Out of Quarantine.

The smallpox scare is over and everybody in the community is glad. Its baneful shadow has been over us for weeks, affecting business and keeping everybody in a state of apprehension. On Thursday, June 15, Dr Towne, representing the state board of health, arrived here in response to a request from the village board, to investigate a disease which prevailed in our midst, and which Dr Wilson had pronounced smallpox Dr Towne pronounced it a mild type of smallpox and advised a system of quarantine, which has been rigidly enforced. The quarantine went into effect on Friday, June 16th, and was raised from the hospital on Friday, August 11th. During the run of the scourge forty-two persons have been afflicted, most of them having a very mild attack, but a half dozen patients were quite sick and come out of it badly marked. Dr. Towne recommended vaccination and as a rule the people fell in with the recommendation—our local physicians performing the operation for nearly 200 persons on the first Sunday following the quarantine. The village authorities have been energetic, and the citizens generally have been faithful is maintaining the quarantine. In fact, to A C Boyd and his fellow-members of the board, and to our two physicians too much praise cannot be given for the practical and intelligent manner in which they handled the dreadful disease, preventing its spread and wiping it out before cold weather is upon us; when the disease is much more malignant. Some idea of its expensiveness may be gained from the following bills which have been presented to and allowed by the board:

W G Lyman, tents	$ 15 00
C Mitchel, tent	4 00
C Brock, tent	4 00

Telephone company	3 20
Total	$539 23
Property on hand	50 00
Net cost	$489 23

The claims marked with an * are unsettled and may increase the expense when they are finally settled.

These bills simply represent those for which the board is responsible, and it may be easily assumed that it forms but a small proportion of the actual cost. But it is over now and we are glad of it, and thankful that it was no worse.

The fire boys deserve great praise for the way they worked at the fire last Thursday night. Every man waited for orders and when they were given, obeyed with rapidity and precision. In times of fire the citizens are asked to place themselves until orders of the fire chief, as the fire company is but a nucleus around which effective workers are expected to gather. Another thing, it is expected the citizens will take buckets with them in time of fire, as it may be necessary to form long lines and the two dozen buckets of the company would be inadequate. By observing these two requests the danger of damage from fire will be greatly lessened.

Salt in Bodies of Water.

According to the latest survey, the Great Salt Lake is about 100 miles long, with an average width of from twenty-five to thirty miles, though in some places its width is from fifty to sixty miles, and the greatest depth is found to be some sixty feet. Its waters contain nearly 18 per cent solid matter, mostly salt and soda, with small proportions of sulphur, lithia and boracic acid. It is a well-known fact that Atlantic ocean water holds but 3.5 per cent of solid material, of which salt constitutes 2.6 per cent. In the Asiatic Dead sea the water contains 23 per cent of solids, including less salt and soda and much more magnesia, calcium and potassium than Salt lake.

POYNTER AT 'FRISCO.

REVIEW OF HIS VISIT TO THE FIRST NEBRASKA.

Some Fake Interviews—Soldiers of the Regiment Disappear When the Governor Appeared in Camp—Cheers Made to Order.

The story of the popocratic "reception" of the soldier boys at San Francisco, and of the fake interviews that were published in an Omaha paper, is too good to be kept from the public and with the aid of the local press of the Pacific coast the Journal is able to give a review of the whole business.

The governor and his colleagues had informed all the 'Frisco papers that they had arranged a fine reception for the boys. They had chartered a tug and a brass band, and would be the first ones to greet the soldier boys and welcome them home.

The Hancock entered the harbor at 10:30 and anchored off Meig's wharf, about 300 yards out in the stream at 10:40. This was forty minutes after midnight by Lincoln time. At 11 o'clock by Pacific time C. O. Whedon, chairman of the state reception committee, accompanied by Judge Ryan and the Journal correspondent were down at Meig's wharf negotiating for a small boat to take them out to the steamer. The San Francisco Chronicle thus describes the visit:

"The untimely arrival of the transport upset all the plans of the visiting delegation of friends and officials from Utah and Nebraska, who for days had been perfecting elaborate preparations for the reception of the men. Tugs and launches had been chartered in advance for the purpose, and the governor of Nebraska had planned, with all care and detail, to be the first person to step aboard the Hancock and welcome the brave heroes from his state back to American soil. But there were no reception committee on hand to extend the warm hand-grasp and bid the boys to hearty welcome. None of the several official or unofficial reception committees carried out the plans of boarding the vessel upon her arrival, and only one small delegation of Nebraska people, headed by C. O. Whedon of Lincoln and Judge Ryan of the same place, ventured out upon the bay. The quarantine and customs regulations prevented them from getting near the deck of the ship than the approach of the gangplank.

"The first man to grasp the hand of a returning Nebraska volunteer was C. O. Whedon, a prominent attorney of Lincoln, Neb., whose son, Burt Whedon, is first lieutenant and adjutant of the regiment. Whedon, Judge Robert Ryan of Lincoln and F. A. Harrison, correspondent of an Omaha paper, went out to the Hancock in a small boat.

"The men at the rail passed the word that 'Whedon's dad' was alongside and the lieutenant was aroused and hurried up on deck. In a trice the gang plank was lowered and young Whedon and his father shook hands under difficulties. This was not satisfactory and several soldiers assisted in hoisting Whedon sr., to the gangplank. Fear of bringing down the wrath of quarantine authorities prevented the Nebraskans from taking the adjutant's father on deck, and so the Whedon's stood at the foot of the gangplank and talked of home. Judge Ryan also has a son in the regiment, a member of company M, but the Ryans were not able to talk at close quarters. The son stood on the deck of the transport and the father in the Whitehall boat as they shouted greetings. The Omaha newspaper man had brought messages from relatives of Colonel Mulford and others, and, taken altogether, it was a glad reunion of Nebraskans.

"After a brief talk with his son, Whedon was lowered back into the Whitehall boat and went away, promising to return in the morning."

At the time this visit was made all the men had gone to quarters except a few sentries and sailors on the deck. The men and officers interviewed had to be called out of their bunks, and they all went back to bed when the Wheadon boat started for the shore. When Whedon and the others were getting in a carriage to go back to the city, the tug carrying Governor Poynter, Barry and the correspondent of an Omaha yellow journal came along bound for the Hancock. By this time the wind had risen, the waves were high and noisy, and the tug did not get within seventy-five feet of the ship. In the darkness the forms of half a dozen men could be seen on the deck. The Chronicle thus describes the visit of the governor's tug:

"It was nearly 1 o'clock in the morning when Governor Poynter of Nebraska came alongside in a tug and called up to a few straggling nighthawks still lingering on deck that he was the governor of Nebraska come to welcome them and to announce a big reception awaited them in Lincoln."

This party got back to the shore just before 2 o'clock, which was nearly 4 o'clock in Omaha. The correspondent of the yellow journal landed and went to the telegraph office, where he asked if any answer had come from the query he had sent to his paper. He wanted to know if they "wanted any more." He had sent all his fake interviews before going out to the Hancock. There was not a word of truth in the statements about the men crowding the sides of the steamer, or about the "big corn crop in Nebraska," etc. The next morning not a man on the steamer could be found who knew that the governor had been out in his tug during the night. It was an example of a fake reception and fake journalism. The steamer was described as lying at anchor five miles distance from where it was really located. There are two quarantine stations at San Francisco and the yellow journal guessed at the wrong one.

The next morning the Whedon party again went out to the steamer, arriving there at 7:30. At 10 o'clock some Omaha parties came on board, but the governor forgot all about his tug and his brass band. The Nebraska people and the ladies of the Red Cross who had been invited to go along waited at the wharf for three hours, and were finally taken out to the steamer by the mayor of the city. The Chronicle account continues:

"At 10 o'clock in the forenoon the great vessel weighed anchor and headed down the bay for Folsom street pier to take her berth. Mayor Phelan, on the harbor commissioner's tug, Governor Irwin, accompanied by Mrs. Ada Van Pelt and several relatives of Nebraska officers, including Mrs. Eager, mother of the lieutenant colonel; Mrs. Snyder, wife of the Nebraska major, and Mrs. Wilson, wife of the captain of company M, along with Mayor S. White of Hebron, Neb., father of a private in company B, went also to the island, but had to turn about and put on extra steam to follow the transport back."

At noon the steamer was alongside the government wharf, and this is how the San Francisco paper describes the visit of Governor Poynter:

"Congressman Julius Kahn, accompaning Governor Poynter and his two associates from Nebraska, came down late in a carriage and went aboard for a short talk with some of the officers. The regular Nebraska reception commissioners had been out at the transport since 7:30 o'clock in the morning and mingled with the soldiers for several hours."

During the afternoon the governor remained away from the Hancock, and when he appeared the next morning he paid not a particle of attention to the private soldiers. They on their part totally ignored him. The governor road at the head of the procession in the parade through the city, and is thus described by the Chronicle:

"At the head of the Nebraskans rode two civilians abreast. The one resplendent in uniform was Adjutant General Barry of the state of Nebraska. The other, astride his Rosinante in the weary attitude of an old lady in a comfortable barrel-chair, was Governor Poynter, who vetoed his legislature's unanimous vote of thanks to the gallant regiment and who is out here personally to rectify that expensive political play made to the popocratic gallery at home."

Another local paper said the governor on horseback "resembled a country undertaker returning from a long trip."

On the arrival at the camp the regiment stood on parade and the governor made a short speech which was heard by those who stood nearby. At the close there was no movement toward applause, and the colonel gave the order for the men to cheer. They obeyed the order, but there was no enthusiasm in the cheer. Later in the day, and during the next day, the governor and his political friends wandered about the camp, but they seemed totally ignored by the soldiers. At the regimental headquarters they received courteous treatment, but there was no anxiety on the part of the officers to show them about the camp. When they appeared in a company street the men seemed to disappear, as a local paper put it, "like prairie dogs."

The large bundle of popocratic papers and documents were turned over to Lieutenant Colonel Eager, and were still lying in a tall heap on the floor of his tent last Wednesday when the governor got discouraged about the whole business and came home.

The above account of the governor's visit to the Pacific coast, as taken from the State Journal, is fully substantiated by the reports of the Associated press, and by word brought back by Nebraskans who were at San Francisco. The political visit of the pop trio was a rank fizzle. The governor, himself, now recognizes this fact, and has expressed himself as willing and anxious to follow the lead of the regular reception committee after this.

Revolving Toothbrush.

A revolving toothbrush has been invented by a West India lady. The brush portion is circular; it is attached to a handle that is spirally grooved and slides in a frame. By pressing the end of this handle, which projects beyond the frame, the brush revolves; on discontinuing the pressure the handle springs back to its normal position, causing a further revolution of the brush, and so the movement is maintained.

IT IS TELLING ON DREYFUS.

The Ronnes Prisoner's Signs of Nervousness Are Growing.

RENNES, France, Aug. 11.—The members of the Dreyfus court-martial to-day took the testimony of M. Chanoine and M. Paleologue. Chanoine was examined from half past 6 o'clock till half past 9 o'clock, and the latter was upon the stand from half past 9 till a quarter of 12 o'clock, when the court adjourned until to-morrow, when it will conclude the examination of the secret dossier.

The trial is telling severely on Dreyfus' health, and he shows considerable nervousness, the result of physical weakness, which is displayed at times as a form of stage fright. But this is not surprising, inasmuch as he is sick; sick enough to cause much anxiety on the part of his friends and the repeated attendance of a physician to bolster him up. He is disappointed in that his wife decided to remain away from the trial, as he depends on her for courage to face his accusers and their accusations.

Demange, Dreyfus' lawyer, is said to have full knowledge of the contents of the dossier now under examination by the court. The reason for secrecy does not arise from anything the dossier contains regarding Dreyfus. It is because certain documents or letters mention a scandal in which Schwartzkoppen, the Germany military attache, and Panizzardi, the Italian military attache, are alleged to be concerned. The name of the Countess de Munster, wife of the German ambassador, is also connected with that of another well-known woman of Paris.

In the United States such evidence as is furnished by the dossier would not be strong enough to bring a man into court.

DENOUNCE THE BOYCOTT.

Business Men of Cleveland Take a Hand in Strike Affair.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Aug. 11.—Five hundred business men of Cleveland held an anti-boycott meeting yesterday afternoon in the chamber of commerce rooms, and a fund of $10,000 was started to ferret out the criminals who are dynamiting cars and creating discord in the city. In a few minutes' time not less than $5,000 was subscribed. The meeting was largely attended, and it was a representative one in every respect.

Millions of dollars were represented in the men present. Vigorous speeches denouncing the boycott, strike disturbances and disorder were made by J. G. W. Cowles and James H. Hoyt. In their address they called attention to the lawless acts which have terrorized the public and uphold the course of Mayor Farley in his measures to suppress disorder, and said it was time for reputable citizens to unite and restore peace, quiet and safety to the city. A committee of five was then selected to bring about lawful conditions. A demand for a United States army military post in Cleveland was unanimously made and steps were taken to increase the police force of the city.

WIFE PLANNED THE MURDER.

A Confession of George Ray at Webb City Involves the Widow.

WEBB CITY, Mo., Aug. 11.—The preliminary examination of Ida Thornton for the murder of her husband, John Thornton, July 30, was begun yesterday in the opera house, 300 women being present in the great crowd. Only three witnesses were examined. George Ray testified that Mrs. Thornton coaxed him to murder her husband; that he rode Thornton's horse to the mine; that he shot Thornton and then cut his throat with a razor, after which he took $100 in cash, two certificates of deposit, and the now famous ring from the body. Ray is Mrs. Thornton's cousin, and an invalid and cannot live long. The concensus of opinion here is that Ray is innocent, but that Mrs. Thornton has him hypnotized and is using him to save herself.

In his confession to the officers Ray said that when he visited Mrs. Thornton in jail she slipped him a note which read:

"George: Give yourself up. Take everything on you—don't have me in it at all and I will see you out of it. My lawyers say you can get clear without any trouble."

DESPERATE WIFE'S CRIME.

Kills Her Drunken Husband and Her Daughter and Herself.

CANTON, Ohio, Aug. 11.—A terrible triple tragedy occurred three miles east of this city last night, resulting in the death of Edward Eckinger, his wife and their 3-year-old daughter, Mrs. Eckinger evidently first shot her husband and daughter with a shotgun and tried to commit suicide by gashing the veins in her wrist with a knife. The latter apparently proved too slow or else too painful, for the woman put a third charge in the gun and sent it through her heart. Eckinger was 25 years of age and a farm laborer. Lately he has been drinking quite freely and frequent quarrels took place between him and his wife. The couple had agreed to separate. Mrs. Eckinger was 23 years old.

Jail for Wife Murder.

WINFIELD, Kan., Aug. 11.—Mrs. Charles Fisher, wife of a farmer living near Atlanta, in the north part of this county, was shot and killed early yesterday morning, and circumstances indicate that the deed was done by her husband. The coroner's jury found Fisher guilty and he was arrested and brought to jail. She was shot in the forehead with a revolver, the flesh being powder burned. Fisher's story was that the shot was fired by a strange man, thirty feet away. Fisher is comparatively a stranger in the community and but little is known about him.

A Teacher Shot in Colorado.

ELIZABETH, Col., Aug. 11.—George W. Blazer, superintendent of the Elizabeth public schools, was shot and killed on the street last night. The murderer escaped. It is supposed that Blazer was shot by W. L. Holland, editor of the Elizabeth Eye, who has disappeared.

Alcohol for Automobiles.

The majority of motor cars are now driven by petroleum, but a French engineer recommends the use of alcohol instead of it, and motors are being altered so as to consume it. There is no fear of explosion with alcohol, and it is said to be less costly than petroleum. We might, therefore, paraphrase the national poet and say, "Put it in your cars to save your legs."

B. & O. Railroad Uses Crude Oil.

The Baltimore and Ohio railroad is now using crude oil on its tracks, though not so extensively as lines which do not use crushed stone for ballast. There are many road crossings, stations, etc., where dust flies after the passage of fast trains, and these places are being heavily coated with oil. So far the results have been gratifying.

Why is it that we are always most prone to dawdle when there is the greatest need of hurry?

If men only knew what a long way a little kindness goes with a woman they could take great journeys at very little expense.

The woman who has the most nautical attire for her voyage across the ocean is generally so ill that she has no chance to wear it.

Some women swear with their eyes when a man steps on their gowns, although they would be very much shocked at the imputation.

Some persons who are said to closely resemble us make us feel that a certain well-known expression, "double or quits," would be preferably the latter if the double in question really did closely resemble us.—Philadelphia Times.

How Bears Are Taught to Dance.

Any one who has observed a dancing bear has noticed that he makes only backward steps. The trainer raises the cord attached to the nose ring so high that the bear is forced to stand on his hind feet. Then the trainer steps heavily on one of these hind feet, which the bear at once lifts up and draws back. The process is repeated with the other foot, then again with the first, and so on throughout the lesson. After several lessons the bear begins to appreciate the advantage of raising his feet before they are stepped on, and so he begin his dance as soon as the cord is raised. With young bears some training and practice aren eed before they can even stand steadily on their hind legs.—New York Journal.

Depends Upon the Spout.

From e Kalamazoo elegraph: In the southwest portion of Jackson county five rivers have their rise. Three of them flow into Lake Michigan and two into Lake Erie. The Lake Michigan streams are the St. Joe, the Kalamazoo and the Grand river, which flows through this city. The others are the Raisin and the Huron. A queer circumstance in the water supply shows itself at Clark's lake, fourteen miles southwest of here. On one lot there may be seen a well with a wooden pump spout. Turn the spout to the east and the water will flow into the Raisin river, and then on into Lake Erie. Turn the spout to the west and the water will flow away into Grand river, and so on into Lake Michigan.

Rice Throwing Dangerous.

An example of the dangerous nature of the practice of throwing rice at weddings occurred at Charing, near Ashford, in Kent, immediately after the marriage of Canon Carter of Canterbury Cathedral, and Miss Sayer of Prett Place. Just as the couple were leaving the bride's house for their honeymoon a shower of rice struck the horses, some of it entering the ears. This caused them to bolt, with the result that the carriage was overturned. Both of its occupants were severely shaken and bruised, and the shock sustained by the lady was such that the honeymoon trip had to be temporarily abandoned.

IN SEARCH OF HIM

BY ROBIN GREY

"Have you a sister? I didn't know. What is her name?"

"Mary. I should like you to know her."

"And who is Miss Lilbourne? Does she live with you?"

"She is an orphan; my father and mother adopted her," said Bernard, his eyes fixed upon the sketch.

"Is she pretty?" asked Mildred in her slow, direct way.

"Yes—very."

"And she won't sit still when you ask her? How very unkind!"

"Oh, she was always very busy, you know!" said Bernard in some confusion. "The girls had always plenty to do, but, thanks to old Miss Selwyn, that's over now."

The sketch finished, he showed it to Lady Mildred, who was evidently much struck.

"How clever you are to do so much with so few touches! I should like to show it to my father. Will you, Mr. Stelling—Selwyn, I mean—be so kind as to give it to me?"

"I had meant to keep it," he said hesitatingly, "as a remembrance of one of those golden days which don't come twice, but I'll make a bargain with you, Lady Mildred."

"A bargain?"

"You shall have this sketch if you will give me your photograph. I have one photograph of you."

"Indeed!"

"Yes, but it was taken a long time back. You gave it to me at Oxford. It doesn't do you justice now. May I have another?"

"Well, I think that it would be only fair," she assented. "A photo of me is after all a poor return for this clever little sketch."

"Lady Mildred!"

"Nay, I mean to pay a compliment—not to fish for one, I assure you."

He leaned against the tree thoughtfully for a minute or two, and there was a brief silence.

"It is growing cooler," he said at last. "Come down to the water and I will row you about."

"It will remind me of Commemoration!" she said merrily, as he helped her out of the hammock.

"Your brother tells me that Mr. Martineau, of the firm of Leroy & Martineau, is your cousin, Lady Mildred," he remarked, as they walked together through the park to the water.

"Yes, he is," she answered, without raising her head.

"It is strange. He has the management of some business for Miss Lilbourne."

"Indeed! Did she go to him by chance?"

"Quite by chance. She says he is very kind and painstaking. I shall be glad to meet him."

"I can't fancy Valdane a solicitor," she said, laughing. "He is so essentially a society man."

Bernard saw that he had started an unwelcome topic. He adroitly changed the subject.

The water was the great feature of the Clarisdale estate. It was a beautiful irregular-shaped lake, with a small island in the middle, much used for picnics. Bernard thought there might be many worse ways of spending a summer afternoon than sculling idly in the shade of the great trees, on the glassy surface of the water, with Lady Mildred's proud, sweet face before him, shaded by her wide-brimmed hat.

A long silence fell upon both during the latter part of that row, and as they walked slowly home together under a saffron-colored evening sky they hardly spoke at all. Lady Mildred was thinking that her companion, with twenty thousand a year to back him, was more than endurable. Bernard was wishing that Marguerite could have the advantage of a few lessons in the art of dress from Lady Mildred.

He wished so even more when her ladyship walked into the drawing-room some time later, her clear-cut face and pliant figure set off by amethyst-colored plush, which caught the light on all its rippling folds.

She was conscious, as she entered, that she was looking at that moment as beautiful as it was in her power to look, but nothing in her perfect manners betrayed the thought. She crossed the room slowly, purposely stopping on the way to replace some flowers which had fallen from a vase. As she turned again, her glance fell upon a gentleman who stood on the white fur hearthrug, talking to her father. A sudden change passed over the face which before had been only beautiful. No other man ever carried himself with such careless grace as this man. As he stood, only the back of his head visible, she knew that it was Valdane; her breath came more quickly, her heart beat faster at the thought. She stood perfectly still, her eyes fixed upon him. Then he turned slowly round, saw her, and at once came forward. She moved not an inch, but remained where she was, the brilliantly lighted room bringing out every point of her beauty.

Their hands met, and in that moment she knew that he was changed.

He looked ill and worn, but in her eyes a thousandfold more lovable. His greeting was cordial, but it lacked the delightful tone of mutual understanding. Almost in terror she scanned his face for the wherefore, but found it not.

"I did not know that you had come," she said.

"I arrived two or three hours ago. They told me you were somewhere in the grounds, so I went to look for you—as far as the lake-side. Then I came back; you were being well entertained and did not want me."

Lady Mildred's ebbing spirits came rushing back in swift flow. She thought she had a key now to his cold greeting and worn appearance. It was love of her, she thought, which was telling upon him; she had accomplished her object, she had made Valdane jealous.

CHAPTER XI.

Bernard Selwyn had persuaded the doctor and his family to go to the seaside. It was a treat which they had never before enjoyed, and great was their delight at the prospect. The doctor, to whom a holiday had hitherto meant no more than the space of time between Friday and Tuesday, now procured another doctor to do his work for him and prepared for a couple of months' relaxation. They were very happy. Bernard, they all agreed, had behaved remarkably well; he had shown such thought and consideration. He was not at all unduly elated at his prosperity and had done just the right thing in making no radical change until the will was proved and the tedious law business completed.

"OF COURSE YOU MAY HAVE SOME."

But when the cottage at Bournemouth had been taken, the trains looked out, and the day of departure fixed, Marguerite electrified them all by gently refusing to go.

"I have no right to a farthing of Bernard's money," she said, "and I should not feel happy, thank you."

"But, but, my dear," spluttered the good doctor, "that's false delicacy, you know—that's straining a point! You surely may accept favors from the man you are engaged to."

"Bernard and I are not engaged," she returned with quiet persistence; then, after a short pause, "nor ever shall be," she added.

"We shall see what Bernard will say to that," said Mary. "He is the only person that can manage you, Marguerite."

Marguerite smiled.

"We won't discuss it," she said steadily. "Only I am not going to Bournemouth."

There was no shaking her decision. Her will was indomitable, and unconsciously she influenced all. With quiet tact she persuaded them all to start without her, and lived on by herself in the dull, close London house, looking eagerly each day for a possible answer to the advertisement which Bernard had inserted in the West of England newspapers.

Had Valdane Martineau known of that advertisement it would have occasioned him some uneasiness. A rather strange thing had occurred on the morning the day after he paid his visit to the Stellings' house. A box of exquisite cut hot-house flowers had arrived for Miss Lilbourne. No message or card accompanied them, and Marguerite was thoroughly mystified. Mary thought that Bernard had sent them, but, on being written to on the subject, he was obliged to disclaim any knowledge of them. Each day arrived a fresh selection of choice and delicate blossoms; they were brought by a man from a floral depot, who knew nothing of the person who had ordered them or anything about it. Marguerite loved flowers and, left alone in her glory, she grew to hail the daily arrival of the fragrant treasures.

One day, soon after she was left alone, Mr. Martineau called. His ostensible reason was to say that he was going to Clarisdale the next day, and he asked whether there was anything he could do for her before he left.

She thought it was very kind of him to take so much trouble, and thanked him warmly. He stayed a long time, and she gave him tea in the drawing-room, which was almost full of those lovely flowers. He bent to smell one of a bunch of tea-rosebuds, and remarked that they were very fine for London. Hereupon she innocently revealed the fact that she did not know who had sent them.

"But it is some one who is very kind," she said—"some one who knows what flowers are to Londoners. Each morning I am always afraid it will be the last time. I think I shall cry when they leave off coming."

"The sender would feel more than repaid if he or she could but see how the gift is appreciated," returned Valdane gravely.

"You are fond of flowers, too," said Marguerite. "I knew you were by the way you noticed these when you came in. Won't you have a rosebud? I have so many, and I don't want to be selfish, you know."

"Will you really give me one of your flowers?"

"Of course—any you choose."

"If I might choose, I would ask for one of those." He pointed to a vase full of marguerites.

"Those—they have no scent."

"They are my favorite flowers."

"Of course you may have some."

She selected three of the pale starry flowers, with a piece of maiden-hair, and dexterously made up a button-hole for him.

He took it with a very low and quiet "Thank you," and, having no longer an excuse to linger, rose to take his leave.

HARTE'S WASTE BASKET.

Filled with Rejected Drafts of What He Wrote.

Writing of Bret Harte in California in the Century, Noah Brooks tells of the story-writer's fastidiousness: Harte's first literary work was done in San Francisco, after he had tried his hand at school teaching in the interior of the state, and had ventured tentatively in other casual pursuits, as was the manner of all the Argonauts of those days. In 1863, while he was setting type in the office of the Golden Era, a literary weekly paper of some local renown, he offered to the editors, with much diffidence, occasional contributions, which he had already set up in his composing-stick. They were short and unambitious, but they were so highly approved by the managers of the paper that the young author was encouraged to offer more of the same sort. A year later Harte accepted a writing engagement on the staff of the Californian, another literary weekly, then edited by Charles Henry Webb, better known to old Californians by his pen name of "John Paul." Harte became editor of this newspaper in 1865, when Webb relinquished its management. Another contributor to the columns of the Californian was Samuel L. Clemens, who was then making his first essays in composition under the since famous sobriquet of "Mark Twain." Like Goldsmith's parson, who was counted "passing rich with £40 a year," these two young writers were well content with a compensation that would now be regarded by either of them with amused contempt. In the Californian, Harte printed nothing more ambitious than bits of verse and slight local sketches in prose. The titles of some of these were "Side-Walkings," "On a Balcony" and "A Boy's Dog." Nearly all of them, I think, were hunted up and reprinted in more enduring form when Harte had become a celebrated author. His celebrity gave these trifles an importance which he never dreamed they would acquire.

Harte always manifested in his work that fastidiousness in choice of words which has characterized him ever since. It was humorously complained of him that he filled the newspaper-office waste-baskets with his rejected manuscripts and produced next to nothing for the printer. Once, assigned to the task of writing an obituary article that was not to exceed "two stickfuls" in length, he actually filled a waste-basket with fragments of "copy" which he tore up before he produced the requisite amount of matter. Going into my own editorial room, early one afternoon, I found Harte at my desk, writing a little note to make an appointment with me to dine together later in the day. Seeing me, he started up with the remark that my early arrival at the office would obviate the necessity of his finishing the note which he was writing, and which he tore up as he spoke. When, this little matter settled, Harte had gone out, crumpling in his hand the fragments of his unfinished note, I chanced to look into my waste-basket and saw a litter of paper carrying Harte's familiar handwriting; and, turning over the basket with quiet amusement, I discovered that he had left there the rejected manuscript of no less than three notes, which any other man would have disposed of in something like this order: "Dear Brooks: We will dine together at Louis Dingeon's at 6:30 p. m. tonight."

Injustice.

"It's an unmitigated libel," exclaimed the Filipino.

"What's the matter?"

"This writer says we have a lazy climate. I'll leave it to any unprejudiced thermometer maker and germ expert to decided it if we haven't one of the most industrious climates in the entire gazetteer."—Washington Star.

THE AWFUL HURRICANE

Five Hundred Lives Probably Lost at Ponce.

The Full Extent of the Storm Not Known Yet—Nearly All of the West Indian Islands Got a Taste of the Great Blow.

PONCE, Aug. 12.—The worst storm ever experienced here struck this place Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock and lasted two hours. Ponce was flooded and at least 300 persons were drowned. Two hundred bodies, mostly those of poor people and including many children, have been recovered. All the buildings are damaged and hundreds have been destroyed.

The soldiers and firemen worked all night, heroically saving lives. There is no drinking water, gas, ice or electric light.

The commissary stores at Playa were destroyed, the city is short of food and the army officers are distributing rations. Fifteen vessels in the harbor were driven ashore.

The weather bureau predicted the storm, but it is claimed Ponce was not warned.

A mob of 1,000 persons threatened the alcade, Porrata Doria, but they were dispersed by the Fifth cavalry. The alcade has been deposed on account of negligence. Major Myers of the Eleventh infantry is acting as alcade in response to popular demand.

The sanitary condition is serious and assistance is needed. All the crops are virtually ruined. The wires are all down and little news is obtainable.

Aboniti, including the barracks, has been destroyed; but no life was lost there. Juan Diaz has been devastated and forty-six persons were killed. Arroyo, Guayama, Salinas and San Isabel are reported to have been totally demolished.

The railroad between Ponce and Yauco have been destroyed and the military road is destroyed. The river is flowing over the road for two miles. Mayaguez escaped serious injury.

Bananas are the sole food here. The poens have gone to San Juan and its vicinity, which are comparatively uninjured.

SAN JUAN, Porto Rico, Aug. 12.—It is now said 500 persons lost their lives at Ponce during the hurricane. Terrible distress prevails there.

Arrogo, on the south coast, has been destroyed. Sixteen lives were lost there and the town is still submerged in water. At Guaymo the houses are still standing. Seven persons were killed there. A number of houses were pillaged, for the soldiers were unable to maintain order, as starvation threatened the population. The water supply of San Juan has been stopped.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, Aug. 12.—The destruction of the hurricane is growing. According to the latest reports from Porto Rico, San Domingo, Guadeloupe, Antigua, the Bahamas, St. Thomas and St. Croix, all these islands felt its disastrous effects, Porto Rico, St. Thomas and St. Croix most severely. At least 300 lives have been lost.

Everywhere shipping suffered, large numbers of sailing vessels being sunk, especially at Guadeloupe. The velocity of the hurricane averaged more than seventy miles an hour. In St. Thomas 200 houses were destroyed. In the harbor there was much damage. In Porto Rico and St. Croix many lives were lost. It is feared that shipping at sea has suffered heavily.

In Antigua the principal damage was done to estates, though the towns also were devastated. Grand Turk, in the Bahamas, reported yesterday afternoon that it escaped the full force of the hurricane and was little damaged, the storm going off to the northwest.

ST. THOMAS, D. W. I., Aug. 12.—The hurricane was central to the east of Dominica Monday, and it then traveled northwest. In Dominica some damage was done, but more in Martinique. There was serious loss of property in Guadeloupe.

A hundred lives were lost in Montserrat, which was completely devastated. The official death list is already seventy-four. The death list throughout the West Indies may reach 400. Aantigua and St. Kitts suffered severely, and in St. Croix thirty laborers were killed. In St. Thomas the principal destruction was caused by the sea. Most of the wharves were destroyed.

The barometer report at Montserrat was 27.60; St. Kitts, 29.26; St. Croix, 29.12; St. Thomas, 29.60.

The storm struck San Juan, Porto Rico, at daylight Monday. Ponce was reached by the hurricane later in the morning. There all the vessels are ashore and great damage was done. All the goods in the custom house were damaged.

The hurricane was last reported at Turk's island Wednesday. It was also reported to have struck San Domingo.

HEADED FOR OUR COAST.

The Weather Bureau Announces the Approach of the Hurricane.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—The weather bureau has issued the following hurricane bulletin:

"11:40 a. m.—Hurricane center apparently approaching Nassau, Bahama. Storm will increase in intensity upon reaching the Gulf stream and will probably reach the South Atlantic coast towns of the United States to-night.—Williams, Acting Chief, Weather Bureau."

More Kansas Promotions.

TOPEKA, Kan., Aug. 12.—Governor Stanley has received a cablegram from Colonel Metcalf of the Twentieth Kansas, at Manila, recommending the promotion of Albert H. Krause to be captain, Samuel G. Hopkins to be first lieutenant and Chauncey S. Pratt to be second lieutenant.

CALDWELL, Ohio, Aug. 12.—Early this morning a heavy cloudburst in the eastern part of this (Noble) county damaged corn and tobacco crops greatly. It is feared that much stock has been drowned.

AID FROM THE GOVERNMENT.

War Department Has Ordered a Transport With Supplies to Porto Rico.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—The following cable was received to-day addressed to General Schwan:

"SAN JUAN DE PORTO RICO, Aug. 11.—My country is devastated. For God's sake help us.—Captain Lugo Vina."

Lugo Vina is one of the Poto Ricans whom General Schwan met during the campaign in Porto Rico.

The War department to-day received a cablegram from General Davis, giving fuller details of the damages done in Porto Rico by the hurricane.

General Davis asks authority to issue rations to the destitute. The message is dated yesterday and says "Later reports show that the hurricane was far more severe in interior and southern part of the island than here.

"Data for estimate of number of Porto Ricans who have lost everything is deficient, but I am forced to believe the number upon the island cannot fall below 100,000 souls, and a famine is impending. I ask that 2,500,000 pounds of rice and beans, equal quantities of each, be immediately shipped on transports to Ponce. Some here. Urgent appeals to all post commanders for food for the destitute. Am I authorized to relieve distress by food issues? Rice and beans only desired.

"There have been many deaths of natives by falling walls. So far only one soldier reported dangerously injured. Several towns reported entirely demolished. As yet have reports from only four ports. Complete destruction of all barracks at two and at two others one company of each had barracks destroyed. Troops are in canvas. No reports yet from the largest ports, Ponce and Mayaguez, but they were in the vortex of the storm.

"At least half of the people in Porto Rico subsist entirely fruit and vegetables and storm has entirely destroyed this source of support.—Davis."

The department has taken prompt action on Davis' report. The army transport McPherson has been ordered to sail from New York to San Juan and Ponce Monday with supplies. Acting Commissary General Weston has ordered the purchase in New York of 600,000 pounds of rice and 600,000 pounds of beans to be shipped upon the McPherson. Such other food supplies as may be obtained at the time the McPherson sails will be sent on that ship.

MURDERED BY A WAITER.

Guest at the Barker Hotel at Manitou, Col., Killed in the Dining Room.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Col., Aug. 12.—Gus McKemie, a prominent cotton merchant and a member of the school board of Gainesville, Texas, was killed in a row with hotel waiters at the Barker hotel, in Manitou, yesterday noon. George Groves, the head waiter, had remonstrated with Mrs. McKemie for insisting upon entering the dining room before he was ready for the guests. He was later accused by Mr. McKemie of having spoken insultingly to Mrs. McKemie and an apology was demanded. When Groves said that he did not consider an apology due, Mr. McKemie struck at him with a cane. Groves grappled with McKemie and a great throng of waiters and guests gathered, Mr. McKemie being wounded in the melee by a blow on the left side of the head, which proved fatal in about forty-five minutes.

A number of people saw George McCormick, one of the waiters, with a decanter in his hand, and he is under arrest, charged with the murder. He was brought to this city immediately after being placed under arrest, because the feeling of the thousands of Southern people in Manitou was running high, and a lynching was feared.

Otis to Stay in Command Until He Himself Asks for Relief.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Major General Otis will remain in supreme command of the Philippine islands. Should he request to be relieved, Major General Lawton will be assigned to duty as his successor. This is the decision reached by the President and Secretary Root during their conference at Lake Champlain. It is learned that ex-Secretary Alger, just before his retirement, recommended that General Otis be relieved on the ground that he had not proved himself equal to the emergency.

Small Boy Shoots His Sister.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., Aug. 12.—Charles Thompson, an 8-year-old boy, shot and fatally wounded his little 5-year-old sister, Clara yesterday. Mr. Thompson, the boy's father, recently purchased what is known as a "safety revolver" of .32 caliber. He said he wanted one of that make so there would be no chance for his little boy to get hurt with it in case he should get hold of it. The revolver was kept in a bureau drawer, but the boy found it and while playing with it the gun was accidentally discharged.

Shot for Crying "Scab."

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Aug. 12.—William T. Caple, a non-union motorman on the Central avenue line of the Big Consolidated company, to-day fired two shots at William Little, a teamster, both shots taking effect. In return, Little picked up a hatchet lying in his wagon and hurled it at Caple, striking the motorman in the head. The latter claims that Little called him a "scab" as his car was passing the wagon. This the teamster denies. The motorman is in jail. Little was removed to a hospital. Neither man is fatally injured.

Pain Conquered by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable

[LETTER TO MRS. PINKHAM NO. 9.

"I feel it my duty to write and tell you for what your Vegetable Compound has done for me. It is the only medicine I have found that has done me any good. Before taking your medicine, I was all run down, tired all the time, no appetite, pains in my back and bearing down pains and a great sufferer during menstruation. After taking two bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I felt like a new woman. I am now on my fourth bottle and all my pains have left me. I feel better than I have felt for three years and would recommend your Compound to every suffering woman. I hope this letter will help others to find a cure for their troubles."—MRS. Ancient American Sleeping Cars.

L. Kavire Eyma, a Frenchman, who came to this country in 1847, wrote an article in L'Illustration of Paris, published July 22,1848, giving his experiences on the railroads of the United States. He says that at that time the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad had a length of seventy leagues and that the cost of the road was 4,116,744 francs, the receipts 3,988,456 francs and expenses 1,964,741 francs. He also gives considerable space to the interior arrangements of the sleeping cars used at that time and says that, "they are actually houses where nothing is lacking for the necessity of life and are divided into compartments and sleeping rooms, some for men and some for women." Each room held six beds or rather little couches in three tiers along the sides. He winds up his account by saying that valuables were not particularly well taken care of, as in America there "were no such things as sneak thieves."

New Baby Incubator.

What the French call a "couveuse," or "baby hatcher" of a new kind, has been invented by Dr. Diffre, and recommended by Dr. Budin of the Academie de Medecine, Paris. It is designed to foster new-born infants, especially those who are at all weakly, and is virtually a copper cradle closed by a movable plate of glass, warmed by a boiler heated by an oil lamp underneath, and ventilated by narrow air holes. A moist sponge inside keeps the air humid, and a thermometer shows the temperature.

Hayward Stricken.

Brownville, Neb., Aug. 15.—(Special to Lincoln News.)—United States Senator M L Hayward, elected by the last legislature to represent Nebraska in the upper house of congress, was stricken by paralysis here today and his recovery is a matter of the gravest doubt. The senator arrived this morning in response to an invitation to attend a picnic given by the M W A., and was on the program for a speech.

He was in good spirits this morning but was suddenly stricken at about 11:30 o'clock, the dread calamity coming without the slightest warning.

The senator was seated on the platform and was about to be called on to address the assembly, when he fell out of his chair and onto the platform.

A few minutes later he suffered a second stroke. All that kind hands and medical skill can devise is being done to alleviate his sufferings, but at this hour (2 p m) he is still unconscious and the worst is feared. The senator is past sixty years old and his chances of recover are more remote on that account.

The members of the senator's family arrived on a special train at one o'clock from their home in Nebraska City, and are now at his bedside.

Later.—At 2:30 p m the senator had slightly regained consciousness and was able to utter a few words. This has given the attending physician some encouragement, but the stricken man's condition is still most precarious. The senator will be taken by special train tomorrow to his home in Nebraska City, if it appears at that time that he is able to withstand the trip.

Obituary.

Clark Woodman Presson, youngest son of Rev J H and Mrs M M Presson, was born in Nebraska City, Otoe county, Nebraska, July 15, 1877, and was 22 years of age. He has lived with his parents at Nebraska City, Omaha, Pawnee City, Tecumseh, Seward, Peru, Table Rock and Stromsburg, attending the public schools at all these places. His last school was the Bryant college at Stromsburg where he showed a proficiency in some branches superior to all other students enrolled.

He cast his first vote in Stromsburg, and had been a resident here with his parents for the past three years. Clark was of a happy, genial disposition, a universal favorite, and was never known to speak harm of anyone. He always had a kind word and a happy smile for everyone he met. Life to him seemed to mean joy and gladness. A loving, affectionate son and brother and always thoughtful of the comfort and feelings of others. He had been employed in the Farmers & Merchants bank as assistant bookkeeper and the officers of the bank say of him that he was worthy of all confidence and correct in all his work. He was to have been retained in the bank at an advanced salary for the coming year. His happy life terminated August 2, 1899. He went in to his room from which his bed had been removed. In a few moments the family were startled by the report of a pistol and a crash. Upon investigation it was found that a dreadful accident had occured. It is presumed that in looking through a drawer, he picked up an old revolver that had been laid away loaded, after he had returned from a fishing trip. In some way it had slipped or turned in his hand and sent a bullet through his brain, causing instant death. A gloom is cast over the whole community and all mourn the untimely death of one who was loved and respected by all who knew him.

The funeral services were held at the parsonage at 3 p m, August 4, conducted by Dr L F Britt of Omaha, assisted by the pastors of Stromsburg. The remains were laid to rest in the Stromsburg cemetery. The Modern Woodmen of America lodge, of which he was a member, conducted the service at the grave. The floral tributes were many and beautiful. Besides his parents, he leaves two brothers, Cloyd E Presson of San Francisco, and Geo H Presson of Stromsburg.—Pawnee Press.

