church declared it might be as enduring as the old Saxon churches of England built centuries ago out of native timber and still in use. It is gothic in style, finished with massive buttresses outside and heavy beams inside. A tower 70 feet high was built on the southwest corner, but it came down at the time of the great earthquake in 1906.

Young Sandy's Shrewdness.

There is a lad in a certain Scottish town who is noted for his shrewdness. The other day he was sent by his father to a neighboring public house with the following order:

"Please send to our house ten dozen ale."

Now, it so happens that one of the publican's faults is a propensity to poke his nose into other people's business, and so when he had read the order he could not help ejaculating:

"Guid, gracious, laddie, and whatever is yer father gaun tae dae wi' sae muckle ale?"

For a moment Johnnie was puzzled, knowing that his father wouldn't like him to exactly tell the truth. Then an idea occurred to him and he quietly replied:

"I'm no verra sure, but I think he's gaun tae mak a cork frame and he'll need the corks."—New York Tribune.

Worth Knowing.

Roentgen rays are produced under suitable conditions by electric discharge in vacuum tubes. They pass through wood, flesh, paper and other optically opaque substances, but are absorbed by such substances as metal, bone and glass, for which reason when the shadow of an animal body is interposed it will cast upon a screen a shadow in which the dark, bony central structure can be clearly distinguished. These shadow pictures also show the presence of foreign metallic substances such as bullets, needles, etc., in the body, and are of immense service in surgery.

Wifely Praise Qualified.

The husband was listening with blushing pleasure to his wife's praises of his handiness. He looked a little deprecatingly at the other passengers, though to say, "I didn't seek this fame!" Then, unfortunately, says the Manchester Guardian, his good wife perpetrated one of those errors sometimes classified as "things which might have been expressed differently." "Then, when sawed yielded 78,000 feet of lumber, and after the building was finished in every particular, enough material was left to manufacture several thousand shingles, besides a quantity of scantlings, joists and other dimension stuff. So carefully were the details planned and so skilfully was the framework put together, that the builders of this one-tree church declared it might be as enduring as the old Saxon churches of England built centuries ago out of native timber and still in use. Take Plenty of Time to Eat.

There is a saying that "rapid eating is slow suicide." If you have formed the habit of eating too rapidly you are most likely suffering from indigestion or constipation, which will result eventually in serious illness unless corrected. Digestion begins in the mouth. Foo should be thoroughly masticated and insalivated. Then when you have a fullness in the stomach or feel dull and stupid after eating take one of Chamberlain's Tablets. Many severe cases of stomach trouble and constipation have been cured by the use of these tablets. They are easy to take and most agreeable in effect.

TABLE ROCK HIGH SCHOOL 1887 TO 1914

We have herewith printed a picture of the Table Rock High School and its predecessor. The building in the foreground is the present Table Rock High School Building, which was built in 1900 and dedicated in 1901. The building shown in the background is the old Table Rock School Building which was replaced by the former. The old building was torn down in 1901 and many of the younger children who attend school now never saw the old school house.

At the Alumni Banquet last Saturday night there were graduates of the year 1891 to the class of 1914. A general assembling of the High School Graduates is held in the form of this Alumni Banquet and it is of interest to know where some of the graduates have advanced to since they got their pretty diplomas.

The Alumni Association was organized in the year 1909.

Below we give an account of the class play, the commencement exercises and the Alumni Banquet held at the close of the 1913-14 school year.

CLASS PLAY WAS FINE

On Wednesday evening, May 27th, we had the pleasure of seeing the class play, "Home Ties" in the opera house. The opera house was filled to the utmost seating capacity and all of the reserved seats were gone early in the day. The gallery was full as well as all the lower seats outside the reserves

The evening was cool and it was very comfortable in the house. Last year when the class play was given it was hot and almost inbearable The rainy morning did not prophecy a large attendance, but there certainly should be no complaint. The players played to a "full house."

The cast was well trained and acted their parts to perfection. Although the play was one that would be termed difficult for amateurs, we think the class did wonderfully well. The part played by Inez Linn was one which deserves special mention. Inez played "Lindy Jane" to the "T" and Miss Donnie Thompson had the part of "Kate," who said with an emphatic nod, "e made a greenhouse all 'isself, an' to look at it you'd think a real man 'ad made it."

To Tell Time at Night.

Awaking in the night and wondering what time it may be, who has not longed to see the clock without getting up and striking a light? To make this longing easy to satisfy, a firm in Paris has just put on the market a clock that by pressing a button is made to project a picture of its face in a ray of light upon the ceiling. This clock, which looks like a young cannon, stands upon a box containing three dry batteries. Its mechanism is in a metal tube, at one end of which is an ordinary dial. The push-button can be placed under the pillow or upon a table beside the bed. When one wants to see the time in the night one presses the button; this lights the lamp, which projects upon the ceiling or upon the wall a greatly magnified picture of its face, so that one can lie comfortably in bed and read the time at a glance. Another push of the button extinguishes the lamp.

The program was excellent and every speaker deserves great credit. The Class History, Class Prophecy and the Class Will were better composed by the T. R. H. S. class of 1914 than any other graduating class we have known of. These burlesques were delivered in the most creditable manner and were full of sparkling good humor.

The Class of 1914 consisted of the following twelve graduates:

Mary Ault,
Lloyd Andrew,
Mabel Foale,
Elsie Kovanda,
Velma Kent,
Carl Kent,
Inez Linn,
Lowrain McCrea,
Alta Parker,
Donnie Thompson,
Myra Talbot,
Hel Wimberly.

The opera house was packed full from the "bald headed" row to the last foot of standing room in gallery and the stage was beautifully decorated with the class colors and flowers and ferns.

Of the Class of 1914 many are intending to go college somewhere and we hope that they will have the success on entering college that they have had in the Table Rock High School.

Table Rock can be justly proud of the Class of 1914, for they are a class of good, moral boys and girls and we shall be glad to see them attain the highest possition of their ambition.

For State Representative

W. T. Parkinson whose announcement as a candidate for state representative from Pawnee county appears in this issue of the Argus is a man every voter can support with perfect confidence in his honor and integrity. Mr. Parkinson came to Nebraska thirty-three years ago and for some time was engaged in farming and stock raising in the western part of the state. Since coming to Pawnee county fourteen years ago, he has been a dealer in horses, and is one of the prominent horsemen of the state. He is a clean capable gentleman, well educated and will make Pawnee county an excellent representative.

Chas. Jones was a Pawnee City visitor last Tuesday.

A Word Of Appreciation

The members of the G. A. R. and W. R. C. wish to thank the members of the Brotherhood of the Methodist church for the patriotic service held in their honor last Sunday evening. The papers read by the different members were excellent and the music rendered was exceptionally fine.

John Lehman and family spent Saturday here visiting relatives.

Mrs. Asa Dean and little son of Humboldt came up Friday for a visit with her parents Del Mort and wife.

Jake Lehman and family and Roy Lehman and family of Pawnee City were visitors at the Chas. Mitchell home last Saturday.

A Prize Head Of Cabbage

Some wit once remarked that if there was a race among vegetables, cabbage would come out a "head." While this may have been intended for a joke, there is an instance in which a head of cabbage figures that is not a joke. It is a sample of what can be raised in Southwest Texas in the cabbage line, which is on exhibition at the Real Estate Exchange. It is a head of cabbage that weighs 17 pounds, a prize winner in a cabbage raising contest that took place at Robstown. The cabbage was grown by G. D. Sutton of River Side Ranch and as a result, he is wearing a $25 suit of clothes offered by W. P. Holmes for the largest cabbage grown in or around Robstown. So that the cabbage might be seen by the largest number of people as evidence of the truck growing possibilities of south west Texas, H. C. Drawe, secretary of the Robstown Commercial Club, sent the cabbage to the Real Estate Exchange in Nor was this the largest cabbage grown by Mr. Sutton, for he has grown another weighing 18 pounds which he has sent to Chicago to be placed on exhibition there. Unlike other cabbage heads, which as a rule are hollow and lack solidity, these are perfectly sound to the core.

Health a Factor in Success

The largest factor contributing to a man's success is undoubtedly health. It has been observed that a man is seldom sick when his bowel are regular—he is never well when they are constipated. For constipation you will find nothing quite so good as Chamberlain's Tablets. They not only move the bowels but improve the appetite and strengthen the digestion. They are sold by all druggists.

Mrs. Jeff Jobe of Atchinson, Kans., is here visiting friends and relatives.

Misses Rena and Minnie Kerns and brother Roy of Adams were visitors here from Friday till Monday.

Dont neglect the children's photos Bring them in Wednesday if they are well

Wilzon's Studio

F. M. Schmalle arrived here Monday morning from his home in Wyo. He will manage the ball team this year.

Dr. Roy Martin returned to his home Sunday at Los Vegas, Nevada, after a visit with his mother and other relatives and friends. Mrs. Martin and children will stay for a few months visit.

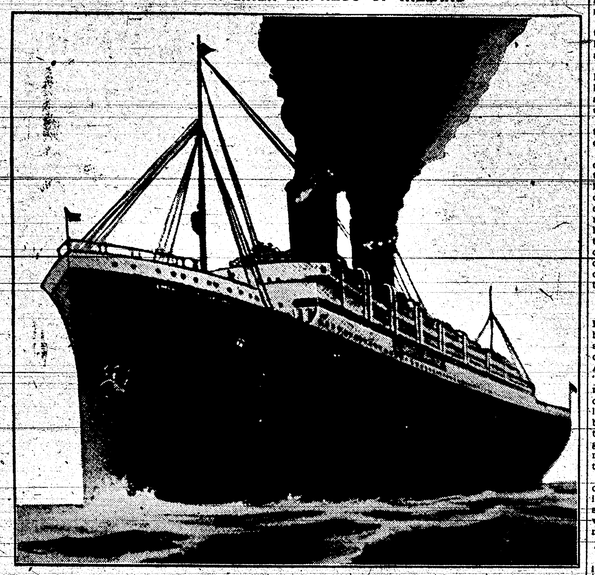
LOST OCEAN LINER EMPRESS OF IRELAND



964 PERISH IN SEA DISASTER

Great Liner Goes to Bottom at Mouth of St. Lawrence River Following a Collision With a Collier.

Rimouski, Que., May 31.—Nine hundred and sixty-four persons lost their lives Friday morning when the great Canadian Pacific twin screw liner Empress of Ireland was rammed amidships in a thick fog off Father Point in the St. Lawrence and sunk by the Norwegian collier Storstad.

Four hundred and three survivors were picked up from floating wreckage and two lifeboats.

And only 13 of the saved are women. Those picked up from survivors' boats were plucked from the water one by one.

The wireless operators on the Empress, sticking to their posts to the last, had time only to send a few "S. O. S." calls for help when the rising waters silenced their instruments. That silence told the rescuers miles away more potently than a bugle that doom had overtaken the ship.

Only six hours before this fateful collision the passengers sang as a good-night hymn "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," played by the Salvation Army band on the boat deck.

The members of that band and most of the 165 Salvationists were among the lost.

Survivors Tell of Fog.

It was foggy, according to survivors, when the Empress of Ireland, a steel-hulled, steel-bulkheaded ship of more than eight thousand tons, left Montreal at 4:30 Thursday afternoon in command of H. G. Kendall of the Royal Naval Reserve, one of the most skilled of transatlantic navigators.

Forest fires also obscured the atmosphere and the big ship, in charge of a pilot, proceeded slowly on her way to sea. At midnight the pilot aide left near Father Point, shouting a merry "Bon Voyage" as he went down their ladder to his waiting boat.

The darkness at this time was intense and the ship under half-slow speed possible with steerageway held her course. Her decks were deserted. The passengers had all sought their berths with no thought of impending death.

Out of the darkness, on the port side, soon after 2:30 in the morning there loomed the little Norwegian collier, not half the size of the Empress, but fated to be her destroyer.

Not until the collier was almost abeam of the big liner was the danger known on either ship. The fog had blotted out the lights as well as the port and starboard lights of both ships.

Quick orders trumpeted on both vessels were heard. But they came all too late.

Strikes Shin Amidship.

The steel-bow of the Storstad struck the [illegible] amidships and then forged aft, ri[illegible] and tearing its way through the [illegible] of Ireland.

Clear to the starboard side the Empress of Ireland was cut [illegible] shaving [illegible] from her side, from the top of the bull far below the water line. Into that rent the water poured with the force of a Niagara.

The bow of the Storstad smashed its way through that side of the ship, killing passengers as they slept in their berths and grinding bodies to pieces.

Reaching the stern of the big liner, the Storstad staggered with the darkness, her bow crumpled by the impact. Her commander was ready a few minutes later, when he found his ship would float, to aid the stricken and sinking Empress, but he was too late to save the majority of those on board.

Carried to Bottom.

The Empress of Ireland recoiled almost on her starboard beam ends from the blow of the collier and passengers were flung from their berths against the walls of their staterooms.

Many were stunned and before they had time to recover were carried to the bottom with the ship.

The vast torrents pouring into the great gash on the port side, all filled the corridors and flooded every stateroom abaft the midship section inside of four minutes.

There was small chance for the helpless ones in the after cabins and staterooms of the liner. With her port side laid open for half its length from the midship section to the stern, a swirl had come over the doomed liner that the Empress of Ireland, and the trapped passengers in that after section were doomed from the moment the Storstad struck.

Reeling from the blow the ship began to settle almost immediately as the water rushed into the big rent.

From the forward cabins, however, men and women in the act of arising or already dressed, sought the companion way to the promenade deck and the deck below, the one on which the boats rested.

Swarm to Deck.

Up they swarmed on deck in their night clothing to find the ship heeling away to port and the deck slanting at a degree that made it almost impossible to stand even clinging to railings.

Men and women, shrieking, praying, crying for aid that came too late to arrive too late, fell over one another in that last struggle for life on board the doomed Empress of Ireland.

Frenzied mothers leaped overboard with their babies in their arms. Others knelt on deck and tried to pray in the few moments left to them. Some were flung overboard by the heeling of the sinking ship and some broke their legs or arms in trying to reach the lifeboats.

Above the din of the struggle on the great promenade deck could be heard Captain Kendall shouting commands for the launching of the lifeboats. Several were launched in the 19 minutes that the ship floated.

There was no time to observe the rule "Women first" in this disaster, for those nearest the boats scrambled to places in them.

But even as they were being launched, while the wireless still was calling "S. O. S." there came a terrific explosion that almost rent the ship in twain.

It was the explosion of the boilers struck by the cold water. A geyser of water shot upward from the midship section, mingled with fragments of wreckage, that showered down upon the passengers still clinging to the rails forward and upon those struggling in the water.

The explosion destroyed the last hope of the ship's floating until succor could arrive, for the shock had smashed the forward steel bulkhead walls that had up to then shut out the torrents invading the after part. The water rushed forward and the Empress of Ireland went swiftly to her doom, carrying down with her hundreds of passengers who stood on her slanting decks, their arms stretched upward to their last cries choked in the engulfing waters.

One of the survivors, relating the last tragic scene on the decks of the liner, said:

"I was asleep like most of the passengers when the collision came. There was a sickening crunching of wood and steel and then a grinding, ripping sound as the Storstad smashed her way along the port side of our ship.

"I knew that we had been struck and I rushed to the staterooms of some friends and shouted to them to get up, as the ship was sinking. Stateroom doors flew open all along the corridor and men and women began to rush for the grand companion forward. Those aft must have been drowned in their berths.

Darkness Is Intense.

"On deck officers of the ship, partially dressed, were rushing about urging passengers to be calm. Sailors under orders were trying to launch the lifeboats.

"The darkness was intense and a few minutes after I reached the deck the electric lights went out. At that time there were still hundreds of passengers below trying to grope their way through the darkened corridors to the companionway and reach the deck. Most of them went down with the ship, for the corridors below filled right after the explosion of the boilers.

"I leaped overboard in despair just before the ship went down and managed to find a bit of wreckage to which I clung."

Intense darkness covered the waters when the Empress of Ireland made that final plunge, but the fog lifted a few minutes later and then came the first faint streaks of dawn.

The lighted waters strewed with wreckage and struggling passengers, who strove to keep afloat.

The crippled Storstad, which had wrought this tragedy of the waters, had lifeboats out picking up as many survivors as possible.

The gray dawn revealed the government steamers Lady Evelyn and Eureka near the scene of the disaster and hastening to aid.

Some of those in the water tried to swim to the Eureka as she neared the point where the Empress had gone down. One woman, wearing only an undervest, swam to the Lady Evelyn, and was helped on board, but died of exhaustion soon afterwards.

The work of rescue still was going on when the sun arose in a cloudless sky.

Men and women were clinging to spars and bits of broken planks. Many of the survivors were injured. Some had broken legs, others fractured arms and still others had been injured internally in that last mad rush to get away from the sinking liner.

Women clinging with one hand to little ones, while with the other they tried to keep clutch on pieces of wreckage, were picked up by the lifeboats and carried on board the rescuing vessels.

Captain Kendall, dazed and unable to give any coherent account of the loss of his ship, was found clinging to a broken spar.

J. W. Longley, rancher, of Canford, B. C., went down with the ship, but held his breath, and, coming to the surface, found a piece of wreckage and clung to it until picked up.

One of the survivors, in explaining the quickness with which the Empress of Ireland went down, said:

"The collier, being only something over 3,000 tons, did not reach up even to the upper or topmost deck of our liner. Her bow cut under the upper deck and took a peeling off the side of our ship that allowed the water to rush into the lower decks. Then the liner heeled over and even those in the superstructure deck rooms had no chance to save themselves. Hundreds of them must have been dumped out of their berths and slammed against the walls with stunning force."

Scenes on Shore.

Father Point, Que., May 29.—"The Empress of Ireland passed and landed her pilot here at 1:30 this morning," said an official of the Canadian Pacific. "There was a haze at the time At 1:50 a. m., I was awakened by an "S. O. S." ring on my door bell and rushing down, was informed by a Marconi operator that the Empress of Ireland was sinking, having been struck by some vessel, and was calling for help. No other signal could be got from the doomed vessel. She had no time to give another, as she sank ten minutes after being struck.

"Mr. Whiteside, manager of the Marconi station, rendered effective service by notifying the government steamer Eureka, at Father Point wharf, and the Lady Evelyn at Rimouski wharf.

Help Rushed to the Scene.

"Capt. J. B. Belanger of the Eureka immediately rushed to the scene and Captain Pouliot, with the Lady Evelyn, followed later, the ship being three miles farther away.

"Meanwhile daylight broke and scanning the horizon with a telescope I saw the two government steamers, nine lifeboats and a collier in the vicinity, going here and there. Later the Eureka arrived at Father Point wharf with 32 survivors and several poor drowned bodies, also several of the survivors who had been wounded.

Agent in Narrow Escape.

"The scene on the Eureka was most distressing, the survivors walking around their dear shipmates, stretched out in their last sleep. The Eureka was sent to Remouski wharf with all on board, and the Canadian Pacific agent, Mr. Webber, who was here, having just got off the ill-fated vessel with the pilot, engaged all the cabs he could find and telephoned for all possible medical assistance. As the company's agent here, I advised all the survivors that their cables and telegrams to their families would be paid by the Canadian Pacific railroad."

"The Lady Evelyn passed into Remouski wharf about 4 a. m. with some more survivors and bodies. Among the survivors was Captain Kendall, commander of the ill-fated ship. He was picked up by a lifeboat from the wreckage after the ship had gone down.

Survivors Almost Naked.

"Most of the survivors were almost naked in the cold morning, with the temperature at 35 degrees and white frost on the ground.

"At 6:10 the Norwegian collier Storstad, coal laden, from Sydney, N. S., for Montreal, came along slowly. When her bow had been smashed in it became known that she was the vessel that had struck the Empress of Ireland the fatal blow. The Storstad was too much damaged to allow her to proceed to Quebec under her own steam, but before proceeding she transferred a few survivors and some dead bodies, which were taken off by the steamer Eureka and Lady Evelyn and landed on the Remouski wharf."

Sing "God Be With You." On Ship.

Montreal, Que., May 30.—When the Empress of Ireland sailed away from here Thursday she carried 165 members of the Salvation army from the United States and Canada, bound for the world convention in London. To the accompaniment of the army band, they were singing, "God Be With You Till We Meet Again."

This prelude to the accident in the St. Lawrence made the disaster a sad parallel to the sinking of the Titanic, whose passengers sang, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," as the White Star liner went down.

Irving, Actor and Author.

New York, May 31.—Laurence S. Irving, drowned on the Canadian Empress of Ireland, is an actor, author and manager. He received his education at Marlborough college, College Rollin, Paris, and spent three years in Russia studying for foreign office. His plays are widely known. In 1908 and 1909 he presented sketches of his own authorship in England and America. On May 3, 1910, Mr. Irving addressed the Equal Suffrage league at New York.

Scenes at Liverpool.

Liverpool, May 30.—Pathetic scenes were enacted at the office of the Canadian Pacific railway in this city Friday. Crowds of weeping men and women begged for news of the officers and crew of the Empress of Ireland, the majority of whom were gathered here. When confirmation of the disaster was received several of the women fainted. Friday's scenes were a duplicate of those witnessed at the time the Titanic went to the bottom.

Calls for Inquiry.

London, May 30.—The London morning papers in commenting editorially on the disaster call for a thorough inquiry into it as to whether the bulkheads were closed, whether the ship met it that the most modern system of watertight compartments failed to keep the ship from sinking?

The claim for the Empress of Ireland will be the heaviest suffered by the Lloyds underwriters since the sinking of the Titanic. It is expected that the disaster will give a serious check to the scheme for establishing a Canadian Lloyds, with a view of reducing the rates charged in London for insuring vessels navigating the St. Lawrence.

Statistics show that the underwriters have consistently lost money on such voyages, owing to the dangers of the river and the prevalence of fogs and ice.

The Times, in an editorial, considers that nothing could have saved the Empress of Ireland, considering the nature of the collision, but asks: "What was the Storstad doing to run into the Empress of Ireland with such suddenness and violence?"

Glad to See Them Go!
Patience—I see a London railroad station has been equipped with penny-in-the-slot machines for the sale of tickets to persons who wish to accompany friends to the train platforms.
Patrice—That's too cheap. I know it's give more than a penny to see some of my friends leave the town.

HAYNES "FOUR" 48 H. P.

Why the Haynes develops more than its rated horsepower

HAYNES "SIX" 65 H. P.

The Haynes motor is built in the Haynes factory. Elwood Haynes, President of the Company—inventor, metallurgist—passes on all metals used in its construction.

The crankshaft, camshaft, cylinders, and, in fact, all vital parts are made by Haynes experts; each part is subjected to the most rigid test and inspection before being built into the car.

All moving parts on the

HAYNES
America's First Car

including the pistons, connecting rods, crankshafts and flywheel, are accurately balanced.

The sclerascope is used to test all parts that have been heat-treated, to insure the proper degree of hardness and to detect defective material.

Every magneto, every carburetor, every starting motor and lighting generator—every unit of the car—receives a careful, scrupulous test.

The transmission shafts are mounted on Timken bearings, which give a sturdy construction and reduce friction to the minimum. The axles likewise are designed to overcome friction without sacrificing strength.

The design is so well balanced that the car weighs practically the same at each wheel.

That's why the Haynes develops more than its rated horsepower.

That's why it has unusual hill-climbing ability.

That's why the Haynes has enjoyed uninterrupted success for twenty-one years.

The Haynes "Four," 48 6-cylinder horsepower, 116 inch wheelbase...$1785 and $1905
The Haynes "Six," 65 6-cylinder horsepower, 130 inch wheelbase...$2500 and $2700
The Haynes "Six," 65 6-cylinder horsepower, 136 inch wheelbase...$2585 and $2785

NEBRASKANS ABOARD DOOMED STEAMER

WENT DOWN IN EMPRESS OF IRELAND DISASTER.

WERE TO SAIL ON EMPRESS

Party of Nebraska Tourists Booked to Sail from Quebec June 26—Leys Blame on Collier Captain.

Western Newspaper Union News Service.

Omaha.—Two Omaha men and one from O'Neill, Neb., were passengers on the Empress of Ireland. John Henrickson, local agent of the Canadian Pacific Steamship Co., reports having booked the following for passage on the doomed liner:

Nels Larson, formerly employed at the Alfred Bloom Sash & Fixture Co., roomed near Nineteenth and Cass streets.

Carl Samuelson, Omaha, occupation unknown. Roomed with Larson, it is supposed.

B. A. Viquist, laborer, O'Neill, Neb.

The name of C. Samuelson appears among the list of steerage passengers rescued. The other names do not appear, and both men are supposed to have perished.

Those three men bought third cabin passages on the Empress of Ireland, and told Mr. Henrickson that they were going to Gutenberg, Sweden, to visit their old homes. It is not known whether they have families here, as Mr. Henrickson keeps no detailed record of third cabin passengers.

The lists thus far published by the Canadian Pacific Co. do not include the third class passengers.

Places Blame on Collier Captain.

Rimouski, Que.—Responsibility for the deaths of nearly 1,000 persons, who perished when the collier Storstad rammed and sank the great Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Ireland, was placed here squarely on Captain Thomas Anderson, of the collier, by Captain H. G. Kendall, of the lost vessel. Captain Kendall, testifying before a coroner's jury, detailed at length the story of the disaster. Failure of the Storstad's captain, he said, to observe whistled signals caused the collision. Neglect to hold the nose of the Storstad in the hole in the Empress' side killed the last hope of rescue.

J. T. LEES KNEW SHIP WELL.

Was Booked to Sail on Empress of Ireland June 26.

Lincoln.—Dr. J. T. Lees of the state university, who annually heads parties of tourists in Europe, was booked for passage on the Empress of Ireland, which was sunk in the St. Lawrence. The Lees party was to leave Quebec on June 26.

Dr. Lees does not now know how his party will sail. The arrangement will be left to the steamship company which has contracted to carry them. Dr. Lees, the interest the conductor of the party can take in it is to know that the arrangements made are satisfactory. Dr. Lees says the company operates other boats, but these two, the Empress of Ireland and the Empress of Britain, are the only ones on which he would care to take his party.

Master of Collier Denies Story.

Montreal.—The other side of the story of the collision in the St. Lawrence river last Friday morning between the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Ireland and the Norwegian collier Storstad, which resulted in the sinking of the liner with the loss of more than nine hundred lives, has been told here, and the master of the collier denies the charge that he was responsible for the disaster and says he did all in his power to aid.

Red Cross Will Aid.

Washington.—While aid has not been asked by Canadian and British organizations in behalf of survivors of the steamer Empress of Ireland and those dependent upon victims of the disaster, the American national Red Cross today has announced it would forward to the proper authorities any contributions sent to it for that purpose by Americans.

Bringing Back the Bodies.

Quebec.—The Canadian government steamer Lady Grey brought from Rimouski Sunday 188 bodies recovered from the wreck of the Empress of Ireland. The historic heights overlooking the St. Lawrence were black with spectators as the funeral ship moved slowly up the river. The coffins were carried ashore and the mournful work of identification began without delay. The Lady Grey was escorted by his majesty's ship Essex, and fifty sailors from the warship with bared heads.

Big Fire Loss at Nebraska City.

Nebraska City, Neb.—Fire, starting from an unknown cause, destroyed the building occupied by the Bradley-Caron company, one of the largest wholesale grocers in this section, causing a loss of $100,000, fully covered by insurance. The fire was spectacular in the extreme, starting in the fourth or top story of the building and sending forth great clouds of smoke, which made the work of the volunteer department extremely hazardous and resulting in several firemen being overcome.

NEWS FROM STATE HOUSE.

Because the bids filed for creating the new building at the Geneva industrial school for girls were all considered too high, the board of control has rejected the entire bunch and decided to readvertise.

Dean Fordyce of the teachers' college is making special plans for the superintendents conference which will be held at the beginning of the summer session of the university. A special feature of the meeting will be an address by Doctor Pindley of the University of Manchester, England.

Celebration of Flag day will come this year on June 15, the real anniversary coming upon Sunday, June 14. The announcement has been made that by general agreement the formal celebration of the day will take place on Monday. The day will mark the 137th anniversary of the congressional adoption of the flag of the United States.

Deputy State Auditor Minor has received a list of sixty homesteads in the irrigation territory of Scotts Bluff, Sioux and Morrill counties, which are still open to settlement. On some of them a small amount of back water tax is due. The tracts average seventy-five acres, and some of them run about 100 acres of land subject to irrigation, with attached acreage which is outside the irrigable area.

The first outbreak of anthrax among cattle in Nebraska, which has been officially reported in the last two years, has come to the attention of the state veterinarians office, in a herd of 113 animals at Long Pine, belonging to a stockman named Millard. Seven of the cattle died within a week and more are afflicted. The herd has been placed under quarantine and will be vaccinated against the disease.

While university authorities have emphatically denied that any movement is on foot by them to purchase Arbor Lodge, the home of J. Sterling Morton at Nebraska City, and turn it into a horticultural station belonging to the state, President J. A. Yager of the State Horticultural society declares that his organization favors the purchase and, in fact, has been negotiating with Joy Morton of Chicago to that end.

Modeled on a plan never before used in the United States, the floral exhibit at the state fair this fall should attract attention everywhere. A noted landscape gardener has been secured and the center of Agricultural-Horticulture hall will be laid out and roofed. Instead of the customary display in flowering pots, all plants will be planted in the soil and be arranged according to the technical requirements of scientific landscape gardening.

Alfalfa is a profitable crop for the beef producers of eastern and southeastern Nebraska, declared Prof. E. A. Burnett of the state university farm. In addition he declared that experiments at the state farm showed that where farmers in the eastern and southeastern sections would raise alfalfa they had a distinct advantage over feeds in Iowa, Indiana and Illinois. In these states, cold pressed cotton seed cake and alfalfa, ground and corn, alfalfa and a light feed of silage produced the best results last year.

R. F. Teele of Washington, D. C., who is making irrigation investigations for the department of agriculture, called at the state house recently in company with R. C. Diesem of North Platte, Neb., irrigation engineer in charge of irrigation investigations in Nebraska and South Dakota. Mr. Teele was graduated from the University of Nebraska in the spring of 1897. He is now making his first trip through Nebraska for the purpose of investigating irrigation in the state. He is connected with the office of experiment.

$10,000 in Cash.

Governor Morehead has certified that all the requirements for disbursing the $10,000 appropriation under the terms of the Smith-Lever bill have been complied with. This sum will be spent in encouraging agricultural extension work in the state and will be available every year. The government will also duplicate any sum which may be appropriated by the state, given by a corporation, organization or an individual.

Although the Southern Nebraska Power company of Superior has received permission from the state railway commission to issue stock and bonds up to the amount of $325,000, including $100,000 already in existence, the company may be compelled by the state board of irrigation to revise its plans before its right to operate on the Republican river is established. Plans on file with the railway commission, submitted by President David Guthrie of the Superior company, show that it purposes to supply electric current to a dozen or more in Nebraska.

Food Commissioner Harman has word from the Burlington railroad management that it will install a dining car in connection with the clean and pure food exhibition at the Nebraska state fair this year and will give regular dining car service during fair week as a novel feature of the show. A letter received from Passenger Traffic Manager P. S. Eustis of Chicago accepts the suggestion by Commissioner Harman for such an exhibit and says the details will be Alliance.—To have 2,300 volts of electricity pass through his body and still live is the experience of Walter Hopkins, the 6-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hopkins. He, with an older brother, playing in the street after a heavy windstorm had blown some poles partly over and the wire was low enough for the child to reach, took hold of it. The index finger of his left hand was burned entirely off and his feet burned. He was restored to consciousness and will recover.

Pierce.—P. W. Moore, head miller of the new flouring mill at this place, was swept over the dam across the north fork of the Elkhorn, meeting almost instant death. Heavy rains had swollen the stream to an unusual height and Mr. Moore was on the footbridge over the dam cleaning away a mass of accumulated rubbish and debris when he lost his balance and pitched into the river. The swift current swept him over the dam to the whirlpool below, where he was sucked under by the water and was unable to reach the river bank.

Real Egg Laying.

Hastings.—A total of 318 eggs from 318 hens of Henry Hess during the month of May is a record breaker at the hennery of S. P. Howland, Juniata mail carrier. Mr. Howland is sure this is a county record and possibly for the state. His total stock of forty-two hens produced 702 eggs during April, but this record was badly shattered in May, while twelve of the hens were off the job setting and increasing the flock by fifty-five chicks.

MRS. LYON'S ACHES AND PAINS

Have All Gone Since Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Terre Hill, Pa.—"Kindly permit me to give you my testimonial in favor of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. When I first began taking it I was suffering from female troubles for some time and had almost all kinds of aches—pains in lower part of back and in sides, and pressing down pains. I could not sleep and had no appetite. Since I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound the aches and pains are all gone and I feel like a new woman. I cannot praise your medicine too highly."—Mrs. AUGUSTUS LYON, Terre Hill, Pa.

It is true that nature and a woman's worst ass produced the grandest remedy for woman's ills that the world has ever known. From the roots and herbs of the field, Lydia E. Pinkham, forty years ago, gave to womankind a remedy for their peculiar ills which has proved more efficacious than any other combination of drugs ever compounded, and today Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is recognized from coast to coast as the standard remedy for woman's ills.

In the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., are files containing hundreds of thousands of letters from women seeking health—many of them openly state their own signatures that they have regained their health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; and in some cases that it has saved them from surgical operations.

M. E. Church Notes.

This pastor had a very interesting visit with Dr. Fordyce, the dean of the teachers' college of the state university, at our study last Saturday. We count the class hours we spent in the Dr.'s classes years ago at the Nebraska Wesleyan as a rare privelege.

Two of our brother pastors have been passing through serious trouble of late, Bro. Wylie at Burchard and Bro. Huntington at Pawnee City. The former, with his wife and little boy, suffered an almost fatal automobile accident; the latter has been passing through anxious days on account of an appendicitus operation upon his little daughter, and the severe illness of his mother. Our sympathy goes out to our afflicted brethron and their families.

The parsonage family were very pleasantly entertained at dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Bicknell on Wednesday of last week.

The Brotherhood patriotic-religious service last Sunday evening was a profitable and entertaining service. The following men spoke: J. H. Talbot, Prof. L. R. Trout, C. W. Beck, C. H. Barnard, and F. H. Taylor. Dann Andrew acted as chairman. The choir sang, and special numbers were given by Miss Hallie Bicknell, Charles Linn, and a brotherhood male quartet composed of Messrs. Lloyd Andrew, Charles Linn, Young, and Taylor.

Next Sunday evening the pastor will preach the closing one of the ten commandment series on the subject "The Devil's Desire."

Through the kindness of Mrs. Mettlin our basement windows have recently been furnished with tastefully stencilled curtains.

Arrangements are under way for an entertaining program for Children's Day.

A MESSAGE TO WOMEN

Who Are "Just Ready to Drop,"

When you are "just ready to drop," when you feel so weak that you can hardly drag yourself about—and because you have not slept well, you get up as tired out next morning as when you went to bed, you need help.

Miss Lee Dumas writes from Malone, N. Y., saying: "I was in a badly run-down condition for several weeks but two bottles of Vinol put me on my feet again and made me strong and well. Vinol has done me more good than all the other medicines I ever took."

If the careworn, run-down women, the pale, sickly children and feeble old folks around here would follow Miss Dumas' example, they, too, would soon be able to say that Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron remedy, had built them up and made them strong.

It is a wonderful, strength creator and body-builder, and we sell it under a guarantee of satisfaction. You get your money back if Vinol does not help you.

Health a Factor in Success

The largest factor contributing to a mans success is undoubtedly health. It has been observed that a man is seldom sick when his bowels are regular—he is never well when they are constipated. For constipation you will find nothing quite so good as Chamberlain's Tablets. They not only move the bowels but improve the appetite and strengthen the digestion. They are sold by all druggists.

AUTOS HELP THE CAUSE

SUFFRAGISTS WIN CONVERTS IN COUNTY TOURS.

RICHARDSON WELL COVERED

Women Met and Welcomed by Men of Commercial Clubs—Auto Speaking Is Feature of Summer Campaign.

The automobile tour through Richardson county in it track was a success. In all excepting one town the ladies were met by deputations and cordially welcomed. When the autos arrived at dinner time, either the local commercial club, city officials or other organizations, made the tourists their guests and showed every evidence of good will to them and to the cause they represent. Also the towns were decorated by the merchants. Richardson county men tried to show the visiting delegations they were welcome, and if music, feasting banners and universal good nature indicate the popularity of a cause and those who stand for it, the suffragists can be sure of Richardson county. At Stella and Shubert the suffragists were met by committees. The speakers were introduced by the mayor of Shubert and of Stella.

Afternoon meetings were served with ice cream. There was some class to these political rallies. The towns on the route showed the women a courtesy and an enthusiastic welcome that was just as unexpected as it was delightful.

The week's tour closed at Falls City —the home of Mrs. McGerr, who organized the expedition. Here there was a large afternoon meeting in the court house park, which, for good will and neighborliness and the peculiar exhilaration of the expedition accomplished, was a true climax. Tall and exuberant Mrs. McGerr related the week's events to her townspeople so that they, too, tasted the first sweet fruits of victory.

It is the policy of the workers in Nebraska to induce local dignitaries to accept the responsible offices in the local suffrage societies and this campaign in Richardson county added a score of ministers, prominent lawyers and bankers to the suffrage forces.

At the Falls City evening meeting four ministers spoke for suffrage. Reverend Tichnor, Presbyterian minister, advised the audience to get in the game. He said that the way he was converted into suffrage work by women workers reminded him of how other boys got him into the water for his first spring swim. Even after his clothes were on the bank and he was all ready to jump into the water, he still hesitated, thinking of the cold water. Then some of the boys slipped up behind and shoved him in head over heels. The splash and spluge of the water took his mind off the shock and all of a sudden he liked it and was calling to the other boys that the water was fine. Ever since he had taken the first jump into suffrage work he liked it and was now advising the other fellows to jump in, too.

At Pawnee City the suffragists held a street meeting. Mrs. Baldwin spoke in the evening at the picture show. On Sunday evening she spoke on suffrage at a monster peace meeting at the opera house.

There will be no peace till we get suffrage, so her speech was in harmony with the purpose of the meeting.

The Senior Law President.

Miss Grace Ballard, the only woman in the state university senior law class, has been elected president of the class. She is a strong believer in equal suffrage. In a recent debate at the university an opponent of suffrage declared that there would be a battle to keep women from the polls in November. Miss Ballard answered that the battle was in progress now; that most of the thoughtful, earnest women of Nebraska were engaged in it, and that judging from her knowledge of the citizens of Nebraska they were just enough to give it to the women, and that November would see a treaty signed. Judging by their vociferous applause her classmates agreed with her.

Many letters are received at headquarters asking for suffrage literature and suggestions for suffrage celebrations and demonstrations. Mrs. Harrison, the executive sebretary, is fertile and ready in suggestions and welcomes such letters. When the speech is necessarily short, say ten minutes or fifteen, it is best to be sure of impressing not more than two points and to make those two very pointed. Definiteness and sharpness will both be blurred if the speaker attempts to cover all the reasons for suffrage. Simplicity, directness and good logic in a ten minutes' speech will make an impression on the passerby when high-flown periods would be overlooked.

Groceries and Suffrage.

Nebraska farmers are now getting their coffee, sugar and raisins in the same paper bag with suffrage propaganda. Headquarters has been supplying the grocers with suffrage literature and asking them to send it to their customers. The good-natured grocers have complied and have received so many requests for more that the grocer shipment from headquarters has become a daily incident.

Several hundred copies of the Woman's World, the official suffrage organ, giving a full account of the activity of women of Colorado toward settlement of the Colorado mine troubles, have been distributed among the working men of Omaha.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By O. E. SELLERS, Director of Evening Department The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

LESSON FOR JUNE 7

COMING OF THE KINGDOM.

LESSON TEXT—Luke 17:20-37.

GOLDEN TEXT—"The kingdom of God is within you." Luke 17:21.

I. The Kingdom Present, vv. 20, 21. The Pharisees held some peculiar ideas about the coming of the kingdom. Contrary to their ideas there are no special outward signs to herald its coming. The word "observation" v. 20, is an astronomical one and suggests that the kingdom was to come in a subtle shape from the sky, a current expectation on the part of the Pharisees.

In answer to the boastful Pharisees (v. 20) Jesus plainly told them that he himself is the kingdom, and that kingdom was in their midst or "among you," see (v. 21) margin. Their question was a flippant one, one of unbelief, and to it Jesus makes a characteristically brief, but clear reply, that partook of the nature of a rebuke. The kingdom would not come with trumpets and drum. They could not say: "Lo here! lo there!" Its coming was not to be spectacular, arresting the attention of some who in turn brought it to the attention of others. The authorized rendering "within you" does not imply that the kingdom already existed in the individual lives of his questioners. Subsequent teaching of Jesus shows that he here refers to another and a final coming of the kingdom, at the time of the final coming of the son of man. What he desired to teach these Pharisees was that the kingdom of which they spoke had already appeared due to the fact of his presence in their midst. The carping Pharisees withdraw and Jesus speaks openly to his disciples of the days that will come, a time of persecution when they will long for comfort.

Prophecy Fulfilled.

II. The Visible Son of Man, vv. 22-24. The kingdom in its natural form was rejected by the Jews, 1:25, 27. In its spiritual form it is now in the hearts of believers (Rom. 14:17), but he who was rejected with contempt will one day be sought after, and in vain. Matt. 23:37-39. During the time of his absence many shall claim to be Christ (v. 23), but we are not to believe such claims. History has abundantly proved and fulfilled this prophecy. When he really comes there will be a sudden publicity (v. 24), that shall flash from one corner to the other of the heavens, Matt. 24:27; then "every eye shall behold him." "So shall the son of man be in his day." This instruction Jesus gives to his disciples. Men shall search for him, a time when he shall not be present as he then was. After the false ones will come a day of revelation when the whole heavens will reveal him and all will know it.

Finality of Events.

III. The Day of the Son of Man, vv. 25-37. Before that day comes, however, he must suffer and be rejected, but following that rejection men will marry, carry on merchandising and merriment as in the days of Noah and those of Lot. In the days of Noah and of Lot there came a sudden halt in these activities and a judgment of flood and fire, even so "after the same manner shall it be in the day that the son of man is revealed," v. 30. This refers to the finality of events when the kingdom of God comes by way of judgment. Here Jesus sets his seal upon the truthfulness of those two events which preceded his first advent. If they be not true then he is a false teacher. Like as men, discredit those events they likewise would cast aside the teaching about his second advent. Many claim that verse 31 refers to the destruction of Jerusalem, the context to us clearly disproves any such interpretation. Verses 32 and 33 must be taken together.

Summary. Quite emphatically this passage is a teaching on the subject of the coming of the kingdom of God. That kingdom came when Christ came in grace. It will come when he comes in judgment. It is coming constantly between the two advents. Remember, his reading of Isaiah's prophecy, Luke 4:18, 19; of Isa. 61:1-3. In his first advent he did come to preach the acceptable year, the year of grace. That day is still with us. In his second advent he will proclaim the day of the vengeance of God. He will establish the kingdom, will build the waste places and raise desolations. Today the kingdom of God is among us in power through the presence of Christ, by the spirit in the living church.

To the Pharisees he said: "Neither shall they say, lo here! lo there! for, the kingdom is in your midst." To his disciples he said: "They shall say lo there! lo here! go not away nor follow them." We cannot localise the kingdom. On an ancient Syrian fragment the words of Luke 1:33 read, "And to his kingdom there shall be no frontier." On the lips of the Pharisees, kingdom meant a political organization and empire. With Jesus it means a spiritual realm universal in extent, a rule of righteousness, and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit. When he appears all will know.

BAD TEETH.

How many people realise the dangers of bad teeth? At a hopeful estimate, about one in ten thousand. Everyone knows that a toothache is about the most villainous pain human beings are called upon to endure, and that a sore tooth always feels about half as long again as it is in reality. Then, there's the trouble without their bad work being suspected by the patient. Pus pockets often form at the roots of such teeth and poison the whole system by constant discharge of virulent germs. Many persistent headaches are due to this slow, unsuspected poisoning, says the Chicago Journal. Joint troubles usually diagnosed under the ominous title of rheumatism have been traced to the same source; and it is worth noting that this particular form of rheumatism is very frequently followed by heart affections, sometimes of a very serious nature. Good teeth are almost priceless possessions. But a tooth that has a pus pocket at the root, and is emptying a steady stream of disease germs into the system is not much less vicious than a chorically inflamed appendix.

M. Chauffard of Besancon has just made a study of the last two comets that approached our world in 1913. The last is quite recent. Russian astronomers took it for a planet of the eleventh magnitude, and thought they had made a fine discovery. It was, however, a false joy. It was an old acquaintance—a periodical comet that has come to visit us for the third time since 1889. Its revolution is, then, only eight years. This, for a comet, is but a very small orbit, which accounts for its having been taken at first for a planet. The mistake is explained by the presence of a very small nucleus with very distinct outlines, and which was visible before the appearance of the tail.

Accidental deaths from bichloride of mercury poisoning continue at an appalling rate, in spite of the wide publicity given these fatalities. Frequent tragic warnings apparently bring no greater care in the handling of the deadly tablets, and legislation requiring that they be manufactured in such form as to instantly identify them even through the sense of touch, is being urged in several states. A measure, with this object in view, is now pending in congress and will probably receive favorable consideration.

An English scientist says that kissing tends to deaden the sense of smell. Evidently he never "had just one" with the boys before going home to his wife.

We are going to hope that the proposed aeroplane flight across the ocean will be successful, but we are not going to bet on it.

Autoists should learn that they have something to do besides blow a horn when crossing a street.

We never knew but one man who could deceive his wife, and he always told her the truth.

A quiet home wedding was celebrated at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred H. Barclay in Pawnee City last last Thursday evening May 21st when their sister, Miss Fannie Barclay, was united in marriage with Mr. Leslie H. Smeltzer, of Virginia, Nebr. A company of about thirty five relatives, old friends of the family and intimate friends of the bride were present at the consummation of this happy court-ship. The impressive ring ceremony of the Presbyterian church was used by the officiating clergyman, Rev. Hugh Robinson. Little Miss Mildred Barclay niece of the bride, being the ring-bearer. The wedding couple were unattended and the ceremony was solemnized at eight o'clock. The marriage was followed by a tasty and seasonable luncheon, after which Mr. and Mrs. Schmelzer were driven to Table Rock, there taking the train for a honeymoon trip to Lincoln, Kansas City, Excelsior Springs and other points. At it's conclusion they will be at home to their friends at Virginia Nebr. Mr. and Mrs. Schmeltzer received a wealth of beautiful and useful gifts, mementos of the occasion and emblematic of the high esteem in which they are held. The groom is a young railway man of ability and worth, who is now employed by the Rock Island railway company as station agent at Virginia. His bride who is one of Pawnee county's best school teachers, is a young lady of many lovable qualities and womanly attainments.

Humboldt Leader.

Miss Emma Orr who has been teaching at Juniata the past year, has returned home to spend the vacation season with relatives.

Rev. and Mrs. Seelig were taken completely by surprise Wednesday evening when a large number of the ladies of the congregation assembled in the church parlor in order that they might assist them in the celebration of their wedding anniversary. In behalf of the church, Mr. Gillian, in a few well chosen words, presented Mr. and Mrs. Seelig with three fine pieces of cut glass ware, as a token of their love and esteen. Mr. Seelig responded in his usual happy way, showing very clearly that they appreciated their kind remembrance of them.

Guy Snethen, Howard Waggoner and Archie Yearling accompanied by their wives, were Sunday visitors at Frank Fergus'.