Trimmed Skirts are given especial notice and are most attractively illustrated, and the Millinery pages show some very stylish hats and toques for fall wear. Charming pictures accompanied by full descriptions of the same tell maids and matrons, also the little folks, just how to wear their hair most becomingly and fashionably. Apart from these pages which are devoted to feminine adornment this number of The Designer contains Floriculture Advice, Book Notes, Directions for Tatting, Knitting, Crocheting and Fancy Work, Photographic Helps, Two Short Stories, A Continued Story, A Little Comedy for Child Players, a chapter on Odd Furnishings, an installment of For Health and Beauty, explaining simple Massage, the opening chapter of The Kindergarten at Home, amply illustrated, Hints for Housekeepers, and last but not least, receipts for Twenty-Five Different Ways of Cooking Apples. In its own particular line of publications the September Designer easily takes the lead.

Salem Chautauqua.

Thursday morning found Mrs Patchin and myself enroute for Salem by way of the freight which happened to be late half an hour and Mr Faulkner gave us the comforting assurance that it would be a full half hour switching round at Table Rock. Soon after the train pulled in the conductor kindly came and asked us if we wished to go on that train and took our heavy sachels on board for us and ere long we were on our way not a little anxious lest we miss the great attraction of that day, Bain's lecture, The New Woman and The Old Man. Right here we want to commend the carefulness and kindness of engineer and men on that train for it was a long one but the couplings were so carefully made we received very few yanks so common and almost unavoidable on a freight. We arrived in time to hear the speaker commencing the program for next day, highly eulogizing General Gordon's lecture before commencing his own. The New Woman he spoke of was not that extreme type whom so many delight to hold up and ridicule but the ideal woman, capable, kind, motherly, helpful to humanity wherever she be, in the home, the schoolroom, the printing office, the business house, the hospital or on the battle field. His old man was not the old foggy who thinks the times gone by better than today, but the one Paul spoke of when he said put off the old man with the evil deeds. It was the boys and men who are chewing, smoking and drinking poison every day, the cost of which exceeds that spent for churches, mission and the necessities of life. He believes God has given this nation a message and work in carrying the gospel and civilization to the islands of the sea but if they persist in carrying these evils as well great will be the misery and sacrifice in consequence. Space will not permit mention of many good things at this time but that the whole Chautauqua movement is one of the great uplifting spiritual forces of today is made very evident as one listens to Dr Eaton in his Class exercises and sees the responsive inquiring element there and in the devotional meeting and the ease with which Prof Apmadoc leads the great audience in time and tune to soul inspiring words and music.

The Medal Contest Thursday at 11 a m drew a large audience and of the nine contestants not one had to be prompted or failed in doing credit to themselves and interesting the audience. When Alwyn Schism spoke expressions of approval and wonderment were heard at his characteristic expression and decision as pictured in his face but when Ruth Cooper gave her "Plea for Prohibition," every word a forceful earnest putting of facts, there was intense interest of excitement. Vesta Freeman gave "An Old Man's Story," at her very best; the audience would have been divided as to where the medal belonged, all the recitations were so well given, but the judges had three so near that Ruth stood just one point ahead and won the prize.

WOMAN'S COLUMN.

The W C T U of the First District will hold their Annual Convention at Tecumseh the 23, 24, and 25 of August. The Pawnee County Union will hold their annual convention at Mission Creek the 7th and 8th of September.

In the commencement address by Prof Raymond of the Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., he said that all applicants for tuition scholarships would be required to sign the following pledge. "On consideration of receiving aid from Wesleyan University in payment of part or all of the charge for tuition in 1899 and 1900. I hereby promise so long as I hold a tuition scholarship not to visit a saloon, nor to indulge in the use of intoxicating liquors. Professor Raymond said he would not go round among Methodists begging money for students to spend in saloons.

The women of Poughkeepsie, N Y carried the school election for John Wallac, gardener against James Tolands as innkeeper. They were led by Mrs Roosevelt, a relative of the governor and a number of Vassar students took active part in the campaign. Ella S Stewart writing for the Union Signal tells us that calling on one of Colorado's women legislators she found a small motherly spiritual type of woman between fifty and sixty with culture and refinement written on every line of her face. A party woman, face beaming with intelligence as she talks of governmental affairs and political issues and is interested also in obtaining a new cooking recipe. When asked what bills the women members introduced, she brought in an immense portfolio containing all the bills presented to the house. Running over them she explained, there were two by Dr Mary Barry a talented young physician from Pueblo, providing that chattel mortgages must have the signature of the wife; that all property acquired by a man or woman after marriage should be common property, not to be disposed of or mortgaged by either without the signature of the other. Mrs Lee the mother of five children introduced bills, pertaining to the lighting and ventilating of schoolrooms and improvements along municipal and social lines. "Mrs Wright introduced an anti child labor and compulsory education bill; an amendment to the law for the commitent of the girls to the state industrial school; which provides that a matron shall accompany the sheriff and girl prisoner to the school, a bill to prevent evils in the placing out of orphans and a precinct local option bill." Thus while they studied and talked over all measures before the house, the bills they introduced were in the interest of women, children and education. Miss Stewart laments the fact that these women of the west are divided up along with christian men, excepting a small handful of each among parties that stand for gold or silver, high tariff or low tariff but each one fostering the liquor trust. When the glad day comes in which citizens rule as they pray the Saloon will go.

Robbed The Grave.

A startling incident, of which Mr John Oliver of Philadelphia, was the subject, is narrated by him as follows: "I was in a most dreadful condition. My skin was almost yellow, eyes sunken, tongue coated, pain continually in back and sides, no appetite—gradually growing weaker day by day. Three physicians had given me up. Fortunately, a friend advised trying 'Electric Bitters'" and to my great joy and surprise, the first bottle made a decided improvement. I continued their use for three weeks, and am now a well man. I know they saved my life, and robbed the grave of another victim." No one should fail to try them. Only 50 cts., guaranteed, at S G Wright's Drug Store.

As a natural consequence it enjoys in its old age all the vitality and vigor of its youth, strengthend and ripened by the experiences of over half a century

It has lived on its merits, and on the cordial support of progreselve Americans.

Recognizing its value to those who desire all the news of the State and Nation, the publisher of "The Argus," (your own favorite home paper) has entered into an alliance with "The New-York Weekly Tribune," which enables him to furnish both papers at the trifling cost of $1.75 per year.

Every farmer and every villager owes to himself, to his family, and to the community in which he lives a cordial support of his local newspaper, as its works constantly and untiringly for his interests in every way, brings to his home all the news and happenings of his neighborhood, the doings of his friends, the condition and prospects for different crops, the prices in home markets, and, in fact, is a weekly visitor which should be found in every wide-awake, progressive family.

Justthink of it! Both of these papers for only $1.75 a year.

J W Shaw, an old veteran of the civil war, has been an awful sufferer from a wound in the leg received during the war; several times surgical operations have been performed, and last spring Dr Henry of Omaha, and Dr Wilson performed another, which was hoped would result in his recovery. The wound healed nicely and Mr Shaw was regaining strength when a malignant growth made its appearance on the lower part of the old wound, and it kept growing until it became evident to Dr Wilson that amputation of the limb would be necessary. On Monday afternoon the Doctor Henry Shaw and C H Barnard took Mr Shaw to Omaha and on Tuesday morning at St Joseph hospital in that city, Drs Henry and Wilson amputated the leg five or six inches above the knee joint, the patient standing the ordeal well and is now doing nicely. Dr Wilson and Mr Barnard have returned home and Henry will remain with his father until the latter is able to be brought home.

WOODMAN NOTICE.

Members of Woodman Camp of Table Rock, are hereby notified that the Secretary's books and receipts are at the store of Andrew & Kovanda, where assessment may be paid.

Henry Shaw, Clerk.

If the proper encouragement is shown Table Rock may again have a prosperous creamery. All of our citizens realize what the creamery was to us—a great artery feeding business activity—and all regret its passing away. Now that there is a chance of building up another such enterprise in our midst, it ought to be grasped and pushed forward to successful completion. It will require some capital, but it will repay all and more than it costs. Those who will take hold and help along the enterprise, are requested to consult William Sutton, and see if it cannot be realized.

About 10 o'clock Monday night the gasolene engine in the dry room of the big continuous kiln of the Table Rock Clay company exploded and set fire to the huge building. An alarm was given and soon a big crowd of people and the fire company were at the scene, willing and anxious to save the building if possible, but it was of no avail, for the fire had gained too much headway. The first story was composed of the kiln proper, made of brick; from this up it was of wood with a wooden roof. The kiln part was not injured but the wood work was all destroyed entailing a loss of $1400. Charles Kidney, one of the night force, was in the dry room when the explosion occurred and was badly burned, his hands and arms being a mass of blisters. Dr. Broyles dressed his injuries and he is getting along nicely with no apprehensions of serious results. The Table Rock Clay Co. is composed of home people and capital and has a capacity of 35,000 brick per day, being one of the largest plants in the west. Its capacity has been taxed to its utmost to keep up with orders and to do this a night force was worked. During the years of the hard times the stockholders pluckily kept it running, although to do so many assessments were necessary and were paid with the hope that a change to dividends might come in the future, and this fire will probably knock the prospects for a dividend this year; but the work of repair has already commenced and the plant will be put in better shape than before. A fortunate thing it was that the kiln was not injured and that it was possible to go right on making brick the next day, so there is no delay to orders. There was no insurance on the plant.

Punished For Brutal Crime.

Falls City, Neb., Aug. 22.—Special to the World-Herald.—About 5 o'clock this afternoon a young man named George Wilson, working for Louthair Schenheit, committed criminal assault on the little 4-year-old girl of Albert Burchard. The child is not thought to be in a dangerous condition.

In less than twenty minutes after the occurence of the crime, Policeman Camden found the man in Schonheit's saloon. He arrested him and took him before the little child, who identified him at once, as did also the child's mother. Wilson has been lodged in jail and an examination by Dr Wiser reveals the fact that there is no doubt of his guilt.

A large crowd, headed by the girl's father, who was carrying a rope, surrounded the jail and it looked for a time as though there would be a lynching.

Mr and Mrs Burchard are highly respected people and have the sympathies of the entire community.

This morning at 1 o'clock a crowd of about 300 determined citizens surrounded the jail here and demanded the fiend, Wilson. They were refused, and at once proceeded to break down the door. After gaining admittance they improvised a table and proceed to perform a surgical operation on the prisoner, after which they turned him over to the proper authorities and quietly and orderly dispersed.

The post-office at Surprise was burglarized last week, but no booty of any amount was secured. B. G. The robber heard him and left the building just as Chapman reached the corner, fired at him, and fled down the street, making his escape.

His name is Joseph Clark, and he is but seven years old. His duty is to care for the switch lights near College View, and he does it well. When he goes to Lincoln to draw his pay he has to stand on his tip toes to reach the top of the counter and sign the voucher.

Adam Gregory, the twenty-year-old son of Jesse Gregory, a farmer at Caldwell, twenty miles west of Gering, was killed last week. On the conveyor are sharp knives which cut the corn, and these cut his stomach open, the bowels and intestines falling out. The machinery was stopped as soon as possible, and the boy taken out. He is the son of poor parents and the sympathy of the community is with the parents.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. McDonald, of Lincoln, recently gave a unique entertainment, a realistic phase of English life. Ten horseback riders played the game of "hare and hounds." Mrs. McDonald and her sister Regna represented the hares. They were provided with bits of paper to scatter along the trail, and were given ten minutes start. A prize of a "brush," a silver-mounted fox tail, was given to the first "hound" back to the house. It was won by Dr. Giffen.

The board of public lands and buildings opened bids last week for a dam across Beaver creek near the institute for the feeble minded at Beatrice. There was one bid, the price being $1,100. As the appropriation available is only $1,000 the board rejected the bid. The board built an underground reservoir near the creek to catch the water, but in order to catch the water during the period of minimum flow it was deemed best to build a dam below the reservoir.

Chief of Police Hoagland, of Lincoln, one day last week entertained a visitor who demanded of him $27,000. The fellow, whose name is William Burroughs, is an inmate of the asylum, and he has been writing to the chief for some time about collecting large sums of money for him. He came up town, hunted up the chief, and told him that he had learned he had collected the money and that he wanted it. The chief said that the fellow's unceremonious demand for so much cash nearly took his breath away.

MANILA SITUATION

Four Armies to be Put in the Field at Once.

CASUALTY LIST VERY SMALL.

Admiral Dewey Quoted as Saying that the Filipinos are Capable of Governing Themselves, and the Way to Close the War is to Concede it to Them

Secretary Root has had elaborate maps of the situation in the Philippines prepared, and as soon as possible will have the population designated and the armies located, and will push the fight in a methodical manner.

When the army in the Philippines consists of 60,000 men instead of 20,000 or 25,000, it will be possible to have four or more armies operating instead of two as during the last campaign.

The location of troops are marked by pins on the map prepared for Secretary Root as follows:

North of Manila, occupied by General MacArthur, a point above Angeles.

South of Manila, Imus (Lawton's headquarters), Minting, Imu, Cavite, Paranque, Tiguig, Pasig, Mariquina, and points around the aqueduct and pumping station; Taytay, Antipolo, Moreng and Calamba, the farthest point south and which has no communication by land.

Seretary Root has in contemplation a visit to the president at Lake Champlain. The fact that General Wesley Merritt is to have a conference with the president during the week, combined with Mr. Root's prospective trip, has given rise to fresh rumors of a possible change in the command of the troops in the Philippines.

At the close of his interview General Merritt said: "So far as I know, there will be no change in military commanders in the Philippines at present. General Otis I knew is one of the most faithful and competent generals in the service. With an efficient force of say 50,000 troops, I believe he will be able to put down the rebellion. Just how much time will be required, however, I cannot say. Aguinaldo and his men have put up a much better fight than I thought them capable of at the outset, but there can be but one outcome of the conflict, a complete victory for American arms."

"Will you be sent to the Philippines?" was asked.

"Not now," replied the general.

Dewey Interviewed Again.

The Naples correspondent of the London Daily Mail, telegraphs the substance of an interview he had with Admiral Dewey during his recent visit. Admiral Dewey said he believed the Philippine question would soon be solved. In his judgment the inhabitants were capable of self-government, and the only way to settle the insurrection and to insure prosperity was to concede it to them. He declared that he was never in favor of violence toward the Filipinos, and remarked that after autonomy had been conceded annexation might be talked of.

When asked whether a conflict between Germany and the United States over the Philippines were possible, Admiral Dewey replied, according to the correspondent: "It is impossible to foresee the unforeseeable."

Collision at Denton.

A wreck on the Burlington road at Denton Sunday evening resulted in the loss of some rolling stock, but aside from a few little cuts inflicted upon passengers and the scalding of the cook in a dining car, no one was injured. The wreck was caused by the Denver passenger train running into an east bound freight train that was trying to get on a side track. That there was not great loss of life was considered fortunate. The freight train was pulled by two engines. One engine was badly wrecked, but the other two were only slightly damaged. The freight train contained many cars of horses, but none were killed and none of the cars of either train were derailed. At first it was thought that by removing a mail car one of the switches could be used for passing trains. Later, however, one of the engines fell over and obstructed the track

TRADE OUTLOOK STILL GOOD.

Supplies of Iron and Steel Are Reported to Be Scarce.

NEW YORK, Aug. 21.—Bradstreet's says: "The trade situation gathers strength as summer wanes. Reports of expanding fall demand arrive, accompanied by very cheerful advices as to the outlook in most parts of the country. In manufacturing lines production appears to be at a maximum and the price situation retains most of its old strength. Notable in the matter of added strength are most of the cereals and iron and steel in many forms. The impetus given to wheat prices by the government report last week has been further reinforced by less favorable crop advices from other sources, notably India and export business is reported somewhat improved. Advices as to the corn crop are still as favorable as ever, some states, notably Kansas, reporting phenomenally large yields.

"Judging from numerous reports, the scarcity of supplies of iron and steel is becoming increasingly serious, supplies of structural and ship-building material being reported inadequate at a number of points.

Dun says: "The Cramps have discharged many hundred hands and ask Russia to extend time for completion of two warships because they cannot get the steel. Completion of twenty-one out of thirty-seven vessels building in the Delaware is also affected. It is a curious experience for this country, but shows the gigantic expansion of home demand. No one can question the fact that payments through the principal clearing houses have been in August 55.9 per cent larger than in 1897 for the month thus far, and outside New York 23 per cent. No better test of the volume of business is known, but there is a growing handicap in the advance of prices. How long and how far this advance can go without reaction is the problem which level-headed business men are studying. Evidences of checked consumption are rare, but it would be childish to hope that at some point higher prices would not hinder buying."

HEAD OFF GENERAL JIMINEZ.

Military Authorities at Havana Have Him Placed Under Arrest.

HAVANA, Aug. 21.—In view of the fact that Colonel Bacallao, chief of the secret police, persisted in his declaration that General Jiminez, the aspirant to the presidency of Santo Domingo, was in Havana, either not having left or having returned, the military authorities telegraphed to Cienfuegos instructing Captain Stamper, collector of customs there, to ascertain whether Jiminez was on the Menendez steamer and to take him under arrest if that should be the case. Just as the steamer was about leaving Cienfuegos, Captain Stamper located Jiminez and arrested him. Jiminez denounced the arrest as an outrage. He said he had broken no law and would not yield except to force. Captain Stamper replied that he was ready to use force if necessary, and Jiminez then yielded, remarking that he did so only because he could not help himself.

NO FREIGHT FOR THE P. & G.

First Overt Act in the Boycott From the Missouri Pacific.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 21.—The first actual hostile move in the boycott of Western railroads on the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf railroad was made this morning when the Missouri Pacific line refused to deliver four cars of freight which were billed to the Gulf road.

The boycott is not to go into effect until August 29 and the premature action of the Missouri Pacific is taken as an indication that the railroads in the Western traffic combines intend to make a bitter and protracted fight to force the Pittsburg & Gulf to recede from its position on freight rates from the Atlantic seaboard to Kansas City by way of the Gulf of Mexico ports.

THE DREYFUS CASE

Review of the Famous Trial That is Stirring France.

COURT SCENES AND INCIDENTS

Past Week's Events in Connection With the Celebrated Captain's Second Trial on Charge of Having Conveyed Military Information to Germany.

The Dreyfus case is an absorbing topic of conversation at present, and nearly every country under the sun is interested in the retrial of the famous French captain. It is especially of interest to Americans, as there is connected with it political intrigue that may change the political and constitutional welfare of France.

Captain Dreyfus was several years ago arrested for, tried and found guilty of having betrayed secrets of a military character to the enemy of France—the German empire. His punishment was severe. He was brought before his comrades, stripped of all insignia of rank, and his sword taken from him and broken, and he was sentenced to solitary confinement on Devil's island, a French possession in the Carribean sea some miles from French Guiana. His friends believed him to be the victim of a plot at the hands of certain army officers, and, headed by his faithful wife, they labored to unearth evidence that would tend to prove him innocent. So well did their efforts succeed that public opinion was aroused in behalf of the condemned man and a retrial of his case was ordered, and is now in progress at Rennes. Much has come to light since the opening of the trial which proves that Captain Dreyfus was found guilty at his first trial on evidence that was forged by army officers, and unless something unforeseen should occur, as is likely at any time in volcanic France, the man who has suffered tortures untold while a prisoner, may go free.

His case is one of the crimes of the age.

Monday, August 14, the trial of Captain Dreyfus was full of sensations. The day started out with an almost successful attempt to murder M. Labori, Dreyfus's chief counsel, by parties unknown, while he was on his way to court.

General Mercier, who is the chief accuser of Dreyfus, was on the stand, and it is believed that the attempt on M. Labori's life was due to the fact that General Mercier's friends feared the able lawyer would crush Mercier in his testimony.

Tuesday, the 15th, M. Labori was getting well as rapidly as could be expected, and the trial proceeded without him. An attempt was made to have the trial postponed until the 21st but the request was not granted. Arrest of persons belonging to the patriotic league and anti-semite league were made, they being charged with conspiracy to overthrow the government.

The proceedings of Wednesday, the 16th, were productive of several sensations. Dreyfus was on the stand and told the story of his sufferngs on Devil's island. Dreyfus wept in court when the clerk read the document recounting the details of his incarceration. The testimony of the day was strongly against the prisoner, the witnesses being persons who have always held Dreyfus guilty.

Thursday, August 17, the widow of Colonel Henry, the officer who is said to have committed suicide while in prison, was on the stand and gave evidence unfavorable to Dreyfus in contradiction to M. Bertrullus who had preceded her in behalf of Dreyfus.

General Roget was also examined as a principal witness for the prosecution He clearly showed by his testimony that he was an enemy to the prisoner, but when the consel for Dreyfus, M. Demange, took him in hand he became confused at the sharp questions fired at him.

The tide is turning in favor of Dreyfus, however, owing to the fact that the censorship exercised in regard to the case. Madame Henry's effort to create a sensation by dramatic allusions failed or intended effect mainly because friendly witnesses for Dreyfus produced anonymous letters showing the whole scene had been prearranged.

Some of the correspondents at the trial believe Dreyfus will be re-condemned, but that the sentence will be at once commuted through fear of excitement and uprising.

Resented by Frost.

Dr. R. C. Warren, major and surgeon of the First Dakota volunteers, has been arrested and will be court-martialed for severe strictures upon his superior officer, Colonel Alfred D. Frost, whom he called a "low, contemptible cur" in a letter published last month.

Kid McCoy Is Knocked out.

CHICAGO, Aug. 21.—Jack McCormack of Philadelphia knocked out Kid McCoy in three minutes last night. The bout was to have been for six rounds and it was generally thought that McCormack stood no show at all. He himself said before entering the ring that he was going to do the best he could and let it go at that. The fight was so short and so quickly over that there was almost nothing to it but the punch that put McCoy to sleep. The fight was under strict Queensbury rules, hitting with one arm free permitted.

Settles With the State.

TOPEKA, Kan., Aug. 21.—John S. Parks, who retired from the office of state printer July 1, yesterday had an accounting with the state. The secretary of state's clerical force detected an error in the accounts of the state printer by which Parks was paid $500 more for a piece of work two years ago than the law allows.

BLOODY RIOTS IN PARIS.

Serious Disturbances in Many Parts of the City.

Paris last Sunday was the scene of most serious disturbances, recalling some aspects of the commune. In response to an appeal to the Journals le Peuple, and La Petite Republique, groups of anarchists and socialists gathered about 3 o'clock in the afternoon in the Place de la Republique.

Suddenly, either at the word of command or in obedience to impulse, the column made a loop and curved toward the Church of St. Ambrose, where the rioters smashed the windows.

Proceeding thence toward the Faubourg du Temple, at the corner of the Rue Darboy and the Rue St. Mauri-Popincourt, they formed into a compact body. Hatchets were suddenly produced, with long knives stolen from the counters of shops; and a concentrated rush was made upon the church of St. Joseph. The aged sacristan seeing the mob hastily closed the outer gates, but these were soon forced with hatchets and bars of iron. The massive oaken doors were then attacked. The wild horde burst into the church, which instantly became a scene of pillage and sacrilege. Altars and statutes were hurled to the floor and smashed, pictures were rent, candle-sticks, ornaments and posts from high altars were thrown down and trampled under foot. The crucifix above was made the target for missiles, and the figure of the Saviour was smashed in several pieces. Then while various voices sang the "Carmagnole," the chairs were carried outside, piled up and set on fire in the center of the square fronting the church. When this stage was reached, the crucifix was pulled down and thrown into the flames.

The police arrived and after a desperate fight drove back the mob. Besides St. Joseph church two cafes were wrecked. At a late hour 2,000 people were in the Boulevard de Majenta, which runs past the end of the Rue Rue Chabrol. They were kept constantly moving by the republican guards, who made a remarkable display of force.

It appears that the anarchists' demonstration was decided upon at a meeting held Saturday night. The Journal du Pueple, edited by Sebastian Faure, published a manifesto denouncing the military party, the anti-semites, the monarchists and the priests, and urged its supporters to meet force with force.

"Sould Dreyfus be convicted," said the manifesto, "it will be a triumph of the bandits. Should he be acquitted, the military section will be open to rebellion."

The paper called on all anarchists to demonstrate against the priests and Jesuits. Copies of the manifesto were scattered broadcast, and the result was the riot.

The prefecture of police gives the following statistics of yesterday's riots.

Three hundred and eighty persons were injured. Three hundred and sixty were taken to the hospitals. Fifty-nine policemen were wounded besides Commissaries Goutier and Dolsmire. One hundred and fifty persons were arrested, of whom eighty are detained in custody.

Soldiers Create Trouble.

A riot between the members of the Thirty-second volunteer regiment and North Leavenworth, Kan., negroes took place Sunday afternoon during which shots were fired and one man was wounded on each side.

The soldiers had trouble with a negro named Alexander Johnson a week before and when Johnson met a couple of volunteers near the Ft. Leavenworth reservation Sunday, he renewed hostilities by knocking a soldier down. Volunteers and negroes soon gathered in force and clubs, stones and guns were brought into play. The soldiers outnumbered the negroes and ran many of them towards the center of the city, where the police quelled the riot.

Corporal Johnson of the Third battalion was shot in the left leg. Alex Johnson was shot in the left shoulder and is seriously injured.

Sent His Brother the Tag.

H. M. Bower of Ruby, in Seward county, has received a letter from his brother, Otis H. Bowers, who went to Manila on the hospital ship Relief, from Brooklyn, N. Y. He is an undertaker and embalmer and embalmed the body of Colonel Stotsenburg. When the body arrived at Manila it had a tag attached to it, on which was the following endorsement: "Colonel Stotsenburg, First Nebraska. Killed in action. Warne, Surg." The tag is covered with blood. Mr. Bowers writes to his brother that tags are attached to those killed in action, and when the body of Colonel Stotsenburg arrived in Manila and was turned over to him for embalming he preserved the tag to send to his brother.

Arrangements were perfected Saturday night for the free transportation of the First Nebraska regiment home. The necessary $25,000 was pledged at 7 o'clock and Governor Poynter notified the railroad companies that he was ready to talk business. Besides the $10,000 in popular subscriptions, D. E. Thompson of Lincoln pledged $20,000, and an Omaha gentleman, whose name is withheld, pledged the remaining $5,000.

APPEAL FROM THE AUDITOR.

Home for Friendless Will Go Into Court For Its Money.

The officers of the home for the friendless under the regime of the society have filed an appeal from the rejection of their salary claims by the auditor with the clerk of the Lancaster district court. The case will now be settled along with the numerous other legal matters in controversy as a result of the state taking charge of the home. In connection with the appeal is an affidavit by an officer of the society that the society still has wards in the state for whom it is responsible, and that the money, some $1,1??, mentioned in the claim, is to reimburse the society for a similar amount advanced to Dr. Knapp, Mrs. Williams and Mrs. Slaughter. The funds came into the possesion of the society as a bequest and were used to pay salaries in anticipation that the amount appropriated by the legislature of 1897 would be available. The appropriation never became available for the officers' salaries and the state authorities rejected the claim, hence the appeal.

BOY SHOT IN THE BACK.

Farmer Shoots a Young Man Who Was Stealing Melons.

A boy who was staying at the house of a neighbor of W. S. Locke, a well known farmer who lives southwest of Beatrice, was shot in the back by Mr. Locke, receiving the contents of a shell from a shotgun. There are various stories in circulation regarding the matter, and Mr. Locke's version of the affair is this: He said that the boy had been stealing his watermelons and that although he had been warned to desist he was again found in the melon patch. Mr. Locke says he started out with his shotgun and after firing one shot in the air, the boy ran. He called to him to stop but he kept running when he let him have the other barrel in the back. Mr. Beals brought the boy to Beatrice and his wounds were dressed. While painful, they are not serious. The boy's story is that he had called at Mr. Locke's house to get his clothes, he having stayed there awhile previous, and that Mr. Locke ordered him away and then shot him.

OLEO LAWS TO BE ENFORCED.

Persons Who Evade Statutes Will be Punished.

J. E. Boutz, internal revenue commissioner for Nebraska and South Dakota, has started a crusade against dealers who are engaged in evading the provision of the oleomargarine laws. The state dairymen's association has been endeavoring to secure rigid enforcement of all United States statutes bearing upon the subject.

The penalties for a violation of the oleomargarine regulations are severe. Retail dealers are liable to pay fines ranging from $50 to $500, while wholesale merchants may be assessed as much as $2,000 for evading the law.

A fine of $1.000 or less is imposed upon manufacturers who make and sell the butter imitations without having paid the internal revenue tax, and the fine may be accompanied by as long a term as two years in the penitentiary. Persons who buy any of the substances illegally manufactured are subject to fines of $100 and forfeiture of the merchandise purchased.

At Lincoln in 1900.

The Kansas-Nebraska Modern Woodman log-rolling association, at its business meeting at Beatrice last week, decided to hold its next annual log-rolling and picnic at Lincoln. Vice Consul F. L. Knight, of State of Nebraska camp 2266, Lincoln, was elected president of the association.

Hand Mangled in Thresher.

William Sepplemerier, a young man going with Louis Dammes' threshing machine in the vicinity of Talmage, had the misfortune to get his left hand caught in the cog wheels and so badly smashed that the doctor considered that amputation was necessary and performed the operation. They cut it off about an inch above the wrist joint. The young man is resting easy.

Growing Foreign Mails.

From Scribner's: In 1840 the foreign mail from England for the United States, carried on the Great Western, consisted of two sacks of mail. As late as 1873 a steamer from Europe with 20,000 letters on board was considered a record-breaker. Today the Cunard steamers and other trans-Atlantic ships carrying what is called a "full European mail" usually bring some 200,000 letetrs, and an average of 300 sacks of newspapers and printed matter for New York city, not to mention 500 and odd sacks for Canada, Mexico and trans-Pacific countries, and a few United States exchange offices, which are now taken direct to the trains, and not handled at the New York office.

Training Berry Bushes.

The German fashion of growing gooseberries on standard bushes—that is to say, snipping off all but one stem and allowing the plant to bush out at a convenient height for packing, like standard roses—gives a great effect of neatness. The same effect is to be seen in the Scotch way of growing raspberry bushes, by training two adjacent bushes into an intermingling arch.

Still More Counterfeiting.

The Secret Service has just unearthed another band of counterfeiters and secured a quantity of bogus bills, which are very cleverly executed. Things of great value are always selected for imitation, notably Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which has many imitators but no equals for disorders like indigestion, dyspepsia and constipation.

A Paris Exposition Feature.

One of the side shows of the Paris exposition will be a reproduction of the notorious beggars' haunt of the Middle Ages, which will be known as "Paris in 1400." It has been planned by M. Colibert, a pupil of Viollet le Duc, and the same architect who modeled the mock Bastile for the last exhibition. The district between Notre Dames des Victoires, near the Bourse, and the Porte Saint-Dennis, has been reproduced in panoramic fashion, with appropriate imitation in miniature of various monuments and buildings. On the Cour des Miracles itself there is a theater for the performance of plays by the "truands" and other bad characters of the epoch. The Mayfair of the Middle Ages is also shown, and the exhibition, on the whole, promises to prove an attraction as a curious reconstruction of a picturesque portion of old Paris.—New York Tribune.

When it comes to making improvements in all branches of railroad service, the Baltimore and Ohio railroad does not have to retire from the front rank. As "nothing is too good for the Irish," so nothing is too good for Baltimore and Ohio railroad patrons, and a progressive step in dining car service is being taken. The Royal Blue Line dining cars are being shipped as rapidly as possible to change the interiors so that each car will have a table d'hote compartment and a cafe, where the service will be a la carte. This part of the car will have easy chairs, tables and other conveniences of a first-class cafe, where gentlemen can smoke and eat without interfering with those who prefer a different state of things.

"Tattooed Lady" on the Cable Car.

One sometimes hears rumors of women resorting to tattooing as a fad, but the designs are usually made on some part of the body where they will not be visible in ordinary conditions. A woman on one of the Broadway cable cars, the other day, however, carried a conspicuous tattoo mark on the back of her hand, a little to one side. Her hands were bare and brown, having the look of strength and much exercise. One fancied that she belonged to sailor or fisher folk somewhere, and that she could lend a hand when necessary with the best of them in managing a boat and similar work.—Ex.

New Material for Horseshoes.

In Iceland horses are shod with sheep's horn; in the valley of the Upper Oxus the antlers of the mountain deer are used for the same purpose, the shoes being fastened with horn pins; in the Soudan the horses are shod with socks made of camel's skin; in Australia horseshoes have been tried of cowhide. A German not long ago invented a horseshoe of paper, prepared by saturating with oil, turpentine, and other ingredients. Thin layers of such paper are glued to the hoof till the requisite thickness is attained. And the shoes thus made are durable and impenetrable by moisture.

Vegetables Influenced by Others.

As a rule, varieties of melons, squashes, cucumbers, etc., cross readily in their class; intermixture of families is not so frequent, yet is said to occur. The results do not show in the fruit of the current year, but in the seed. A Long Island grower found that watermelons and muskmelons, grown 16 feet apart, or less, did not intermix. Peter Henderson's rule was to grow varieties of melons at least 100 yards apart. A New Jersey reader found cantaloupes grown within 50 feet of cucumbers produced fruit smelling and tasting like cucumbers.

Fined for Paying Too Much.

Every bill posted on the boardings in France has to bear a revenue stamp, the value of which varies according to the size of the poster, says the Revue des Arts Graphique. A country advertiser recently was unfortunate enough to affix a stamp of fifteen centimes' value to a bill for which six centimes only should have been paid. The irregularity resulted in a summons and fine of 125 francs.

"I am glad you are going to have a change," volunteered Marguerite timidly. "I hope you don't mind my saying so, but you look quite ill; I noticed directly I saw you."

"I am in trouble, Miss Lilbourne and that's the truth; I'm afraid change of air won't cure it."

"Oh, how sorry I am." Her eyes filled with sympathy. "What a world of trouble it is! You in trouble, too? You ought not to vex yourself so about my affairs, if you have trouble of your own."

"My trouble is harder to bear than yours," he said, "because it is of my own making. It is the shadow of a fault committed long ago."

"And repented of?" she asked shyly.

"Heaven only knows how deeply!"

"Ah, then it will be all right," she asserted brightly, "if you are ready to atone!"

"Ah," he cried pitifully, "but suppose one can't atone? That is the hardest lesson the world teaches, Miss Lilbourne. It is so easy to wrong another, but so hard—so terribly hard to set the wrong right again."

She looked at him earnestly. He was the last man from whom she would have expected words like these. Proud, self-contained, a man of the world he had hitherto appeared; yet, now it seemed as if he were asking her—little Marguerite—for pity and counsel.

"Have you asked the person whom you wronged to forgive you?" she questioned with a certain solemnity.

"No," was the almost inaudible reply.

"Ah!" she said softly, "that's what I would do! Please don't think me impertinent—I know I am not at all competent to advise you."

"That is what you would have me do?" he asked. "You would have me say, 'I did you a grevious wrong—I cannot undo it now, but I repent. Forgive me!'"

"Yes," she replied, with a nod of her pretty head. "I would say that."

"And suppose by that confession I lowered myself in the eyes of the person whom before all others in the world I desired to stand well with?"

"I think," she answered shyly, wondering at the strange intensity with which he questioned her—"I think you would have to bear that as a penance for your fault."

His strange eyes looked down at her sweet, ingenuous face with a gaze she could not understand.

"I shall think over your advice," he said earnestly, "and try to follow it. Will you give me your best wishes?"

"Yes," she replied, her face suddenly flushing. He moved away from her—he felt that his self-control was deserting him; he must go—and instantly.

"Goodby," he said hastily, unable to raise his eyes to her face. "I must apologize for—for staying so long!"

He left the room abruptly, before she had time to reply. Actuated by an indescribable impulse, she went to the window to see him pass. He glanced up, saw her, and raised his hat with a sudden smile of pleasure, indicating with one hand the marguerites in his button-hole. She drew back as he disappeared, holding her hands to her head.

"What did that remind me of?" she said slowly. "Oh, what did it remind me of? I feel as though I had gone through a similar experience before. It seemed quite natural to be looking out of the window and waving my hand to him." She broke into a little laugh. "I think I must be losing my senses, but for the moment the impression was wonderfully strong."

CHAPTER XII.

Two days later, on reaching home after a walk, she was told that a woman was waiting to see her.

Imagining it to be a patient come for liniment or cough-mixture, she went straight into the dining-room, and was at once confronted by a respectably-dressed woman, evidently provincial.

"There," said the woman triumphantly, the instant Marguerite appeared—"it's her—I knew it was. I knew I should know her first minute I clapped eyes to her face. Well, miss, you and me's met before, ain't we?"

"Have we?" said Marguerite.

"Don't you remember me, my dear?" asked the woman, evidently disappointed.

"No; I don't remember you at all."

"Not Mrs. Acland?"

"No. Where do you come from, Mrs. Acland, please?" Marguerite asked the question with a certain vehemence, advancing toward her visitor, and looking earnestly at her face.

"My stars—she don't remember me!" said the woman again. "Why, my dear, 'tain't four years ago since you saw me every day of your life for six weeks."

"Did I—did I?" cried Marguerite, her head in a whirl of excitement. "Oh, Mrs. Acland, tell me about it—do! Do you come from Devonshire or Cornwall?"

"Torquay, my dear, to be sure. You mean to say you've been and forgot that, too?"

"I've forgotten everything," replied Marguerite, trembling with eagerness. "I've been very ill and forgotten all sorts of things; but I do believe you're the very person I've been wanting so long. Tell me—who are you?"

"The landlady of 5, Ponsdon Crescent, my dear, where your uncle brought you, four years ago come November. Ah, my dear, I remember it all so well! A poor, nervous thing you were, starting at every sound; and your uncle seemed so hard on you, it went to my heart, it did."

Marguerite sank into a chair, her face turning so deadly pale that Mrs. Acland thought she was going to faint. Hurrying to the sideboard the woman seized the carafe of water and sprinkled some on the soft dark hair and cold forehead.

"Thanks—thanks; I am better," said Marguerite, rallying—"much better, thank you. I can listen. It was too much for me, just for a moment—the thought that I was to hear what I have longed and prayed to hear for so many months. Go on—tell me!"

"You mean to say you have forgot it all?"

"All—all! I had brain fever."

"HE GLANCED UP, SAW HER, AND RAISED HIS HAT."

The woman glanced down at the girl's clasped hands.

"So he didn't marry you, after all?" she said, with some show of surprise.

"Oh, begin at the beginning!" said Marguerite, blushing. "Tell me all about it, please."

"First, you must know," began the good woman, "that I always thought it wasn't all right, for this reason—that, though the young man used to come courting on the sly, when your uncle was out, he used to write letters to him, for I seen one myself, I did. I always misdoubted that young man, though you did set such store by him; and I says to my cook, as I remember very well, 'If any one's being deceived, it's the child herself, and not her uncle,' I says. So, my dear, I kept the address of the letter I see, thinking, 'One day it'll come in useful.' And sure enough it did! But it was very strange. Here was I never been out of Torquay this twenty year, and just fixed in my mind to come up by the 'cursion, when I see this in the papers.' She laid a slip of paper before Marguerite, a copy of Bernard's advertisement. "I allus guessed it had been done at St. Boniface," she said in triumph; "so when I see that advertisement, I says, 'There's trouble, and I must speak up and tell what I know.' I won't deny that I always liked Mr. Phillips," she added parenthetically; "and chiefly because you always cheered up so when he come. So, when I see the advertisement, I just ran up to St. Boniface; and the clerk and me, we searched the register. And here's the copy of it, miss, as I brought with me to make sure."

Marguerite raised her eyes to the paper and looked.

There were the two signatures, one under the other—"Arthur Phillips," "Marguerite Lilbourne."

Her heart sank; she did not remember the name in the least. It touched no chord of memory. Till now she had cherished a vague idea that with the name of the man she had married would come a flood of recollection. But no!

"Arthur Phillips—Arthur Phillips," she repeated hopelessly; "I am certain I never knew any one of that name."

She leaned her chin on her hand. The effort to remember was painfully intense.

"There was somebody," she said slowly, "who used to—used to—at least, I used to look out of the window for him. I called him some name—not Arthur. A short name—something like Phil; but it wasn't Phil. I should know it if I heard it, I think. Oh don't you remember it?" she asked piteously of Mrs. Acland.

The woman shook her head.

"I don't," she answered; "but I do remember you was so took up with him. But, bless you, Arthur Phillips worn't his real name! I seen that plain enough all the time."

"Not his real name?"

"No, my dear. He never married you for no good—of that I'm sure! I ought never to 'a let you 'a gone off with him. He come and said your uncle was ill, and he was to take you to him; but, when he put you in the carriage and drove off, my heart misgave me, for I see there was another man with him; and I'm morally pursuaded, my dear, that that other was Mr. Brandon hisself all the time—disguised, you know. I never seen you again, my dear, till this minute. But that afternoon, when Mr. Brandon came raging and shouting and wanting to know where you was, I thought directly that he was only putting it on, and knowed fast enough where you was all the time. Well, my dear, I s'pose if I'd 'a done my duty I'd 'a gone to the perlice; but I am a poor woman, with my living to get, and I don't want no scandals about my house; and then, you see, I hadn't nothing to say—no evidence, nor nothing of that kind. So I just kep' quiet; but it's bin on my mind ever since."

"Mrs. Acland," said Marguerite, solemnly, her hands clasped under her chin, "you say I was in your house six weeks, and that you saw me every day."

"Yes, my dear."

"Did it ever strike you that there was anything odd about me? Did it ever occur to you that I was out of my mind?"

The woman's look of consternation was evidently genuine. No, she had never thought of that. "A poor little nervous thing," had been her idea, much cowed, subdued, and bullied by an overbearing uncle.

ART AND MORALS.

A Simple Verdict in the Much Discussed Case.

A work of art cannot in itself be immoral. If a book is well written it is good. If it is badly written it is bad. That is the final test in writing. A book is immoral only in the sense that the saddle which delivered the prince imperial to death when his life depended on its strength may be called immoral because it was badly made. As there is no evil in a healthy physical organism, no evil in any organ of a healthy body, though there may be evil in its use, so there is no evil in a book.

A man who has a clear finished style of workmanship, who writes well, displays a moral as well as an aesthetic beauty in his work, no matter what his subject; for to overcome the difficulties of language and to make of it his servant, his stool, his weapon, requires a manifestation of will power which is itself moral, and the cry of "art for art's sake" is not so empty a shibboleth as the Philistines declare it.

To those who attribute to a book qualities belonging to the reader, who condemn the object for the weakness of the subject, the following fable, which has for its highest virtue its truth, may bear no moral, but to me it meant much.

A woman with a passionate love for the beautiful in all forms, a love which expresses itself in her surroundings, was asked by a friend to whom "auld lang syne" had granted the privilege of impertinence, "Why have you so many pictures of the nude?" "Because," was her response, "to me pictures of the human figure speak so clearly of the divine in man that I sometimes forget there are those who have not yet risen above the animal."—Self Culture.

A Knotty Problem.

"Biscome is a peculiar fellow."

"I don't know him."

"You would find him amusing. He moved out on the lake shore for the summer and bought a Jersey cow. Then he hired a small boy to drive her up from the pasture every afternoon. One day the boy fell sick and Biscome didn't know what to do about the cow. He said to himself when he looked at her in the morning, 'She'll certainly forget to come home if the boy isn't there to call her attention to the fact that she has a home.' Then he looked at the cow some more and pretty soon he stumbled on what seemed to him a brilliant idea."

"Was it?"

"You must judge for yourself. He tied a knot in the cow's tail to remind her that there was something she mustn't forget."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"God Bless Our Home."

In a home in the country, not far from town," says the Catlettsburg (Ky.) Independent, "there may be seen quite a pile of sewing lying on the floor, nearly in the middle of the room, that has been undisturbed for more than six months. At that time the head of the house wanted a chair, and, seeing but one handy, he dumped to the floor the sewing which lay upon it. His wife asked him to pick it up. He said he wouldn't do it. She told him, as he threw it there, it could remain until he got ready to pick it up. She would never touch it. And there it remains, a memorial to an incompatibility of disposition."

Candor of a Dublin Surgeon.

Dr. Coiles, an eminent surgeon of Dublin, who died in 1843, was remarkable for his plain dealing with himself. In his fee book he had many such candid entries as the following: "For giving ineffectual advice for deafness, 1 guinea." "For telling him he was no more ill than I was, 1 guinea." "For nothing that I know of except that he probably thought he did not pay me enough last time, 1 guinea."

Wonderful Cornstalk.

Six different commodities are now being manufactured from cornstalks—namely, cellulose, worth $400 a ton, used by the government as an automatic hole-stopper for battleships; excellent cardboard, a fine grade of paper, an unequaled foundation for dynamite, a patent cattle food and a superior glue. The value of the cellulose lining for warships is well known. When a leak develops, the cellulose swells in such a manner as to automatically close it. With fifteen tons of stalks, worth $90, one ton of such cellulose is made, for which as already stated, the government is now paying at the rate of $400 a ton.

Cider and Bacteria.

Cider is sometimes made with impure water, and there are makers who affirm that dirty water makes the best cider. Hence the Pasteur Institute of France has been examining Normandy ciders to see how far they are free from bacteria. It appears from their results that the malic acid in cider tends to kill bacteria. Ordinary cider contains at least 2 per cent of malic acid, and when the percentage does not fall below that the bacillus of typhoid fever dies in it after 18 or 20 hours. Good cider, then, may be drunk 24 hours after it is made without any fear of catching typhoid.

Ex-Mayor Grace, of New York, a leading democratic light, has come out squarely for the republican policy of protection and says that the advancement of this notion is sufficient evidence to any one not blinded by party prejudice that protection is a truism.

Ben Stump, the young police officer of Falls City, who was shot by a tramp in the depot yard of the Missouri Pacific railroad at Falls City, on the night of July 19th, died on Wednesday August 16th, from effects of his wounds. Notwithstanding the efforts of the officers his murderer is still at large and his idenity a mystery.

Billy Bryan, the fusion oracle, says prosperity is abroad in the land, but that its advent is due to the new new gold finds in the Klondyke. If he will bestir himself and shake off the lithergy produced by polical Morpheus, he'll find that republican administration of governmental affairs has been a prominent factor in bringing on the much wished for General.

The only church at Roslyn Hills, L I., is soon to be turned into a saloon. Several years ago the Congregational church of that town was prosperous, and the building neat, so a loan of $1800 was secured on it; dissensions arose and the debt was not paid, and the building was sold under foreclosure proceedings to a wealthy woman, who intends converting it into a grog shop.

Galesburg Democrats have given up the idea of inviting Mr William Jennings Bryan to address them on the issues of the day because they "cannot afford to pay his price." "In other words," says the Galesburg Republican Register, "the Democrats are espousing a candidate who is high priced, who affects to be of the people and yet wants the people to pay the highest possible price for listening to him. In this regard he beats Woolley and Sam Jones."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Suppose the administration had backed down when Aguinaldo made his unwarranted attack on the American forces in the Philippines, and had thus rebuked the soldiers for doing the soldiers' duty, what a different home coming would have been in store for the First Nebraska? They would come home not as heroes who had won the plaudits of the civilized world by their loyal devotion to their native land and their heroic defense of its flag, but as the troops of a nation that had won the world's ridicule by the cowardly attitude of its own government. They would not come proud of their great country that sent them forth, but would slink to their homes feeling that the name, American, was an empty title.—Falls City Journal.

A special to the Lincoln News from Pawnee City under date of the 20th says: The intelligence of the death of David Hazels, jr. was received here yesterday. Mr Hazels died at Kirksville, Mo. where he moved about a year ago to take medical treatment. He was one of the oldest settlers of this place, having moved here from Scotland with his father and brother about thirty years ago and this had been his home most of the time since. He was one of the best of citizens and business men and will be missed in the community. He was fifty-four years old and unmarried. John Whaley, another old settler, died yesterday afternoon. He had been a resident of this place for over thirty years. He was a member of the Pawnee county bar, but owing to his enfeebled condition had not practiced for some years. He was eighty-four years old and was a soldier during the rebellion. Both the above mentioned citizens will be buried in the cemetery this afternoon near each other and at the same hour.

What Are We Fighting For?

A democratic paper asks this question with an air of doubt as to the reply. There is no difficulty on that score. We are fighting because it became necessary while the treaty with Spain was pending. The Tagal army was pushed close upon the small bit of territory occupied by forces, and before the senate could vote hostilities broke out. They were unavoidable. Our outposts either had to fire or be pushed away from their stations by armed natives who forced their lines forward until the the challenge of sentries was continuous. We were compelled to fight or give up the outskirts of Manila, and had we retired to the inner lines, to the citadel itself, the the aggresive spirit would have been intensified. In a word, we are fighting because our peaceful military lines were jostled and threatened, and our flag fired on. At the moment of the outbreak nothing bad been settled in the Philippines by treaty. We were negotiating with Spain, the unquestioned owner of the islands from the date of their discovery centuries before, and laboring to settle the problem by regular internationable procedure.

At this point we were shot at. Hence the war. The assailants have been heavily punished and driven back. They will be vigorously followed and crushed. The paper making the inquiry referred to complains that the task will require twice as many men as were sent to Mexico. What of that? If it took ten times as many the country would demand that the rights and honor of the flag be vindicated. It is added that the war was never declared by congress.

The Tagals represent not recognized sovereignty. They are but a few removes from irresponsible savages and menaced us without the slightest regard to national or international usage. Congress could have stopped the war, but viewed it as a nameless insurrection led by a corrupt adventurer. Congress can stop the war in December, but will not. On the contrary, it will vote whatever is needed to make the war as bot as possible. We are fighting because we were struck a hostile blow; and since then we have been fighting to win, to thoroughly smash an insolent enemy.—St Louis Globe Democrat.

30th Marriage Anniversary of Mr and Mrs C H Murphy.

One of the most charming events of this community occured Tuesday, Aug. 1, it being the 30th anniversary of the marriage of Mr and Mrs Chas Murphy at their pleasant home five miles northeast of Genesee. For two weeks the members of Lyon Post and Corps had been looking forward to this to be a "red letter day" in their lives.

The morning dawned as lovely as could have been desired, and very early the streets were astir with their many friends all aglow with anticipation for a way up time. As the crowd drew near the home they were greeted by the host and hostess with the Grand Army salute, and such a welcome as to make all feel at home.

The morning program opened at 10 o'clock when the "boys in blue" with sons and friends shouldered a flag pole and proceeded to the highest point on the farm where it was raised from which Old Glory soared amid shouts and rejoicings. After giving the salute and allegiance vow, surrounded by as noble a band of battlescarred veterans as ever fought in battle, sang "My Country 'Tis of Thee" with a zest and feeling as is seldom felt on the Pacific slope.

A dinner hall had been prepared in the grassy yard containing tables which fairly groaned under the dainties that the most generous hostess could possible conceive—garnished dishes of chicken, ham, salads, pickles, cakes, fruit, beans, coffee, tea, lemonade. At the first table gathered twelve old comrades and their wives, tables were filled until 75 had partaken of the elaborate spread.

Then all retired to the grove where games held sway until 4 o'clock when testimonials were given of the day and of former gatherings. As a token of high regard in which Mr and Mrs Murphy are held, the Corps presented them with a couch. Col. and Mrs Holt, and Capt. and Mrs Smith of Moscow, expressed their good wishes by presenting a pickle and fruit dish. Mrs Murphy responded in a touching talk. Comrade Daggett introduced Capt Pickering who he said had something to say to those members of the Corps who would soon remove from Genesee. Capt. Pickering in a dignified manner presented to Helen M Johnson and Anna Mary London a beautiful album in behalf of Lyon Post. This was one of the most affecting scenes the reporter ever witnessed, and when renewing old acquaintances in the Beautiful Beyond this event will be remembered.

The evening shades began to gather ere we said goodbye and many a tear was wiped away and fond regrets spoken, before leaving the grounds, knowing full well all could never meet again until the "Great Commander" shall call them to order at the last Roll Call beyond the skies.—Genesee Idaho News.

WOMAN'S COLUMN.

For the first time in the history of American politics a woman has been elected to the chairmanship of a political convention, thus says the Union Signal. This woman was Mrs Frances E Beauchamp whom those of our sisters who attended the Council of women at Omaha last summer will remember as one of the very gifted and pleasantest speakers at that gathering. She is president of Kentucky, W C T U and assistant recording Secretary of the National. She was made temporary then permanent chairman of the state prohibition convention.

A Mr John Morley recently addressed the British Parliament attacking the conservative policy of that government and handling the drink problem without gloves. He denounced the drink trafic as the disturber of honest politics. He said the English Brewer knows but one country and that the saloon, but one standard and that his license to sell, but one policy and that is to sell more liquor. For every five dollars given to enforce law, he is ready to give five hundred dollars to protect the undisturbed immunity of the bar. The welfare of the state has no part in any of his projects, the barrel represents the sum and substance of his patriotism. Have we anything like this in America? Will any one doubt it who heard Mrs Gougar Monday night? Ignorant and prejudiced people may try to drown the the truths she gave by saying, she lied or is a traitor but reading, thinking people know that the infamy of the liquor trade can't be overdrawn. Five hundred gallons of rum for every missionary; four hundred saloons for one street of Manila! Will not some messenger of peace tell us how many missionaries and bibles have been sent. When we begin to denounce every one who differs from us in opinion or sees truth in a different light let us take off our spectacles and put off the dust of prejudice, putting on charity which is the bond of perfectness. Alas! how many of us, professed followers of the meek and lowly Jesus forget to add that crowning glory to the christian graces which we should possess and lacking that we repel the world instead of drawing them to him. Law and legal restraint is necessary for those who will not recognize the rights of their fellow beings. Paul said to those of olden time, the law was our schoolmaster, to bring us to Christ, but who of us would not rather be the bearer of good tidings, a welcome messenger, rather than the officer who must administer the scourge of the law or the warning watchman who foretells the evils that always follow broken law. We should be thankful for the watchmen who cry aloud and spare not and ere we deprive them of freedom of speech, turn our thoughts inward and see if the fountain of life, love to God and our fellow man is there. Charity covereth a multitude of sins, but if we have not control of our own spirits so we would accord to our sister or brother the freedom of thought and speech we claim for ourselves, it were better to be silent. As a man thinketh, so is he, and we make our own heaven or hell right here, nearer than we dream sometimes. If each one of us would stop thinking evil and seek only the good we would be astonished to see how differently things would look and be so far as ourselves are concerned.

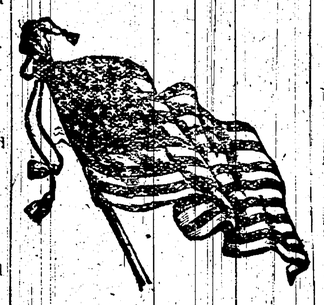
NEARLY
Fifty-Eight Years Old!



Its a long life, but devotion to the true interests and prosperity of the American People has won for it new friends as the years rolled by and the original members of its family passed to their reward, and these admirers are loyal and steadfast today, with faith in its teachings, and confidence in the information which it brings to their homes and firesides.

As a natural consequence it enjoys in its old age all the vitality and vigor of its youth, strengthened and ripened by the experiences of over half a century.

It has lived on its merits, and on the cordial support of progressive Americans.

"It is "The New-York Weekly Tribune" acknowledged the country over as the leading National Family Newspaper.

Recognizing its value to those who desire all the news of the State and Nation, the publisher of "The Argus" (your own favorite home paper) has entered into an alliance with "The New-York Weekly Tribune," which enables him to furnish both papers at the trifling cost of $1.75 per year.

Every farmer and every villager owes to himself, to his family, and to the community in which he lives a cordial support of his local newspaper, as its works constantly and unfringingly for his interests in every way, brings to his home all the news and happenings of his neighborhood, the doings of his friends, the condition and prospects for different crops, the prices in home markets, and, in fact, is a weekly visitor which should be found in every wide-awake, progressive family.

Just think of it! Both of these papers for only $1.75 a year.

TABLE ROCK, - - NEBRASKA

NEBRASKA NOTES

The corn is standing up for Nebraska.

A. L. Petitt of Geneva has been declared insane.

Bartley feels like a city since the completion of the telephone line.

3,000 people attended a fraternal picnic held at Beaver Crossing last week.

The canning factory at Beatrice put up 32,000 cans of corn Tuesday of last week.

The Otoe county old settlers' picnic, which was adjourned in July on account of the bad weather, will be held in Morton's park, Nebraska City, September 29 and 30.

George Coil, arrested at Chadron for killing Tom Ryan out on a Dawes county range, pleaded not guily at his preliminary hearing. His trial will be held later.

The prospect of a fine corn crop in the vicinity of Bartley was good until Monday of last week, when a hot wind came along and damaged the corn a considerable amount.

Lloyd Jenks, aged thirteen, was arrested at Lincoln and brought before the police judge for shying a brick or two at Mrs. C. M. Enbody. The boy will be tried September 5.

An Omaha paper publishes a press dispatch from Jacksonville, Ill., where Miss Viola Horlocker is now staying at a private sanitarium, saying that her defense at the trial, soon to occur at Hastings, will be that she was hypnotized.

The state banking board issued another charter to a new bank Friday of last week. The institution will be started at Osmond, Pierce county, by W. A. Hubbard, president, and F. K. Diserrens and Lewis E. Day, with a paid-up capital stock of $10,000.

John McCawley, a farmer near Friend, discovered a nearly nude woman running wild in his corn field. She was captured, and proved to be a half-demented woman named Rosa Wilds, who lives about five miles north of Crete. She was returned to her home, from which she had been absent about a week.

The subscription paper started for the benefit of the families left by the four Omaha firemen who were killed some time ago by an electric current following the ladder down to where the men were working at the cranks, has not increased very rapidly of late. It was at first proposed to raise $1,000 for each of the families, but up to date the total amount is but $1,400.

Quartermaster Frank Myers of the Second regiment has been mentioned as a candidate for major of his regiment. He has written a letter in which he says he has not made a canvass and that he is not a candidate. Captain E. J. Streight of Lincoln, Captain Ernest H. Phelps of Schuyler, and Captain John W. McDonnell, formerly in command of Company D, Fairbury, are still in the race.

The First Nebraska regiment received their first substantial welcome from Lincoln in the shape of 100 boxes of the best peaches California produces. Hargreaves Bros. of Lincoln telegraphed George D. Kellogg, the famous packer of California fruit, at Newcastle, Cal., to deliver to the regiment 100 boxes of the "finest freestone peaches," which was done.

P. J. Backus of South Omaha has sued Armour & Co. for $1,999 damages on account of the loss of a thumb and finger by his 14-year-old son, Roy Backus, who was employed in the glue department of the packing house. It is claimed that the platform upon which the boy had to stand was allowed to become wet and slippery and that the boy slipped thereon, throwing his right hand into the machinery with the above results.

Jesse Smith, a 15-year-old lad of Fremont, arrived at that town Thursday of last week, fresh from Manila. He went straight to the home of his grandfather, Tom McDonald, across the river in Saunders county. He ran away from his mother in Omaha two years ago, stowed away and went to Manila, was adopted by the Oregon regiment as its mascot, came back with the regiment and hit the freight trains home. It was not known where he was until a short time ago.

Some time ago Engineer Bennett, who runs out of Hastings on the Burlington, received an injury on the hand by a bolt being blown out of the steam chest. It caused a painful injury. He took a lay-off and went to Fort Scott, Kas. When he arrived there the wound was causing much trouble, and his hand was swollen and inflamed. He was directed to a Mr. Bollinger of Fort Scott who is the owner of a mad stone. When the stone was first applied to the wound it commenced to burn the flesh. Repeated applications almost entirely cured the trouble. This is said to be the first instance where a mad stone has been used to cure blood poisoning.

The clerks in the governor's office are kept busy making out the receipts for the contributions to the train fund. Many checks were received after the necessary amount had been secured and these are being returned to the donors. To the others the receipts will be sent. In a case where a town sends a contribution the receipt is made out to the mayor as the trustee for the contributors. This receipt is to be officially recorded in each town and when the proper time comes and the legislature refunds the money it will be forwarded to the mayor of each town and in turn returns it to the contributors.

Plans of City Engineer Munn of Nebraska City for a gymnasium at the institute for the blind at Nebraska City have been accepted by the board of public lands and buildings. The estimate calls for a building costing $4,086 and the amount available for the work is $4,500.

The directors of the Lincoln auditorium have let the contract for the building to T. P. Harrison, and it is hoped to have it ready for use by the time the holidays arrive. The seating capacity will be from 3,000 to 4,000. It will cost $18,000 to $20,000 to finish and equip it comfortably.

CHAPTER XIII.

Marguerite judged it best to tell Mrs. Acland all the story of her long period of mental forgetfulness, and received in return several interesting details concerning the courtship of this hateful unknown Arthur Phillips, who, it appeared, used to bring her flowers, and take her out for walks, and for whom she used to watch with intense eagerness day after day.

"I seen you more'n once holding him round the neck, and crying fit to break your heart; and he always seemed fond of you, too—that he did, and gentle with you as a woman would be."

"Mrs. Acland," almost whispered Marguerite, her cheeks burning with shame, "what was he like? Do you remember?"

"Oh, my dear, I ain't no hand at describing the quality. I couldn't tell you. Not right-down handsome, but looked a real gentleman."

"A real gentleman? Yes, I should think so!" she answered in a tone of bitter contempt. "Mrs. Acland, this is very horrible for me to hear, but it is necessary. Tell me—this man used to come and see me every day?"

"Whenever your uncle weren't there, my dear; and when it got to be dusk, he'd take you out for a walk along the shore, and you'd be as pleased as pleased could be. You'd come a-running to me, your pretty face all aglow, and your hands stretched out, with—'Oh, dear Mrs. Acland, do please let Sarah dress me—he's a-going to take me walkin'.' We had no bright days' nor running nor jumping when your uncle was about. No, indeed! We was as mum as a mouse then; and Sarah, she used to say, 'See how frightened the poor thing is of him.' We was both fond of you, that we was; an' he, too—this fine Mr. Phillips. 'Mind you take care of her, Mrs. Acland,' he'd say, 'an' I'll make it worth your while!'

"MIND YOU TAKE CARE OF HER, MRS. ACLAND," HE'D SAY.

—which, to say truth, he did, though I've always regretted I listened to him ever since, an' it's laid heavy on my conscience, my dear."

Marguerite wrung her hands. Oh, to be a man—a man, that she might be revenged on the base wretch who took advantage of her helpless innocence!

"You must be able to give me some idea of what he looked like," she cried—"something more definite than your opinion that he was a gentleman!"

"Well, I'll tell you this much—he was a tall man, slender and not much color."

"Was he dark or fair?"

"Fair"—promptly.

"Tall and fair and blackhearted!" murmured Marguerite. "Oh, how I hate him! Do you say he used to bring me flowers, Mrs. Ackland?"

"My dear, the most beautiful! You was so fond of flowers. I remember now the sorts he used to bring you—always red and yellow roses and heaps of fern."

Marguerite's eyes instinctively wandered to the table, where her sumptuous morning's instalment of flowers was ranged in a large bowl. Red and yellow roses! A strange coincidence. For a moment the wild idea crossed her mind that the unknown sender of these flowers might be her husband. Red and yellow roses at once lost their charm. She turned away from them with a gesture of disgust.

"Oh, Mrs. Acland," she exclaimed, "you don't know how dreadfully miserable I am! I don't know what to do. Was any one ever in such a dreadful position—neither married nor single!"

"Ay, and with a sweetheart of your own, to—I'll be bound," said Mrs. Acland sympathetically.

The sudden flush upon the girl's face answered her.

"Dear, dear, I do feel sorry for you, poor child!" said the woman, whose pity exasperated Marguerite.

"Mrs. Acland," she asked abruptly, "should you know this—this Phillips again if you saw him?"

"That I should, my dear; unless he's altered strangely," was the encouraging reply.

"That's right. I will just write down your description of him to tell my lawyer. Where did you lay that marriage certificate? I shall want to show him that, too."

"Now, my dear," said Mrs. Acland, "here's what I can't help thinking'll be likely of more use to you than that marriage certificate; and I took and copied that off a letter Mr. Phillips wrote. He wrote it and left it by accident on the table while he took you out walking; and when he came in, I saw he was in a fine taking at the thought of my having seen it." She laid a piece of paper before Marguerite's eyes. "D. Brandon, Esq., High Lees, Great Woodenham, Hunts."

Marguerite looked steadfastly at the address.

"You are right, Mrs. Acland," she said, with repressed excitement in her tones—"this is the very thing I have wanted." And even as she gazed at the paper her resolution was taken. She was all alone; there was no one to hinder her, no one to object. She would take the train and go and visit these scenes of her childhood.

"I believe," she murmured, "if once I stood there and saw the place before me, I should remember all about it."

CHAPTER XIV.

It was a beautiful autumn day. The Virginia creeper on the little wayside station of Great Woodenham, a mass of scarlet and gold, rustled every now and then in the light breeze. The distances melted in blue mist; the dew still lay in heavy beads on the long grass of the banks and ditches, as Marguerite stepped from the London train and looked about her with wondering, observant eyes.

She formed a very fair picture as she stood there, in a neat, well-fitting gray morning dress, and white straw sailor-hat trimmed with a knot of white ribbons. Even the solitary porter forgot himself in admiration of her pretty face and charming figure. Marguerite did not see him; she was gazing at the board on which the name of the station was painted in large black letters.

"Great Woodenham—for High Lees and Clarisdale." She had not grasped the fact that she was coming so near to Clarisdale. Why, she was within a few miles of Bernard, and of her legal adviser, Mr. Martineau! Suppose she were to meet them! Her cheeks burned at the thought. Turning, she beckoned to the admiring porter.

"In which direction is Clarisdale from here?" she asked.

"About five miles west o' this, miss; but there ain't no village to speak of—only Lord Umfraville's place."

"Oh—and which is the way to High Lees?"

"Right out the other way, miss—rather better 'n three mile, miss."

"Does Mr. Brandon still live there?"

"Yes, miss; but his house is two mile good beyond the village. It's a long tramp, miss."

"Oh, I am a good walker! I suppose, when I get to the village, any one would direct me to Mr. Brandon's?"

"Oh, yes, miss."

"Then will you tell me the nearest way to the village?"

He gave the necessary direction and with a bright "Thank you," she started off.

Marguerite walked on in a state of mind strangely divided between exhilaration and fear. The fresh, pure air, the blue sky, the waving trees, and, above all, the sense of enterprise and daring, were delightful to her. But presently, to her astonishment, she found that the old habitual terror of her uncle was creeping over her. She began to realize that it was scarcely prudent to trust herself alone to the tender mercies of the man who had already adopted such measures to be rid of her. She began to think that she was foolhardy; but, being thus far on the journey, nothing would have induced her to turn back. She walked on briskly, secure in the thought that every step was taking her farther from Clarisdale, and that there really was no chance of her being seen. As to Mr. Brandon, she did not want to see him; she wanted to see Cathie; and her remembrance of the back entrance to the house was so vivid that she felt certain that she could accomplish her object. Anyhow, she was in for it—the issue must be left to fate.

She felt the longing for certainty greater than ever. Come what might, she must ascertain who and what was Arthur Phillips, and whether he was living or dead. A letter from Bernard lay in her pocket—a letter full of Lady Mildred.

"This is such an ideal house," he wrote. "Mine shall be managed just the same. You should know Lady Mildred—in fact, you must know her. She could teach you so much, especially as regards dress—she understands the art to perfection; and, when you see her, you must take hints; though of course your style and hers are very different," etc.

The letter hurt Marguerite's feelings, though of course she owned bitterly to herself that it was true. She was absolutely ignorant of everything which Bernard Selwyn's wife should know. She paused against a stile leading into a cornfield, and sat down a minute to rest, for she had walked a couple of miles at a very rapid rate. As she sat, she heard the galloping of horses behind her on the road, and the sound of laughter and voices. Urged by an impulse she hardly understood, she climbed over the stile, and paused on the other side, hidden by the hedge, to see the riders go by. Just as they reached that part of the road they slackened to a foot-pave, and she could both see and hear distinctly. There were three young men and two girls, all well mounted and in high spirits. They were all looking behind them.

"No sign of them!" cried one of the ladies.

"My dear Miss Talbot, you won't see them again this morning; they are off as usual. Perhaps Lady Mildred is showing him the short cut to the Home Farm again!" There was evidently a joke here. They all burst out laughing.

"Selwyn is awfully hard hit, isn't he?" said one of the men.

"It will be a fine thing for the Umfraville estates," remarked another, and then the voices became indistinct as the party passed on down the lane.

Marguerite stood still. Of course she had known it all before, but it seemed notwithstanding to come upon her with a sudden shock. She bowed her head on the stile, and gave way to her trouble for a time. She did not know how long she stood there; she only knew that what roused her was the sound of more horses' feet. She started and shivered, but it was too late to move. Holding on by the rough wood for support, she saw them ride slowly past—saw Lady Mildred's pale, proud face, noted the downward curve of her expressive mouth, saw Bernard riding close—ah, so close!—but could not catch the low words that he was speaking. So they passed, and it seemed to Marguerite as if the life and gladness of the sunny day passed with them. She waited till the last echo of horses' feet had died away in the distance, and then climbed resolutely back into the lane and continued her journey. She did not care for twenty Daniel Brandons now. Nothing, she thought, could ever stir her emotions again—love and fear were dead together.

"I have lived and loved," she said to herself, "and now it is all over. Others have had harder things to bear. I can bear this."

On the Top Floor of a Hotel to Avoid the Noise at Home.

A sad-faced man with iron gray hair and a tired manner walked into a hotel, bowed to the clerk who greeted him, by name, and took the key held out to him. "High?" he asked. "Top," answered the clerk with a smile. The man wrote his name in the register and followed it with that of a popular summer town near New York. As he walked to the elevator, the clerk turned to a man leaning on the counter. "So long as the Fourth of July continues to be celebrated and that man lives," he said, "this hotel will never be without one guest on the national holiday. While everybody else is hurrying out of town, he is making his way for this hotel from his country place. He lives near a small town which has lately become the center of a fashionable country house district. He is the father of several children and a man of wealth. But he suffers from nerves. The Fourth of July is too much for them. He says that the fireworks get into working order twenty-four hours ahead of time in the country and he cannot stand the nervous wear and tear. Nor does he want to interfere with the pleasure of people who like to hear noise and smell powder. So he has come here on this day every summer for the past four years, taken a room on the top floor where he can hear nothing and passed the night and day as quietly as if it were not the day his family, friends and neighbors are celebrating."—New York Sun.

WOMEN'S CLUB

And the Reason for Their Rapid Growth of Late Years.

It was at a woman's club, after the meeting, and when the hum and buzz of feminine voices were intermingled with the clatter of spoons and temporarily hushed by the mouthfuls of ice cream, that the following conversation took place between two women, one of whom was an ardent club woman, as could easily be seen by the string of medals and insignia which ornamented the front of her bodice, while the other was just the ordinary everyday woman. "My dear," said the club woman, grabbing her companion's hand, I must be going. I am due at a meeting of the daughters of Lafayette Post, and then I must drop in for a moment and see Mrs. Blank about our next meeting and the topic for discussion." "How do you find time for all these clubs and what does your husband say to all this running about?" "Ten years ago it was I who sat at home and waited till between 5 and 6 for him to come home. 'Mais nous avons change tout cela,' he sits home and waits for me now. I have been out since 9 this morning and I am just looking like a tramp now. Well, he does not seem to mind it; he is just as good and dear as he can be. We board you know, and I never had any children. But good bye; I shall see you again at the 'Justicia,' shall I not?" Is this the solution of the abnormal growth of woman's clubs, "We board, you know, and I never had any children." Is it the lack of motherhood which has driven her into the clubs?

Luck.

"How would you define luck?" was asked of the man who has made more money than he knows what to do with. "It is the product of a reasonable amount of ability, backed by tenacity."—Detroit Free Press.

DU PATY IS WANTED

Dreyfus Case Hinges on De Clam's Presence.

ALL THE OTHERS ARE DEAD.

Army Staff Conspires to Keep du Paty de Clam Away and a Prejudiced Court a Willing Instrument in Their Hands—Dramatic Scenes in Court Room.

"Dead men tell no tales." This is the barricade behind which General Mercier and the general staff have intrenched themselves.

But there is one weak point in their defense—Colonel Du Paty de Clam—and the military clique know it, and are striving to the utmost to keep him out of M. Labori's clutches. If they can prevent Du Paty de Clam, who is now called the "sick man of the Dreyfus affair," from appearing at the witness bar, they can effectually put the silence of the tomb between truth and justice. M. Labori is fighting tooth and nail to drag him into court, but Colonel Jouaust persists in lending him the necessary assistance. He declines to send reputable doctors to officially report on the state of Du Paty de Clam's health, which, every Dreyfusard firmly believes, is only diplomatically affected and that he will recover quickly enough after the trial.

M. Labori hit the nail on the head Saturday when, replying to General Mercier's remarks, he exclaimed: "Always the dead, Sandherr dead, Henry dead, Du Paty de Clam is not coming."

Colonel Jouaust immediately cut him short, declaring he must not make observations, and M. Labori staggered and fell back into his seat with a despairing gesture.

Colonel Jouaust was not so particular in stopping the stream of irrelevant gossip which flowed from the lips of the military witnesses who have defied before the court during the past fortnight. While, however, the Dreyfusards believe Du Paty de Clam is not seriously ill, they feel a secret dread, which is expressed in the significant remark, not infrequently heard: "Sandherr is dead, Henry committed suicide, and Du Paty de Clam will die."

The confrontation of Colonel Maurel, Captain Freystaeter and General Mercier was an instructive exposure of the fraud and dishonesty of the general staff, which the absence of Du Paty de Clam alone prevented from being complete. The defense might demand that a commission be sent to examine Du Paty de Clam on his sick-bed. But M. Labori and M. Demange despair of obtaining a satisfactory result therefrom. They want to have Du Paty de Clam in court and turn the screws of the rack themselves.

Captain Freystaeter was called to the bar. His opening statement was grape and canister for the Mercier gang. He gave the lie direct to Colonel Maurel, who had stated that he had only read one of the secret documents at the first trial. Captain Freystaeter said: "Not only did I read them, but Colonel Maurel read them, and made commentaries after each." This was the lie direct, and Colonel Maurel confessed himself a liar when he objected to the use of the term, "commentaries" as used by Freystaeter. Maurel was hissed by the crowd.

Mercier was called, and first he was allowed to question Freystaeter, endeavoring to catch him on a question regarding the Robin shell, but Freystaeter confounded him by answering that he did not say the document referred to the Robin shell, but to a shell, and the simple answer showed up the craftiness of General Mercier. Captain Freystaeter quoted the Panizzardi dispatch to the court martial, flatly contradicting Mercier.

Then M. Labori started in on General Mercier. Mercier saw the trap he was about to get into and shifted his position by declaring that it was not du Paty de Clam who compiled the dossier, but the late Colonel Sandherr.

Today's session tore the last shred of credit from Mercier, but added the name of Freystaeter to the little roll of heroes who have risked everything in the defense of Dreyfus. One needs to be in the very midst of the storm of passion now raging in France to appreciate the height of moral courage to which Captain Freystaeter has risen in coming forward to the defense of the truth against the army chiefs. They are simply furious at the thorough exposure, and all blame Maurel for falling into the trap laid for him by M. Labori in Thursday's cross-examination, although it is difficult to see what else Maurel could have done.

After the court rose and all the public were supposed to be excluded, General Mercier accosted Colonel Maurel in the court yard and gave him a piece of his mind, even going to the extent of calling him a blockhead. Maurel vainly protested his helplessness and the impossibility of warding off Labori's home thrusts in view of Captain Freystaeter's testimony. Finally Mercier left him in a temper.

GERMAN CRISIS PASSED.

William Bottles His Wrath at Defeat Over Canal Bill.

The political developments in Berlin last week were highly interesting. The unexampled defeat of the government in the diet, which, after emphatic utterance at Dortmund, was a personal defeat for Emperor William, has engrossed attention to the exclusion of everything else. The fact that the blow was dealt by the conservatives, a party which has been favored and nursed for generations at the expense of every other party, made the event all the more sensational. The absence of his majesty complicated the situation, for the cabinet and the emperor, not having expected the rejection of the canal bill, no provision was made as to what steps the government would take on such an event.

Rejoice Over Kaiser's Defeat.

The English weekly newspapers make no effort to conceal their satisfaction at the rejection of the German canal bills.

At the county conventions in the different parts of Ohio the delegates for the democratic state convention at Zanesville next Tuesday and Wednesday was completed, showing the following results for the nomination for governor:

Out of 802 there art only 589 instructed as follows: McLean 158, Kilbourne 69, Sherwood 36, Seward 11, Chapman 7, Haskell 8.

Of the 513 uninstructed votes, the McLean men are as confident of 350 as of those having instructed delegates, making the McLean vote 478 on the first ballot, or seventy-six more than necessary.

WAS NEAR TO DEATH'S DOOR

L. M. Crawford Took an Overdose of Sulphate of Atrophine.

L. M. Crawford, Lincoln, took a fifth of a grain of sulphate of atrophine and and one-half a grain of morphine Friday and came near dying from the effects of it. He was found on his hands and knees at Ninth and N streets. The police took him to the station and called Mayor Winnett, who administered an antidote for the poison. Crawford took the drug at his room in the Ledwith block and later went out. He has been addicted to the morphine habit and was told to take atrophine to cure himself of the habit. An average dose of atrophine is 1-150 of a grain, and the drug is deadly poison. Mayor Winnett said the dose taken would have killed him had he not taken the morphine with it. As it was he had a very narrow call, but the mayor thinks he will pull through all right.

Government May Act.

The French government has decided to prosecute the Eclair for the publication of the "Canaille de D—" document, one of the four documents secretly communicated to the Dreyfus court-martial of 1894 and which has been shown not to refer to Captain Dreyfus at all. The object of the government is to discover who communicated it to the Eclair. The assumption is that the communication was made by Colonel du Paty de Clam or possibly by General Gonse.

Sunday evening it was rumored that the government had also decided to arrest General Mercier, but the rumor is not confirmed.

Captain Carter Case.

There is every reason to believe that the long delayed decision in the case of Captain Oberlin M. Carter will be forthcoming from the white house within ten days after President McKinley's return. Carter's crimes are estimated to have cost the government two millions of dollars. The worst of the situation is that those who are probably almost equally guilty with him will probably escape, as the statute of limitations will bar any criminal proceedings.

Decamps With Much Cash.

Dimetri Frielander, treasurer of the united Russian churches of Chicago, private banker and agent of the Wacker & Birk Brewing company, is missing, and at the same time an amount variously estimated at from $40,000 to $100,000 has disappeared.

A dispatch from Johanesburg says that a dispatch received from Pretoria is to the effect that both General Joubert and President Kruger favor sending a special peace commission to England, composed of members of the volksraad, headed by F. W. Reitz, state secretary.

The acute situation at Darien, Ga., between negroes and whites is better, but the blacks remain armed. Many of the negroes are yet in the swamps, but quite a number surrendered to the soldiers, preferring to do so rather than fall into the hands of the sheriff's posse. It is believed the threatened race war on account of the Delegal murders has been averted.

Chinese Children.

One evening there will be about four miles of little lanterns sent floating down the great river in honor of the dead. Or there will be the baking rice cakes, with many curious ceremonials. And in it all the child takes his part, and his elders are very kind to him, and never bother him with cleaning up or putting on clothes to go out. He strips to the waist or beyond it in summer; then, as the winter comes on, puts on another and another garment, till he becomes as broad as he is long. At night time, perhaps, he takes off some clothes, but they are all the same shape, all quite loose and easy. Then he never need be afraid of breaking anything, for most things are put away, and Chinese things are not like ours; the shining black polished table, for instance, can have a hot kettle stood upon it and be none the worse.

A Cheap Wall Covering.

"Texture is not art," as Edmund Russell puts it; "form and color are, hence the hope of those who must consider expense." This flat of the famous disciple of the artistic was recalled when lately a room was seen with the walls papered in the common brown paper such as butchers use. The peculiar dull finish and the soft, unobtrusive color accorded perfectly with the furnishings of the room, and brought out most effectively all their best points.

Red Hair Wears Best.

Why are red-headed people less subject to baldness than those with fair or brown hair? An English physician has answered this conundrum: The hair of the red-headed is relatively thick, one red hair being as thick as five blonde or three brown hairs. With 3,000 red hairs the scalp is well thatched; with the same number of blonde hairs one is almost bald. It takes 160,000 blonde and 105,000 brown hairs to cover adequately an ordinary head.

For the Summer Picnicker.

It will be well for summer picnickers to bear in mind that a treatment for poisoning from ivy is to wet a slice of bread with water, dust it with common washing soda, and apply to the eruption, keeping the bread wet from the outside. Half an hour of that treatment is said to be a sure cure.

Growing Foreign Mails.

From Scribner's: In 1840 the foreign mail from England for the United States, carried on the Great Western, consisted of two sacks of mail. As late as 1873 a steamer from Europe with 20,000 letters on board was considered a record-breaker. Today the Cunard steamers and other trans-Atlantic ships carrying what is called a "full European mail" usually bring some 200,000 letetrs, and an average of 300 sacks of newspapers and printed matter for New York city, not to mention 500 and odd sacks for Canada, Mexico and trans-Pacific countries, and a few United States exchange offices, which are now taken direct to the trains, and not handled at the New York office.

New Material for Horseshoes.

In Iceland horses are shod with sheep's horn; in the valley of the Upper Oxus the antlers of the mountain deer are used for the same purpose, the shoes being fastened with horn pins; in the Soudan the horses are shod with socks made of camel's skin; in Australia horseshoes have been tried of cowhide. A German not long ago invented a horseshoe of paper, prepared by saturating with oil, turpentine, and other ingredients. Thin layers of such paper are glued to the hoof till the requisite thickness is attained. And the shoes thus made are durable and impenetrable by moisture.

A Sensible Fad.

In Holland it is still the fashion for ladies to wash the dainty china and silver after tea or breakfast in the presence of the family and guests. The same fashion has recently been revived as a fad among American ladies, and it is not only appreciated as giving an air of domesticity to the meal, but also for the practical reason that a lady's gentle handling is needed if pretty glass and china are to be preserved for any length of time. Had our grandmothers entrusted the washing of their tea services to the care of their servants, heirlooms of beautiful old china would be rarer among us than they are now.

Widows in China.

According to the laws of good society in China, young widows should not remarry. Widowhood is, therefore, held in the highest esteem, and the older the widow grows the more agreeable becomes her position. Should she reach 50 years she may, by applying to the emperor, get a sum of money with which to buy a tablet, on which her virtues are named. The tablet is placed over the door at the principal entrance of her house.

Lighting Up the Sea.

A new method of illumination on the ocean consists of using a hollow cylinder of steel tubing, charged with calcium carbide. This shell is to be shot from a gun to a distance of two miles. When it strikes the water it generates acetylene gas and gives 1,000 candle power, which burns from the end which floats. This light cannot be extinguished by water.—Philadelphia Times.

Never Box Nor Pull the Ears.

The reason a blow on the ear may do irreparable injury is that the air, being driven suddenly and violently against the drum of the ear, might rupture the membrane and cause incurable deafness. The ears should never be pulled or meddled with in any way except to wash them in the gentlest manner, the orifice being cleansed with a fold of the washcloth rolled into a little cone.

Sand to Extinguish Fire.

Sand will be used to extinguish fire, if there should be one in the New Telephone company's exchange at Indianapolis. It is used because it is less injurious to the electrical apparatus than water or chemicals would be. The sand is stored in a large tank above the exchange room, and is sifted automatically to any or all parts of the building in such a manner as to smother the fire very effectively.

Yearly Executions in China.

At Canton the average number of executions is about 300 per year, but in 1885 50,000 rebels were beheaded. The headsman formerly received 15s. a head, but the supply and competition have reduced the wage to 2s. apiece Most of the criminals who are beheaded are water pirates or land bandits.

Sapling Lifts Tons.

The power of living seed over the inert weight of tons of rock is very forcibly illustrated by a little sapling which is growing in Erstberg, Germany. The tree is slight enough to be bent with the hands, but is raising in its irresistible growth a mass of rock weighing four tons.

China's Population.