Dawson Reporter.

Tuesday evening at 8:30 at the home of the brides parents Lee Price and wife, Rev. Pool spoke the words that united A. W. Pangburn of Table Rock and Miss Grace Price of this place in holy bonds of wedlock. The young people left Friday for Table Rock where they will spend a few days with the groom's parent after which they will leave for Tulsa, Okla where they will make their future home as the groom holds a position as switchman in the St Louis & Frisco Ry yards. The bride is a bright young lady and has grown to womanhood in this city, she graduated from the High school with this years class and has for the past several months has assisted with the work in this office and has a host of of friends who regret to see her depart. The groom is not so well known here as he has made but few acquaintances during his visits to Dawson, but knowing that he comes of a good family we join in extending best wishes to them for a successful voyage down life's rugged path.

Miss Bertha Poteet of Pawnee came up Tuesday for a visit with Mr and Mrs J. T. Poteet.

Dr. V. B. Brooks of Crab Orchard the old family physician of the Wylies, was here in attendance upon them.

Dr. J. C. Wadell of Pawnee, was called to attend the Casey family reaching here Friday evening.

A delegation of church people from Violet came up Saturday night to offer the Wylies their condolences, and to establish an informal "Don't Worry" club. They told Mr. Wylie that his pulpit there would be ready to receive him whenever he felt able to resume his ministery in their town and to show him their grateful attitude they brought along a little donation in the shape of $100.

BURIAL PLACE OF KING JOHN

Writer Declares Interment of Famous English Monarch Took Place at Worcester.

In the American Law Review there appeared an article in which the writer made an allusion to King John of England, and said he went "to his unlamented rest at St. Wolstan's." Now, is this correct? King John was buried at Worcester and in the cathedral there, and his body has slept in that spot until now, unless, like a streak of morning cloud, it has melted into the infinite azure of the past. In 1797, for the purpose of identifying the resting place of the king and his remains, a committee of citizens was appointed to investigate this matter. The body was identified and all that remained of it placed in a new mausoleum, where it stands today as one of the objects of interest in Worcester cathedral. Shakespeare, in his "King John," puts in the mouth of Prince Henry the following words: "At Worcester must his body be interred, for so he willed it." Thus we see King John was buried in Worcester cathedral, and it is therefore inaccurate to say he was buried at St. Wolstan's. The memory of King John is not cherished with the feeling that has followed the lives and deaths of some of England's sovereigns, and he will be remembered only as the monarch from whom was extorted the great charter of English liberty, from which this country has received a large part of its valued inheritance.—Letter to St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

BUT NOT ON THAT MACHINE

Girl Had Right to Balk on Joy Ride That Homely Escort Had Promised to Give Her.

He was the homeliest man she had ever met, but almost his first sentence won her heart.

It was: "I'll come around some Thursday and take you out in the machine."

"Oh," she twittered, picking a hair from his coat collar, "what Thursday, Mr. Dickdocker?"

"How does some Thursday next week suit you?" he replied.

"Oh, the first, please!" she exclaimed.

That Thursday she stood, with her new auto coat on, waiting at the parlor window for two hours.

"I realize he's ugly as sin and has fourteen gold teeth," she mused, "but with wind goggles on he surely won't look so bad and he'll probably keep his mouth shut on account of the dust."

There was a sudden chugging.

"Tis he!" she breathed.

'Twas. He stopped at the curb. He was seated on a dusty motorcycle with an extra seat behind!

He rank the bell.

"Is Miss Niddlestoop at home?" he inquired.

Too Many Lonely Breakfasts.

Lord Tennyson, late in life, said sadly to a friend, "I have taken breakfast alone for 25 years." This was after his wife became a confirmed invalid and his family was scattered.

There are men who breakfast alone whose wives appear very vigorous at the bridge table or club meetings or the dance class, and who are, in fact, equal to almost any effort but appearing in the morning before their husbands go to business or their children—if there are any—go to school or to the park.

An eligible bachelor said the other day, "I used to dream of a pretty face across the coffee pot, but a dozen years in a smart apartment hotel have dispelled several illusions. To begin with, I hardly know a married man there who wouldn't like to keep house, but their wives won't take the trouble. Why, I know two dozen women who never get up to breakfast."—New York Times.

Class Entertain Parents.

Mrs. Bicknells Sunday school class entertained their papa's and mamma's Wednesday evening in the M. E. church. A program was given and every member of the class took some active part. A pantomime was given by five girls entitled the Holy City and Miss Bell Shorter sang for it. After the program they were invited to the basement to partake of a three course luncheon which was prepared by the class. The girls gave their class yell after which the parents all responded. There were about 60 present beside the class at the banquet. The class presented each of their parents a picture of the class as a souvenir.

Mesdames Cherry and Phillips and daughter Dorthy, Max Glenn and Harland Taylor attended the 8th. Grade exercises at Pawnee City Friday afternoon.

And It Rained

Of Monday night we got a nice rain which was reported fifty five hundredths of an inch. This rain together with the many little showers that have fallen during the last week make the ground in fine shape. While other places have been favored with heavier rains this section has had the best kind of rains for the crops.

Take Plenty of Time to Eat.

There is a saying that "rapid eating is slow suicide." If you have formed the habit of eating too rapidly you are most likely suffering from indigestion or constipation, which will result eventually in serious illness unless corrected. Digestion begins in the mouth. Foo should be thoroughly masticated and insalivated. Then when you have a fullness in the stomach or feel dull and stupid after eating take one of Chamberlain's Tablets. Many severe cases of stomach trouble and constipation have been cured by the use of these tablets. They are easy to take and most agreeable in effect.

Wheat Has Good Prospect

With the present weather conditions the prospect for a good wheat crop is very good. Last week many farmers plowed up their wheat thinking it was killed by the fly, but at present wheat looks fine and it is apparent that those who plowed up their wheat made a great mistake. The recent rains have left the growing corn looking very good and the farmers of this section are greatly encouraged at the fine prospects so far this year.

3,000 Nebraska Ladies To Compete For Free Trip To Panama-Pacific Exposition

The names of the young ladies in this locality who have been entered in this contest to win a trip with expenses paid to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition are attached hereto. By June 17, the day proclaimed by Governor Morehead as Nebraska Panama-Pacific Dollar Day no less than 3000 young women in Nebraska will be engaged in taking of $100 contributions for a Nebraska building at the Panama Pacific Exposition. Each contributer of $1.00 will receive a bronze medal bearing upon one side the seal of the state of Nebaska and upon other the seal of the exposition. To the young lady who sends in the largest amount of money thus raised will be given a trip for one week to the exposition with all expenses paid, or $100.00 in cash. To the three ladies sending in the next largest amounts will be given free transportation to the exposition or $50.00 in cash. To the next 250 ladies will be given gold medals of the design above discribed This is a patriotic movement to which every loyal Nebraskan will subscribe. The fact that forty states of the Union have already raised the money for exposition homes makes it imperative that Nebraska should take quick action. The raising of the money through $1.00 contributions imposes a burden upon no one and all the more glory and credit will accure to those who make this project possible, even at this late hour. Lieutenant Governor S. R. McKelvie of Lincoln has been placed in charge of the raising of this fund and he optimistically reports that the task of raising the fund will undoubtedly be completed by July 1. In the contest for the prizes to be awarded Nebraska ladies every support should be given to those of this community whose names are as follows:

Owing to the heavy rains that fell north of here Friday and Saturday nights the river came up and flooded the lowlands and on the road running east from the C. In many places the river was out of its channel and it was reported that it was from bluff to bluff near Elk Creek.

In fact he was so encouraged that he went on for at least fifteen minutes more!

The Barada-Philathea trip to the Rock had to be abandoned last Friday afternoon on account of the rain. About thirty of the young people, who came in spite of the threatening weather, entertained themselves at the church basement and ate their picnic lunch together. The program of entertainment was impromptu, but all seemed to enjoy themselves.

Motorist Meets With Accident

Last Saturday George Miller was riding his new Indian motorcycle when he came to a railroad crossing where new rails were being laid and the workmen had taken out the planks between the rails and at the outer edge of the track. He apparently did not see that the planks had been removed and rode right up to the track. The front wheel struck the rail and skidded a ways then went over. After he got over both both rails he struck a rail laying in the grass which threw the rider off and bent the front wheel badly, but the rider escaped injury.

SYNOPSIS.

Ralph Van Vechten, a young man of leisure, is astonished to see a man enter No. 1211, a house across the street from the Powhatan club, long unoccupied and spoken of as the House of Mystery. Several persons at supper with Van Vechten at No. 1211 Van Vechten expresses concern to his friend, Tom Pillsney, regarding the whereabouts of his cousin and fiancee, Paige Carew. A man is forcibly ejected from the house. Van Vechten and Tom follow the man and find him dead in the street. Van Vechten is attracted by the face of a girl in the crowd of onlookers surrounding the body. Detective Flint calls on Van Vechten to get his version of the tragedy. Tom Pillsney runs down on a yachting trip. He recognizes among some persons in a passing motor car two men whom he had seen enter the House of Mystery. He sees one of them, a Mr. Cailis, on shore later and follows him. Tom is robbed, blindfolded and taken to a house. A sweet-voiced girl later protests against the roughness of Tom's guards. Van Vechten calls on his uncle, Theodore Van Vechten, big man on Wall street, and known as the "Man of Iron," in search of information regarding the whereabouts of Paige Carew. Detective Flint shows Van Vechten a gold mesh purse, found in the House of Mystery. Van recognizes it as belonging to Paige Carew. Flint, sailed for New York on a time previously. It develops that the ladies visited the English home of Temple Bonner, owner of the House of Mystery. It is recalled that Temple Bonner was in love with a daughter of Compton Pellegrew, married Max Fellowes and another daughter married a man named Fayerweather. Bonner and Willard were life time friends. A search is started for Willard. Van Vechten enters the House of Mystery by the back door in time to hear John Cailis threaten Tom. Van interferes and helps the girl escape, but is rendered unconscious in the struggle with Cailis. Tom Pillsney is taken on as master of Brownlow's yacht Kohinur, which has been chartered for a mysterious mission. The charterer, Max Willard, and his friends board the yacht at night and Tom hears the voice of the unknown girl. Willard assures Tom that his mission is honorable, and intimates that a great wrong is about to be righted.

BOOK III.

Once seated at table, and immediately he was given an illustration of the general fickleness of feminine nature. Smiling, half timidly, Delia, the name by which the Girl had asked Tom to address her, came forward, and Tom sprang to his feet, brushing aside Hewitt, who was holding a chair for her, and performing the office himself.

"I was waiting for you," she told him brightly.

Instantly Tom soared from the depths of his gloom up to another absurdly vain pinnacle of joy.

"Were you?" he cried ecstatically. "Now I call that bully! Where are the other ladies?"

This question, owing to the queerness of everything connected with Willard and his secret enterprise, he doubted the propriety of asking; but it might be that they were unfamiliar with customs on shipboard, and here was an opportunity to make them feel at ease. The girl, however, did not seem to think it malapert; as she replied promptly, "If reservedly:

"They are indisposed. We are to lunch tete-a-tete—et qu'en dites vous?"

"The only way I can understand French," said he, "is when it is on paper, and not then without a lexicon. You're not French!"

She laughed at his bluntness.

"No, but I've lived most of my life in Paris. I meant, if you object to the arrangement you might call in Mr. Mercer."

"Nix. That's near-German, and it means that at this hour Mr. Mercer's place is on deck. . . . Paris—h'm-m. Cousin of a chum of mine has spent a good deal of time there. Quite a violinist. Been expecting her home this long while; but she's been sidetracked somewhere—forgot to send any word—newspapers been printing a lot of rot, and all that sort of thing. Thank Heaven I haven't a scatter-brained cousin like that!"

Tom was blind to the intentness with which the girl hung upon his words. She seemed a bit put out when he broke off abruptly and devoted his attention to the soup.

"And isn't this chum," she spoke quietly, her lips wreathing a smile that somehow looked different to Tom—isn't he dreadfully worried?"

"Worried!" he exploded. "Lord, yes! Precious little she cares, though. She'll turn up one of these days and laugh at him for his pains—one of the pleasant ooaty ways most girls have. You're not eating; if anything's wrong say the word and I'll go after Hewitt."

"The soup and fish are excellent," she answered blandly. "I simply haven't any appetite. What does he think has become of her?"

Tom shrugged his shoulders. "What can he think? He imagines all sorts of dire things, and is nearly crazy with anxiety. The police will find her though."

"Police!" she exclaimed in a shocked voice. "Is it really as bad as that?"

"Shows," said Tom sagely, "just how much one thoughtless girl can turn things topsy-turvy. . . . But, hang it all; I'm sorry you're not enjoying your luncheon. Feeling ill?"

The girl had pushed back her plate, and she now sat silently contemplating her hands clasped upon the tablecloth.

"I—I—believe I am not feeling very well," she replied faintly, meeting his anxious look with eyes somber that Tom was alarmed. "A touch of headache—don't let me spoil your appetite—it will be gone in a minute." And in murmuring she was the ghost of a smile.

Tom, though continued to watch her, his own countenance reflecting his suddenly awakened concern, while her smile grew until presently she was apparently her normal self again.

"There!—it is gone!" she lightly declared, and, to Tom's immense relief, commenced chattering gayly, and did not again allude to the "scatter-brained" cousin. But neither did she do more than trifle with the succession of dishes which Hewitt's deft hands placed before her.

When the meal was finished, her mood underwent another abrupt change; she grew serious again.

"Now, if you will excuse me, I believe I will go and lie down for a while."

"Yes, do," he urged. "Too bad you should feel so! Isn't there anything I can do?—anything I can get you?"

His eagerness to serve her was rewarded with a smile that made her lovely countenance inexpressibly sweet and winning; but it was manifest even to his heedless regard that she was distrait and wanted to be alone.

The long afternoon dragged by in a monotonous fashion, and Tom was both disappointed and troubled when Molly, the mulatto stewardess, informed him that none of the ladies would appear for dinner.

"The other young lady seems terribly hysterical," Molly enlarged; "she has something on her mind that's driving her distracted. Miss—your friend is trying to quiet her."

The news augmented his curiosity.

"What seems to be the matter?" he asked.

"Don't know," replied Molly with an air of importance. "She just suffers and don't say anything. She's a high-strung young lady, the kind that feels more than most do. She's taking it pretty hard, whatever her trouble may be."

As he dined in solitary grandeur, Tom puzzled over the circumstance not a little, and, as was usual with him, the inference was slow in coming, that whatever had upset the mysterious young lady, it must have occurred on the yacht. The merriment of all three, as they came aboard last night, testified to this fact. At any rate, he thus accepted the conclusion, without taking into account that the trouble was a secret one, and that it is woman's peculiar gift to be able to hide caring care behind a mask of gayety.

But he had scarcely got his pipe to going before one of the watch sought him out where he had retired upon the bridge, bearing the information that a young lady wanted to see him immediately at the gangway.

He descended to the main deck and made his way aftward with as brave a show of nonchalance as he could rally.

The night was clear and starlit, and consequently the darkness was not so dense as it had been the previous night; therefore, when he arrived at the gangway he was able to make out that the group standing there were in the midst of a strained situation.

The first officer, Mr. Mercer, and two sailors showed plainly that their state of mind was exceedingly black and cheerless, while the girl stood a little apart, impatiently tapping the deck with one foot.

As soon as he approached she addressed him sharply.

"Oh, Captain Phinney! It seems that I am trying to transcend your authority. I'm sorry. But I'm so anxious to be taken over to the Claremont landing that I never thought there might be any special formalities to be observed."

"Why, I suppose it's all right," he returned uneasily. "You have s—en—a permit from Mr. Willard, of course—?"

She drew swiftly back with a little movement.

"Permit!" she exclaimed uncomprehendingly. Tom's fears were realised; she had none, and he groaned inwardly—"I don't understand."

He all at once felt as unhappy as Mercer looked. Wheeling upon that gentleman, he snapped in an undertone: "Beat it!" and the first officer and the two sailors vanished with astonishing agility.

"You see," once more addressing the girl, "it's this way: Last thing Mr. Willard told me before he went downtown himself was that nobody was to come aboard or go ashore without his express consent. Mr. Brownlow instructed me to the same effect. Now, if you haven't something to show that it's all right, you see what a fix you are placing me in, don't you?"

The girl straightened, and Tom could feel the angry glance that swept him. He looked helplessly off toward the landing, conspicuous under the blaze of electric bulbs, with a faint hope that Max Willard would appear and end the situation; but there was no sign of him.

"Captain Phinney"—her tones were now biting—"am I to understand that you will not allow me to go—go ashore simply because I haven't a scrap of paper from a person who has no control whatever over my movements? It's too absurd! You are downright insulting to demand such a thing when you have my word that it is perfectly proper for me to go."

Tom squirmed miserably.

"Maybe I didn't express myself very well—" he began.

"You did—not—indeed!" she indignantly agreed. "It's highly important—but I'll not trouble to explain. I want to be taken over to the landing at once."

The unfortunate skipper's predicament, as they say in newspapers, "can be better imagined than described." During a silence that seemed age-long, his mind resumed an utter blank; he was sensible of a numbness stealing over him, and of a most outlandish desire to swear. To tell the truth, he so nearly let slip a shaft of baleful profanity that his tongue was at last loosened.

"Delia," he pleaded in desperation, "listen to me a moment. On shipboard orders are orders, and they are meant for just one thing—to be obeyed. The practice is so ingrained in every seafaring man that he never even thinks of shirking or compromising. Can't you at least wait a little bit until Mr. Willard comes? I don't doubt but that it will be all right."

She was now angry through and through.

"Then why do you stand there talking like a simpleton?" she flared at him. "It's not a question of whether I can or cannot wait—I don't propose to."

"Delia—"

She stamped a foot.

"Don't call me that name!" she stormed—"don't you dare! I detest it! Besides, it's rude and impertinent and ungentlemanly in you to take such a liberty." She moved quickly into the gangway. "If you won't, I will. Thank goodness, I can run a motor-boat!"

Mechanically he reached forth a hand and caught her arm. And with the contact it was as if a miracle had happened for him; his discomposure left him, and all timidity and irresolution vanished.

"Dear girl," he said unsteadily. "Delia—don't do this thing; don't force me into such a trying position. If I were anybody in whom you are the least bit interested, the last thing you would expect of me would be to disobey orders."

He had both her hands in his. Suddenly she began pulling and tugging in a furious but vain effort to loosen his grasp.

"You—you wretched, miserable, irritating creature!" she cried tearfully. "I have to go. Can't you get it into your stupid head?"

"Delia—Delia—don't!" he beseeched her, quite beside himself once more. "Dear girl, listen to reason."

Gradually he was drawing her to him. Then both were stricken motionless and silent.

RELIC OF PONCE DE LEON

Illinois Man Has Recently Added It to His Already Extremely Valuable Collection.

A collection of relics, not related in any way, but each object of which is particularly interesting in itself, is that of Mr. Michael Robinson of Shawneetown, Ill., to whose treasures was recently added a piece of the coffin in which Ponce de Leon was buried in the old cathedral at San Juan, Porto Rico.

When the leaden casket of the explorer was examined before it was transferred from the old cathedral to the new one it was found to be in a very poor condition. So insecure did it appear that it was decided a new casket should be provided. The old one was then discarded and cut into pieces, which were given to persons of prominence who attended the cathedral ceremonies. Cardinal Farley, who was in charge of the celebration, gave one of these pieces to Capt. G. P. Townsend, who commanded the guard of honor for the body, and Captain Townsend gave the relic to Mr. Robinson to add to his already interesting collection.

From sons and song farther back in the history of this continent comes another relic which Mr. Robinson treasures, a block of sandstone bearing the clear imprint of the human foot. It was taken from "The Rocks," a short distance from Shawneetown, but over the border line in Kentucky. It is believed in the neighborhood that the imprint is that of prehistoric man.

A third era of the continent's history, that which brings the collection down to the modern world, is represented by an old silk Revolutionary flag.—New York Herald.

ROME GLORIOUS CITY

As Remarkable in Its Climate as Its Memorials.

Not Too Hot in Summer Nor Too Cold in Winter—Art Lovers of Every Degree Can Find Solace Here.

London.—There are those who tell us that Rome is glorious alike in its climate as in its memorials for all the 365 days of the year. It is not, as certain Italian cities are, too hot in the summer nor too cold in the winter, but there can scarcely be a question that it is at its brightest in the spring. Florence has been called the city of flowers but Rome also has its floral charm, and happy are they to whom it is given to enjoy the beauty of its Seven Hills at this time of the year. If the Gardens of Eucullus no longer adorn the Pincio we still have terrace upon terrace of views of unspeakable beauty.

The visitor to Rome perhaps makes his first interest the interior of St. Peter's. The exterior will disappoint him, for although the dome is higher than that of St. Paul's it is so thrown back as to lack some of the distinction of our metropolitan cathedral, but the interior of St. Peter's will surpass all possible expectations. Here is a church the like of which for vastness and in extent is unsurpassed in Christendom although some of the tombs of earlier popes may seem to us the shrines of "man-overboard!" which was immediately followed by a second loud splash.

The two raced forward to find most of the crew gathered at the port rail, over which they were leaning and peering excitedly into the river. Tom was not so disturbed that he failed to notice how his companion clung to his arm. He gave the hand a little squeeze and drew her closer.

"What's the trouble here?" he demanded. "Where's Mr. Mercer?"

Tennard, the vicarious second mate, pointed down toward the water.

"There, sir," he replied. "A fellow wanted to jump overboard—the blame fool—and Mr. Mercer tried to hold him. Before anybody could help him, the man knocked him down and went over the rail. Mr. Mercer went right over after him."

Already life-buoys had been tossed to the struggling pair in the water, and a boat was being rapidly lowered. Tom leaned over the faces in the dim starlight.

"Who was the man?" he asked.

A moment's silence, then some one spoke up: "The big fellow dalled Cailis, sir."

"Lively, men!" Tom shouted. "He can't swim!"

Love-Making Over the 'Phone.

Letter writing—love-letter writing—has degenerated into a despised necessity to be made use of when one is without the zone—either geographical or financial—of the telephone, local or long distance. A fluttering "Hello" traveling over hundreds of miles of wire now produces more than the manly breast than did the old-fashioned scented note, written on pink paper and filled with pressed forget-me-nots and heartsease.

And the maidenly heart, too, is stirred more quickly by the thought that somebody cared enough about her to spend $1 on a telephone call from the ends of the world than it is by the sight of a pile of letters two inches high.

There is no use bewailing this sad state of affairs. Doubtless Cupid can balance on a wire as well as he can hide in a scented envelope.

Annual Infliction.

An east Cleveland young man, accompanied by his fiancee, lately called at the home of a mutual friend, where there had been a recent addition to the family. They were greeted at the door by the young wife and mother, who happened to be suffering from a severe cold. After an exchange of conventional commonplaces the young man inquired after the welfare of the baby. And the young matron understood him to be asking about her cold. Hence the following startling reply. "Well, I have one every year about this time, but this is the meanest one I've ever had."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

AGAINST WOMEN'S POCKETS

New York Newspaper Gives Eight Reasons for Its Opposition to Proposed Move.

1. Because pockets are not a natural right.
2. Because the great majority of women do not want pockets. If they did, they would have them.
3. Because whenever women have had pockets they have not used them.
4. Because women are expected to carry enough things as it is without the additional burden of pockets.
5. Because it would make dissension between husband and wife as to whose pockets were to be filled.
6. Because it would destroy man's chivalry toward woman if he did not have to carry all her things in his pockets.
7. Because men are men and women the women. We must not fly in the face of nature.
8. Because pockets have been used by men to carry tobacco, pipes, whisky flasks, chewing-gum and compromising letters. We see no reason to suppose that women would use them more wisely.—New York Tribune.

A German economist, Professor Wolff, estimates that by 1930, if the present tendency continues, Germany's birth rate will be the lowest in Europe.

AT THE BOOKING OFFICE OFF-STAGE COMEDIES by Will Bradshaw

LEILA WAS JUST A DAY LATE.

Leila Westcott (leading lady)—What do you know about it, girls! I just turned down an offer from Sam Putton, the producer, to feature me in a big play with the pick of Broadway for a supporting company. Can you imagine it?

Alice Le Due (of the chorus)—We certainly can't. I thought you'd be glad to do seven shows a day in a shootin' gallery, the way you've been weeping around here for a contract with dollar marks on it.

Leila Westcott—Pooh, pooh, young one. Sam Putton knows his line of work. He don't so much like me to realizes it will take a star like Miss Westcott to recoup his shattered fortune.

Alzy (late of the 'Alls)—I s'y, Leila. Don't you know it was your mime on one-sheets that put us where we are today—lookin' for something for the last 'act of next week? I wouldn't 'ave cared only I was gettin' where I could tike me place in society, y' know. It was you who induced me to go out in "A Lonesome Widow."

Bill Daly—Say, kiddies, she was the leadin' lady that turned the Lone-some show into a flower, eh?

Maudie Lalor (soubrette)—It was $5,000 and 50, Billy. Her and Alzy shared that honor. I seen some of the notices they got at Ithsca. Whew! That Morning Star cricket must have hated himself for a week after. It was the most sizzling pan I ever seen, and I'm a good judge of criticisms.

Dad Waddell (who knew Booth—by sight)—I suppose because you've had so many years' experience. A criticism of my work isn't in existence today.

Alzy—I'll bet some of the old news-paper files are still left.

Maudie Lalor—What do you know about it, Dad? Don't rebuke a lady. When you played "Hamlet" for the ushers' fund, didn't I say you was the niftiest old Ham for your age that I had ever seen? Don't knock; it kint professional.

Alzy—Let him s'y what he pleases. 'Is 'Amlet was detestable.

Dad Waddell—My Prince of Denmark was something like this—

Billy Daly—Cut it out.

Alice Le Due—Give us some more of it, Dad. It puts me in mind of the time I was with Al Barnes' rep. doing flag stations.

Leila Westcott—I shall never forget Sam for giving me that chance. I had a presentiment that something would happen—

Billy Daly—Something would. One week out and another bunch of trusting troupers would go over the brink. It takes a personality to head a production. Now, I have an idea for a play written around my specialty. It would be a riot.

Maudie Lalor—Put clamps on the comedy. What chance has your Georgie Cohan imitations got in a real show? You can't get booking now. I never had any luck since you and Susie separated.

Alzy—Separated, eh? Who got the custody of the scenery, Billy?

Leila Westcott—When I think of the awful deal poor Susie got when she married Billy Daly! A man who never got a bow or a curtain that he didn't steal. Some day Billy will hear of his work and have him arrested for malicious mischief.

Alice Le Due—I knew Susie well. She came from Yonkers and got her first part in "The Fly By Nights." She only played in the chorus two weeks when she had a fat part handed to her. The night before we came in for our run the author came out to see us, and the minute he saw Susie he wanted to write her a starrin' vehicle right away.

Alzy—I'll wise Susie. Susie is a one best bet, as y' s'y over 'ere.

Leila Westcott—Did Artie Writem have a case of heart trouble like that?

Alice Le Due—Did he? I was standing next to her after the second act when he out and asks her to be his the next day. He said if she didn't marry him he'd lose his ambition, go to the bow-wows in a week, smash his typewriter and quit the game.

Alzy—I notice 'e just registered 'is biggest 'it an' 'e's still single.

Dad Waddell—The gentleman didn't mean a word of it. He was probably trying some new line, to hear how they'd sound.

Maudie Lalor—Aw, don't y' think a man can have any real sentiment? Certainly, he meant it. Artie's whole family is that way. I knew his brother, Wallie, before he married Elsie Van Allen.

Leila Westcott—Was he sentimental, like Artie?

Dad Wadell—Sentiment is a thing apart from me. I remember—

Alice Le Due—While she was there with the romantic material Elsie was one of the Flying Van Allens. She did an aerial serpentine for a close. Wallie was in the house one night, caught her act, and because she put him in mind of a fair angel he made Artie introduce him, and married her the next week.

Leila Westcott—That's what I call putting the "rome" in romance. If the Writem boys are that kind of stock, I want to meet Artie as soon as possible.

Alzy—That Wallie must 'ave 'ad a wonderful imagination. Susie mide me think of a dyin' patient.

Leila Westcott—I want to see Sam Putton again. If Artie Writem was the author he had in mind for the play, it's going to be my mime on a

"When You Played Hamlet for the Ushers' Fund Didn't I Say You Was the Niftiest Old Ham for Your Age That I Had Ever Seen? Don't Knock, It Ain't Professional."

Putton contract. An author like that puts soul in his work. When I know he wrote it, it will magnetize me.

Billy Daly—You need magnetism', you don't attract anything now.

Alice Le Due—You're speakin', Leila. Artie is the man you needed to write you something. I can see you living his characters.

Dad Wadell—The seven ages of man I could do. I remember—

Alzy—I can ply an old man so well I look younger than 'is grandchildren. That's art, o' chap.

Maudie Lalor—It's a wonder you never met Artie. His personality and yours are exactly alike.

Alice Le Due—I bet the minute he sees her it will be Wallie's romance repeated; eh, Maudie?

Leila Westcott—Oh, girls!

Dad Waddell—They have brought him discretion. I remember—

Leila Westcott—I'm going to accept Sam's offer. I'm positive Artie is his author. Something tells me—

Alzy—I mean a dinner for us on your 'appy wedding d'y, Leila.

Book Agent (entering)—You have often heard Artie Writem say that the woman he married would have to be noble and strong? Well, that's what he got. He just married Hercules of the strong lady act—the

About the Modern Jail.

A jail is a place where people go when they are too poor to get bail or hire the right kind of a lawyer.

The object of a jail is to protect society from amateur criminals until they have been in jail long enough to become incurable. They are then let loose in order that the newspapers may be able to print enough information about the activities to keep up their circulation.

Jails are usually made out of stone and iron. The stone, which is purposely thick, is used to keep out the rain and to protect the prisoners from sunshine and fresh air. The iron is used to enter their souls with.

PROPER ATTENTION TO COWS

Kindness Is Good Thing to Observe Around Dairy From Standpoint of Dollars and Cents.

Some cows ought to be milked three times a day. Their bags get so pressed with milk that they cause a great deal of pain. And then the milk will be better if drawn before it has stayed so long in the overheated udder.

DAIRY

CULLING OUT BOARDER COWS

Farmers Need Not Maintain Charitable Institutions for Poor Animals—Keep Records.

If a farmer feeds a cow $1 worth of feed and she gives back 65 cents worth of milk—no this is not fiction, and the man was not a fool who fed the cow. He thought she was his faithful friend, and all the time she was ruthlessly short-changing him. She is not the only one. It just happens that she got found out. Maybe you have a cow in your herd that skims the milk before she gives it to you.

Twenty-six Dickinson county farmers organized a cow-testing association last year, with the help of the Kansas Agricultural college. They hired a man to do the testing. He worked at the home of each man one day every month. The cost to the farmers was about $1.50 for each cow for the year. There were 379 cows entered.

Before the plan had been in operation very long some of the farmers began to sell cows. They would say the men were beginning to be married people, have to be noble and strong? Well, that's what he got. He just married Hercules of the strong lady act—the

ATTENTION GIVEN TO COWS

Astonishing How Many Dairymen Are Keeping Bovines Instead of Animals Keeping Them.

The man who is making money in dairying is the man who thinks. It is astonishing how many men are keeping cows instead of cows keeping them, because the men do not think. A thinking man will not keep cows that do not pay a profit on the feed they consume. There is no way to determine the value of the individual cows except by keeping an account of the cost of feed and the value of the products of each cow.

This method often leads to increasing the profits by more judicious feeding and more efficient milking, or in other words it requires giving each cow individual attention.

Some dairymen may think that this work requires too much time, but after trying it out they are usually surprised to find how little time it really takes to keep an accurate record of the business. Every dairyman should be a business man.

Regularity Is Important.

Regularity in milking and feeding is an important thing in connection with successful dairying. The cow looks for her feed at a certain time and if she is accustomed to being milked at a certain time, she will do better if that plan is followed systematically.

Benefit of Silo.

The silo has proven itself a great benefit each year and it will do just as well in years to come. This season has been an object lesson in favor of silos on every farm where stock is kept.

HAD NO RATIONS TO SPARE

Good Reason Why Confederate Commander Was Willing to See His Prisoners Escape.

When, at Gaines Mill in 1862, the 5th Texas captured two whole regiments of Union soldiers, the Texans were all very proud of their achievement.

One of them has described an amusing scene in connection with the surrender.

When the Union Officers gave up their swords to Col. Upton, they were so prompt in the duty that he was compelled to lay down the frying pan which he carried in the place of a sword and hold the weapons presented in his arms.

Just then he noticed a commotion at the far end of the captured regiment. That was near the timber, and a squad of the prisoners were making an effort to pass by "Big John" Ferris of Company B, who stood there unaided, endeavoring to intercept them.

Springing upon a log, the armful of swords dangling about in every direction, Upton shouted:

"John Ferris, what are you trying to do now?"

"I am trying to keep these fellows from escaping," yelled Big John.

"Let them go, you fool!" shouted back Upton. "We'd rather fight than feed them!"

Followed Her Vanished Nest.

This story of a thrush that missed, and caught its train comes from Limavady, in Ulster, Ireland. The bird had built its nest under a first-class carriage immediately over the steam heating pipe, and notwithstanding that the carriage traveled between Limavady and Londonderry, the nest contained four eggs.

The institution of the summer service of trains caused trouble. The carriage left Londonderry in the evening at 4:40 instead of 4:50, and when the bird returned, who had presumably been on a foraging expedition, it returned, she found carriage, nest and eggs had disappeared. She was noticed at Londonderry in apparent distress, and the station master apprised Limavady of the circumstances and asked the railway people there to look out for the bird, suggesting that she would probably arrive by the next train. The bird duly arrived at Limavady either by train or air and resumed her task of hatching the eggs.

The sympathetic railway officials have decided to withdraw the carriage from service pending the hatching of the eggs.

Assembly a Success

The Nebraska County chairmen held a very profitable two days session in Lincoln last week. The meeting was open to discussion among the county chairmen, each one of whom had many problems to present to the assembly and many interesting things to tell. It was unanimously decided to adopt the method of outdoor meetings and automobile campaign tours to reach the greatest number of voters. The assembly closed with an automobile tour to Havelock, Raymond and College View. This proved to be a school of instruction and all returned home with the consciousness that a great deal of good has been accomplished The merchants of Lincoln donated all the necessaries for the luncheons to the suffragists. Mrs. Barkley entertained the State officers at her unique home for dinner after the executive meeting.

Teachers Institute

During the week beginning June 5th. one of the most successful Teachers' Institute was held in Pawnee City. The Instructors were Prof. Neale, Prof. Stryker, Supt. R. C. Clark of the Industrial School and Supt. J. N. Clark of Pawnee City. The work in Manual Training especially received a great deal of interest from the teachers and a really surprising amount of fine work was done in the weeks time by the girls. Prizes were offered for the best work the first being won by a Table Rock girl, Miss Helen Vincie Foale. At the closing session the teachers adopted the following resolutions:

Preamble. We, the undersigned teachers of Pawnee County, believe in efficiency in our schools, economy in their administration, and a capable representative to guide us in educational affairs.

Whereas, first, Miss Wolford has in the past ably fulfilled all these conditions, has worked faithfully to gain the best results, has secured unity among the teachers of the county and cooperation of the patrons and the school boards, and has created among the pupils interest and enthusiasm;

Whereas, second, she has secured for our institutes the best possible talent, and arranged for us the most practical and result-producing work; she has settled difficulties in a tactful, generous, but just manner;

Whereas, third, she is now engaged in securing for the rural schools a more satisfactory and fair adjustment of our educational system; she is working to overcome the various forms of dominance found in the state and to secure for the rural schools and their teachers a higher standard of efficiency;

Whereas, fourth, such efforts, to be effective, require tact, courage and experience, and that Miss Wolford possesses these qualities in a high degree; therefore,

Be it resolved, first, that we, the teachers of Pawnee County, express our appreciation of her efforts and pledge our continued confidence and support; that we ask her again to be a candidate for the office of County Superintendant; that we recommend her to the voters of Pawnee County and ask them for their loyal support in our behalf;

Be it resolved, second, that we ask the voters of Pawnee County to take the office of County Superintendant out of politics, and that they work to bring about greater stability and permanency in educational affairs.

Intoxicants—and what I have Learned about Them.

When I was quite a boy, about sixteen or eighteen years old, one of our neighbors, living about a mile and a half from us, died. He was an old man, a forigner, had quite a family of children, some of them young men. In the vicinity were several families of the same nationality, who wished to do him honor, and to sympathise with the bereaved; and they had a way of their own; a custom, brought from the old country, in which to do it.

The afflicted family lived in a one room log cabin; of the primitive times in Wayne County Pennsylvania. After the necessary duties were attended to, a table was placed in the center of the room and loaded with vessels of whiskey, dringing cups and pipes and tobacco for all. "Take hold and help yourselves."

Now if you think they wasn't prepared for some heathenish performances, you are mistaken.

So after they indulged a while, they wanted something else, a change and they had it, for a certainty. They stood the corpse upon its feet in the corner of the room, tacked a sheet over it, moved the table and its load, and all of the other furniture, of the room, out of doors and went to work and indulged in a dance. I was not there, but a young woman of my acquaintance, who was there, told me that was what they did.

It shocked me; and it puzzled me for a good many years. Something over a year ago I commenced to write on the subject; but could not give, to me, a sensible reason for such conduct.

About two weeks ago I was looking in Webster's Unabridged Dictionery for the defination or meaning of the words "nicotine," "alcohol" and also of "narcotic" and some other words and their relative meaning; the scales fell from my eyes and I saw at once, what induced them to indulge in such inhuman orgies. When I read that an intoxicant is that which intoxicates, an intoxicating agent, as alcohol, opium, and laughing gas are intoxicants, and to intoxicate was to poison, to drug, to make drunk, to inebriate, to excite or to stupefy by strong drink, or by a narcotic substance.

And that narcasis was a privation of sense or consciousness, due to a narcotic; and that a narcotic benumbed, produced numbness and torpor, having the properties of a narcotic: and that intoxication is a poisoning as by a spirifous or narcotic substance. I saw at once the cause of such debassing conduct. They were affected by the nicotine in the tobacco. They were intoxicated by the whiskey which the dictionery says is to poison, to drug, inebiate, to excite or stupefy by strong drink, or by narcotic substance, and those shameful orgies were the result.

Then I remembered some of the harpenings in our town last winter and since. One night last winter a middle aged man and a young man started from our resort of promise with, as the yankees used to say, a load or loaded. Before they had gone two blocks the young man, fell with his load and could not get up and the other man couldn't get him up and keep him up. It was quite cold and they disturbed one of the young men of the vicinity who got wheelbarrow and loaded him on it, took him home and put him to bed, and his wife; poor woman; did the suffering.

A short time ago a company of irresponsible, fifteen or twenty, hit the town, attracted no doubt by the same resort, got their supply, distributed themselves along the railroad south and southeast of town and in a short time showed the same unmistakable signs of poisoning, stupification and deprivation of sense, due to a narcotic.

It might have been beer that made them drunk but that makes no difference, the signs of poisoning and the narcotic effects were the same. Beer is a fermented liquor made from any malted grain, but commonly from barley malt, with hops or some other substance to impart a bitter flavor.

Another account or description of beer is that the composition is not accurately known. Principal; water; alcohol; gum; malt; sugar; glycerine; acids; resin; essential oils, from the hops and mineral salts. Capsules of sodium bicarbinate and abundantly narcotic,

LITTLE TRICKERY TRIXY

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS.

Trixy gazed wistfully at the patient who, from time to time, went up the stone steps that led to Dr. Gunthal's office.

"Oh! For a pain or something — that I, too, might ascend those steps!" she sighed and caught sight of her rosy, sparkling beauty in the mirror. "I do not remember ever having looked interestingly pale."

She gazed out of the window again. A slim, dainty girl who walked with a limp was making her way slowly toward the door that bore the name of Hermann Gunthel, M. D.

"Even a limp gets one through those portals," sighed Trixy. "Why, oh, why, am I so abnormally healthy?"

Trixy worked herself into many a fever of vague imaginings. Romances galore she wove about the doctor and his feminine patients and smiled wistfully when she pictured them one and all fainting into the doctor's arms. Somehow, Trixy could conceive of no visit to a physician wherein a faint played no part.

"Certainly I would faint—if only from sheer joy at being near him—if I ever got the chance," mused Trixy. She pictured her golden head falling artlessly—she knew it would be smallagainst his shoulder, and his hand stroking her brow.

With the wonderful thought of Dr. Gunthel's soft hand on her brow inspiration came to Trixy.

She would faint. That very day, when he came up the street in his small runabout, she would dash out on her own steps and swoon right before his very eyes. He would pick her up tenderly and carry her into that charmed office and administer to her.

During the afternoon Trixy spent many moments contemplating her wardrobe. She gazed with longing eyes at her new shell pink silk.

"I would love to wear it for the fainting fit, but I might just fall on some mud or something and it would be ruined." She sighed and looked at her gray velvet walking dress. "I could fall all over the street and not be in that without hurting it," she reflected, "and after all gray rather suits me."

Toward 5 o'clock, when the doctor usually came in for his evening office hours, Trixy stationed herself beside the window. Her heart was beating a trifle more rapidly than on previous watches and she hoped she would not bump her head or do anything unromantic when she performed her swoon before the doctor's eyes.

When she heard the familiar motor horn belonging to his car, she jumped up and went swiftly out onto the stepe.

Had there been a soft spot on those stone steps Trixy assuredly would have sought it. As it was she had to anticipate a fall that must be graceful and without danger to her physical being.

She arrived at the bottom of the steps just as the doctor drew up at his curb. He glanced up at her and a fleeting smile swept over his face.

A second later Trixy rushed to his side. He had tumbled in a heap beside the car. She knelt down and drew his head to her lap. Her breath was coming and going in quick pants. She gazed helplessly up and down the street. There was no one in sight and she did not know what to do with the unconscious man.

She was about to let him down gently and seek aid when the doctor opened his eyes. The color returned to his ruddy cheeks and he collected himself with startling suddenness.

"You fainted," cried Trixy.

"That was a very foolish thing to do," murmured the doctor. "Very foolish," he repeated. "I have had some trying cases at the hospital today." The fleeting smile again crossed his eyes. "I am glad it was you who found me," he said, with charming candor. "I have wanted to know you." He had risen and was standing looking down into Trixy's astonished but happy eyes. "I took this house because I saw you sitting in the window the day I was looking for an office."

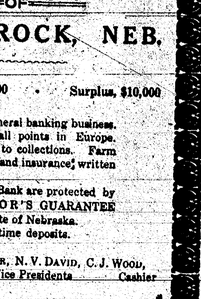
Trixy wondered if she had really accomplished her swoon and this day dream was a part of it. She gazed into the doctor's face and found it expectant, as if he waited to hear her voice.

"You should not be standing here talking," she said quickly; "it is evident that you are working far too hard or you would not have fainted."

"But I did not exactly faint," confessed the doctor. "I was really frightfully tired and wanted just to drop down and rest for a moment. The sight of you, so near and yet so far, suggested an idea and—I carried it out successfully. Are you very angry?"

"Angry? No," she said, "because you undoubtedly saved me from bumping my own head." She smiled. "Come in with me and have a refreshing cup of tea. I have a story to tell you."

"I am no longer tired," the doctor said joyfully, "but a cup of tea is just what I need."



INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By O. E. SELLERS, Director of Evening Department The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

LESSON FOR JUNE 14

THE FRIEND OF SINNERS.

LESSON TEXT—Luke 18:9-14; 19:1-10. GOLDEN TEXT—"I came not to call the righteous but sinners." Mark 2:17.

The first section of our lesson is the beginning of a new paragraph (see R. V.) and contains one of the Master's best-known parables. Immediately preceding this is the parable of the unjust judge and the importunate widow. We are plainly told (v. 9) why the Master spake this parable. It is easy to say that those who trusted in their own righteousness and "set all others at naught" (R. V.) were the Pharisees, but such is not the case; and this parable is a warning to us, lest we also trust our own righteousness (Isa. 64:6). Using this particular class as a background, Jesus paints, in words of simple grandeur, a picture quite familiar throughout the ages. In it he reveals the falseness of human standards and declares the judgment of heaven. The contrast is vivid. Let us look at (1) the Pharisee. The illuminating phrase is in the words "He prayed with himself" (v. 11). Ostentatiously the Pharisee separated themselves from their fellow-men and this separation seems to have extended even into his prayer life, and he is withdrawn from God also. This is an appalling picture of the man who trusts only himself. Examine his prayer and we see the supposed prayer is really a paean of self-exaltation.

Humility of Heart.

(2) The Publican regarded himself as "the sinner" (v. 13 R. V. marg.) He knew he was a great, an infamous offender against law and grace. He had sacrificed everything to acquire money. He comes with no outward show except an abundant evidence of the shame and humility of his heart. He also was excluded from men but not from God. Burdened with the sense of his sin, he casts himself upon the mercy of God. He is absolutely devoid of any trust in himself, any contempt for others, and makes a straight, earnest, passionate abandonment of himself and his need to God. He goes away "justified" (judged right). Why? Because he had taken the right place, a sinner's place before God, and found pardon.

II. The Second Section is a story, and deals with an individual case, Zaccheus, who was a "chief Publican." Jesus sought him (see Golden Text), whereas Zaccheus was animated by curiosity, and the writer informs us he was small of stature, hence the necessity of climbing the sycamore tree. He went up the tree because of curiosity, he came down because of conviction. He wanted to see this man in the center of the crowd and was amazed to hear Jesus call him by name.

Must Yield Wealth.

Zaccheus was rich, dishonest, dissatisfied, but desperately in earnest, and a man of prompt decision. The estimation of his fellow-citizens is indicated by v. 7. Notwithstanding all of this Zaccheus was not so wedded to his money as to let it keep him out of the kingdom. In chapter 18 we read of the rich man who "lacked one thing." He was lost—"went away". because he would not yield his wealth (see also 18:26, 27). Zaccheus took place within the house of Zaccheus we are not told, but for the Master to enter was looked upon either as amazing ignorance of Zaccheus' character or else extreme carelessness concerning the maintenance of his own character. Jesus was dealing with one man, not the multitude, hence he leaves them to their amazement. While this is true, yet we can surmise something of the interview by the result (v. 8) for Zaccheus seems to have made a public avowal of his ethical and moral change of heart. Note the steps: (1) He "sought to see Jesus" (John 3:14, 15; Isa. 45:22. (2) He was very much in earnest, "climbed a sycamore tree," Luke 13:24. (3) He made no delay, "make haste" Isa. 55:6. The result was that of great blessing to the people and joy in the heart of Zaccheus. (4) He was obedient, joyously and promptly. The genuineness of his transformation was evidenced by the way it affected his pocketbook. He made abundant restitution and gave bountifully to the poor. The love of God shed abroad in the heart of a miserly, seifish man or church will promote honesty both to God and man.

From the combined parable and story we can read the lesson that Jesus is the friend of sinners and not of sin.

Thus the friend of sinners seeks and saves man. He sees the acts and the attitude of men and is ready to justify those whose attitude is that of humility and supplication. He seeks men even as he sought Zaccheus, and as he saves he produces in them those fruits of righteousness which are the evidence and demonstration of their salvation. The scribes and the Pharisees saw Jesus eating with the publicans and expressed their disapproving surprise only to receive his rebuke. "They that are whole have no need of a physician, but they that are sick: I came not to call the righteous."