Chinese officials have no definite knowledge regarding the population figures. The tendency is to understate it to foreigners. Some years ago the official figure was reduced arbitrarily from 325,000,000 to 215,000,000, but subsequently the old figure was restored.

Since the beginning of the century no fewer than fifty-two volcanic islands have risen out of the sea. Nineteen of that number have since disappeared, and ten are now inhabited.

CHAPTER XV.

It was midday by the time she reached the village; and being very faint she ventured into the quaint little inn and asked for a glass of milk. To eat seemed impossible; but the mistress of the inn, noticing the frail form and evidences of weariness, brought home-made bread and butter, and suggested that she had better keep up her strength. Little as she felt inclined for it, the food did her good, and, when she had finished, the people directed her to Mr. Brandon's.

"Could you tell me," she asked timidly, "if Mr. Brandon is at home just now?"

The woman giggled, and looked at her daughter, who also giggled.

"No, he ain't," she said.

"He's got married," giggled the daughter.

"And he's gone for his wedding-trip," added the mother.

"Dear me!" said Marguerite, in astonishment.

"Yes. He's married the doctor's daughter. She was a deal too young and pretty for him; but her father, they do say, he made her. The old man's pretty well rolling in money."

"Yes—rolling in my money," inwardly thought Marguerite, as, inspired with fresh resolution, she paid her modest reckoning, and started onwards once more.

Full of thought, she walked rapidly forward, and hardly noticed where she was going, till suddenly she stopped with a start; for she was in a place which she remembered.

It was a large, level meadow, through which ran a stream, shaded by alders and fringed with river weeds.

"BUT IT WAS I," HE SAID, TO MY EVERLASTING DEGRADATION."

A little rustic bridge crossed the stream; and in the distance, behind a clump of dark trees, a thin line of blue smoke went up, showing where the house lay.

Marguerite let herself into the meadow, and wandered across it like one in a dream. She went and stood on the bridge, and stared down at the clear water. Little incidents came crowding upon her memory. It was here she had sat so late, absorbed in her book, on the evening of her attempted escape. She remembered how she had watched the sun behind that very clump of trees; she recalled the splendor of the sky; she heard again the caw of the rooks as they flew home in long graceful lines, looking so densely black against the glowing sky; she almost felt the dampness of the dew on the pasture as her smell feet threaded the misty meadow as she went homeward.

Yielding to the impulse of the moment, she left the bridge and went wandering on, making for a small white wicket, which apeared in the dark private hedge. Step by step she traversed the very way she had gone that evening when she saw her uncle's guest leaning against the porch. She would approach the house this way, not by the drive and front gate. Daniel Brandon was away—there was no one to say her nay.

The wicket clicked under her light touch. A deathly stillness reigned around. Was the watch dog dead, she wondered—the dog whose name she had so often tried to remember? In a path between high clipped walls of privet she paused.

"His name was 'Sultan,' of course," she said; "I remember it well enough."

Her heart beat with a strong agitation as she reached the end of the privet walk. She knew she had but to turn the corner of that clump of flowering shrubs, and she should see the white columns of the heavy porch. Her steps faltered. For a moment she stopped and held her breath. A sort of superstitious fear seized her. She felt as if, once she turned that corner, the solution of her difficulties would stare her in the face. It took but a moment to conquer the feeling. Slowly she passed round the thick barrier of laurel, yew, and holly, and there flashed upon her sight the same picture which had presented itself that evening long ago; and her heart almost ceased to beat for an instant, and her mind was filled with a ghastly consciousness of delusion.

A man was leaning against the white pillar of the porch—a man with his arms folded and his head bowed; his whole attitude was expressive of the most hopeless and absolute dejection. He had not heard her footstep; he remained perfectly motionless, but the girl reeled and staggered back a pace or two in a feeling of helpless terror. The man was there—it was the same man who stood there before—and yet it was the last man whom she would have expected to see.

It was Mr. Martineau!

The rush of ideas was too quick, too instantaneous to enable her to reason; she only fell back as if suddenly struck in the face, and, as it seemed, without her own volition a name spasmodically left her lips.

"Val!" she cried.

The short syllable appeared to ring out like a bell, so startling was the sound.

The man who heard it started; his eyes met those of Marguerite, and for some moments they remained so—each staring at the other with the terror of the first surprise written on their haggard faces. Through the girl's mind was stealing the awful conviction that this was no delusion, but a horrible reality—a thing that could not be rejected. Twice it seemed as if he would speak—twice he made an unavailing movement towards her; then, with a despairing gesture he turned away, and covered his face with his hands.

Slowly, with compressed lips, Marguerite approached him. She went nearer and nearer; and at last, with a strong effort of will, laid a hand upon his arm.

He stared again, and raised his face, gazing at her with a look of dumb, despairing appeal.

"I wanted to see," she said, huskily, "if you were real, or whether you were a nightmare. You are real—you are a man—oh, most unmanly! Oh, coward! What am I to do? Oh, what am I to do?"

"You urged me to confess," said a hollow voice, "but I had not sufficient courage. I dared not tell you what a wretch I was; I could not bear to think of your eyes turned upon me with contempt for a deed so vile. Confession would have been terrible, but not so terrible as this, Marguerite——"

"Hold!" she said, shrinking from him with an air of disgust which made him wince. "Is this true? Is it really so, or are you and I both mad? Tell me—tell me—oh, don't say it! I have liked you so—trusted you so—don't say you are the wretch for whom I have been searching all this time!"

"I am the man who injured you," he said, huskily; "and would give my life to be able to deny it. See," he said, desperately, "I am at your mercy—say what you please to me; do as you like! Set me any penance; I swear to perform it. I loathe myself and my fault. Could a man's humiliation be more complete?"

"You!" she ejaculated, turning imploring, piteous eyes up to his. "You—oh, you!"

"It was worse than Caesar's 'Et tu, Brute!'"

Valdane was rallying his manhood. He had been terribly unnerved at the sight of her. Daily, since he parted from her in London, had he haunted the old house, head and heart filled only with the thought of that one woman. To look up and behold her had been to him only the realization of a daily dream. Now that the first feeling of horror and shame was over, and he stood so utterly condemned, it seemed as if, by comparison, those lost few days had been full of radiant hope. It was over. What remained to him was the bitter humiliation of having to let Bernard Selwyn know of his wrong-doing, and his exile from Marguerite forever.

CHAPTER XVI.

She had walked a few paces away from him; now she came back, and stood looking into his face.

"Oh, say you did not do it!" she cried.

"It would be useless to say so; you know I did it," he returned mournfully. "You remember me; I saw it in your eyes just now. You called me 'Val' as I taught you to do in those old days. I stand convicted. I ask for no mercy."

"Mercy! Did you show me mercy when I was helpless and in your power?" she cried, a burning blush creeping into her face. "Oh, to think of it all! To think of how you used to deceive me—of how I used to——" She hid her cheeks with her hands.

He was blushing as deeply as she; but he struggled for self-control.

"Oh, Marguerite, you torture me!" he said, with a groan. "And you are not content that I am fallen so low? Listen—listen! The other day you urged me to confess—to atone! It was not too late for some poor sort of atonement. I can set you free; and meanwhile—meanwhile"— faltering —"there is something I would tell you. Will you hear me?"

"Yes," she answered, weeping. "I will hear you. I do not want to be unmerciful."

She sat down in the porch seat. Valdane leaned against the pillar and bent over her.

"I should like to tell you here," he said, in a low tone—"here, where we first met. What I want to say is this—there is no need for you to punish me; my punishment has overtaken me already. The retribution is peculiarly just and fitting. The woman I wronged so is the woman I love. Do I insult you by those words? Hardly. Love is free to all. I love you as I never thought to love any woman—with a love which nothing can tear from my heart. Is that not punishment bitter enough—that the one woman I would make my wife should be the woman whose greatest sorrow is the shadow tie that binds her to myself."

She shuddered. There was a fire of passion in his voice which terrified and astonished her.

"See," he said, "when I break that tie—when that marriage of ours is dissolved, I break my heart, too! It is a poor sort of atonement. Such as it is, I lay it at your feet."

She could find no words in which to reply to him. A feeling of pity was stealing over her. She knew the bitterness of a love that was not returned.

"I would give worlds," she faltered presently, "for it to have been any one else but you. But—but——"

"But it was I," he said, "to my everlasting degradation."

There was silence, only broken by an occasional sob from Marguerite. A lark shot up into the sunny sky, and sang rapturously. The branches rustled softly in the breeze; and Valdane longed to prolong each minute that went by—the last minute he should spend with her. At last she stirred.

"I will go back again," she said. There were a few moments of hesitation; then with an effort she said, "Good-by."

The pain seemed too great to bear. He leaned imploringly over her as she sat.

CLIPPED FROM NEWSPAPERS.

In casting about for a suitable gift by which to acknowledge Miss Helen Gould's kindnesses to the soldiers during the late war, Gen. Joseph Wheeler hit upon a novel plan. He had prepared for her a scrap-book containing clippings from all the newspapers and other publications which mentioned her work. These clippings were tastefully arranged and handsomely bound. The volume, now in Miss Gould's hands, shows what the American people think of her praiseworthy work.

For persons in public life, few things are more interesting, and perhaps genuinely instructive, than such a set of clippings. It is true that, coming as they sometimes do from biased newspapers and from publications representing the most irreconcilable opinions, they frequently present the same act in very different lights, but taken altogether, they give a person a chance to see himself as others see him.

So desirable is this that it has become quite a business to clip from the newspapers every reference to certain men, books, ventures and so forth, and to sell these clippings to regular subscribers. Many senators and other public men in Washington and elsewhere are subscribers to one of these clippings bureaus, and so keep themselves informed of everything that is said of them in printer's ink.

Speaker Reed's little office at the hotel in Washington, where he used to live, was decorated with newspaper cartoons in which the speaker himself was caricatured. One of President McKinley's clerks keeps a scrap-book of newspaper references to the administration and its policies, and this the president frequently peruses.

CURED BY JEALOUSY.

How One Woman Was Made Well and Rosy.

It would never do to give any clew to the identity of the physician who conducts a private hospital and who has just successfully accomplished a new departure in medicine, says the San Francisco News Letter. One of the patients is a wealthy but ignorant woman, who has been for many years a confirmed hypochondriac and who has successively tried allopathy, homeopathy, hydropathy, osteopathy—in short everything pathic. The patience of her husband was finally exhausted, and he consented to enter into a conspiracy with the doctor to play upon his wife's jealousy. It was arranged that he should seem deeply smitten with a young widow, healthy, rosy and jolly, who is secretly engaged to be married to a Los Angeleno. There was no question about the unhappy hypochondriac's jealousy. It blazed out in hysterical declaration that the pretty widow was waiting for her old shoes, but she vowed she would get better just to spite her supposed rival and to be avenged upon her faithless husband. She has kept her word and is now certainly fair, fat and forty. But her doctor says she is an example of the jealousy cure.

SLIPPERY SILAS A.

CHOSEN OF POPOCRATS FOR SUPREME COURT

House-Rent Holcomb Gets There With Both Brogans and Tramples the Opposition Thereunder—Popocratic Peculiarities Predominate at Conventions.

The popocrats of Nebraska have done gone and did it, and republicans are consequently happy over the result.

For downright stupidity commend us to the fusionists of Nebraska. Passing by the splendid material in their ranks they picked up the crookedest stick they could find, and amid the violent protests of the decent element in the parties they forced Holcomb to the front for a seat on the bench of the Nebraska supreme court.

From a republican standpoint, the work of the demo-pop aggregation at Omaha is eminently satisfactory. In the first place not more than half of the delegates were on hand, and a whole lot of skirmishing was indulged in to "fill out" delegations with local and visiting fusionists. A showing had to be made some how, and this was the most convenient. After a bit of labor in this direction a fairly good showing was made in the pop and democratic conventions. In the free silver republican convention hall the 60 or 100 delegates present would have felt lost had it not been for Charley Woostens elegant side whiskers. Nearly ten hours were fooled away "getting together," as there was a whole host of recalcitrant bucks who were opposed to the chieftaincy of "Slippery Si," and these had to be whipped into line before the great council could proceed.

However, Bryan and Allen were there and everywhere all forenoon and all afternoon, and their labors in behalf of Holcomb bore fruit when the clans gathered after supper, and Si's nomination was railroaded through according to plans and specifications agreed upon.

Billy Neville was there, too. It wouldn't do for one member of the tripartite trust of Allen, Holcomb & Neville to be absent, and the Judge was on hand to aid and to see that not a cog of the machine "slipped."

Judge Edgar Howard of Papillion, another member of the happy family, was there, but he looked far from being happy. He was a Robinson Crusoe, alone on the desert island, even his man Friday going back on him. He tried hard to get a little company, but he soon discovered the uselessness of bucking against the inevitable and sorrowfully wended his way back to Papillion and is now engaged in deciding which is best for him to do—swallow Slippery Silas and whoop 'er up, or maintain his reputation for consistency. His decision will be anxiously awaited by his popocratic brethren.

Harry Phelps of the Howells Journal wanted to fight because Si was chosen, but no one dared to pluck the chip off his shoulder, and he was not accommodated.

Bryan, the ringmaster, found it very hard work to get the three rings working on the same fake, but he accomplished the task, even if it did cause a careworn expression to assail his usually smiling countenance.

One of the amusing features of the conventions was the adoption of a resolution against passes. The free silver republicans started the ball to rolling, and the others took it up with a more or less gingerly grasp.

They considered it dangerous, but evidently thought that their stand on passes would be considered a straddle if they accepted the resolution and nominated the champion pass grabber of the state for supreme judge. How the people will look at the situation will be found out in November when the ex-governor is snowed under by republican ballots.

Holcomb's nomination has left a very bad taste in the mouths of many fusionists and a serious split is bound to come unless the interests of Bryan are thought to be paramount to consistency. Democrats and populists who have opposed official corruption and pass grabbing were not slow to express their indignation at having to be placed in a position where they had to eat crow or leave their party. But the bosses demanded Silas' nomination and the discontented were forced to accept the supreme court vote juggler, the house-rent absorber and champion pass grabber, Benton Maret, pusher, horns, hoofs and all.

The happy family is not at all happy.

BARRY AGAIN DEFEATED.

No Consolation for Him Even in His Peaceful Slumbers.

North Platte Telegram.

Word comes by wire just as we go to press that General Barry, when he got back to Lincoln, threw himself on the lounge and was soon wrapped in a deep sleep. While thus resting in the arms of Morpheus, he had the following dream: The general in his dream died, and wending his way upward to the outer gate, he knocked with considerable confidence, feeling that his war record should give him open-sesame to the courts above. As the sound echoed through the corridors and died away in the distance, the gate was opened and the general was asked what he wanted. He replied that he had lately attended a political convention, went home disappointed and died, and now he desired to escape from the buffeting and sorrows of the work by entering within the gates of the golden city. St. Peter asked the general his politics, and when he replied that he was a populist, he was informed that parties of that political faith were not permitted to enter, but that he could go round on the bluffs overlooking the city and gaze on the happy conditions within. Slowly and sorrowfully the general wandered around and took his seat on a big boulder high up on the bluffs overhanging the walls. Imagine his surprise when he saw Judge Neville mingling with the happy throng. Greatly astonished the general went back to the gate, and when St. Peter came he said he noticed Neville inside, and that he was a populist and had beaten him for the nomination for congress. St. Peter smiled and said that since Neville was nominated and before he died he had changed his political belief and joined the Salvation army, that being the only party that Neville had not joined at some period of his life. Then the general turned and walked slowly down the pathway, reflecting on the uncertainties of life and the fickleness of human nature.

Won't Be Humbugged

Wayne Herald.

We do not believe there is an honest thinking farmer in Wayne county who will deny that this country is now blessed with prosperity, and that the ranting of the free silverites three years ago when they proclaimed so vigorously that the country would be ruined if Bryan was defeated, was a delusion. Doubtless many of them will register his contempt for such misrepresentation by voting for the party which brought a return of prosperity in addition to having carried on a successful war with Spain, brought on by the continuous singsong of Bryan and his fusion friends in congress. But thinking people will no longer be humbugged by the oratorical Willie. In fact, it is doubtful if he again gets the nomination.

It Is As Leaven.

State Journal.

Up to date there has not appeared one word of sworn testimony to disprove or discredit the findings of the senate investigating committee. There has not been the slightest bit of testimony, explanation or attempt to show mitigating circumstances that would be given the slightest consideration in any court of equity or justice. The report of the investigating committee stands uncontradicted if not unassailed, and the findings are just as clearly impressed on the minds of the people of Nebraska as they would have been had the governor given the document the most spacious pigeon hole in the office.

Holcomb's House Rent.

Wayne Republican.

There are a few reform organs—God spare the name—in the state that have the brazen effrontery to try to make their readers believe that ex-Governor Holcomb only drew from the state treasury the amount actually paid for house rent. These papers evidently believe their readers entirely ignorant of the true facts in the case and trust that their only source of information on such subjects is through the medium of their miserable lying columns.

But They Didn't.

Papillion Times

Very long will be the way, very hard the hills to climb, with Slippery Si Holcomb weighing down the popocratic band wagon in Nebraska. For the good of the state, for the good of Bryan, we beg the popocratic conventions to keep Holcomb's name off the ticket.

Free and unlimited pass grabbing was knocked down and up at Omaha. Down when the resolution was adopted and up when Slippery Si, as Edgar Howard calls him, was nominated.

The crop of popocratic discontent bids fair to be as great or greater than the corn crop. The seed of dissension was well watered in Omaha when they turned Si loose.

We really feel sorry for Edgar Howard. He must talk, of course, but in this case, what can he say?

Nebraska republicans are in sight of victory: Nominate a good clean man, and we are safe.

Popocracy seems destined to bear the Holcomb incubus even unto the bitter end.

Cider and Bacteria.

Cider is sometimes made with impure water, and there are makers who affirm that dirty water makes the best cider. Hence the Pasteur Institute of France has been examining Normandy ciders to see how far they are free from bacteria. It appears from their results that the malic acid in cider tends to kill bacteria. Ordinary cider contains at least 2 per cent of malic acid, and when the percentage does not fall below that the bacillus of typhoid fever dies in it after 18 or 20 hours. Good cider, then, may be drunk 24 hours after it is made without any fear of catching typhoid.

Fined for Paying Too Much.

Every bill posted on the boardings in France has to bear a revenue stamp, the value of which varies according to the size of the poster, says the Revue des Arts Graphique. A country advertiser recently was unfortunate enough to affix a stamp of fifteen centimes' value to a bill for which six centimes only should have been paid. The irregularity resulted in a summons and fine of 125 francs.

Berlin has added sign painters to the daily increasing list of women who work at men's trades. These women have served a regular apprenticeship, including gymnastic training, so that they will not lose their nerve while working on scaffolds or ladders. They wear the gray linen frock and cap that is the house painter's badge as well as his shield from paint.

Street of Undertakers.

A Letter to Mrs. Pinkham Brought Health to Mrs. Archambo.

[LETTER TO MRS. PINKHAM NO. 42,395]

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—For two years I felt tired and so weak and dizzy that some days I could hardly go around the house. Backache and headache all the time and my food would not digest and had such pains in the womb and troubled with leucorrhœa and kidneys were affected.

"After birth of each child I grew weaker, and hearing so much of the good you had done, I wrote to you and have taken six bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, one box of Lozenges, one box of Liver Pills, one package of Sanative Wash, and today I am feeling as well as I ever did. When I get up in the morning I feel as fresh as I did when a girl and eat and sleep well and do all of my work. If ever I feel weak again shall know where to get my strength. I know your medicine cured me."—MRS. SALINA ARCHAMBO, CHARLEMONT, MASS.

The present Mrs. Pinkham's experience in treating female ills is unparalleled; for years she worked side by side with Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, and for sometime past has had sole charge of the correspondence department of her great business, treating by letter as many as a hundred thousand ailing women a year. All women who suffer are invited to write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for advice, which will be promptly given without charge.

How Silhouettes Originated.

Silhouette, a profile in black, is so called from Etienne de Silhouette, controlleur des finances, 1757, who made great savings in the public expenditures of France. Some say the black portraits were called silhouettes in ridicule; others assert that Mr. Silhouette devised this way of taking likenesses to save expenses.

Mr. W. H. Ijams, who has been recently re-elected treasurer of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, has been in the employ of the company for forty-six years, and has been treasurer since May, 1866. When a small boy in Baltimore he saw the great parade that Baltimoreans arranged to celebrate the laying of the corner-stone of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad on July 4, 1828.

JAS. TILLOTSON, Committeeman.

The fusion county convention will be held at Pawnee on Saturday, September 23rd, when the lambs for the sacrifice will be selected.

The state auditor made a big bluff against the state horticultural society appropriation, the society called him and he held a nine spot against a full house.

Attorney Graham, of Pawnee, has a pole out for the republican nomination for County Judge and was here on Monday to see if the fishing was good.

The attendance at the Wymore reunion was large and the old vets express themselves as much pleased with the reception given them by the city on the Blue.

Albert Story, fusion candidate for district judge, is a nice fellow, but his qualifications for the position to which he aspires are as thin as a bald-headed man's conscience.

Patriots everywhere will applaud this sentiment by President McKinley: "It is the flag of the free, the hope of the oppressed, and wherever it is assailed at any sacrifice it will be carried to triumphant peace."

A E Lane is reported as having a cinch on the fusion nomination for county treasurer. Two years ago Addy was betrayed in the house of his friends, and was knocked out of the nomination and the fellows who did it are sorry now.

Conductor Monte's little boy was severely burned yesterday afternoon by getting his left arm in a kettle of hot preserves. Dr Given dressed the injured member, but says that it will be some time before the little fellow recovers.—Wymore Wymorean.

If Aguinaldo is the great intelligent lover of his people that some people would have us believe, he proved it beyond cable when he placed 400 of his subjects on the firing line at the first big battle, armed only with bows and arrows to face the American rifles.

Aguinaldo, a patriot! When the American people elevates the man whose hand is raised against them, whose subjects are attempting to kill off the brave boys of the American army, to the place of patron saint of patriotism, then are we unfit to wear the glorious crown of American citizenship.

According to his Tipton, Mo., speech, Colonel Bryan has captured and caged the trust octopus, and we expect to have it exhibited over the country. We already hear him shout to the street-corner crowd: "Step up gentlemen and see the only octopus on exhibition today. It will cost you but one dollar to get a glimpse of the mighty monster that is sapping the life-blood of this nation!" and the persuasive elequence of his voice will lead thousands of the unterrified to pay their money and take a peep.

The republican county central committee met at Pawnee last Saturday afternoon and issued a call for a county convention, which will be held at Pawnee on Saturday, September 9th, and the primaries for selecting delegates will be held on Friday, the 8th. The offices of treasurer, clerk, judge, sheriff, superintendent, district clerk and coroner are to be filled and delegates to the state convention to be held at Omaha on the 21st and to the judicial convention to be held at Tecumseh on the 25th of September are to be selected. The committee recommends that at the caucus candidates for precinct offices be chosen. It is important that good men and true be selected all along the line.

It appears that people generally are greatly mistaken in their notion that there is an enormous surplus of unmarried women in this country. The truth is that no such excess of spinsters exists; in fact, it is quite the other way, the bachelors outnumbering the maidens. At the present moment there are in the United States 2,200,000 more unmarried males than females similarly situated, the exact figures being 5,427,767 bachelors against 3,224,594 spinsters of ages from 20 years up. Thus it is obvious that if girls do not find husbands it not for lack of a plentiful supply of the article. What is required, seemingly, is a general migration of spinsters from the North and East to the great and growing West, in parts of which there are ten available males for every maid.

Thomas Cox, who was recently shot by W S Locke, on the latter's farm near Beatrice, while it is claimed he was undertaking to raid the latter's watermelon patch, has sworn out a complaint against Locke charging him with shooting with intent to kill. The complaint was sworn to in Justice Inman's court at Beatrice, and a warrant issued there from. Locke was arrested last night and the hearing set for 2 p m yesterday. Mr Locke is defended by Hon Geo A Murphy, while the state prosecutes. The hearing was continued to September 20, by agreement of attorneys in order that important witnesses, now absent, may be summoned. Mr Locke was released on his own recognizance in $500 for his appearance.—Beatrice Express.

Kretsinger and Story.

Tecumseh, Neb., Aug. 26.—(Special to the State Journal.)—Things political popped in this city yesterday, the occasion being the triangular judicial convention of the populists, democrats and free silver republicans of the First district. Just for the looks of thing each party held a separate meeting to start in with. Men were named in each meeting as members of a go-between committee, and as the business of importance was the selecting of two candidates for judge, the committee retired for a reading of the slate. In conformity with previous arrangements the names of E O Kretsinger of Gage and A S Story of Pawnee were suggested to each meeting. Without objection the two names went through each convention with a hurrah. Scarcely could the delegates remain in their respective gathering after this long enough to dispose of the unimportant business such as the selection of central committees, etc., and at the earliest opportunity each assembly adjourned, only to reconvene in one grand love feast, when noisy speeches prevailed and pent up enthusiasm was allowed to escape.

Word was received in this city last week that Mr and Mrs Will Weber of Salida, Colo., are the happy parents of bright eyed baby girl. Will says the state of Colorado is not large enough for him while Grandma and Grandpa Henry Jones are the happiest people in the county.—Pawnee Press.

Kerosene and Poultry Mites.

When the hatching season is over the roosting perches should be given a weekly application of kerosene—not a slight sprinkling, but a good, thorough soaking.

The best time for this is just before the fowls go to roost, as the fumes from the kerosene will do much toward driving the mites from the fowls.

Of course, care must be used with the fowls intended for exhibition, as the oil will produce a dullness in the plumage.

If fowls are badly overrun with mites, a mixture of lard and kerosene rubbed well into the feathers will rid them of the insects, and as the old feathers will soon give way to a new suit the beauty of the plumage will not be in the least affected.

All old nests and litter should now be removed and burned, and new clean straw should take their places. The young fowls which are old enough to want to roost on perches should be allowed to go into the house with the old fowls.

If any leak appears in the roof repair it now, and do not wait till the rain sets in. Bank up the ground on the outside, so that the house will be comfortable, and arrange the scratching shed so that when needed it will be ready for use.—Home and Farm.

WOMAN'S COLUMN.

For the third time in 21 years Mrs E A Fulton presided over the W C T U convention of the First District in Tecumseh. Not very many delegates were present the first afternoon but a season of prayer and song was led by Mrs Denmee followed by a social hand shake as signing of delegates to their place of entertainment etc. At night the house was crowded with people anxious to hear the young people who were to contest for a silver medal. Mayor Warren gave us a hearty welcome saying that he would gladly do this even if he knew nothing of our work and aims as he knew the women of America as a rule stood for everything good especially good government. Miss Lyey Dodge of Salem responded very aptly, the choir sang appropriate songs and then seven contestants gave us ringing temperance recitations. All rendered their selections well and the contest was very close, the one that won the medal, Maud Aldrich being only 2¼ points ahead of two others, six of the contestants ranging from forty-two to forty-seven and a half. Their ages range from 12 to 14, six girls and one boy taking part. We are glad the boys have not dropped out entirely and those who have courage thus to take part in entertaining and educating the public will doubtless be among our coming statesman. This one Charley Glasson rendered his piece well and only needs practice to make an easy and effective speaker. Rev Whitmer in presenting the medal gave a little incident as told by Mrs Gougar who was being entertained at the home of the Democrat when a draft for $15000 for manufacture of medals was presented to him for payment. He said this is one of the happiest moments of my life to be able to help forward such a good cause. Rev Whitmer paid this tribute to Mrs Gougar, saying he had been entertained in her home in Indiana and he would gladly give five dollars any time to be entertained by her, or give a dollar an hour for the privilege of plying her with questions as she is one of the noblest, best informed minds in America. Thursday reports from Union's, was an interesting feature on the program. Four old unions Humboldt, Salem, Falls City and Cook have been reorganized and are doing good work and two new unions organized, Mission Creek and Adams. Most of these unions were represented by active, interested delegates. Twenty-one unions reported and most of them have had quite an increase of membership in the last year. Interesting papers on the W C T U in Social Life, Suffrage, Press Work, and Scientific Temperance Instruction, were read and briefly discussed the time being all too short. Thursday night Rev Eugenis St John was to have given an address but did not come and Rev Lucy E Dodge gave an excellent talk along the lines of practical temperance work. Friday morning finished up Superintendents reports and business of convention when a very interesting Mother's meeting was held. The officers elected were Mrs E A Fulton, President; Mrs N S Wright, Corresponding Secretary; Mrs Alice Hornly of Adams, Recording Secretary and Mrs Demaree, Treasurer.

A Narrow Escape.

Thankful words written by Mrs Ada E Hart, of Groton, S D. "Was taken with a bad cold which settled on my lungs; cough set in and finally terminated in Consumption. Four Doctors gave me up, saying I could live but a short time. I gave myself up to my Savior, determined if I could not stay with my friends on earth, I would meet my absent ones above. My husband was advised to get Dr King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. I gave it a trial, took in all eight bottles. It has cured me, and thank God, I am saved and now a well and healthy woman." Trial bottles free at S G Wright's Drug Store. Regular size 50c. and $1.00. Guaranteed or price refunded.

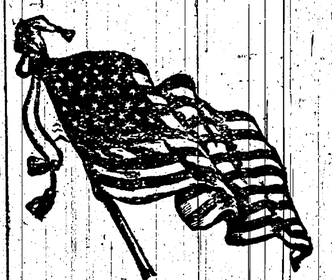
NEARLY

Fifty-Eight Years Old!



Its a long life, but devotion to the true interests and prosperity of the American People has won for it new friends as the years rolled by and the original members of its family passed to their reward, and these admirers are loyal and steadfast today, with faith in its teachings, and confidence in the information which it brings to their homes and firesides.

As a natural consequence it enjoys in its old age all the vitality and vigor of its youth, strengthend and ripened by the experiences of over half a century.

It has lived on its merits, and on the cordial support of progressive Americans.

"It is "The New-York Weekly Tribune," acknowledged the country over as the leading National Family Newspaper.

Recognizing its value to those who desire all the news of the State and Nation, the publisher of "The Argus," (your own favorite home paper) has entered into an affiahee with "The New-York Weekly Tribune," which enables him to furnish both papers at the trifling cost of $1.75 per year.

Every farmer and every villager owes to himself, to his family, and to the community in which he lives a cordial support of his local newspaper, as its works constantly and untiringly for his interests in every way, brings to his home all the news and happenings of his neighborhood, the doings of his friends, the condition and prospects for different crops, the prices in home markets, and, in fact, is a weekly visitor which should be found in every wide-awake, progressive family.

Just think of it! Both of these papers for only $1.75 a year.

WELCOME HOME.

To Our Gallant Soldier Boys.

Wednesday was a great day in Table Rock, a vast crowd of people being in town, and all of them were good humored and happy. The occasion was the welcome extended by Table Rock to her returned soldier boys. Flags, bunting and flowers were every where in evidence, and the celebration was much after the manner of a Fourth of July celebration. Table Rock was well represented in the various regimen's formed in Nebraska. In the First were R H Wessel, James O'Connell, Lewis Wolfe, Ben Carter, Howard Cleaveland, Joe Barry, Walter Jones, Paul Pangburn and Roy Patchin. In the Second was Art Cleaveland and in the third, Charles Sutton; C C Norris was a member of a cavalry company. Of these boys, Pangburn was discharged at San Francisco, and came home; Patchin and Jones were taken sick at Honolulu and were sent home. Joe Barry remained in California when his regiment was mustered out: Art Cleaveland was mustered out with his regiment, came home for a few days and then went out west and when last heard of was a sailor on the Pacific ocean; Charles Sutton went to Cuba with his regiment and since being mustered out has made his home here. C C Norris remained at home after being mustered out until recently, when he reenlisted and is now at Ft Leavenworth awaiting orders to sail for Manilla. The other boys arrived home last week and the celebration on Wednesday was to give them a cordial welcome home, after the hard service they had seen. A large arch was erected in the street upon which "Welcome Home" in large letters was suspended and was beautifully decorated with flags and evergreen. The Pawnee City Military Band had been engaged for the occasion and about 10.30 it headed a parade which marched through the principal streets to the park where the exercises took place.

The parade was the best ever seen in Pawnee county. First there was the returned soldier boys in carriages, followed by the G A R Post and W R C on foot, then little girls representing the states; with Miss Emma Wood as Columbia; E C Phillips represented Uncle Sam on horseback and Billy Overbay Aguinaldo, on a burro; the W S A had a splendid representation, a feature being little girls in a specially made four wheeled wagon representing the suffrage states; the Woodmen had a wagon appropriately decorated, with old Billy Goat a prominent character; the Eastern Star was one of the most pleasing decorations, and the Henpecked Husband was represented by G B Johnson; the carriage of the Royal Neighbors caused much favorable comment, it being tastefully decorated in purple and white; the W C T U was represented by a wagon decorated in white Miss Willard's portrait having a prominent place; the fire boys were in line with the hook and ladder truck, and the small boys followed with a burlesque Elk Creek Company. Every body was delighted with the parade.

At the grounds the band rendered a selection; America was sung, and William Sutton delivered an address of welcome, which was an eloquent tribute to the boys and voiced the sentiments of the people in its expressions of the gladness felt in their return. Then dinner took up the time until 2 o'clock.

The platform program in the afternoon was interesting consisting of eloquent addresses by Rev W B Green, W H Wilson and R P Jennings, each address meeting the approbation and eliciting the applause of the crowd. The sham battle, which took place on the hills south of town was the subject of great interest, and when the Insurgents under Captain Jenning's made their assault on the First Nebraska, everybody watched to see how the boys would stand it; the battle lasted about an hour when the Insurgents were driven back and routed by the determined men of the pride of Nebraska. The bicycle parade was another feature greatly appreciated by the crowd; there were thirty-five wheels beautifully decorated, and prizes were awarded for best decorations, the judges being J L Fisher, Kate Moore and Miss Speers. They gave the first lady's prize to Miss Gertie Norris, second to Miss Elva Layman; first gentleman's to Earnest Wright, second to Harry Deck. Miss Flossie DeArnold had her wheel decorated to represent the battleship Maine, but because of the wind she did not ride in the contest.

After supper the Pawnee Military band rendered one of its pleasing concerts of high grade music with which all were delighted.

The Flambeau Club drill was given with beautiful effect and contributed no small amount to the success of the occasion.

The day closed with a campfire participated in by old and new soldiers, in which many amusing and pathetic incidents were related, and was a fitting finale to the days' exercises.

Our boys are home. For a year they endured the horrors of war in a far away land, in every place they performed their duty bravely and well, and what greater tribute can be paid to a soldier? On the firing line, wading in mud and water waist deep, fording rivers under the enemy's fire, everywhere they were soldiers, and in history they have won an honored place. They went from us inexperienced boys, they came back crowned heroes in the hearts of their fellow countrymen, and the welcome home tendered them is the promptings of the appreciation of their patriotism and courage.

The Greater America Exposition.

It is time that the people of Nebraska and Kansas awoke to a realization of the extent and beauty of the Greater America Exposition, now in progress at Omaha. No one claims that it is greater than the Trans-Mississippi Exposition, of 1898. But that it is as well worth seeing is beyond question. Indeed, in many respects it is a distinct improvement over last year's show. The grounds, for instance, are more beautiful, the electric light finer, the special features more numerous, the Midway—well, there never has been anything in the history of expositions to equal it. Those whose privilege it was to spend a few days in Omaha last summer should repeat the experience this year. They would enjoy this year's show quite as much as last year's. Those who did not see the Trans-Mississippi Exposition will not if they are wise, permit the summer of 1899 to slip by without seeing the Greater America Exposition. A rare opportunity of doing this is afforded by the extraordinarily low rates to Omaha—only $2 85 for the round trip—which the Burlington Route offers September 12, 13 and 14. Tickets good five days. Take regular trains going and returning.

TABLE ROCK, - - NEBRASKA

NEBRASKA NOTES.

Thomas Weidman caught his hand the machinery at the Omaha box factory, necessitating the amputation of three fingers.

Mrs. Shear, an elderly woman, while returning to her home east of Beatrice, was thrown from a wagon and suffered a broken collar bone.

Edward Davis, a tramp, trying to beat his way from Denver to Omaha, while trying to jump a freight three miles east of Crete, was badly injured. His relatives in Omaha were notified.

Colonel Campbell of the Second regiment, N. N. G., assisted by Adjutant General Barry, is making every preparation possible to have one of the best encampments ever held. The camp will open September 9 at Lincoln park.

Charles Blake, a brakeman on the Kansas City & Omaha road, was the other day crushed between the bumpers while switching in the yards at Clay Center, and his recovery is in doubt. He was taken back to Fairfield.

Articles of incorporation for the Bank of Lynch, Boyd county, were approved and filed last week in the office of the state banking department. The paid up capital is fixed at $5,000, with the provision that the same may be increased at any time by a vote of the directors.

William J. Sweenie of Butler county has appealed to the supreme court from a judgment of the court of Butler county in which he was found guilty of committing adultry with Mrs. Anna Lissy and was fined $100 and costs and senteneed to serve one day in the county jail.

Mrs. Robert Stewart of Havelock, who is the mother of one of the soldiers, attended the reception given to Company D in Lincoln Thursday evening of last week, and was unfortunate enough to lose $55 on the capitol grounds. It is not known whether to attribute the loss to theft or not.

Onion raising promises to be a new and paying industry in northwest Nebraska. Austin Weir, a Chadron printer, this year rented a fifteen-acre tract near Gordon and put it all in onions. He has nearly a carload of the choicest white onions to the acre, and expects to get $1.00 an acre for the crop.

The Omaha police have no doubt that Lizzie McAuliff, the young lady found dead in the street in front of 1135 Park avenue Tuesday morning of last week, was murdered. Every bit of evidence so far unearthed points to this as the only solution. The fellow "Steve," with whom she had gone driving, has disappeared.

Thursday afternoon of last week, while Will Robinson, a farmer living south of Sutton was hauling a load of shelled corn, his team became frightened at some pigs in the weeds by the roadside. They gave a sudden leap and Mr. Robinson was thrown to the ground, his neck being broken. He was about twenty-two years of age.

Many letters for soldiers of the First Nebraska volunteers have been received by Adjutant General Barry. As the regiment has been mustered out and returned home the postal authorities have forwarded much unclaimed mail to the office of the adjutant general. The boys who have missed letters from their sweethearts, or who think a letter is coming to them may apply to the adjutant general.

Harvey Caseer, living between Ohiowa and Tobias, who was attending the picnic at Alexandria Thursday of last week was run over by a Grand Island freight train early Friday morning, cutting off his right hand and foot. He had gone to sleep on the depot platform, not being able to get a bed at the hotel, and it is supposed he rolled off onto the track while asleep.

A broken trolley wire melted a hole in the asphalt pavement at Tenth and Dodge streets, Omaha yesterday, stopping traffic for some time.

The contract for the Nemaha court house has been let to Wm. Rowells & Co., of Colfax, Ia. The building is to be completed in 180 working days.

Citizens of Havelock are talking of putting on two automobiles between that city and Lincoln. They have secured a price of $1,500 for two carriages and it is the intention, if the scheme can be worked, to place them on the line between the two points. The idea is to make regular trips with them on schedule time and to charge a 5-cent fare.

Governor Poynter returned to the citizens of Omaha $1,500 which was pledged to the travel fund to bring the First Nebraska regiment home. The money was returned at the request of J. E. Baum, chairman of the citizens' committee. Mr. Baum presented a written request for the money, explaining that the money was originally raised to entertain the Omaha soldiers. The request was dated August 29, but reached the governor through a special messenger.

Frank Karschner, a hack driver of Omaha, who is one of the chief witnesses in the case of Charles Moore, charged with the murder of "Oyster Johnnie," or John De Molins, about two months ago, died last week. Drs. Gilmore and Allison gave appendicitis as the cause of death. Friends of Karschner began to suspect that there was something odd about the suddenness with which the hack driver died, so they started a quiet investigation. They were afraid that he had met with foul play, but after the investigation they concluded that the medical diagnosis was correct.

The large safe in Miller & Wildy's grain office at Hemmingford, was blown Wednesday night of last week. The robbers succeeded in wrecking and opening the outer and inner doors of the safe, but the steel chest was not tampered with. It is evident that the cracksmen became frightened and left hurriedly, as a pocket knife, bottle of glycerine and a syringe with which the explosive was applied was left near the building and a pouch containing about $8 in silver which had not been placed in the chest, but was lying in the safe within full view was not molested. There was about $1,500 in the chest.

FIVE ARE KILLED.

Boiler Explosion Wrecks Pittsburg Plant.

SEVEN ARE BADLY INJURED.

Accident Happens While Night and Day Shifts Were Changing, Otherwise Fatalities Would Have Been Greater—Cause of the Explosion Yet Unsolved.

A boiler exploded at the Republic Iron works on South Twenty-fourth street Pittsburg, Pa., shortly before daylight Friday killed five men and seriously injured seven. Fire which broke out following the explosion added to the horror. The mill was partly wrecked and the entire plant was compelled to close down. The list of killed and injured is as follows:

David Matthews, heater, married.
Thomas Beavens, heater, married.
William Thomas, heater, married.
John Warminski, heater.
Unknown man, crushed almost beyond recognition.
Malachi Donohue, fifty-eight years of age, puddler, fatally burned.
Neil Donohue, his son, twenty-eight, will die.
Frederick Herb, forty-eight years old, will die.
Stephen Malacaski.
Henry Sanders.
Peter Schnitzer.
John Evans, cut about head; left the hospital without giving his name.

The explosion occurred just as the night force was leaving and the day force was coming on duty, so that there were only a few men in the mill at the time. If it had happened half an hour later the list of dead and injured would have been appalling. It occurred in the fourteen-inch department and the concussion was terrific. Buildings were shaken a mile away and dust filled the air for two or three blocks. It entered open windows and nearly suffocated persons who were aroused by the roar and the shock.

Immediately following the explosion the wreck took fire and this added to the difficulties encountered in rescuing the burned and mutilated victims.

The cause of the explosion has not yet been determined. The damage to the plant was heavy, but the firm could not estimate it at this time.

ARMY NOT ALL AGAINST HIM.

Reputable Officers Readily Come to Rescue of Dreyfus.

Friday was a very satisfactory day for Dreyfus. The Beaurepaire witness, Germain, who was to prove that Dreyfus attended the Asatian maneuvers found his statements denied by a reputable witness, while Germain himself, it was proved, underwent two convictions for swindling. This was the only testimony against Dreyfus, the remainder of the depositions being in his favor, several of them being very weighty, as in the case of Captain Carvalho, General Sebert, and Major Hartman, their evidence going to show that particulars of the firing of the "120 gun" and hydro-pneumatic brake were almost matters of common knowledge among the officers, and that the contention that Dreyfus, from his special position on the staff and peculiar movements could be acquainted with them had no solid basis. This was the sum of the proceedings, were not marked by any incident of unusual interest, the Rodget-Burgers episode, in which General Roget clearly gave himself away, being the only matter which attracted special attention.

With Military Honors.

The remains of Colonel Alexander Leroy Hawkins, commander of the Tenth Pennsylvania volunteers, who died on shipboard enroute to San Francisco from Manila, were buried with military honors in the family lot in the Washington cemetery at Washington, Pa., Friday afternoon.

OUTBREAK OF THE PEST

Yellow Fever Makes Its Appearance In Many Towns.

The Indiana state board of health received a report Friday of the death of a man in Vincennes from yellow fever. The man had lately returned from Cuba, and though sick when he reached New York was permitted to come on to Indiana. The case is pronounced certainly yellow fever, the patient giving all the symptoms, even to turning yellow and having the black vomit. His name is not given.

The Texas state health department Friday received information of one death from yellow fever at New Orleans. State Health Officer Blunt at once ordered a rigid quarantine against New Orleans.

Owing to one death by yellow fever in New Orleans and two others declared there, Mobile City, Ala., authorities proclaimed Friday a quarantine against New Orleans.

A special from New Orleans says: An autopsy held Friday on the body of Young F. Ulhoph, who died Thursday, revealed the fact that death was caused by yellow fever. The case was reported to the authorities four days ago, but Dr. Murphy of the marine hospital service, did not think the case was one of yellow fever.

On receipt of news of yellow fever at New Orleans the authorities at Montgomery, Ala., instituted strict quarantine against that city.

A case of yellow fever has been under consideration at New Orleans several days. Several of the visiting physicians agreed in disputing its diagnosis as yellow fever.

The patient died and the autopsy revealed the disease to be yellow fever. Another case is under investigation, but no decision has been reached.

OWNER OF CUP CHALLENGER.

Shamrock's Master Greeted at New York by New York Yatchmen

The Cunard line steamer Campania arrived at quarantine Friday at 7:30, and was met in the Narrows by a flotilla of tugs and the steam yacht Erin to greet Sir. Thomas Lipton, who was a passenger on the liner. The quarantine commissioner's boat, the State of New York, also appeared on the scene with a large party under the guidance of Commissioner Palmer. The party consisted of Colonel Treadwell, Governor Roosevelt's military secretary, who was sent by the governor to receive Sir Thomas Lipton, a number of officials and members of the New York yacht club, a number of members from the New England society, and other smaller organizations. All boarded the steamer and came up to the dock.

TEXAS MAYOR KILLS A MAN.

Victim of Brother-in-Law and a Prominent Lawyer.

A Friday special from Texarkana says:

News has reached here of a shocking killing at Atlanta, Texas, thirty miles south of here. Captain R. E. Boyle shot and killed A. L. Culbertson, his brother-in-law. The men have, up to a few days been on the best of terms. Culbertson was a prominent attorney, a nephew of Congressman David Culbertson and a cousin of United States Senator Charles A. Culbertson, and Boyle is mayor of the town.

A Man Named Smith.

The steamer Nippon Maru arrived at San Francisco Friday night from Hong Kong and Yokohama, via Honolulu. The Associated press representative at Honolulu sends the following advices, under date of August 23: At the coming session of congress Hawaii will be represented by William O. Smith, formerly attorney general of this country. He will be appointed by President Dole.

Labori Discouraged.

A Friday special says: Labori in a private conversation does not speak hopefully regarding the Dreyfus verdict. The fact that the judges ask questions about points which long ago had been settled in anybody's mind, if evidence could settle them, is a discouraging sign. Labori's wounds are causing him much suffering.

A Boston telegram says that the gunboat Marietta was presented with a silver service Friday at Charleston navy yard, the gift of the citizens of Marietta, O. The presentation speech was made by Governor Bushnell of Ohio.

Gov. Morrill is Dead.

Samuel Morrill, ex-governor of Iowa, died Friday night at Los Angeles as a result of a stroke of paralysis.

Army Needed In Cuba.

General Fitzhugh Lee has made his report on the condition of the two eastern provinces of Cuba. He recommends that the United States forces be maintained in Cuba until the natives clearly demonstrate their ability to govern themselves.

$1,000,000 of Gold.

Commissioner Peck has secured a pledge for a million dollars worth of gold from the Cripple Creek district to be used in a display of United States government at the Paris exposition.

YOUNG MAN KILLS HIMSELF.

Refusal of Girl to Marry Him Prompts Self Destruction.

John Allen Lightbody, son of Isaac Lightbody, a well known and respected citizen, living near Daykin, committed suicide by shooting himself through the heart with a 38-calibre revolver. The young man had been keeping company with Miss Emma Helvy, who had several times recently rejected his offers of marriage. Last week he wrote a letter saying he had nothing to live for, and that he would kill himself if she persisted in her refusal to marry him.

Saturday he drove to Fairbury with a team and buggy to do some shopping. He left about dark and at 8 o'clock stopped at D. A. Smith's, three miles west, ostensibly to pay Smith a small sum of money he owed him, but really, it is believed, to be near the Helvy girl, who was stopping there. She refused to have any conversation with him, and he drove away. That was the last seen of him alive. Sunday morning the horse returned to Smith's where he had been accustomed to water, drawing the buggy with Lightbody's body in the bottom and the revolver lying by his side. A few miles further on, near the residence of Frank Helvy, there were tracks at the side of the road, which seemed to indicate that the rig had stood there all night. The body was cold and stiff. A coroner's jury rendered a verdict in accordance with the above facts.

FALLS CITY SENSATION.

Married Woman Caught by Husband Entertaining the Hired Man.

Fall City is evidently determined to keep itself known to Nebraskans. It has had several sensations lately that have let people know the town was in existence, but its latest escapade has proven to be the capsheaf.

Lincoln Meadows, the owner of the Star livery barn, has been visiting in Mound City, Mo., for several days. He told his wife he would be at home Thursday at 3 p. m. but instead he came in at 2:30 Friday morning. He found his hired man, Lon Caton, in bed with his wife and proceeded to make war upon him. In the scrimmage, his wife, who was attempting to protect Caton, was severely cut in the left side by a pocket knife the enraged husband was trying to use on Caton. She also received a small cut on thd neck. Caton escaped. Meadows has for some time suspected his wife of being untrue to him, and neighbors claim she has bestowed her favors on at least one other person besides Caton. Caton was at one time a common drunkard. Meadows took pity on him and furnished him with money to take the Keeley cure and gave him a job, boarded him in his family and has received as a reward for his kindness a blighted home.

Whitney Paroled.

Ezra S. Whitney, ex-county treasurer of Harlan county, has been paroled from the penitentiary by Governor Poynter. Mr. Whitney was convicted of embezzling county funds, in connection with a banker, and who was sentenced to serve two years and a half. He has served most of his sentence, but his friends have been anxious to have him liberated on parole. He was paroled last week on the application of his wife, who makes the usual agreement to furnish him employment. News of the parole was published last week in a Harlan county newspaper. The amount of county funds taken was $6,000 to $7,000. Mr Whitney was elected county treasurer on the fusion ticket.

Boy Drowned in Mill Dam.

A boy named Charlie Becker was drowned at Franklin Saturday in the Republican river. He was about sixteen years old. He was with several other boys and went to the old mill dam fishing and in attempting to swim across a very swift and deep channel he went under and it was fifteen minutes before the body was recovered.

A Fall of Forty Feet.

Guy Crook, a Falls City boy, who has been visiting at the home of Wm. Tjaden of Humboldt, met with a very severe accident Thursday. While in the hay loft of Mr. Tjaden's large barn he stepped backward into an open chute and was precipitated to the basement, a distance of forty feet. One leg was broken close to the hip and was severely bruised, but was taken to his home the following day.

WANT TO KNOW.

Missouri Populist Committee Asks Questions.

NUTS FOR BRYAN TO CRACK.

Bound to Find Out Why He Wants Populists to Abandon Their Own Candidate and Vote For the Democratic Nominee—Can't Understand Him.

The following letter, addressed to Colonel Bryan, is printed in the St. Louis papers:

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 23.—Hon. William J. Bryan, Lincoln, Neb.: Dear Sir—The democratic papers of the state this morning announce that you have been induced to promise one speech in the Eight Missouri campaign, to be made at Tipton. The avowed purpose of your coming is to induce populists to abandon their own candidate and vote for the democratic candidate * * *

In the campaign of 1896 the populists of Missouri placed your name on the official ballot as their candidate for the presidency and voted for you at the polls.

In view of the fact that you are now coming into this state to fight against the election of William R. Hale, a populist, in the interest of Judge Shackelford, a professional politician, of course arouses in us an uncertainty as to your view on matters that we deem of vital national importance. A mere politician would be too timid to state his views where a statement might lose him votes, but a real statesman, broad-minded, large-hearted and true alike to his convictions and to the people—and such a statesman we have always sincerely held and proclaimed you to be—would have no uncertainty in the public mind as to his settled convictions.

In view of the premises, permit me on behalf of the populist party of Missouri, whose state chairman I have the honor to be, to most respectfully ask your explicit answer to the following questions:

1. The populist party demands a pure paper money, issued directly by the government, that shall not be redeemable in coin, while the democratic party, by its Chicago platform, declares: "We demand that all paper money which is made a legal tender for public and private debts shall be redeemable in coin."

As between these directly opposite and hopelessly conflicting demands on a matter of the greatest possible importance to the American people, are you a populist or a democrat?

2. On the great and growing question of transportation and interstate commerce the national platform of the populist party declares that "the government should own and operate the railroads," while the democratic platform favors the interstate commerce commission, a republican-made institution, created and operated in the interest of the railroads and against the people, in the following words: "We demand the enlargemens of the powers of the interstate commerce commission, and such restriction and guarantees in the control of railroads as will protect the people from robbery and oppression."

On this proposition, are you a populist or are you a democrat?

These two questions are asked in a spirit of fairness on the part of those who think they have a right to ask them, and who sincerely believe that the people of this country have nothing to hope from either the republican or democratic parties in the two matters referred to. They are asked, too, in entire confidence that you will answer them fully, frankly and without evasion.

If you will, in addition to answering these questions before your Tipton audience, write an answer to me, I will give what you write the same general publicity among populists throughout this and other states given to this letter. Very respectfully yours,

FRANK E. RICHEY,
Chairman State Committee People's Party of Missouri.

In Its Shirt Sleeves.

Any man who still believes that there is a vestige of consistency, sincerity, or unselfish loyalty in the Democratic leadership of today should read and analyze William J. Bryan's speech delivered in Omaha on Tuesday. As if by inspiration Mr. Bryan then and there revealed the utter hollowness of his party's pretensions to a single policy or conviction. Stripped of all verbiage and cant, his words meant:

He believed in the war, but was against its results.

He loved the volunteers, but was against their achievements.

He wanted peace, but repudiated the treaty of peace.

He revered the flag, but wished to see it hauled down.

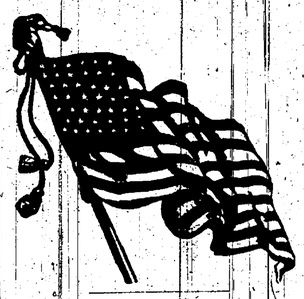
He respected the government, but would not maintain its authority against rebels.

He loved the fathers, but detested their policy of annexation.

It is recorded by the voracious reporter that while he thought these great thoughts and the language that went with them, Mr. Bryan "sat in his shirt sleeves and mopped his brow." We should think as much. And the whole democracy sits in its shirt sleeves and mops its brow with him.

Who Will Pull Down The Flag.

"It is the flag of the free, the hope of the oppressed, and wherever it is assailed at any sacrifice it will be carried to triumphant peace."—President McKinley.



In 1896 the plea was made by Bryan and men of his ilk that free coinage out to be established for the reason that it "set one hundred thousand miners to work in Colorado." They said that this number of men taken ought of the producing class and put in the ranks of the consumers would raise the price of farm produce and other goods, and would be a great help to the country. Now the same men are shedding tears over the land because of the great danger of a "standing army of one hundred thousand men," who would certainly be nonproducers. The silver arguments of the 1896 campaign are now most conveniently forgotten.

Si Holcomb professes to be a reformer. We have to take his word for it, in the meaning that is intended. For a slippery Si he is a cracker-jack. During his continuance in the state office of governor his side pockets bulged out with railroad passes and a portion of the state money appropriated for house rent. Si is a reformer no doubt, and if elected to the supreme bench we might look for some extraordinary reform—not in line with good law. To our notion—under the inspiration of good government—the proper thing to do with Si is to send him to the rear long enough at least to wash up.—Blair Pilot.

Since the day he signed the bill for the formation of mutual insurance companies "House Rent Si" has drawn $1,400 from one of the principal companies. During the last two years he served as governor he was drawing his regular salary, was gathering in fraudulent house rent, and was taking donations from the insurance company at the rate of $50 per month. This "Slippery Si" is a very thrifty Si, indeed.

The man who swears on the witness stand that the constitution and statutes are a "farce," will not make a good judge of the supreme court. The man who makes out false vouchers on an unconstitutional appropriation in order to get his hands on a little extra money, will not make a fit judge to decide questions where property interests are concerned.

The self-styled "Abraham Lincoln republicans" who are making so much fuss about the war should remember that the greatest of Lincoln's troubles came from the copperheads in the rear, and the time came during the long contest when he was in favor of hanging men of the Atkinson class.

The late fusion conventions talked a lot about "government ownership of railroads," but fought shy of the issue of state control. Was it because of the fact that the three fake secretaries of the state board of transportation were taking leading parts in the three conventions?

Governor Poynter has not yet explained why he pardoned the Cass county murderer. Was it because the man had rich relatives in Canada? Why was the pardon secretly issued, contrary to law? Let some fusion reformer arise and explain.

It will be a good thing for Silas A. Holcomb and the World Herald to make a Joe Bartley issue this fall. They could have a real good time explaining some of their various deals to the people.

Last December Judge Neville wrote a letter for publication showing the fallacy of further fusion. He is now hoping that all back files of the newspapers have been lost.

Let's see, how long ago was it that the World Herald complained because the thieving veterans of the civil war were not dying off fast enough?

Edgar Howard can now take his time to tell how "Slippery Si" slipped in.

Artificial Applause.

Germany has come to the front with a curious contrivance which will render the claque in theaters superfluous, and substitute for it a machine performing the same duties. The ingenious inventor, Herr Zimmermann, has ascertained that two leather sacks, filled with air, when brought violently together make a noise precisely like that produced by the clapping of hands. He placed pairs of leather sacks in hidden places throughout a theater, and then connected them by wires with the wing so that they could be set in motion by electricity on a button being pressed. The regisseur in the wings controls the apparatus in all parts of the house, and can produce applause from the gallery, the pit or the stalls at will. Herr Zimmermann claims that his invention is now in use in several theaters in Paris and Berlin, but for obvious reasons declines to say in which ones.

Mrs. William Rockefeller's hobby is for carnations, one of the greenhouses at her country place at Scarborough-on-the-Hudson being devoted exclusively to their culture. She has recently received 200 Malmaison carnations from France, having paid $2,000 for the plants. She is said to spend thousands of dollars every year for the plants she imports for her pleasure.

"Papa," said little Harry, "do you know how high those clouds are?" "No, my son," answered the father, with an indulgent smile. "Well, they're cirrus clouds," said Harry, regarding them with a critical eye, "and they are about three and a half miles high. Your education must have been pretty sadly neglected, wasn't it, papa?"

PE-RU-NA

FOR WOMEN

The debilitating drains and discharges which weaken so many women are caused by Catarrh of the distinctly feminine organs. The sufferer may call her trouble Leuchorrhoea, or Weakness, or Female Disease or some other name, but the real trouble is catarrh of the female organs and nothing else.

Pe-ru-na radically and permanently cures this and all other forms of Catarrh. It is a positive specific for female troubles caused by catarrh of the delicate lining of the organs peculiar to women. It always cures if used persistently. It is prompt and certain.

The microbes that cause chills and fever and malaria enter the system through mucous membranes made porous by catarrh. Pe-ru-na heals the mucous membranes and prevents the entrance of malarial germs, thus preventing and curing these affections.

The headstrong person is liable eventually to get injured just above the shoulders.—Chicago Dispatch.

As it is man's place to ask, so it is woman's place to wait to be asked; yet oftentimes she has a way of asking why she is kept waiting.

If I were as rich as my right hand neighbor I would have his faults; if I were as poor as my left hand neighbor I should have his. Being myself, I have mine.

A great many people who discuss great questions think that they must arrive at some conclusion, like a debating society. Oftenest we should be satisfied with indecision.

A woman's progress in a love affair is a zig-zag road; each deviation ends in a slight advance. And a man's, which should be a straight line, meets her at the return from each of these deviations.

The Artful Mirror.

This looking glass and reflection business is being run into the ground. Every other shop window has the back and sides fitted with looking glass doubling the size and magnifying the display. These reflectors are not limited to the windows, for in many shops they are introduced for the walls, making a small store assume grand proportions, without an increase of rent. A well-known florist—in fact, several—makes a lavish showing of cut flowers a perfect riot of roses, or what seems to be, by the aid of mirrors. If this device can be worked in on church fair, stew, and the one oyster made to look like half a dozen, or a small audience at the theater show as a large one, there will be no end to the usefulness of the scheme. The pocketbook with mirror attachment might be a comforting possession.

A Studio Trick.

In the corner of an artist's studio in his city is an ingenious arrangement of screens, upon one of which, over an aperture about the size of a face, is an inscription: "Likenesses taken instantaneously." The innocent visitor peeps through the hole, and is astonished to behold an exact likeness of himself as a hump-backed jailer, in a scarlet coat, opening a prison door. The secret of this effect is simple. The jailer is a life-sized painting strongly rendered. The place for the face is cut out, and a mirror inserted, reflecting the features of the spectator. The conception of this amusing fantasy is not entirely original. It was imported from the studio of Wiert's, the Belgian artist.

General Manager Underwood of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, has a plan to unify and simplify the titles of officials. Several of the officers have duties to perform which are not shown by their official designation, and on July 1st the following changes will be made: Harvey Middleton, now general superintendent of motive power, will be mechanical superintendent in charge of all shops; and the construction of and repairs to locomotives and cars. David Lee, engineer maintenance of way lines west of Ohio river, will be superintendent maintenance of way, trans-Ohio division, and D. A. Williams will be superintendent of stores.

Reed on Whitewashing.

Speaker Reed met Representative Lacey of Iowa in the shadow of the entrance to the members' lobby of the house. He peered at the Iowa man, who bears a strong resemblance to the secretary of war. Walking up to him and greeting him with a cheerful laugh and a handshake that conveyed a suggestion of great relief, he astounded the representative by drawling out: 'Lacey, you look so much like the secretary of war that you ought to be whitewashed."

"Marguerite, my darling, my saint—say you forgive me! Think what I feel this moment. We are parting—you and I. And that means death! Won't you forgive me?"

"Yes, I will! I forgive you," she returned tremblingly. "Heaven forbid I should be hard-hearted to you. Indeed—indeed I forgive."

"Then," he said, "give me your hand."

She gave it and he pressed it to his lips.

"Good-by, beloved," he said, touching it with as tender a reverence as if it had been the hand of the dead. But he lingered to ask her the question—"are you going back to London?"

"Yes."

"You have hired a fly to take you to the station?"

"No."

"You must let me help you——"

"No! Oh, no!"

"Then I shall not believe that I am forgiven. Let me take you to the village. I know where to get a fly there, and I will see you safe into the train. You cannot deny me that; you will not be unforgiving? I swear I will not speak a word to vex you; but oh, my own love, let me do this for you! Don't drive me mad."

"Yes," she answered, "you may take me. I—I feel very strange and weak. I don't think I could walk. Will you please take care of me?"

She took a few steps forward, but the effort to move made her turn deadly pale. She had been through too much that day.

Valdane saw the change in her face, and darted forward. The next moment she was lying senseless in his arms.

CHAPTER XVII.

Lady Mildred went down stairs into the drawing room that night, a tumult of feelings contending in her heart. All day had Valdane absented himself, and she could not understand it.

It must be jealousy, of course—that was clear; but was it possible that she had gone too far, and alienated where she had but meant to incite? She looked round the room as she entered in search of him. He was not there—that fact just turned the scale against him.

Lady Mildred was not going to endure even the suspicion of being jilted.

"That settles the matter," she said to herself. "Bernard Selwyn shall propose to me tonight, and I will accept him."

Later in the evening Lord Umfraville brought her a telegram from the defaulter.

"Called to town on business—very sorry. Please make my apologies. Will return tomorrow if I may."

His lordship would have held that telegram with more emotion had he known that it secured twenty thousand a year to the Umfraville estates.

Late that night Bernard dejectedly sat at the open window of his bedroom. He had broken faith with the girl who loved and trusted him; he had yielded to temptation and was now engaged to Lady Mildred. The mad triumph of the hour was over; in the darkness and stillness his conduct looked very vile. Not only was he bitterly ashamed, but he was alarmed. What were likely to be the consequences of this act? Should Lady Mildred once discover that, at the time of his proposing to her, he was in honor bound to another woman—well, his imagination was scarcely vivid enough to picture what might happen. He really believed himself to be in love with Lady Mildred. Difference in rank had weighed very little; but for the moment she swayed his emotions completely, and Marguerite seemed as nothing beside her. He only felt now that, with Lady Mildred for his wife, he might fulfil all the golden dreams which he had formed since his sudden acquisition to wealth.

He tried to persuade himself that Marguerite would not have been happy with him, that it was truer kindness to confess this before marriage than to cling to an engagement on which his heart was no longer centered. Besides he was not engaged to Marguerite—she always said so. Had not her last words to him been, "Remember you are free?" Ah, but had he not, in return, held her to his heart and vowed that he was her slave? It was a humiliating position, and he writhed under it, but determined to put off the evil day of confession.

While Bernard was thinking thus at Clarisdale, Martineau the irresistible, Martineau the heartless, for whom his stately cousin was suffering all the pangs of jealousy, was pacing the dreary length of a street in East London.

It was a very warm night—the atmosphere in that crowded district was almost fetid. Now and then screaming and discordant laughter broke the silence, as various denizens of the neighborhood reeled home to their beds after the night's carouse.

With his hands behind him, Valdane sauntered up and down, heedless of these interruptions. His face was very pale; he had no cigar to console him in his solitude. He seemed like one who neither knew nor cared whither he went, only his sunken eyes were fixed upon an upper window in the doctor's house—a window where a light was burning. To and fro he walked, while still the candle burned steadily on through the night. He knew that in that bedroom the woman who owned all his heart was suffering the cruelest agony, and that he was the cause of it, and he could not help her in any way—could not mitigate one pang. The self-abasement which he suffered then was the salvation of Valdane Martineau. He acknowledged to his inner self without reserve that he had sinned, and his whole being was filled with a deep longing to atone.

Her window was open; the night breeze swayed the white blind. Perhaps she thought the measured tramp in the street below belonged to the night policeman on his beat. She could not know the despair and hopelessness which filled the soul of the man who watched her windows, mentally taking farewell of everything which makes life glad to men, mentally calling down every blessing on the head of the innocent girl who had suffered so deeply.

The dawn came at last, and lighted up Valdane's haggard face. Then, just as the first red sunbeam fell upon Marguerite's casement, the candle went out.

It seemed like a signal for him to go. Nothing was now left but to drink his cup of humiliation to the very dregs—to appear to an astonished world as fellow-conspirator with Daniel Brandon, in the carrying out of the most infamous of plots, and to dissolve the illegal yoke which bound Marguerite.

Meanwhile a bold front must be worn to the world; and none could wear a mask better than Valdane Martineau.

The next day he returned to Clarisdale. He took the news of Lady Mildred's engagement with a calmness which made her lose her temper. He looked ill and old. Every one thought Martineau was altered. Mildred imagined that he must be suffering in secret, but, with his characteristic pride, held his feelings in check. Her heart yearned towards him passionately. Her accepted lover had a hard time of it that day. The guests remarked to one another that, if Martineau was "sweet" on his cousin, he put a very good face on it; for he talked with quiet ease to her, did not avoid her in the least, and offered his congratulations without any evidence of "repressed emotion."

Some three days after this, Valdane saw a paragraph in the papers which took him back to London at once. A week later Marguerite received the following letter:

"Dear Miss Lilbourne—I have to announce to you that your uncle, Mr. Daniel Brandon, died suddenly of apoplexy in Paris last week. There is no will, and, by the nature of the entail, all his landed estates and house property revert to you, as the only living blood relation. His affairs, I am sorry to say, are in great disorder, and quite half your fortune has been gambled away on the stock exchange. There will be, I hope, between six and seven hundred a year for you when all claims are settled. I have seen his solicitors, and can easily prove your identity, as Cathie recognized you at once that day you fainted at High Lees and we have Mrs. Acland as well to trust to. His poor young wife takes the personalty, but I am afraid there will be next to nothing for her; no doubt your generosity will suggest it to you to make some slight provision for her. Mr. Brandon's solicitor will call upon you tomorrow, as I imagine that it will not be pleasant for you to see me. The money which I owe you has been placed to your account at the bank. I am afraid that the annulling of the marriage will be a more lengthy business; but it shall be done I promise you, as soon as possible. The one thing now left for me to wish for is that, after so many years of sorrow, happiness may come to you in unstinted measure, so that in years to come you may look back upon me and the injury I did you as nothing but the nightmare which you said it seemed the first day you came to see me in Lance Lane. I shall go abroad when all this is settled, and shall try to cross your path no more. I can never forget your noble forgiveness—the one comfort I shall carry with me through my lonely life. With deepest respect I am most entirely yours,

"Valdane Martineau."

Some days afterwards he received a note from Mary Stelling, inclosing a slip of paper, the words on which were written in pencil:

"Dear Sir—I send you a line from Miss Lilbourne, who is not well enough to attend to business at all just now. She has had a low nervous fever; my father thinks it is because she refused to leave London this autumn. Now that money is no object we hope to take her to the Riviera for the winter. Thanking you for all the trouble you have taken on her behalf, I am, yours faithfully, Mary Stelling."

The slip of paper inclosed, which Valdane carried reverently to his lips before opening, contained only a few words:

"I am not at all well—I cannot attend to anything. Kindly leave the question of the marriage until you have heard again from

"Marguerite."

WITH HIS HANDS BEHIND HIM VALDANE SAUNTERED UP AND DOWN.

WHY SOME PEOPLE ARE BLACK

It Is Claimed That Wearing of Clothes Affects the Complexion.

Why are some races on this earth darker-skinned than others? It is not altogether due to the heat of the sun's rays, for many people of tropical climes are as light-hued as Europeans. It has long been known that climate alone is not sufficient to account for a colored people. Dark skins are by no means confined to the tropics; they are to be found in races even beyond the temperate zone. This diversity, according to a writer in one of the American magazines, can only be accounted for by considering the different modes of life that have acted for centuries upon the various classes and castes of the country. The coolie who works in the fields with a strip of cotton cloth about his loins, is very dark; the merchant and trader who never go abroad without being thoroughly clothed are many degrees fairer.

It is said that a colony of Jews on the west coast of India has been established for nearly eighteen centuries, but because they have not followed the habits of the people as regards clothing they remain to this day a white people. On the other hand, the Aryan populations of India and Persia, originally a fair people, by adopting the customs of those countries have become in great measure a colored race.

Accordingly, it is argued that the steady march of nature is toward the evolution of a fair people all over the world. The layer of dark pigment beneath the cuticle prevents the skin from blistering, and when proper clothing renders this safeguard unnecessary nature dispenses with altogether. It is also hinted that color has something to do with the mental and intellectual conditions of a people, but into these questions the writer wisely forbears to enter.

FOUR COURTSHIP SUNDAYS.

Review, Decision, Purchase and Possession Days.

The four Sundays of November are observed as fete days in Holland. They are known by curious names—Review, Decision, Purchase and Possession—and all refer to matrimonial affairs, November in Holland being the month par excellence devoted to courtship and marriage, probably because the agricultural occupations of the year are over, and possibly because the lords of creation, from quite remote antiquity, have recognized the pleasantness of having wives to cook and cater for them during the long winter. On Review Sunday everybody goes to church, and after service there is a church parade in every village, when the youths and maidens gaze upon each other, but forbear to speak. On Decision Sunday each bachelor who is seeking a wife approaches a maiden of his choice with a ceremonious bow, and from her manner of responding judges whether his advances are acceptable. Purchase Sunday the consent of the parents is sought, if the suit has prospered during the week. Not till Possession Sunday, however, do the twain appear before the world as actual or prospective brides and grooms.

Killarney to Be Annexed.

It is cheerful to hear that perhaps we are to have the estates of Muckross, on the Lakes of Killarney, Ireland, in addition to our other American possessions, an axe manufacturer of Lansingburgh, N. Y., having purchased it for $185,000. Of course there is a possibility that Mr. Peck and his money will himself be annexed to Ireland instead, but we hope that he will spend his winters in this country, and spend his time issuing free tickets for the ensuing summer to his fellow Americans, for the hospitalities of the famous enchanted region.

Hint from an Auctioneer.

At a recent party a young lady began a song, "The autumn days have come, ten thousand leaves are falling." She began too high. "Ten thou—sand——" she screamed, and then stopped. "Start her at five thousand!" cried an auctioneer who was present.

She is Miss Cora Van Norden, daughter of Warner Van Norden, president of the National Bank of North America. She is following the footsteps of her sister, Miss Emma Van Norden, long a convert enlisted in salvation's ranks. Four years ago, just after Miss Emma Van Norden had "come out," there was a furor in her set. Miss Van Norden had quietly joined the ranks of the Ballington Booths. She and her family were faithful attendants at Dr. John Hall's church in Fifth avenue, and her friends were amazed at the turn her devotion had taken.

"I implore you to consider," her sister said.

"No," said Miss Emma Van Norden. "I consider it my duty. You can stick to society; I shall join the army."

So Miss Emma Van Norden sold her ball gowns for charity, but Miss Cora Van Norden still appeared in society. She went the usual round of the season's entertainments.

"I follow my sister?" she laughed. "Oh, dear, no!"

They were sisters, so it was only natural that Miss Cora Van Norden should go down into the slums to see what Miss Emma was doing.

"I don't see how you can stand this," said the girl of society. But the other only smiled. Presently Miss Cora Van Norden began inquiring further about her sister's work. It didn't seem so bad after all.

"Well, I hope you are happy, anyway," she said, and this was her first cheerful view of the situation.

"Yes, I am happy," replied her sister.

Mr. Van Norden was disquieted. He saw the awakening interest of his younger daughter and feared she would follow her sister.

"No, indeed," she laughed. "I am too fond of the gay world."

The Booth-Tuckers met and were charmed with Miss Cora Van Norden. Her sister talked quietly of the work, and all the pleasant features of Salvation army life were laid before her.

"Dear me," she said suddenly, one day, a year ago, "isn't there something I can do to help? I don't want to join the Salvation army. I just want to help."

So she was allowed to help.

There is a new editor today for the Young Soldier, published in the interest of the junior members of the army. The chief editor is away, and the new editor is Miss Cora Van Norden. She has just taken charge. Her father's expectations have come true.

"It is a very delicate matter to talk about," said Col. Lewis yesterday, at the army headquarters. "But it is true. Miss Van Norden is editing the Young Soldier for us."

But Miss Van Norden still clings to the outer world. Not yet can she convince herself she must give up all social gayety. She still wears her stunning tailor-made gowns.

But the truth is out. She has joined the army. Her father has given up his city house and engaged rooms at the New Netherland. Miss Cora Van Norden has come to work with her sister.

"By and by," say the other Salvation Army lassies, "she will be with us in everything."

"I told you so," says her sister calmly.

Curse Hanging Over Skibo.

There is, according to Highland tradition, a curse hanging over Skibo, Scotland, and those who would have it for their own, and there are High land seers who are shaking their heads and eagerly wondering whether it may not in due time alight on Mr. Carnegie and his descendants. The tale is one of cruel wrong done to the original possessors, the Grays, of Skibo, and the Murrays, of Pulrossie, who, for centuries, owned the lands now incorporated into the one estate that is in the hands of the great Scotch-American. Some 150 years ago the owners were deprived of their lands by foul means, a curse that brought upon the place, and from that day to this it has kept on changing hands with almost every generation. The Douls were they who ousted the Grays but it was not long that they remained in possession. After one generation they gave place to the Mackays, who, in turn, were succeeded by the Gordons, Dempsters, Doffer-Dempsters, Chinsides, and Sutherlands. The Sutherlands were unwilling to have Skibo go to Mr. Carnegie, but they were unable to prevent it, and now the Scotch-American is in power and is turning the castle into one of the finest mansions in the Highlands.

A Queer War Incident.

Speaking of these short rushes forward a queer thing happened at Guiguinto, where perhaps half of the soldiers in one regiment found hens. Before there was time to kill the fowl orders came to go forward. A little farther out the regiment lay down under fire for some minutes. Then the order came to charge. Up and forward with a yell rushed the soldiers, but over the cheering rose another sound. Three or four hundred hens, objecting to being carried head down with feet tied to the strap of a haversack, set up a frantic squawking such as was probably never heard along a line of charging military before.—Leslie's Weekly.

A Woman Jockey.

Emma Bagwill, the woman jockey, bears the distinction of being one of a very few women who ride in regular races against jockeys of the opposite sex. She began riding at the age of 12 years, and to the Indians about Carson is still known by her maiden name of Emma Trapp. When she married, about five years ago, and suspected that her husband, who had some running horses, was being defrauded by dishonest jockeys, she determined to help him by doing the riding herself. Mrs. Bagwill weighs but 100 pounds.

"I see by the newspapers," remarked Reeder, "that the miners in the Klondike are sending out appeals for wives." "Is that so?" ejaculated Henpyeck, in an eager whisper. "They can have mine."—Berlin (Md.) Herald.

It is estimated that two-thirds of the gold hunters who went to the Klondike country in 1898 returned with nothing to show for their trip, but their cries of distress are well nigh drowned by the joyous shouts of the minority.—Topeka Capital.

A lucky Klondike miner, if the transportation companies can be believed, pulled an $1,800 nugget in out of the frost. But a little Klondike wealth calls for a big lot of talk. Eighteen hundred dollars made in any other way would call for no remark.—Minneapolis Journal.

WITH SPOON AND "PUSHER."

How Boston Babies Learn the Etiquette of Bean Eating.

When honored by nativity in Boston, where all is good, a baby is taught his first lesson in table etiquette with a dozen well-baked beans and a "pusher." Seated in his high art high chair, with his snowy biblet of finest needlework under his chin, his nurse or his governess proceeds to show him the straight and narrow path which leads to his mouth. A slice of toasted brown bread, or, newer fad yet, "health bread," is cut into narrow spears, say a half inch wide by the width of the slice. In his saucer are placed a few beans free from moisture, single each and perfect, as correctly baked beans are. Then he is taught by gentle repetition first to eat these beans "per spoon" and then "per fork." In his left hand is placed the little slab of bread known as the "pusher," in the right hand the spoon which his paternal grandmother gave him. The "pusher" steadies the bean in its wayward course, the spoon runs it down.

It is not to be supposed that mistakes are not made. The "pusher" gets eaten and the pushee gets mad, and forthwith slings away the spoon and gets his bean by fair means or foul. But Boston governesses are patient, and as the year-old pupil wails his fond teacher quotes from the Eneid to him, saying, Persevere! "Forsan haec olim meminisse juvabit." And he straightway perseveres.

Practice having made perfect, the youngster is then set to spearing the elusive bean with his tiny silver fork and taught to guide that dangerous weapon neatly within his pursed up lips. The toasted "pusher," which of course, ever and anon disappears the way of all bread, is replenished, and that lesson, too, is learned.

Then remains one more course of instruction. The beans are mashed instead of being left whole, and the art of taking up a suitable amount, neither more nor less, is taught both with the spoon as the instrument and with the fork.

English Poets of Foreign Birth.

Many of England's leading poets have had very mingled strains in their blood. Tennyson's extraction was Danish, French and English. Robert Browning had "brown" blood in his veins, for his grandmother was a creole lady. Rossetti was Italian, with an admixture of English blood; Algernon Charles Swineburne has both Scandinavian and French blood in his veins. Austin Dobson is French as well as English, and the late Coventry Patmore was "fractionally German."

Maori Mat.

A unique Maori mat, composed of the feathers of the "kiwi" (the wingless bird of New Zealand), was sold in a London auction room the other day. In the mat were two panels of feathers of the white variety, which probably no living person has seen in England. It is said that it took the tribe—whose chief, doubtless, used it as a prayer mat—ten years to collect them. The mat fetched thirty guineas, and was bought, it is said, for the Natural History museum.

Bees and Their Baskets.

Every bee carries his market basket round his hind legs. Anyone examining the body of a bee through a microscope will observe that on the hind legs of the creature there is a fringe of stiff hairs on the surface, the hairs approaching each other at the tips, so as to form a sort of cage. This is the bee's basket, and into it, after a successful journey, he will cram enough pollen to last him for two or three days.

A Professional Opinion.

"That young Pellet has altogether too exalted an opinion of his profession. When old Borax was out of town the Gridleys called Pellet. Jane Gridley asked him if he thought he could pull her father through. 'I trust, madam,' he severely replied, 'to be able to parry the shafts of death.'" "Parry the shafts of death! Say that's good. Why, Pellet couldn't paregoric."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Deep Sea Soundings in the Pacific.

All deep sea sounding records are believed to have been broken by the British cruiser Penguin, which reports having sounded to a depth of 4,672 fathoms, or 28,372 feet, in the Pacific ocean between New Zealand and the Tonga island. The Penguin also found out that Falcon island, which was formed during a volcanic eruption in 1885 and disappeared last September, has sunk eighteen feet below the surface.

Cost of Burning a Heretic.

In the course of an article sketching the histories of some early English ecclesiastics, a writer in the Windsor Magazine, London, tells what it costs to burn a heretic. The items are taken from the municipal records of Canterbury, dated 1535, and is as follows: For the expenses of bringing a heretic from London, 14s 8d; For 1½ loads of wood to burn him, 2s; for gunpowder, 1d; a stake and staple, 9d.

Needed Only a File.

Three of the ears brought in weighed four pounds and thirteen ounces, and were 39 inches long. He says they have eighty acres in corn and expects to gather about 6000 bushels from them.

C C Norris, who was in Captain Culver's Cavalry Company, in the Second Nebraska, and re-enlisted to go to Manila, was home Saturday and Sundy on a forty-eight hour furlough. He is first duty sergeant, in Company L, 32nd Regiment, and his former Captain is again his captain. He expected to leave for Manila between the 10th and 15th of this month.

Charles Warren Stoddard, who has written so charmingly of the South Seas and William W Denslow, the artist, went on a pilgrimage to the Pictured Rocks of Lake Superior and came back with a story of that region and some pictures of the scenery so remarkable that "The Cosmopolitan" has given up fourteen pages of its September number to them. Article and pictures constitute a strikingly interesting feature.

When A L Meadows returned from Mound City, Mo., early this morning he entered his residence on North Towa Avenue, only to find that a base betrayer had robbed his home of its sanctity. As soon as he learned the truth, he broke down the door leading to the room in which his wife and her paramour were. The man in the case was a hostler in the employ of Mr Meadows. In his anger, the outraged husband drew a knife and attacked the betrayer of his home. Just how badly the man was injured, is not known as he escaped in the darkness. During the melee Mrs Meadows was struck by her self in the hands of her infuriated husband. The blade cut a fearful gash in her side and she is now lying in a precarious condition. It is the old story of a wife's unfaithfulness and a husband's anger. Mr. Meadows is a respected citizen and has much sympathy in his deep trouble.—Falls City Journal.

The Argus neglected to mention the fact last week that Table Rock's ball team went to the county seat and swiped the Pawnee boys to the tune of 9 to 6, and this without practice. Pawnee is a staid old town, with lots of nice people, but when she attempts to compete with Table Rock along any line she is outclassed and sure of defeat.

Last week the body of a young lady was found in a Hastings hotel dead from the effects of poison. It was supposed to be a case of suicide, and as she was not identified she was buried in the potters' field. Recent developments point to murder, and the deceased was a Miss French a Burlington school teacher. An Omaha insurance man is implicated as her betrayer and murderer.

Of course there is a lot of fun connected with a red hot campaign, and we have so many that it is almost one continual round of pleasure. But it has a reverse side not so pleasant. Our frequent elections disrupt business and engender animosities which are carried through the remainder of life's journey; under our short term system an officer only becomes familiar with the running of his office, when he must be planning and scheming for a re-election. It strikes us that a longer 'erm of office, from President down to Constable, would be an improvement over the present system.

WOMAN'S COLUMN.

Probably few readers of the Argus have an adequate conception of the work women are doing now. The doings of the great International Council and Congress held in London surprise even our American club women. Mrs Colby tells us over 2,000 women were enrolled a members and this did not include many who hail travelled thousand of miles to attend the congress. There were 303 advertised speakers besides the usual speeches from the chair and impromptu participants in discussions when these were thrown open to members. These meetings were held mostly in town halls of the parishes of Westminster and St Martin's there being large and small halls in each building, where meetings were held constantly making four points of interest and causing every woman to wish there were four of her. All speeches were given in the English language except those of the French women. Those of Madame Shen the government appointed delegate from China, were translated by her husband who stood by her on the platform. Delegates from Finland, Norway, Sweden and Denmark spoke such classic English, pronouncing it so beautifully that it was surprising and their poetic expression was charming. The English lady of quality is a great success as chairman, presiding with such ease and perfect realization of her rights and duties that it is reassuring to the listener and spectator. Another source of wonder and admiration to the visitor from the United States was the extreme cordiality with which ladies of rank and position identified themselves with the council; serving on committees; presiding at Congress meetings and extending as many social courtesies as the program permitted. Our newspapers so quick to recount any scandal in high life as told by the London papers, fail to note the many instances of self denial and heroic self sacrifice practiced by those in high life. The good Mother Queen has herself set an example that is bearing fruit all the way down and our American women seemed to think there is not as much actual snobbishness, keep away from me air about the English Aristocracy as there is among the wealthy people of our own country. The first social reception was given the council by the Duchess of Sutherland and Lady Aberdeen at the home of the former, said to be the finest private residence in London. Each guest was received with a hearty hand clasp by the Duchess and passed on to Lady Aberdeen thence up stairs where a band dispensed sweet music and beautiful pictures hung on every side. Over a thousand guests found ample room to see and hear with comfort and enjoy the dainty refreshments seryed.