How to deal with the growing menace of the militant suffrage agitation is becoming a problem of tremendous import to the British government. All efforts of their well wishers to persuade the militants that they are retarding instead of advancing the cause have been in vain; they are convinced that nothing but force will achieve their aims.

Theodore Roosevelt as the progressive party candidate for governor of New York is the desire of the state progressive campaign advisory committee which met to consider the campaign and the attitude of the former president toward national and state affairs. The confusion as to the number of persons who perished in the Empress of Ireland disaster has been one of the distressing features of the tragedy and the uncertainty was further emphasized when figures, declared by the Canadian Pacific Railway Steamship company to be official, have raised the death list to 1,024 from 969—eighty-five more.

TRUST BILLS PASS

HAVE BEEN SENT TO SENATE FOR ACTION

STORSTAD STILL A PRISONER

Norwegian Collier Is Tied Up in Montreal—Change of Officials Marks Event in Indian Affairs.

Western Newspaper Union News Service.

Washington, D. C.—All three bills on the administration trust legislation program have passed the house and were sent to the senate for action. Opposition melted when the final test came and the motion went through quickly. The Covington interstate trade commission bill was passed without a record vote; the Clayton omnibus anti trust measure received 275 votes to 54 against it, and the vote on the Rayburn railroad capitalization bill was 325 to 12.

Shake Up of Officials.

Walthill, Neb.—The shake-up of officials on the Omaha and Winnebago reservations probably marks the most thorough change in the history of the two agencies. The administration of affairs, particularly on the Omaha reserve, has been the subject of complaints the past two years. The policy of the department in executing strict fatherly control and supervision over the Indians has been extended somewhat to the white farmers leasing Indians' lands, all of which has brought about much friction between local officials, the white farmers and Indians. The superintendent now in charge, John S. Spear, will be transferred to South Dakota, and a new agent, who will devote his entire time to the Omaha reservation, will take his place.

Heavy Snows in the West.

Reno, Nev.—Snowstorms accompanied by sudden drops in temperature, were reported at several points in Nevada. In Reno and vicinity slight snow flurries began at 1 o'clock in the morning and continued until noon and temperatures as low as 27 degrees prevailed. Heavier snowfalls were reported in the mountain districts and at Minnemucca and Carlin. Reports from along the line of the Nevada, California & Oregon railway said the snowstorm extended as far north as Lakeview, Ore., three inches covering the ground at that place. Practically no damage is being done to crops in this section.

Collier Still a Prisoner.

Montreal.—The Norwegian collier Storstad, which rammed and sank the Empress of Ireland in the St. Lawrence, still pokes her hatered nose up against the Dominion Coal company's dock in Montreal, an impatient prisoner of the admiralty court of Canada. Captain Anderson is anxious to get the Storstad to a drydock for repairs, preparatory to resuming her coal-carrying business, but a bailiff is in possession.

Nebraska Socialist Platform.

Omaha.—Unrestricted and equal suffrage for every citizen of Nebraska, without distinction as to sex, race or color; the abolition of government by gunmen; the legalizing of the boycott and of peaceful picketing and many other reforms are advocated and demanded by the socialist party of Nebraska in a platform promulgated by that body. The platform is the product of the socialist convention which ended here Tuesday night.

Shot for Failure to Make Sale.

Norfolk, Neb.—Joseph Wagner, a prominent farmer, living six miles north of town, was shot and seriously wounded Thursday by Philip Fink, a seventeen Norfolk boy. Fink had been discharged by Wagner's brother during the day. He attempted to sell a revolver to Wagner, and when the deal was not made he fired two shots, one taking effect in the left side.

Since May 27 nearly eight inches of rain has fallen in the city and its environs and heavy rains have drenched a territory several miles square during this time.

Alfalfa is a profitable crop for the beef producers of eastern and southeastern Nebraska, declared Prof. R. R. Snyder of the state university farm. In addition he declared that experiments at the state farm showed that where farmers in the eastern and southeastern sections of the state could raise alfalfa they had a distinct advantage over feeds in Iowa, Indiana and Illinois. CARRANZA OPPOSED TO ARMISTICE

INSISTS ON HAVING A FREE HAND IN MATTER.

NO STRINGS TO HIS PROMISE

Carranza Willing to Participate, But Says There Must Be No Armistice in Internal Matters.

Western Newspaper Union News Service.

Washington, D. C.—Unofficial reports are current in Washington that General Carranza, chief of the revolutionary forces in Mexico, was willing to participate in the mediation conference at Niagara Falls on condition that there should be no armistice between his forces and the Huerta government and that Mexican internal questions to be considered should concern only such affairs as had been developed by the American occupation of Vera Cruz. Officials here would not discuss the situation in the absence of direct information as to what attitude the constitutionalist leaders would take toward the recent proposals from the South American mediators, but an answer from Carranza to the communication of the mediators was expected to be forwarded from Saltillo by Monday. Should Carranza's position coincide with that outlined here, the general opinion was that mediation negotiations would proceed and that a way would be found for delegates from the constitutionalists forces to participate in negotiations for ultimate peace in Mexico.

No Strings to Huerta's Promise.

Niagara Falls, Ont.—No strings are attached to General Huerta's promise to resign the Mexican presidency as soon as this country is "politically pacified." His delegates to the mediation conference say publicly that he does not intend to hide behind any technicalities. In following the newspaper accounts of the conference here the Mexican delegation reached the conclusion that their recent statement setting forth the attitude of General Huerta toward demands for his retirement had been misinterpreted in some quarters. It had been said that under the language of his pledge to retire, when the country was politically pacified, General Huerta might insist on holding office until all guerrilla bands were dispersed.

Niagara Falls, Ont.—Mediation now waits on General Carranza, commander-in-chief of the constitutionalist forces in Mexico. He has in his possession a communication from the three South American diplomats who opens the door for constitutionalist representation in the conference here. Upon his word depends whether the entire Mexican problem will be settled by diplomacy or whether the constitutionalists will continue to fight their way to Mexico City. The mediators have, in a dignified way, smoothed the way for constitutionalist participation. The United States government wants them to accept. A rejection of the invitation may eventually mean the withdrawal by the Washington government of the moral support it has been extending to the constitutionalist cause. The mediators are hopefully confident that General Carranza will send envoys here.

Mediators Get Restless.

Niagara Falls, Ont.—With a conference between the American delegates and the A. B. C. mediators scheduled, there was hope that some light might break through the clouds which have shrouded the mediation proceedings. Justice Lamar and Frederick W. Lehmann have not met with the mediators for almost a week.

The Mexican delegates here are deeply concerned over the action Secretary Bryan may take as to the munitions of war aboard the Antilla.

Declined to Carry Ammunition.

Washington.—A report from the cruiser Albany says the Japanese steamer Zeiyo Maru arrived at Salina Cruz, Mexico, on Sunday and left for Paru without landing arms or ammunition. It is understood by Admiral Howard that the Japanese liner declined to carry them.

Niagara Falls, Ont.—Tampico once more threatens the peace of the United States and Mexico. Fearful that events may transpire there—possibly within a few days—of a nature that would disrupt mediation negotiations, many of the principals of the conference here are filled with apprehension. The anxiety is provoked because of the situation in which the United States has been placed by General Huerta's determination to blockade the port of Tampico to stop the landing of munitions of war for the constitutionalists.

Critics Are Action of Mediators.

El Paso, Tex.—A semi-official statement from General Carranza's headquarters at Durango, criticising the actions of the A. B. C. mediators at Niagara Falls, and an announcement from General Villa reiterating his allegiance as a military leader to Carranza, were the developments of the Mexican situation here. Villa arrived at Chihuahua City from Torreon on his way for a military duress on the border here. Carranza was reported as having begun preparations to move by way of Torreon to Saltillo.

The Bride and the Bridal Gown

BRIDES to be, more than any one else, are interested in the superb trousseau made for the president's daughter. But a review of the gowns made for her and other members of the bridal cortege, reveals an adaptation of the present modes to individual taste and refinement that is interesting to every one.

The most noteworthy feature about all the gowns was simplicity. In a season of conglomerations and elaborations that often arrive at the stage of fussiness and shapelessness the gowns of Miss Wilson's trousseau were simple in design and yet contrived to strike the notes of the modes. Kursman, to whom the daughters of multimillionaires appear to turn with one accord when they go a-trousseau, understood, or pleasantly learned of outfitting the White House bride, and accomplished it in a manner to wonder at.

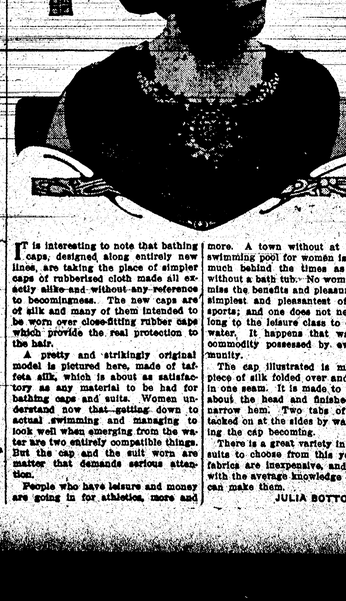
Here is a picture of the bride, photographed in her wedding gown. The gown is of ivory white satin, made with a long train, and the lines of the skirt unbroken except by a flat application of magnificent point lace. The bodice is draped in the quaint and fascinating surplice fashion at one side with a sash of lace drawn over the shoulder of the opposite side. The underbodice is of chiffon laid in irregular plaits and fastened with a small brooch at the point of the "V" shaped neck. It was a triumph.

The very long and moderately full tulle veil was arranged in a cap for the head, with a wreath of orange blossoms set just back of the gathered fulness at the front. The short face veil is thrown back, falling free from the head, but the remainder of the veil falls from the cap, into which it is gathered across the back of the head.

The bouquet of white orchids with many loops of gauze ribbon and valley lilies was provided with the usual pendants of ribbon and sprays of flowers, the longest reaching to the bottom of the gown.

The gown may be taken as a lovely type of the reputation bridal dress with a concession to the present mode in the hanging of the skirt and the open, uncovered throat. The sleeves are long and close, with the usual frill of lace at the wrist.

Really Clever Bathing Caps



IT is interesting to note that bathing caps, designed along entirely new lines, are taking the place of simple caps of rubberized cloth made all exactly alike and without any reference to becomingness. The new caps are of silk and many of them intended to be worn over close-fitting rubber caps which provide the real protection to the hair.

The pretty and strikingly original model is pictured here, made of taffeta silk, which is about as satisfactory as any material to be had for bathing caps and suits. Women understand now that getting down to actual swimming and managing to look well when emerging from the water are two entirely compatible things. But the cap and the suit worn are matter that demands serious attention.

People who have leisure and money are going in for athletics, more and more. A town without at least one swimming pool for women is about as much behind the times as a house without a bath tub. No woman should miss the benefits and pleasures of the simplest and pleasantest of summer sports; and one does not need to belong to the leisure class to enjoy the water. It happens that water is a commodity possessed by every community.

The cap illustrated is made of a piece of silk folded over and stitched in one seam. It is made to fit snugly about the head and finished with a narrow hem. Two tabs of silk are tacked on at the sides by way of making the cap becoming.

There is a great variety in caps and suits to choose from this year. The fabrics are inexpensive, and any one with the average knowledge of sewing can make them.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

ANTELOPES ARE VERY SCARCE

Pronghorn Variety Is Being Hunted Nearly to Extinction—Exceedingly Swift Animal.

Denver, Colo.—It would seem to be something of a feat to climb such a desert boulders as are found in southern Colorado. The men who climbed those rocks camped for several days at the base of a pile of them while on an antelope hunting expedition. The pronghorn antelopes which at one time abounded throughout the great West have been hunted of late years to such an extent that they are becoming very scarce. They are exceedingly swift animals, however, and in a straightaway chase it takes a horse of unusually good bottom to enable the hunter to get within rifle range. With the black-powder rifles of 20 years ago, and their range of 250 to 300 yards, there was little danger of the extinction of the antelope, but with the present-day high power smokeless powder rifles with telescope sights, the poor antelope is a much more frequent victim. Trusting to his great speed he seems to take delight in keeping "just out of range" and this he could do to a nicety with the older hunters who carried black-powder Winchesters, running ahead about three hundred and fifty or four hundred yards, and stacking his pace most provokingly when the hunter slackened his. He seemed to delight in being one of a party to many a "wild goose chase." But in spite of his extraordinary vision due to his great telescopic eyes, the antelope apparently cannot adjust

HAYNES

We do not ask you to do our experimenting

During the twenty-one years in which we have been building motor cars, we have never asked the public to do our experimenting. Every unit of the Haynes car is designed, checked and thoroughly tested before receiving its final O.K.

The American Simms Dual High Tension Magneto is positively the most simple dual ignition ever devised. It was recommended by the Haynes engineers after careful speed and compression tests proved beyond doubt that it was unusually efficient and absolutely dependable.

The Lece-Neville Starting and Lighting Separate Unit System was chosen in 1910 because of its high efficiency and has been used on the Haynes car ever since, although numerous other starting and lighting systems have been tested in our laboratories from time to time. This system is dust-proof and has proven itself 100% efficient in every instance. There is no apparatus, however, on the

that has been subjected to a more severe test than the Vulcan Electric Gear Shift. This device is now a greater improvement than the starting and lighting system, because it not only simplifies the control but positively prevents stripping of gears. It is the shortest gear shift in the world. It is not radically new, being just a natural development of the electro-magnet, which has been in use since 1830. The same principle is used by steel companies to lift tons and tons of metal; the electric railways adopted it long ago to shift switches automatically, and the little hammer that strikes the bell in your telephone is actuated by the impulse of a similar magnet.

The Haynes car is not an experiment. It represents the height of refinement, convenience and reliability in motor car design. It's the year-to-the-good car.

DOG'S DEATH

Owner Couldn't Sleep for Thinking of Loss of Pet; So He Sues Chief of Police.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—When Chief of Police William Haslett of Tarentum shot and killed a dog owned by John H. Huey, the latter was sorely grieved. So much so, in fact, that he brought suit against Haslett asking damages to the extent of $35 for the loss of his kyoodle.

The bill of particulars is couched in terms of endearment for the dead canine, and the claim for damages is based on the following grounds:

That the loss of the dog has caused Huey much distress and discomfort, and that his health has been impaired because of the death of the canine, as it caused him to lose sleep at nights, and also deprived him of the animal's love and affection."

Huey declared that money cannot assuage his grief, but all things considered, he should be paid for the dog.

DUST DIDN'T BLIND SLEUTH

New York Detective Sees Man Beating Rug and Remembers Old Theft.

New York.—Detective Martin Owens of the West Forty-seventh street police station, was walking along West Forty-third street when, on top of the tenement house at 203, he saw Harry Smith, a tenant, beating a Persian rug. The dust flew out of the rug at a rate that attracted the attention of the detective.

"That looks like the rug, by the description, that was stolen from Mrs. Dora Walter of 209 West Forty-third street on October 4, 1912," said Owens to himself, pat as a walking encyclopedia, of records. Then he went up and arrested Smith and took him and the rug to the station. Later Mrs. Waller identified the rug as her property.

W. A. Albright left Monday for Fortescue where he will assume the management of one of the Lynds Mill and Elevator Co's elevators. His many friends are glad to see him secure a position congenial to himself, but after being over forty years a resident of Dawson and thirty seven years in the elevator and the satisfactory manner in which he has dealt with all, is the cause for much regret. He will be in Dawson frequently as his family will be here for some time.

When Frank Curtis went to remove cap from a pop bottle one day last week the bottle suddenly exployed throwing glass and pop in a very forceful manner and the front finger of his right hand found lodgement for a piece of glass. He went on for a day or two with his work thinking nothing of the matter until it began to swell and give a great deal of pain. He the sought out a physician who dressed the wound just in time to prevent blood-poisoning. The injured member is now mending and will be able to return to his work in a short time.

Fire of mysterious origin, which evidently started in the rooms on the second floor of John Saner's meat market shortly before five o'clock Monday morning, damaged the fixtures and tools of the market and the stock of meats are the flames could be controlled. When discovered the fire had gained considerable headway, but the department had little trouble in controlling it after the water had been turned on. In addition to the loss on the stock and fixtures of Mr. Saner, the building sustained considerable damage, and the household goods of James Gallagher, which were stored in the upstair rooms, were badly damaged by fire and water. Mr. Saner's loss is well covered by insurance in the amount of $900 in the Royal Insurance company, but we have failed to ascertain whether either the building or Mr. Gallager's goods were insured

As the rooms in which the fire is supposed to have started have been unused since Mr. Gallagher started on his summer vacation a couple of months ago it is difficult to understand how the fire originated. The building is owned by the Callam estate, and will be put in shape for reoccupancy at once.

LANCASTER TOURS.

There have been four auto tours in Lancaster county under the leadership of Mrs. Frank Hall, the county chairman. Even where there are no strong suffrage workers the town officials have received them with enthusiasm and made the party welcome officially and personally. All the old-time bitterness and denunciation has vanished from the speech and manner of the suffrage worker. This question is being chased up and down the state and back and forth and wideways with the good nature that is distinctive of the movement in Nebraska where men and women have worked and played together since the fathers settled it.—Pilfie About Voting.

One of the women speakers at the St. Louis anti-suffrage meeting wanted to know who is going to take care of her children while she is voting. If some impolite man had been in the audience, he might have asked her what she did with them when she went out to play bridge. The idea seems to have found lodgment in some minds that the enjoyment of the ballot carries with it the necessity of devoting many hours to the task of voting. They ought to ask the men about this. They will discover that five or ten minutes is all that is necessary to set aside for this task, once or possibly twice a year, or just about as long as it takes to run over to the corner grocery and make a selection. It might be argued that in order to make the vote an intelligent one the women ought to read up on the issues or go out and hear the discussions of them by campaign speakers. This is true. All voters should do that, but not one man in ten takes the trouble to attend political rallies and his reading up on issues is desultory. It is the veriest sort of piffle to talk about voting interfering with the work or home duties of women. That has no place in a discussion of the subject. Those women who say they do not want the ballot lack in courage and civic spirit. They are trying to dodge responsibility for government, while willing to take advantage of any benefits it may give.—Editor Dobbins in the Lincoln News.

Fifteen Reasons Why I Am in Favor of Universal Woman Suffrage.

By O. E. Garwood, Deputy Attorney General of Colorado.

1. Because for thirty years I have seen the fairness and justice of the equal suffrage principle demonstrated in Colorado.

2. Because Colorado' experience shows that the vast majority of women vote wisely, conscientiously, and intelligently.

3. Because I have never heard an argument against woman suffrage that can not, with equal force, be urged against man suffrage.

4. Because there is no logical reason why half the human race should be denied their share in making the laws and selecting the officers that govern the whole.

5. Because, since their enfranchisement, the women of Colorado have placed in the statutes "the sanest, most humane, most progressive and most scientific laws relating to the child to be found in any statute books in the world."

6. Because Colorado, with the help of women, has enacted model laws securing the property rights of married women, providing for the protection of widows' and orphans' estates and for the care of the delinquent and dependent classes.

7. Because, since the enfranchisement of women in Colorado fifty towns, twelve counties and the principal residence portions of Denver, its largest city, have abolished the saloon evil.

8. Because I have never known an instance where the use of the ballot has caused a woman to lose her womanliness or neglect her home or family.

9. Because there is no just basis for political inequality between men and women.

10. Because I have unbounded confidence in American womanhood.

11. Because, by denying women the ballot, our political system places American women in the same class as other unfranchised members of society, viz, minors, aliens, illiterates, imbeciles, idiots and convicts.

12. Because the denial to women of the right to vote violates the fundamental American doctrine that there shall be no taxation without representation.

13. Because there is no sex distinction in the enforcement of the law and there should be none in the enactment.

14. Because the correct solution of America's social and political problems—municipal, state, and national—needs the advice and assistance through the ballot of American women.

15. Because tested by actual experience, equal suffrage means better laws, better conditions, better government and consequently a better society.

Sentiment for suffrage is growing in Douglas county as the question is discussed more and more. Interest is also increasing and many verbal arguments are staged in the street cars, on street corners and other public places.

Mrs. Mary B. Munson of Kansas, who has been speaking for suffrage in Omaha during the past few weeks, has challenged Mrs. J. W. Crumpacker, the anti-suffrage speaker, to a debate. Mrs. Crumpacker has not yet announced her acceptance of the challenge. The debate, if arranged, probably will be held in the city council chamber.

TREE AND PLANT DISEASES.

Congressman Lever, author of the bill appropriating large sums for federal aid to farmers, ventures to assert that the loss by plant disease amounted last year to 10 per cent of the total value of all crops raised in the United States, or approximately $500,000,000.

To Tell Time at Night.

Awaking in the night and wondering what time it may be, who has not longed to see the clock without getting up and striking a light? To make this longing easy to satisfy, a firm in Paris has just put on the market a clock that by pressing a button is made to project a picture of its face, in a ray of light, upon the ceiling. This clock, which looks like a young cannon, stands upon a box containing three dry batteries. Its mechanism is in a metal tube, at one end of which is an ordinary dial. The push-button can be placed under the pillow or upon a table beside the bed. When one wants to see the time in the night one presses the button; this lights the lamp, which projects upon the ceiling or upon the wall a greatly magnified picture of its face, so that one can lie comfortably in bed and read the time at a glance. Another push of the button extinguishes the lamp.

Buys Livery Barn

On Friday of last week a deal went thru wherein Art Martin became owner of the Table Rock Livery barn formerly owned by Wm. Crawford.

Art is one of those rustling fellows that just naturally get the business and we know that he will make a success of the livery business. Art's jocular, pleasant way brings custom to him and with the whole livery business here he will have to hustle to take care of it. He will have two cars running all the time and a spare car for emergency. He will continue the use of the big Rambler car. The teams that Art has are fine ones and anyone desiring horse livery will be proud to ride, behind the teams he has.

Crawford intends to make his in the west, Wyoming, and we are told that he expects to get a ranch out there and raise cattle. We hope Bill has good luck and we know that he was making good in the livery business here.

Take Plenty of Time to Eat.

There is a saying that "rapid eating is slow suicide." If you have formed the habit of eating too rapidly you are most likely suffering from indigestion or constipation, which will result eventually in serious illness unless corrected. Digestion begins in the mouth. Foo should be thoroughly masticated and insalivated. Then when you have a fullness in the stomach or feel dull and stupid after eating take one of Chamberlain's Tablets. Many severe cases of stomach trouble and constipation have been cured by the use of these tablets. They are easy to take and most agreeable in effect.

Cloyd was not hurt seriously but he had the ill luck to bend the front forks of his machine.

Obituary

Phila A. Wood was born in Conquest, New York, March 28 1844, died in Table Rock, Nebr., Wednesday, June 10, 1914. She was married to Gabriel R. Martin Table Rock, May 12, 1872. Five children were born to them, whose names and places of residence are as as follows:

Mrs. Myrta H. Linn, Kansas City, Mo.; Dr. Roy W. Martin, Las Vegas, Nevada; Mrs. Mary Norris, Upton, Wyoming; Frank T. Martin, Omaha, Nebr.; Dr. Chas. J. Martin, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

These with two sisters and two brothers are left to mourn her loss. Her husband died four years ago last fall, and both were well and favorably known to a large circle of friends. They were old residents, having come to this place about fifty years ago.

Mrs. Martin, with her husband, united with the Methodist Church of Table Rock about twenty years ago. Her faithful Christian life was evidenced by her daily walk and conversation. In her last illness, of only a few weeks, she manifested her usual patience and resignation, even though her suffering was great. All that loving care of friends and the best medical skill could do was in vain, and death came to the relief of the sufferer at about nine o'clock on Wednesday evening, the tenth.

The funeral services were held at halfpast-two, the pastor, Rev. Howard P. Young, preaching from the text, "Thou shalt be missed, for thy seat shall be empty." A mixed quartet, composed of Mrs. S.C. Bickell, Mrs. F. H. Taylor, J. H. Talbot and Chas. Linn, rendered appropriate music, and there were many floral tributes. The burial service was in charge of the Eastern Star. A large attendence of sympathetic friends was present at the church and cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank our many friends for the comforting sympathy and help in our great bereavement in the death of our mother. Also for the many floral offerings.

A GLANCE AHEAD.

The summer time will soon arrive, that season which is hottest; then every man in town should strive to be the leading swattist. For steaming winds and brazen skies, which make the cornfields flourish, will also multiply the flies, encourage them and nourish. And flies are such a pesky crew, they make one's reason totter; and so the first thing that you do should be to buy a swatter. The good old doctora disagree whene', or they have a chance to; one doc goes haw, another gee - we can't guess where they prance to. But on this question of the flies, they speak up as one saw-bones; they tell us that we ought to rise and wade in blood and rawbones. So haste and send your little son, or, failing him, your daughter, to hard-ware dealer with the mon to buy a trusty swatter And then from every lowly cot we'll drive the pesky critrers, and sing and chortle as we swat, and hard the flies their bitters. And thus we'll benefit the race—that isn't far fetched, is it? We'll make the world a better place in which to sit and visit. Walt Mason.

He sees one of them, a Mr. Callis, on board and follows him. Tom is seized, blindfolded and taken to a house. A sweet-voiced girl later protests against the rigorous treatment of Tom. Van Vechten calls on his uncle, Theodore Van Vechten, the man in "Wall street" known as the "Man of Iron," in search of information regarding Callis, whereabouts of Paige Carew. Detective Flint shows Van Vechten a ring which he found in the House of Mystery. Van recognizes it as belonging to Paige Carew. The sweet-voiced girl helps Tom Phinney escape. A message from London reports that two ladies resembling Miss Carew and her companion, Mrs. Devereaux, sailed for New York some time previously. It develops that the ladies visited the English home of Temple Bonner, owner of the House of Mystery. It is recalled that Temple Bonner had fallen in love with a daughter of Conrad Schuyler who married Max Willard. The other daughter married a man named Devereaux. Bonner and Willard were intimate friends. A search is started for Willard. Van Vechten enters the House of Mystery by the back door in time to keep John Callis from seizing a girl. Interference and being the girl escape, but is captured in connection with the struggle with Callis. Tom Phinney gets a job as master of Rockaway's Pride, a yacht which has been chartered for some mysterious mission. The charterer, Max Willard, and his friends board the yacht at night and Tom hears the voice of the unknown girl. Willard assures Tom that his mission is honorable, and intimates that a great wrong is about to be righted. He gives orders that no one is to leave or board the yacht without his permission.

CHAPTER V.

Della Goes Ashore.

The boat was quickly guided by Mercer's shouts to the point where the two men had drifted down-stream. With one arm hooked over a life-buoy he was sustaining with the other hand the limp form of John Callis, who appeared to be unconscious. A minute or two later both bedraggled figures were upon deck.

The first officer, finding that his captain was obdurate in the matter of "just one jolt" to drive out the cold that had entered into his vitals, spat out an oath and reminded Tom that he might have swum ashore instead of wasting his energies upon a surly beggar like Callis.

"I take it for granted," was the sharp retort, "that you have more sense of your duty than to do such a thing—or to stand here ragchewing with your superior, either. What's the matter with the fellow? He hasn't had time to drown."

Mercer cast a scowling look at the limp form outstretched upon the deck.

"I don't know," he replied, "unless he struck his head upon something floating in the water—a plank, likely. He's bleeding like a stuck pig. I hope to hell he broke his neck!"

After the expression of this kindly sentiment in behalf of the injured man, Mr. Mercer hastened away after a dry change, and Callis was carried to his berth, where an ugly scalp wound was neatly dressed by Hewitt's adept fingers.

"I Am Not Entirely Helpless—If Necessary I Can Appeal to Mr. Willard."

Della had already retired to her own room, and Tom stood watching the steward.

"I don't like the looks of it, captain," said the latter. "He ought to have a doctor. His skull may be cracked."

"If Mr. Willard doesn't show up pretty soon," announced Tom, "I'll take the liberty of fetching one."

But at that very instant a shout from above told him that the charterer had been sighted upon the Kohinur landing, and a few seconds later he heard the launch chugging shoreward.

As he re-entered the cabin a door opened and Della came toward him, still wearing her hat. She knew nothing of the seriousness of Callis' injuries, and Tom considered it unnecessary to tell her.

"Since the excitement has passed without tragedy," she said, her manner and utterance extremely formal, "there is no reason why I shouldn't proceed with my errand—unless I am a prisoner."

"Please don't talk that way," he protested, hurt to the quick by her tone. "You are not a prisoner. And you can't be so unreasonable as to blame me for doing my duty. Even now the launch is fetching Mr. Willard off; he'll be on board in a minute."

She colored. In spite of her outraged feelings, she could not deny that this big, blundering, stupid, simple-hearted man—the adjectives are all her own—affected her in a way that filled her soul with an extraordinary commingling of gladness and terror. She was stirred by the strangest discord of emotions—a joy that was incomprehensible, and a powerful something within her that instinctively rose up and strove mightily to drive it forth. She looked wonderingly upon the man who had wrought this miracle; then an imp of perversity seized her, and she wanted more than anything else to punish him—wound him—make him smart and writhe.

Tom stood watching her with a look of grave concern.

"Surely," he said presently, "you are not thinking of going down-town alone at this time of night? It is past eight o'clock."

She turned upon him pettishly.

"Captain Phinney, do your responsibilities as master of the Kohinur extend beyond the length of her anchor hawser? I am not entirely helpless; if necessary I can appeal to Mr. Willard."

He winced. And at this moment Willard entered the cabin. His mien was anxious and troubled.

"What's this about Callis?" he demanded. Manifestly he had received some sort of account of the occurrence on the way to the yacht.

Tom briefly told him and, to avoid further agitating the girl, suggested that he see Mr. Hewitt at once.

"Before you do," he added, "I would like to know whether the order about going and coming includes this young lady?"

Willard brushed back the strayed lock of white hair with the same tired gesture that Tom had witnessed before. He sighed profoundly.

"No," he said, "it does not. I made no exceptions because I wanted to avoid explanations. Callis is the only one of my party at whom the order was particularly aimed. Lord! What a source of anxiety he has been!"

The other three men will cause you no trouble on that score, they understand that they are to remain on the yacht. Of course no stranger is to be permitted to come aboard."

"Thank you, sir," returned Tom, stiffly. "I wish I had known this; I can follow orders only as I receive them."

He faced the silent girl with a challenging look. Willard was leaving them—he disappeared. And she had not availed of him.

"I will order the launch," he said quietly.

Without a word she preceded him up to the deck, where he summoned Mercer. He had just notified the first officer that he was leaving the Kohinur in his charge, when Della interrupted in her most agreeable manner. She addressed the mate.

"I couldn't think of taking Captain Phinney away from his duties," she said sweetly. "You were saying this morning that you wanted to go down-town, Mr. Mercer; if you care to accompany me, now is your opportunity."

—Of course, with Captain Phinney's consent." And she gave that disconcerted individual a look from beneath her lowered lashes that was at once smiling and enigmatic.

Naturally enough Tom was taken completely off his guard, as he was expected to be; but after one involuntary start of surprise he rose to the occasion, accepting it with apparent equanimity.

Mercer's pale, dissipated features glowed with pleasure; it had been a long, long time since any gentle girl had imposed a confidence in him. He glanced doubtfully at his skipper, who was regarding him meaningly.

"Mr. Mercer may be depended on not to lose sight of you," Tom said pointedly, "and he'll see you safely back to the Kohinur." And he added to himself: "—or I'll break his teeth!"

Mercer laughed and helped her down the steps to the launch. Tom watched it glide away, a black blot in the golden reflection of the shore lights; he saw Mercer appear upon the landing, and stoop down and catch the girl's hands and draw her up beside him. Next he noticed, that instead of backing out, turning and heading for the

"No, No, No! Take Me Away—To the Kohinur—at Once."

with me under false pretenses. I have reason to be greatly worried and anxious."

"Believe me, I am only too glad to be of service," he gallantly assured her. "Isn't there something more definite that I can do for you?"

"No, no—thank you. Only conduct me to the nearest telephone and wait a few minutes for me."

With this she lapsed into silence. Mercer watched her while she adjusted her veil so that it rendered her completely unrecognizable, and marveled at the circumstance not a little.

He saw her enter a telephone booth; then he took up his station outside and waited. More than one acquaintance hailed him, or boisterously invited him to join them; but he was not to be persuaded.

Minutes passed. He reflected that the telephone conversation was becoming uncommonly long drawn out, when he was attracted by the booth door opening behind him, and a moan that could signify only intense agony of mind.

He slewed round to behold the girl clinging unsteadily to the door-knob. She had most evidently fainted; he fell, and he could see that her mouth was drawn in lines of suffering and her lips were colorless. He sprang promptly to her assistance, and she instantly transferred the sustaining hand to his wrist, which she clutched spasmodically.

"—What is it?" he demanded solicitously, yet with a restraining thought of the ease with which any crowd's attention is attracted. "What has happened?"

"Mr. Mercer!" her voice, pitched low, was tense and vibrant with some mastering emotion—"please get me back to the Kohinur as quickly as you can."

"But you are not fit," he protested,

STUTTERER IN HARD LUCK

Cure May Be Effected, but the Process is a Slow One, and Uncertain in Its Effect.

There is no cure for stuttering. This does not mean that no stutterer can be cured—far from it—but that there is no treatment which is sure to cure. If a stutterer be taken in childhood, where the affliction is first noticed, and carefully treated, he can sometimes be cured, and generally much improved.

Dr. Frank A. Bryant of New York, writing in the Medical Record, says the first thing to do is to make sure that there are no obstructions in the throat or nose, such as enlarged tonsils or adenoids. The child must be taught to breathe through the nose, deeply and slowly, as a habit. He must not be allowed to speak when excited, nor when laughing or crying or in the paroxysms of whooping cough. He must never be scolded. All causes of excitement must be removed. Fresh air, scrupulous cleanliness, plain, nourishing food, moderate exercises and plenty of sleep in a dark room are essential. Mental treatment is of great importance. Any measures that will increase mental poise are of incomparable value. The stutterer must be impressed with a desire to overcome what is only a bad habit. He must be persuaded to study the great art of speaking correctly. Thus, by careful, patient work on the part of his parents, teachers and physicians, will he gradually cure himself, or at least so improve as to make the affliction cease to be serious.

CUPID HAD HIT HIM HARD

Surely Day of Romance Is Not Ended When Lovesick Swain Can Feel Like This.

"Come, come, old mah; don't let it knock you out. There are plenty of other girls in the world. In six months from now you will have forgotten her."

"Yes, I suppose it is as you say; but it isn't six months from now. Everything I see reminds me of her. When I look at other women I can't help thinking how much more beautiful she is than any of them. When the wind blows I am reminded that it is probably adding to the color of her cheeks. Whenever I pass a corner where she and I have stood together I have a strange, empty feeling as if something were gone out of my life.

"When I look up at the sky, I cannot keep from remembering that it is above her. If I could forget her for only a day, for only an hour, I think I might learn to hope again; but I can't get her out of my mind. It seems to me that the whole world is changed since she told me that I was never to see her again. I can't understand how anybody manages to keep on being happy. I would give almost anything to forget her."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Poetic Tragedy.

"Bill," the poet gasped, staggering into his friend's room.

"Why, what's wrong?" the friend inquired, startled as he grasped hold of the tottering man.

"Wrong!" the poet muttered. "Ye Gods! I wrote a poem about my little boy. I began the first verse with these lines:

"My son! My pigmy counterpart."

"Yes? Yes?"

The poet drew a long breath as he took a newspaper from his pocket.

"Read!" he blazed suddenly. "See what the criminal compositor did to my opening line."

The friend read aloud:

"My son! my pig, my counterpart!"—National Monthly.

EYE STRAIN

Relieved by Quitting Coffee.

Many cases of defective vision are caused by the habitual use of coffee.

"I had worn spectacles for some time, but after coffee is used in large quantities, many lose their eyesight at about fifty. Tea contains the same drug, caffeine, as coffee.

"A N. J. woman writes to the point concerning eye trouble and coffee. She says:

"My son was for years troubled with his eyes. He tried several kinds of glasses without relief. The optician said there was a defect in his eyes which was hard to reach.

"He used to drink coffee, as we all did, and finally I was led to quit coffee and use Postum. That was three years ago and he has not had to wear glasses and has had no trouble with his eyes since.

"I was always fond of tea and coffee and finally became so nervous I could hardly sit still long enough to eat a meal. My heart was in such a condition I thought I might die at any time.

"Medicine did not give me relief and I was almost desperate. It was about this time we decided to quit coffee and use Postum, and have used it ever since. I am in perfect health. No trouble now with my heart and never felt better in my life.

"Postum has been a great blessing to us all, particularly to my son and myself."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum now comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

Pets and Broken Hearts.

The dog of Mistral, the Provencal poet, died the day after Mistral's recent death. It is a fairly common thing for dogs, cats, canaries and other pets to die a few days or even hours after their masters. But do they die of grief? It is not likely.

A Managuan physician examined the corpse of a canary that had succumbed with its little mistress. The canary's death, the examination showed, was due not to a broken heart, but to scarlet fever, the malady to which its little mistress had herself succumbed.

From this and from kindred post-mortems it is surmised that pets, when they die simultaneously with their owners, have become infected with the disease that carried their owners off—measles, diphtheria, typhoid. The broken-from-grief story is pretty, but, alas, it won't wash.

HOW TO TREAT PIMPLES AND BLACKHEADS

For pimples and blackheads the following is a most effective and economical treatment: Gently smear the affected parts with Cuticura Ointment, on the end of the finger, but do not rub. Wash off the Cuticura Ointment in five minutes with Cuticura Soap and hot water and continue bathing for some minutes. This treatment is best on rising and retiring, after other times use Cuticura Soap freely for the toilet and bath, to assist in preventing inflammation, irritation and clogging of the pores, the common cause of pimples, blackheads, redness and roughness, yellow, oily, mothy and other unwholesome conditions of the skin.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."—Adv.

A Rare, Rare Man.

William J. Hamby, short story writer and novelist, is a great lover of folks and makes friends with all sorts and conditions of men. One day while on an outing in the Ozarks he got a hill billy who was speaking of a character to accompany him on a fishing excursion in order to study the type. The two men spent the day in the woods together and returned to camp old friends and then Mr. Hamby learned that he was not the only one on the expedition who had been studying his companion. The two hill billy heads in parting the hill billy said:

"I taken a likin' to yuh, but yuh shore be the queerest man I ever see. I've noticed you all day, an' yuh ain't took no drink, yuh ain't cussed nohow and yuh ain't cussed once!"—Kansas City Star.

Skimpy.

A contributor to the American Magazine tells the following story:

"A clerk in one of the great jewelry stores on Fifth avenue in New York closed the door to a rich and wealthy customer a lady's handbag, five inches square, made of platinum and fairly well covered on one side only with diamonds. The price was $9,000. The fact that one side only was covered with diamonds troubled the customer. Turning the handbag around and around, and looking at it from all sides over and over, he finally said: 'Very pretty—really. But I don't like one side without diamonds. Honestly the thing looks skimpy—rather skimpy.' At an additional expense of $7,000 this difficulty was removed."

Just as Good.

"Have you any 5-cent cigars?" asked the man.

"No," replied the druggist, "but we have something just as good. Here's a 10-cent cigar."

Hard to Please.

"Wombat says we have no really great heroes today."

"What's the matter with him?"

The KITCHEN CABINET

A temperate diet arms the body against all external accidents; so that they are not so easily hurt by Heat, Cold or Labor; if they at any time should be prejudiced, they are more easily cured either of wounds, dislocations or bruises.—Benjamin Franklin.

SOMETHING ABOUT PEANUTS.

The peanut is properly classed with peas, beans and lentils, though they are popularly called a nut. Peanuts are valuable as a food and in late years are largely used to prepare the well known peanut butter. As the peanut is 29 per cent fat, oil is also made from it. This oil when fresh is especially nice for salads.

The peanut is equally good baked like the bean if taken in its uncooked state.

A cream soup made from the raw peanuts is very good and nutritious.

The outside skin may be removed by putting the nuts through a sieve after cooking altogether; when baked the skin is not more indigestible than that of the bean.

The peanut makes a most delicious salad in combination with many other foods.

A most delicious candy, in fact several kinds of candy, may be prepared with the peanut for the chief flavor.

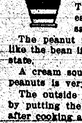
Peanut Brittle.—Melt two cupfuls of granulated sugar in a smooth, clean saucepan over the fire, when the sugar is melted and beginning to turn a golden brown, pour it out into a greased pan which has been well sprinkled with fresh peanuts.

Peanut Cookies.—Cream two tablespoonfuls of butter, add a cupful of sugar, and an egg well beaten. Mix and sift one teaspoonful of baking powder with a half cupful of flour, a fourth of a teaspoonful of salt, add to the first mixture, then add a half cupful of finely chopped peanuts, two tablespoonfuls of milk, a half teaspoonful of lemon juice and drop on a buttered sheet, using a teaspoon, and decorate each with half a peanut. This recipe makes 24 small cakes. A pint of peanuts unshelled will make half a cupful.

Peanut Candy (Delicious).—To six ounces of butter add a pound of light brown sugar and stir over a steady heat, cooking for ten minutes, after which add a pint of peanuts rolled until the skins crumble, spread in a buttered pan and mark off in squares at once.

MEALS FOR SUMMER DAYS.

As the days grow warmer the meals should become lighter. This is the time when the cool, refreshing fruits and vegetables are most welcome. If hot meat is desired for one meal it may be so cooked that it will serve nicely as a cold dish on the day following.



Peanuts and Rice.—Stir enough peanut butter into hot cooked rice to season it well, then add milk, egg and cracker crumbs, leaving some crumbs for the top, and bake a nice brown in the oven. Garnish with parsley when serving.

There is no more wholesome vegetable fruit than rhubarb and it is especially good in the early summer. Made into tarts, baked puddings, jams, meringues and charlottes, it is always welcome.

Chicken Salad.—When something good is wanted this is worth trying. Take four cupfuls of finely cut chicken (veal may be used for part of the amount if so desired, and if the chicken and veal be cooked together it will be hard to tell veal from chicken); two cupfuls of minced celery hearts or the most tender portion of the celery, one small green pepper finely chopped, one teaspoonful of onion juice and boiled dressing, which is well seasoned, mixed well with the salad. Much tasting is very essential in the preparation of any dish, for often the lack of a bit of seasoning mars the whole.

A temperate diet frees from diseases; such are seldom ill but if they are surprised with sickness, they hear it better and recover sooner; for most distempers have their original from repletion.—Benjamin Franklin.

DELICIOUS MILK DISHES.

Milk is such a staple article of food that we are prone to forget that there are many less ways of using it, other than as natural.

Creamed Lamb With Peas.—Cut out rounds of bread, toast them and dip the edges in boiling salted water, then spread with butter. Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter, cook this in two of flour; add a fourth of a teaspoonful each of salt and paprika, then gradually stir in a cup of rich milk and stir until the sauce thickens. When ready to serve, add a cup and a quarter of cooked lamb cut in bits. Dispose this on the rounds of bread and serve hot.

Lamb Souffle.—Melt three teaspoonfuls of butter, cook in it a slice of onion and half of a green pepper until the vegetables are yellow, add two tablespoonfuls of flour, half a teaspoonful each of salt and paprika, and cook until foamy, then stir in gradually a half cup of rich milk or cream and a half cup of lamb broth; stir until the sauce is smooth, then add a half cupful of fine bread crumbs. Beat the yolks of three eggs and add, a little at a time, to the mixture, then fold in the whites of three eggs beaten stiff. Turn into a buttered dish and bake in a moderate oven until firm. This will serve six to eight people.

Fish Chowder.—Clean three pounds of fish very carefully, cut in small pieces. Cover the head, skin and bones with water and let simmer for an hour. Cut up a fourth of a cup of salt pork and let cook until well browned and all the fat is extracted, add half an onion, sliced, and cook until yellow. Parboil two cups of sliced potatoes five minutes, drain, add to the strained water in which the bones have been cooked, add fish, cover and cook until all are tender. Add a pint of rich milk, salt and pepper to taste and serve in a tureen poured over half a dozen well soaked milk crackers.

DEEP SEA CABLE LINES

INSULATING NEW CABLE

UNLIKE the land telegraph lines, the cable enjoys a certain immunity from storms, and may be compared in some instances with the underground cable lines which connect some of the large cities in this country.

Earthquakes have been known to injure the cable sufficiently to interrupt communication, but most damage is done by sharks and swordfishes.

These fishes attack the cable and sometimes run it. Dragging anchors also cause a lot of damage, but as this happens near the shore, where the cable is considerably stouter than in midocean, the cost of repair is small in comparison with a break in midocean. In the northern and southern seas the cable is surrounded by linked chain armor as a protection against the ice floes. Another frequent cause of injury is friction. In some parts of the sea mountains of over 3,000 feet in height are found. In other parts the bed of the ocean is a dead level. The amount of friction caused by the cable overhanging one of these mountains is tremendous, and in some cases the cable is actually fractured.

Work of Repairing Cables.

Specially built and equipped ships are always held in readiness. These may cost anything up to £80,000. A costly electrical plant is fitted up on board, while the decks resemble a big factory, being crowded with workshops, smithies and machinery for laying and picking up cables. She is lighted by electricity and carries colossal searchlights to illuminate the surrounding waters so that the work of repair may be carried on both by night and day.

When communication is interrupted the electricians at the shore send an observer to locate the exact position of the fault. When one remembers that some of the cable lines are thousands of miles in length this may seem an impossible task. Yet by the application of many ingenious tests the fault can be located to within a mile. Having accomplished this task satisfactorily, the "test" telegraphs the particulars to the managing director of the cable company, who in turn communicates them to the captain of the repairing vessel, and in an incredibly short period of time the vessel is on its way to the spot where the break is reported to have occurred.

This point having been reached, the captain verifies his position by nautical observations. The work is then started. The first step is to fix a central point, which is done by dropping overboard a huge buoy. The vessel then steams away to a convenient distance, drops a large, specially constructed grapnel and steams back again in such a direction that the grapnel is dragged right across the track of the cable. Whenever the grapnel comes in contact with the cable it at once communicates to those on board by means of an instrument called the dynamometer. The ship is then stopped and the haulage machinery set going. The cable is thus brought to the surface.

It sometimes happens, however, that even after it has been brought up that length of the tremendous strain caused by its own weight causes it to break again. Let us suppose that it has been safely brought to the surface. Men are at once lowered overboard, and they fix the cable by means of chains to each side of the grapnel. The grapnel is next taken away, and the cable is hauled on board by means of the chains. Once on board it is cut and connected with the testing room. Having undergone the various tests satisfactorily, and been proved electrically perfect, the end of the cable is sealed, attached to a buoy, and dropped overboard. Grappling for the other end is then commenced. Luck may again favor the men and the end be brought safely on board without much trouble.

Perilous Duties of the Crew.

The same tests are applied again. If this side of the cable is found electrically perfect some spare cable is spliced to it in order to make it long enough to reach the buoy holding the other end. The buoy has then to be brought on board, and this is by no means an easy task. The sea may be running high and a strong gale blowing. Nevertheless, a lifeboat manned by men all wearing cork jackets is launched and attempts are made to rope the buoy.

It may happen that the boat gets near enough the buoy for one of the men to leap on to it, but it is a hundred chances to one against the boat getting to within such a distance from the buoy. When the buoy has been secured it is moated to the ship, where both it and the cable are hoisted on board. Tests are again made by both shore stations, and if successful both ends are carefully spliced and the cable slipped overboard. In a few minutes it is again vibrating with dispatches. Of course there is always an element of luck in cable repairing. The bed of the ocean may be raked for weeks without finding the cable.