The scores stood as follows: Wednesday 2 to 1; Thursday 7 to 3; and Friday 2 to 1. The last game was said to have been the hardest fought ever played on the home grounds, the game standing one to nothing until nearly the last inning.—Tecumseh Journal.

A rather interesting case came up for hearing before justice of the peace C B Woolsey on Monday last, it being the first case of the kind that we remember of having been tried in Johnson county. Some days since C M Chamberlain bought eight head of hogs from C C Reynolds, paying $33 75 for the same. Within two days cholera, so called, developed in the bunch and several have since died. Chamberlain brought suit to recover the amount paid for the swine and Judge Woolsey rendered a verdict in his favor for the full amount prayed for, thus throwing not only the price of the hogs on Reynolds but the costs as well. Ed M Tracy appeared for Mr Chamberlain and Hugh LaMaster for Mr Reynolds.—Tecumseh Tribunal.

No Right To Ugliness.

The woman who is lovely in face, form and temper will always have friends, but one who would be attractive must keep her health. If she is weak, sickly and all run down, she will be nervous and irritable. If she has constipation or kidney trouble, her impure blood will cause pimples, blotches, skin eruptions and a wretched complexion. Electric Bitters is the best medicine in the world to regulate stomach, liver and kidneys and to purify the blood. It gives strong nerves, bright eyes, smooth, velvety skin, rich complexion. It will make a good-looking, charming woman of a run-down invalid. Only 50 cents at S G Wright's Drug Store.

Try Colorado this Summer—or Utah. Getting there costs very little—one fare plus $2 00 for the round trip—every day from June 25 to July 11. Tickets good to return until October 31st. See nearest Burlington agent and get particulars.

NEARLY
Fifty-Eight Years Old!

Its a long life, but devotion to the true interests and prosperity of the American People has won for it new friends as the years rolled by and the original members of its family passed to their reward, and these admirers are loyal and steadfast today, with faith in its teachings, and confidence in the information which it brings to their homes and firesides.

As a natural consequence it enjoys in its old age all the vitality and vigor of its youth, strengthend and ripened by the experiences of over half a century.

It has lived on its merits, and on the cordial support of progresive Americans.

"It is "The New-York Weekly Tribune," acknowledged the country over as the leading National Family Newspaper.

Recognizing its value to those who desire all the news of the State and Nation, the publisher of "The Argus," (your own favorite home paper) has entered into an alliahee with "The New-York Weekly Tribune," which enables him to furnish both papers at the trifling cost of $1.75 per year.

Every farmer and every villager owes to himself, to his family, and to the community in which he lives a cordial support of his local newspaper, as its works constantly and untiringly for his interests in every way, brings to his home all the news and happenings of his neighborhood, the doings of his friends, the condition and prospects for different crops, the prices in home markets, and, in fact, is a weekly visitor which should be found in every wide-awake, progressive family.

Justthink of it! Both of these papers for only $1.75 a year.

Among the many pleasing decorations in the parade last week was one which the Argus failed to mention—that of the Rebecca Lodge. The carriage was tastefully decorated in the lodge colors—pink and green, and the ladies who arranged it were the recipients of many well deserved compliments. The Argus regrets its failure to mention it with the others last week.

During the past two weeks G R Martin and others have been interesting themselves in bettering the equipment for fighting fires in our midst. One of the most necessary things with which to fight fire is water, and that element is not always to be had conveniently when most wanted. Mr Martin circulated a petition among the business men and secured the necessary funds with which to make a cistern. It will be a 300 barrel capacity and be located in the corner between the bank and W L Taylor's store, and there is no question but that it is a move in the right direction.

The returning members of the First Nebraska, however, do not believe the report, though he was suffering from a cold when they started home. The trouble begins at 9:00 a m and ends at midnight, and consists of ball games, free vaudeville shows, Flambeau Flower and Corn Stalk Parades, and a $1000 representation in fireworks of the Battle of Santiago, 15 Brass Bands-15. To accommodate them the Burlington Route will run a special train leaving Table Rock at 7.12 a m., September 21, arriving Atchison 10:30 a m. Returning, leave Atchison 10:00 p m. Capt Bird expects to go to Colorado for his health and will resign his office of coroner. John Hassler saw a chance of realizing his ambition and filed an application for appointment to the vacancy. The legal adviser of the Argus has examined the legal status of the question and finds that he cannot hold the office of coroner and be postmaster at the same time, and if he resigns the postoffice John Little or Doc Collins might get it and that would be more wormwood than the satisfaction of being coroner could counteract.

NEBRASKA NOTES.

Utica is to have a new church.

Corn in the vicinity of Creighton is maturing nicely.

Henry Garnish of Ansley dropped dead of heart disease while doing chores.

William Chrislip of Gage county fell from a windmill and received injuries from which he died.

William Rhodm of Johnson county, will probably lose an eye by the explosion of a coffee pot.

The fall term of the state institute for the blind opened at Nebraska City last week with a good number of students in attendance.

Professor Frederick Eberhardt, for the past seventeen years teacher of a German school at Sutton, died last week at the age of sixty-two.

General fund warrants of the state amounting to $42,000 have been called in by the state treasurer. The warrants are numbered 50,722 to 51,131, inclusive, and interest will cease September 14.

A barn on the farm of John Hunt, on the old town site of Wyoming, rented by William Delozier, was burned to the ground. A wagon, two hogs, corn, oats, harness, etc., were burned. The horses were saved, but were badly burned.

Earl, the five-year-old son of F. F. Versaw, living near Tecumseh, climbed to the tower platform of a windmill recently and fell to the ground. His right leg was broken between the thigh and knee, and he was badly shaken up

It is the concensus of opinion among farmers in the vicinity of Rising City that the three hot days of last week succeeded in cutting down the corn yield to an appreciable extent. Wheat sowing was greatly retarded by the long dry spell.

One afternoon last week the two and-one-half-year-old baby of L. H. Hinds, a farmer three and one-half miles west of David City, crawled into the large tank of the windmill and was drowned. Mr. Hinds lost a child some five or six years ago by accidental poisoning.

Ned Copeland, who was teller of the Nebraska National bank at Omaha, is badly wanted for embezzling $10,000 of the bank's funds. Copeland left in August ostensibly on a vacation, but not returning when he should, his accounts were examined with the above results. He has worked for the bank since boyhood.

The young son of D. L. Cartwell, residing two and a half miles south of Elmwood, was teasing their large dog one day last week. The brute became enraged and seized the boy's forearm, badly lacerating it. Medical assistance was summoned. The boy will come out all right, although the bite is a bad one.

On August 2, a fellow named J. E. Jones struck Omaha, ostensibly to see the exposition. On the streets he was overcome by the heat and was taken to the hospital. Later he was arrested on information from Ft. Leavenworth to the effect that he was a deserter from Company L, Thirty-second infantry, at present recruiting at that point.

Sheriff Farris, of Saunders county, who was wounded by a man named Johnson last week, is improving, and his wounds are not considered dangerous. A posse was organized at Wahoo to go out and arrest Johnson, but when they reached the Johnson place he had fled. Later he was captured at Ashland and was brought to Wahoo and jailed. The people of the county are indignant and some threats have been made, but so long as the sheriff continues to get better Johnson will not be molested.

Roy Young, a Beatrice boy, while fishing, unluckily got a fish hook caught in his lower lip, and a painful operation was necessary to remove it.

While threshing at Mr. Winehold's about seven miles northwest of Beaver Crossing, John C. Johnson was instantly killed. He was trying to put on a belt and became entangled in the machinery. The left arm was torn off at the shoulder joint and the face and head was bruised to a considerable extent. Dr. Doty was called but, but could do nothing. Mr. Johnson was a man about fifty-five years old, and leaves a wife and several children.

At the old settlers' picnic, which was in progress at Steele City, twelve miles south of Fairbury, had a little sensation last week. A horse was stolen from the grounds, but its absence was soon discovered and a chase was instituted which resulted in catching a man while trying to escape with the horse. He was taken to Fairbury this morning and lodged in jail. He refused to give his name and says he came from Iowa. He insisted that the horse belonged to him.

Mrs. Mack Smart, living at Tenth and Davenport streets, Omaha, narrowly escaped a horrible death by burning in the explosian of a gasoline stove. When the stove flashed the woman courageously seized it in her hands and carried it to the door, where she pitched the blazing tank into the street, burning her hands frightfully. The drippings of the burning oil caught in the fringe of her skirt and would have enveloped her in flames had she lacked the presence of mind to smother the fire in towels. A neighbor seeing the blaze, turned in an alarm of fire, but when the companies arrived the flames were extinguished.

Emile Zola has written a letter to the editor of L'Ami des Betes, in which he declares that during his exile nothing gave him more pain than the news of his dog. His wife wrote to him that the dog searched for him everywhere became melancholy and died suddenly. "It seemed to me as if my departure had killed him," writes Zola, "and I wept like a child. Even now I cannot think of him without being moved to tears. When I returned a large part of my house seemed deserted and lonely. And of all the sacrifices I have had to bear this was one of the heaviest."

IN SEARCH OF HIM

by ROBIN GREY

CHAPTER XVIII.

Marguerite Lilbourne and Mary Stelling sat lazily over their breakfast in a private hotel.

It was April—a fair, sweet spring morning. All London was looking its very best, and the flower sellers adorned the streets with masses of pale primroses and dainty Lent-lillies. Mary was reading a letter, Marguerite listening.

"And mother likes the house so much," said Mary, "and is longing for us to come down. She hopes we shall not stay in town more than a week. Can we get through everything in a week, Madge?"

"Oh, I think so. I am longing to see our new home."

"We are so delighted that darling Marguerite has decided to come to us," read Mary. "The society is so nice here; we have had all the best people calling already. I am sure you will both be pleased with the garden and tennis lawns. As to Marguerite's rooms, she must choose and furnish them herself. The father went over yesterday to look at Bernard's estate—such a noble place, he says—magnificent timber and plenty of game. The marriage is to be on the tenth of May. Mildred is everything that we could wish—most kind; but I can't help thinking now and then how nice it would have been if our Madge could have been mistress of all that splendor."

"Poor mother!" said Mary, breaking off. "She will never forgive Bruno for jilting you, Madge."

"It is a great pity," returned Marguerite quietly. "I forgave him long ago."

"I know you did," said Mary; "at least you said so; but, if it is true, why did you refuse that nice Mr. Lennox at Nice?"

"However, it doesn't matter, for it seems you will have plenty of chances. As I wrote to mother, I found it no sinecure to chaperone a pretty heiress all over Europe. Oh, dear, how different life was this time last year—eh, Madge?"

"Oh, Mary, how different!"

"Would you like to go back to those times?"

"No," said Marguerite, emphatically, "I should not."

"What are you going to do this morning?" asked Mary, after a pause. "There are the bridesmaids' dresses to try on."

"Yes; and to call on Mrs. Browning, and ask her if she will chaperone us for a few theaters."

"We must take a hansom to go and see her. We will leave that till this afternoon."

"Very well."

"I will go and hunt out the address of this dressmaker of Mildred's," said Mary. "Our gowns will cost us a pretty penny, Madge."

"I suppose so," said Marguerite, rather absently, as Mary left the room, humming a lively air.

Marguerite remained seated, a faraway, thoughtful look in her eyes, as if her mind were dwelling upon some absent one.

"I cannot go to him," she said aloud, "and he will never come to me. Is he in England, I wonder? Oh, where? Never once did we meet him, all through our travels, and now—now—there can be no such thing as a chance meeting here in London."

With a restless sigh she took up the newspaper and glanced idly through the news. Very charming she looked as she sat there. Her dress was tasteful—simple but costly. It set off her slender figure admirably. Her face had gained in beauty since the autumn before, though it had somewhat lost its childlike roundness, and for the present at least the fun and mirthful mockery were hidden away. Her winter in Florence—where she had mixed in the best society—had given her an air of grace and distinction. Bernard Selwyn had shown a lamentable ignorance of her latent capabilities when he judged her to be unfit for an elevated position.

Suddenly, as she read, the hand which held the paper began to tremble, her lips tightened, her color rose. Her eyes were fixed upon a short paragraph.

"A gentleman was thrown from a hansom in the Strand last night and seriously injured. He was taken to Charing Cross hospital, whence it is not considered prudent to remove him. Letters found on him prove him to be Mr. Martineau, of the firm of Leroy and Martineau, solicitors, London."

"Madge," said Mary, pushing open the door at that minute, "do you know where Mr. Martineau is?"

Marguerite started violently.

Mr. Martineau! what—what made you think of him?"

"Well, I was just wondering how you were going to be Mildred's bridesmaid unless you got your marriage annulled?"

"That is worth consideration," returned Marguerite gravely. "Mary, would you think me selfish if I went off on my own account this morning? I—I have some business—do you mind being deserted?"

"Not at all," said Mary, cheerfully. "Thank you, dear. You are quite sure you don't mind?"

"Downright certain! To begin with, here's that letter of mother's to answer. Shall I say we leave London this week, Madge?"

"Yes, please, dear."

Marguerite escaped. Hurrying to her room, she surveyed herself critically from head to foot in a full-length mirror—added a touch here and there, donned a particularly becoming hat and carefully selected gloves, then, running down stairs, let herself out, and hailed a hansom.

"Stop at the first florist's you come to," she said.

Having loaded herself with lilies of the valley and marguerites, she gave the cabman the name of the hospital, and was driven speedily thither.

It was not until she had paid and dismissed the cabman, and stood waiting for admittance, that she began to realize what she was doing; and she was frightened at her own boldness.

"How is Mr. Martineau?" she inquired, with an air of confusion. "I wanted to hear how he is?"

"Which ward?" asked the porter.

Marguerite could not tell.

"An accident," she tried to explain. "The gentleman was thrown out of a cab, and brought in yesterday."

A ray of intelligence illuminated the porter's face. He departed to make inquiries.

"POOR MOTHER!" SAID MARY, BREAKING OFF.

CHAPTER XIX.

Marguerite sat down upon a bench in the large lobby in which she found herself. She was trembling from head to foot. Never till this minute had she realized the force of her own feelings. Long since she had come to the conclusion that her feeling for Bernard had been merely that preference which so many young girls mistake for love. But this other feeling, which for months had been steadily growing in her heart—it had needed but the fact of Valdane's being in danger to reveal to her the strength which it had attained. Thoughts of delirium, amputation, fever, death, came crowding upon her imagination. She was obliged to summon all her self-control to keep from breaking down.

Presently the porter came back with the nurse, a pretty dark-eyed young woman, with a sympathetic face. She looked at Marguerite kindly, but spoke in rather a coldly authoritative manner.

"I am very sorry. I daren't let Mr. Martineau see any one without doctor's orders, and the doctor's not here now."

"Oh, but I must see him!" Marguerite said, a frantic sense of helplessness stealing over her.

"I'm very sorry. It's not visiting time, you know; and I got into trouble last week for admitting a visitor like this. I really am sorry. Try tomorrow."

Tomorrow! He might be dead by then. Now, now was the time. Having come so far, she must attain her end; perhaps tomorrow she would not be able to screw up her courage.

"Is no one admitted—not their nearest relations—when they are so ill? It is very cruel," she said.

"Well, perhaps his mother might be, or his wife."

Marguerite was past sticking at trifles now.

"I am his wife," she said.

"Are you?" returned the nurse. "I thought his wife was dead."

"Why should you think that?" asked Marguerite.

"Because he's got a wedding ring suspended from his neck by a piece of ribbon."

"Oh, yes!" Marguerite stammered, "I know—that is all right. But indeed I am his wife! Oh, let me in!"

The nurse was conquered and requested Marguerite to follow her.

Now that her point was gained Marguerite was filled with all sorts of fears and was shivering and trembling as she followed her guide—now wishing from the bottom of her heart that she had not come, now utterly carried away by the thought of seeing him again. She cared not ask the nurse any questions as to his condition—she could not trust her voice.

They reached the door of the private room he occupied.

"Now wait here a moment," said the nurse, as she passed inside.

Again the suspense was almost sickening. It seemed to Marguerite hours before the nurse returned.

"It's all right. You can go in," she said:

For the first time Marguerite wondered what she should do.

"Is he delirious?" she asked of the nurse.

"Oh, no; he's perfectly sensible!"

Marguerite had expected delirium—she had not realized the fact that Valdane would know her, and now felt herself tremble until she called forth all her strength, physical and moral, and walked steadily and noiselessly into the room.

There was a slight movement as Valdane sank back upon his pillows.

"My wife," he said, in a rather low, but distinct voice—"my wife. I could not believe it. But it is you—really you."

The flowers fell from her hands. She made a step forward, and tried to speak, but could not, for the tears which overran her eyes and fell down her face. He had held out his hand and she took it, held it for a moment between her own, and then impulsively carried it to her lips.

"Take care," said Valdane, gently. "Do nothing you will regret afterward. You think I am dying, and I hoped I was; but they tell me now that I am to live and be sound again, so let us have nothing that you wish recalled."

"You will live—you will? Ah, how thankful I am!"

"Thankful?" he echoed.

"Yes, thankful—so thankful for everything! First, that you married me, then that Bernard threw me over, then that I happened to come to London yesterday, and last that I came here, with you—with you!"

"And you said you were my wife—you told the nurse you were my wife," he said slowly, his eyes fixed longingly upon her face. "Marguerite, my life, my love, did you mean that?"

There was a long silence. At last she said:

"Yes, I meant it."

The bed was strewn with fragrant flowers. A shaft of spring sunlight streaming through the tall window rested on the two heads.

"Val," she whispered, "Val," we must never be parted any more."

(The End.)

THE BEST OF IT.

And Still Lovely Woman Is Clamoring for Her Rights.

Every man has his day; but thanks to his gallantry, woman has every day. If reasonably indulgent, she is mistress of her destiny. She has her finger in all sorts of pie, writes Jean Potage in the Boston Home Journal. Her sins are forgiven her. If she murders a man who has failed to treat her like the perfect lady she was not, the jury is pretty apt to acquit her, taking into consideration the naughtiness of the man. On the other hand if she treats a man nastily, and he does her quietus make with a large bodkin, twelve good men and true disbelieve his story and order him to the scaffold. If she sues her lover for breach of promise, she gets at least a part of what she sues for. If he sues her he gets the ha-ha from all the newspapers. In case of a quarrel in which she is to blame, she has a court of last resort which is closed to mankind—she can always shed tears when she finds things are not going her way. If she loses a part of woman's glory—her golden locks—she may piece out the remainder with some adroitly commingled curls, to the eternal deception of the public, and so never hear the remarks of derision turned toward her bald-headed husband. If she's an actress she can play Juliet and Hamlet both, while the male Thespian, though he may make a better Hamlet, is precluded by public prejudice and an insipient black beard from ever looking at the moonlight and asking Romeo wherefore he is Romeo. And still she asks for her "rights" and seeks for "power." The first person who asked for the earth, and then scolded because it was not fried on both sides and turned over, must have been of the sex that brought Adam to grief with an apple.

DOG DIES OF GRIEF.

Starved Himself to Death After His Master Was Killed.

New York Times: Ted was only a dog. But he was a faithful and affectionate animal, and he is believed to have died of grief for the death of his owner, John Gorman, of West Hoboken. Gorman worked at the Weehawken coal docks. When Gorman went home at night there was always a race between Gorman's four children and Ted to see which should be the first to greet him. One day about two weeks ago Gorman met with an accident. He was crushed between two coal cars, and was taken to St. Mary's hospital, Hoboken, where he died. When the body was taken home Ted sat at the head of the coffin, and refused to be driven away. When the body was taken to the church, Ted followed the funeral procession, waiting patiently outside the church. Then he followed his master to the cemetery. He remained there when the family went home, but returned to the house shortly after sundown. Then he took the place he had occupied while he sat beside the coffin. The children, whose grief was no keener than his, tried to induce him to play, but he would not leave the place he had selected. He also refused to eat. Various kinds of meat were set before him, and he was also tempted with saucers of milk, but he would neither eat nor drink. On Thursday night he died, and Mrs. Gorman says he deliberately starved himself to death through grief for the death of his master. The four little Gorman children placed Ted's body in a box and buried it in the garden under a tree.

William Dean Howells says that the conductor of a German trolley car stopped it and got off the platform and stood in the street until the passengers were safely aboard without telling them to step lively or pulling them up the steps, or knuckling them in the back to make them move forward. He let them get fairly seated before he started the car, and so lost the fun of seeing them lurch and stagger violently and wildly clutch each other for support. The Germans have so little sense of humor that probably no one in the car would have been amused to see the strangers flung on the floor.

He Stacked.

A traveling man just home from a far western trip has brought with him something new in linguistic novelties. "I was eating dinner in a restaurant way out west," he said, "and, as I finished, the bustling waiter girl scorched up to me and asked in a fast express sort of tone: 'Do you want any dessert?' 'Yes, I will take some,' I answered. 'Well, then, stack!' she demanded in an imperative tone. 'Stack!' I repeated, thinking it was something new to eat, 'what's that?' 'Why, pile up your dinner dishes,' she impatiently explained. So I stacked all the little dishes on my plate and she scorched off with them and brought me three kinds of pie, two kinds of pudding and some frozen custard."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

LIGHTHOUSES.

Marvels of Contrivance and Science—The Song of the Siren.

Did you ever see a lighthouse of the modern kind? Here in its narrow tower is a strong electric light; round the light all night long revolves the cylinder of prisms artfully arranged. Flash of ten seconds; rest of ten seconds; flash again; rest of five seconds; third flash; darkness for the rest of the minute. And so on all night long. Out at sea the officer on watch counts the flashes and knows the lighthouse and where he is. Or there is a fog horn; in a chamber beside the lighthouse are the tanks or cisterns filled with compressed air; nothing short of compressed air will sound this terrible alarm; compressed air worked with a steam engine.

Then there is the voice of the siren. You have heard the modern form of the once enchanting and alluring voice of the siren; it is now the voice of torture and agony; the maiden, the water nymph, the ear piercer, is now provided with a throat which contains one cylinder within another. Both cylinders are provided with long, narrow apertures; the inner one is set to revolve at a thousand turns a minute. Then the compressed air is turned on; and the song of the siren begins. It is the shriek of the imprisoned air forcing its way out through these apertures; it passes at the velocity of 3,000 feet a minute. "Beware!" cries the modern siren. "Come not nearer; give me a wider berth! Stand off! Here is danger; here are rocks; here lurks death upon sharp and relentless rocks, hungering for sailors!" Safety before poetry. Let us not regret that we no longer wreck the ship and drown the crew for the sake of a sweet false face and a sweet false song.

That Mysterious Major...

ETHEL A. SOUTHAM

CHAPTER I.

The rambling, old-fashioned hostelry of the "Royal George" had stood upon the green hillside overlooking the now fashionable watering-place of Saltcliffe from the time when that picturesque and prosperous town consisted of little more than a few fishermen's huts and small lodging houses. But, though hotels and boarding houses—magnificent structures which gave quite an appearance of superiority to the small town—had sprung up on all sides, the little hostelry itself still held its own. Indeed the "Royal George," though quite as retired, was still as preposterous as it had been forty years before, when the huge board, upon which the monarch after whom it was named was displayed, looking as gorgeous and kinglike as his crown and unlimited quantity of somewhat stiff-looking ermine could make him, hung out over the narrow little doorway, with the name of the worthy proprietor, "Andrew Gillibrand," set out in gilded letters below. And, as one stood in the lovely quaint old garden and gazed around at the stretches of down and the heather-grown cliffs beyond, one could hardly believe the changes which had been effected scarcely a mile away.

It was late one evening toward the end of July when a stranger who had just arrived sauntered leisurely into the large dining room of the "Royal George" and gave orders for dinner to be prepared for him immediately.

He was a tall, dark, striking-looking man, with a soldierly bearing and decidedly distinguished air; and, as he crossed over toward the bay-window and sat down at a small table the waiters paused involuntarily with their white table napkins slung over their arms and trays of jingling glass held up high above their heads, while Josiah Williamson, under whose charge that particular table happened to be placed, mentally decided that he was in for a little luck at last.

"What will you have, sir?" he began, with an air of expectation—"coupe a la Reine, Bouillabaisse or Julienne?"

"Bring me anything you have ready," said the stranger, brusquely. "Yet to think," he murmured to himself as he took up the wine card and lazily studied the long list—"to think that the last time I was here, twenty years ago, Andrew Gillibrand was brewing his own ale! It was certainly a primitive bill of fare that he had to offer his customers then—only ham and eggs or bread and cheese and a pint of his 'prime October; today he has all the delicacies of the season. How things change, to be sure!"

Then he turned and looked out of the open window. There, however, the change was not so remarkable. The "Royal George" had always possessed a lovely garden; and, if the grass was shorn a little closer, if the paths had a neater appearance and the flowers were more recherche, prim rows of calceolarias, geraniums and stately dahlias taking the place of the quaint old clumps of sweet-williams, marigolds and pinks, the change was not so great as to strike him with the same force as naturally did the interior.

This evening the garden had a very serene, unruffled air. The tennis courts were deserted, the chairs under the trees unoccupied, and, excepting for the gentle lapping of the waves upon the shingly beach, scarcely a sound disturbed the dreamy stillness of the July evening.

"It is an idyllic place, I suppose," mused the stranger, "but it would drive me mad if I thought I had to stay here a moment longer than twenty-four hours. There does not seem to be a soul about."

His closing sentence was spoken half aloud, and, just as the words left his lips, as though to disprove the truth of them, a handsome black French poodle came trotting into the middle of the room with an air of unruffled composure decidedly at variance with the aspect of his mistress, who a moment later suddenly appeared in the open doorway with a rather bewildered expression upon her face.

"You bad dog, Sambo! I was just wondering if you could have found your way here. Could you give him a bone, Henry?"

But here her care of Master Sambo was unceremoniously cut short, as, raising her head, she suddenly encountered the gaze of a pair of amused gray eyes, and for the first time became aware of the presence of a stranger in the room.

As for the owner of the gray eyes, he carefully surveyed the figure in the doorway for the space of about three seconds longer, and then, looking away, tried to become absorbed in the merits of Mr. Andrew Gillibrand's wine list.

But, after studying it intently for five minutes, he tossed the card aside and steadily regarded the doorway through which the fantastically clipped poodle and its mistress had just disappeared.

"By the bye, who is she?"

There was something strangely inconceivable in the question, and the waiter, who had made his appearance with the first course, paused to stare in astonishment.

"She, sir?" he repeated. "I beg your pardon, what she?"

"Oh, the young lady with the dog! Surely you know whom I mean!"

"The young lady with the dog? Ah—that is Miss Evelyn! Oh, yes, sir—of course I know Miss Luttrell"—here a placid smile expanded the waiter's face—"and a very nice young lady she is."

"She is staying here, I suppose?" There was commendable indifference in the speaker's tones.

"Yes, sir—with her aunt, Lady Howard. They have been here more than a fortnight now; as they generally do remain for a month when they come, I don't suppose they will be going till the end of that time. Her ladyship is Miss Luttrell's guardian."

"Ah—she is an orphan, then?"

"Yes, sir. Squire Luttrell died just about two years ago. You will no doubt have heard tell of him."

"Luttrell of Luttrell, do you mean? Oh, yes—of course I have! He was one of the largest land-owners in Blankshire. Who has inherited the property? Had he a son?"

"No; Evelyn is the only child, and has come in for everything. I believe. They say she will have something like ten or twelve thousand a year."

"Really!"—and the speaker turned to the contemplation of the Julienne soup, considerably astonished at discovering in the curly headed mistress of the black poodle Miss Luttrell of the far-famed Luttrell court and owner of one of the finest estates in the county.

He had almost finished his dinner and was quietly contemplating a peaceful stroll round the ground with one of his best Havanas, when a sharp bark made him look up just in time to behold the black poodle once more, dashing across the lawn in hot pursuit of a butterfly.

In and instant he was all interest. If the dog were there, his mistress would not be far away; and even as the thought passed through his mind the same laughing tones which had been ringing in his ears for the past half-hour were borne distinctly toward him. Bending forward, he saw the girl herself, a slight, graceful figure, leaning back in one of the low bamboo chairs which stood so invitingly beneath the shade of the trees.

She was not alone, however. In close attendance this time was a man in evening dress, who had seated himself by her side on a straight iron-backed form, which he had evidently chosen in preference to a more luxurious seat half a yard farther away.

Yes; at a second glance he came to the conclusion that Miss Luttrell was even prettier than he had imagined her to be at first. There was nothing statuesque about her beauty, nothing absolutely perfect in her features; but the face before him was one which, once seen, could never be forgotten.

THERE WAS A MOST BEWITCHING SMILE UPON HER LIPS WHEN SHE REPLIED TO SOME REMARK OF HER COMPANION.

CHAPTER II.

There was a most bewitching smile upon her lips now as she laughingly replied to some remark of her companion, who was leaning forward swinging his stick backward and forward and trying to knock off the heads of some daisies; but his head was turned toward the girl beside him, at whom he was gazing in rapt attention.

"Who is the fellow," murmured the stranger, as he put up his eye-glass and surveyed the individual in question with an air of curiosity not unmingled with envy. "Her brother? Fiddlesticks! More likely her father!" with a shrug of his shoulders, though an unmistakable cloud gathered upon his face as he noted the unpaternal manner in which he had laid his hand on the back of her chair and was listening to her words. "I can always come within a year or two of anybody's age, and that fellow is either 44 or 45 if he is a day!"

The man to whom the stranger at the window set down so decidedly to play the unromantic part of parent had the word "Bachelor" written upon every line of his countenance. At the same time he was a noticeable-looking personage, gentlemanly in appearance rather than handsome, with a clean-shaven face, clearly cut features and dark, almost fascinatingly determined eyes set deep beneath overhanging brows which gave character to an otherwise unremarkable face.

For the past few minutes, however, the spreading branches of the trees had thrown everything into shade. But the sun was setting in a crimson glory, and one golden shaft strayed beneath the dark, heavy foliage, where it lingered for a few seconds to bring out the lovely blending of tints in the girl's nut-brown hair and to light up every feature of the man by her side.

"The deuce!" broke involuntarily from the stranger's lips.

"Yes, sir—beg your pardon, sir! Cheddar cheese or Stilton?" The waiter was engaged brushing crumbs from the next table, but in an instant he was at his post.

"Neither!" was the brusque reply. "But"—with a detaining gesture—"have you such a thing as a visitors' list? If you have, let me see it."

"Certainly, sir. I will bring it at once."

And the waiter smiled to himself as he followed the direction of the stranger's eyes and then turned away. It was astonishing what an amount of interest he could raise by the mere mention of Miss Luttrell and her ten or twelve thousand a year!

OLD WINE.

May Become Too Old and Unfit to Drink by Deterioration.

New Orleans Times-Democrat: "There is such a thing as a wine being too old," said a member of the board of trade, chatting with some friends in the front offices. "I had that illustrated at my house the other day under rather interesting circumstances. Back in 1848 Gen. John M. Lewis, who was then sheriff and afterward mayor of New Orleans, gave my uncle a basket of four-year-old champagne. My uncle afterward moved north, taking that and other wines with him, and on his death, in the early sixties, the basket was still intact. There had possibly been some agreement about opening it at a certain time, and, at any rate, the champagne remained in the family cellar untouched, and only last month my cousin, now in New York, broke the lot and sent me down four bottles. I was naturally curious to know how the old wine would look and taste, and a few days ago, on the occasion of a little anniversary at our house, I opened one of the bottles. I had considerable difficulty in removing the cork without breaking it, but it finally gave way. There was not a vestige of pop and the wine ran out perfectly dead and limpid. It was pale amber in color and had a faint, pleasant bouquet, but the imprisoned gas that had once given it life and sparkle were gone forever. It was interesting as a relic, but not fit to drink, and some friends who are connoisseurs said that it had evidently been deteriorating since 1870. It's a great pity my northern relatives held it in too much veneration to sample it about that time."

CANCER CAUSES MANY DEATHS

Large Increase in the Mortality Noted Recent Years.

Physicians generally are very properly alarmed at and at the same time puzzled to find the cause of the large increase in the number of deaths in recent years from cancerous disease. It is a singular fact that women are by far the greatest sufferers from this awful complaint, because it particularly affects many of them for physiological reasons. Hence, though men give themselves cancer in the throat and tongue by the smoke habit that women as a sex have happily not yet acquired, men die in considerably less numbers than women from this, perhaps the very worst of all the odious tribe of mortal diseases. That it is quite time to draw the attention of the lay public to this opprobium of medicine is clear when we read the figures given by an oddly named but necessary "cancer society." In the last thirty-five years the annual cancer mortality has increased from 8,117 to 24,443—that is, from 385 per 1,000,000 of the population to 787 per 1,000,000. Now, a fact like this undoubtedly has a cause. What is it? The importance of the question to women is seen when it is added that the victims in the last year returned, 1897, were over 14,000 females to 9,000-odd males.

Clara Barton in Cuba.

Rev. Peter McQueen writes to Frank Leslie's Monthly the following anecdote of this energetic and practical woman. One night, away out in the hills, I asked a Third cavalryman: "Whom do you think the greatest hero of the war at Santiago:" He changed his quid, took out of his mouth an old corn-cob pipe, looked away at the red rim of hills which the sun was coloring, and reflectively replied: "Well, pardner, ef you want to know, my ideas is thet thet there little old lady named Miss Bartoum, or Battom, or Biartom, or whatever is her name—she's the best of all. She is a strictly proper character, neighbor. I seen her a-goin' through two feet six inches of mud to tie up a chap as was bleedin' to death. She, comrade, is to my ideas the hero of this yer campaign."

Flippancy on the Bench.

The following is the full opinion of the court in a Pennsylvania case: "An affidavit of defense having been filed, but no affidavit of defense having been handed to the court with the other papers, and none being found in the office of the prothonotary, where it ought to be found when called for, we shall take it for granted that an affidavit which was strong enough to walk away and take care of itself is sufficiently strong to face a jury, and, therefore, discharge the rule."

WHERE THE BRASS WENT

Omaha Police Uncover a Fence of Big Proportions.

Detective Malone returned to Lincoln Saturday from Omaha where he learned of the apprehension of the people who have been receiving stolen brass from the B. & M. railway along its lines. The person who received some of the metal was caught with 480 pounds of it in his possession and witnesses are known who saw the stuff while being delivered.

Some person who was acquainted with railroad matters enough to know when some of the road's property was in the wrong place was passing by the grocery store of H. K. Harding at 24th and Hamilton streets recently when he noticed some very heavy bags being unloaded. One accidentally burst and a lot of brass journals flew out on which the letters B. & M. were stamped plainly. The police worked on the matter and arrested Harding finally for receiving stolen property. In his possession was found 480 pound of the brass. His father is a junk dealer, whose place of business is at 22d and Izzard. The supposition is that after the brass was brought to Omaha it was taken to the grocery store, where no watch would be kept for missing brass. It was then an easy matter to transfer it to the junk shop.

WELCOME TO THE G. A. R.

A Week of Festivities in Store For the Veterans.

Beginning September 11 Lincoln will have a continuous run of festivities for two weeks. The G. A. R. reunion and the reception to the First regiment will occupy the attention of the citizens and visitors the first week to the exclusion of almost all other pleasures. The week will be full of good things, and with good weather the reunion will bring to Lincoln as many people as used to come during the old state fair days.

The opening day will bring a flock in on the early morning trains and it will keep up all day. The address of welcome will be delivered in the afternoon by Governor Poynter, and will be responded to by Department Commander Evans. A few other speeches will be made, followed in the evening by a camp fire.

BURN BRIDGE IN THE NIGHT

Engineer Makes the Discovery in Time to Prevent an Accident.

Freight train No. 41, on the Elkhorn, south Sunday morning, discovered a bridge had been burned out one-half mile south of Davey. The engineer on 41 discovered a dump car placed on the track and a few rods further on he found that a tie had been placed on the track, which caused him to slow down his engine before the bridge itself had been reached, hence no damage was done further than the complete burning of the bridge. The origin of fire is supposed to be incendiary, as the last train passed over the bridge ar 6:30 Saturday evening and had the engine of that train set fire to the bridge it would have been discovered, as it is but a short distance from the public highway and but a few rods from the house of Henry Hanson. The placing of the car and tie on the track cannot be accounted for, as no one in that locality seems to know anything about how they got there.

GOVERNOR OVERRULES HIM

Suspends Mr. Bryant's Ruling on Resident Agents.

Governor Poynter, at the request of Captain H. E. Palmer of Omaha, has set aside Deputy Insurance Commissioner Bryant's interpretation of the residence agency act. This act of the last legislature requires all fire insurance policies to be signed by a duly authorized agent "resident within such county or state." Insurance Commissioner Bryant held that policies under this law must be signed by an agent within the county where the insured property is situated and Deputy Attorney General Oldham concurred in the decision. Auditor Cornell, who also claims to be at the head of the insurance department, ruled that an agent's jurisdiction was not confined to one county, but that he was authority anywhere in the state.

John Haines, who has been herding for C. Pettijohn, disappeared last Saturday night and no trace of him can be found. He was in Long Pine that evening and started home on horseback. The horse was found but Haines cannot be found. Foul play is feared.

The Mikado's Favorite Sport.

The favorite sport of the mikado is, like that of most of the Indian princes, horse-racing, but he allows no betting, and the price of admission to the races is placed so high that only the upper classes can attend. The mikado's stables accommodate about 300 animals.

Cheese and Digestion.

The digestibility of cheese has been tested by a German chemist, who placed the samples in an artificial digestive fluid containing a considerable portion of fresh gastric juice. Cheshire and Roquefort cheese took four hours to digest, Gorgonzola eight hours and Brie, Swiss and ten other varieties ten hours. As an ordinary meal is digested in four or five hours, the common belief that cheese aids digestion appears to be erroneous.

I was reading in a paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I wrote to you and after taking two bottles I felt like a new person. British Army Pensions.

The ordinary pension to the widow of a lieutenant in the army is £40 and £10 for each child. A captain's widow has £50 and £12 for each child; a lieutenant-colonel's widow £90 and £20 for each child; a general's widow, £120 and £20 for each child. If death is directly traced to fatigue, privations or exposure, the pensions are increased by half as much again; if the officer is killed in action or dies of his wounds within twelve months of the battle the pensions are doubled. The ordinary pensions are not granted if the officer was twenty-five years older than his wife.—London Echo.

Locomotive Runs.

During the past few months, the Baltimore and Ohio railroad has materially extended the runs of the passenger locomotives on through trains. Formerly engines were changed on an average every 100 or 150 miles. It was thought that the mountain grades of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad would prevent an extension of the runs. However, the experiment was made. It has proved successful and reduced the number of locomotives formerly required by twenty-four, which can be used in other branches of the service and save the purchase of more motive power. Under the new plan, locomotives are double crewed and make from 7,000 to 8,000 miles a month, as against 3,500 to 4,000 under the former method.

The most crowded spot on the earth's surface is that portion of the city of Valletta, island of Malta, known as the "Manderaggio." This would give no less than 636,000 persons to the square mile, or 1,017.6 to the acre. In Liverpool, the most crowded city in Britain, the most densely populated portions have only 116.4 to the acre.—New York World.

Republican County Convention.

Last Saturday afternoon the opera house at Pawnee City was filled with people willing to give a portion of their time to the duty of "saving the country." It was a gathering of representative men, from every walk of life—except the millionaire—and they were intent on doing the work on hand in a manner to please a majority of the citizens of the county. The occasion was the republican county convention, composed of 159 delegates—nearly all whom were present—and we challenge our popocratic friends to assemble a more intelligent looking body of men, if they can. The business to be transacted was the nomination of candidates for county offices.

At 2 o'clock J R Little, chairman of the central committee, called the convention to order, first reading a paper which entitles him to a long rest from the cares and anxieties of managing republican politics in Pawnee county. Hon Wm Sutton was elected temporary chairman, C J Wood secretary and W S Perrin of DuBois assistant secretary. Mr Sutton thanked the convention for the honor confered upon him, in a few appropriate words. The credentials of delegates were handed to the clerk and read, and the temporary organization was made permanent.

The first business under the call was the nomination of a candidate for treasurer. The first ballot resulted in the selection of A D Strunk, the present incumbent, who has faithfully performed the duties of the office for nearly two years. He received all but 16 votes—which were cast for Harry Morrison. For county clerk William Johnston was nominated by acclamation; as was also J R Utterback for county superintendent. For sheriff there was a lively contest, between Claud Fuller and R B Stevens, the former winning out on the first formal ballot; for county judge there was also something of a scramble, votes being cast for G T Belding, Ed Becker, John McAllister, Mr Graham and Frank Barton; the first ballot settled the matter however, by the selection of Mr Barton. For district clerk there were three candidates, Mr Brooks, Mr Davis and Mr Smoots; Major Brooks was the favorite of the convention by a big majority and was declared the nominee, for surveyor V M Babbitt was named. Pawnee City showed her usual desire for the coroner. From the time long before Fred Hassler turned democrat, Pawnee has wanted the coroner, only to have her hopes blighted by the conventions, but this time it was different and her favorite candidate, Charles Schapple, was given the long-sought for honor—securing 159 votes.

Delegates to the state convention were chosen as follows:

Table Rock, F H Taylor, W H Wilson. Clear Creek, M Walsh, Jr. Steinauer, N Steinauer. Turkey Creek, ——. Plum Creek, J M Craven. Miles, W J Halderman. Pawnee City, H C Lindsay, H H Bull. Sheridan, J M Hurd. South Fork, R N Church. Clay, Wm McConnell. West Branch, Andrew Scott. Mission Creek, T J Griggs.