Or, again, storms may be encountered when the work is progressing. The delay in repairing means a terrible loss to the company. Hundreds of pounds may be lost daily through the cable being idle, while the expenses of the repairing vessel are heavy. Altogether, a repairing expedition may cost from £10,000 to £100,000, according to the luck in hooking and repairing the broken cable.

BURNED HOUSE WITH BODY

Cremation Ceremonies in Dutch New Guinea Would Seem to Be Expensive.

Concerning a peculiar custom discovered among the natives of Dutch New Guinea, this interesting description is given by A. F. R. Wollaston in the Geographical Journal: "On top of the first steep ridge we came to the first native dwelling that we had seen in the country. It was a rectangular house, standing on piles about five feet from the ground. A sloping ladder or two or three poles tied together leads to a narrow platform, behind which is the living room, about ten or twelve feet square. In the middle of the floor is a square fire-place, usually lined with sand or small stones. The walls are made of split sago palms closely together, and the roof is made of the leaves of pandanus, or of a palm if any happen to grow in the neighborhood. There was a mystery about that house which we were never able to solve. It was evidently quite newly built, a small clearing had been made about it, and a few banana and dracoenas recently planted.

"Outside the house were a number of men, women and children, the men occupied in cooking large quantities of yams and sweet potatoes and great lumps of pig's flesh. We naturally supposed that it was a sort of house warming, as in one sense it turned out to be. The men and women heads and pointed in a mysterious way toward the house and made the curious sign which they are accustomed to make when they talk of something distasteful. Then they invited us to enter the house, where we found an old man sitting by the fire. He was diseased and decrepit, but appeared to be by means likely to die. We took a keen interest in our appearance and enjoyed the tobacco which we gave him.

"When we returned five days later we found the place utterly deserted and the house a blackened heap of ashes, on the top of which were lying the charred remains of human bones. It was impossible for any one to say five days earlier that the old man was going to die—indeed, he might have lived for months or even years. What we may imagine to have happened was this: That as he was unable to get about any longer and find his own food, his relations did not intend to support him, and that the preparations we saw were really for his funeral feast; but we were puzzled by their having cremated him in a newly built house."

Discovery of Ancient Tunnel.

In the progress of the excavations made preparatory to the erection of the new buildings for the National University college, Dublin, a curious discovery has just been made. At a depth of 20 feet below the surface a spacious and well-constructed tunnel has been brought to light. It is some nine feet in diameter, and is apparently of considerable antiquity—dating from a couple of hundred years back at any rate. The workmen who discovered it walked into it, and found that it extended fully one-third of a mile under the city. What its original use was is not clear.

Even the acts of providence that prove destructive seem to be directed toward the poor printer. Last Sunday morning when the wind storm came up it picked out one of the large window lights in the front of the Argus office and blew the screen out, but luckily the poor printer don't have to pay for it. It's nice to live in a rented house when a cyclone comes.

"Now, boys, the postmaster over in our town has just died, and I'm a candidate for the job. I'm getting up a petition to send to Washington, recommending me for the place. I wish you boys would sign it."

Some of the boys did, and finally the doctor handed the petition to Underwood. Underwood looked at it. It was addressed to the Honorable Oscar Underwood, referee for federal patronage at Washington.

"I can't sign this," said Underwood. "I don't live in this community."

"Oh, go on and sign it," urged the doctor. "What difference does that make? That young fool Underwood won't know the difference when he gets it—and I want the job."

Skirts Wear Out Shoes.

"The close relation between garment styles and shoe styles is recognized by every manufacturer and distributor of footwear," says a trade authority. "The slit skirt, for example, accentuates the demand for vamp foot wear.

"To the extent to which the fashionable skirt displays the foot is also attributable the demand for the light, turned sole. The tendency to its adoption is growing stronger each season, and the output of turns as compared with welts, in nearly every factory, shows a large increase.

"The question has of late been asked, 'Why it is that turned shoes do not seem to wear as long today as they did in former seasons?' The answer is, it is the narrow skirt that does it. The well-dressed woman—and this applies to the great majority of American women—is obliged to take twice as many steps as she used to before the introduction of the present style."

Ancient Money.

In biblical days silver and gold coins were struck of such weight that one of them represented the value of a particular animal. Thus the word kesitah used in Genesis translated "pieces of money," means, literally, a lamb. The Latin pecunia, from which comes our word pecuniary, comes from pecus, a general name for sheep and the smaller animals. In early times coins bore figures of a horse, a bull or a hog, together with the names of the animals pictured. Afterward, as values changed, the figures upon the coins no longer bore representations of their value in cattle, but figures representing a rose, an eagle, etc.

BACK TO THE PEOPLE.

A woman writer left New York recently to go back to the village where she was born. She was going there, she said, not in search of atmosphere, as some of her literary friends supposed, but just to live. Nor was she going back to her people to "uplift" them, as others of her city friends thought. The people back there in the valley, this woman asserted, were practising the Ten Commandments for folk, and it would be a mockery to speak of uplifting them. She rather hoped to be uplifted by them. The attitude which this woman takes towards her people back home is exceedingly wholesome, exceedingly refreshing, and, incidentally, is the best way to get atmosphere. Many others of our popular writers and novelists might well follow this woman's lead, says the Chicago Tribune. They might well go back to the people, not with the uplift, "holier than thou" attitude with which they now come—not to "study" them, "observe" them, but just to live among them, be one of them. It would do them good. The major part of the popular fiction of today has lost nearly every connection with real life. The average story or novel deals with unreal people and describes unreal situations. The advice of the writers to go out and live among the people might also be given to the editors and publishers of fiction, especially to our magazine editors. At present these editors seem to be printing their magazines for the taste and approval not of the public but of each other.

While the most important use of radium is undoubtedly that of a curative agent for cancer and skin diseases, it is also of great value in other ways. A disk carrying a minute quantity of radium is attached to a special volt meter and used for measuring at a distance the electrical potential of a conductor, which it does at a distance of 50 centimeters in the case of a current of not more than 300 volts and at a distance of three meters in high volt ages. Another use is the prevention of the electrification of machines and fibers in the textile industry, especially in silk mills. This is effected by dipping the textile into a bath containing a very small quantity of radium and by applying radio-active matter to the cylinders. Besides these applications, radium is incorporated in manures, to which it gives a highly stimulating effect upon vegetation.

London, it is asserted, is now more infested with professional beggars than ever before. In the West end and in the city they are at almost every street corner. While outwardly these parasites are men of rags, actually they are often men of substance. The London Mendicity society calculates that more than $500,000 is given away to beggars every year. At the Thames police court, Hesson Yolidski, a Russian, aged thirty-five, who was charged on remand with begging, had upwards of $15 in his possession when arrested. When before the court, Yolidski coolly asked the magistrate to allow him a maintenance order of $4.50.

The auction sale at Vienna of personal effects of Colonel Redl, the Austrian traitor and spy for Russia, who killed himself several months ago, has disclosed some of his operations. A high school boy in Prague bought at the auction three rolls of film. When he reached home he discovered that on one roll of supposedly unexposed film there was cleverly hidden the photographic copy of a secret military order of the highest importance signed by the Archduke Francis Ferdinand and intended only for the eyes of the chief of the Prague general staff. It was promptly delivered to the Austrian army authorities.

The Schmit aeroplane, which is financed by August Belmont, is the wonder of Paris. It is hailed as the first real aerobus and made a brilliant series of new records for altitude and weight lifting. With the pilot Garaix it rose to a height of 2,750 meters, carrying four passengers.

It is claimed that wooden butter dishes cost the people of the country $5,000,000 a year. The claim was probably made by the statistician who proves every now and then that the country consumes $500,000,000,000 worth of eggs every year.

Somewhat Lengthy Nap.

W. Foxley, potmaker to the mint, indulged in a prolonged sleep, according to Stow's Chronicle, which says that "he fell asleep on April 27, 1546, and so continued sleeping, and could not be wakened with pricking, cramping or otherwise burning whatsoever, till the first day of the next terme, which was full 14 days and 16 nights. The cause of his thus sleeping could not be knowne, though the same were diligently searched for by the king's phisitions and other learned men, yet the king himself examined ye said W. Foxley, who was in all points found at his wakening to be as if he had slept but one night and lived 41 years after."

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By O. E. SELLERS, Director of Evening Department The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

LESSON FOR JUNE 21

THE GREAT REFUSAL.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 10:17-31.
GOLDEN TEXT—"Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Luke 16:13. (Read also entire verse.)

The story of this rich young ruler is one out of the ministry of our Lord that has made an indelible impression throughout every succeeding generation. This is so because it is so vital, vibrant and vivid a revelation of our every-day experience. The lesson naturally divides itself into two sections. Read carefully the parallel accounts; Matt. 19:16-30 and Luke 18:18-30.

Man of Courage.

I. An Eager Young Man, vv. 17-22. This man is an arresting figure. Much may be said in his favor. (1) He was young (Matt. 19:22); (2) He was in earnest, "came running" (v. 17); (3) He was educated, "a lawyer," Luke 18:18; (4) He was rich, Mark 10:22; (5) He was loved by Jesus, Mark 10:21. That he had lived a clean life is revealed by the answers he made to Jesus. Moreover he must have been a man of some courage, belonging as he did to the ruling class, the Pharisees, yet he came running into the presence of Jesus and cast himself at his feet. We need but to recall that this class was at this time definitely hostile to Christ, yet this young man dared to speak the conviction of his heart in this public way by calling Jesus, "good." We feel that he was an honest seeker after life. His question reveals the unrest of the human heart. It matters not what men may possess of wealth or position, these things do not bring heart rest. Great moral courage, noble aspirations and benevolence never will save nor fully satisfy the human soul. Man does not obtain life by doing. Gal. 2:16. Life is a gift, Rom. 6:23. We must not misunderstand the reply of Jesus (v. 18). Jesus did not deny being good, John 8:46; 14:30; 8:29, but he saw that this young man was filled with the idea of his own goodness. To say that Jesus was good was practically to say he was God, and this the young man did not mean. Jesus sought to reveal to him his careless use of words. Jesus undoubtedly here lays claim to deity and subsequently he said, (v. 21), "follow me," i. e, for this man to yield his life actually to the control of God.

Last week we were taught to "make friends by means of the mammon of unrighteousness; that when it shall fail they may receive you into the eternal tabernacles." This is exactly what Christ told this young man to do, "Sell . . . give to the poor." By thus using he would store up treasure in heaven. That he could not stand the test is evident from v. 22.

Perils of Riches.

II. The Master's Exhortation, vv. 23-31. As a great teacher and philosopher Jesus took this occasion to point out the perils of riches. Nearly every man is willing to run the risk. We have, however, but to look about us to see illustration after illustration of the truth of these words. "How hardly"—increased wealth, decreased piety. "How hardly"—men seek to tone down this picture, but have no right so to do. The only safety is found in the words of verse 27, "with God all things are possible." The most severe test possible to be given to a man's religious experience is for him to be prospered in wealth or position. The rich young ruler is an evidence of the fact that such a godless life is a restless one.

Notwithstanding his possessions, his refinement, the privileges of his position and a life so cleanly lived as to leave no vulgar moral scar, yet he lacks, claims: "What shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" It was easier for the proverbial camel to have entered the city gate (or a literal needle's eye as you prefer) than for this young man to yield to God the control of his life. Every life is under control. A godless life is a self-controlled life. As men came to Jesus he saw perfectly their individual needs; their peculiar malady.

The disciples were amazed at the master's words and thought if a rich man cannot be saved there is hope for none. Such is not the meaning. This is revealed in the reply to Peter's question. Men are saved irrespective of position or of possessions for God loves them all. Those who turn the control of their lives over to his keeping, those who, no matter what their condition or position in life, follow him, leaving all, or bringing all as the case may be, will have their reward here in this life and in the world to come, eternal life.

The one thing people most dread is poverty, so did Jesus and he saw that the possessions of this life so occupy the time and attention of men as to impoverish their souls. Wealth is a trust. God looks upon every man, as Jesus beheld this young man, endowed with great possibilities and covets that life for high service. Are we more anxious to be rich than to be good? Is it not an evidence of selfishness to let those come after us distribute our wealth? To enjoy it, gloat over it and to use it for yourself, then dictate, who, why, or how others may enjoy it is selfishness.

SENATE MAY STICK IT OUT.

Not Disposed to Adjourn in July as Suggested.

Washington.—A proposal that congress shall adjourn in July, as soon as the appropriation bills are disposed of in both houses, was talked over by democratic leaders, but without result. Majority Leader Underwood conferred with democratic senators and with some of his colleagues in the house and pointed out that the best thing to do would be to clear up the supply measures, of which only the sundry civil and general deficiency bills remained, and then to adjourn, with the understanding that the president convoke an extra session of congress in November. The senators are not disposed to agree to this course. They are particularly disinclined in view of the president's insistence that congress should carry out the anti-trust program before adjournment of this session.

SIGN FIRST PROTOCOL

DELEGATES AGREE ON PART OF PEACE PROGRAM.

LOOKING FOR MEXICAN MOSES

Naming of New President a Big Task for Mediators—Carranza Decides to Send a Representative.

Western Newspaper Union News Service.

Niagara Falls, Ont.—A search for a man to take the place of Huerta as provisional president of Mexico occupied the mediators, following the signing of the first sprias of protocols. The first peace document provides for the transfer of power from Huerta substantially as follows:

A government is to be constituted in Mexico of a character to be later provided which shall be recognized in Mexico City on (date to be fixed), and which from that day forward shall exercise public functions until there shall be inaugurated a constitutional precedent.

The language of the protocol purposely uses the phrase which shall be recognized in Mexico City," without specifying by whom, so that in another protocol recognition will be promised by the United States as well as the mediating countries, Argentine, Brazil and Chile.

Think Huerta Will Soon Be Out.

Washington.—That the new provisional president of Mexico, who is to be aided by the South American United States combination to bring order out of chaos, will be selected almost immediately is believed certain here. The substantial progress already made at Niagara Falls has encouraged the belief that by the middle of the week Huerta will be out and the task of restoring order begun. The administration is absolutely confident Carranza will agree to the tentative plan backed by this government and that fighting will end as soon as Huerta has formally turned over the presidential authority to the provisional government that is to be named by the mediators and the commissioners now in Canada.

Looking for a Moses.

Niagara Falls, Ont.—The crux of the Mexican problem—the selection of a man for provisional president acceptable to all factions in Mexico and foreign governments generally—was reached in a conference between the mediators and the American and Mexican delegates. For more than an hour names of various individuals were discussed, but on none was there a semblance of agreement. Delegates are now devoting themselves to the greater task of finding the man of the hour, he who can reconcile the warring factions and maintain peace while a constitutional election is held and normal order is resumed.

Indefinite Carranza's note, transmitted by Rafael Zubaran, Mexican representative in Washington, arrived, advising the mediators that constitutional delegates were on their way to the mediation conferences with full instructions.

Will Send Representative.

Saltillo, Mex. — General Carranza has announced that he returned an answer to the note of the Niagara Falls mediators stating that he would appoint representatives to the conference at Niagara Falls. The names of these representatives were not made public. The note simply informed advances that the constitutionalists would be represented and did not mention conditions on which they would take part. It was announced, however, that the agreement to attend the conference would not serve to check the campaign against the federals, and the advance to the south will be continued with vigor.

Washington.—Every indication in Washington points to participation by the constitutionalists of Mexico in the mediation conference at Niagara Falls. While final word was awaited by his agents here from General Carranza as to the acceptance of the invitation to South American mediators to their proposals, delay was accounted for by telegraphic disturbances between the United States border and Saltillo.

Shipping Artillery South.

San Diego, Cal.—All of the field artillery of the 2d brigade, stationed in the garrison of the northern district of Lower California, is piled on the beach at Ensenada, awaiting shipment to Mexico City, according to reports brought to San Diego by passengers on the steamer Victoria. Only two or three machine guns have been retained by General Arguelles, civil and military commander of the northern district. The order to ship the artillery came from Mexico City some time ago, but lack of means delayed the movement of the guns.

Carranza's Attitude Not Disclosed.

Mexico City.—What is the exact nature of General Carranza's attitude toward the recent communication from the mediators has not yet been disclosed. It was learned that partial reply to the mediators' proposals had been received from the constitutionalist chief by his confidential agent, Rafael Zubaran, but that not all the information desired had been received. Further communication from General Carranza is expected later.

WILLING TO GIVE AWAY PAPA

Youthful Logician Met Appeal to His Generosity With a Crushing Answer.

A mother was urging her little son to be generous, specifically in the case of a small comrade not well endowed with worldly goods.

"I wish you'd give your little wagon to Melville," she suggested. "He has so few toys and you have so many."

"I don't want to, mamma. I like my little wagon. Why doesn't his papa buy toys for him?"

"He has no papa, dear. That is the reason why I want you to be so generous and kind to him. It would be no virtue in you to give him what you don't want anyway. We should always be careful to share what we really prize. Now, Ar'l's say, Melville has no papa and—"

"Well, why don't you give him papa, then?" was the youthful logician's reply.

"Is young Softy drinking or practising law?"

"What do you mean?"

400,000 Settlers a Year

Immigration figures show that the population of Canada increased during 1913, by the addition of 400,000 new settlers from the United States and Europe. Most of these have gone on farms in provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Lord William Percy, an English Nobleman says:

"The possibilities and opportunities offered by the Canadian West are so infinitely greater than those which exist in England that it seems absurd to think that people should be impeded from coming to the country where they will most easily and certainly improve their position.

Few districts are being opened up which will make accessible a great number of homesteads in districts already attached to mixed farming and grain raising.

TINY, ALGY AND MINNIE GET IN WRONG

Tiny O'Toole (of the Dancing Dolls)—Say, Algy, you can't tell me, you come over here because the king's cousin wanted to marry you and your family objected.

Algy (late of the 'Alls)—Wy can't I? I'll give y' the lady's time in a minute. Don't I look as if I 'ad some romance connected with me? Why do you suppose I'm toting myself with a lot of 'im across the Atlantesse?

Egbert Vancoover (small parts)—How dare you, sir, to speak of us as hams? I'd let you know I'm from an old and respected family in New York. Then father lost his fortune and we children were cast out on the cruel world. I thank heaven I had a voice, but my brother Wallie wasn't so gifted.

Tiny O'Toole—Lucky guy, there's nothing to keep him from doing regular work.

Egbert Vancoover—He's only a business man getting $10,000 a year. Poor Wallie!

Tiny O'Toole—Just 9,500 more than you, huh? Kid, your voice ain't a gift, it's a misfortune.

Algy—E's got a rippling voice. Sounds like some one ripping something. 'E's never on key.

Minnie Mints (property man's wife)—He's got a combination voice; you don't need no key. Fyits, my husband, told me our show would be out yet if that frog wasn't with us.

Algy—Wy did y' keep the bounder?

Minnie Mints—The producer is his uncle, and his fiancee thinks he's an actor.

Tiny O'Toole—His fiancee? Who's goin' to marry a chorus man without a cent?

Egbert Vancoover—Without a cent, maybe, but wait, m' dears.

Algy—E's full of pipe dreams, th' laddie is, pon me word.

Dad Wadell (who knew Booth—by sight, that is—and Barrett, personally, one time—but let us pass on—

Ena Claire (comedienne)—You had a chance at the coin, Dad? Tell us about it.

Dad Wadell—It was back in the early days when I was the idol of the hour in "Henry the Eighth."

Tiny O'Toole—One nighters?

Dad Wadell—No, madam. In New York we had a run of half a fortnight.

Algy—Some run, I should s'y not!

Dad Wadell—At that time the Princess Fyists, a close relation of Napoleon, was seeing our country incognito. She saw me in my part at the Casino one night and her heart was lost. We met again at a reception given at the home of the wealthy gentleman who owned the horses that drew the Broadway street car at that time. It was love at first sight.

Algy—She must 'ave 'ad a cinder in each eye.

Dad Wadell—I was smitten with her charm and she with mine. I proposed and was accepted. Our plans were laid for the future and the place of our honeymoon was to be her chalet on the Seine.

Tiny O'Toole—This sounds like a scenario in three reels.

Dad Wadell—The emperor, through his system of espionage, heard of our attachment and—

Minnie Mints—Was he going to kill you right away?

Dad Wadell—I think that was his intention; he wanted me to lead his army at Solon.

Minnie Mints—That's just like my Fyits. He was a bareback rider with old man Robinson's show when he seen me at Evansville as I was standing by my father's butcher shop. When the parade was back at the lot he come over to the shop, got acquainted with father, gave him two passes and told him to bring his handsome daughter with him.

Algy—Did y' 'ave a sister, Minnie?

Minnie Mints—At the show that night Fyits fell off a horse and broke his leg.

Algy—The 'orse's?

Minnie Mints—No, Fyits's. He had to stay in Evansville for six weeks and we was married at the little church across from the Orpheum; I forget the name of it. Fyits would never have met me, only in Germany they wanted him to join the army like Dad.

Algy—'E wasted 'is life. 'E might be a general now. Wy didn't 'e join?

Minnie Mints—He was so proud he was ashamed to been seen as a private in public. That's what he told me, but I think he's a nobleman of some kind. I can hardly wait till he dies to find out if he's got a secret.

Dad Wadell—It wouldn't surprise me if he is the son of some proud miller or shoemaker.

Ena Claire—Say, crowd, don't we run across a lot of romance in this game? It seems everyone has a story buried somewhere. Here's Minnie don't know but maybe Fyits will spring it that he's a duke or something like that, and Dad Wadell had a princess gone on him.

Algy—W'at about me own little story?

Tiny O'Toole—Maybe y' think mine wouldn't sound like L. G. Libby in a paper cover. But Steve was only a soft-shoe dancer.

Egbert Vancoover—Dear me, I don't say much, but the tangled threads of my romance could be woven into—

Tiny O'Toole—A ten-minute act for a sidewalk comedian. I'll bet you're makin' that girl you're engaged to believe you're heading your own company. She's in Boston, she has no way of findin' out.

Algy—It's a shime. Get a piece of paper an' we'll write 'er now, Tiny. Fancy 'er throwin' 'erself away. Some time w'en I'm in Boston I may meet 'er if she ain't gone an' married.

Egbert Vancoover—Beast! If you and I ever meet in France it shall be pistols for two.

Ena Claire—Egbert, don't you dare

THE last and the most fascinating word that the goddess of fashion has uttered is this whisper of crepe and chiffon in which she tells her dream of the best of the things for midsummer. One may follow the gown pictured here and be sure that it will outlast the summertime, and that the fall and winter will see its day of greatest triumph.

There is hardly a color in which it cannot be developed effectively. In crepe or satin (of the clingy kind) it allows the fulness that such fabrics demand, without any building out of the figure. The underskirt is cut to hang in at the ankles and reaches to the instep. It is made of the crepe or satin. Set on to a yoke of bordered cambron at a point a little below the waist of the hips is a side plaiting of bordered chiffon. This is in a dark or shade (and might be in black) hemstitched on.

The open-throated blouse is cut on the same lines as the kimono and other full, draped blouses, but the sleeve is lengthened into a mousquetaire with a narrow turned-back cuff. It

Coiffure Cap for Modern Dancing

COIFFURE caps are almost a necessity for those light-footed young women who dance the airy and, the rather acrobatic steps of the modern dances.

Here are two from Carlier of Paris that are attractive and becoming to the youthful faces they are pictured with, and even more becoming to older faces that belong to equally energetic dancers.

The foundation of the first cap is of silk moussaline or other light weight and highly lustrous fabric. Over it a rather heavy lace cap is placed. A rosette made of tinsel petals and a tinsel cord finish the decoration.

The cap is confined to the head by an elastic cord, which adjusts it firmly to place.

The second cap is made of a heavier silk, with a spangled net draped with wrinkles about the arm and must extend fully to the knuckles. The neck is finished with a narrow turnover collar of chiffon.

The waist is the very simplest of girdles made of wide ribbon tied in a two-loop bow at the front. The soft underbodice with Medici collar is as sheer as lace and chiffon will make it. Pretty and equally soft corset covers (with no corset under them, by the way) must be worn under these very sheer waists to make the best effect. There are plenty of corsetless gowns and more to be worn with corsets that extend hardly above the waist and much below it.

There is an odd and attractive hat with this gown. It is made of braid sewed over a shape that every one is familiar with. It is one of those good things in millinery which, with little variation, live through at least three seasons. Perched all over it are butterflies simulated in small wings, made of feathers. Beautiful and soon passing, they appear to have flocked to the head of the wearer, verifying the old adage about "flies to a feather."

Worms Destroy Alfalfa Fields.

Howe, Neb.—Many farmers report the presence of a large worm in alfalfa fields in such numbers that much of the second crop has been completely destroyed. The worm is much like a cutworm, except the size is much greater, and it confines its attack to the young alfalfa shoots. Specimens have been sent to the state university for identification and directions asked for what will destroy the pest.

Drinking Ice Water Results Fatally.

Blue Hill.—William Shults, one of the early settlers of Webster county, died very suddenly last week. He was a portly man and had been cutting ice all day. Becoming overheated, he went into the house and drank a large quantity of ice water, dying in a very short time. He was past sixty years of age and had lived in and near Blue Hill for more than twenty years.

Fell Under the Wheels.

North Platte.—The body of Arthur Wesseberg, the twenty-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Andy Wesseberg of this city, was discovered by section men three miles west of Maxwell, lying by the track. It is thought the young man was riding a freight to Grand Island and that in some way he fell under the wheels.

Lost Finger in Peculiar Manner.

Tecumseh—Irvin Marquardt, 3 years old, suffered the loss of a finger when a wagon in which he was coasting down hill became unmanageable and ran into a disc pulverizer. The boy's hand struck one of the discs, nearly severing it from the wrist. Amputation was necessary.

Lincoln.—Lawton Parker, the Kearney boy who forged the front and earned a world's reputation as an artist and the only American who ever won the grand prix in Parisian art exhibits, has been given a degree by the University of Nebraska.

Beatrice.—A large barn on the W. P. Bryson farm east of Adams was struck by lightning and burned to the ground with all its contents. A large amount of alfalfa was consumed and two large concrete silos, which had just been erected near the structure were damaged.

SCORED ONE ON HIS RIVAL

Brown Had Overlooked Leap Year, and Jones Was Quick to Mark the Point.

Irving Fletcher, the well-known advertising expert, said at an advertising men's dinner at Delmonico's in New York:

"A good advertisement never lies. It never deceives. For it can only be by making life patrons, not transient ones.

"A good advertisement never lies, but it states its case as strongly as possible, and it avails itself of every point, however slight. There it is like young Jones.

"Young Jones proposed at Lakewood to a pretty girl, but she said uncertainly, swinging her slim foot in and out of her slashed skirt:

"'I like you, Mr. Jones. But, then, I like Mr. Brown, too. And Mr. Brown is so devoted. He says he thinks of me 365 days in the year.'

"'Huh!' snorted young Jones, contemptuously. 'He wants a day off every four years, does he? Well, I hope you're not taken in by any such one-horse devotion as that.'"

Useful Knowledge.

"It isn't very much to boast of as art," said the sophisticated young chit, "but it's important to know about it because one usually asks one to meet one here."

The Source of Uric Acid

Eating too much is a common habit that does a lot of harm. Meat, especially, forms uric acid and at the constant filtering of solid ladies blood through the kidneys. Uric acid causes rheumatism and nervous trouble, weakens the eyes, forms gravel and leads to dropsy and Bright's disease. Kidney pills cure sick kidneys. Don't neglect them, because backache and urinary disorders and can be stopped by prompt treatment.

Use Doan's Kidney Pills, the best recommended and most widely used kidney remedy.

Pawnee Chief and Republican.

The dates for this summer's chautauqua at Pawnee City are August 15th to 22nd inclusive, and these days should be marked as "red letter days" on your calendar. The entertainment promises to be excellent, and it will be an opportunity for an outing not to be overlooked.

The north side of the residence block in which the families of Mayor Wherry G. A. Sawyer and D. W. Neill live has been beautified by the erection of a cement curb. When the parking space between the curb and the sidewalk has become well sodded and otherwise beautified this will be the most modern as well as one of the most beautiful blocks in the city. Lew Webb had charge of the cement work.

At a depth of 265 feet the workmen who are sinking a prospect shaft near the Pawnee City power plant struck a vein of coal about two feet in thickness. After passing through this and penetrating a foot of shale another vein was encountered, which proved to be about three feet in thickness. The workmen are now quite a distance below the second vein, working in slate. The quanity of the coal is hard to determine, an the drill chops it very fine and mixes it with foreign matter, but it seems to burn well. The coal seems to contain much oil. Whether the find will prove of value is problematical, but if it is of any account and the veins extend over a considerable field there is no doubt it can be mined with profit.

Alfred H. Williams substitute mail carrier on a route ont of Tecumseh was found dead in a field along his route Monday evening. The rig was overturned and the carrier's neck broken. There was no evidence of a runaway, and the cause of Mr. Williams death is a mystery. It is thought he might have fainted or died from heart trouble or apoplexy while in the buggy, and the team afterward wandered into the field, and upset the vehicle, throwing the occupant out on his head.

Mrs. Fred Woods arrived in this city Sunday from Wadsworth, Texas Fred will return to Pawnee City about the first of August and they will then occupy their former home on the farm north of town. Their return from Texas was occasioned by the continued poor health of Mrs Woods. We join their many friends in welcoming them to Pawnee City again.

SISTER'S SABLE MUFF

By CLAUDINE SISSON.

"Good lands, but I've kicked a cat!"

Miss Lysle Teller, stenographer in the city and living with her mother in a suburban village, had been one of the last to leave the electric car and in the gloom of a winter's evening her foot had struck something soft and furry and kicked it ahead of her.

"Here, pussy, pussy, pussy!"

But pussy did not respond with a meow or reproach that she had been kicked.

"My soul, but it's a muff!"

So it was, and of the latest style and a very expensive one. Of course, someone who had passed that way had lost it.

The next morning Miss Lysle asked the car conductor, but he could not help her out. She was carrying the muff to the office with her, and on the car with her was a hatchet-faced young man who was given to inducement and inference. Here was a girl whose outfit did not cost over $35, and yet she was carrying a sable muff that must have cost hundreds.

When Miss Lysle left the suburban car in the city the young man crowded forward and lifted his hat and said:

"It is about the muff I want to speak to you."

"Oh-h!"

"My sister will be so glad!"

"Then it was your sister who—"

"I was about to advertise the loss of the fur," scarcely observed the young man.

A young man who didn't like the look of the hatchet-faced one at all had halted within hearing distance, and he now stepped forward and said to Miss Lysle:

"I beg your pardon, but is that young man annoying you?"

"He claims that his sister lost this muff, and I don't believe him."

"You found it, did you?"

"Yes, sir."

"Better advertise for an owner. As for this fellow here, if he doesn't take himself off I'll call an officer. He's a fraud and a swindler! Good morning."

The young man took himself off, but he rode down town on the same car with Miss Lysle, just the same, and followed her to the office where she was employed. If he could get hold of that muff it would be $50 in his pocket.

Miss Lysle's brother Ben, the rising young lawyer, had advised her to advertise her find. At the office she was advised to wait a day and let the loser advertise. She adopted this plan. When she started for home in the evening she carried the muff with her.

The hatchet-faced young man was waiting to follow her. That sable muff was a great temptation to him.

Mr. Clyde Melton, the young sculptor, came along just as the girl stepped to the walk and he followed on—not because he was seeking a flirtation—nor because he identified her as the girl of the morning whose part he had taken against hatchet-face, but because he had received a message from his sister in the same suburb Miss Lylse lived in stating that something awful had happened and he must come as soon as ever he could.

And so the trio rode on until the "All out!" of the conductor was shouted. Then there was a scramble, and Miss Lysle hurried away, the thief followed, and the sculptor almost ran. The thief was too precipitate. He attacked the girl while the sculptor was yet within hearing. Her screams as she fought with one hand and held on to the muff with the other brought Mr. Melton back, and he recognised the assailant at once.

Right and justice seldom triumph, but this was one of the exceptions. The thief was knocked down. He was punched. He was battered. He was choked. He had his eyes blacked and his nose skinned. He was jerked to his feet and kicked around the corner, and the sculptor turned

She had disappeared!

Ten minutes later his sister was weepingly saying to him:

"Oh, Clyde, it's awful—just awful!"

"Baby dead?"

"No. I've lost that new sable muff that I bought the other day!"

"Sable muff?"

"Yes. I lost it on the street coming from the car."

"But you have advertised it?"

"No. Fred is away, you know, and I didn't know how to get an advertisement to the city papers. What on earth shall I do?"

"Cease to weep and I'll find your muff."

The sculptor went back to the spot. He didn't look for the girl's tracks. He walked two blocks down a side street and then rang a bell. Luck had been a good guide. It was Miss Lysle Teller that came to the door in answer.

It took just two hours to straighten out the tangle of that sable muff, and then followed another. Brother Ben, the rising young lawyer, didn't have anything to say about this latter tangle for several months, and then it was in a very serious tone that he said:

"Mother, didn't I say that unless this case was handled right there would be serious complications?"

"Mercy on me, but what's happened?"

"The hero and heroine are engaged to be married! Both admit their guilt!"

From Chewelah, a small Stevens county, Washington, post office, 80,000 rabbit skins have just been sent by parcel post to France, via New York, for manufacture into furs and hats. Ranchers hope that a market will be found for millions of jack rabbits that are now regarded as pests throughout eastern Washington and Oregon. Each package of pelts for Paris required a customs invoice on linen tag board specially provided by the post office. The first 500 packages drew the entire supply of those invoice cards from Tacoma, Portland, Seattle, Spokane and Lewiston. Postmaster Patterson then received 300. He wired emphatically for more, whereupon the government printed and shipped him the remaining 2,800. Surrounding counties and adjacent states are deluging the rabbit market, and the department of agriculture is now seeking information, hoping it may assist in extending the market.

An English divine, visiting in this country, approves of American slang, which, he says, has an element of refreshing force, and is more robust and expressive than the refined American-Saxon. Anything which is characteristic impresses, and this may explain the vitality of our much-vituperated slang, which, however, as this instance shows, has charms for the foreign and impartial ear. There is much of the nerve and progressiveness of the American character, which, finding old forms too weak or conventional for their expression, have created picturesque terms for themselves, most of which will probably take a recognized and respected place in the standard dictionaries of the future.

Electing a Goat King for a Day.

Puck fair, held at Killorglin, is one of the last of the old-time Irish fairs, and more than one story is told as to the origin of its name. Amongst them is a tradition that when Cromwell's soldiers were in Ireland a large party of troopers were coming over Kerry mountains, making for Killorglin, when they frightened a flock of goats. These immediately made off helter-skelter for Killorglin, and dashed wildly into the town headed by a great Puck. Thus warned of impending danger, the inhabitants beat off the troopers, and in gratitude dedicated a fair to their horned defender, and elected him king for a day.

C. E. Social

Last Friday night the Christian Endeavor Society of the Presbyterian Church held a social at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Roy R. Scarr. A large number of the members were present and the meeting was opened by Vice President, Scarr. After the reading of the minutes Chas. Wood, Pres., arrived. Reports of the committees were made. The nominating committee reported nominations made and then the society took a vote on the candidates. The following officers were elected to serve until January 1st., 1916; Dr. Scarr, Pres.; John Fellers, Vice Pres.; Dorcas Fellers, Secretary; Chas. Wood, Treasurer and Missionary Treasurer; Mrs. Roy Scarr, Corresponding Secretary. After the election of officers a motion was carried that we adjourn. After the business meeting all partook of games for some time when refreshments were served consisting of ice-cream and cake. All pronounced it delicious. We were sorry however that "Doc" turned the freezer so hard that day that he had the head-ache and could not enjoy the fruits of his labor. At a rather late hour the guests departed for their homes after expressing the enjoyment of the evening to the host and hostess.

Take Plenty of Time to Eat.

There is a saying that "rapid eating is slow suicide." If you have formed the habit of eating too rapidly you are most likely suffering from indigestion or constipation, which will result eventually in serious illness unless corrected. Digestion begins in the mouth. Food should be thoroughly masticated and insalivated. Then when you have a fullness in the stomach or feel dull and stupid after eating take one of Chamberlain's Tablets. Many severe cases of stomach trouble and constipation have been cured by the use of these tablets. They are easy to take and most agreeable in effect.

James A. Ray, a farmer living near Pawnee City, dropped in Monday to have his announcement run in the Argus. Mr. Ray has been a resident of Pawnee county for thirty-five years and has been engaged in stock raising for the last thirty years with the exception of the last year. Mr. Ray is well known throughout this county and owns two fine farms west of Pawnee City.

As a representative Mr. Ray would be an ideal man to represent farm interests. The farmer is the man on whom all business interests depend and the study of farm conditions has fitted this man for the office he is seeking. The support of the voters of Pawnee county would be appreciated by Mr. Ray and we believe he deserves their support.

Myron R. Schrader of Steinauer called last week and handed us the announcement. Mr. Schrader has come out for county superintendent on the democratic ticket and we believe he will be strong in the campaign. He has been principal of the Steinauer schools for two years and if he is not elected to the office he is seeking he will hold that position the coming year.

Mr. Scrader's experience has equipped him to make a good superintendent for he knows what is best for the schools of Pawnee county.

Kovanda - - Kunc

Miss Josie Kovanda of this city and Mr. Melvin Kunc of Crab Orchard were united in the bonds of wedlock at St. Joe, June 15, 1914. The bride is an accomplished young lady having been born and raised in our community and has been a clerk in our stores at different times and also at Crab Orchard. The groom is a sterling young man, having clerked in a store for some time, but at present is farming. They will make their home on a farm near Crab Orchard. The Argus with a host of other friends extend congratulations to this happy couple.

Attended the Nebraska Press Association

Yes, the Editoress of the Argus was in attendance at the Nebraska Press Association at Lincoln from Friday last until Monday. We were badly out numbered by the gentlemen editors and are copying a statement from the Lincoln Daily Star in regard to the lady editors of Nebraska.

"But two women newspaper editors have registered at this convention up till noon today. (Saturday) They were Anna B. Fellers of Table Rock and Chattie Coleman of Stormsberg."

We left Friday after the paper was in the mails and left our son and the forman to take good care of the shop and watch it carefully. It seems as though they did.

We found that each day had a splendid program and that each day had a splendid program and that there were all kinds of newspaper editors; fat editors, thin editors, old editors, young editors, big editors, little editors, middle sized editors, tall editors and short editors.

We had the pleasure of meeting some of Nebraska's most prominant newspaper men and many other Nebraska editors. The association was like an army encampment and was a city of tents. A newspaper was published daily on the grounds. On the first day there were one hundred and five tents on the grounds and every one was occupied by a Nebraska editor. Some spent their time fishing, some playing base ball and many talking shop talk.

Col. Foxworthy of Lincoln was on the grounds and was mighty good at looking after the comfort of his friends.

We had a good time at the association and would have liked to have stayed longer but we were afraid that the force here might take a vacation too and on our return we found the force just as we had expected; with their feet high on the desk and reading the exchanges.

SYNOPSIS.

Ralph Van Vechten, a young man of leisure, is astonished to see a man enter his little house across the street from the Powhatan club, long unoccupied and spoken of as the House of Mystery. Several persons at regular intervals enter No. 1215 Van Vechten expresses concern to his friend, Tom Phinney, regarding the whereabouts of the tenant, and fiancee, Paige Carew. A man is forcibly ejected from the house. Van Vechten and Tom follow the man and find him dead in the street. Van Vechten is attracted by the face of a girl in the crowd of onlookers surrounding the body. Detective Flint calls on Van Vechten to get his version of the tragedy. Tom Phinney goes alone on a yachting trip. He recognizes among some persons in a passing motor boat two men whom he had seen enter the House of Mystery. He sees one of them, a Mr. Cella, on shore later and follows him. Cella and his friend are taken to the police house. A sweet-voiced girl later protests against the roughness of the police. Van Vechten calls on his uncle, Theodore Van Vechten, big man in Wall street, and keeps on the case from there on in search of information regarding the whereabouts of Paige Carew. Detective Flint shows Van Vechten a gold mesh purse found in the House of Mystery. Van recognizes it as belonging to Paige Carew. She arrived on New York scene from Europe previously. It develops that the ladies visited the House of Mystery to see Bonner, owner of the House of Mystery. It is recalled that Temple Bonner was in love with a daughter of Compton Bellamy, who married Max Winfield. Another daughter married a man named Devereaux. Bonner and Willard were intimate friends. A search is started for Willard. Van Vechten enters the House of Mystery by the back door in time to hear John Cella threaten a girl. He interferes and helps the girl escape, but is rendered unconscious and is brought to with Cella and Phinney gets the job as master of Brownlow's yacht Ecbatan, which has been ordered to the scene of serious mission. The charterer, Max Winfield, and his friends board the yacht at night and Tom hears the voice of the unknown over the speaking tube. Apparently his mission is honorable, and intimates that a great wrong is about to be righted. He gives orders that no one is to leave or board the yacht without his consent. With Willard's consent Bella goes ashore to telephone, and returns to the yacht in great agitation.

BOOK III.

Before breakfast next morning—Thursday—a new lady appeared on the street in the same becoming blue gown she had worn the previous night. Her face was drawn and pale and her eyes held a troubled look, as if she had passed a sleepless night. Nevertheless she smiled as she greeted him.

"I am afraid I must cause more bother, she said. "I am obliged positively to go down-town this morning—I sent no further word last night, you know."

"Before breakfast!" exclaimed Tom.

"Yes," with quiet gravity. "I am going with Willard."

Miss Willard! Then one of the other ladies was old Willard's daughter—Jessie, doubtless.

"Della," he said after a moment, "do you care if I go with you this morning?"

She colored faintly and dropped her gaze, but her gravity did not change.

"I shall be very glad to have you go over the bridge with me, and we can get a cab—if such things are procurable so far from town. But I'm sorry the errand is of a private nature—I abhor mystery and secrecy—but it is not mine."

"What's This Got to Do With Either the Murder or Miss Carew?"

"I don't want to intrude," he hesitated. She flashed a sly look at him.

"Little good it does me to object," she said—"Here's Jessie."

A stenographer had seemed to disclose a girl who, if she was not so beautiful as Della, Tom was obliged to admit that she came very near being so. Here was a bewitching type, black hair and eyes, but a clear complexion; and she was as tastefully and becomingly gowned, though in light gray, as the other girl.

She acknowledged Tom's introduction so absently that he received the impression that her mind was set upon something afar off and that she was fiercely impatient of the interposing distance. She seemed to move in a sort of stony despair that would crush her down presently if she could not find relief.

And on the way over to the landing, and up to the Claremont, whose garage supplied them with an automobile, she uttered no word and remained indifferent to her surroundings.

When he had seen them in the car, Della offered him a hand.

"I suppose the launch will come for us?" she said with a sober little smile.

"If you don't mind, I'll meet you here—any time you say," returned Tom.

"I want to run down to my club and look up a friend, then I'll be free."

Della glanced doubtfully at Senate Willard. "We might take you as far as Central park," she proposed.

"Thank you—if I'll not be in the way."

And the long ride rot-ward was made in silence, save for an occasional remark from Della to which Tom could find only the most perfunctory of responses. Jessie Willard's secret distress sat heavily upon them all. As eagerly disposed as Tom was to be in Della's company, yet it was with a sense of relief that he separated from the two girls, after agreeing to rejoin them at the Claremont at five.

Thirty minutes later he was at the Powhatan, learning with incredulous surprise that Van Vechten had not returned from his night's outing. He promptly called up the Kenmore and got Barnicle on the wire. His mystification deepened at the bald information that "Mr. Rudolph was out of the city."

"Out of the city!" Tom bawled into the mouthpiece. "What the devil do you mean? Where out of the city?"

But Barnicle was hung up.

"Oh, well," he reflected by and by, "he's learned something about Miss Carew and is off to see about it. I'll just knock around town a while, then catch a Central train and go back. It's perhaps just as well that he don't see me."

Then with a vivid memory of the delectable burden he had borne the night before, of the smile of the unaffected request that he carry her, of his name whispered by her pretty lips—he grinned broadly and happily.

The grin, however, was cut short by a sudden realization that Mr. Phineas Flint was standing at the office. At a distance, scrutinising him curiously.

Flint advanced to where he was sitting in the lounge and helped himself to a cigarette. Tom was not precisely overjoyed at the encounter.

"How do," he said shortly—the broadest interpretation of the salutation could not construe it as an inquiry touching upon the state of Mr. Flint's health and happiness.

That gentleman did not immediately respond, but presently his eyes have been in progress between Willard and the U. S. government.

While Tom had a feeling that this information, if properly understood, would clear up much that was secret and obscure respecting Willard and his conduct, still it did not enlighten him in any way. Indeed, it was all the more baffling that the intelligence should come voluntarily from the Man of Iron. He pussled fruitlessly over it a while, then asked:

"What's this got to do with either the murder or Miss Carew?"

"Nothing," cheerfully returned the detective, folding the slip of paper and depositing it in his wallet, "nothing whatever. Good day!"

And he left Tom more perplexed and mystified than ever.

CHAPTER VII.

The Face Appears Again.

Since late Tuesday night, Rudolph Van Vechten's apartments in the Kenmore had remained with undisturbed and various other ways their presentment was not dissimilar to a hospital ward.

The one jarring note was Barnicle, whose cadaverousness was become so monotonous that he might have personified Death—or, at least, the undertaker—waiting only until doctor and nurse were through, to perform his professional services at the offices. Barnicle never would have been tolerated about a hospital.

Early Thursday morning Van Vechten had insisted to such good purpose that he was able to rise, don his clothes and be shaved, that at eight o'clock he was reclining upon the davenport in his living-room, and the nurse was out taking a much needed airing. Such portions of his bandaged features as were visible were discolored, and a cloth saturated with some scented lotion hid his swollen eyes.

All the hideous details of the episode in the Silent House remained in his memory like the aftermath of a terrifying nightmare. How, late at night, he had returned to his apartment to find Barnicle waiting for him; how he had contrived to drag his battered body down the stairs, fainting more than once with pain and weakness; how he had been found upon the walk by a passing policeman, who, recognizing him, was persuaded to keep his mouth shut and convey him to his rooms—each revolting particular stuck persistently in his mind.

By which it might be inferred that not the least of his present suffering might be ascribed to nervous shock.

At the hour mentioned, he was sleeping fitfully after a restless night. He frequently started broad awake, when memory invaded his slumbers.

During the period since Tuesday, Barnicle had continued in a state of perturbation; for he had been strictly charged to inform all callers that his employer was not in town, and there had been numerous urgent telephone calls for the young man. The bells were now muffled, and Barnicle was required to lend the instrument a constant attention, since only a faint buzz announced a signal.

The young man's uncle, Mr. Theodore Van Vechten—for whom Barnicle had contained sentiment only of the highest esteem and respect—had been particularly insistent for definite information concerning his nephew, even to the extreme of threatening to come up and write Barnicle's neck; which had a further depressing effect upon the excellent valet's spirits.

Then an aggravating person giving

IS WORLD'S LARGEST LATHE

Immense Piece of Machinery Turned Out for Use of United States Government.

Those who live inland, and, in fact, all who are not fairly familiar with the large guns used for sea coast defense, can hardly appreciate the huge size of lathe necessary to turn and bore them. The lathe being designed and built by the United States Naval Gun shop at Washington, D. C., by the Niles-Bement-Bond company, at the latter's works, is the largest made. The lathe is so long that the preparations for its installation include the construction of a tunnel extending out under a highway, as there was not room for it between the walls of the shop.