The judicial delegation will be composed as follows:

Table Rock, C I Norris; Clear Creek, J F Wenzl; Steinauer L P Wenzl; Turkey Creek, Samuel W McKee; Plum Creek, T W Milks; Miles, J D Brown; Pawnee City, J B Raper; Sheridan ——; South Fork, W S Perrin; Clay, I W Brown; West Branch, Wm Shinn; Mission Creek, S J A Fulton.

The matter of selecting a chairman and secretary of the central committee was left with the nominees and the committee is as follows:

Table Rock, C I Norris; Clear Creek, M Walsh, Jr.; Steinauer, L P Wenzl; Turkey Creek, J J Brown; Plum Creek, F A Derby; Miles, J W Steiner; Pawnee City, John B Raper; Sheridan, J M Hurd; South Fork, T W O'Loughlin; Clay, Wm McConnell; West Branch, F E Johnston; Mission Creek, T J Griggs.

The ticket is a good one, worthy of the support of the citizens of Pawnee county and of course they'll get it.

E E Turner, Compton, Mo., was cured of piles by DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve after suffering seventeen years and trying over twenty remedies. Physicians and surgeons endorse it. Beware of dangerous counterfeits.

It is said by some of the knowing fusion oracles at Pawnee City, that Andy Lane can have the fusion nomination for county treasurer—if he wants it. Where does Prof Lin Fulton come in at, we'd like to know. Isn't Prof Lin, the high-cock a-doodle of fusionists hereabouts.

Hon J B Weaver, of Iowa, will address the citizens of Table Rock on the political issues of the day, at the Table Rock opera house, on Saturday evening, September 23. He needs no introduction to the fusion coovention at Pawnee in the afternoon and come here in the evening.

The October Number of The Delineator is called the Autumn number, and contains, in addition to an exhaustive analysis of the season's most approved modes in every department of fashionable art, with special articles on allied topics and the usual potpourri of social and household discussions, a variety of literary features of exceptional quality and interest. A weird, mystical tale of a faithful, lingering lover is The Blue Man, by Mary Hartwell Catherwood, a tragic story of the region of the Great Lakes. Mme. Luisa Cappiani, contributes to this number a classic, authorative article on The Singing Voice. The romantically inclined will delight in eery devices and tests prescribed in The Fateful Night of Halloween, by Elizabeth T Nash. A remarkable poem on the eternity of woman's pain and sorrow is Earth-Old, by Edmund Vance Cooke. A pleasant glimpse of college life is revealed in a timely article by Carolyn Halstead on Opening Features. Noteworthy instances of woman's success are presented in Some Women's Occupations, by LaFayette McLaws. Summer work and achievements among club women are discussed in Club Women and Club Life, by Helen M Winslow. A scholarly Nature-study, adapted to youthful minds will be found in the eighth of the New Kindergarten Papers, by Sarah Miller Kirby, entitled Home Work and Play for October. A Story of Books is the title of an entertaining series of literary memory tests. Of distinct home interest are the Domestic Subjects: The Value of Good Cooking, by Eleanor M Lucas; Mid-Season Desserts, by Katherine B Johnson; and Table Manners and Etiquette, by Edna S Witherspoon. The regular Departments are characterized by the usual abundance of crisp, practical information: Social Observances, by Mrs Frank Learned; Ecclesiastical Embroidery, by Emma Haywood, the designs this month relating to the construction of Vestments; The Dressmaker, The Milliner, Crocheting, Knitting, Lace-Making, The Newest Books, etc, etc.

WOMAN'S COLUMN.

The county convention of the W C T U met according to appointment at Mission Creek U B church Thursday afternoon with a good attendance Pawnee City, Violet and Bookwalter were represented by a goodly delegation as was Mission Creek Union, your correspondent being the sole representative of Table Rock. The devotional meeting was conducted by Mrs C A Bull, after which reports of Unions were given showing an increase of membership and of interest in the work generally. Mission Creek a new Union has eighteen members and has held two medal contests. Summit has 16 active and 3 honorary members and has held 4 medal contests; besides Parlor Meetings, Birthday Socials etc doing the most active work probably of any union in the county. Pawnee City has done much individual work along purity and evangelistic lines of which no definite report could be given but they have some valuable accessions to their numbers and we expect much good work from the Pawnee City Union the coming year. They entertained the county celebration the 4 h address by Mrs St John and recitations from other unions had one lecture by John G Woolley and altogether raised and expended over a hundred dollars in temperance work. Table Rock reported 21 paying members and notwithstanding the infrequency and irregularity of our meetings much work has been done and over $60.00 raised and expended in temperance work the last year. The rising storm cut short our afternoon session and prevented any evening session but every one assured us we would have had the church filled to hear that contest if the night had been pleasant and urged that it be held later so it was planned that we hold it during the moonlight nights of October. The morning session was well attended and after election of officers, was very interesting. The president said that the great benefit derived from these conventions was the encouragment and help brought to all by the many verbal reports of work done that never were recorded on paper, she then presented the subject of Scientific Temperance Instruction with her plan for introducing Short Studies into all the schools of the county asking the sisters if they saw fit to endorse the same to relieve her of the presidency and appoint her Superintendent of this department of work. Mrs Annetta Nesbitt was elected president, Miss Emma Eastwood, Recording Secretary; Mrs N S Wright, Corresponding Secretary; Mrs Whittaker, Treasurer. Brief reports were given by Superintendents showing an increase of temperance papers taken and temperance literature distributed, increased interest in Contest, Flower Mission Work and along some other lines. Mrs Nesbitt then gave us a very earnest and instructive talk on Woman, the power behind the throne. While she did not entirely endorse the saying that, The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world, and was anxious to see the time when woman should hold her rightful place beside the man in the nation and governmental affairs as well as in the home yet she ventured the assertion that if all professedly christian women were throwing their influence on the side of temperance and good government and using it as they should, the saloon would be swept from our land in less than a year. The Union endorsed the plan for Scientific Temperance work and recommended that each local union so far as practicable should hold a parlor meeting in adjacent school districts explaining our work and giving one-half the proceeds to county work retaining half for local work. At 12 the convention adjourned to the parsonage near by where a bountiful repast was spread. Every moment was full of useful and interesting matter but our time was too limited for many things we were wishing to discuss.

Brave Men Fall

Victims to stomach, liver and kidney troubles as well women, and all feel the results in loss of appetite, poisons in the blood, backache, nervousness, headache and tired, listless, run-down feeling. But there's no need to feel like that. Listen to J W Gardener, Idaville, Ind. He says: "Electric Bitters are just the thing for a man when he is all run down, and don't care whether he lives or dies. It did more to give me new strength and good appetite than anything I could take. I can now eat anything and have a new lease on life." Only 50 cents, at S G Wright's Drug Store. Every bottle guaranteed.

The Designer for October, published by the Standard Fashion Company, is a triumph of artistic and literary skill. Its fashion plates, both in black-and-white and in color, are the personfication of style and good taste. Prominent among the literary features is a continued story, A Silver Spur, by the well-known authoress, Martha McCulloch-Williams. Other articles which are not only well written but well illustrated are Io Autumn Array, Millinery, Bulbs and Their Culture, Autumn Finery for the Younger Generation, Tatted Edgings and Insertions, Possibilities of a Ball of Knitting Cotton, Pleasant Nooks and Corners, The Kindergarten at home, and Points on Dressmaking. Besides all these there is a droll little story the juveniles should enjoy, entitled The Enchanted Tree, Book Notes, Half Hours with a Camera, For Health and Beauty, a comedy, A Matrimony Hunt, All Around the House, and Jellies, Jams and Preserves, the last being a number of most excellent receipts which the housekeeper will certainly value.

Millions Given Away.

LINCOLN STREET FAIR.

Unparalelled Entertainments to Please all Comers.

The Lincoln street fair management is outdoing all street fairs past and present, securing free attractions to instruct and entertain the public. In addition to the free exhibits of stock of all kinds, agricultural exhibits, dairy and poultry, for which $2,400 in premiums will be given, there will be three days of races with purses aggregating $2,000.

The management has sold nearly two miles of front footage on the leading business streets for exhibition purposes. At principal street corners, beautiful arches will be erected where band stands will be used for concert purposes by a large number of the best bands in the state. There will be over thirty-seven absolutely free shows every day during fair week. To furnish this amount of amusement the following talent has been engaged:

The great Gillette family, numbering six people, the greatest of acrobats and cycle riders. Trick cycle riding in every conceivable manner. The world's best in their specialty.

The Miller family, numbering five persons, are sensational aerial artists without equal in this country, secured for the week from one of the leading circus companies.

Saxton, the balloon artist, who never fails to go. He will make ascensions daily and carry his parachute with him.

Brandon and Regene, contortionists, acrobats, who give sensational acts with flying rings. These famous performers have just returned from a tour in England with Barnum's show and come direct to Lincoln from the St Louis exposition.

Blenvenu, the marvelous hand balancer and trapeze head balancer, the greatest of all balancers.

Forepaugh and Welcome, trapeze artists, ladder performers and experts with the rings.

Mello, the king of the slack wire, daring performances in mid air daily.

Kansas Ram Maker, prince of jugglers.

Si Stebbins, Barnum's original Robe Clown, who has entertained more people in circus parades than any other clown of his character.

Vino, king of all card tricksters, during fair week he will give public exposure of them all.

The Annual Show, for which the contract is not yet closed, will be secured and will be a principal feature of the week.

Cake Walk, a nightly cake walk will be one of the features, with $50 on top of the cake. This will produce the best talent in this line in the west.

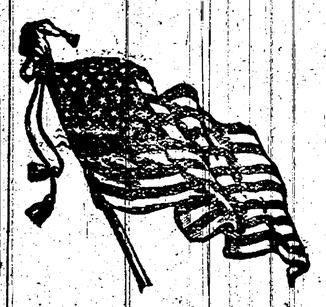
A week of parades. There will be no part of the street fair more interesting and attractive to the general public than the street parades. Civic parade Tuesday night, cycle parade Thursday night, Flower parade Wednesday afternoon; mask carnival parade Saturday night. All night parades will be put on with special illumination and fire-works. Hundreds of electric lights will make day out of night, when the evening parade moves. The Flower parade Wednesday afternoon, will be doubly as large as the great exposition flower parade at Omaha last year, which attracted such wide spread attention.

This great list of attractions is entirely free to the public.

It is a free fair and the only expense to visitors will be the railroad fare and board when in town. All lines of railroads centering in Lincoln will have excursions rates for the entire week of the fair.

The street fair opens Monday, September 18th and closes Saturday evening September 23rd at midnight. None who can possibly leave home, should fail to be in Lincoln during the fair week for every day will be a good day.

NEARLY
Fifty-Eight Years Old!



Its a long life, but devotion to the true interests and prosperity of the American People has won for it new friends as the years rolled by and the original members of its family passed to their reward, and these admirers are loyal and steadfast today, with faith in its teachings, and confidence in the information which it brings to their homes and firesides.

As a natural consequence it enjoys in its old age all the vitality and vigor of its youth, strengthend and ripened by the experiences of over half a century.

It has lived on its merits, and on the cordial support of progressive Americans.

"It is "The New-York Weekly Tribune," acknowledged the country over as the leading National Family Newspaper.

Recognizing its value to those who desire all the news of the State and Nation, the publisher of "The Argus," (your own favorite home paper) has entered into an alliance with "The New-York Weekly Tribune," which enables him to furnish both papers at the trifling cost of $1.75 per year.

Every farmer and every villager owes to himself, to his family, and to the community in which he lives a cordial support of his local newspaper, as its works constantly and untiringly for his interests in every way, brings to his home all the news and happenings of his neighborhood, the doings of his friends, the condition and prospects for different crops, the prices in home markets, and, in fact, is a weekly visitor which should be found in every wide-awake, progressive family.

Just think of it! Both of these papers for only $1.75 a year.

Yesterday about 1:30 o'clock a railroad man was instantly killed in the depot yards here, near the water tank. The deceased was M Eadus, an old conductor of the B & M railroad, who has been conductor of the ballast train for some time. The large steam plow had been loaded on a car, and Mr Eadus got down to couple the car on which it was loaded to the train. A portion of the plow extended over the car, and apparently Mr Eadus did not notice it, for he got down to make the coupling and it struck him in the head, crushing through it, and struck the car ahead with force enough to break a hole in it. Superintendent Rogers was a witness of the terrible accident, and with others, hastened to the injured man, but he was dead when they got there, death having been instantaneous, the victim probably not knowing what struck him. The body was carried into the baggage room of the depot. Dr Wilson was sent for, and the body prepared for shipment to his home at Wymore. At half past two an engine and caboose was in readiness, and the remains were taken to Wymore, accompanied by Superintendent Rogers and other railroad men. Mr Eadus was about 55 years old, and had been in the service of the B & M for many years and was well liked by all with whom he come in contact. He leaves a wife, and several grown children, to whom his sudden death will cause great anguish. No blame is attached to anyone for the awful accident.

WE CANNOT TURN BACK

What Schurman Says of the Situation in the Philippines.

A STATEMENT FOR THE PUBLIC.

Home Rule for Each of the Tribes Under Supervision of the General Government at Manilla the Solution of the Problem — Our Responsibility for Maintaining Peace.

ITHACA, N. Y., Sept. 14.—President Schurman returned today to his office in Cornell university. He gave out the following statement to the Associated Press on the Philippine situation:

"It is very important that the public should know the actual facts of the situation. Things are what they are, and the American public should understand them, whether they agree with or run counter to the public's wishes.

"First—It requires some effort to realize the vastness of the archipelago, which runs from Formosa to Borneo and Celebes through sixteen degrees of latitude. Never going out into the Pacific ocean on the east, nor the China sea on the west, I made a circuit of 1,600 miles south of Manila. This gives some idea of the difficulty of maintaining an effective blockade, as the coast line of the islands embraced in the archipelago is many more thousands of miles.

"Second—The multiplicity and heterogeneous natures of the tribes are something astounding. Over sixty different languages are spoken in the islands, and the majority of the tribes are small, and there are several that have only 250,000 inhabitants. The speech of any one tribe is unintelligible to its neighbors. These tribes are all civilized and Christianized, but small uncivilized tribes, among which the Igorots seem best known in America, inhabit the mountains in Luzon and form a large part of the population of Mindano. In this island there is a large Mohammedan population which is independent of the Mohammedans in the Sulus.

"Third—It is the Tagals inhabiting some of the provinces about Manila who are resisting the authorities of the United States. Other civilized Filipinos are neutral except where they are coerced by armed bands of Tagals, who seized upon their government during the making and ratification of our treaty of peace with Spain. It would be incorrect to assume, however, that these tribes are allies of ours. They are not, indeed, they are not without suspicion of the white race, of which they have had experience only through Spain. But they are men of intelligence and property and the masses, when they are not stirred up by the Tagalos, recognize the advantage to them of American sovereignty, and so many remain neutral, although robber bands from time to time descend from the mountains to plunder and burn the estates of the peaceful inhabitants on the plains.

"Fourth—The insurrection, though serious, enough, as experience has proven, is not a national uprising. Indeed, there is no Philippine nation. As I have already said, there is a multifarious collection of tribes having this in common that they belong to the Malay race. The inhabitants of the archipelago no more constitute a nation than the inhabitants of Europe do.

"Fifth—The United States having assumed by a treaty of peace with Spain, sovereignty over the archipelago, became responsible for the maintenance of peace, order and justice, and security of life and property among all the tribes of the archipelago. This is an obligation which intelligent Filipinos and foreign nations expect us to fulfill. Nor will the national honor permit us to turn back. taking the Philippines we assumed great responsibility. The fact that the responsibility is greater than most people supposed is no excuse for failure to discharge it. The Philippine question is largely a question of honor and obligation."

This is Estimate Placed Upon the Estate of Vanderbilt.

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—Cornelius Vanderbilt, who had been under the shadow of death for several years and who was one of the most methodical of men, left a carefully drawn will, but its terms are not known. His friends think it will make provision for the charity in which he was interested. No estimate of the estate's value is less than $100,000,000. There had been a reconciliation between Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., and his parents, who opposed his marriage with Miss Grace Wilson, and it is doubtful if discrimination will be made against him. On the death of Cornelius Vanderbilt his brother, William K., became head of the family and made arrangements for the funeral and will see to the probating of the will.

Charters Two Transports.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 14.—Secretary Root authorized the chartering of the steamship Manauense, capable of carrying 500 men, and the Bristol, 600 men. These ships are available for the first ten regiments organized. He also authorized the charter of the City of Pekin, 987 men, and Anglo-Australian, 1,000 men, to take the troops of the second ten regiments to Manila.

Otis Abandons Morong.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 14.—Morong, one of the points on the Laguna de Bay, captured by General Otis some months ago, has been abandoned and the garrison sent to Calamba, the latest point on the bay to be captured. Morong is said to be a very unhealthy place and of little value as a base of supplies. The insurgents south of Calamba are believed to be moving east and are said to be concentrating at Santa Cruz on the southeastern shore of Laguna de Bay.

Big Military Camp at Presidio.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 14.—There are now 11,583 men quartered at the Presidio in this city. This includes 950 recruits, forty casuals, 357 in the regular garrison, approximately 5,256 volunteer infantry on the way to the Philippines and approximately 5,000 more returned from the islands and awaiting muster-out.

DAVITT ON DREYFUS VERDICT.

Eminent Irishman Says the Condemned Has Sympathy.

LONDON, Sept. 14.—(New York World Cablegram.)—In response to a request for an opinion on the Dreyfus verdict Michael Davitt writes:

"Comments of the English and American press on the result of the Rennes trial are a greater outrage on justice than the condemnation of Dreyfus, even if innocent. Had Dreyfus' been a poor man his fate would excite no sympathy in London and New York. Being rich, the English-speaking world works itself into a hypocritical moral rage against a nation that has taught England and Europe the liberty they now profess. Were Dreyfus an Irishman accused of political crime against England he would be tried, condemned by a packed jury and sentenced by a political judge and imprsoned among thieves. Being a suspect of traitorism to France is enough to make him a moral hero in England and cause the British press to use the case as a weapon to stab France. Neither England nor America ever run a hundredth part of the risk faced by France in order to get at the truth concerning one man's act or innocence. I don't believe him altogether guiltless, but hope he will be pardoned forthwith."

Max O'Rell writes to the Daily Chronicle on British sympathy for Dreyfus: "The English are most earnest lovers of justice and fairplay, but the French do not know this fact—at any rate the masses do not. Public British expression of sympathy will go against Dreyfus. For God's sake use your influence to stop it. But for the universal sympathy shown Dreyfus, whom I personally believe innocent, in England and Germany, he would have been acquitted. It has been a terrible thing to say, but I say it and am not afraid of contradiction."

WANTS QUICK REPLY.

British Government Calls on the Transvaal to Answer Immediately.

PRETORIA, Sept. 14.—President Kruger and the executive council met here this evening to consider the reply to be made to the British secretary of state for the colonies, Mr. Chamberlain. They are still conferring by telegraph with the Orange Free state. The decision is anxiously awaited by the crowds outside the executive building.

A communication has been received from the imperial government stating that though anxious for a speedy reply the imperial authorities do not desire to tie the Transvaal authorities down to forty-eight hours. The reply will probably come before the Volksraad tomorrow. The decision will undoubtedly be influenced by the action of the Orange Free State. The government is still willing to attend the joint commission originally proposed.

YELLOW FEVER AT NEW ORLEANS.

Surgeon General Wyman Receives Notice of Four Cases.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 14.—Surgeon General Wyman today received official confirmation of the existence of four cases of yellow fever at New Orleans. Dr. Carter is due to arrive there tomorrow and he will have charge of matters in that city. En route Dr. Carter stopped at Port Tampa. He reported conditions there very satisfactory.

Surgeon General Wyman is very hopeful that the fever will not reach the mainland of Florida. Dr. Wyman has decided not to make public the daily reports giving the details of new cases and deaths at Key West, but semi-weekly he will issue a statement showing the progress of the epidemic.

TO FIGHT THE BEEF TRUST.

St. Louis Butchers to Organize to Do Their Own Killing.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 14.—A mass meeting of retail butchers of St. Louis has been called by the Retail Butchers' Co-Operative association to organize a systematic fight on the beef trust. President Bonney said today:

"We have worked quietly and are now prepared to begin active operations against the trust. We have three propositions to consider, two from anti-trust packing companies and another from a Texas cattle grower. These propositions are to sell the beef direct to the association and at rates averaging 25 per cent below the trust rigures, in consideration of the known quantity that will be required to supply the demand of the association."

COMPANY OF INDIAN SCOUTS.

Nephew of Senator Tillman Asks Authority to Organize Chippewas.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 14.—Colonel James H. Tillman of South Carolina, a nephew of Senator Tillman, was at the White House and asked the president to authorize the organization of an independent company of Indian scouts for service in the Philippines. It is proposed to make Mr. Tillman, who was colonel of the First South Carolina regiment during the Spanish war, captain of the company, and Joseph H. Woodbury, "Hole-in-the-Day," the chief of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, first lieutenant, and some member of the regiment o Rough Riders second lieutenant.

MADRID, Sept. 14.—The government has dispatched three regiments to Vizcaya, where the declaration of martial law has caused great excitement. It is reported that the government is about to prosecute the separatist leaders.

Dreyfus Is in Good Spirits.

RENNES, Sept. 14.—Captain Dreyfus continues in good spirits and his health is fairly satisfactory, although the stomach trouble still clings to him.

Mme. Dreyfus visited her husband today and came away looking cheerful. She spent about an hour with him. M. Labori's assistant sees him twice a day.

Most of his waking hours are passed in reading correspondence and Paris literary reviews. He is under the same discipline as prior to the trial and is allowed exercise daily in the prison yard.

Pardon Likely for Dreyfus.

PARIS, Sept. 14.—The intervention of President Loubet, by according Dreyfus a full pardon, is regarded by those nearest the president as almost certain, and his would be followed by executing the policy of the sponge, and wiping out all old scores and reducing the pending trials, which originated in the Dreyfus affair, to mere empty formalities, releasing Deroulede and his royalist companions and liquidating the whole situation by a general amnesty preparatory to the World's fair of 1900.

THE NEBRASKA HEROES

People Pay Tribute to the State's Fighting Regiment.

WARM WELCOME AT THE CAPITAL.

Flags of the First Turned Over to the Commonwealth—With Simple Yet Affecting Ceremony Veterans Part With Their Guiding Star—A Great Crowd in Attendance.

LINCOLN, Neb., Sept. 15.—The formal return to the custody of the state of the battle flags of the First Nebraska regiment was made yesterday on the state house grounds—Colonel Mulford, for the regiment, turning over the flags to the governor, who, on behalf of the state, took charge and instructed the adjutant general to carefully treasure them among the most sacred relics of the state.

The ceremonies were of the simplest kind, and the speechmaking was confined to a brief address by Colonel Mulford, and the almost as brief response by the governor. The ceremony took place within a few feet of the spot where in May, 1898, the flags were given to the color bearers by Governor Holcomb. The governor and staff occupied the stand and the members of the First regiment were drawn up facing them, and just across the pavement, running north from the state house, Assistant Secretary of War Meiklejohn was in the stand, with the governor and staff. Colonel Vifquain, chief marshal of the day, and his aides, mounted, were in position in front of the stand, the colors with the bearers and guard occupying the center of the open space.

The escort, composed of the Grand Army of the Republic members, members of the Second and Third regiments, the cadet battalion from the university, the Second regiment Nebraska National Guard, Troop A, the First regiment auxiliary and the bands of the several organizations were arranged in the form of a square around the central figures.

General Vifquain announced the order of the proceedings and Colonel Mulford, who, with the ex-officers of the First, were on foot, advanced to the front and tendered the flags. The color bearers came forward and the commands were brought to attention and saluted.

Governor Poynter accepted the flags and the colors were furled, the crowd standing uncovered, while the band played.

The ceremony concluded the commands were re-formed and marched to their several stations, and the flags were taken to the office of the adjutant general, where, in the presence of the governor and staff, they were placed in the vault.

The parade preceding the ceremonies at the state house grounds was witnessed by a large crowd, which lined the streets along which it passed.

The governor and staff and Secretary Meiklejohn reviewed the parade from the balcony of the sanitarium at Fourteenth and M streets.

EXPORT EXPOSITION OPENS.

Philadelphia's Show Begins With Singing "The Star Spangled Banner."

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 15.—With ceremonies unattended by ostentation the National Export exposition was formally opened at noon yesterday. Distinguished visitors from all sections of the country were in attendance, including representatives of the diplomatic corps, officers of the army and navy, scientists and business and professional men.

After the benediction by Archbishop O'Brien, which concluded the dedicatory exercises, a message was received from President McKinley, extending greetings and officially opening the great exposition. When the message had been read the chorus of voices and the audience sang "The Star Spangled Banner," accompanied by the United States Marine band and the big exposition organ.

The exposition grounds were opened to the public at 8 o'clock this morning, and long before noon thousands of people had passed through the gates. The dedicatory ceremonies were held in the immense auditorium, which was crowded to its capacity.

Denver Welcomes Troops.

DENVER, Sept. 15.—The Colorado volunteers were welcomed home on their return to the state's capital with a demonstration that atoned for the lack of enthusiasm manifested when the regiment departed from this city on May 17, 1898, on its long journey to the Philippines. Bells, whistles, guns, cannons and crowds began sounding a noisy welcome when the soldiers' free train reached the Union depot at 10 o'clock. After receiving the greetings of relatives the volunteers fell into line and were escorted by a procession to the capitol through streets lined with masses of people waving flags and shouting cheers.

Lung's Successor Named.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—The president has appointed Henry W. Diederich, United States consul at Magdeburg, to be consul at Bremen, in place of Louis Lange, Jr., who retires as the result of an investigation by the state department into his office methods. The appointment is a substantial promotion for Mr. Diederich and was recommended by Senator Cullom.

Welcome the American Flag.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—Mail advices received at the war department from Manila state that the natives of the island of Samar are praying for the speedy arrival of the Americans and will welcome the hoisting of the American flag.

It is stated that as a result of the forcible collection of taxes by the emissaries of the insurgents who take all they have got, the natives are in a state of semi-starvation. They have no faith in the Tagalos and they earnestly desire American protection.

President Will Not Act.

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—A special to the Herald from Washington says:

The president is receiving petitions asking him to request the French government to pardon Dreyfus. No such action will be taken, the administration holding that to do so would undoubtedly be offensive to France, which would say that this government had no right to interfere in a matter which relates to internal administration and which she alone must decide.

The stomach pump is certainly an exhaustive article.

COL. PAUL MAKES REPLY.

Transvaal Government Sends Its Answer to Great Britain's Demand.

LONDON, Sept. 15.—A forecast of the draft of the Transvaals' reply to the last note of the British secretary of state for the colonies, Mr. Chamberlain, has been received, but its nature is not yet known.

At the colonial offices a reporter of the Associated Press was informed that nothing will be given out for the present.

It was regarded as significant, however, that the nature of the Boer reply was communicated to the commander-in-chief, Field Marshal Lord Wolseley, who immediately summoned Sir George Stewart White V. C., former quartermaster-general, the prospective commander of the British foces in Natal.

The Morning Post in a second edition, prints a special dispatch from Pietermaritzburg, capital of Natal, saying the outlook is of the gloomiest character.

The Capetown papers themselves take a more hopeful view of the situation, basing their belief on the probable acceptance by President Kruger of the franchise measures suggested in Mr. Chamberlain's latest dispatch. But even they admit that it is impossible to learn or foreshadow President Kruger's attitude toward the suzerainty of Great Britain, which, after all, is still the main issue.

The tension now existing here and at the Cape may be temporarily settled at any moment by the publication of President Kruger's reply. On the other hand it may be several days before the general public learns what answer the Transvaal has made. If President Kruger has answered defiantly it does not necessarily mean the immediate breaking off of negotiations. The British would probably reply with an unmistakable ultimatum. It is scarcely to their advantage to bring about hostilities until the reinforcements are nearer the scene of action than they are at present. Whatever the nature of President Kruger's reply it is probable that several more stages of diplomatic processes will be gone through with before there is a definite war or peace, unless, of course, President Kruger should take the initiative and raid Natal. It is the possibility of this move that makes definite news of his reply so eagerly and anxiously awaited.

COMMISSIONERS COME HOME.

Denby and Worcester Sail on Orders From the President.

MANILA, Sept. 15.—Colonel Charles Denby and Prof Dean Worcester, members of the Philippine commission, have received instructions from President McKinley asking them to return as soon as possible. They will embark on the steamer Empress of India, which sails from Hong Kong September 26. It is not known whether the clerical force will return with them or remain here. The commissioners had just moved into new offices and had expected to spend some months working on the establishment of a municipal government.

The Nevada cavalry was unable to sail on the Newport. They will take the next available transport.

SAYS DREYFUS WILL BE FREED.

The Matin Says the Degree Will Be Signed September 19.

LONDON, Sept. 15.—The Paris correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says:

"It is certain that Captain Dreyfus will be liberated. The only question to be settled is one of ways and means."

A German spy has been arrested at La Croix Sur Meuse.

PARIS, Sept. 15.—The Matin this mogning asserts that the cabinet has agreed to pardon Dreyfus and the decree will be signed September 19.

Many of the provincial papers publish articles insisting on the granting of a pardon. The Figaro says that many officers of the army are asking that Dreyfus be pardoned.

GUNBOAT HAS A SHARP FIGHT.

Fired on by Natives While Capturing Insurgent Schooner.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 15.—The following dispatch has been received at the navy department:

"Manilla, Sept. 14.—Secretary of Navy, Washington: Davidson, commanding Paragua, reports a sharp engagement at Balemao. The vessel was struck many times by rifle shots; no casualties. Paragua silenced the insurgents' fire in twenty minutes. The range was from 400 to 900 yards. Occasion, capture Filipino schooner, which Davidson destroyed. WATSON."

Balemao is in the province of Masbate, south of Luzon and north of the Vizayas.

Natives of Samar Said to Want Protection of Americans.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 15.—Mail advices received at the war department from Manila state that the natives of the island of Samar are praying for the speedy arrival of the Americans and will welcome the hoisting of the American flag. It is said that as a result of the forcible collection of taxes by the emissaries of the insurgents, who take all they have got, the natives are in a state of semi-starvation. They have no faith in the Tagalos and they earnestly desire American protection.

Will Not Come West.

CHICAGO, Ill., Sept. 15.—The Cook County Democratic Marching club tonight decided to abandon the proposed trip to Denver on September 23. Financial Secretary Burke declared that only ninety-nine members had signified their intention of making the trip and unless the club was represented by at least 125 the trip would be a failure. Inasmuch as many members wanted to make the trip to Cincinnati, Michigan, Ohio and Indiana, in order to aid the regular democracy of those state, it was decided to abandon the Denver excursion.

Bryan to Visit Kansas City.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—Ambassador Choate has advised the state department that her majesty's secretary for war has accepted the invitation of the military surgeons of the United States and has deputed Mr. McWaters, R. A. M. Corps, to attend its eigth annual meeting on September 27 at Kansas City, Mo.

Condition of the Treasury.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—Today's statement of the condition of the treasury shows: Available cash balance, $282,761,851; gold reserve, $256,347,576.

DEATH OF VANDERBILT.

Eldest of the Brothers Expires Suddenly at His Home.

NEW YORK, Sept. 13.—Cornelius Vanderbilt is dead. Death occurred at 5:15 o'clock a. m. at his home at Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, this city. There were with Mr. Vanderbilt at the time of his death his wife, his daughter Gladys, and Reginald, his youngest son.

Mr. Vanderbilt arrived at his Fifth avenue home from Newport with Mrs. Vanderbilt at 9 o'clock last night. He appeared in excellent health and spirits and retired soon afterward.

About midnight he was seized with a serious attack and the household was aroused. Telegrams were sent to Dr. Walter B. James, Dr. E. G. Janeway and several other physicians, who arrived in a short time. Everything possible was done for the patient, but he grew rapidly worse and died at a quarter past 5 o'clock.

Mrs. Vanderbilt and her daughter, Miss Gladys, are prostrated by the shock and physicians are attending them.

CONTROL CATTLE MARKET.

Co-Operative Live Stock Commission Company.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Sept. 13.—At a meeting of cattlemen steps were taken yesterday to organize a co-operative live stock commission company to control the cattle market.

Former Congressman H. S. Peters of Kansas is the promoter of the organization and among those interested are ex-Congressman Jerry Simpson and Senator W. A. Harris of Kansas. Cattle shippers were present from Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma and Texas.

The plan is to purchase the membership in the exchange of one of the existing commission firms and only buyers and shippers will be allowed to take stock. It is planned to have at least one stockholder in each county in the cattle-growing sections, this stockholder to act as the agent of the company.

PENSIONS FOR THE VETERANS.

Commander Shaw Will Devote Much Time to Securing Them.

NEW YORK, Sept. 13.—Albert D. Shaw, the new commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, said last night: "A great deal of my time will be given to pension legislation. The old soldier is entitled to lasting consideration. What if the pension roll is long? The union soldiers saved this nation. Their reward should be commensurate with their services. If the burden should prove too heavy I am in favor of a patriot pension bond issue, so that only the interest would have to be met from year to year. Let posterity meet the bonds when they mature. Why not? The country was saved to posterity. It is only proper that a part of the burden should fall on posterity."

Hanna's Health is Poor.

CLEVELAND, O., Sept. 13.—It is feared by Cleveland friends of Senator Hanna that the condition of his health may prevent him from continuing the hard political work which he has mapped out for himself.

Letters from members of his family to friends and relatives give the impression that his health has not been at all improved by his sojourn in France, in fact, the opinion based upon them is that he would be in better condition had he remained quietly at home.

Mining Story a Fake.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 13.—A telegram was sent to L. H. Stevens of New York, secretary and treasurer of the Batopilas Mining company, inquiring as to the truth of the published reports that Governor Alexander R. Shepherd had sold his great mining properties at Batopilas, Mexico, to an English syndicate and would return to his native city, Washington, to live. In response, Mr. Stevens wired: "No truth whatever in either statement."

Louisville Bank Closes.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Sept. 13.—President James A. Leech said today that he had made application to the controller of currency for his consent for the liquidation of the affairs of the City National bank. The bank was organized in 1865, has a capital of $200,000 and a large line of deposits. Its affairs are said to be in such shape that the depositors will be paid at once and something will be left for the stockholders.

Still the Rates Go Down.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Sept. 13.—The fight between the Burlington and the Memphis railroads over freight rates on packing house products to the southeast continues. The Burlington cut the rate today to 8 cents per 100 pounds from Omaha to the Ohio river. The Memphis will probably announce a 6-cent rate from Kansas City. Ten days ago the rate from Omaha was 23 cents.

McKinley May Come West.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 13.—Although the president had thought that it would be quite impossible for him to extend his western trip beyond Chicago, he is now seriously considering the matter, and while there are some clashing dates, it is hoped that he will be able to visit St. Paul and Minneapolis and possibly Aberdeen, S. D., to welcome the returning volunteers.

Exports of Breadstuffs.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 13.—The monthly statement of the exports of domestic products of the United States shows that during August last the exports were as follows:

Breadstuffs, $25,580,352, against $19,909,329 for August, 1898; cattle and hogs, $2,586,014, increase $135,610; provisions, $15,584,755, increase $3,194,179; cotton, $3,609,358, decrease $89,822; mineral oils, $6,565,009, increase $554,502.

During the last eight months the exports of these products amounted to $431,838,813, against $489,950,733 for the corresponding period of 1898.

Verdict Quietly Received.

PARIS, Sept. 13.—At today's cabinet council the premier, M. Waldeck-Rousseau, informed his colleagues that he had received reports from the prefects of the various departments which showed that the verdict of the Rennes court martial had been everywhere received quietly.

Up to this hour (4:15 p. m.), it is presumed the council took no action in the Dreyfus or other matters of great importance. It was one of the frequent meetings held by the cabinet and was not hurriedly called, being announced several days ago.

JOHN C. HUBINGER.

Remarkable Career of a Well-Known Western Capitalist, Manufacturer and Philanthropist.

Among the leaders of the progressive element for which the midle west is famous, Mr. John C. Hubinger, of Keokuk, Ia., reigns without a peer. As a manufacturer, as an enterprising capitalist and as a philanthropist his fame has spread over many states, and his financial enterprises have developed many obscure towns into progressive, thrifty and wide-awake cities. Mr. Hubinger, although but 47 years of age, can look back upon scores of commercial victories, each one of which has benefited mankind, for his liberality is as bountiful as his business sagacity is marvelous. He was born in New Orleans, La., his parents being of French and German origin. When he was four years old, his family removed to Kentucky, in which state young Hubinger received a public school education. Almost before reaching man's estate he secured patents on a number of valuable mechanical inventions, thereby laying the foundation of his present fortune.

By inclination and force of circumstances his attention was early directed to the manufacture of starch, by improved processes, and in the course of time he became the head of a concern having an annual business of millions of dollars. But genuine ambition never quite satisfied with existing conditions, works ever toward perfection, and after years of painstaking study and research Mr. Hubinger has made a discovery, which he considers the crowning event of his wonderful career, and which is embodied in a new article of commerce, known as Red Cross Starch (Red Cross trade mark.) He is planning to distribute millions of packages of this starch to the housewives of America, at a merely nominal price to the consumer, in order to make its merits known without delay. Thus, for but 5 cents two large 10c packages of Red Cross Starch may be had, together with two magnificent Shakespearean views printed in 12 beautiful colors, or a Twentieth Century Girl Calendar; or for only 20 cents 10 packages of the starch and the entire series of eight Shakespearean views and one Twentieth Century Girl Calendar—views alone easily worth $1.00. Watch this paper for future premium announcements, of which every lady will certainly want to take advantage.

While Mr. Hubinger will devote his best energies to the manufacture of this new and wonderful starch, he will not retire from the various financial enterprises in which he is interested—street railways, electric lighting plants and the Mississippi Valley Telephone Co., with 10,000 telephone subscribers in Minneapolis and St. Paul—nor will his augmented activity interfere with his social obligations and exercise of the splendid hospitality which he dispenses at his palatial Keokuk home. Mr. Hubinger's family, consisting of himself, wife and four children, is the pivot around which his activity revolves, and while fond of promoting great enterprises, he is still fonder of his home circle, where he spends every moment of time not taken up by business or public cares.

Dynamite Guns for Philippines.

Dynamite guns are to be employed by the army in the coming campaign in the Philippines. While the use of these guns is yet regarded as in its experimental stage sufficient progress in their development has been made to warrant the army officials in including them as a part of the equipment in the field. Recently Lieutenant M. C. Buckey, Third artillery, was ordered to New York to aid in loading the twelve two and one-half inch Simms-Dudley dynamite guns, accessories and ammunition, on board a merchant ship, which is to transport them to Manila by the Suez canal. From New York Lieutenant Buckey will proceed to the Woolwich arsenal, England, Paris, France and Amsterdam, for the purpose of examining the organization and material of mountain guns and hotwitzer batteries used in India and Africa and other countries where service is similar to that in the Philippines. After performing this duty Lieutenant Buckey will proceed to Manila for duty.

Marietta to the Marietta.

Governor Bushnell of Ohio recently conveyed a silver service to Boston and presented it to the gunboat Marietta in honor of her second birthday. It was the gift of the Ohio town whose name the gunboat bears.

"Go on!" says the New York subcommittee to Captain Evans. "What do you know about running a naval show, anyway?"

Danger lurks in the gin rickery. A scientific mixer of summer drinks in a glittering New York cafe says the acid of the lime eats sharply into the flesh, and disintegrates the tissues as surely, if not as fast, as vitrol. This bartender says that no one should drink more than two gin rickeys in any one day, if he desires to keep his stomach in an ordinary state of preservation.

With a population of exactly 206, Servia, a village in Indiana, on the line of the Chicago and Erie railway, has twelve men who weigh more than 200 pounds, and some of them tip the beam at nearly 300. Nor is this remarkable tendency to obesity in the community confined to the men. The stranger who visits the place cannot but be impressed as he strolls down the single business street from the station with the extraordinary number of large women. A count of noses among the feminine portion of the community who carry more than the average of adipose reveals no fewer than fifteen whose avoirdupois will range from 190 to 250.

There will always be plenty of room at the top just as long as people can avoid living in attics.

That Mysterious Major...

...BY...

ETHEL A. SOUTHAM

CHAPTER II.—(Continued.)

Great was his disappointment, however, as he laid the book on the table and opened it at the page at which it had begun to open naturally, to find that, instead of the stranger's eyes being riveted, as everybody's always were, to the bottom of the leaf, where the names of Lady Howard and Miss Evelyn Luttrell boldly confronted the reader, with the full address appended, they instantly wandered off to a few lines above, where, in easily decipherable letters, was written "Gilbert Falkland."

"Thank you; that will do." He closed the book and pushed it aside.

"I am very sorry to trouble you, sir, but"—and the waiter placed an inkstand and pens at his elbow—"perhaps you'd kindly add your name."

"My name? Oh—yes—very well."

He was staring somewhat abstractedly through the window; but at the request he took up a quill, dipped it into the ink, and was just beginning the line with a rather awkward-looking "S," when he suddenly paused, hesitated a second, and, drawing hurriedly through the capital, finally wrote "Major Brown, London," in clear, legible characters.

A few minutes later Major Brown, as he designated himself, rose abruptly from his chair, and, with his hands in his pockets, was crossing the room toward the door, when a glimpse of a dainty lace handkerchief lying half concealed beneath the folds of a tablecloth attracted his notice. He stooped to get it, and, glancing at the monogram and crest embroidered in one corner, was about to hand it to one of the waiters to deliver it to its rightful owner, when a faint smile for the moment dispelled the frown which had gathered upon his forehead and, without a word, he quietly placed it in the inside pocket of his coat.

"My dear fellow, you are a fool!" he murmured to himself. "Fancy throwing away such an opportunity! This at least will be an excuse for one word with the curly headed divinity!"

CHAPTER III.

The sun was streaming with all the persistence of a hot July morning sun through the interstices of Venetian blinds into a large private sitting room on the ground floor of the "Royal George" as Evelyn Luttrell, looking delightfully cool in a pink cotton gown, put in her head at the open window and surveyed the scene in astonishment.