The lathe bed itself is 175 feet long and is made in five sections, but the head, overshaft included, projects for a man who isn't strong-minded enough to do that." "Did you ever try it?" "Yes. I once got along for two months without taking a drop of liquor or smoking a cigar." "Why did you ever go back to it?" "Well, I had by that time recovered from my attack of typhoid fever, and there wasn't any reason for denying myself."

and the length 15 feet. The weight of the lathe complete with all its electrical equipment is 800,000 pounds, or 400 tons.—American Machinist.

"Made in England."

Orders are frequently sent to British and French label makers for labels bearing fancy descriptions, constituting a false description of origin, for the South American trade. These makers are requested to execute orders for labels bearing such indications as Smith, Regent street; Brown, Piccadilly; Gabrielle or Suzanne, Rue de la Paix; Paris, when there is every reason to believe that the goods to which the labels are destined are neither English in the one case nor French in the other.

Had Proved His Point.

"Do you think you could give up drinking and smoking if you wished to?" asked overstaff inquirer of a man who isn't strong-minded enough to do that." "Did you ever try it?" "Yes. I once got along for two months without taking a drop of liquor or smoking a cigar." "Why did you ever go back to it?" "Well, I had by that time recovered from my attack of typhoid fever, and there wasn't any reason for denying myself."

DAIRY

USING RYE FOR GREEN FEED.

When Cut Just Before It Commences to Head It is Relished by Cows —Wheat is Also Good.

Rye cut just before it commences to head makes an excellent early green feed for milk cows. When in full head the stalks become tough and woody, and much of it will be rejected by the stock. Wheat drilled at the rate of three bushels per acre, on rich mellow ground, makes a good second, early green feed. Wheat has more leaf and is much relished by all stock, especially cows and sows with sucking pigs. For a herd of twelve to four teen head of cows in full milk, one acre should be drilled to rye and one acre to wheat. The ground for these early, green feeds should be deep, mellow and heavily dressed with rotted cow manure spread broadcast and well harrowed in before drilling. Diluted urine from the manure vault spread during the winter when ground is slightly frozen, will greatly increase the yield and early maturity of both rye and wheat. The rye and wheat for early, green feed should be seeded to rye corn and fresh grass, as a half yield of hay may be cut from the same field the latter part of August. This is the favorite method with the dairymen in this part of the state as the one plowing and fertilizing answers for a crop of rye and several crops of hay, says a writer in Baltimore American. Rye, if not wanted for grain, when too tough for the cows should be cut and served for hay. If quickly cured without getting damaged by rain, it makes an excellent hay. One-half peck at salt spread to the ton as it is hauled in will improve its feeding value and also prevent molding in the mow. After the rye hay is hauled in roll the stubble down and sow two bushels of turnip seed to the acre. This mixture, sown as soon as rye crop is removed, will increase the growth of the clover and grass.

WIRES FOR CUTTING BUTTER

Excellent Arrangement of Ohio Man for Making Small Square Pieces for Individual Use.

For the speedy and neat division of a cake of butter into a number of small square pieces for individual use, the butter cutter designed by an Ohio man seems to fill the bill admirably. A standard has a cutter frame rotable upon it. A platform holds the butter cake, and at the end of the platform is another frame, like the footboard of a bed, with two fine wires bisecting the mesh rears. The rotable frame has a series of fine wires running across it parallel to each other. The butter is placed on the platform, and this upper frame is pressed down through it. The wires separating it into square blocks, about an inch thick. The cake is then forced out through the other frame and divided into four times as many smaller squares.

Keeping Milk in Summer.

When ice or cold water cannot be obtained, or where a can of milk has to be left in a place where water and ice cannot be conveniently used, a wet cloth — preferably flannel — wrapped around the can is an aid in keeping milk cool.

One end of the cloth is best left extending from the bottom of the can and immersed in a pail of water. A large amount of the sun rays falling on the wet cloth is consumed in evaporating moisture, and is thus prevented from reaching the milk. So long as the cloth is kept wet it is a protection, but as soon as it becomes dry heat passes through it to the milk uninterrupted.

Pure Bred Cows Best.

The pure bred cow carries a great possibility of reproduction of the qualities of her ancestors. In her the power of heredity predominates because she is bred for that particular line. The scrub cow is likewise a great example of hereditary influence but her tendencies are along the lines of inferior production and a yield that does not make a profit.

Deserves Good Water.

The dairy cow deserves the very best water that can be had. Do not make her depend upon pools, running streams and sloughs for her drink.

Milk Machines Lacking.

Although there are countless inventions we still lack successful milking and husking machines.

1913 RECORD

Magnificent Crops in all Western Canada

All parts of the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, have produced wonderful yields of Wheat, Oats, Barley and Flax. Wheat graded from Contract to No. 1 Hard, weighed heavy and yielded from 20 to 45 bushels per acre; 22 bushels was about the average. Mixed Farming may be considered fully as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition, the good water, the abundance of fuel and shelter, all combine to make Western Canada the ideal home for stock. In 1912, and again in 1913, at Chicago, Manitoba carried off the Championship for best wheat. Good schools, markets convenient, climate excellent. For the homeseeker, the man who wishes to farm extensively, or the investor, Canada offers the biggest opportunity of any place on the continent.

JIMMY WILL SETTLE DOWN

Gracie Van (of Van & Casell)—Hello, dears. Did y' just hear about us getting a route of 20 weeks on the O. B. time at $50 more than our old figure? It's horrible!

Algy (late of the Alls)—Waste orrible about it? I'd faint dead away if I got the last 'alf of next week.

Gracie Van—Didn't you know I'm ready to shake the show business an' settle down? I'm tired of it, folks. I'm just about ready to wire my fiance in Passaic to book a single date for a team at the village parson's.

Wallie Howard (a juvenile)—I didn't know your permanent address was Passaic, Jimmy.

Jimmy Casell (Gracie's partner)—It ain't. She's referrin' to a hick named Higgins who filled her head full of notions of a quiet home life and a bungalow in Passaic instead of two-a-day with a recognized act like me. If it must be—then—

Algy (late of the Alls)—W'at? Wot-ho-hal, with the determination of sending the presumptuous caller about his business. With this purpose in mind, he did not bother to close the door behind him. He became incensed too soon. Are you selfish enough to ask Gracie to play 20-long weeks when she pines for a home and a husband's love? I say Mr. Higgins' picture in her make-up box and he looks like a gentleman of refinement. There's something home-like about him.

Jimmy—She's got his picture, huh? That's news to me.

Gracie Van—Certainly I have.

Jimmy—W'at 'im in the little silver frame, Gracie?

Jimmy Casell—My frame! So I'm in the discard, what? That's what I call a cold deal. Talkin' out my autographed picture—a Christmas present to her at her request—and putting in a boob citizen from Passaic. The first thing I know Higgins will be stealin' my stuff an' trying to get by on my reputation. Here, Gracie—

Cleo Artigue—James, listen to one who knew you when you were a boy being chased by the cops. I could have married Higgins is an elderly widower who knew Gracie when she was a girl back in Omaha. When they met again in Passaic, when you played there, he renewed his acquaintance and he asked Gracie found they had much in common. He's fond of everything she is —and you're not. He loves the quiet life of a home and—

Dad Wadell—He must be a gentleman to the manner born.

Gracie Van—Oh, Cleo, he's just grand. I' ought to see the leather furniture in the front parlor—and a fireplace and a kitchenette. I wanted to roll up my sleeves and make a batch of bread. Honest I did.

Wallie Howard—I ain't at home made bread since I was a kid.

Cleo Artigue—James doesn't realize what it means to a girl. Mr. Higgins has big money made and he and Gracie can stay at home or travel all the time.

Algy—W'y don't y' get 'im t' back a show, Gracie?

Jimmy Casell—Aft abe's goin' to do is travel, eh? She's tired travelin' now, but she's goin' to marry Higgins and keep on travelin'. I thought she was goin' to stay in Passaic an' bake biscuits.

Gracie Van—And he's got a car and a place at Sea Cliff. The day we marry it's going into my name.

Cleo Artigue—I'll spend two weeks at Sea Cliff with you sometime, dearie.

Algy—Give week-ends and we'll all go out. 'Ow about it, Wallie?

Gracie Van—You'll be very welcome. You all bean a-mind to me. And I know Mr. Higgins will be as pleased to have you as I. He's great at entertaining at his summer home. It's a big house with lots of spare rooms. Just let me know you're coming a few days ahead so I can have the servants put things in order. If I we—are not there, make yourselves at home. We may be away—

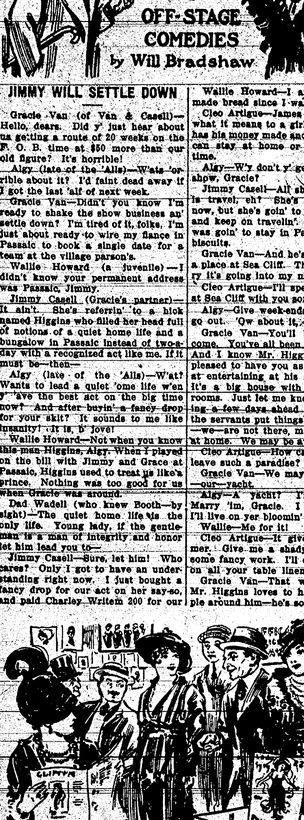
Cleo Artigue—How can you want to leave such a paradise?

Gracie Van—We may be out on his —our—yacht.

Algy—A yacht? I'm with you. Marry 'im, Gracie. I love yachtin'. I'll live on yer bloomin' boat.

Wallie—Me for it!

Gracie Van—That will be grand. Mr. Higgins loves to have show people around him—he's so broad-minded.



"Did V' 'ear What 'e Called Us, Wallie? Acrobats! Acrobats, Mind Y'!"

Dad Wadell—I'll sit under a stately elm and read my Keats.

Algy—I s'y, Gracie, you're the luckiest girl in the world to get a man like Higgins. You'll have a lovin' husband and a social circle made from the best. W'y, look at Jimmy wipin' 'is eyes!

Dad Wadell—It was a breach of etiquette on our part not to ask him to spend a few weeks at Mr. Higgins' place when we're there.

Cleo Artigue—James, do you feel badly to think Gracie is doing so well? Do you?

Jimmy Casell—It ain't that, Cleo. Why, I told the kid she was the only one for me a year before Higgins did. If she'll take me now I quit an' we can settle down. I'll be a little bungalow—I'll even live in Passaic.

Gracie Van—We'll—we'll play the 20 weeks first, James.

Wallie Howard (entering)—Say, Dad, do you play any instrument?

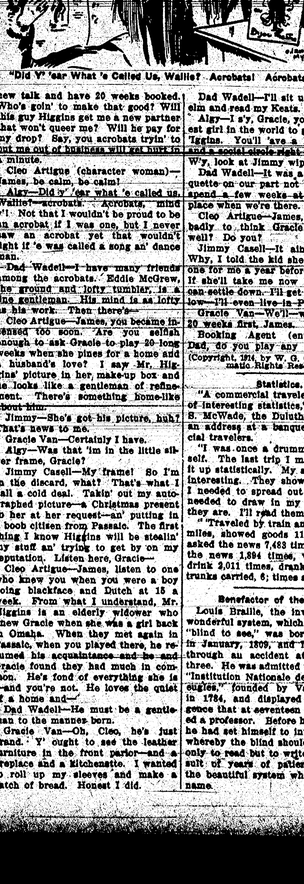
Benefactor of the Blind.

Louis Braille, the inventor of the wonderful system, which has made the "blind to see," was born near Paris in January, 1809, and lost his sight through an accident at the age of three. He was admitted to the famous "Institution Nationale des Jeunes Aveugles," founded by Valentin Hauy in 1784, and displayed such intelligence that at seventeen he was elected a professor. Before he was twenty he had set himself to invent a means whereby the blind should be able not only to read but to write, and the result of years of patient labor was the beautiful system which bears his name.



ONE DAYS CATCH.

THOSE who live upon the islands of Samoa never let pass an opportunity to kill a shark. The waters which surround that little world are infested by them, and sometimes a native will be caught and killed by one of the terrible man-eating monsters—quite frequently enough, indeed, to give a savage a zest to the sport. It would be difficult to say whether even bird-catching occupies a higher place. The natives are wonderfully expert and courageous, and as the flesh of the shark is the principal dainty at their great feasts, parties of men are forever going in search of it.

The favorite time is when a storm has just blown itself out, for the sharks have been driven inshore, and may be found sheltering in great numbers under the black rocks that border the lagoon. The men, who have rowed out in a frail canoe, throw cod overboard, piece by piece, and this serves the double purpose of attracting the sharks and gorging them so that they may be rendered easy of capture. The water around the boat quickly becomes alive with the brutes, and when the bait is devoured they retire to the shadowy waters beneath the surface. Swimming quietly along under the water, he comes to a sleeping fish, and with a single, easy movement slips the noose over its tail.

Then, as gently as he came, he returns to the canoe, and when he has secured safely back into it the native lays hold of the rope and rouses the shark from its sleep with a mighty pull together. The shark is dragged through the water before it has time to reflect, and in spite of its sudden panic and frenzied struggles, it is gradually hauled toward the boat. By keeping its tail clear of the water the native have made it practically helpless; and at last, by a peculiar movement, they jerk it into the canoe, and a tremendous blow with a club finishes its career.

Sometimes the shark has backed into a crevice or hole in the rocks before it has settled down to sleep, so that its head alone is accessible. In such a case the diver will swim up to it, and with the utmost coolness tap it gently but firmly on the head. Sleepy and gorged with food as it is, and annoyed by the interruption, without knowing exactly the cause of it, the shark turns round with a swish in a space barely large enough for it to lie in. As it does so it exposes its belly, and the diver cleverly drops the noose over it and returns to the boat in the customary manner. For the sake of variety, a baited hook is carried out by these natives and dropped in about 12 feet of water, the line being then brought back to land. When a shark seizes the bait, and is safely hooked, the natives shoulder the rope at the edge of the water, and, singing a rude, measured chant, dance inland, dragging the fish into the shallows, where it is speedily killed.

Sport Is Dangerous.

The sport is exceedingly dangerous, as can be imagined, but the Samoans are taught to be as much at home in the water as are the sharks, so that an astonishing indifference is displayed toward them. In some parts of the islands shark-fishing is regarded as being as much a trade as a sport, and the operations are carried out by a different method from those described above. The fishers

Cleo Artigue (character woman)—James, be calm, be calm!

Algy—Did y' 'ear what 'e called us, Wallie? Acrobats. Acrobats, mind y'! Not that I wouldn't be proud to be an acrobat if I was one, but I never saw an acrobat yet that wouldn't fight if 'e was called a song an' dance man.

"A commercial traveler's life is full of interesting statistics," said a friend to S. McWade, the Duluth capitalist, in an address at a banquet of commercial travelers.

"I was once a drummer, boys, myself. The last trip I made I entered it up statistically. My statistics were interesting. They showed me where I needed to spread out and where I needed to draw in my horns. Here they are. I'll read them to you.

"Traveled by train and buggy, 4,784 miles, showed goods 119 times, was asked the news 7,463 times, lied about the news 1,894 times, was asked to drink 2,011 times, drank 2,011 times; trunks carried, 6; times at church, 1."

Benefactor of the Blind.

Louis Braille, the inventor of the wonderful system, which has made the "blind to see," was born near Paris in January, 1809, and lost his sight through an accident at the age of three. He was admitted to the famous "Institution Nationale des Jeunes Aveugles," founded by Valentin Hauy in 1784, and displayed such intelligence that at seventeen he was elected a professor. Before he was twenty he had set himself to invent a means whereby the blind should be able not only to read but to write, and the result of years of patient labor was the beautiful system which bears his name.

Dad Wadell—I'll sit under a stately elm and read my Keats.

Algy—I s'y, Gracie, you're the luckiest girl in the world to get a man like Higgins. You'll have a lovin' husband and a social circle made from the best. W'y, look at Jimmy wipin' 'is eyes!

Dad Wadell—It was a breach of etiquette on our part not to ask him to spend a few weeks at Mr. Higgins' place when we're there.

Cleo Artigue—James, do you feel badly to think Gracie is doing so well? Do you?

Jimmy Casell—It ain't that, Cleo. Why, I told the kid she was the only one for me a year before Higgins did. If she'll take me now I quit an' we can settle down. I'll be a little bungalow—I'll even live in Passaic.

Gracie Van—We'll—we'll play the 20 weeks first, James.

Wallie Howard (entering)—Say, Dad, do you play any instrument?

WANTED TO KNOW THE FIGURE

Fortune Hunter's Mother Was Not Dealing in Uncertainties, if She Could Help It.

Miss Jeannette Gilder, the brilliant critic, toyed with a pink and gold mustache cup at the mustache cup tea concluding the Bad Taste exhibition in New York.

"The mustache cup," said Miss Gilder, "holds its own—even better than the hand-painted cuspidor. But, after all, there is spiritual as well as material bad taste, and a spiritual bad taste exhibition is now in order.

"In the forefront of it I'd put the fortune hunter. Not all our fortune hunters come from across the water. I heard of one the other day who belongs to the oldest family in America.

"But his family is very poor, and so he and his mother have decided that he must marry for money. They were discussing recently, the pair of them, a western girl.

"'Her mustache is large but vague,' said the mother. 'Besides, she is gauche. Her feet are broad and flat. She has a gold front tooth. Her French is execrable. She—'

"'Oh, I could make something out of her,' the young fortune hunter asserted confidently.

"'Yes, but how much—that's the question,' said his mother."

Fooled Once.

Little Francis was not to be fooled twice.

The heavy black clouds had massed in the east and west, the lightning was flashing fiercely between the heavy, incessant rolling of the thunder.

Francis was terribly frightened, and his fond mother had gathered her young hopeful into her arms and tried logically to calm his fears.

"Don't be afraid, darling. There's nothing to fear. God sends the thunderstorm to clear the air, water the flowers, and make it cooler for us. Now, don't cry, dear; it won't harm you, and everything will be better when it's over."

The little fellow listened intently, and as his mother finished he looked up at her gravely, and said: "No, no, mother, you talk exactly the way you did last week when you took me to the dentist. You have my tooth pulled."—Chicago Sunday Examiner.

Child Acts Surgeon's Role.

Sarah Shafter, thirteen years old, of Los Angeles, Cal., developed into a little heroine when her five-year-old sister fell on the sidewalk while at play and injured her shoulder. Dr. Edward G. Willey, little Sarah's surgeon, explained patiently over the telephone how the splint should be put on, and Sarah made such a good job of it as to excite the admiration of the who saw the tiny patient when she arrived at the receiving hospital with her little amateur nurse. The children's father is at the county hospital and their mother went to visit him. Marbelle fell and broke her arm. Sarah called up the receiving hospital, but owing to the distance was advised to call one of the district doctors. She could take no chances with Marbelle receiving hospital. Dr. Wiley told Sarah what to do to relieve the baby's pain, while the ambulance raced out to the Shafter home, and Sarah obeyed instructions to the letter.

ERUPTION DISFIGURED FACE

LOOK FOR 33. Mexico, D.—"In the spring of 1911 our little daughter, age five years, had a breaking out on her lip and part of her cheek that we took for ringworm. It resembled a large ringworm, only it differed in that it was covered with watery blisters that itched and burned terribly, made worse by her scratching it. Then the blisters would break through and let out a watery substance. She was very cross and fretful while she had it and had very little rest at night. When the eruption was at its worst it disfigured her face badly. We kept on using Cuticura Soap and Ointment and in three or four months the child was entirely cured." MRS. WINN'S ADVICE TO WOMEN

Take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and be Restored to Health.

Kansas City, Mo.—"The doctors told me I would never be a mother. Every month the pains were so bad that I could not bear my weight on me. But I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and not finished the first bottle when I felt greatly relieved and by the time I had made me sound and well, and I now have two fine baby girls. I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound too highly for what it has done for me. I always speak a word in favor of your medicine to other women who suffer when I have an opportunity."—Mrs. H. T. Winn, 1228 Freemont Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

Read What Another Woman says

Cumming, Ga.—"I tell some suffering woman every day of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it has done for me. I could not eat or sleep, had a bad stomach and was in misery all the time. I could not do my housework or walk any distance without suffering great pain. I tried doctors' medicines and different patent medicines but failed to get relief. My husband brought home your Vegetable Compound and in two weeks I could eat anything, could sleep like a healthy baby, and walk a long distance without feeling tired. I can highly recommend your Vegetable Compound to women who suffer as I did, and you are at liberty to use this letter."—Mrs. Charlie Bagley, R. 3, Cumming, Ga.

Methodist Church Notes.

The ice cream social given at the parsonage lawn on Tuesday night had a fair attendance, and the proceeds were nearly $9. Quite a number of people were kept away by the wheat cutting.

Summer heat seems to be having a bad effect on the prayer meeting attendance. It is unfortunate that when the thermometer goes up, religious fervor seems to go down. Let us throw off our lassitude and measure up to our best right manfully.

We have adopted the plan, since the warmer weather, of having the smaller meetings in the pleasant south basement room. The leaguers find it a most comfortable place on Sunday evenings.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Director of Sunday Department, The Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.)

LESSON FOR JUNE 28

REVIEW.

READING LESSON ONLY—Heb. 4:14-5:10.

GOLDEN TEXT—"The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." Luke 19:10.

The golden text is a great summary of the meaning and the essential purpose of all of our Lord's activities. Each lesson is an illustration of this simple promise. In them we discover chiefly our Lord in his work of preparing his disciples to share with him in this work.

Lesson I. The observation of man's attempt to get the best seats with the consequent abasement, calls forth the parable of the great supper. Therein we are shown man's enmity against God as revealed by his contemptuous treatment of God's overtures of grace. The rebuke and the parable reveal God's willingness and man's refusal. In all this our Lord was seeking these men.

The Perfect Son.

Lesson II. This is the Easter lesson and is aside from our series. In it we are shown that Jesus Christ is himself the chief subject of prophecy.

Lesson III. The one central truth here taught is that to be his disciple we must give up all and make him supreme. In our affections, aims, ideals, yea, make him the sole possessor of time, talent and possessions.

Lessons IV and V. It is impossible to separate these three parables. They are a whole in that each tells of something lost, sought and found. The Son, the Holy Spirit and the Father are each seeking. Our Lord was himself the perfect Son of the Father; who never got into the far country, or out of adjustment with his Father. He is different also from the churlish brother in that he rejoices to "bring back his own." These two lessons particularly illustrate his work of saving.

Lesson VI. Beginning with this lesson, our Lord seems to be sifting the multitude, and at the same time be preparing his disciples against their work of co-operating with him in his work of seeking and saving. The true motive in service is in the use of all we possess for him whom we love.

Lesson VII. As the last lesson had to do with stewardship, this has to do with service. This present life is but the vestibule of the eternal one. As we live this life as to develop it and to rule its desires, we shall find abundant gratification in this world beyond towards which we are traveling so rapidly.

Lesson VIII. Jesus is still instructing his disciples. Offenses must, or rather, will come, but forgiveness is the divine attribute, not because he is indebted to us for that he is merciful, sentimentality, sympathetic. Nothing we do ever places him under any obligations to us. When we have done all we will exclaim: "We have done that which was our duty to do." This does not set aside the joy which is ours and his when one of the lost is "found."

Lesson IX. Not only did Jesus sift the multitude and reveal the need of helpers, at the same time setting before them the terms of discipleship, but he also emphasizes the thought of gratitude on the part of those helped and of those his servants who are judged worthy to help him.

Lesson X. The kingdom which our Lord came to set up upon earth is to begin within us and it is not to consist of eating and drinking but of righteousness and truth. The visible kingdom which our Lord came to set up upon earth is to begin within us, and it is not to consist of eating and drinking, but of righteousness and truth.

Lesson XI. The picture of Zacchaeus is that of a man restored to his right relationship with God; the outward evidence being his acts of repentance and restoration. This lesson perfectly reveals the essential work of Christ, and that to which he is calling his disciples. Zacchaeus did not seek Christ, but Christ came to seek and save Zacchaeus and all like him who are lost.

Lesson XII. The great refusal reveals that the condition of being saved or being lost rests with the individual soul. Many elements enter into the refusal of men but the essential one is "and ye would not." John 5:40. Much possessions will not satisfy the human soul. There is the danger that we trust our wealth rather than God. Lacking one thing, everything is lost.

Summary. The whole of this period of our Lord's ministry was that of conflict and hostility with the rulers, wonder and amazement with the people, doubt and uncertainty with the disciples. As he went from place to place he showed infinite patience. His compassion was for men in their sin and his heart beat with tenderness. Though his words at times were severe, yet his impulse and passion was to seek and to save. His faithfulness in dealing with men, guests and hosts, rich and poor, publicans and sinners, Pharisees and outcasts—is also clearly set before us.

A stirring cry rings through the land, This glorious land our fathers won,
The kingdom of the "noble free," Our brothers died to hold it true;
Where through the ages God has planned Our sons shall bear the banner on—
To teach mankind true liberty. Chorus.

O sons and fathers, hear the call;
One starry flag enfolds us all;
For equal freedom let us stand,
Together serve our own dear land.

O Justice, beat old barriers down, Nebraska, this thy noble task—
And clear the way where wrong has stood; To make thy people truly free;
Place side by side the mother's crown, Oh, give thy own the boon they ask,
And armor bright of fatherhood. For God and home and liberty. Chorus.

This song, written by a talented but anonymous composer, is dedicated to the uses of the campaign. Rouget de Lisle, who wrote the Marseillaise in the wife heat of his passion for liberty, only intended it for his column of 500 volunteers leaving strasburg for Paris. The column sang it through France and it was like trailing a flaming torch through the villages on their march. Our song is a march. It has the quickening beat of the Marseillaise.

The actual march of the women has started not alone in Prence, but all over the civilized world. It quickens the intelligence and the pulses to keep step with innumerable rhythmic feet. It may very well be that this song will be the marching song of all Nebraska and then of the country. Leaving the past mistakes alone the words call on fathers and sons to make daughters and mothers their fellow citizens. It is a great song. It ably accede the enthusiasm and patriotism of thousands of singers to make it live forever.

OURS A UNIVERSITY FOR ALL.

Located on the present campus the advantages of our university are within the reach of any ambitious and energetic boy or girl. It is within easy walking distance of the business center of the city of Lincoln, where nearly a thousand students secure employment and earn in whole or in part the money necessary for their education. Removal to the state farm places the university beyond the reach of many of these, the most deserving of our consideration. Will the people of Nebraska consent to the placing of our university beyond the reach of those who toil in order to surround it with more beautiful landscape and scenery for the benefit of those who can live without work?

Records show that many hundreds of Nebraska's best known graduates earned their education. The log cabin and sod house have produced more greatness than ever sprung from marble fronts. Too much luxury neutralizes energy and stunts or destroys mentality. Keep the university where it is and give the poor boy a chance.—Frank D. Fraser, '93, in Lincoln Daily Star.

THE BEST CAMPUS.

The young men and women who come from the farms of Nebraska to take a four years' course at our university, are with few exceptions seeking and expecting four years of persistent hard work. They have no time for day dreaming. Knowing this fact, Charlotte C. Worley, of Alliance, classes of '98 and '06, has this to say in favor of the present city campus as contrasted with the ideal campus pictured by the removalists in their dream of a "unified university":

"Say all you want to for the refining influences of a beautiful park, can it be called an inspiration to strenuous labor? The human mind has long associated lovely grounds with leisure, recreation, relaxation and rest. Parks mean everything to the shut-in, fagged out denizen of the city. But do they mean much to pleasure-seeking youth, whom we are trying to inspire with a vim for the hard work of life?

"To my mind that campus will be the most inspiring to strenuous endeavor that takes on at least half the appearance of the business house, and office building, half the appearance of a work shop as well as the semblance of pleasure grounds. And a forty-acre building plat set in the midst of a hard working city is more in relation to real and genuine effort than one set in the center of a vast track of parking, receding far out on every side."—Lincoln Daily Star.

NOT ANTIQUATED.

There are fifteen buildings now in use of the university upon the city campus, seven of which are either fireproof or semi-fireproof structures. These buildings have cost the state a little less than one million dollars for their construction; they are today accommodating three thousand students.

Upon the present campus, the university housed in these fifteen buildings has taken rank among the first universities of the United States. It is contended that these buildings have become inadequate and obsolete; that we ought to have more fresh air, landscape gardening, and such like; and to this end we must abandon this plant and start all over. In other words, we are to junk this property for purely sentimental reasons.

There isn't a building on the campus much over forty years of age. Other great universities like Harvard, Yale and Princeton are now occupying buildings over one hundred years old and no suggestion is ever made that these buildings have become antiquated and for that reason must be abandoned.—E. M. Pollard, '93, in Nebraska State Journal.

THE HIGH BROW RECOMMENDATIONS.

The commission unanimously and emphatically makes the following recommendations:

1—That the policy of concentration upon the farm campus be adopted and that all work of such a character as to minimize the inconveniences and economic disadvantages incident to such a change, and that is to have enough money to accomplish the change in not to exceed four or five years. And to have enough money to make the change in that time, means a special tax levy of not less than two or three mills per year during the transition period.

2—The commission urges the immediate purchase of as much land contiguous to the present farm site as can be secured on reasonable terms.

Evidently recognizing the fact that there is not room enough on the 320 acres of the state farm for both the university and the school of agriculture. "Land contiguous to the present farm campus" is now covered with dwelling houses and other buildings, and is not to be had on much more "reasonable terms" than the six city blocks adjoining the city campus. Besides this recommendation is no part of the issues raised by House Roll 346 upon which the referendum will be taken in November.

3—The commission urges the purchase of additional farming lands close to the present farm campus as the conditions permit. An aggregate minimum of 640 acres available for farm purposes is demanded by the commission as absolutely essential to meet the needs of the great agricultural state of Nebraska.

The first part of this recommendation is worthy of serious consideration by the next legislature. The state now rents about 100 acres for carrying on agricultural experiments, and really ought to own every acre needed to make the agricultural school a greater power for good. And if 640 acres "available for farm purposes" is the very least we should have to attain the best results, why, in the name of common sense, reduce the amount available by moving the university college out there?

MUST SALUTE FLAG

DEADWOOD EDITOR DEMANDS ITS RECOGNITION.

SUFFRAGETS IN ILL FAVOR

Crowds at London Threatening and Police Protection Necessary.—Fire Breaks Out in Alberta Coal Mine.

Western Newspaper Union News Service.

Deadwood, S. D.—Intense patriotism and respect for President Wilson has found expression here in an odd way. A short time ago in a public address, a local citizen is alleged to have branded the president a "coward" in connection with the Mexican affairs. This so roused Edward McDonald, former mayor and well known democrat, that he resolved to teach the offender a lesson. From a second story window on his building on Main street, he suspended an immense American flag, which hung directly over the sidewalk where the orator was accustomed to walk daily. The ex-mayor announced that he would insist on the offending orator saluting the colors the next time he passed, but friends of the obnoxious citizen got word to him and the impending "scene," which was awaited by a number of interested persons, and to date the alleged traducer of the president has not put in an appearance, but the big flag still waves and the incident has attracted much attention.

Flames Add to Mine Horror.

Hill Crest, Alberta.—Flames broke forth in the tunnel of Hill Crest mine No. 20, wrecked by a terrific explosion Friday, and all rescue work was discontinued. Men who have been working on the debris and carrying out bodies, rushed from their work and barely escaped with their lives.

SUFFRAGETS IN ILL FAVOR

Crowds at London Threaten and Police Protection Necessary.

London.—Suffragette baiting has become the regular Sunday amusement of London crowds. The police were kept busy in Hyde park protecting the women and escorting them to places of safety. Various suffragist meetings were broken up and the speakers hustled from platforms with threats of ducking in the Serpentine. From the temper of the crowds these threats probably would have been put into execution except for the energetic action of the police.

Ross Hammond Makes Transfer.

Omaha.—Instructions have been received from the commissioner of internal revenue at Washington to Collector Ross L. Hammond to transfer his office to E. W. North. The transfer will be made at once. Collector Hammond submitted his resignation to the department May 21 with a request that it be accepted at the earliest convenience. The notice of its acceptance was received by him several days ago.

Mission Building Burned.

Shanghai.—Reports have been received here that the White Wolf brigands had captured and sacked the city of Taochow, massacreing 10,000 of the people, but uneasiness was felt among foreigners because the report also said that the mission buildings there were burned. It is known that the White Wolf band has been operating in that vicinity.

Age Limit Reduced.

Washington.—President Wilson has issued an executive order reducing from sixty to fifty years the maximum age limit for admission to civil service examinations for appointment of unskilled laborers in the federal offices outside of Washington, D. C. Veterans, however, may continue to be examined without regard to their age.

Lincoln Prosperous.

Lincoln, Neb.—There is prosperity in Otoe county. This cheerful state of facts is proven by the report of the Otoe assessors to the statistical department of the state board of agriculture. Twenty thousand citizens of Otoe county own 886 automobiles. This is an average of one automobile for every twenty-four people.

Millions of New Money.

Washington.—Millions of dollars of paper money of a new type will be put into circulation upon the establishment of the federal reserve banks within the next few weeks. Under the federal reserve bank act each of the twelve federal reserve banks will receive advances from the federal reserve board in the form of federal reserve notes, a distinctly new sort of paper money. Commercial paper will be the collateral advanced by the various banks as security for these notes.

"Back to Africa" Steamer in Port.

Galveston, Tex.—The steamship Liberia, on which Albert C. Sam, leader of the "back to Africa" movement among negroes in this country, proposes to take several hundred negroes to the gold coast of Africa, has arrived here. The arrival of the vessel was the occasion for much rejoicing among several hundred followers of "Chief" Sam, who have been here for several months. It is not known when the Liberia will sail for Africa. "Chief" Sam is said to be on board.

The offer of Harry M. Stout to plead guilty to a charge of murdering his wife on the condition that he be given only a life sentence, is being given consideration by the county attorney's office. If the plea of guilty is accepted it means that the county will be spared the expense of a trial.

Applicants for paroles occupied the time of the state board of pardons and pardons, which opened the monthly meeting at the penitentiary last Thursday. The enormous demand of the farmers to the members of the board for paroled men caused the members to get busy and make some recommendations.

The first hog cholera day of a series at the state farm Wednesday resulted in an attendance of about twenty-five breeders. Hereafter these days will be on the second Wednesday in each month. The program included lectures on hog cholera, a visit to the serum plant, a post mortem of cholera infected hogs and instruction in diagnosis for cholera.

Secretary Shuman of the state prison board has received word of the death of Tom Davis, who was paroled from the penitentiary August 29 on account of his physical condition. Davis was of Indian and negro blood. He killed a fellow convict named Strong, a negro, who he alleged to have threatened his life. Davis was convicted in Cass county of forgery.

John Conner, an aged convict at the state penitentiary, serving a life term for the murder of his wife, will be removed to the hospital for the insane at Hastings. Conner has served eight years of his term. Since his incarceration at the prison his conduct has indicated insanity and his health and mental condition has become worse lately.

Shipments of typhoid serum furnished by the war department are now being sent from the quartermaster's office to national guard organizations over the state. All members of the guard will be required to take the vaccination treatment as a preventive of typhoid fever. It has been tested out in the army and found to be efficacious in that regard.

The state bacteriological laboratory examined a cow's head sent in from Plattsmouth and found that the animal died from rabies as the result of a dog bite. A letter accompanying the head said the cow lived for three weeks after being bitten, when she died with every symptom of rabies. She was kept isolated in order to protect other animals and human beings from the disease.

Secretary of State Wait has looked up the law and found that registration of voters is required in only seven cities of Nebraska. These are cities having 7,000 or greater population. Lincoln, Omaha, South Omaha, Beatrice, Fremont, Grand Island and Hastings—the places which "did" without that class. There will be a general registration of voters this year in the cities named.

The state board of control has received word from Superintendent Baxter that the frame horse barn at the state hospital for the insane at Ingleside, near Hastings, burned last week. The cause of the fire was lightning. It was reported that the horses and contents of the barn were removed without loss. The barn was used to house horses working on the farm. The loss is estimated at $2,000. The state board will rebuild at once.

Three Nebraska educators are scheduled for addresses at the National Educational association meeting which is to be held at St. Paul, Minn., July 4 to 11. These are Fred W. Ayer, A. Lackey of the university, who will talk on harmonizing of vocational and cultural education; County Superintendent Alice Florer of York, who will speak on "Hot Noonday Lunches in the Rural School," and Huldah Petersen, formerly of Holdrege, now of the state extension department. The latter will discuss "Club Project Interests in County and State Affairs."

The same compilation shows that outstanding warrants on May 31 totaled $1,131,478.55.

Horse Had False Teeth.

Falls City.—Deputy Sheriff McFarland was called to Salem to look after some horse traders who had been working in that vicinity and who were wanted by the authorities in Nemaha county, Kansas. While at Salem the men traded a horse for a blind mare and gave the young man $15 boot. The young man returned home thinking he had made a fine deal, until he led corn to his new horse, when he discovered that the animal had false teeth made of plaster of paris, which crumbled away.

Arthur.—The board of county commissioners of Arthur county has decided upon the date for the sale of the ten lots in the town of the county seat as the Fourth of July, and there will be a big celebration, both for the natal day and the event of selling the lots. Arrangements have been begun for an old-fashioned barbecue and all other features that have been uncommon for years in celebrations of this kind.

The Army Worm.

Stella.—The army worm, or what is called the army worm, has appeared in large numbers in the neighborhood northwest of Stella, toward Howe. In one instance the worms were so thick on the haystack that they were scraped off. At the Coeur farm postholes and furrows were made to catch them so they could be destroyed as they passed from one field to another.

Teamsters' Strike at Humboldt.

Humboldt.—A miniature metropolitan sensation occurred here when the teamsters at the Humboldt brick plant "walked out." There were only two of them, but just enough to necessitate leaving of the entire working force of twenty-five men, it being a difficult proposition at this time to pick up teams for that kind of work.

Drinking Ice Water Results Fatally.

Blue Hill.—William Shultz, one of the early settlers of Webster county, died very suddenly last week. He was a portly man and had been cutting grass with a mowing machine most of the day. Becoming overheated, he went into the house and drank a large quantity of ice water, dying in a very few minutes. He was past sixty years of age and had lived in and near Blue Hill for more than twenty years.

MAKE DRUG STORE A CLUB

Many Are the Resort of the Neighborhood in a City, Until the Closing Hour.

When the head of a famous firm of "English chemists" was in this country, studying the conditions in his business, he found out that an American drug store is not the same as a drug store or chemist's shop in a European city. "We have no stationery bargain counters, no piles of fine candies, no cigar stands. Business goes much more swiftly than abroad. There is no lingering or loitering."

Truly a superficial observer! It has been said that the barroom is the club of the poor man. Certain "uplifters," regarding the barroom as a necessary evil, wish to make it decent, tolerable, educational.

To many a corner "drug store" is a club. This one haunts the soda water fountain; that one buys cigars or candy. There are habitues who drop in regularly. They call the proprietor "Doc." The clerks are addressed by their first name. There is talk about the ball game, the show at the theaters, politics, local and national. There is a game or at night that disperses only at the closing hour. There is mysterious conversation in a corner; the two men stand with their heads close together.

Now and then a blatant person tells a story, beginning: "I heard a good one this morning. Stop me, if you have it."

The drug store in the city is what the store is in the village. After all, the talk is practically what you hear in any club. The essential difference between the institution is that there is no election committee for admission to the shops. Man is a clubable animal, normally gregarious. At night lights attract him. During summer, seated near the fount of mineral waters or lolling against a counter, he observes the coming and going of humanity and thinks he is seeing life.—Philip Hale in Boston Herald.

Modern Housekeeping.

Milady rises at her work. The portable vacuum cleaner — milord keeps up with all the latest improvements—gratefully eats up its daily dust. The tireless cooker prepares the meals with a perfection and daintiousness unrealized in the old days." A bas mother and the way she used to cook! But in serving these meals milord's hitherto unwieldy perfections and deliciousness milord and milady must needs chase each other between kitchen and dining room. The guest at dinner, if he is luckily accustomed to phones, eats and runs, eats and washes it afterward. I have myself entertained many a guest in this fashion, and he has carried his own plate, and, being that kind of a guest or I wouldn't have invited him, he has obscurely helped wash the dishes, using a borrowed apron. But it would be absurd to claim that this performance, indefinitely repeated, is an improvement upon an orderly, deliberate, old dinner party. Conversation at dinner is more desirable than a foot-race between the courses; nor do I believe that life under such conditions can possibly "become so alluring that one day the great majority of us will choose it first of all."—From the Atlantic.

WRONG KIND OF GARDENING

Form That Patient Had Been Indulging In Was Not What Doctor Would Have Recommended.

"Now comes the season when the wife goes to the country and the husband, in the words of the immortal song, shouts 'Hooray!'" remarked Thos Jerome S. McWade, in an after-dinner speech at Duluth began his response to a toast on "The Ladies."

"When the ladies are with us, we are safe," he resumed, "but when they go off to country or shore, leaving us in town alone, then our troubles begin.

"A man one summer day called on a doctor.

"'Doc,' he said, 'I'm all run down.'

"'You look it, too,' said the doctor sympathetically. 'I'm not going to prescribe drugs for a man in your condition. No, sir, what I'm going to prescribe for you is gardening.'

"The patient started and his unhealthy pallor turned to a dull brick red.

"'But, doc,' he said, 'gardening is the cause of all my trouble.'

"'Humph, what kind of gardening?'

"'Roof,' the man replied."

Too Late.

On an Atlantic City pier, gazing sadly out over the blue water, a vet-erans of many summers talked about the late General Sickles.

"A good man," he said, "a brave man, but a most theatrical one. In the black tragedy of his youth, he was kind to his wife, but something marred, something vitiated his kindness—I think it was theatricalism—and the poor young woman died two years after he took her back.

"Once, at a camp reunion, I heard Sickles rebuke a man who was running down wives and marriages. Sickles said with a queer smile, a significant smile, perhaps:

"'Ah, Jim, the trouble with the average married man is that he doesn't know what a jewel his wife is till he comes to put her in a casket.'"

WHAT TO DO WITH OLD JELLY.

As few people care to take over to another year the old jelly, and as spring and summer days bring fresh fruit around us in more acceptable, it may be wise to record a few ways of disposing of the old jelly.

For a drink one may always find a use for jelly, as a few teaspoonfuls of jelly, dissolved in a pitcher of water, sweetened, and a bit of lemon juice added, makes a most refreshing beverage. Ice and mineral water, of course, enhance the palatability of the drink, without decay. Cost no more than others. Send for price list and mention size of tank wanted.

Mixed with flour and butter, jelly makes a most delicious filling for cakes. Take a cupful of sugar, one half cupful of shortening, one cupful of sour milk, one-half cupful of buttermilk (sour milk will do), one teaspoonful of cinnamon, half a teaspoonful of cloves, one teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of baking powder and two cupfuls of flour. Cream the shortening, add sugar and beaten yolk; divide the soda, putting half in the apple sauce and half in the sour milk. The whites of the egg is to be used for frosting.

Pepper Salad.—This is not only good to the taste but pleasant to the sight. Wash three green peppers and one red one. Plunge them into boiling water, remove at once and rub off the outer skin, chill. When cold, cut out the cores, removing stems and the seeds and veins, cut the pepper round and round in rings. Slice a mild onion in rings and arrange the red, white and green rings on a bed of blanched lettuce. Serve very cold with a French dressing, using a fourth as much vinegar as oil and adding a bit of sugar with the salt and pepper.

Raisin Bread.—This is such a favorite now with everybody that we should have a reliable recipe at hand when preparing it. Scald a pint of sweet milk and stir in a teaspoonful of butter and one of salt. When lukewarm add a half cup of warm water and half a yeast cake. Stir and beat in enough flour to make good cake batter and set to rise in a warm room for eight hours. Then beat again for five minutes, add a cupful of seeded raisins and flour enough to knead, and set to rise until light. Set for the second rising, after adding a cup of halved raisins. Let rise and bake in small loaves.

Chop Suey.—One pound of lean pork, one pound of veal or half of each; cut in small pieces, three onions, three stalks of celery, a few mushrooms; two tablespoonfuls of cornstarch, two of molasses. Put a little butter in a spider and drop in the meat, season, add the rest of the ingredients and cook until the meat is tender.

CHERRIES ARE RIPE.

There is no fruit which quite takes the place of the cherry and its fresh, juicy and luscious fruit is best eaten fresh from the tree. As we have no short a season, it must needs be prolonged by various methods of preserving. Now that the large Bing cherries are in market try putting them up for delicious conserve to serve with meats in winter. Pit the cherries and cover with a fine cider vinegar and let them stand over night. In the morning take an equal weight of the drained cherries and sugar, mix well, put into a jar, stir until the sugar is dissolved, then place in the cellar with a cloth and plate over the jar. This may be dipped into as long as it lasts and will keep indefinitely.

Breakfast Cherries.—Chilled cherries with steams and leaves left on for garnish make a refreshing breakfast fruit. Another way I like it is to pitted cherries well sugared and sprinkled with lemon juice in layers.

GOOD THINGS TO TRY.

The following Cake is the original recipe of the now famous cake and worth setting down in the family cook book:

"Apple Sauce Cake.

KILLED MOUNTAIN LION

HORSE MORE THAN A MATCH FOR FOE IN FAIR FIGHT.

Had Opportunity to Run, But Bravely Stood His Ground and Crushed the Skull of His Enemy in the Last Round.

The following, among hundreds of similar incidents, seems to be well authenticated:

Some years ago a hunter in Wyoming territory was camping under the Wind river, well up in the mountains. He had a horse of fine breed, and had selected a small bunch of cottonwood trees for his camp, while, at a little distance, under an unusually large tree of the same kind, and apart from all the others, he stabled his stallion.

It could hardly be called stabling—for the horse was picketed, and the tree formed his shelter.

One night the hunter was aroused from a sound sleep by a neigh from his horse, which sounded rather like rage than fear. Amerious forces are often quick to detect the approach of Indians, as well as beasts of prey, and the hunter was soon upon his feet, and looking in the direction of his horse.

The animal was standing in the full light of a bright moon, and seemed to be staring at an object in the branches of the tree. As the hunter looked the branches were violently agitated, a dreadful yelling scream was heard, and a dark object, which was a mountain lion, landed on the back of the horse. The latter sprang into the air with a mad scream, little inferior in shrillness and rage to that of his enemy.

He returned to the ground with a great concussion, but failed to shake off the mountain lion, so closely did the latter cling to his prey. Blood began to appear on the horse's neck and shoulders, and the lion was tearing his way to his jugular, to let out the gallant beast's life.

Apparently realising his full danger, before his master could do anything the horse snapped the picket rope and sprang into a dense tangle of boughs, and the mountain lion was torn from his seat and turned loose with great violence. The stallion passed through the thicket and then turned to confront his enemy in the open space, never offering to run away.

The lion, quickly recovering himself, and mad with the taste of blood, sprang once more into the branches of the big tree and also another leap toward the horse, but missed his aim.

Then he began a series of circles around the horse, getting nearer and nearer each time, and at last made another leap.

But the brave horse was ready for him and with the rapidity of thought changed front and his hind feet struck the lion full in the breast.

The animal rolled over and over, with yells of pain and rage, but then came on once more.

This time he came to his death, for the horse's heels struck him fairly between the eyes, and crushed his skull into splinters. He gave a few convulsive struggles and then stiffened in death, while the triumphant stallion stood neighing and pawing the ground in token of victory.

THE SIMPLE LIFE FAD.

Is there to be a revival of the "simple life" movement. It comes around about so often, and the frequent allusions to it in newspapers and periodicals recently suggest that it may be due again. When Pastor Wagner, a few years ago, earnestly advocated simplicity, he aroused great enthusiasm. Much was written in praise of the simple life, and to read and hear what was said on the subject on all sides, it might have been thought an era was to set in when large numbers of people would return to a primitive condition of living resembling that of their pioneer ancestors. The average man and woman really love a life of much simplicity, says the Indianapolis Star. They keep regular hours; they go about their daily routine of work six days in the week with little variation. They go sedately to church on Sunday, or if not that, indulge in outings that the wildest stretch of the imagination cannot designate as dissipation. If they seek amusement they go to the "movies" or to the theater, or to a lecture. Now and then they make a railway journey. Their homes are comfortable, but not especially luxurious; their life, as a rule, is devoid of excitement and excesses. The most of them could not well live more simply and yet conform to the customs and manners of their time. In short, the simple life, as a needed reform, is a good deal of a myth—an agreeable subject of conversation at times, but not needed in reality.

A new remedy for diabetes has been announced by Dr. Marcel Labbe of Paris. It consists of a diet of dried vegetables. To effect a cure the doctor prescribes 30 grammes of dried vegetables with fresh eggs and 150 grammes of buttered albumen of bread, with a small quantity of fresh vegetables and wine. He says that the patient who follows steadily this regime should be cured, according to varying conditions, in from three days to a fortnight. According to the report remarkable results have been obtained from the new cure, the chief merit of which is its richness in albumenous matter.

We have spoken of small coins, but what of large ones? The record, both for size and value, must surely be held by one described by Roger Ascham. It was specially made as a gift from the Inhabitants of Tyrol to the Emperor Maximillian, and was the size of a "great Suffolk cheese" and as heavy as two men could bear. Over 6,000 guilders (about £1,200 English) had gone to the making of it, and it was duly stamped with the arms of the emperor, and on the other side with his wife's face "most lively printed." This, however, was a freak. The largest coin ever in circulation was probably the old English £5 piece.

The Ottoman government has decided to admit women to the universities, where a special course of lectures on hygiene, domestic economy and the rights of women will be delivered for their benefit. In enlightened Ottoman circles the government's new measure is regarded as an appropriate means for regenerating the world of Islam and placing it on a level with the civilization of the West.

Teaching the co-eds of Illinois to swim in their street clothing is a useless activity. They will no sooner learn to swim in one season's fashions than others will be created in which they will inevitably drown.

Might Have Liked Them.

At a reunion of the Adams family the chicken croquettes gave out, so the maids carefully neglected the young children. After vainly trying to attract the attention of his mother, one of the little boys at the lower end of the table called out in a loud tone of voice: "Mother!"

"What is it, Albert?" she replied.

"Do you think," went on the child, "I should have liked the croquettes if I had one?"—Lippincott's.

Electric Motor on Pump

On Monday O. W. Fellers installed an electric motor at the town well where it will be used to pump water for public use. Last year a new concrete platform was built at the well and it was then the intention to install a motor and the platform was made to accomodate the motor. A small house will be built over the motor to protect it from the weather. The new method of pumping water will be decidedly more inviting to the thirsty man than the old way.

Ten big seats were placed in the park last week. They are twelve feet long and are so constructed that they are very comfortable. These seats are brand new and will contribute a great deal to the enjoyment of the Fourth.

1776 - - 1914 Freedom

Out of the north the wild news came,
Far flashing on its wings of flame,
Swift as the boreal light which flies
At midnight thru the startled skies.
And there was tumult in the air,
The fife's shrill note, the drum's loud beat,
And thru the wilds land everywhere
The answering tread of hurrying feet;
While the first oath of Freedom's gun
Came on the blast from Lexington;
And Concord, roused, no longer tame,
Forgot her old baptismal name,
Made bare her patriot arm of power;
And swelled the discord of the hour.

Within its shade of elm and oak
The church of Berkley Manor stood;
There Sunday found the rural folk,
And some esteemed of gentle blood.
In vain their feet with loitering tread
Passed 'mid the graves where rank is naught;
All could not read the lesson taught,
In that republic of the dead.

How sweet the hour of Sabbath talk,
The vale with peace and sunshine full
Where all the Happy people walk,
Decked in their homespun flax, and wool
Where youth's gay hats with blossoms bloom,
And every maid with simple art,
Wears on her breast, like her own heart,
A bud whose depths are all perfume;
While every garment's gentle stir
Is breathing rose and lavendar.

The pastor came; his snowy locks
Hallowed his brow of thought and care;
And calmly, as shepherds lead their flocks,
He led into the home of prayer.
The pastor rose; the prayer was strong;
The psalm was warrior David's song;
The text, a few short words of might,—
"The Lord of hosts shall arm the right!"

He spoke of wrongs too long endured,
Of sacred rights to be secured;
Then from his patriot tongue of flame
The startling words for Freedom came.
The stirring sentences he spake,
Compelled the heart to grow and quake,
And, rising on his theme's broad wing,
And grasping in his nervous hand
The imaginary battle-brand,
In fade of death he dared to fling
Defiance to a tyrant king.

Even as he spoke his frame renewed
In eloquence of attitude,
Rose, as it seemed, a shoulder higher;
Then swept a kindling glance of fire
From startled pew to breathless choir;
When suddenly his mantle wide
His hands impatient flung aside,
And, lo! he met their wondering eyes
Complete in all a warrior's guise.

A moment there was an awful pause,—
When Berkley cried, "Cease, traitor! cease!
God's temple is the house of peace!"
The other shouted, "Nay, not so,
When God is with our righteous cause;
His holiest places then are ours,
His temples are our forts and towers,
That frown upon the tyrant foe;
In this, the dawn of Freedom's day,
There is a time to fight and pray!"

And now before the open door—
The warrior priest had ordered so—
The enlisting trumpet's sudden roar
Rang thru the chapel, o'er and o'er,
Its long reverberating blow,
So loud and clear, it seemed the ear
Of dusty death must wake and hear.
And the the startling drum and fife
Fired the living with fiercer life;
While overhead, with wild increase,
Forgetting its ancient toll of peace,
The great bell swung as ne'er before;
It seemed as it would never cease;
And every word its ardor flung
From off its jubilant tongue
Was, "War! War! War!"

"Who dares"—this was the patriot's cry,
As striding from the desk he came,—
"Come out with me, in Freedom's name,
For her to live, for her to die?"
A hundred hands flung up reply,
A hundred voices answered "I!"

SYNOPSIS.

Ralph Van Vechten, a young man of leisure, is astonished to see a man enter No. 111, a house across the street from the Powhatan club, long unoccupied and spoken of as the "Mystery House." Several persons at regular intervals enter No. 111. Van Vechten expresses concern to his friend, Tom Phinney, over the unwholesomeness of his cousin and fiancee Paige Carew, a man in formerly living from the house. Van Vechten and Tom follow the man and find him dead in the street. Van Vechten is attracted by the face of a girl in the crowd of police surrounding the body. Detective Flint is on Van Vechten's trail to get his version of the tragedy. Tom Phinney goes alone on a yachting trip. He recognizes among some persons in a passing motor boat two men whom he has seen enter the Mystery House. He sees one of them, a Mr. Wells, on shore later and follows him. Tom is seized, blindfolded and taken to a house. A sweet-voiced girl later protests against the roughness of his capture. Van Vechten tells of his visit. Theodore Van Vechten, big man in Wall street, and known as the "Man of Iron," in search of information regarding the whereabouts of Paige Carew. Detective Flint shows Van Vechten a gold mesh purse found in the House of Mystery. Van Vechten recognizes it as belonging to Paige Carew. The latter-part girl helps Tom Phinney escape. A message from London reports that a woman resembling Mme Carew and her companion, Mrs. Devereaux, sailed for America some time previously. It develops that Mme Carew visited the English home of Temple Bonner, a friend of the Duke of Moray. It is recalled that Temple Bonner was in love with a daughter of Compton Chrysler who married Max Willard. The Duke's daughter married another admirer, Devereaux. Bonner and Willard were intimate friends. Flint is started for Willard. Van Vechten enters the House of Mystery and the latter story is told.

SUFFRAGE TRIUMPHS IN FEDERATION.

The General Federation's endorsement of suffrage will encourage the faint-hearted; it will stop the anti who say that only the small minority of women want suffrage. It will hasten the day when America will be all free, a true democracy. The Federation is the largest association in this country.

"Many very good people are against woman suffrage, but it is a fact that almost all the bad people are against it," said Albert J. Beveridge at the Indiana State Suffrage Convention.

One of the strange things about the anti-suffragists among women, is that they seem to regard themselves as holding a brief against their own sex—which certainly ought not to be the case if they have any brains. Surely anything that exclusion from the suffrage helps to conserve the feminine virtues.—New York Mail.

I believe in the ballot for women for the same reason that I believe in a wife for every man, one who is the mother of his children and the careful keeper of his house. The house of the nation is a bachelor establishment, and is badly kept in many ways for this reason.—Cora Harris.

GERMAN ALLIANCE FOR SUFFRAGE

Massachusetts Branch Unanimously for Equal Suffrage.

The Massachusetts branch of the German Alliance, which numbers 6,500 members, recently held its annual convention at Lawrence, Mass.

Every delegate present voted to endorse woman suffrage.

Equal suffrage has been a prominent branches of the German Alliance, which has 5,000,000 men in the United States.

AN ANTI-ARGUMENT.

Affirming on scriptural grounds the headship of the male, Wm. D. McLaughlin recently wrote the New York Tribune a letter with an anti-suffrage postscript. Mr. Witter Bynner answers thus: "Mr. McLaughlin says, 'At the Lord's supper there were no women.' May I remind him that there were women at the cross and that men are always good at suppers."

WOMEN USED TO COMPLICATIONS

Any woman who can run a charity organization, a typewriter, a suburban home, a boarding house or a class room with forty children, will probably be just as able to exercise the right of franchise as some of the men, said Assemblyman John J. Johnson of Bergen, at a suffragist meeting in New Jersey the other day.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Director of Evening Department, The Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.)

LESSON FOR JULY 5

THE LABORERS IN THE VINEYARD.

LESSON TEXT—Matt. 20:1-16.

GOLDEN TEXT—"He maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." Matt. 5:45.

This is another lesson connected with our Lord's Perean ministry.

I. The Calls to Service, vv. 1-7. To get a correct setting we must return to Peter's question, 19:17, which in turn grew out of our Lord's dealings with the rich young ruler (see lesson of June 21st), and which called from Jesus the exclamation, "It is hard for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven" (19:23). At this the disciples were exceedingly surprised and exclaimed, "Who then can be saved?" (v. 25). Jesus replied, "With God all things are possible." Then upon Peter said, "Lo, we have left all and followed thee: what then shall we have?" The young man refused to forsake his all and follow, whereas the disciples had and Peter seems to desire to know what advantage had accrued to them, what reward they were to have.

Jesus Answers Peter.

Jesus closed his answer to Peter by saying, "Many that are first shall be last; and the last shall be first" (v. 30) and illustrates his reply by the parable which is our lesson. Many who do not stipulate a reward shall be first, while many who work and work long, but work only for a reward, will be last. Preceding this Jesus definitely told Peter that the twelve should be associated with him judging the twelve tribes of Israel and that all who had left all to follow him should receive an hundred fold and would inherit eternal life (see chapter 19:28, 29), that is, they would gain what the young ruler sought by doing what he failed to do. Historically this is illustrated by the Jew and Gentile, Matt. 8:11, 12; Luke 13:28-30; Rom. 9:30-33.

Parable of the Kingdom.

Jesus says this is a parable of the kingdom, hence the householder represents God (cf. 13:27; 21:33, 43); the vineyard is the kingdom, see Isa. 2:7; Matt. 21:33. The king is seeking laborers to labor in his vineyard. He began in the early morning (v. 1) and with those whom he employed he made a definite agreement. The penny had a value of about seventeen cents and represents an average day's wage at that time. No one works for God without a fair wage, Eph. 6:8; Heb. 6:10. Notice, before they were set to their task God called them. The call was to service, Mark 1:17. He goes out again at the third and the sixth and the ninth hour, finds other laborers, making no definite agreement with them but sends them into his vineyard to work. He led them into the work and they trusted him for wages. At the eleventh hour he found others and asked them the reason (v. 6), they replied that no one had employed them and them too he sends into the vineyard without any bargain as to wages. None except those at the third hour had any intimation as to their wage and they were to receive "whatsoever is right."

II. The Reward of Service, vv. 8-15. At the end of the day the Lord's steward rewards each man, beginning with the last and ending with the first (v. 8). The first one is paid according to the strict letter of the agreement, and the last is likewise paid in strict justice but in a most liberal manner. He, too, was worthy for he worked throughout all the time that was for him available, giving an equal reward to all was a test of the character of those men who entered the vineyard in the early morning. The Lord's answer (vv. 13-15) is a four-fold one (1) "I did thee no wrong;" the contract had been lived up to to the very letter. (2) "It is my will to give, even as unto thee;" the Lord has a right to be generous if he so desires. (3) "It is lawful for me to do what I will with mine own;" God has a right to exercise such a prerogative and man has no right to complain, Rom. 9:15-21 (4) "Is thine eye evil because I am good?" The ground of this complaint was that of envy.

III.—The Teaching. We must beware of trying to make this parable teach more than is written. To rightfully understand our Lord's dealings with those who serve him we must consider others of his parables. This one has two chief lessons; first, that priority of time or even length of service is not the all-essential requisite; and second, that our fidelity to and use of our opportunity is the chief desideratum. Along with this there are of course other lessons. In answer to Peter's question our Lord showed him and his fellow disciples that the last might be first.

A trial price of only $1.00 for the daily and Sunday from now until after the November election will add thousands of new readers. Home Life

Man builds a large and stately home and freely spends his coin for ornaments from Greece and Rome and art work from Des Moines. He wants a home to daze the crowd that, rubbering, goes by; a home of which he may be proud until he comes to die. And having built this stately shack, whose cornice scrapes the stars, he lets it idle stand, slack, and lives in motor cars. In winter to some southern clime, you see him gaily flee, and in the good old summertime he hikes off to the sea. The cobwebs gather on the walls that once were span and spick, and in the noble arching halls the dust's three inches thick. No one who's learned the dizzy chase, a home seems flat and stale; he only needs it as a place where he can get his mail. The home life as we know it lurs the rich men and the swells; they have their homes in motor cars and yachts and big hotels. The gorgeous palaces they build, with minarets and domes and with the spoils of Athens filled, are anything but homes. Our home life's in the humble cots, where cheerful workmen dwell, who cultivate their garden plots, where healthy children yell. Walt Mason.

SPEEDERINO NABBED

Chas. S. Wood, one of Table Rock's speeding motorists, was picked up last Saturday evening for speeding down main street in his sixty horsepower Reo twin. Mr. Wood has been thinking for some time of entering this car in the Sioux City races and was trying out the wonderful car Saturday to learn about what speed the car had. The marshall who held the stop-watch on him said it was about twenty-three miles. For many months this prominent business man has been speeding on the streets of this little village and has been warned several times, but his unheeding manner has gained for him the name of "speederino." Chas. is a busy fellow and is always in a hurry and as time is valuable he does not care to go slower than necessary.

Now Saturday night Chas. was "joy riding" and when he beat it down main street in that big "Reo" car, dodging here and there among the crowd, the marshall could not see the need of the hurry, so he called it speeding.

When Chas. came before Judge Marble he said he did not believe the "Reo" would go faster than fifteen miles an hour and from the fine imposed it looks as though there was a little doubt in the mind of the Judge. Chas. was fined one dollar for speeding, the whole amounting to about four dollars. Chas. has not ventured out with the "Reo twin sixty" but has been using one of his smaller cars that has less speed.

To Tell Time at Night.

Awaking in the night and wondering what time it may be, who has not longed to see the clock without getting up and striking a light? To make this longing easy to satisfy, a firm in Paris has just put on the market a clock that by pressing a button is made to project a picture of its face in a ray of light upon the ceiling. This clock, which looks like a young cannon, stands upon a box containing three dry batteries. Its mechanism is of metal tube, at one end of which is an ordinary dial. The push-button can be placed under the pillow or upon a table beside the bed. When one wants to see the time in the night one presses the button; this lights the lamp, which projects upon the ceiling or upon the wall a greatly magnified picture of its face, so that one can lie comfortably in bed and read the time at a glance. Another push of the button extinguishes the lamp.

Our delegates, Misses Binder and Shorter, were pleased with the hospitality of Brock people but think that Brock is a hard place to get into and out of. The convention next year goes to Elmwood, a most excellent place, but about as inaccessable to people in this part of the district, as Brock. Rev. A. E. Wachtel was elected president.

The rest room provided by the Ladies Guild in the basement of the church will be a convenience to mothers and children on the Fourth. This room is the coolest place in town and its use is free.

THE EDITORIAL CAMP MEETING

MOST SUCCESSFUL GATHERING EVER HELD BY STATE PRESS ASSOCIATION.

WAS A RECORD ATTENDANCE

State Press Association Holds Its Initial Outdoor Session at Epworth Lake Park at Lincoln.

Western Newspaper Union News Service.

Lincoln, Neb.—With the folding up of the tents which for a week had sheltered and housed the editors of Nebraska and their families to the number of nearly 500, the most successful convention ever held by the Nebraska Press association came to an end at Epworth Lake park Wednesday morning.

The innovation of camping out and extending to a week the usual three days' session of the association was a success far beyond the fondest dreams of the local committee, and far exceeded the expectations of any one connected with the arrangements for the state meeting.

HARRY A. BRAINERD
Of the Hebron Champion, the Newly Elected President.

The business deliberations of the association took place in the morning, were interesting, and attended by nearly every member on the grounds, while the afternoons were devoted to every variety and form of entertainment that the fertile brains of the local committee could devise or suggest. And that the program as mapped out was appreciated was evidenced by the expression of supreme satisfaction pictured on the countenance of every man, woman and child on the vast assembly grounds.

The women folks particularly enjoyed it, and one of them said: "I never saw such a meeting. We are all pleased, and it seems to be the desire generally among the wives and families of the newspaper people that the editorial camp meeting be made an institution, and we are glad that the association has endorsed the idea of another meeting of the same nature in 1916."

The program in the auditorium Tuesday evening was practically the closing meeting of the session. The first part of the evening was given over to the women, who staged a vaudeville performance for the amusement of the crowd. The short performance was followed by the installation of the newly elected officers, namely, H. H. Brainard, president; Horace M. Davis, vice president; C. C. Johns, secretary and treasurer and Mrs. Marie Weekes recording secretary.

Carl Steckelberg entertained the large audience with several violin selections. Mrs. Henry Richmond, favorite of the press association, sang the "Lullaby" by request. Mrs. Richmond never fails to appear upon a program for the Nebraska State Press association, and at every appearance is called upon to sing the "Lullaby." Bess Gerhart Morrison of University Place gave a reading on "The Cow," which was enthusiastically received and vociferously applauded.

Following the evening's program the following were appointed as members of the executive committee for the coming year, G. S. Foxworthy, A. B. Schaffer, E. R. Purcell, Henry Richmond and Dr. Tanner. President Pool before turning over the affairs of the association to his successor, H. A. Brainard, appointed the following to act as members of the legislative committee, J. W. Tanner, N. J. Ludi, Don Van Deusen, C. K. Bassett and E. R. Purcell.

The thanks of the convention were extended to the local committee, to George Tobey, to Professor Condra, Dr. Harmon, Dr. Wharton, and Bishop Tihen, and to the editorial band. Frank Harrison, Warden Fenton, Dr. Williams, the Lincoln ball club, the Barrow-Howard players, Sheriff Hyers, the South Omaha stock yards, and all others who had helped to make the camp meeting the grand success it was.

Almost every session was opened with the singing of "America," in which the entire audience joined standing.

Moving picture machines were on the grounds getting films of all the events. These were reproduced at the Orpheum, and were much enjoyed and appreciated.

A large number of the ladies attended an Eastern Star meeting at Masonic Temple Saturday night to witness the initiation of one of the members of the association into the mysteries of Esther.

A quartet of ladies was placed under arrest for indulging in the innocent but fascinating game of "500." They were allowed to finish the game, however, on the plea of one of the four, who declared she "never held such a hand in her life, and besides they weren't shootin' craps" as the officer declared they were.

The reception at the governor's mansion was attended by almost every member of the association.

George S. Foxworthy of the local committee was presented with an elegant gold watch as a token of appreciation by the members for the masterly manner in which every detail of the affair was carried out. His co-laborer Frank Harrison, also received a magnificent tourist's toilet case containing a complete shaving and toilet paraphernalia.

The editorial band, under direction of Frank Harrison, gave a series of concerts daily, producing melody that Sousa, Liberati or Patrick might have equaled—but excelled, never.

The camp was thrown into a state of consternation Monday by the discovery that "Scoop," the prize cow and pride of the association, had been stolen. Sleuths were soon hot upon the trail, the perpetrators of the dastardly deed arrested, tried, convicted and punished according to their several degrees of complicity in the crime. "Scoop" was recovered and later presented by the association to Mrs. Ella Schoenauer of the Plainview News.

The vocal numbers by Mrs. English and the whistling solos by her daughter, Miss Dorothy, were greeted with rounds of applause.

Three Nebraska educators are scheduled for addresses at the National Educational association meeting which is to be held at St. Paul, Minn., July 4 to 11. These are Prof. G. W. A. Luckey of the university, who will talk on harmonizing of vocational and cultural education; County Superintendent Alice Florer of York, who will speak on "Hot Noonday Lunches in the Rural School," and Huldah Petersen, formerly of Holdrege, now of the state extension department. The latter will discuss "Club Project Interests in County and State Affairs."

PARADISE FOR THE BIRDS

Providence Seems to Have Provided Temperate Zone for the Feathered Friends of Man.

Up in the far country where the timber fails, the calendar is respected. There is no summer before the official day set for it. The ground is held fast by frost until June is well started. There are flurries of snow, wild, bitter winds, a sky that has no mercy. And then, suddenly, the wind shifts and comes out of the south. It is summer then with a leap.

The interest of the temperate zone in the northland is that it is there that have gone a great many of the migrating birds which paid us a few days' visit and passed on. For all its inhospitality to man, that country in summer is a paradise for birds. Its marshes are safe refuges from two and four-footed enemies. There is an bountiful material for nests. And out of the pools come myriads of insects, food that does not fall until the time for the southward bird movement arrives.

Some man has said that there is no God north of latitude 59. He did no inquire as to what the birds might have thought of that.—Toledo Blade.

FRIDAY'S DISHES.

As different varieties of fish are found in different localities it is a poor spot indeed which will not yield from the neighborhood or shipping market a few varieties. For those who are shut off from the fresh sea or lake fish there are always the canned and dried and smoked varieties to fall back on, so that one who is so disposed may have fish at least once a week upon the table.

Fresh shad, mackerel and flounder are not delicious of themselves but it is rather a difficult matter to even spoil them by poor cooking. Those who live inland usually have access to some stream or lake which yields its different kinds of toothsome fish. The brook trout caught and cooked for breakfast are hard to equal in flavor.

Planked fish is an appreciated delicacy and is easily prepared at home or in camp. A plank two inches thick with a groove to hold the gravy around the edge may be made of oak or maple and the longer it is used the better it becomes. Spread out the fish skin side down, fasten with thumb tacks to keep it from drawing up and cook in a moderate oven until it falls away from the bones. Garnish with mashed potato roses put through a pasty tube, return and brown, then serve the plank, either in its out rack or on a platter.

A sauce which is especially nice with boiled fish (which is, by the way, cooked in water tied in a muslin cloth to keep it from wasting) is Hollandaise Sauce.—Put a cupful of butter in a bowl, cover with cold water and wash, using a wooden spoon. Repeat the washing and chilling. Remove from the water and divide into three pieces, put one piece into a saucepan with the yolks of two eggs and a tablespoonful of lemon juice, set the saucepan into one of boiling water and stir constantly with a wire whisk until the butter is melted; then add the second piece of butter, continue the stirring and as the sauce thickens add the third piece. Add a third of a cupful of boiling water, cook one minute, season with salt and cayenne.

SEASONABLE GOOD THINGS.

A delicious salad, which is simple, easy to prepare and withal good to eat, is the following:

Slice ripe red tomatoes in thick slices, spread with mayonnaise or a boiled dressing, well seasoned, then with cream cheese, which has been put through a vegetable ricer, sprinkle with a very little chopped chives or parsley or green pepper and place each slice on a lettuce leaf. If served from the dining table make a wreath of these on a platter with a bunch of water cress in the center, using a little of the cress with each serving.

Pepper Grass Salad.—Take a quart of freshly-picked pepper grass, which you of course grew in your own little garden, break up bits of cream cheese, a few chives, and toss all together with any kind of salad dressing preferred. Garnish with radish roses.

Rhubarb cut in thin slices and combined with freshly-grated cocoanut and French dressing is a most delightful surprise as a salad. The oil needs less of the acid than usual in making the dressing as the rhubarb is so tart.

A most enjoyable salad is one to be served with lamb-cut slices of orange, dress with French dressing and sprinkle with finely chopped mint.

Cherry ice.—Pit and crush two quarts of cherries, a quart of sugar, add the crushed kernels of a dozen pits, and let stand two hours. Add a pint of water, press through a strainer and partly freeze, when nearly frozen add the stiffly beaten whites of two eggs, finish freezing. Serve in glasses with fresh cherries as a garnish.

BREAKFAST DISHES.

The warm weather of midsummer creates the desire for fuicy, refreshing fruits, and the first meal of the day is well started if some variety is served. It is the general opinion that breakfast is one of the hardest meals to prepare. Not only because the appetite is then most capricious, but one must use care not to fall into the rut of bacon, eggs, toast and coffee until the sight of a piece of toast is reason for saying grace.

As toast is so inevitable and withal so necessary, we should learn to spare our families the infliction of underdone or scorched, tough or greasy pieces. Cereals which are light and require little cooking are more favorable for hot weather than the heartier oatmeals and wheats. There is no more delicious breakfast dish in the summer than fresh fish with radishes and a bit of French fried potatoes.

Steamed eggs make a nice breakfast dish and when cooked in a steam cooker are no trouble to prepare. Butter the cups, drop in the raw egg, sprinkle with salt and pepper and steam until firm. Slip each egg, which will be beautifully round, on rounds of buttered toast and serve.

Ham and Poached Egg.—Mix two cupfuls of finely chopped cooked ham, one tablespoonful of prepared mustard, one teaspoonful of minced parsley and two tablespoonfuls of cream. Mix thoroughly and form into cakes. Make a depression in each, drop a raw egg in the center of each, sprinkle with salt and pepper, dot with butter and bake in a moderate oven until the eggs set. Remove and cover each with the white of the egg beaten stiff, dust with salt and pepper and return to the oven to brown.

Pineapple and Banana Puree.—Press ripe bananas though a potato ricer, add orange juice and sugar, and lacking this slices of pineapple, place a luscious strawberry for garnish and serve ice cold. This is nice for a fruit course at a luncheon.

That man only is really worthy to be called educated who is able to do at least one useful thing well; who has a sympathy which is universal, and who is in the line of evolution.

There is no cold meat which is never refused (even by "those palates which must have inventions to delight the taste") equal to the delicate chicken.

Minced Chicken With Green Peppers.—Boil two green peppers ten minutes. Remove the seeds and cut the peppers in thin strips, using a pair of scissors. Mix with two cupfuls of cold fowl or chicken not too finely chopped. Melt three tablespoonfuls of butter, add three of flour and stir until well blended; then pour on gradually, while stirring constantly 1 1-3 cupfuls of chicken stock. Bring to the boiling point, season with salt and pepper and add the peppers and chicken. Serve as soon as well heated.

Chicken Tetrazzini.—Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter, add three tablespoonfuls of flour, stir until well blended; then pour on gradually, stirring constantly, one cupful of thin cream. Bring to the boiling point and season with salt, celery salt and pepper. Add one cupful of cold cooked chicken, cut in slices, one-half cupful of mushroom caps, cut in slices, one-half cup of cooked spaghetti and one-third of a cup of Parmesan cheese. Put into buttered ramekins, cover with buttered crumbs and bake until the crumbs are brown.

Chicken a la Servant.—Dissolve one tablespoonful of granulated gelatin in three-fourths of a cup of hot chicken broth and strain. When the mixture begins to thicken beat until frothy and add three-fourths of a cupful of heavy cream, whipped, 1½ cupfuls of chicken, cut in dice. Season with salt, pepper, and turn into individual molds and chill.

Transparent Fabrics in Summer Gowns

Style Features in New Coiffures

A COIFFURE that is popular with the "Miss Manhattan" must possess certain style features which are worth inquiring into, since this young lady is very sophisticated and keen and discriminating, when it comes to the matter of making selections. One of these new hairdressings which have compelled her approval is shown here and since imitation is sincerest flattery the French twist, made of a mass of waved hair, may consider itself flattered.

The most noticeable points in this style are the waving of all the hair and the side part. There is a return to waved and curls and the promises already occasionally fulfilled, of puffs in the coming styles in coiffures. Far more than half of the prettiest effects show the hair parted at one or both sides and massed on the top of the head.

The hair is combed more away from the face than it has been. This is the effect of hats which set less far down on the head than those that preceded them.

It is not difficult to arrange the hair in the manner pictured, but the waving is not so easy. A side comb is worn with the long twist at the back, and for dressy occasions a Spanish comb makes an effective finish, thrust in at the side near the top or at any angle that is becoming to the wearer.

It is quite the style to show the forehead bare at noon or both sides. In the side part, as pictured here, the left forehead is bare and a lock of hair falls down at the right side and center. Little love wisps of hair about the face are curled in tight ringlets. The ears are almost uncovered, marking the last of the innovations which hairdressers are introducing.

THE TAXPAYERS' DUTY.

All admit that it is the plain duty of the taxpayers of the state to provide an opportunity for every boy and girl to secure a university education. As nearly as possible the university should be equally available to all the energetic and ambitious youth of the state. Luxuries and luxurious surroundings are not essential. Reasonable provisions for athletics, recreation, and amusements should be provided. For all these purposes the taxpayers will bear the burden cheerfully. They will manifest much pride and enthusiasm in developing a great institution of learning.

On the other hand if a policy of unnecessary expenditures is once adopted and the taxpayers' money is spent for needless luxuries — spent more for beauty, art and luxury than for education—then the burden becomes onerous to the taxpayers and they will rebel against it. They may be depended upon to spend millions for education, but nothing for extravagant beauty and luxury. The sons and daughters of the pioneers, who have made Nebraska a great state, are not yet so much better than their parents that they cannot be housed and educated in the fifteen splendid brick buildings on the present university campus.

What is needed is more buildings to give greater capacity and relieve the congestion. Several of the buildings on the campus are of fire-proof construction, and of course all new buildings should be of modern fire-proof construction. This burden the taxpayers will cheerfully bear, but they will never tolerate the proposed abandonment and destruction of the present plant that has been forty years developing.—Frank D. Eager, '93, in Lincoln Daily Star.

SUBSTANTIAL BUT NOT GORGEOUS.

Many of the really sincere removalists who talk about taking a "long look ahead," dream about a "united university" on the farm campus, say fifty years hence, which for sheer beauty of buildings and grounds shall rival oriental descriptions of paradise. They forget that the four years' course always ends with a commencement day, which marks the graduates' entrance into a world of rush and push and haul and pull that is quite different from the lotus-eating life which would inevitably result from four years' sojourn amidst luxurious surroundings.

Even in the more commonplace, matter of fact, workaday institutions, many students find their surroundings much superior in appearances and conveniences, that after graduation they find a return home brings a sense of dissatisfaction, which too often results in a ruined life. Charlotte C. Worley, Influence classes of '09 and '08, writing in the Lincoln Daily Star, thus comments on the folly of university gorgeousness:

"The royal outfitting of the new university is bound to exaggerate one great weakness of a college career. I refer to the fact that it is most difficult for a young person shut up on a college campus for four years, overlooked about by the major society, absorbed in college interests, inured to institutional life, to go back to the commonplace things of an everyday world and be satisfied. That four years' leave of absence makes it hard to get the adjustment again. It should be remembered that the college course no more prepares one for the things of real life than does a course in [illegible] but quite the contrary, especially largely for commercial [illegible]

Table Rock Boy Murdered

Loyd Kerns, a former Table Rock boy, was murdered at Rogers, Arkansas, on July 2 by Russell Rice, of Bentonville. Kerns was sitting on a truck on the platform at the depot when young Rice walked up to him and asked him: "How would you like to go to a funeral?" and then plunged a penknife to a fatal depth into his breast. Kerns, without a word, got up, walked across the platform and fell dead. The drunken murderer, Rice, was seized and held by local authorities. Rice was a law clerk in Bentonville. Kerns was a fireman on the railroad and the supposition is that while his train was waiting there he had jumped upon the truck where Rice found him. He was twenty-three years old.

Produce Table Rock, Implements Automobiles. Nebraska,

5000 People Celebrate the 4th With Us

Estimated that three hundred Automobiles and over five hundred other vehicles were here during the day.

A fine program which lasted all day was the result of the efforts of the committee on entertainment

On Saturday one of the biggest and best 4th of July celebrations ever held in this part of the state was pulled off in Table Rock. Crowds came on all trains, in buggies, wagons, carriages, automobiles, motorcycles, bicycles, afoot and horseback and they came from every direction: came early and late.

Grand Automobile Parade

At ten o'clock in the morning the streets were crowded and the program commenced with a band concert, followed by the automobile parade. The automobile parade was a suffrage parade and many cars were decorated to represent the states that already have equal suffrage and the last car was Nebraska with the bold letters across the back; N-E-B-R-A-S-K-A N-E-X-T. A great deal of credit is due Mrs. Anna Kovanda for the arranging of the parade. The balance of the morning program consisted of a platform program, a base ball game between Steinauer and Table Rock, an able and inspiring address by Col. J. H. Presson, secretary to Governor Morehead, after which the audience sang "America", and then came an address by Mrs. Baldwin, of Kansas, the great suffrage worker, which was very impressive and was appreciatd by all in hearing distance.

Hundreds of Vehicles

The town was never so full of automobiles, motorcycles and horse drawn vehicles before. It was estimated that there were more than three hundred automobiles in town that day and that there were over five hundred vehicles of other types, including buggies, wagons, bicycles and motorcycles.

A low estimate on the number of people here that day was placed at five thousand, and one might easily say there were many more. They came from all the neighboring towns; some from DuBois, Tecumseh, Steinauer, Humboldt, Pawnee City, Burchard, Liberty, Bern, Lewiston, Elk Creek, Johnson, Auburn and some from Wymore, Superior and Lincoln and even farther away.

Something Doing all the Time

There was some excitement all the time from ten o'clock in the morning until twelve at night. The restaurants, hotels and every place where refreshments were served were crowded. The livery barn was filled with teams. Every business house that was open did a big business and the saloons had their share of patronage.

In the afternoon the program filled all the time and all of the attractions could not be put on on account of the rain. The horse races were good and the Pawnee City vs Table Rock ball game was well attended.

In the evening the program was excellent and a novel one, consisting of a band concert by the Table Rock Band, singing in the bandstand by the Elk's Glee Club of Omaha, which was grand, a free platform exhibition in front of the State Bank and a free six reel motion picture show in the street. The committee on entertainments deserve great credit for the refined amusements they secured, for excellent talent was plainly manifested.

Celebration a Success

No one can say that the celebration was anything but a success. It was all that it was advertised to be, a Safe and Sane Celebration. There was not much noise, but something of interest going on all the time.

Rain Stopped Program

The rain in the afternoon put a stop to the out door sports for a short time, but as soon as the rain stopped the sports began again.

Autos Hit Ditch

Many cars coming from Humboldt were ditched during the rain. In the hopes of getting to Table Rock before the roads got muddy the cars were driven fast and slid from the slick surface of the road to ditches on either side of the road. It was reported that not less than twenty cars were ditched between here and Humboldt and that no serious damage was done to any of them.

Accident to Mar Festivities

In the evening there was one accident to mar the festivities of the great day. Chris Rodeman, living northeast of here, was going home in his Ford and overtook Chas. Phillips, who was also on his way home, with a horse and buggy. The car was traveling about forty miles per hour and the driver let the front wheel of the car interlock with the rear wheel of the rig. The front wheels of the car no longer under the driver's control flopped sideways and the car turned turtle, rolling over two times and taking a wheel off the buggy as it did so. The buggy as well as the car was demolished. The occupants of the buggy escaped unhurt but the passengers of the car did not fare so well. Mr. Rodeman was picked up with a broken collar bone and taken to a house nearby where Dr. Cherry was summoned to the injured man's side.

Base Ball Games

The base ball games were the most interesting features of the day's program and many good rooters were out. In the morning Steinauer played with Table Rock in a seven inning game with the following score

The game was interesting although the home team was to much for the Steinauer lads. In the afternoon Table Rock crossed bats with the Pawnee City and played one of the best games that has been played on the home grounds for a long time. Pownee won the first game Table Rock has lost this season by a score of five to four as the following:

Table Rock	0	0	2	0	1	0	1	0	0	—4
Pawnee City	1	0	0	2	0	0	0	2	0	—5

Table Rockers are positive that the game would have been ours had it not been for the fact that Schmalle wrenched his ankle in the seventh inning and had to finish the game with his ankle in a sling. Schmalle gritted his teeth and stayed with the team but an error on the part of one of the other players let in two scores in the eighth inning and Table Rock was defeated.

Carnival Comes Next

The town did look a little rusty the morning after, but has been all cleaned up now and we can begin to look forward to and make poeparations for the big fall carnival.

Excelsior Shows Speed

Last week L. G. Todd, head mechanic for the Wood Produce Co., was picked up for speeding and when brought before Justice Marble he willingly contributed $6.80 to the village funds. Mr. Todd was riding his Excelsior motorcycle down toward the depot and as the machine was slightly out of adjustment he found it difficult to keep the machine within the speed limits. Marshal, Hacter happened to time L. G. and to his utmost amazement, Todd was going at the high speed of twenty-four miles per hour. The speeding occured on Monday evening and Todd was arrested Friday morning. While Todd is in the habit of speeding within the city limits there are a number of more wreckless drivers who should be allowed to contribute a like amount of $6.80 to the towns funds and perhaps they would find that time was not so valuable but what it would pay to go a little slower.

Autos Meet in Collision

Tuesday evening two cars ran together in a head-on collision between Table Rock and Humboldt. Both cars were traveling at a high speed at a sharp turn in the road where the road ahead is hidden by trees and brush. Apparently the drivers did not know the law requiring the use of a signal in such places and they did not slow down to the required twelve miles an hour when rounding the corner.

The drivers in the cars were not seriously hurt, but the cars were badly damaged. One car, an Overland, belonging to Wm. McDougal of Falls City, was going east when the Buick car belonging to Herman Hunzeker of DuBois rounded the corner coming toward Table Rock and as the road was narrow the two cars were steered into each other. The Overland car was badly twisted up and after the car was pulled out of the heap Chas. Harlow ran it back to town. The Buick car lost one wheel and was generally crippled up.

Miss Vera Stover who is working at Tecumseh spent the Fourth in Table Rock.

Dr. Anna Shaw Apologizes for Visit of Suffragists—Found Arsenal of Explosives in Wreck.

Western Newspaper Union News Service.

Mexico City.—Elections for president, vice president, deputies and senators were held Sunday in that portion of the republic controlled by the Huerta government. Indifference was manifested everywhere. General Huerta appeared to be the favorite candidate for the presidency and General Blanquet for the vice presidency. President Huerta, it is reported, received virtually an unanimous vote of the conferences. The returns indicate the re-election of all the present members of the senate and chamber of deputies. The lightest vote in years was cast, both in the capital and nearby towns.

Find Anarchist Headquarters.

New York.—In the ruins of the tenement wrecked Saturday by the explosion of a bomb, which it is believed was intended for use against John D. Rockefeller Jr. son, the authorities have found evidence that Arthur who was killed with three others, had used his apartment as a center for the distribution of inflammatory literature and that it was filled with death dealing explosives. A small printing press, revolutionary pamphlets and circulars, an electric dynamo, two electric batteries, cartridges and bits of steel, were among the articles uncovered which tend, in the opinion of the police, to show an anarchistic plot.

The Mexican situation has made it unwise to relieve officers from their commands in the army at the present time, with the result that Lieutenant E. N. Bowman, commandant of the university cadets, may continue in office next year instead of being relieved by Major Switzer, who was appointed by the president to take his place.

The Nebraska state board of agriculture has been requested to make a class for Arabian stallions owned by residents of the state. Prof. W. G. It will be exhibited Saturday in front of the grand stand.

Two cases have been recently prosecuted by the state food commission, one at Omaha and one at St. Paul. The first was a complaint against P. F. The other was against Mike Svantek, a St. Paul meat dealer, for cutting up carcasses of hogs that died of cholera and selling them to patrons of his shop.

Food Commissioner Harman made an address before the State Pharmaceutical association at Grand Island, in which he spoke of the condition of drug stores in Nebraska, the work of inspection and the requirements under federal and state laws. The sanitary food laws of Nebraska were also discussed by Mr. Harman. He thinks the druggists of the state, as a body, are willing and anxious to co-operate with his department.

Full itemized statements of expenses of the various state institutions under the board of control are given in the semi-annual report just filed with the governor by the board. The expenditures are classed under two heads. One includes the factors that properly enter into the maintenance, and the other the sum spent for repairs and permanent improvements. The average number of inmates at the institutions was 4,261 for the six months. A total of $88,297 was expended for maintenance, or a per capita cost that amounted to $40.55 at the orthopedic hospital, and $16.66 at the Beatrice institute for feeble-minded.

The Nebraska state board of agriculture is harvesting its wheat crop. Superintendent William Foster and his men are busy in the wheat fields, where planted last fall on the twenty acres which is used for a tractor exhibit east of the fair grounds. The stand was heavy, the growth rank. Some of the wheat lodged during the heavy rains of the last two weeks. With this exception the results promise to be ideal.

The state fair board has decided to give state fair passes to all newspaper men of Nebraska.

The cornerstone of the new administration building at the normal school was laid with Masonic rites. There were present Grand Master Davis of Nebraska City, Grand Secretary Wiese of Cozad, who delivered the address, and ex-Grand Master Evans of Dakota City. The ceremonies were under the direction of the grand lodge of Nebraska, in charge of Grand Custodian Robert French of Kearney, assisted by the Wayne lodge and many visiting friends. The building is to be eighty-six feet wide and 120 feet long, three of the grand stand.

VALLEY OF ESK BEAUTIFUL

England, Perhaps, Possesses No More Gorgeously Picturesque Spot Than This Stretch of Land.

London.—There is, perhaps, no more beautiful spot in all England than the valley of the Esk—which stretches from the sea to beneath the heights of grim Scaffell. The Gatehouse estate midway up this valley possesses beautiful gardens and a glorious view. On an outlying spur of fell above the grounds a Japanese garden has lately been called into being as by a magician's wand. The site is ideal: a cup on the hill top, which was formerly a peaty swamp dotted with great boulders and slopes and gray granite, has been transformed into a quaint and beautiful garden. The bog, skilfully drained and utilized, has formed a chain of tiny lakes, spanned here and there by humpbacked bridges. In the still waters of one pool a tea-house is reflected; there is a pergola which will presently be a dream of delight with wistaria and climbing roses; beds of irises and water plants fringe the pools, masses of azalea give a wealth of very rich color, and a big magnolia in full bloom testifies to the climate of the Isle. In pockets among the great boulders grow many rare plants, and cherry and flowering trees are planted with a lavish hand. Bamboo flourishes, and curious evergreen trees and shrubs are everywhere.

Here and there are quaint old Japanese temple stones, brought from Japan. They are ancient, and the weathered gray granite of which they are made harmonizes well with their new home. The hollow of the fell top is sheltered from the winds that sweep over the mountains. It is a beautiful spot—framed round by gloomy rock or the Screes, that line of inhospitable mountain rising sheer from the black depths of Lake Wast Water, the deepest of the English lakes. To the north lies Scafell, though it is just hidden from the Japanese garden by other lesser heights. To the west is to be seen beyond a majestic mountain known as Muncaster fell. On clear days the Isle of Man is plainly visible, a fairy isle with a blue line of distant mountains on the far horizon. To the south are more mountains. It is a wonderful achievement, this little oasis of the mountains, for the soil for planting had to be brought from below. Great quantities have been shown in the working out of its original conception, and it is a valuable addition to already beautiful gardens. It is also an object-lesson in art which the Japanese flower show has shown us is flourishing very healthily.

WHERE WIVES ARE SCARCE

Medical Missionary to Labrador Declares They Are Very Scarce in That Country.

London.—Dr. Grenfell, the famous medical missionary in Newfoundland and Labrador, entertained a great audience at the Queen's hall with stories of life with Labrador.

"Wives are so scarce in Labrador," he said, "that the Moravian Mission-ary society has made it a rule that if a woman's husband dies she must be a widow for at least a fortnight."

"Just before Christmas I had lunch with the late Lord Strathcona—or, rather, I had lunch while he watched, as he had not lunched for 50 years. Lord Strathcona asked me how the hospital he gave us was getting on, and I had to tell him it was not doing so well, as the boilers had blown out.

"Get the best set of boilers you can put in immediately, and send the bill to me," he said."

"You Awful London Supermarriefy," he insinuate That I Ruined Marion's Life. Have a Cup, Sir! Remember, I Played on Broadway."

AT THE BOOKING OFFICE

OFF-STAGE COMEDIES

by Will Bradshaw

THEY DECIDE TO TRY IT AGAIN

Freddie Sidders (a sketch writer)—Listen! This is a great idea with a punch. Works right up to a novelty finish and—Bang! If this act don't get six curtains, I'll—

Marion Meade (heavy woman)—No use talkin', Freddie, I ain't on the market for no more acts after that last one.

Freddie Sidders—It wasn't my act, was it? Didn't y' have no friends t' put you wise that Vance Van Bardon's act is over people's heads? Who wants society stuff!

Edna Flanigan (ingenue)—Vance Van Bardon's material wasn't handed right; I seen that myself. I was in the act. Marion was cast for a society queen—imagine! I was supposed to be her daughter just home from boardin' school an' loaded down with table manners and that kind of stuff. That was all right. I can play debutantes to a finish. I had some home trainin' myself an' my langwidge is right there, believe me. It was Marion's or Algy's flivver, I think.

Algy (late of the 'Alls)—W'at? I quesered the act, y' s'y? I made the mistake of 'oldin' me 'ands out 'ere with y'. I'll tell y' who it was—little Percy Davis, sittin' right 'ere.

Dad Wadell (who knew Booth—by sight)—When I saw the act it made me weep—for Art.

Percy Davis (juvenile)—You awful London supernumerary, to insinuate that I ruined Marion's act. Have a care, sir! Remember I played on Broadway. I may have been a chorus man, but I outlived it.

Freddie Sidders—Old Dad has your number, crowd, when he says it was all to the ash can. I heard it myself.

Dad Wadell—She was leaning on a broken reed.

Marion Meade—Tryin' to say I can't play society ladies, huh? I was out there holdin' the crowd by my personality. It's a wonder the rest of you lasted a minute without me.

Percy Davis—I can't explain the downfall in our act. Mr. Van Bardon is such a high-minded gentleman. His writings in the Literary Indigestible are dreams of thought. The idea we had was so uplifting. When you think of the psychological message we had to deliver.

Edna Flanigan — Oh, chocolate eclairs! Listen to that man talkin' alcahnlogical stuff. That's what was the matter with it.

Percy Davis—M' dear, don't you think the object of the theater is to deliver a message?

Algy—No, that's for the A. D. T. Listen to me myself when my cart is breakin'.

Dad Wadell—When you tried to deliver your message that night there was nobody home.

Edna Flanigan—When Algy threw me his line—what was it?

Algy—I said: "You must give me your promise tonight, Agnes." Prince Boris is not the man to wed you, the proud and only daughter of Count Lionel De Josseps. Your manner, your breeding, your culture, must revolt at the thought of a nobleman who has naught to offer but 'is dipputed title." Clevah, I s'y.

Edna Flanigan—Can't you fancy me playin' opposite that?

Dad Wadell—I saw you and I cried in anguish.

Percy Davis—It was just after that Van Bardon don't have his people in mind when he writes the material.

Marion Meade—Don't you think I can play a lady?

Edna Flanigan—Don't y' think I can do a swell doll?

Percy Davis—Deah me, sir, don't you think I can take the part of a perfect gentleman?

Algy—I suppose y' think can't play a jolly good 'ard 'eart?

Freddie Sidders—Y' got me wrong. I meant that Van Bardon had a nifty outfit working in his act, but his act wasn't there. Certainly Marion can play a lady.

Dad Wadell—I remember in my day a lady was always a lady. They—

Marion Meade—I'll never try it again. After this it's me for Dutch or Irish.

Percy Davis—Why didn't you decide that long ago, my dear? I lost a good position in a show on account of your act. All I had to do was wave a pennant and say "Rah, rah, rah, for Vassar." What fools we mortals be. No more and never again!

Algy—We decided that for you long ago. No more and never again with us. I'll always think to me dyin' d'y the eggs that 'it me was meant for you.

Dad Wadell—I believe so. You were standing on the spot he just stepped from.

Freddie Sidders—So they thrun eggs, eh? I thought they only howled and tried to climb over the "fools" to mob you.

Edna Flanigan—I wish you was there that night, Freddie. Me tryin' to look like a young bud an' throwin' my lines like a leadin' lady with no support except Algy.

Algy—There's a girl knows the truth. 'Ear what she said about no support but Algy?

Freddie Sidders—No wonder! The actin' was all right; they was no idea to the act. No finish. Listen to this sketch of mine for five people. New idea, never-touched-before. Novel.

Marion Meade—Please don't, Freddie.

Freddie Sidders—Act opens full stage; fancy door center; fireplace at right; moon streamin in window with balcony backing. Old guy—for you, Dad—dozin' at fireplace. Hurgular opens window with a jimmy; comes in. Is loading silver into bag when butler—Percy's part—comes in to tell the old man his daughter eloped with the strange young man across the way. Old man sees butler and sneaks into closet, pulls door shut and locks himself in. A woman in black comes to see the old man—Marion's part; old man recognizes her as childhood sweetheart's stepmother. The daughter and the strange young man—Edna and Algy—return to ask the old man's forgiveness and enough to start housekeepin'. Burgular in closet is suffocatin' and begs to get out, Algy opens door.—Old man recognizes burgular as his long-lost son. Woman refuses to marry burgular's father. Young man, who is a newspaper reporter, is going to go away on a yacht paper. Old man gives everybody a million to keep it quiet. The burgular reforms. Curtain.

Algy—Great!

Freddy Sidders—Listen! I have a man who will buy this act and back it if I get the right people. Will you stick? Pay from the start.

Chorus—We will!

Algy—Who'll play the burgular, my dear fellow?

Freddie Sidders—I'm goin' to get a real burgular—friend of mine.

Booking Agent (entering)—Out! It's closin' time.

Marriageable Ages.

So-called marriageable ages vary very widely in different countries. In Austria a "man" and "woman" are supposed to be capable of marrying and conducting a home of their own from the age of 14. In Germany the age is fixed at 18 years. In France the man must be 18 and the woman 14, and in Belgium the same. In Spain the husband must have passed his fourteenth year, and the woman her twelfth. In Hungary, for Roman Catholics, the man must be 14 years and the woman 12; for Protestants the man must be 18 and the woman 15. In Greece the man must be at least 14 summers and the woman 12. In Portugal a boy of 14 is considered marriageable and a woman of 12. In Russia and Saxony a youth must refrain from matrimony till he is 18 years and the woman until she is 16.

Not Garrulous.

Client—What! You expect me to pay you 263 francs for taking possession of such a small inheritance? You should have warned me it would cost so much.

Lawyer—My motto, sir, is "Deeds not words."—Pele Mele.

Along the Spanish Main

CRUISING along the Spanish Main, upon the glistening bosom of the Caribbean, the ocean tourist, no matter how care burdened, is quite apt to form the "lolling" habit. The air is soothing to tired nerves, and I have little respect for an imagination that would not fall under the spell of those perfect moonlit nights. For myself, en route from Trinidad to Colon, I just wanted to "loll" and dream of the days when pirates held sway in these waters, of the days of adventure and romance. It didn't seem quite right that I should be enjoying all the luxuries of travel while possibly some of my forbears had to wrest their living from the sea. There were several distinguished passengers besides myself on board, including Lady Hope and the duchess of Kalamazoo. The passenger list presented a cosmopolitan assortment of Britishers, Americans, Spaniards and West Indians. I must not neglect the young Irish patriot, an ardent champion of home rule, who had had several verbal set-tos with antagonistic Englishmen before our troupe boarded the steamer, writes C. Nick Stark in the Detroit Free Press.

A ripple of melodramatic climax was reached on the second day out from Port-of-Spain, when, during a heated argument between a Britisher and the Duke of Cork, the latter started to warble "The Sun Is Now Rising on Ireland." The incensed Englishman called the Irishman a "bally rotter," or something like that, when bing!—the home rule advocate's right shot into his adversary's eye with such force as to break it, and in the smiter's right hand and temporarily impair the Englishman's eye for sight-seeing purposes. The incident caused international complications, and a general melee was only averted by prompt action on the part of the skipper, who ordered the combatants to be confined in their staterooms, where the only visitors were the surgeon and the stewards.

Bargain in Boa Constrictors.

The steamer from Port-of-Spain to Colon, Isthmus of Panama, is only a trifle over 1,000 miles, just an ordinary jump for an ocean-going theatrical company. The jump is broken by stops at Savanilla and Cartagena, on the Colombian coast. Panama has declared a strict quarantine against those towns, and passengers are not permitted to stray from the wharves, for the entire sanitary grounds upon which the quarantine is based are merely a subterfuge. The Panamanian authorities are anxious to keep out—undesirable, revolution-breeding citizens from South America, and the quarantine serves the purpose. It is contended that the very best bargains in Panama hats can be obtained at Savanilla and Cartagena. The vendors that offered them for sale at the wharves had a wide scale of prices. One needed only to be patient and wait until nearly sailing time, when prices rapidly descended. This was also true of the fluctuations in parrots, monkeys and boa constrictors. By not showing unseemly haste one could secure a nice sleek young boa constrictor for $1.50.

It is worth a long journey to see the wonderful Panama canal, but I won't advertise the City of Panama or Colon as ideal lingering points for honeymoon couples. Except for the canal zone, the general aspect of Colon is unattractive. American residents age American city of its size. They make a lot of noise about it, too. If one happens to be domiciled in the business section he will find the din of street traffic an annoying source of repose as in the larger metropolitan cities.

The natives of Jamaica speak an almost unintelligible language that is alleged to be English. It is a sort of Afro-Cockney dialect which has consciseness for its keynote. It is not a musical tongue. The "dahk" people are constantly jabbering and seem to have a habit of conversing earnestly and in low tones with themselves as they shamble along the thoroughfares. Though the obeah man who once practised voodooism amongst them, has been suppressed by law, some religious impostor periodically appears to work on their superstitious and credulous natures. Only the other day the newest "Messiah" was ordered to be banished to Barbadoes, which the Jamaicans regards as the extreme penalty. This fellow came in town astride a donkey, wearing a nondescript uniform and equipped with a sword. His solemn mien and weird incantations drew a host of followers, when he led to the harbor, where he baptized the crowd at two shillings a head. He was draining the impoverished negroes of every penny they could get, and when he made a bluff at crucifying himself on Good Friday the law stepped in and grabbed him.

Where Color Regulates Caste.

Social caste in Jamaica is regulated by the grade of color. There are black people, colored people and very light (though not quite white) people. As to the whites, the English Jew predominates, though he does not control. The mayor and nearly all the members of the Kingston city council are colored men. Among the dark shades of humanity the women do most of the work. There are few legal marriages in this class. The woman realises that if she is bound by the marriage tie she will probably be obliged to work so much harder to support her lord and master by idleness, while if there is no legal bond she can leave her man if he doesn't treat her right.

CAVES ARE PUZZLE

Holes in Hills Near Tokyo Make Archeologists Wonder.

Students Divided in Opinion—One Side Says They Were Homes of "Earth-Spiders." The Other Calls Them Beggars' Refuge.

The low hills around the village of Matsuyama, in the province of Saitama, Japan, but a few hours' journey from Tokyo, are honeycombed with curious small caves which puzzle the archeologists. Students are divided into two camps in their conclusions about them. One side avers that they are the ancient habitations of the folk known as tsuchigumo, or "earth-spiders," who occupied Japan before the coming of the Ainos. The other side believes that they are sepulchers that have at different times been the refuge of beggars or outlaws. Writes Eloise Roorbach in The Technical World Magazine: "The caves, at first sight, seen back of an isolated group of cryptomeria trees and over a thatched cottage, look much like a swallow's bank. The resemblance is more noticeable upon nearer approach, for they are set close together in uneven rows and consist of a horizontal passageway ending in a roomy excavation. They are on the south slope of the hills—a warm, sunny exposure for winter weather. If the 'earth-spiders' sat in their doorways, they could have unobstructed views of the approaching over the plain, while the latter was still a long distance away. The position of the caves is a strategic one, and adds a point in favor of the habitation theory.

"Though the caves vary in size, their formation is the same. They have a small, molelike entrance five or six feet in depth, which expands into a chamber from six feet square and five or six feet high, in the case of the larger caves. Along either side of the chamber is a ledge seven or eight inches in height and fairly broad, that may have been covered with dried leaves or grass for a bed. Marks of the scraping-tools that dug the rock out are still to be seen. To enter the larger caves one must stoop most humbly, but to enter the smaller ones it is necessary to get down on all fours, or to worm oneself in, serpentine fashion.

"Doctor Tsubof of the Imperial university of Japan uncovered, during six months of excavating work, over two hundred caves. No doubt many more, and perhaps an important secrets, are still buried under the grass and trees of those gently sloping hills. In some places the sandstone has disintegrated so that the roofs have fallen in, but on the whole the caves present a remarkable state of preservation. It is difficult to estimate their age, but the weapons, jars and household implements found in them are generally believed to belong to a race who lived there long before the days of the Ainos.

"During the years 1522-55 and 1558-78, fierce Japanese civil wars were waged on the wide plains that are now waving rice fields. The combatants may have taken refuge in the caves at that time. But whether those wild Japanese, in terror of other-wild creatures stronger of limb and sharper of tooth than themselves, burrowed into the ground in order to find safety from such dangers, or whether it was their custom thus to bury their dead, they have left a mystery for the scholars."

Shown Up.

Senator La Follette was talking about the dodges and squirms of a certain corrupt railroad official.

"For all his dodges and squirms," said the senator, "the man was shown up. It's like the case of Smith.

"A dun entered Smith's flat, pushed into the parlor and said to Smith's little son:

"'Where's your father?'

"'Gone away,' the urchin answered, according to orders.

"'Gone away?' Humph! Where to?'

"'That closet there,' was the reply."

Might Have Liked Them.

At a reunion of the Adams family the chicken croquettes gave out, so the maids carefully neglected the young children. After vainly trying to attract the attention of his mother, one of the little boys at the lower end of the table called out in a loud tone of voice: "Mother!"

"What is it, Albert?" she replied.

"Do you think," went on the child, "I should have liked the croquettes if I had one?"—Lippincott's.

Town Buys Tractor

Last week the town bought a three wheel tractor of Chas. Harlow for the purpose of dragging the streets and doing other heavy traction work such as hauling, grading and work that is too heavy for a team. The tractor was in the parade July 4th and Mr. Harlow has demonstrated that it is one of the handiest things in the line of a farm tractor that could be built. The machine has a two cylender opposed engine of about sixteen horse power and moves with a good speed for a tractor. Mr. Harlow has another machine ordered and the prospects for a number of sales this fall are good. The machine seems to be simple and practical as well as low in price.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By P. O. FELLERS, Director of Evening Department, The Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.)

LESSON FOR JULY 12

GREATNESS THROUGH SERVICE.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 10:32-45

GOLDEN TEXT—"The Son of man also came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." Mark 10:45.

This is a time in the life of our Lord that vibrates with interest as we rapidly approach his last tragic week upon earth. At the beginning of his Perean ministry (Luke 9:51) we read that Jesus "steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem." Now that journey is nearly ended. He had reached a place near Jericho. Knowing the antipathy of the rulers, those who journeyed with Jesus were "amazed," and some as they followed him on this journey were "afraid" (v. 32). Jesus, therefore, and for a third time, plainly tells his disciples what is about to take place in Jerusalem.

The contrast of self is the distinguishing feature of the lesson of the self-seeking disciples over against the self-renouncing Master.

I. The Self-seeking Disciples, vv. 32-41. As Jesus clearly spoke to those who in amazement followed him he told of his condemnation and deliverance to the Gentiles, his persecution, death and recurrection (vv. 32-34). It was then that James and John presented their request. Matthew tells us (20:20) that they made it through their mother. It was an ignorant request, for they knew not what it involved (v. 38), nor whose it was to grant it (v. 40). He had spoken with great clearness about his suffering and death and immediately they ask a position in his glory. This may indicate the assurance of their faith in him, but it certainly intimates that they did not comprehend the suffering of which he had been speaking. We need to remember, however, that they believed in that approaching hour of his glory. They desired, though, to have an association with him in his power and authority, thus showing their mixture of selfishness, though Jesus seems to have ignored it. Was this request inserted by the mother? Evidently not to a degree, for the Master addresses his reply to the disciples. In that reply he does say that to occupy such a position was denied them, or might be quite possible. What he does say Jesus was what was involved and that this was not the time or place to fix emphasis, in the new kingdom, upon any other idea than that of equality.

Jesus then clearly declared all that was involved in his pathway of suffering and propounds his question, "Are ye able to drink the cup that I drink?" (v. 38). It was a terrific but ignorant answer they made, "We are able." Their language reveals the character, however, of those who did enter into that fellowship with him which eventually led them to martyrdom. He told them they should be baptized into a strength to do and live this life of abandonment, but that such a life could not command any preeminence on that account. Their request was other than to occupy, that in order to share with Christ in his glory we must share his cup and his baptism of shame and suffering; see 14:36; Matt. 26:39; John 13:11; II Tim. 2:12; Rom. 8:17; Matt. 16:24. James and John (v. 39) did not stop to consider the meaning of their request.

Wanted Places of Authority.

II. The Self-renouncing Master, vv. 41-45. In answer to the indignation (v. 41) of the other ten disciples Jesus without any manifest impatience calls the disciples "unto him" and rebukes before them their absolute equality, and yet at the same time a way of exaltation, v. 43. Jesus is ever calling us "unto him," for he desires to lead us out of lives of selfishness into those of unrest and service. These ten were not altogether without selfishness; they wanted the places of authority also. Since before, chapter 9:33-36, this same controversy had arisen and was again manifested (Luke 22:24) and that, too, at a solemn occasion, as he announced his approaching death and instituted the supper. It was not till after Pentecost that it became possible for a disciple to write "in honor prefer one another," Rom. 4: 10, Phil. 2:3. This reply of Jesus to the indignation of the ten is a teaching by contrast and accurately describes the Gentile method of self-advancement. Over against it he sets forth the method of the "Son of Man." Till this present day such are the methods of those who are of this world only.

In his kingdom it is different, greatness is inverse ratio until we find the greatest is the one who serves most perfectly. In emphasizing this verse (v. 45) it is quite common to omit the last clause, "and to give his life a ransom for many." So to omit it is to neglect his work of redemption and overly emphasizes the altruistic aspect of Christianity. Men are not saved by any such method. Jesus is the greatest example of a perfect servant because he did give his life. Let us also remember that he gave that life and that no man took it from him, John 10:18.

It is no longer necessary to argue with a family about the necessity of a daily newspaper. The only question now is which one. With people who want a fearless, independent paper, one that will print all the news about all the candidates and about all public policies all the time, the Lincoln State Journal is the one. A trial price of only $1.00 for the daily and Sunday from now until after the November election will add thousands of new readers. The paper is not forced onto people through fakes and schemes, but is sold strictly on its merits. Everyone pays in advance and all papers are stopped when the time is out. You are directly interested in the things that are being done by the state and national governments. The Journal does not support candidates but does print the facts about all of them. Send your dollar now and get the real newspaper at once. Address, State Journal, Lincoln, Nebr.

Methodist Church Notes.

For the sake of the information of those who have indicated the contrary, we feel impelled to state the Ladies' Guild paid the regular concession price to the Fourth of July committee for the privelege of serving meals at their basement dining hall on the Fourth. Besides the meals which were served to the large crowd of people a free rest room was maintained, which with the toilet privileges afforded, was appreciated by a large number.

The excellent singers of the male quartet from Omaha spent some time practising in our church auditorium between their public programs on Saturday. They especially complimented the acoustic properties of the building.

Next Sunday morning the pastor will preach on a subject of vital interest to every member of the church, and to all other folks who believe in the gospel. In the evening the sermon subject will be "Borrowing Oil."

We regret to have to announce the resignation of Bro. Carl Beck, who has been superintendent of our Sunday School for nearly three years. Bro. Beck has rendered effective service in this capacity, and the school has largely increased in numbers and improved in methods over three years ago. His cooperation with the pastor in this work has been especially appreciated. Our school is at present progressing nicely under the genial leadership of Bro. Chas. Linn, the assistant superintendent.

SYNOPSIS.

Ralph Van Vechten, a young man of leisure, is astonished to see a man enter the flat in a house across the street from the Powhatan club, long unoccupied and spoken of as the House of Mystery. Several persons at regular intervals enter the place. Van Vechten expresses concern to his friend, Tom Phinney, regarding the whereabouts of his cousin and fiancee, Paige Carew. A man is forcibly ejected from the house. Van Vechten and Willard follow the man and find him dead in the street. Van Vechten is attracted by the face of a girl in the crowd of onlookers surrounding the body. Detective Flint calls on Van Vechten to get his version of the tragedy. Van Vechten plans to take a yachting trip. He recognizes among some persons in a passing motor boat two men whom he had seen enter the House of Mystery. He makes one of them, Paige Carew, on shore later and follows him. Tom is seized, blindfolded and taken to a house. A mysterious girl later protests against the roughness of the treatment. Van Vechten, his uncle Theodore Van Vechten, big man in Wall street, and Winward are the men in control in search of information regarding the whereabouts of Paige Carew. Detective Flint shows Van Vechten a gold mesh purse found in the house of mystery. Van recognizes it as belonging to Paige Carew. The rescued girl proves to be Tom Phinney escape. A message from London reports that Paige Carew is safe. Willard joins Carew and her companion, Mrs. Devereaux, at Ostend. Carew's letter to

Not Exactly Tumbling Down, Is It?

The above engraving, from a photograph taken less than a year ago, represents one of 15 University buildings on the present city campus in Lincoln, which the "removalists" or so-called "concentrationists" ask the people of Nebraska to abandon and convert into junk. Do you believe it is good business to wantonly waste 15 buildings like this?

UNIVERSITY OF NEBRASKA—NEBRASKA HALL

General science building. Built of common brick, sandstone foundation and trimmings, slate roof. Erected 1881-8. Cost $41,000—remodeled in 1908, at cost of $6,000. Depreciation, 24 years up to 1912 is about $27,000. Estimated present value $20,000.

To replace on the State Farm in modern fire proof construction, a building equal to Nebraska Hall in floor space will cost $105,000. Removal will destroy about $5,000 worth of present fixtures in Nebraska Hall.

A WAY TO AVOID LOSS.

"After reading the report of commission of college presidents, and noting that the smallest campus area quoted is Purdue with fifty acres, I am puzzled to know why you think that Nebraska needs only thirty-nine. Most of the present buildings are badly in need of repairing—I understand that University Hall has practically been condemned. As the old brick and materials could be used in the construction of new buildings on the new campus, it seems to me that there could not be great loss there."—Olivia Elizabeth Brahtzer, Omaha, Class of '05.

"You say that most of the present buildings are in need of repairing. That is a condition that often happens in buildings which are practically new, and it is not unthinkable that if the university were located at the state farm you might be able to make the same statement. If the present buildings are badly in need of repair, then it simply means that either the legislature or the board of regents have been negligent.

"The facts about University Hall are substantially as follows: It was built in 1870, and the style of architecture which was then in vogue is now considered quite antique. Those who are qualified to pass upon such matters assure me that it is a good, substantial building and would stand for fifty years longer if old-fashioned architecture does not cause it to be torn down and replaced by a more modern building.

"The problem of moving from the present campus to the farm is not quite so simple as it would be for the child with building blocks to tear down the toy structures in the back yard and place them upon the front lawn. The old brick and materials in the buildings on the present campus would be of little use in constructing new buildings on the new campus. The removalists do not for a moment contemplate any such plan. It would be quite out of harmony with the plan of building an ideal university at the state farm. If removal should carry, it would be necessary to erect every new building there of the best materials and according to the latest ideas of building construction. The buildings on the present campus would be of no value whatever in building up an ideal university at the state farm."—Reply by University Home Campus Extension Committee.

SOME REMOVAL FIGURES.

The chief architect of the university says that if we are to replace upon the farm or elsewhere the same floor space now in use upon the city campus, it will cost $1,100,000. These fifteen buildings on the city campus are now in use, and, as I have suggested, are serving over three thousand students.

If we are to remove, it seems to me a fair estimate of the value to the state of these fifteen buildings is what it will cost to replace them elsewhere.

It is estimated by the university architect that it will cost a little over $39,000 to move the fixtures and equipment of the university to the farm. The value placed by him upon the conduits, tunnels, sidewalks, fence, and heating plant, when measured from the point of cost of replacing at the farm is $42,000. The loss in equipment in the different buildings, which would be ruined by removal or which could not be removed at all, is $30,000.

In other words, if removal carries this fall, the taxpayers of the state will have to pay out of the three-fourths of a mill levy, $1,240,000 before they furnish the students and faculty of the university the same accomodations that they are now enjoying upon the city campus.—E. M. Pollard, '93, in Nebraska State Journal.

INJURED BY REMOVAL.

I am of the opinion, and I speak as a farmer who has kept in close touch with the school of agriculture, that the great work it has done and is doing in building up agriculture in Nebraska will be greatly crippled, if not destroyed, in case removal carries, and this regardless of whether one-fourth mill or the three-fourths mill levy is used for the erection of buildings for the accommodation of the agricultural wing of the university or not. You can not mix high school students with college students any more than you can mix oil with water.

The placing of three thousand college students upon the farm campus with five hundred high school boys can have nothing but a disastrous effect. Not only this, but you virtually destroy the farm for experimental and farm purposes.—E. M. Pollard, '93, in Nebraska State Journal.

THE AGRICULTURAL SCHOOL.

Friends of the Agricultural school should be unanimous in their opposition to removal. The agricultural school has actual need for every acre of the present farm. Any sort of "concentration" at the state farm is nothing less than stealing from the school of agriculture. Development in what was a many development and growth of the university on its present campus as it will be enlarged, and growth and development of a splendid agricultural school at the state farm.

Every farmer knows the importance of the school of agriculture. Of all of our state institutions the school of agriculture is about the only one that is devoted directly to interests of the farmer. As it develops a better grade of agriculture it benefits every line of business activity in the state. There is no more profitable expenditure that Nebraska can make than in the encouragement of better farming. The school of agriculture was established for this purpose—it is the only expenditure directly for the farmers benefit, and now the removalists, "concentrationists," propose to rob him of about one-fourth of his farm to convert it into campus, parks, and playgrounds for the university. Will the farmers permit it? Never.—Frank D. Eager, U. of N. '93, Campaign Chairman University Alumni Home Campus Extension Committee, in Lincoln Daily Star.

A PHYSICIAN'S VIEW.

Drs. Moore & Snidler
York, Nebraska, June 12, '14.

U. H. Extension Committee,
Lincoln, Nebr.

Gentlemen: Put me down as opposed to removal for several reasons:

1. Because the plan originally springs from men who will profit by the removal.

2. Because removal would cut off entirely the alumni interest born of associations connected with the old campus, the old buildings, the old town. This alumni association interest is worth more to the university than all the political and other interest because it springs from the hearts and not the pocketbooks and policy parts of men. Active alumni are what western colleges have always needed, and what we are about to come into possession of unless politicians interfere.

3. Because art and horse breeding, and medicine and cow barns after a run will not mix. Both are important, but need separate places for attention. The state farm is a grand, very necessary institution, more useful perhaps than other branches of instruction, but it will need all the land it now has to properly conduct its activities.

4. Because of the useless expense and the waste of buildings and property on the present campus.

Yours very truly,
Geo. P. Snidler.

FORTY-ACRE CAMPUS SUFFICIENT.

That forty acres is sufficient for the needs of the campus is shown by the fact that the plans and drawings made by the advocates of removal to the state farm show the proposed campus proper as covering only forty acres, the same as that the present campus will have when extended. The additional ground supposed to be used by the removalists on the farm is for beautiful parks, drives, boys' walks and hedges, nooks and ivy corners, which could be more properly described as "spooning grounds." If the state provides such facilities it must expect the usual results.

A campus of more than forty acres is impracticable on account of the waste of time for students in passing from classes in one building to another. The present campus extended to forty acres is proposed will be ample for a university with 12,000 students or four times as many as are in attendance at the present time.—Frank D. Eager, '93, in Lincoln Daily Star.

MINISTERIAL RULE IN BOSTON

Writer Had Some Hard Things to Say About Clerical Bosses of a Time Long Since Gone.

The ministers ruled Boston in good old days. They were the bosses. Literally. The big ministers were the colonial bosses; they steered the governor and the general court, while the little ministers were the ward or town bosses; they made up the voters' lists, "swung" elections and "run" the town meetings. They themselves did not hold office. Like our modern political bosses, they ruled through others. And those of us who think that "low-down politicians" are the only men that "take orders" will please observe that in this case those clerical bosses ruled through the gentry in office and the carefully selected good people in their congregations. Indeed, it seems to have been easier to corrupt that aristocracy into a theocracy than it is nowadays to corrupt a democracy into a plutocracy.

Some of the methods of the clergy were legitimate; others were not. Their influence as preachers upon public opinion was that of leaders; and so long as they exercised it in the interest of the people of the colony as a whole, it was right and good. But when they abused it to beat a governor who, feeling that their punishments were too cruel, attempted to use the discretion which was properly his; when they put off conventions to times and places where they could control them against public opinion; and when they let a bribe be sent to the king of England—when they did these and other things, the clergy were "playing the game" in what we would call a "pretty practical fashion." And they were a practical lot of politicians, those godly ministers; pious, but cunning; "good," but no "mollycoddles."—Lincoln Steffens in the Metropolitan.

GERMAN ALLIANCE FOR SUFFRAGE

Massachusetts Branch Unanimously for Equal Suffrage.

The Massachusetts branch of the German Alliance, which numbers 6,500 members, recently held its annual convention at Lawrence, Mass.

Every delegate present voted to endorse woman suffrage.

Equal suffrage has been a prominent branches of the German Alliance, which has 8,000,000 men in the United States.

AN ANTI-ARGUMENT.

Affirming on scriptural grounds the headship of the male, Wm. D. McLaughlin recently wrote the New York Tribune a letter with an anti-suffrage postscript. Mr. Witter Bynner answers thus: "Mr. McLaughlin says, 'At the Lord's supper there were no women.' May I remind him that there were women at the cross and that men were always good-at suppers."

WOMEN USED TO COMPLICATIONS

Any woman who can run a charity organization, a typewriter, a suburban home, a boarding house or a class room with forty children, will probably be just as able to exercise the right of franchise as some of the men, said Assemblyman John J. Johnson of Bergen, at a suffragist meeting in New Jersey the other day.

UNIVERSITY OF NEBRASKA—MUSEUM BUILDING

Only one wing completed. Built of common brick, sandstone trimmings, slate roof, fireproof construction. Erected 1900. Cost, with display cases, electric elevator, and laboratory tables, $50,000. Depreciation in 6 years up to 1912, is about $3,000. Estimated present value, $47,000.

To reproduce this building on the State Farm in the best modern construction, will cost $65,000. Removal will destroy about $5,000 worth of fixtures.

Corn Prospects.

Reports from the Department of Agriculture are, "The corn prospects all over the United States were never better." With sufficient rain thru July and August, the 1914 corn crop in the Ubited States will be the biggest in history. Well it won't hurt Nebraska farmers if we do get a bumper crop. They've been wanting one for the last five years.

Lewiston 10 - Table Rock 6

Last Friday our ball team played ball with Lewiston at the home ball park. The game started off with a smash and Lewiston running in three scores, and then the game stayed three to nothing until in the seventh inning when Lewiston scored one and Table Rock scored three. In the eighth inning Lewiston made two more and in the ninth they scored four. Table Rock scored three in the ninth, making the total score 10 to 6.

The principal part of the game consisted of errors and arguments with the umpire. It seemed that there could be no decision without a prolonged debate with the umpire. Friday's was the first game that the new team had played and they all seemed to be off on that day, for a game played with Steinauer the first of the week ended with a score of 9 to 1 in the favor of Table Rock. The one of Steinauer was made in a home run.

Open Air Meetings.

Last Sunday evening a series of open-air meetings were commenced in the air-dome just north of the Argus office. A fair attendance was out considering the fact that it rained in the afternoon. Rev. C. P. W. Wimberly preached the sermon and the audience was very attentive. The electric lights were out of commission until about 9 o'clock, when they came on just in time for the closing song service.

MAGAZINE STORY CAUSES EDITOR SOME TROUBLE.

STANDS BY HIS NOMINEES

President Will Have Hard Fight to Confirm Members of Reserve Board—Meat Prices to Go Higher.

Western Newspaper Union News Service.

San Francisco.—Warrants for the arrest of Charles K. Field, editor of Sunset Magazine and former president of the Bohemian club; Robert J. Fowler, an aviator; Riley A. Scott, a waiter, and Ray S. Duhem, a photographer, have been issued at the request of John W. Preston, United States attorney here. The charge against all three is the disclosure of military secrets, and the penalty is ten years' imprisonment or a $10,000 fine for such disclosure, if made abroad, and one year or $1,000 fine if made in the United States. In April Sunset published an article entitled "Can the Panama Canal Be Destroyed from the Air?" reproductions of photographs taken from an aeroplane and showing some of the fortifications of the canal zone and of the San Francisco presidio accompanied the text. As soon as a copy of the number was called to the attention of the war department, it requested Preston to investigate.

Meat Prices to Go Up.

Chicago—Meat prices will rise above the record figures of recent years despite the huge grain crop, according to packing house representatives, who assert that the present scarcity of cattle and the effect of dry weather on grazing lands will more than offset the enormous grain yield. A price of 16 cents to the butcher was predicted as an early possibility and it was pointed out by one of the packing house men that cattle are now higher than for some time, especially of grass-fed cattle—was referred to as a factor in the predicted advance.

WILL DEFEND HIS NOMINATIONS.

President Will Carry His Fight to Senate.

Washington.—Democratic senators who propose standing by President Wilson in his fight for confirmation of the nomination of Thomas D. Jones of Chicago as a member of the federal reserve board are engaged in preparation for the contest when it reaches the senate through the unfavorable recommendation voted by the banking and currency committee. It is conceded that a battle royal is ahead in which the president will be forced to clash with some members of his own party.

Nebraska Delegation in Favor.

Washington.—Members of the Nebraska delegation in the lower house are generally in favor of a provision for government aid in any rural credit legislation which may be undertaken by congress. The only one making exception to a round endorsement of a government aid clause is Congressman Maguire, who, while not definitely opposed to such a provision, says he wishes to look into the subject carefully before saying he will support it.

Progressives Stand Second.

Denver, Colo.—Overruling a recent decision of the election commissioners, Judge Allen decided that the progressive party and not the republican party was second on the face of returns to the last election and entitled to share with the democrats the appointment of the judges of elections in November. The decision was rendered in the mandamus proceedings brought by Archibald A. Lee, progressive county chairman, against Ellis Meredith Clement, president of the county election commission.

Hopes of Adjutant General Hall to have a Nebraska camp this year instead of going to Iowa as heretofore, it seems does not seems justifiable, are mounting higher each day. The war department has taken kindly to some of the suggestions made by the head of the Nebraska militia relative to the camp site, and believes that the camp at Ashland rifle range can be utilized for the purpose. If the camp is held here federal soldiers will be brought from one of the nearby states. All the Nebraskans will thus be given all the training they would secure in the Hawkeye state and would have the advantage of assisting in building up the new range.

SOME LEGISLATIVE METHODS

FINAL REPORT OF SPECIAL INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE.

Some Comparisons Between Nebraska and Other States in Handling Business of Lawmaking.

Western Newspaper Union News Service.

The complete report of the legislative reform committee has just been published in pamphlet form by the legislature of 1913. It is rather a voluminous document of forty-five pages containing many comparisons of systems in Nebraska and other states. Parts of the report recommended by the joint committee have been published from time to time.

In brief, the recommendations are of two kinds, those which can be brought to pass by mutual agreement between the houses by resolution, or by statutory enactment with emergency clause attached, and those which will require changes in the constitution before they can be made.

Among the former are reductions in the number of employes and in size of committees, and in publicity given daily to the proceedings of the two houses. Among the latter are a one-house legislature, civil service in all state positions that are appointive, consolidation of offices, and a scientific budget system.

Data was gathered from nearly every state in the union and compiled into table for reference and comparison. For instance:

1. Volume of Suggested Laws.

One table shows the number of bills introduced in three of the largest of the legislatures of the various states. This includes 1913 and 1914. The introduced in the 1913 Nebraska session was no greater than in some other states in size, and no more than in over half the states of the union. Some of the comparatively small states, North Carolina taken as an example, had 1,000 bills put forth in the 1913 session. Iowa did not run as high as Nebraska. Not a single state would meet the record set by North Carolina.

Another table shows what states use the cumbersome and expensive method of enrollment and engrossment of bills and what ones have adopted the more modern typewriter since its invention. Nebraska would require a change in the constitution to meet such an altered system.

Another table presents the number of legislative employes in the different states. This shows that Nebraska has more employes for each two members. Missouri and Oregon have the least many employes as there are legislative members. Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and New York are about as lavish with legislative employes as Nebraska legislators, while states are more economical, the New England states, Virginia and Tennessee, Connecticut and Mississippi use only one employe for each two members, its total being only thirty employes, where Nebraska uses 200 on the last session.

Still another table presents the question of cost if daily reports of proceedings were published. Nebraska spends morning after each legislative day, and type thus used is kept standing in minotine the house and senate journals. In this respect its experience in different states varies widely.

Further tables show in detail the cost of holding legislative sessions in different states. Iowa, paying $1,000 a term to its members, spent $246,000 in 1913. Kansas, paying $2 a day, spent $159,631; Nebraska, paying $5 a day, spent $159,631; Missouri, paying $5 a day, spent $279,000, and Colorado, paying $1,000 a term, spent $177,000.

Recommendations.

In brief the committee's recommendations, which it asks members to pledge themselves to support if possible to carry out, embody these points:

Immediate Actions.

Bills—1. Change to more convenient size with less marginal waste.

2. Printing amendatory bill so as to show what changes are proposed in the present law.

3. Typewriting and engrossing bills shall hereafter be done by typewriter and printing press instead of by longhand with pen and ink.

4. Bill drafting shall be done by a division of the legislative reference bureau in separate room, with adequate help and convenience. This service shall be free to members on written request.

5. Bill files for senate and house shall be made up only with such bills as have passed the other house.

6. Members shall introduce such bills only as they are willing to defend before committees and on the floor. Committees shall report favorably such bills only as a majority of the committee are willing to defend.

Printed publications—1. Printed journals shall be placed each day on the members' desks and, when corrected, speech copies printed for the bound volume.

2. Calendars and subject indexes of bills and other modern conveniences for expediting business shall be printed and distributed to the public daily.

3. The state printing commissioner is requested to let contracts for legislative printing in accordance with this report.

Committees—1. The number of committees and membership in each committee is reduced from one-third to one-half the number of the last session of the legislature.

2. Regular committee meetings shall be set for noon, from 12 to 2.

3. Schedules of committee meetings shall be printed and distributed each day. No committee meetings without committee notice.

4. Joint meetings shall be held of the senate and house committees having in charge appropriations.

5. Record shall be kept of votes in committee meetings.

6. Final action in reporting bill shall be taken only in the regular daylight hours of committee meetings.

Employes—1. The number of employes in the senate shall be reduced from seventy-three in the session of 1913 to twenty-three in the house from seventy-two to twenty-three. The estimated saving in wages may be $10,000 to $15,000.

2. Overtime shall be covered by regular each employe to check in and out each day.

3. The chief officers of each house shall be charged with the duty of preventing employes from loitering about the halls and chief corridors of the capitol.

For Future Action.

Single house legislature. An amendment to the constitution shall be submitted providing for one house only, in numbers between thirty-three and one hundred.

Civil service—1. State civil service shall be the general rule, including a list of qualified persons without regard to politics for state positions.

Budget—1. A scientific state budget of revenues and expenditures shall be prepared by the governor and recommended to the legislature in a special message.

2. Consolidation of offices—The legislature shall try to secure greater efficiency by consolidation of offices.

Efficiency survey—1. An efficiency survey of the state's business shall be provided for by the legislature.

Bumper Wheat Crop.

From all parts of the state come reports of a record breaking wheat crop. The twenty acres of wheat planted on the site reserved for a tractor exhibit at the state fair grounds has been harvested. A number of the heads contained as high as 64 grains. After making allowance for lodging in one portion of the field it was estimated that the average yield could not fall below forty bushels.

Holiday for Clerks.

Beatrice.—Six hundred women of Beatrice have signed petitions requesting Beatrice merchants to close their places of business one afternoon each week during the months of July and August, in order that their employes have an afternoon for recreation.

Good Price for Land.

Waco.—A tract of land containing five acres, adjoining this village was transferred from William Uffelman to John E. Miller. The consideration was $500 per acre.

ECZEMA ON HANDS AND ARMS

1321 Douglas St., Omaha, Neb.—"My trouble began from a bad form of eczema all over my hands, neck and arms. I could get no sleep for the itching and burning. The small pimples looked red and watery and my skin and scalp became dry and itching. The pimples irritated me so that I would scratch until they bled. I could not put my hands in water and if I once tried it they burned so that I could not stand it. I had to have my hands tied up and gloves on all the time for nearly two months. Sometimes I would scratch the skin off it irritated so and I could do no work at all.

"I tried all kinds of remedies but nothing did any good. Then I saw in the newspaper about Cuticura Soap and Ointment and got some. It was the first I used that completely healed in five or six weeks. They have not troubled me since." (Signed) Joe Uhl, Jan. 31, '14.

COULD NOT STAND ON FEET

Mrs. Baker So Weak—Could Not Do Her Work—Found Relief In Novel Way.

Adrian, Mich. — "I suffered terribly with female weakness and backache and got so weak that I could hardly do my work. When I washed my dishes I had to sit down and when I would sweep the floor I would get so weak that I would have to get a drink every few minutes, and before I did my sewing I would have to lie down. I got so poorly that my folks thought I was going into consumption. One day I found a piece of paper blowing around the yard and I picked it up and read it. It said 'Saved from the Grave,' and told what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for women. I showed it to my husband and he said, 'Why don't you try it?' So I did, and after I had taken a bottle I felt better and I said to my husband, 'I don't need any more,' and he said 'You had better take it a little longer anyway.' So I took it for three months and got well and strong."—Mrs. ALONZO E. BAKER, 9 Tecumseh St., Adrian, Mich.

Save the Babies.

INFANT MORTALITY is something frightful. We can hardly realize that of all the children born in civilized countries, twenty-two per cent, or nearly one-quarter, die before they reach one year; thirty-seven per cent, or more than one-third, before they are five, and one-half before they are fifteen!

We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save a majority of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that many of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations. Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints contain more or less opium or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poisons. In any quantity, they stupefy, retard circulation and lead to congestions, sickness, death. Castoria operates exactly the reverse, but you must see that it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. Castoria causes the blood to circulate properly, opens the pores of the skin and allays fever.

Genuine Castoria always bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

HOW HE TURNED THE TRICK

After This, Mr. Mordecai Hammerfest Must Be Credited With Knowing a Thing or Two.

Mrs. Mordecai Hammerfest turned pale as her husband entered the dining room for breakfast.

"Mordy!" she gasped. "Do you—don't you feel well?"

"Perfectly," he replied in seeming surprise.

"But—but, you are in your—your undershirt!"

"Tell me something I don't know. Pass the butter, please," said Mr. Hammerfest.

She passed the butter, remarking nervously, "But, Mordy, dear, as you came in I saw you didn't have any shoes on."

"Well, what of it. Your bait is in our papers, isn't it?"

"Why—yes."

"And you have on a wrapper, haven't you?"

"Yes."

"Very well, then."

And he went on eating his breakfast in silence except when he asked her to pass the butter. Then he went upstairs and finished dressing, and the next morning and on succeeding mornings she reported for breakfast in regular clothes.

Real Tragedy of the Stage.

A beautiful actress, Penelope Darmer, was killed by accident recently, while playing at the Theater of Velleties at Berne, Switzerland. The last act of the comedy, "The Pride of the Third Company," was coming to an end when Fraulein Darmer fell through a defective stage trap to a distance of six feet and fractured her skull. The actress was carried unconscious to her room and a doctor was in prompt attendance, but the case was beyond his help, and as the curtain fell on the comedy on the stage the girl died. Neither the members of the company who took the final "call" nor the public, who wondered why the actress did not appear, had the slightest idea of the tragedy that had occurred behind the scenes.

A Fish Story.

"The inns of dear old England are picturesque," said Richard Le Gallienne, on his return from abroad, "but the food they serve is something terrible.

"After a visit to Blenheim palace I entered an inn in the quaint village of Woodstock. As I watched—or tried to lunch—my landlord said to me:

"'The great dook of Marlborough once sat in that chair you're a settin' in, sir.'

"'Is that so?' said I.

"'And the dook once drunk 'is beer out o' that same mug you're a drinkin' out of.'

"'And I bet,' said I, 'I bet he refused to eat this fish, too. Well, take it away, my man. I don't want it, either.'"

Suspicious.

"Too bad Jinx and his wife don't get along well together."

"Why, I always understood that they were an ideal couple."

"So did I, but they must have had a dreadful scrap before he started for work this morning."

"Did he have a black eye?"

"No, but he stopped in when we were on our way home and bought her a five-pound box of candy."

Not So Much to Blame.

"I didn't know you were so accomplished a linguist," he remarked as he glanced at the paper she was writing.

"I don't make any pretentions in that direction," she answered.

"But that is a Russian newspaper you have picked up."

"Why, so it is," she answered in surprise. "I thought it was a dialect story."

Ambrose Bierce, the brilliant satirist, gave, at a dinner in Washington, a few political definitions.

"A conservative," said Mr. Bierce, "is a statesman who is enamored of existing evils, with a radical would replace them with others."

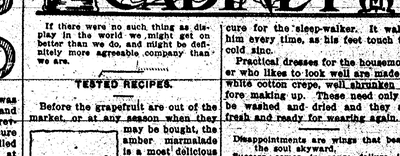
Weird Legends of Mexico



INDIAN PILGRIMS TO SACRED SHRINE

OF all the relatively larger cities on the American hemisphere, the capital of Mexico is by far the oldest. Its beginning was long before Columbus sailed on his memorable voyage of discovery, when it was the seat of the Aztec empire. Civilization of a sort flourished there long before the first hardy pioneers settled along the northern Atlantic coast and before the eyes of a white man had ever rested upon the Mississippi river.

It has been a city of many vicissitudes. It has been held by Indian and Spaniard, by viceroy, by republican, by revolutionist, and by northern invader. Many of its streets are of the greatest antiquity. Many of its traditions are so old that no man knows whether they originated in the days of the Montezumas or of the Conquistadores.

As is inevitable, the City of Mexico has its own peculiar folk-lore, its mysterious legends. There are old tales that have been handed down from generation to generation by word of mouth and are still told by Mexican nurses to the children as they were told centuries ago.

The Wailing Woman.

A relic of Aztec folk lore is the tale of the Wailing Woman. Once, a long time ago, the story runs, there was a very bad woman in the City of Mexico. She was cruel to her many children, but children bored her, and as fast as one came upon the earth, she drowned it. Finally her conscience began troubling her. It is supposed that her punishment was to go through eternity looking for her lost children.

Frequently since then, it is said, watchmen have seen a woman in white, with a white mantilla over her head, coming through the streets at night. Those who have inquired on business have received an answering inquiry as to where her children can be found. The greatest misfortune that overtakes those who question her. Most of them are stricken dead or become insane. This latter fate is said to have overtaken a gilted young army officer, who once tried to flirt with the Wailing Woman. At night her lamentations are still heard at night, sometimes.

One story with a foundation in fact is the legend of Don Juan Manuel. As the tale arrives in the folk-lore, Don Juan was an amiable enough gentleman, except that he had a bad habit of wandering out nights and murdering people. His custom was to approach somebody on the street and ask him the time, and, when he replied, tell him he was lucky because he knew the hour of his death and stab him to the heart. This went on until one night Don Juan killed his dearly beloved nephew, whom he had not recognized.

Stricken with remorse Don Juan confessed to his priest, who for penance ordered him to go alone at midnight to a certain church, before which was a gallows, and to tell his rosary under the gallows. Three nights he attempted to fulfill the command, but was driven back by the groans of the persons he had murdered. After begging in vain for a lighter penance he finally reached his goal under the gallows. Then the angels from heaven came down and hanged him.

As a matter of history there was such a person in Mexico in 1641 and he was a dishonest collector of revenues. He was jailed, and, to secure his liberty, his wife was compelled to suffer incredible humiliations at the hands of a judge. Don Juan broke prison, went to his home, found the judge there, and stabbed him to death. Later he was mysteriously lynched one night before the church, and from this grew the legend that the angels had punished him for his sins.

A striking story of ghostly revenge is the legend of Don Juan de Nava, priest and guardian of his orphan niece, a beautiful girl. A Portuguese nobleman, Don Duarte de Sarrasa, fell in love with her, and she reciprocated the attachment, but the priest rejected Don Duarte because he was known as a gambler. One night the priest came upon Don Duarte talking to his niece through her window. Duarte struck the old man with his dagger, which was imbedded in his skull, killing him. He threw the body, dagger and all, into a ditch. Just one year later Duarte was found dead at the site of the crime. Kneeling over him, one of its bony hands gripping the body by the throat, was a skeleton in priestly garments, with a dagger sticking in its skull.

The Ghostly Raven.

Rather revengeful legends that of Don Rodrigo de Ballesteros and his raven. It is said that there is a certain bridge where at midnight when the weather is stormy one may even yet hear the ghostly cawing of this raven, although the incidents with which the story deals happened 300 years ago.

Don Rodrigo, it seems, was very rich and very wicked. He lived in a palace and he and the raven dined from gold and silver plate, but the Don always went about in shabby clothes, in spite of his riches. He never went to church, and he made fun of holy things. Suddenly he and the raven both disappeared. On investigation persons found in his house a sacred image that had been defiled and was sprinkled with blood. From this it was supposed that the raven had beaten the image until it had shed the crimson fluid, and that Satan punished them both by taking them to himself. Occasionally, however, they come back to haunt the scene of their misdeeds.

Rather a humorous turn is given to the story of the Street of the Somersault. According to it, a Spanish nobleman, Don Mendo Quiroga y Saures, very rich and very old, was much neglected in his dying days by his beautiful niece, upon whom he had showered every benefaction. He planned to revenge himself by his will.

When the will was read, everything was bequeathed to the niece, who was spoken of in terms of the warmest affection, up to the last paragraph. In it certain terms of acceptance were set forth with the provision that if they were not complied with every cent should go to religious orders. The terms were that on or before a certain day the niece must array herself in her richest ball dress, and, wearing her richest jewels, must proceed in her coach at noonday to the Municipal Palace. There she must go to the middle of the street and turn a somersault.

The KITCHEN CABINET

If there were no such thing as dinner in the world we might get on better than we do, and might be definitely more agreeable company than we are.

TESTED RECIPES.

Before the grapefruit are out of the market, or at any season when they may be bought, the amber marmalade is one most delicious to prepare. Take one each of grapefruit, orange and lemon. Wash and scrub the fruit well; cut in shreds, removing the seeds and stringy portion of the pulp. Put to soak over night in three quarts of water. The next day cook the peel well covered until perfectly tender, then stand away another night. In the morning add ten half pint cuptuls of sugar and cook until it tells when tried in a cold dish. Put into jelly glasses and cover for use at any time. The color is beautiful, and the flavor is not too bitter, the objection so many make to orange marmalade.

Creamed Potatoes With Green Peppers.—Peel enough potatoes to make a quart after they have been cut into dice. Remove the seeds from two green peppers and cut them in rings. Put the pepper and "dice" potatoes into a stew pan and cover with boiling water. Pour off the water after 15 minutes and sprinkle the vegetables with flour, salt and pepper. Turn into a greased baking dish and cover with rich white cream sauce, or with butter and cook until nicely brown.

Maple Biscuit.—Make a rich biscuit dough, roll out a half inch thick, spread with grated maple sugar and chopped nuts, roll up and cut as you would a jelly roll, and bake in a hot oven. These may be served with cream as a dessert or with tea they make a most appetizing little cake.

Mock Eggs on Toast.—Arrange a slice of cake on a plate, place the half of a peach on each slice and surround the peach (leaving the yellow edge of the cake uncovered) with sweetened and flavored whipped cream.

Sandwich Filling.—This is rather an uncommon filling—Chop all the ingredients quite fine. One small onion, nine olives, a sour pickle, a green pepper; add a cupful of grated cheese and mix with enough of the mustard dressing taken from the chow-chow pickle jar to spread.

Let no man out of a weak conceit of self-sufficiency, or ill-natured humor think or maintain, that a man can search too far or be too well studied in the book of God's word, or in the book of God's works; divinity or philosophy; but rather let a man dive with an endless progress of prodicence in both.—Bacon.

HELPFUL HINTS.

To be ready with gifts for special occasions like birthdays and Christmas time have a book with a page for each person to be remembered. Keep a list of things to buy or make and cross them off when they are ready. This will make the present mean more to both, and will do away with needless hurry.

A toy watering pot is very convenient for spraying plants.

Keep a small board with a square of bristol brick on it with a cork. When the steel knives are washed rub with the brick and cork and they will always look well.

A dish mop is a great saving on the hands, as water can be used much hotter and the process is finished much quicker.

Equal parts of boiled oil, vinegar and turpentine make a good furniture polish.

Stone blankets and comfortables are much more expensive than sheeting if you pay for it, but sheeting is sold only in one width and is easy to get at when an informal ball is made, to pick up and do a few stitches while visiting. It is surprising what an amount of work may be done in odd moments. It is said that Hugo wrote many books writing 15 minutes at a time before breakfast.

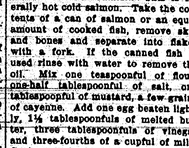
A piece of zinc placed where the feet will fall on it is said to be a sure cure for the sleep-walker. It wakes him every time, as his feet touch the cold zinc.

Practical dresses for the housemother who likes to look well are made of white cotton crepe, well shrunken before making up. These need only to be washed and dried and they are fresh and ready for wearing again.

Disappointments are wings that bear the soul skyward.
Success comes in cans; failure in cartons.
Affection is the only remedy for diseased souls and evil characters.

DISHES FOR SULTRY DAYS.

During the heated term let fresh fruits and vegetables have a large place in the menu and nuts take the place of heavy meats, as they will be found both satisfying and cooling.



Egg Cocktails.—These are a most delicious appetizer. For each person take one teaspoonful of lemon juice, two drops of tabasco sauce, half a teaspoonful of horseradish, one teaspoonful of tomato catsup and a saltspoonful of salt. Mix together and add an egg beaten to a foam. Serve in tall glasses with a long spoon.

Beet Mayonnaise.—Bake medium sized beets in their skins, when tender plunge into cold water, rub off the skins and rub the beets through a sieve or vegetable ricer. To a cupful of the pulp add two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice and a half-cupful of oil or melted butter. Season with salt and pepper, beat until smooth. Serve with cold meat.

Chicken With Potato.—Lightly whip one cupful of cold mashed potato, add the beaten white of an egg, a tablespoonful of lemon juice and a half-cupful of oil of boiled dressing and a cupful of diced cold chicken. Mix well and serve on lettuce leaves with salad dressing.

Fruit Soup.—Sprinkle half a cupful of sago into a quart of boiling water, add the grated zest of a lemon and a small stick of cinnamon, cook for half an hour. Remove the cinnamon and add a quart of canned cherries, bring to the boiling point, cool and serve with wafers.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Director of Evening Department, The Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.)

LESSON FOR JULY 19

BLIND BARTIMAEUS.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 10:46-52.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Then the eyes of the blind shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb shall sing: for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert." Isa. 35:5, 6.

On our Lord's journey "towards Jerusalem," the place of sacrifice, a place of power was sought by his disciples, Mark 10:37. This lesson is an illustration given to those who accompanied Jesus how they too may reach a place of power viz. through service and sacrifice.

Matthew 20:30-34 tells us that there were two who made the appeal, but Mark seems to have thought that Bartimaeus was worthy of special mention. The healing mentioned by Luke 18:35 suggests that in that case it occurred as Jesus was entering and not leaving Jericho. Mark is telling of one man, Luke of another.

Man's Nature.

I. Bartimaeus Begging, vv. 46-48. The passing throng rebuked the beggar. Very likely the disciples joined in this rebuke. This certainly shows the fact that none of them fully comprehended the Lord's teaching as suggested in Mark 10:45. Bartimaeus is an illustration of man by nature. His home, Jericho, was the city under "a curse" (Josh 6:17), and is a type of this world cursed by sin. He was blind, see II Cor. 4:4; Rev. 3:17. His rags suggest Isa. 64:6 and Phil. 3:9. If the rebuke was mainly by the disciples it was that they might save the master during these strange days. Great and marvelous were the works and teachings he was performing, but these were the things that called forth such a wayside service. It was a glad message to Bartimaeus, "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by". There was no one else who could help him. Some one had told him of the power of Jesus. Now his opportunity is at hand, he must not miss it. Jesus never passed that way again. Bartimaeus began by crying out, Rom. 10:13; he called while Christ was near enough to hear, Isa. 55:6. His cry was that of conscious need, it was direct, it was insistent. He called Jesus "Son of David" e. g., the Messiah, although the people had said "Jesus of Nazareth," see Matt. 9:27; 15:21, 22. His cry for "mercy" is rebuked. Many today are so stiff and formal as to frown upon any religious enthusiasm or earnestness. It was not beneath the dignity of Jesus to be disturbed by a blind beggar. Though poor in purse Bartimaeus was rich in faith for he answered those who rebuked him by crying "He more a great deal." He would not be put off.

"Come to Jesus."

II. Bartimaeus Blessed, vv. 49-52. His command "call ye him" is indicative of the conscious power of Christ. Notice his great interest as suggested by the words, "Jesus stood still." Remember his important mission to Jerusalem and the leaders of the people who occupied his time; yet he does not compel Bartimaeus to follow after, nor to overtake him ere his prayer is answered, see Matt. 11:28. This was good news for the disciples to proclaim, Matt. 28:19,20. There was no indecision on the part of Bartimaeus. Casting his garment aside he sprang up, came and cast himself at the feet of Jesus. Although Jesus possessed all power still its manifestation was confined to the desire of the beggar.

The Teaching: First, the readiness of God's mercy. Jesus had been rejected by rulers and councils and is moving steadfastly toward the consummation of his earthly career. That journey led him through Jericho, perhaps that he might meet Bartimaeus. At Jerusalem he is to pronounce sentence upon the rebellion of his people. Nevertheless when one of that same people called him by the title that suggested his Messiahship, "Son of David," he immediately turned aside in response thereto, Heb. 3:2. God never destroys the righteous with the wicked or the repentant with the rebellious. His ear is ever open to the faintest cry.

Second. The failure of men to apprehend this fact. There are many today as successors of those who rebuked Bartimaeus. Some who hold him in reverence and yet fail to apprehend adequately that he came to "seek and to save the lost." There is no consideration of policy or of expediency, no question of method, nor the importance of rank, that can stand in the way of opening blind eyes, and answering the cry of the beggar.

Third. The nature of saving faith. The answer of relief from the Lord comes in response to the profound conviction of personal need. "He came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance." There is nothing in that call to make any definite appeal to the righteous. A blind man, through someone's testimony hears that he is near and cries out to him from the depths of his need. But there must be also a recognition of power. Bartimaeus had no assurance until he had made his appeal; he took a chance as it were. He was not assured until his eyes were opened.

BUSY IN DOUGLAS COUNTY.

Suffragists There Are Talking to Voters Every Day.

The summer suffrage caimpaign in Douglas county was formally opened last Saturday by an automobile parade in Omaha and a short speech-making tour to Florence, a town five miles north of Omaha.

Charles Hafke, assistant county attorney, spoke enthusiastically of the amendment, and the mayor of Florence in a public speech said that he was in favor of suffrage. John A. Hiln, city attorney of Omaha, will accompany one of these tours and make speeches for suffrage from an automobile.

Once these tours start, leading society women and prominent men donate their machines and join the procession. Of a Saturday afternoon the people are in the streets and around the band stand in the evening. The suffragists have learned that to get the people they must go where the people are, which in the summer time is out of doors.

Mrs. Munson is making a series of visits to the big stores and industrial establishments of Omaha. She and other suffrage speakers address the employes at the noon hour. Some big institution is visited every day. The importance of this work is fully appreciated by the employers who make special arrangements for the attendance of their employes at these noonday meetings. F. W. Judson of the Midland Glass and Paint company told the speakers on Tuesday that he had not a now of more important work they could do.

There will be a suffrage speech every night in one or more of the Omaha fraternal societies. Nearly all the lodge officers are writing that the suffragists ink to their lorges. Visits have been made to the Red Men's lodges and to several of the A. O. U. W. lodges. Many trips will be made to the Woodmen of the World camps and to the Modern Woodmen of America.—Omaha News.

GERMAN ALLIANCE FOR SUFFRAGE

Massachusetts Branch Unanimously for Equal Suffrage.

The Massachusetts branch of the German Alliance, which numbers 6,500 members, recently wrote the New York Tribune a letter with an anti-suffrage postscript. Mr. Witter Bynner answers thus: "Mr. McLaughlin says, 'At the Lord's supper there were no women.' May I remind him that there were women at the cross and that men are always good at suppers."

WOMEN USED TO COMPLICATIONS

Any woman who can run a charity organization, a typewriter, a suburban home, a boarding house or a class room with forty children, will probably be just as able to exercise the right of franchise as some of the men, said Assemblyman John J. Johnson of Bergen, at a suffragist meeting in New Jersey the other day.

It is no longer necessary to argue with a family about the necessity of a daily newspaper. The only question now is which one. With people who want a fearless, independent paper, one that will print all the news about all the candidates and about all public policies all the time, the Lincoln State Journal is the one. A trial price of only $1.00 for the daily and Sunday from now until after the November election will add thousands of new readers. The paper is not forced onto people through fakes and schemes, but is sold strictly on its merits. Everyone pays in advance and all papers are stopped when the time is out. You are directly interested in the things that are being done by the state and national governments. The Journal does not support candidates but does print the facts about all of them. ANTIS IN LINCOLN

Trouble About a Chairman.

Omaha has a flourishing anti-suffrage society. Lincoln has none. Mrs. Crumpacker of Omaha has assiduously visited Lincoln and importuned various ladies to join the society which she would organize.

But the Lincoln suffrage society is large and the Lincoln women who have anti sentiments have also friends in the suffrage group and hesitate to antagonize them. It is always difficult to organize the negative into a strong effective body. If the suffragists win there will only be, so far as women are concerned, bitter disappointment among the leaders of the antis. Mrs. Dodge, Miss Bronson and Mrs. Crumpacker will feel the chagrin of defeat and future employers may hesitate to engage their services. On the other hand there is always useful work for the truly industrious and it is by no means sure that the November election in this state will witness the retirement from the anti field of Mrs. Crumpacker and Miss Bronson. There will be many thirty stares left for them to exercise in. Of course their value to employers will diminish with each succeeding defeat. But their friends must remember that to make women come out who say they believe that woman's only place is at home is difficult. The antis want women to make speeches against the propriety ow woman's making speeches. They want them to organize against the organization of women. Nobody willingly assumes such an inconsistent position. There must be some substantial reason for spending one's days in railroad trains and one's evenings on temporary platforms instead of putting up "jell" at home in the daytime and riding int the auto in the evening.

Therefore the Lincol nand the Hastings and the Bertrice women have an anti organization. Miss Bronson and Mrs. Crumpecker came to Lincoln the other day. They spent the time trying to get a chairman to introduce them in the evening. They asked almost every prominent man in Lincoln, beginning with Mayor Zehrung. They all refused. Finally Mr. Manpin volunteered. He apologized for introducing speakers whose message he thought foolish when he presented the two speakers to the audience of twenty-seven people. "Sister Minnie Bronson," as Rabbi Wise calls her, was peeved by the introduction and instead of appreciating its gallantry, said that it was the first time a chairman had thought it necessary to apologize for introducing her.

Miss Bronson said that the men of Lincoln were terrorized by the women of Lincoln. This reminded the audience of the tactful speech she made in Omaha when she said that the west was the home of all kinds of isms: Mormonism, free silverism and polygamy.

Without the peevish expression Miss Bronson is a well dressed, pleasing object. As the protagonist of a positive and winning proposition she might easily be radiant. As it is the bitterness of defeat spoils her expression. No anti society was organized in Lincoln.

BAD TEETH.

How many people realize the dangers of bad teeth? At a hopeful estimate, about one in ten thousand. Everyone knows that a toothache is about the most villianous pain human beings are called upon to endure, and that a sore tooth always feels about half an inch longer than any of its fellows. There, public information on this matter stops; and, unfortunately, some doctors are not much wiser. Decayed or badly filled teeth may cause a whole host of troubles without their bad work being suspected by the patient. Ear pockets often form at the roots of such teeth and poison the whole system by constant discharge of virulent germs. Many persistent headaches are due to this slow, unsuspected poisoning, says the Chicago Journal. Joint troubles usually diagnosed under the ominous title of "rheumatism" have been traced to the same source; and it is worth noting that this particular form of rheumatism is very frequently followed by heart affections, sometimes of a very serious nature. Good teeth are almost priceless possessions. But a tooth that has a pus pocket at the root, and is emptying a steady stream of disease germs into the system is not much less vicious than a chorically inflamed appendix.

WAS IT ACTING OR REAL LOVE?

Margie Walters—(dramatic woman)—Did you read where Winnie King and her hubby——

Tom Finerty (a single)—What—trouble again?

Margie Walters—No, indeed, sir. They were just offered a hundred a week apiece in separate shows and they refused to separate. Such devotion in a young couple I never did see.

Tom Finerty—Young couple? He's young, but it's "grandma" parts for her after this. What you mean is, it was fine of them not to separate when they couldn't deliver the goods. When they played on a bill with me—oh! If that manager wasn't a kind-hearted old gink, they'd be sentenced for life on the small time.

Margie Walters—I meant from an affectionate standpoint, Tom. It showed what a loving couple you will find in the show business every so often.

Alys Daly (of the Daly sisters)—I knew a couple like that one time—for two weeks. Then he got an offer of one week's day [illegible]. Them hams ain't got no more affection than a chink laundryman, take it from me.

Edna May Sims (child impersonator)—Didn't the man spurn the offer to be with his loving wife, Alys?

Alys Daly—Lovin' wife?. She's playin' in the Bronx and he's billed for San Diego the last half of next.

Dad Wadell—Such family disruption was not the rule in my day. I remember——

Gene Baily (comedy juggler)—Look at me, crowd, if you want to see a sample of conubialistic happiness. Wife's playing Chicago and I'm here.

Margie Walters—Connubial bliss is

"Look at Me, Crowd, If You Want to See a Sample of Connubialistic Happiness. Wife's Playing Chicago and I'm Here."

easy under such conditions. If Mr. H. V. Walters had stayed 30 hours' railroad distance from me we would never have a word.

Algy (late of the Alle)—I'll bet you'd get lonesome and write, me boy, to Molly.

Margie Walters—Write my husband? Never! I did, however, send him a dozen telegrams when we separated. I sent them "charges collect," and it said in them words: "Come, you brute!" Mr. H. V. Walters will rue the day——

Gene Baily—Don't think my case is anything like that. Trial fate, and we separate. If someone will tell me how to frame up an act we can play together, something for a comedy juggler and a leading lady—which she is—I'll give 'em my chicken farm.

Algy—I'll try to think of a wy. But first give me a description of the place. If it's more than a mile from Broadway I don't want it.

Margie Walters—Here's how Winnie's case was. Winnie and George were with us in "Oh, Oh, Claudine." After we were out two weeks they were routed out down the country to $7 people. When the notice was posted at Ft. Wayne Winnie and George went up to read it. What did they see? Winnie was let out altogether and they let George do his juvenile and double as the count in the last act.

Tom Finerty—That was an awful responsibility to give to that ex-ballhop.

Dad Wadell—In "Midsummer Night's Dream" I played Bottom and——

Algy—I'd 'ate to've been there w'en y' did it.

Edna May Sims—When George and Winnie saw that notice did they carry on something awful, Margie?

Margie Walters—Not a-tall! They stood clasped in each other's arms. Winnie looked up into George's face, her big brown orbs filled with tears. George looked at poor little Winnie, and——

Gene Baily—I got an idea for an act out of this much. A leadin' lady befriends a poor juggler from a stranded side-show. That night the hotel burns and the juggler carries her down on one arm—by balancin' stunt. The juggler turns out to be her old schoolmate——

Algy—Keep your old chicken farm!

Margie Walters—Yes, m' deare, they just stood there looking at that call-board.

Dad Wadell—A pretty situation, I'd call it. A dramatic moment.

Algy—I'd call it a piffle scene, I would.

Margie Walters—Winnie drew herself up to her full height; she choked her sobs. "George," she said, "it seems that we must part."

Algy—It seemed, eh?

Margie Walters—"Don't let me be a burden to you any longer," she cried. "Don't let me hold you back from the career that is yours. Take the juvenile job, let me go my way, and when you are great, all I ask is that you think of me—sometimes."

Edna May Sims—If I witnessed that scene I'd burst out weeping. I'm that tender-hearted.

Dad Wadell—My dear young lady, if you saw me in "Henry of Navarre" you'd weep.

Algy—By jove, you're a candid ol' top!

Gene Baily—That was George's chance to act as I would under the circumstances.

Margie Walters—He did. Gene George took her in his manly arms and said right out loud, "Kid, you're not a burden to me. You've always played your half of the sketch. Ned Ward can have the juvenile job—the show will close soon, anyway. We're both going to quit now and go back East, back to your uncle's farm for the summer." George King is made of manly material.

Edna May Sims—I don't know Winnie or George, never saw their act, but from those words I'd say he is every inch a man.

Algy—Back to uncle's farm for the summer, eh? 'Oo'd blame the rotter!

Stage Fright.

Very few people are really free from liability to stage fright, and the veteran in public life is just as likely to be affected as is the novice. Attacks, moreover, frequently come when they are least expected. Hence no speaker or artist can face an audience and feel sure that he will not have to suffer from the tortures of this particularly painful form of nervousness.

Musicians, of course, are the worst sufferers. The performer on a stringed instrument is helpless if his hand trembles, while the clear enunciation of a singer can be ruined by that "catch in the throat" or that twitching of the lips which is perhaps the simplest and most common manifestation of stage fright.

Greater Than Edison.

"Who is that man who is being cheered by the crowds?" asked the stranger.

"That is John Smith," replied the bystander.

"What did he ever do?" asked the stranger.

"He invented the noiseless phonograph," replied the bystander.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

MAKING A PROFIT FROM THE SHEEP FARM

Good for Wool and Mutton.

(By ELMER HENDERSON.)

Much has been written and said of the enormous profits to be made from the keeping of a few sheep on the corn-belt farm. Some have figured that it costs from $2 to $3 per year to keep a sheep and that the fleece would just about pay that. Others, pessimists, say, that the losses from keeping sheep are so heavy that there is absolutely no profit, due to the ravages of disease, vermin and internal parasites. Between these two will be found the middle way that seems to catch the bulk of the sheep raisers.

As a working basis let us take pasture. Pasture is at once the best and the most economical sheep feed known. An acre of grass according to the country standard will support one cow or its equal in weight of other grazing animals. In other words an acre of good pasture land will maintain 1,000 pounds of cow, sheep or horse flesh. The average cow will weigh, say, 1,000 pounds. This means that an acre of land will furnish nourishment for eight ewes during the entire pasture period of six months. If the land rents at $8 per acre, as it does in this part of Illinois, we have the cost of maintaining one ewe as $1 per summer.

We may count clover hay as a standard winter feed, and given plenty of nice clean clover hay, no other feed is needed. Our field of clover hay in the corn belt for two cuttings is about three tons per acre. On good farms the yield is more, but we may take this as representative. Three tons of hay per acre, means 6,000 pounds of clover, counting that each sheep will eat three pounds of hay daily, which is a big allowance; eight sheep fed 180 days, three pounds per day, will eat considerably less than what one acre will yield. In fact an acre of land worth $8 per acre will furnish enough hay to feed at least 10 head of sheep. Cost per head 80 cents.

If we allow one-half of oats daily during the months of February, March and April, before the ewes are on pasture, while suckling lambs, the cost will be 45 cents at the price of oats at present. In conclusion it may be safely said that the cost of maintaining a herding ewe in the corn-belt farm would be about $2.25, exclusive of the labor involved, which the good farmer is glad to give in exchange for the manure he secures.

If the flock gives a 10-pound clip, which any well-managed flock should do, it is readily apparent that the fleece will pay for the sheep's keep.

In good sympathetic flocks ewes will raise an average of from one and one-quarter to one and one-half lamb per ewe. Place it conservatively at one lamb per ewe, worth at weaning time ewe will weigh, say 125 pounds. This means that an acre of land will furnish nourishment for eight ewes during the entire pasture period of six months, and bring a return of $8 per acre, as it does in this part of Illinois, we have the cost of maintaining one ewe as $1 per summer.

In making the spraying mixture use about one-half pound of paris green and one pound of lime to 50 gallons of water. In spraying potatoes, for instance, which are frequently affected with blight or fungous disease, one pound of paris green is added to 50 gallons of Bordeaux mixture. Bordeaux mixture is made by dissolving four pounds of copper sulphate and five pounds of water. These two mixtures work well together, killing insects and fungous diseases at the same time and hence a saving of labor in spraying.

Paris green may be dusted on plants with cheesecloth bags or ordinary powder bellows. It may be applied either pure or diluted, but it is best to dilute with twenty to one hundred parts of lime, air slacked or land plaster, before applying, according to the nature of the plants treated. Even weaker solutions should be used where the parts dusted are to be used for food. In the treatment of cabbage use but one ounce of the poison to ten pounds of lime or plaster.

Paris green may be used in the form of a spray or dust for killing noxious insects on fruit trees. Spray with a strong poison and insects are killed with it. Sucking insects such as the true bugs and plant lice are not killed by poisons but by sprays that blister their bodies or by substances that stop up their breathing pores.

When used as a spray the paris green should first be made into a paste by adding a little water and then adding the proper quantity of water. It is always advisable to add also twice the weight of poison of fresh slacked lime in order to render insoluble any free arsenic that may be present and so prevent burning of foliage. The poison is used in an insoluble form, or as nearly so as it is possible to render it, hence the water must be kept thoroughly agitated in order that the power may remain perfectly suspended in the liquid. If the powder is allowed to settle at the bottom of the vessel that portion will be much concentrated and likely to burn the plants, while the top liquid will have very little value as an insecticide.

Make a clean finish of the business while you are about it. See that all the stacks are well topped and standing up straight when the work is done, then run three good wires around every stack-yard and save doing it when you turn in on the meadow for fall pasturage.

This is also the best time you'll ever have for putting away the hay tools. The intense hot weather following the hay harvest knocks out as much machinery as the work just finished; then the damp fall weather puts a rusty coat on it which about ruins it.

EXCELLENT HINTS DURING HAY TIME

Make All Necessary Preparations Before Work Actually Starts —Take Care of Tools.

(By M. COVERDELL.)

Don't begin haying and make preparations afterward.

See that every hay tool is in prime working order and good repair.

Fill every oil cup and bearing and wipe off before attempting to turn a wheel.

It is only fair that the household help be as plentiful and efficient as is the help in the fields.

A sunshade for the driver while mowing may cause some unkind remarks, but it was never known to cause a sunstroke.

Lay in a full supply of repairs now; don't wait until the breakage occurs and stops a dollar-a-minute haying crew while you drive to town for repairs.

Don't buy repair rake-teeth already shaped up when you can saw out two of them yourself from a 2 by 6, and save at least one-half what you would be charged for the shaped teeth.

Good, keen sickles leave a smooth mown meadow; save all the grease you wear the machine out less than dull sickles, and greatly lighten the load of the teams.

A water jug with the juice of a lemon or two squeezed into it, beats any of the so-called stimulants many farmers are coming to make use of every year during the hay harvest.

The lemon juice diminishes the thirst, while the stimulants increase it.

A damp handkerchief worn in the crown of the hat adds to one's comfort and guards against sunstroke.

Rushing the team and the men is a most successful plan for running up a big repair bill or a dangerous sunstroke.

Make a clean finish of the business while you are about it. See that all the stacks are well topped and standing up straight when the work is done, then run three good wires around every stack-yard and save doing it when you turn in on the meadow for fall pasturage.

This is also the best time you'll ever have for putting away the hay tools. The intense hot weather following the hay harvest knocks out as much machinery as the work just finished; then the damp fall weather puts a rusty coat on it which about ruins it.

PARIS GREEN USED IN SUMMER GARDEN

Much Can Be Saved by the Judicious Use of the Poison for Killing Insects.

At this time of the year summer garden crops are growing and much can be saved by the judicious use of paris green for killing noxious insects. Paris green is a strong poison and insects are killed with it. Sucking insects such as the true bugs and plant lice are not killed by poisons but by sprays that blister their bodies or by substances that stop up their breathing pores.

When used as a spray the paris green should first be made into a paste by adding a little water and then adding the proper quantity of water. It is always advisable to add also twice the weight of poison of fresh slacked lime in order to render insoluble any free arsenic that may be present and so prevent burning of foliage. The poison is used in an insoluble form, or as nearly so as it is possible to render it, hence the water must be kept thoroughly agitated in order that the power may remain perfectly suspended in the liquid. CLEVER LIFE-SAVING DEVICE

Permits the Comforts of a Steam Heated Flat While Being Tossed About on Ocean.

Berlin.—A life-saving device which permits the comforts of a steam-heated flat while being tossed about on the ocean wave has been introduced by Herr Heinrich, a German engineer.

Arrangement is also made by which the occupant of the buoy can steer his craft and thus be able to make some headway if cast off near land.

The apparatus is shaped like a skittle. Canvas constitutes the central part of two sleeves into which the castaway may slip his arms and thus use them as oars.

The lower part is a bucket which fills with water and keeps the apparatus in a vertical position, while the top has a sliding glass door. Inside the bag may be equipped with food tablets and water bottles.

TITLED WOMAN IN GUTTER

English Temperance Workers Tries Vainly to Reform Outcast Found in London Streets.

London. — The Bristol Midnight Sweep brigade is a body of temperance workers who scour the streets after the public houses are closed seeking to gather inebriates into their net.

The catches vary from two or three to 150, and the brigade conveys its captures to the meeting house, and tells the work of conversion is begun. J. T. Nowell, the secretary, in an interview with a London Chronicle representative, said it was found to be very depressing work, but they had been able to get a fair percentage of the men and women to reform their habits.

Into their net had come a number of university men, and one night they captured a woman who was entitled to call herself "Lady." She seemed to be in the very lowest depth, having become a common tramp. "We had no influence with Lady ——, whatever," said Mr. Nowell, "and she left the hall to go on the tramp again. The brigade took a great deal of trouble over this woman, and it was our private inquiries that led to discovery of her identity as a lady of title.

KIND COUPLE GET REWARD

Good Will and Courtesy to "Beggar" Results in Bequest to Them by Him of $8,000.

Sunburg, Pa.—For their "kindness and self-sacrifice" Mr. and Mrs. George Smith inherit nearly $8,000 under the will of John Fell, eighty-five, of Northumberland. The will was probated shortly before relatives of Fell arrived at Northumberland to contest the document.

Fell, who was believed to be almost penniless, went to the home of the Smiths and asked for shelter. He said he was friendless, that he felt ill and believed he was going to die.

Although the Smiths had only one bed they gave it to the old man and themselves slept on the floor.

The next day Mrs. Smith said Fell gave her a check for $507 on a Northumberland bank and $55 in cash. Before he died he made a will leaving to the Smiths his entire estate, said to consist of $7,000 in a Williamsburg bank and stocks valued at $850.

WOMAN SLAYS FOUR LIONS

Wife of Railroad Official Makes Big Killing in South Africa During His Absence.

London.—The South African mail brings a story of how Mrs. Delaporte, wife of an official of the Delagoa railroad, bagged four lions in a few minutes. In her husband's absence she received word that lions had killed an antelope a few miles away. Accompanied by two natives Mrs. Delaporte found six lions devouring their prey. She killed two before they realized their danger, a third while it was escaping, and the fourth, which attempted to charge, she stopped with a bullet in the eye at a distance of eight yards. The other two got away because her ammunition was exhausted.

AWOKE THE HUNTER INSTINCT

Alert Traveler Evidently Imagined Providence Had Thrown "Game" Within His Reach.

Gilbert Parker, the English author, tells of an English gentleman, who recently came to this country to visit some friends in California. In common with most travelers he supposed game was plentiful everywhere in that state, so he carried with him the necessary guns and ammunition.

"As his train neared San Bernardino—before making the mountain climb—there was a delay. Several hours passed, and still the train remained stationary; and our traveler friend grew restive, and sought the porter of the Pullman car to ascertain the cause of the delay.

"It seems that in mounting the grade a freight train had broken apart, the rear portion having descended the grade and blocked the track. The porter informed him of the accident to the freight train, and said, 'There is a caboose on the track.'

"Immediately the hunter instinct was awakened; hastening to his berth, he procured his gun and started for the door saying:

"'Show it to me! Show it to me!'"

Oh, That Way!

"It's such a silly superstition to be always picking up pins!"

"You may call it a superstition if you wish, but I know a chap who makes about $8 a week by doing it."

An Apposite Choice.

Bishop Evans Tyree at a dinner in Nashville was asked if he had any idea of preaching on the new fashions—the backless evening gown, slashed skirt, and so forth.

"No," said the bishop; "such an idea has not occurred to me. If, however, I should preach on the new fashions I would assuredly choose my text from Revelation."

SYNOPSIS.

Ralph Van Vechten, a young man of wealth, is astonished to see a man enter No. 113, a house across the street from the downstairs club, long unoccupied and spoken of as the House of Mystery. Several persons at regular intervals enter No. 113. Van Vechten expresses concern to his friend, Tom Phinney, regarding the whereabouts of his cousin and fiancee, Paige Carew. A man is forcibly ejected from the house. Van Vechten and Phinney follow the man and find him dead in the street. Van Vechten is attracted by the face of a girl in the crowd of onlookers surrounding the body. Detective Flint calls on Van Vechten to get his version of the tragedy. Tom Phinney goes alone on a yachting trip. He passes among others a passing motor boat, two men from which he hears exclaim: "The House of Mystery. We seen one of them, a Mr. Callis." Van Vechten is a member of Tom's yacht, Blindfolded and taken to a house, a girl's voice is heard. Later from against the roughness of his captors. Van Vechten, his man in Wall street, and known as the "Man of Iron," in search of information regarding the whereabouts of Paige Carew. Detective Flint shows Van Vechten a gold mesh purse found in the House of Mystery. Van recognizes it as belonging to Paige Carew. The purse contained a letter to Miss Carew and her companion, Miss Devereaux, called for New York some time mysteriously. Van Vechten meets the ladies visited the English home of Temple Bonner, owner of the House of Mystery. It is recalled that Temple Bonner was in love with a daughter of Compton Schuyler who married Max Willard. The other daughter married a man named Devereaux. Bonner and Willard were intimate friends. A search is started for Willard. Van Vechten enters the House of Mystery by the back door in time to hear John Callis threaten a girl. He interferes and has the girl escape, but is rendered unconscious in the struggle with Callis. Tom Phinney, back from his cruise as master of Brownlowe's yacht Kohinur, which has been chartered for some mysterious purpose, meets Van Vechten at the island, and his friends board the yacht at once and hear the story of the unknown girl. Van Vechten, recovering from the blow received, tells Phinney that Callis is visited by Jessie Willard in which he recognizes the girl as the cause of the fight. He declares his love for Miss Carew. Phinney tells Van Vechten that he could see week from that day she will marry him. A coffin-shaped box is taken aboard the yacht at night. Callis tells Tom and Van Vechten that Paige Carew is dead and that she has been interested in him for years. Tom leaves the yacht, accompanied by Van Vechten.

BOOK III.

CHAPTER IX.

A Disappearance.

If Miss Carew had planned to overwhelm Capt. Tom Phinney with amazement at her disclosure, she must have been eminently well pleased with the result; in point of fact, she made no effort to conceal her amazement; but in a moment a change came over him that at first startled and next dismayed her, for something had happened that she had not foreseen and could not comprehend now.

First of all it occurred to him, that if this was Paige Carew, then nothing whatever had happened to her, because Callis was mistaking for that she was a free agent; there could be, therefore, no clash of interests, or else—if the alternative were true—she was allied with Max Willard and against her uncle and guardian, and against her cousin and—her betrothed! This was the flash of memory that left him stricken.

But in any event, doubt of the regularity of Willard's enterprise was definitely removed, and the mystery became fraught with a deeper and a subtler significance than he had dreamed of. It was not for him to meddle with.

But, Ruddy—how narrowly Tom had escaped treachery to their friendship!

"God! How I Do Love You!"

It was an unspeakably bitter moment for him; but by degrees he assumed a certain dignity that was new to the girl, and it promptly dampened her merry humor.

"Captain Phinney—Tom!" she exclaimed. "What is it? What have I done?"

He smiled a bit wistfully.

"You? Nothing. All that has happened is that I've made a natural born damned fool of myself—as I usually do where women are concerned."

She stared at him blankly, uncomprehendingly.

"Honor bright," she presently declared, "I do not understand. I cannot see why you should be so affected."

He reached forward with a quick, impulsive motion and caught one of her wrists.

"I suppose it means nothing to you that I have learned to love you. I suppose it means nothing to you that you are the fiancee of my best friend, and that I must give you up. I suppose it means nothing to you that I will keep right on loving you because I can't help myself, but must put on a grin to hide it from him—from everybody. God! How I do love you! I have the satisfaction, anyhow, of knowing that you know it."

Her regard had remained steadfastly locked with his throughout this impassioned tirade, nor did it waver now. Gently she told him:

"You are hurting me, Tom."

In a swift revulsion of feeling, he dropped her hand.

"Forgive me!" he begged. "I am beside myself. A fellow can't get used to a thing like this all in a minute. But, believe me, Miss Carew, I'll never bother you again. It's all been like a fairy dream—from the second I first heard your voice as I stood blindfolded before you; when you came to me where I lay helpless in the dark, and yet could not see your face; when you led me out into the night and left me, still blindfolded; when we came face to face here—well, it seems that I have been blindfolded all along until this moment; but I don't want to forget a single detail of my dream. Now, I am awake——"

She surprised him with an abrupt cry of impatience, emphasized with a stamp of one foot. Her eyes were snapping.

"Tom Phinney! Stop that sort of talk. You make me tired!"

"Pardon me." He bowed politely. "I have nothing more to say."

"Well, I have." All at once her voice broke. "You are the stupidest, most exasperating man I ever knew! And I—I—don't know whether to laugh or—or cry!" And doing both, she darted suddenly from the room.

Miss Carew had not been gone a minute before the stranger he had accosted the previous day appeared in the doorway.

"Can I have a word with you, captain?" he asked.

Tom was impatient of any interruption just at this juncture. He favored the intruder with a scowl and bluntly asked him what he wanted.

The man stepped inside and closed the door.

"I have learned," said he, "that no one is allowed to go ashore; I don't pretend to know why the orders are strict—they are strict, however hurriedly, and I would like to send a message to my people. Would there be any objection to that?"

The fellow's manner was furtive and clandestine, and Tom was a bit puzzled. Before he could reply, the other drew a sealed envelope from his pocket and laid it on the table, and upon this he laid a ten-dollar bill.

"Whoever takes that letter ashore," said the man, "and finds a trustworthy messenger who will deliver it right away, can split the ten-spot with him; a fiver's not picked up for an hour's easy work every day, but it's worth something to keep one's folks from worrying."

Sweeping aside the bill, Tom mechanically picked up the envelope and glanced at it.

"Why, that start or daisy by any sign that the address gave him a distinct shock of surprise; his susceptibilities were become calloused to any fresh sensations of this nature; but nevertheless he was startled to find that the name upon the envelope was none other than Mr. Phineas Flint's. The street number which Tom could not distinctly see was police headquarters.

"My uncle," explained the man, glibly.

Very carefully Tom replaced the envelope and upon top of it the bill; then he leaned back and fixed the man with a look.

"See here," he demanded with absolute authority, "just how do you come to be on this yacht, anyway?"

The man's countenance expressed astonishment. "Hasn't Mr. Willard told you?" he asked.

"It makes no difference what Mr. Willard has told me—I'm asking you."

This abrupt manner left the man unruffled.

"Why, it was this way," he said easily. "My uncle learned Thursday that Mr. Willard was in town, looking for a young man to take the place of somebody that had been hurt; I was wanting a job, and he put me wise to it. Mr. Willard was in something of a hurry, and it didn't take us long to strike a bargain."

This explanation was illuminating. It required but a second's reflection to array the whole thing clear in Tom's mind and at the same time definitely fix the man's status.

Flint at last had struck Willard's trail; the latter's urgent need to find a man to take Callis' place had in some manner come to the detective's ears, and he had been quick to take advantage of it. Flint knew in a general way what Willard wanted, and had hastily picked a Central office man that would fill the requirements. Manifestly he had had no time to post him; he was expected to communicate with Flint as soon as the quarry was located—hence the letter.

Tom was guided to a speedy decision by several considerations. To antagonize this man might mean the upsetting of Willard's plans at the very moment of their fulfilment; to retain his good will would leave a representative of the adverse interests on the premises, who could frustrate Willard if the latter's schemes really were to interfere. It would be the detective's role to wait and watch, and as John Callis' substitute he would be given excellent opportunities to learn what was going on.

"Sit down," said Tom presently. As the man obeyed, he stood up and, thrusting his hands into his jacket pockets, coolly surveyed the other.

"It happens," he went on, "that I know 'your uncle' pretty well myself." The man gave him a quick, sharp glance, but said nothing. "I would advise you not to attempt to send that letter ashore. It's my opinion that you can serve Flint's ends better by doing just what Willard has employed you to do, and by trying not to excite Willard's suspicions. You will earn a thousand dollars, won't you?"

"So Willard promised," returned the man.

"You may depend on it," Tom assured him. "I have known for some time that Flint was looking for Willard—and more especially for John Callis——"

The detective sharply interjected:

"He's on this yacht right now—disabled. That's why you happen to be here; you were hired to take his place. I'll see to it that he doesn't get away from you. Strikes me you have opportunities that old Flint would appreciate."

The man no longer tried to dissemble.

"I see that you have me spotted all right. Cornelius is my name. What's the game? Phineas had no time to put me wise."

"He couldn't have told you so very much," replied Tom—"little more than I can myself. I am not in Willard's confidence, but I have the best reasons for knowing that whatever it is he's up to, it is strictly on the level."

"H'm-m-m," Cornelius mused, "that makes my position a bit difficult, doesn't it?"

"Not particularly so. All you have to do is play fair. If anything crooked shows up you can count on my indorsement. My orders are strict about going and coming, and you couldn't expect me to make an exception of you, Flint or anybody else. On my side, I shall say nothing to Willard about you."

Cornelius picked up both bill and letter, returning the first to his pocket and tearing the second into tiny bits.

"Flint will be all up in the air over not hearing from me," he remarked; "but if I can't, I can't. You have the dead-wood on me now. Have you any idea what's in that box they brought aboard last night?"

"Not the slightest," returned Tom.

"It looked a whole lot like a coffin." Tom shrugged and lighted his pipe, while Mr. Cornelius sat and watched him intently. As the same idea had occurred to the first-named, he could not disparage it now. Cornelius broke the silence:

"Coffins, you know, are only used when there are dead people to put in them. Any cadavers around here that you've noticed?"

"You're a nice cheerful chap, believe me," retorted Tom. "No, there are none. It can't be Callis, because he's getting well—saw him less than an hour ago."

"Just suppose," Cornelius went on meditatively, "that Willard is expecting somebody to die—at a given time, say——"

"Hang it all!" Tom cut in. "You don't think the man is plotting deliberate murder, do you?"

Cornelius did not say what he thought. He sat considering.

"Well," he said at last, rising, "I guess I'll have to take your word for it that everything is all right until I see different." But a coffin"—he shook his head dubiously—"it don't look good to me." Whereupon he took his departure.

Shortly after nightfall Tom saw Willard and the man Cornelius board the launch and go ashore, and he watched them with a quickened sense of anticipation.

"If that sleuth is worth a darn," he reflected, "now is his chance to get word to Flint."

He did not witness their return, but about an hour later he had a glimpse of Cornelius and one of the other young men, garbed in soiled and worn overalls and jumpers, like a pair of stevedores.

Somewhere around half-past nine, the coffin-shaped box once more appeared.

It makes no difference what Mr. Willard has told you—I'm asking you."

This abrupt manner left the man unruffled.

"Why, it was this way," he said easily. "My uncle learned Thursday that Mr. Willard was in town, looking for a young man to take the place of somebody that had been hurt; I was wanting a job, and he put me wise to it. MAKING HARBOR OF REFUGE

Congress Plans to Rob Cape Hatteras, to a Large Extent, of Its Perils.

"Gale off Hatteras" is an entry made by the captains of coastwise sailing ships on almost every voyage. For years Hatteras has been a place of terror, if not to the mariner, certainly to the passengers under his charge. The old storm cape, however, is soon to lose a part of its fear. Man cannot stop the storms, but he is going to provide for vessels to escape their fury.

Sea captains notoriously are reticent when passengers ask them questions. No old sailor ever has been willing to admit to any of his passengers that Hatteras is any worse than a hundred other places on the coast, and yet he knows that it is about as bad a sea spot as can be found anywhere in the whole broad expanse of ocean. So, while the questioners are told that off Hatteras the water will be as calm as anywhere else, captain and crew always make things ready for a gale or worse when approaching the sea off the headland.

Congress has appropriated $1,400,000 for preliminary work on a Hatteras sea wall, which is to be a mile and a half long, 20 feet wide at the top, and 45 feet high.

It will be the guarding wall of a harbor of refuge, into the lee of which vessels can run for shelter when the storms rage. This wall will rob the Hatteras seas of some of their terrors, and with them will pass some of the entertaining excitement now felt by seagoers when they approach the water zone which always has been one of tumult.

Little by little man is trying to make safer the journeys of those who go down to the sea in ships. He never entirely can conquer the ocean, and he knows it. It is perhaps the one thing in nature which is absolutely untamable.

The shipwrecks off Cape Hatteras have numbered thousands. The sea wall will provide means to save lives and property, but the winds off the old storm cape still will rage and on occasion work their will.

FURNISHED BOND OF AMITY

Discomfited "Good Samaritan" the Unwilling Means of Bringing Rival Humorists Together.

Once upon a time two humorists dwelt in the same small town and both contributed to the Sunday Star. As was but natural, they became wildly jealous of each other, and when one would win a little more prominence than his fellow the other would have seven kinds of fits. "Your Pleasant Valley Items give me a pain!" quoth one. "Your prose rhymes make me ill!" retorted the other. As they were about to come to blows there appeared on the scene a Good Samaritan and to him they appealed. "Which of us is the funnier?" they asked. "Neither!" was the prompt reply. "You are both as unfunny as wart hogs, and as tiresome as a trip across the Sahara!" Thereat they both set upon the gentleman from Samaria and beat him full sore, and dwelt together in amity forever after.

Moral: From this we should learn that while humorists delight in quarreling among themselves, they frequently resent criticism from outsiders.—Kansas City Star.

Marriage Causes False Fire Alarm.

Seven minutes of blasts from the whistle of the Passaic Metalware company, in honor of the marriage of the daughter of the superintendent, recently turned out five volunteer fire departments. The fog made the whistle audible in Rutherford, Nutley, Belleville, Garfield and Clifton and the firemen rushed to headquarters at the alarm.

It took half an hour to determine where the whistling came from. The wedding which caused the commotion united Miss Sallie Karp, 217 Brook avenue, Passaic, to Michael F. Bernan.—New York Mail.

WRONG BREAKFAST. Change Gave Rugged Health.

Many persons think that for strength, they must begin the day with a breakfast of meat and other heavy foods. This is a mistake as anyone can easily discover for himself.

A W. Va. carpenter's experience may benefit others. He writes:

"I used to be a very heavy breakfast eater but finally indigestion caused me to change. I became afraid to eat anything.

"My wife suggested a trial of Grape-Nuts and as I had to eat something or starve, I concluded to take her advice. She fixed me up a dish and I remarked at the time that the quality was all right, but the quantity was too small—I wanted a saucerful.

"But she said a small amount of Grape-Nuts went a long way and that I must eat it according to directions. So I started in with Grape-Nuts and cream, two soft boiled eggs and some crisp toast for breakfast.

"I cut out meats and a lot of other stuff I had been used to eating all my life and was gratified to see that I was getting better right along. I concluded I had struck the right thing and stuck to it. I had not only been eating improper food, but too much.

"I was working at the carpenter's trade at that time and thought that unless I had a hearty breakfast with plenty of meat, I would play out before dinner. But after a few days of my 'new breakfast' I found I could do more work, felt better in every way, and now I am not bothered with indigestion."