"Nobody down? Are we really the first, after all?" she exclaimed, advancing to the middle of the room and glancing quickly from the table to the clock on the chimney-piece. "Well, Sambo, it is of no use waiting. We may as well go and see if there are any letters for us this morning."

As she spoke she opened the door and passed out into the cool, softly carpeted corridor, which seemed, after the heat and glare of the beach, where she and the poodle had been having a run, a perfect paradise in contrast. Swinging her hat carelessly in her hand, she hurried along toward the table where the morning delivery of letters was always to be found.

A tall, military-looking man in a light gray shooting-suit was standing casually surveying the post as Evelyn came up to it and rapidly scanned the different addresses. Her scrutiny was unsuccessful, however. Neither her own nor her aunt's name met her eyes upon any of the envelopes, and she had turned away and was about to cross the hall, when a voice suddenly arrested her footsteps.

"I beg your pardon!"

The words, spoken in singularly courteous tones and accompanied by a slight but most chivalrous bow, made her pause in some amazement, to behold the wearer of the light shooting-suit, who had apparently been as deeply engrossed in the contents of the "Royal George" post-bag as herself, advancing toward her.

"But is not this for you? You must have overlooked it, I fancy."

Evelyn glanced quickly at the envelope which he was offering to her, directed indisputably to herself, and then, looking up, found herself encountered by the very same pair of gray eyes which she remembered meeting for the first time in the table d'hote room the night before.

"Thank you—it is for me," she answered, with a vague sense of wonder. "I cannot think how I missed it."

"Oh, easily, I should imagine," was the prompt reply. "Among so many, it is no difficult matter to miss one. Still, as this has come to light, had you not better see if there are any more?"

"Perhaps I had," answered Evelyn, wrinkling up her forehead perplexedly.

She was turning to the table once more, when a hand was laid with a somewhat familiar gesture upon her arm and a voice said:

"Good morning, Miss Eve. Her ladyship has sent me to find you. What are you doing here?"

"Only trying to sort these letters. Have you been for yours yet?"

"No; I prefer my breakfast first. Letters are not always calculated to improve one's appetite. But come—Lady Howard wants to know what your opinion is of the weather. She thinks it is too hot for that drive which we were talking about."

"Very well, I am coming; but——" She hesitated a second, and then glanced quickly toward Major Brown. "Thank you very much," and, with a graceful little inclination of her head, she turned to follow Gilbert Falkland, who had stood watching the proceedings with a distinct shadow of annoyance upon his face.

"Who on earth is that fellow, Miss Luttrell?" was the immediate inquiry.

Evelyn gazed down thoughtfully at the address upon her letter.

"Echo answers 'Who?' It is a question I myself was just going to ask you. All that I know of him is that he was having his dinner alone late last evening when I went to get Sambo a bone, and that he handed me this a moment ago."

"And yet you were thanking him as if he had done you the greatest service upon earth!" said Falkland, accompanying his remark with a steady penetrating look into Miss Luttrell's face.

"What do you mean?" A faint flush deepened the color in Evelyn's cheeks. "I thanked him, of course. Whoever the man is, he is certainly a gentleman."

"Oh, yes, most probably!" rejoined Falkland, ironically. "I know the stamp of fellow exactly. They always haunt places of this kind."

A rather indignant little smile crossed Evelyn's face.

"These fellows," he proceeded, "are the greatest humbugs imaginable. They do the polite to the ladies all day, play cards and billiards for the heaviest stakes at night and through the small hours of the morning, and then at the end of a fortnight they quietly disappear with quite a collection of jewelry, bank-notes and sundry loose coins stored away carefully in their portmanteaus. Oh, Miss Luttrell, you are sadly inexperienced in the ways of the wicked world. If you take my advice you will have nothing more to say to that irreproachable-looking individual."

"Nothing to say to him? What do you mean?" asked Evelyn, raising her brows in astonishment. "I do not suppose that I shall ever speak to him again."

"Do you imagine that fellow did not know whom he was addressing this morning. Certainly he did! 'Luttrell' is by no means a common name, and directly he saw 'Miss Luttrell' posted in the visitors' book he guessed no doubt who you were and asked some one to point you out to him. Consequently he has taken the first opportunity of beginning an acquaintance, which I dare say he intends to follow up as speedily as possible. Ah, Lady Howard"—here he threw open the door of the room which Evelyn had forsaken a few minutes before—"I have found your niece and brought her back to you. Here she is."

"And, by way of improving the occasion, he has been offering me a little of his valuable advice," announced Evelyn, going up to Lady Howard and bending down to kiss her as she sat at the head of the breakfast table, still a handsome, good-looking woman, in spite of the lines of care across her forehead and the silvery threads of hair distinctly visible beneath the soft folds of her widow's cap.

"I was only cautioning your niece against a fellow whom I noticed playing rather high in the billiard room last night, and with whom she had the ill-luck to have occasion to speak this morning," protested Falkland, strolling up to the window and gazing out with all the air of a man who was at home in her ladyship's private sitting room.

"To speak? My dear Eve, what have you been doing?" asked Lady Howard in alarm.

"Nothing, Aunt Lydia," answered Miss Luttrell, with a decided little shake of her head. "Do not agitate yourself, please. It is only Mr. Falkland who is piling up the agony now. This poor innocent man who has such wicked designs on us only handed me this letter"—throwing down the hapless-looking note upon the table—"that is all."

"And, as an old friend, knowing what thorough-paced scoundrels habitually frequent places of this description, I have advised her to avoid him for the future."

"Exactly," agreed her ladyship. "One cannot be too careful or exclusive at a hotel where one encounters the same person day after day. Who is this man that spoke to you, Eve?"

"Oh, ask Mr. Falkland," answered Evelyn in a deprecating tone. "He evidently knows more about him than I do, if he had the benefit of his society in the billiard room last evening, and perhaps—who knows?—joined him in some of his high play."

Falkland accepted the little taunt with an air of praiseworthy complacency, and turned calmly to Lady Howard.

"Well, I believe he goes by the elegant name of 'Brown.' That is vague enough, you would think; but his address of London only—Brown of London—is vaguer still!"

"Yes, indeed; anybody would have difficulty in tracing him. But that reminds me. As you came in, I was just reading in the paper that——. Do sit down, though, Mr. Falkland, and have some breakfast."

"Oh, no, thank you! I have just told Henry to have some ready for me in the coffee room; so I will not keep you from yours. But you were saying——"

"Only that they fancy they have at last found a clue to the whereabouts of that man who committed those fearful forgeries about twelve months ago," added Lady Howard, pouring out the coffee and passing a cup across to Evelyn. "You remember the Beauchamp case, which made such a commotion at the time?"

(To Be Continued.)

"BUT, IS NOT THIS FOR YOU?"

ROMANCE OF THE SKIPPER.

He Tells Why It Was He Called His Boat Winifred.

Captain George Pruden of the oyster sloop Winifred sat in his bat at the Lewis Shorehouse dock at Bridgeport, Conn., the other day in a reminiscent mood. "Yes, it's a pretty name for a pretty boat," he said; "and it will do me good to tell my story to a friend. The name is that of a woman who changed my entire life for me. I once had a splendid home in the White mountains, but I would not change back to the old life again. I had money then, you see, and I had this little boat built up at New London and kept her there so that I could come down in the summer and spend a month or so on the water. Winifred was my old sweetheart. That's how the name came to be painted on the little craft there. It was painted on there when we were sweethearts. She used to go to New London also to spend a part of the summer, and this little boat was named after her, and she used to sit in the stern there at the tiller, every inch a sailor, I tell you. We were going to be married when we returned to our mountain homes that last year about the first of the new year. A month before the marriage day she went away to visit an aunt, so she told me, and I never saw her afterward. While we were at New London that summer she met a young fellow who was on a yacht. He courted her and she encouraged him. I trusted her, and she proved false. My home up the mountains was not home after that, and I sold out all of my things and came down to New London and looked after this little boat. I live on the water now and earn my living with the other men of the sea. Here is her picture. You may have it. The boat is the only remembrance of her I care to have."

FOOD IS BETTER THAN TONICS

Debilitated Energies Do Not Require the Stimulation of Drugs.

A professor in one of the many medical colleges of this city holds that there is no need of buying and swallowing advertised tonics, because they accomplish no more than a judiciously selected diet will. The professor says that spinach is richer in iron, which is the basis of most tonics, than even the yolk of an egg, while the latter contains more than beef. The ordinary dish of spinach and poached egg is a tonic as potent as one in which iron forms a part, without the harmful effect of other ingredients that enter into the medical compound. Plants imbibe iron, and it is through them that we should absorb it into our system. That mineral is present largely in apples, lentils, strawberries, white beans, peas, potatoes and most of the red fruits and vegetables. Stewed black currants if taken daily in their season will cure anaemia that has become chronic. It is the experience of mariners that while lime juice is a palliative of scurvy, potatoes are a specific. Nanson, in his voyage in the Fram, had no occasion to resort to the medicine chest. The concentrated form of all the fruits and vegetables that his men were accustomed to eat in Norway was worth a shipload of drugs. It is the first instance on record of the escape of Arctic explorers confined on shipboard from the ravages of scurvy and it was due entirely to the tonic effect of the food supplied.

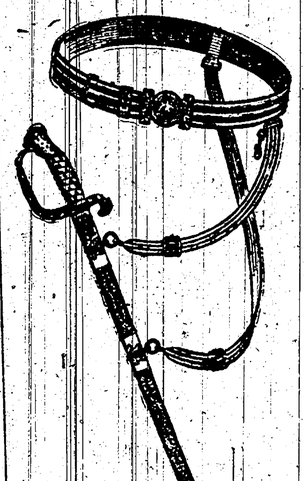
A Rodent Wire-Walker.

There is a rat in Memphis which gives a slack wire exhibition every evening. He gives his performance at about the same time each evening and he generally has quite a crowd out to see him. The rodent crosses Front street every evening about 7:30 walking on a telegraph wire. He has done the trick fifty times or more and seems perfectly at home on the high wire.

NATION'S GREETING TO DEWEY

Features of the Reception to the Manila Hero at Washington.

The central idea underlying the grand welcome to be given Admiral Dewey in Washington the first week in October is its national character. His arrival at the capital will mark his real home-coming to the American people, where the officials of the government will participate, and the magnificently jeweled sword voted by congress will be presented. To that end all the arrangements will be of a simple but most dignified character. The welcome to the hero of Manila at the national capital will probably occur on Monday, October 2, although the date will depend upon the length of the celebration in New York, which is still unsettled. The principal features of the reception in Washington, as planned by the citizens, with the co-operation of the president and cabinet, will be two in number—the presentation of the sword voted by congress and a night parade. A public reception at the white house will be followed by dinner to the admiral by President McKinley. The sword will be presented by Secretary Long, at the east front of the capitol, in the presence of Mr. McKinley and all the members of the cabinet, late in the afternoon, while the parade, consisting of organizations of all kinds, will be accompanied by an illumination of the city on a scale of beauty never before witnessed in Washington.



SWORD VOTED BY CONGRESS TO DEWEY.

The different features of the preparations are in the hands of a central body of citizens and eleven committees, embracing in all over a thousand people. Preparations for the celebration have been in hand for over a month.

The Baltimore and Ohio railroad and other railroads entering Washington have agreed upon cheap rates for the celebration, and the committee expects that there will be an outpouring of patriotic citizens almost equal to the inauguration of a president.

Betrayed by His Parrot.

Victor Chevalier, a clever criminal in Paris, was run down in a shrewd way. He was known to be exceedingly fond of a pet parrot, and the police were instructed to look for a loquacious bird of this kind. After a week's search the talkative parrot was discovered in the Montmartre district. The police kept a close watch on the house, and in time the criminal appeared to have an affectionate chat with his bird.

REFLECTIONS OF A BACHELOR.

Every woman is a good actress till she goes on the stage.

There is one thing a woman never can understand, and that is herself.

When the devil had his choice as to instruments he first picked jealousy.

If they were named anything else a woman would have just as queer a look in her face when she talked about her legs.

If there weren't any bad men to be horrible examples, probably there wouldn't be any good women to be shining examples.

Every racy story a man hears he acts like it was old to him and every woman like it was new to her, and both are making believe.

When a man can make a woman believe that he can't help thrilling at her voice she feels she has to marry him so that she can turn the current on whenever she feels like it.

The difference between a woman and a cat is that when you tease the cat you know she'll scratch you, but when it's a woman you never know whether she'll kiss you or tear your eyes out.—New York Press.

CAPABLE MOTHER-HOOD

MRS. CORA GILSON, Yates, Manistee Co., Mich., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—Two years ago I began having such dull, heavy, dragging pains in my back, menses were profuse and painful and was troubled with leucorrhœa. I took patent medicines and consulted a physician, but received no benefit and could not become pregnant.

"Seeing one of your books, I wrote to you telling you my troubles and asking for advice. You answered my letter promptly and I followed the directions faithfully, and derived so much benefit that I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound enough. I now find myself pregnant and have begun its use again. I cannot praise it enough."

MRS. PERLEY MOULTON, Thetford, Vt., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—I think Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an excellent medicine. I took several bottles of it before the birth of my baby and got along nicely. I had no after-pains and am now strong and enjoying good health. Baby is also fat and healthy."

MRS. CHAS. GERBIG, 304 South Monroe St., Baltimore, Md., writes: "DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—Before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was unable to become pregnant; but since I have used it my health is much improved, and I have a big baby boy, the joy and pride of our home."

PROGRESS.

With time, comes progress and advancement in all lines of successfully conducted enterprises. Success comes to those only who have goods with superior merit and a reputation. In the manufacture of laundry starch for the last quarter of a century J. C. Hubinger has been the peer of all others and today is placing on the market the finest laundry starch ever offered the public under our new and original method.

Ask your grocer for a coupon book which will enable you to get the first two large 10 cent packages of his new starch, RED CROSS, TRADE MARK brand, also two of the children's Shakespeare pictures painted in twelve beautiful colors as natural as life, or the Twentieth Century Girl Calendar, all absolutely free.

All grocers are authorized to give ten large packages of RED CROSS STARCH, with twenty of the Shakespeare pictures or ten of the Twentieth Century Girl Calendars, to the first five purchasers of the Endless Starch Chain Book. This is one of the grandest offers ever made to introduce the RED CROSS laundry starch, J. C. Hubinger's latest invention.

THE STATE OF WASHINGTON

As Seen by Mrs. Linnie Faulkner.

Ellenburg, Wash., Sept. 8, 1899. Editor Argus:—Before leaving Table Rock we promised several of our friends to let them know through the Argus something concerning the state of Washington. As we have now had four months opportunity for investigation, perhaps it may be safe to jot down our impression of that portion of the state which we have seen, i e. the eastern part, known as the Palouse and the Walla Walla country and the middle, called the Big Bend and Kittas valley country.

Well, to begin with, we do not find Washington exactly a second paradise such as it is sometimes described by certain writers desirous of booming the country, yet it is undoubtedly a great country.

Upon first entering the state, most people are inclined to under rate its resources but if one keeps in mind that it is comparatively a new country, he will withold his censure and thoroughly investigate its possibilities. It would be an easy matter to give an erroneous impression concerning Washington from the fact that a description of one part of the state would be totally at variance with that of another. For instance, in the southeastern corner are two farming districts which are very productive. One is called the Palouse, the other, the Walla Walla country.

The Palouse country is noted mostly for its large wheat crops. At Pullman its largest town, is located the state Agricultural College and school of Science. It is a fine institution and would do credit to many of the eastern states. In the matter of education Washington is fully up-to-date, in fact she is far ahead of the middle west in that respect. Very few trees of any kind are raised in this district, though it has been demonstrated that fruit trees will grow there, when properly cared for.

The Walla Walla country is a beautiful fertile valley, which extends from the Blue mountains to the Columbia and Snake rivers, covering an area 50 miles long by 40 miles wide. Here it is no uncommon sight to see from 600 to 800 acres of wheat in one field; while the orchards are something wonderful. One orchard, probably the largest, covers 640 acres, and contains 60,000 trees of different kinds. There is also quite a little pasture land, and stock raising is carried on extensively. Walla Walla is the largest town in the valley, and draws an immense trade from the surrounding country. Here is located the Congregational school known as Whitman college, erected in memory of Dr Whitman, who was massacred at his mission near there. There is also a military post at this place.

Leaving the Palouse and Walla Walla districts, we journey northwest from the northern part of Whitman county through the southwestern corner of Spokane county to Davenport which is the county seat of Lincoln county. Upon leaving Whitman county we begin to notice a difference in the appearance of the country. The hills grow higher, the valleys smaller, and there is a rugged wildness in it all entirely different from the place we have just left. In some places the country is quite thickly settled, while in others we drive for miles without seeing a human habitation. It all depends on the quality of the soil. On one section it may be very good, and on the next the soil may be so shallow and the ground so rocky that it is of no value whatever for cultivation; though the bunch grass which grows in little tufts all over it affords good pasturage. A scarcity of water prevents stock raisers from utilizing a large portion of this, yet in some sections where water is to be had, large herds may be seen on the range Land of this kind is called "scab land," and it is found in nearly all parts of the state. In fact a goodly share of the whole country is "scab land." In the eastern part of Lincoln county are quite a number of good ranches. Here we find field after field of wheat, also a small acreage of oats and timothy, but very few fruit trees.

Usually there is no rainfall from June until October, and the wind blows worse than in Nebraska. At present the dust is 6 inches deep on the public highways——alkali dust at that. It seem incredibable that crops could grow under such conditions, but a total failure has never been known in the state, and small grain of all kinds does remarkably well. The ground stores enough moisture during the winter and early spring to mature the crops under the system carried on here. The Washington farmer must allow one half of his farm to lie idle each year. This is summer fallowed and so takes the place of the rotation of crops as practised at home. The mornings and nights are quite cool, this being very favorable for wheat growing. Corn is not raised on this account.

The average ranch contains from 200 to 600 acres, and the average crop of wheat produced is from 20 to 30 bushels per acre, and in some few cases 50 and 60 bushels has been raised. The summer fallow is managed in this wise. The land is plowed in February, then harrowed. Next a cultivator with knives attached to cut off the weeds is used. The harrow and the cultivator are used in succession as often as 6 to 10 times a season, thus leaving the land free from the weeds. Only 8 pecks of grain are sown to the acre as it spreads and when too thick draws too much moisture from the soil. The enormous grain fields are harvested by machinery such as would cause a Nebraska man to open his eyes to their widest extent.

The combined harvester and thresher is generally used on the largest ranches. It is drawn by 32 horses and cuts a large swath. It cuts and threshes the grain at the same time and finally sacks it and dumps it on the ground ready for shipment. In some cases headers are used, which cut the grain a little below the head. Large wagons accompany these into which the grain is carried by a kind of elevator, then hauled away. The common reaper and binder is used a great deal in the small fields. As soon as the grain is sacked, it is taken to some warehouse to be stored until sold. This country depends almost entirely upon the Liverpool market, consequently each year the price varies considerably.

In Lincoln county land varies in price from $2 to $20 per acre There are still a few homesteads left, but the best land is taken.

Leaving Davenport, we journey westward into the Big Bend country, so named from the Columbia river which make a big curve there. Here we find a good wheat section and plenty of fruit and vegetables are raised. Land varies in price from 75 cents to $10 per acre. This is the place for homesteaders, as there is quite a good deal of government land to be had. As yet this section is without a railroad and everything has to be freighted across from Coulee City, the nearest railroad point With a small capital to begin with, one could do very well in the Big Bend country, though it will be several years before its resources are fully developed. This section depends largely upon irrigation in fruit and vegetable raising. In fact all the land throughout the state east of the Cascades is irrigated wherever irrigation is possible. Waterville, the metropolis of the Big Bend, is a flourishing village of 400 inhabitants. It is 50 miles distant from a railroad though it is on a stage line which runs from Wenatchee to Coulee City. This little place is beautifully situated. On the south are the Badger mountains, and on the north and west, the Cascades loom up grandly in the distance. It is a pleasant sight to watch the clouds creep from the base to the summit of some of the snow capped peaks.

Lake Chelan 25 miles from Waterville, is our next stopping place. In order to reach there we cross the Chelan mountains and are ferried across the Columbia river at Chelan Falls. The scenery is magnificent. A whole volume might be written on Washington scenery and then the half would not be told.

Arriving at Lakeside we go to the Lakeview House, are shown to our rooms, where we change our dust covered garments for more befitting attire, then after a hearty dinner, we are ready to take note of our surroundings. Standing on the front veranda we look about and almost hold our breaths in admiration of the scene before us. Smiling and rippling in the sunlight, lake Chelan lies almost at our feet; on all sides the great rock ribbed mountains stand like sentinels on guard; while innumerable tall pine trees whisper together of the great artist whose divine hand produced so fair a picture.

Discovered by a Woman.

Another great discovery has been made, and that too, by a lady in this country. "Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly and could not sleep. She finally discovered a way to recovery, by purchasing of us a bottle of Dr King's New Discovery for Consumption, and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night; and with two bottles, has been absolutely cured. Her name is Mrs Luther Lutz.' Thus writes W C Hamnick & Co., of Shelby, N C. Trial bottles free at S G Wright's Drug Store. Regular size 50c. and $1 00. Every bottle guaranteed.

CAREER OF A NEBRASKA EDITOR

F W Sylvester, says a Fremont correspondent of the Omaha Bee, who has been frequently mentioned in the newspapers within the past few months as one of the members of the Philippine junta in Hong Kong, started upon his career as the editor and sole proprietor of a small Nebraska weekly paper. Sylvester, who then went by the name of Sylvester F Wilson came to Humboldt, Neb. in 1871. He was about 25 years of age, a sleader swarthy dark-complexioned fellow of an impetuous temperament. He was not much disposed to talk of his former business or family relations and no one knew much about him. He opened up an insurance and real estate office in Humboldt and started a paper, the Humboldt Sentinel. He had no money to buy presses, type or paper; and the typesetting and printing was done by Nat Smails who was then running a paper in Lincoln.

All the connection I had with the paper, says Mr Smails, was just to set the type, run the papers off on the press and mail them. Wilson sent me every week his news items, editorials and what advertisements he could pick up. I don't remember the size of the paper but it was a small concern, probably as good as the average. At every session of the legislature he was in Lincoln as a sort of lobbyist. I don't think he was in politics very much. He was a pretty smooth, plausible fellow and with an engaging manner that enabled him to get into the good graces of the people of the town He passed as an unmarried man and that easy genial way of his made him very popular with the ladies. I remember his name especially well because he always wrote it out in full, Sylvester Franklin Wilson in a showy hand with plenty of flourishes. In his business relations with me he was straight but someway I never had any confidence in him. I considered him tricky and underhanded a treacherous and deceitful fellow.

Wilson left Humboldt in 1875 while still in the good graces of the people in response, perhaps, to a feeling which was beginning to take shape that their editor beneath his smooth and polished exterior concealed the heart of a moral reprobate and vicious swindler. During the four or five years he lived in Humboldt he had made some money, most of it by means that savored pretty strongly of robbery, so that there was little regret at his departure.

He was next heard of in Philadelphia where he blossomed out as the manager of a theatrical company. His career as a manager came to a sudden end with his arrest, conviction and sentence to the penitentiary in Pdiladelphia on the charge of debauching a young girl. It developed on the trial that there were other charges against him of a similar nature and that he had used his position as manager as a sort of recruiting office for a house of ill-fame.

After serving a full term in the penitentiary he was discharged and went to Hong Kong, China. He was a man who had the advantage of a thorough education and a natural linguist which enabled him soon to become proficient in the Chinese language; he adopted the dress, habits and customs of the Chinese, married a native wife and his tremendous energy and ability and his smooth, plausible manner gave him a good standing with the English and made him a big man among the Chinese; he became a mandarin, a prosperous merchant and shipper and has accumulated a fortune. He was one of the financial backers of the junta even before Dewey's victory at Manila. A picture of him which recently appeared in an illustrated paper was recognized by a party who knew him at Lincoln. That article spoke of his being an ex-convict but not of his early connection with the Nebraska press.

WOMAN'S COLUMN.

September 15 the Union met at Mrs Norris' with an attendance of 12 members and 1 visitor. The president Mrs Cleaveland in the chair, opened with responsive scripture reading, followed by a prayer service. The treasurer's report being called for proved a pleasant surprise to most of those present as few were aware how much money had been raised and expended in temperance work this year, between 60 and 70 dollars. So let those who can do nothing but pay their dues and attend the meetings once in a while take heart. You are sowing seed where its needed and your name in a good cause will have its influence and your mite will help some one else to work who can, or send temperance literature or consolation to some home where it may bring forth fruit an hundred fold and be a star in the crown of your rejoicing through a blissful eternity. Quite often the bow of white ribbon brings words of cheer and encouragement for our work from those who do not belong, so our sisters should be more particular to wear this ribbon white which has belted the world and bound together the women of all nations, ensuring the respect and confidence of all men. The first business attended to was the appointment of a committee to arrange for a reception to be given the new teachers as soon as time and place can be found. Mrs Lydia Andrews, Mrs Jennings and Mrs McCasland were appointed and expected to report at our next meeting which will be at the home of our new president. Mrs Lydia Andrew, in three weeks, Oct. 6th. Our election proved an amusing episode instead of the dry tedious affair it sometimes is as on the first ballot two votes were cast for Mrs Lydia Andrew two for Mrs W H Andrew and one apiece for five or six other women. Mrs Linn laughingly remarked that for the first time in the history of the union we all wanted to be president and each one must have voted for herself. On the second ballot however there was a majority for Mrs Lydia Andrew. Mrs Marble then moved that as our Secretary Mrs Lulu Conklin had done good service the past year we suspend the rules and instruct the Secretary Pro Tem to cast the ballot in her favor, which was accordingly done and to expedite matters the remaining officers were elected in the same way. Mrs Tilotson treasurer and Mrs Linn Correspondng Secretary, also delegate to the state convention to be held at David City, September 26 th to 29th.

It was decided to hold a union gospel temperance meeting Sunday night, September 24 and invite Rev Parker to give the address on that occasion: Mrs Linn was instructed to see him and make arrangements for the same, accordingly such service will be held in the Presbyterian church Sunday night, September 24 and a collection taken for the benefit of our local work.

The State Convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held at David City, September 26 to 29th, an unusually interesting program. The address on Tuesday evening will be given by Mrs Leoposa Baray Lake well known as the Francis Williard of the Catholic Temperance forces. Mrs Matilda B Carse founder of the Temple on Wednesday evening. A Silver Greg contest on Thursday evening, by white haired contestants. The "History of Twenty-five years" by Mrs Isabella Spurlock of York, Friday evening, "Crusade Reminisences," by Mrs Wakelin and "Impressons Abroad," a paper by Mrs Cobb, will make that evening so full of interest none will want to miss it.

Glorious News

Comes from Dr. D B Cargile, of Washita, I T. He writes: "Four bottles of Electric Bitters has cured Mrs Brewer of scrofula; which had caused her great suffering for years. Terrible sores would break out on her head and face, and the best doctors could give no help but her cure is complete and her health is excellent." This shows what thousands have proved,—that Electric Bitters is the best blood purifier known. It's the supreme remedy for eczema, tetter, salt rheum, ulcers, boils and running sores. It stimulates liver, kidneys and bowels, expels poisons, helps digestion builds up the strength. Only 50 cents. Sold by S G Wright Druggist. Guaranteed.

Lou Slama, our popular young jeweler, made up his mind that single blessedness was not what it pretended to be and has therefore deserted the ranks of bachelordom. On Tuesday he drove over to Pawnee City taking with him Miss Emma Karas, of Table Rock, and the two were united in marriage by the county judge. The newly wedded pair will soon take up their abode in the residence recently purchased by the groom on North Central avenue. The writer joins the many friends in wishing the couple all that is best in life.—Humboldt Standard Leader.

The board of county commissioners allowed the village of Table Rock $300 for quarantine expenses. Our city authorities have certainly come out of the distressing circumstances splendidly. The bills against the city have been paid and while at one time it looked as though it would drain the city treasury for two years to come to meet the quarantine expenses, they have so managed it that all are paid and there will be a little money left for village expenses.

The religious editor of this paper is very much shocked to hear of the levity of Andy Lane, the fusion nominee for county treasurer. It is related that while his nomination was trembling in the balance, the editor of the Press whispered in his ear to put his trust in the Lord, and Andy responded as follows: "I understand you think the Lord will take care of me all-right, but not in a fusion convention. Its the other fellow that does the business here. That's the devil of it, you see. At any rate it's votes that I am now largely depending on."—Pawnee Republican.

A girl in Triplett, Kas., sent fifty cents to a New Yorker who advertised "a sure cure for freckles." Here is the advice that she received: "Remove the freckles carefully with a pocket knife, soak them over night in salt water, then hang them up in the smoke house in a good, strong smoke made of sawdust and slippery elm bark for a week."

David City, Neb., Sept. 26.—Your correspondent met Mrs Fulton and Mrs. Nesbitt at the depot on the same errand and in company we started for David City, pleased to learn that we would not have to change cars at Lincoln. There our train was loaded with ministers going home from conference, people going to the Advent camp meeting at Seward and when we arrived at Seward all standing room was taken by persons who had been to hear Bryan. The conductor seemed to think that delegations were numerous. Our train was heavily loaded and 40 minutes late but the good women of the reception committee were on hand and assigned us places. At least seventeen members of the executive committee and delegates arrived Monday night and were on time for the executive session which has been full of interest all day. Lunch and supper were served in a clean and beautifully decorated hall. Mrs Lake was in for a short time and on being introduced to the convention while they were discussing public meetings, she begged that we make all of our meetings non-sectarian, non-partisan and walk together in the love of the Heavenly Father. She was one with us for the total extermination of the liquor traffic and wanted us to pursue that course which would enable us to reach most people, as many who are in sympathy with our work do not understand it; her first love was mothers' meetings, her second the public meetings and she gave us valuable hints in regard to both. I do not wonder she is called the Frances Willard of the Catholic forces for she has so much of the Christ spirit reaching out after fallen humanity that everybody is charmed with her talk and manner and will listen entranced as long as she will talk. We expect a rare treat tonight and are being delightfully entertained.

Seeing themselves outnumbered, the Mexicans put spurs to their horses and ran away, but one yaquero, a young man of indomitable courage, remained and fought the whole body of the Yaquis.

As yet final action has not been taken by the cabinet of Cuban money orders, the rate of which it is understood, will be raised from 30 cents for $100 to the United States to 50 cents. Under the old rate a very large percentage of the money transactions with the United States was in postal money orders, but it has never been the purpose of the government to enter into competition with the banks except in the transmission of small sums.

W. Howard and E. M. Jenkins, his son-in-law, of West Superior, Wis., were held up by tramps on a Northwestern train near Sasselton. Howard was pushed off the top of a box car and laid near the track until morning in a heavy rain. He died from his injuries.

"Oh dear, yes!" assented Falkland eadily. "It was the talk of London. Well, what have they discovered?"

"Why, that a man who answers to the description of a suspicious-looking person who disappeared from England in rather peculiar circumstances at the time of all those forgeries is supposed to have left New York on the steamer City of Chicago on the 12th of this month; and, should this really be so, he ought to have arrived in Liverpool at the beginning of the week. Just as you were speaking of this Brown of London it struck me——"

"That he might be the forger himself? Ah, perhaps he is," exclaimed Evelyn, with a gleam of amusement in her eyes. "Let us all keep a careful watch upon him, and do our best to gain the reward which somebody has offered for him."

"Very well, Miss Eve; you may depend upon me to help you in your investigations. My services are at your disposal whenever you may require them," was Falkland's reply; but, though the words were uttered lightly, there was a sort of resolution lying latent beneath his apparent carelessness. "Only do not forget to take care of your own cheque-books, or in the meanwhile you may find he has been dipping pretty heavily into your exchequers as well. But goodby for the present. I shall be coming again to see for which night you will like tickets for the theater, and then I will telephone down."

As the door closed behind the tall, rather gaunt, but at the same time prepossessing form of Gilbert Falkland, Lady Howard sank back in her chair with a sign of supreme satisfaction.

"Dear me, what should we do without that man? He is really too good in troubling himself so much about us and our concerns."

Lady Howard spoke feelingly. Nobody could have ever taken the reins of government more unwillingly into her own hands than her ladyship had done upon the death of her husband three years before, when she had been left a rich but somewhat helpless widow, with a large estate and three growing children. In the years of her married life everything had devolved upon Sir Wilfred, and, though, as time wore on, she became more accustomed to her sense of perfect independence, and had actually consented to an additional care in the shape of the guardianship of her niece, her brother's child, she was still only too thankful if any one would relieve her a little of the weight of the responsibilities which hung so heavily upon her shoulders.

Consequently Gilbert Falkland, whom they had chanced to meet upon the continent for the first time only a month before, but who had introduced himself as one of the late Sir Wilfred's oldest friends, had found his attentions thoroughly acceptable to the widow; and, as it happened that he had been going by the same route as Lady Howard and her niece, he had constituted himself courier and guide, and had taken upon his own shoulders all the troubles and worries inseparable from continental traveling.

At home in England once more, fortune had thrown Mr. Falkland across their path again, and Lady Howard was only too pleased if he would still do anything for her, even if it were merely to arrange a drive or decide which of the pieces at the theaters was really worth seeing.

But Evelyn scarcely heard the sigh of contentment which had followed Mr. Falkland's departure. Her thoughts were running in quite another direction; for, in spite of the nonchalance with which she had laughed away Gilbert Falkland's observations upon the encounter with the man in the hall, his words had carried more weight than he had had the satisfaction of imagining.

At the time it had never struck her as peculiar that a man who was an absolute stranger to her should have been able to single out from the number of letters one in particular for her, thus showing that he knew her address perfectly. It puzzled her though, considerably now, especially as the idea flashed through her mind, as it had done before even as she stood in the hall that that letter was not lying among the others when she had first looked over the table. It had seemed a trifling matter at the time; she would never have troubled to think anything more about it if Mr. Falkland had not declared that this man must have known something of her name and had taken the earliest opportunity of trying to make her acquaintance.

But now, since he had told her what really villainous characters were constantly to be found at such quiet seaside hotels as the "Royal George," she began to realize that, if this Mr. Brown were one of the number, he would be capable of anything, and, seeing her coming, had probably hidden her letter in order to obtain the necessary excuse for addressing her.

"Well, at any rate, he shall not speak to me again!" mentally resolved Miss Luttrell, as she stirred her coffee and buttered a piece of toast. "Mr. Brown of London is mistaken if he imagines that Aunt Lydia and I are two helpless individuals whom he can take in and impose upon as he likes. He had better try—that is all."

CHAPTER IV.

Evelyn, however, had reckoned without her host. Later in the morning she was hurrying upstairs with a message to her aunt's maid, when, as she was somewhat breathlessly mounting the last flight, a tall figure, which she recognized at a glance as Major Brown's, suddenly appeared at the top of the staircase, which he was just about to descend.

Summoning all her dignity to her aid and with her head set proudly back, Miss Luttrell had prepared to pass on quickly without deigning him more than a coldly regal bow, when to her amazement, as his eyes met hers, he immediately paused before her.

"I beg your pardon, Miss Luttrell, but I believe I have found some lost property of yours. Did you not drop a handkerchief in the dining-room last evening?"

It was a trifling question, certainly, still it sent the color flaming into the girl's cheeks.

"A handkerchief?" she repeated. "No; I am sure I did not"—with a decided shake of her head.

"Are you quite sure, though, because I feel certain it is yours—at least it has your initials on it?" he returned, producing the article in question and holding up the corner where the crest of the Luttrells was embroidered over the initials "E. C. L." "This is it. Is it not yours?"

Evelyn looked at it astonished. It was impossible to deny the ownership. "Oh, yes—it—it is mine!"

The admission was made with such reluctance that Major Brown was conscious of a feeling that in delivering up the handkerchief to its rightful owner he was rather under an obligation to her for deigning to accept it than that she owed anything to him.

He was therefore quite astonished at the polite but distant "thank you" which rewarded his efforts, and stood for some minutes lost in contemplation of the slight graceful figure as it retreated down a long corridor.

"It is no go, I am afraid, this time," he muttered half aloud. "Sambo's mistress has scented mischief already."

Yes, undoubtedly his scheme had failed. She had not been so blind as to believe that in both cases his effort to speak to her was merely chance, and the major realized with a sense of the keenest disappointment that, as matters stood, it was practically useless hoping to make the slightest progress toward a more intimate acquaintance.

There was nothing for it therefore but to let things take their own course for a day or two, in the meanwhile preserving such a strict silence, when chancing to encounter Miss Luttrell, as to disarm her of all suspicions, and then to trust to fate to throw her in some way across his path. At any rate, he was prepared to remain an occupant of No. 40, on the second floor of the "Royal George," even if he had to remain until doomsday for that auspicious moment to arrive.

Until doomsday! Yet, when only one hot sultry afternoon, one cool dewey evening, and one sunshiny morning had passed, Major Brown was thoroughly impatient.

It was the afternoon of the second day after his decision, and he was standing at the open window of the smoking room with a most dejected expression upon his face. It seemed such a hopeless case to imagine that by keeping aloof from her in this way he was making the slightest progress towards the stage of friendship at which he was resolved sooner or later to arrive. What should he do with himself? Go for a stroll in the town? Yes; anything would be better than dawdling away his time as he had been doing all the morning. He was on the point of withdrawing when footsteps beneath the window and voices in slight but decided altercation arrested his attention.

"No; it is of no use—you are not to come! I want to have a quiet afternoon under the trees, so that I can read my book without any chance of an interruption. I have just reached a most exciting point, and I am dying to see how it all ends."

"But how can my presence affect your peace and comfort if I promise not to speak? Surely, if I bring plenty of literature of my own in which I am equally interested, you cannot object——"

"Yes; but I do. I know so well what would happen. Just at the most pathetic part, when the hero and heroine were plunged in the depths of despair, you would look calmly up from one of Reuter's most matter-of-fact telegrams, to discover me with tears streaming down my cheeks. No, Mr. Falkland—go into Saltcliffe, as you had arranged, buy a new flower for your coat and——"

But at that point the voices and footsteps passed out of hearing.

The Major shrugged his shoulders and knocked the ashes somewhat impatiently off his cigar as he suddenly found himself lost in a vague mental speculation as to how far those entreaties would fail or succeed. All the same, there was a slight frown upon his forehead as he turned away from the window; and, apparently forgetting his resolution to take a walk round the town, he threw himself into a low chair, to puff away at his cigar with renewed energy.

The hour of three had struck in loud measured tones before he roused himself again; and then, as though by instinct, he returned to his post at the window just in time to catch a glimpse of Miss Luttrell and a large white parasol disappearing across the lawn in the direction of an inviting clump of trees.

So the fellow had failed, after all! Involuntarily a smile rose to the Major's face, a particularly unsympathetic smile.

"Poor beggar!" he ejaculated.

"OH, YES—IT—IT—IS MINE!"

Chagrin.

Men who expect to fail, instead of expecting to succeed, are very seldom the victims of chagrin. It is the men of great capacities who are the worst victims to chagrin, which is, indeed, one of the most serious set-offs against the advantage of early distinction. It is, perhaps, a greater misfortune to have learned to expect that obstacle after obstacle will go down before you than to have learned to expect that you will break your shins over them, and have reason to rejoice when you do not break them fatally or too often. The root of almost all chagrin is vexation with yourself—often a vexation quite as ill-founded as is the vexation of a man who has never been out in a whirlwind, when he finds that he cannot make way against it, though he had always previously made way against the wind. There is nothing of which the strong have less experience than of the forces which may be brought against them in this world; and nothing is more natural nor more unreasonable than to resent your own weakness when you ought only to be acknowledging the magnitude of your difficulties. The true remedy for chagrin is to realize how full the universe is of forces against which you have never yet measured yourself, and of the complexity of the causes by which they are constituted. It is quite as unjust to yourself to be able to surmount a cataract, as it is perfectly just to anticipate making way against an ordinary current or a strong tide. Great success under difficulties of one kind prepares a man to overestimate unduly his power against difficulties of a very different kind, and to waste himself in chagrin if he does not find them turn to wax in his hands.—London Spectator.

Ancient Wedding Houses.

In olden times certain towns and villages in England used to possess a wedding house, where poor couples, after they had been wedded at church, could entertain their friends at small cost, the only outlay being the purchase of such provisions for their guests as they brought with them, the house for the day being given free of payment. At Braughing (or Brachinges), in Hertfordshire, there was a wedding house of this kind, which had a large kitchen with a cauldron, large spits and dripping pan, a large room for merriment, and a lodging-room, with good linen. At Great Yeldham, in Essex, there was another such house, which was used by the poorer folk for dining in after they returned from the church. As the practice became obsolete the wedding house was turned into a school. In 1456 Roger Thornton granted to the mayor and community of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, the use of the hall and kitchen belonging to Thornton's hospital, for the use of young couples, when they were married to make their wedding dinner in, and receive the offerings and gifts of their friends.

Why Purple Became the Imperial Color

Purple became the imperial color because of its enormous cost and rarity. The only purple known to the ancients was the Tyrian purple, which was obtained in minute quantities only from a Mediterannean species of shell fish, called the murex. In the time of Cicero, wool, double dyed with this color, was so excessively dear that a single pound weight cost a thousand denarii, or about thirty-five pounds sterling. A single murex only yielded a little drop of the secretion, consequently very large numbers had to be taken in order to obtain enough to dye even a very small amount of wool. Amongst more than one of the nations of antiquity it was death for any person but the sovereign or supreme judges to wear garments dyed with Tyrian purple. Upon the accession of Julius Caesar a law was passed forbidding any private person to wear it.

READY FOR CONFLICT

Commander-in-Chief of the Transvaal Army Grows Quite Bellicose.

THE SITUATION SEEMS SERIOUS.

It Is Thought the Heaviest Fighting Will Occur on Natal Border, as English Troops Must Be Repelled There—Prospect for Compromise Not Encouraging.

PRETORIA, Sept. 22.—General Joubert, the Boer commander-in-chief, is quoted as saying in an interview: "The situation is serious. Probably the heaviest fighting would occur on the Natal border. The British are likely to attempt to invade the Transvaal by way of the Van Reinans pass."

Urgent messages are reaching the Raad from members who are demanding authority for the Boers to mass at strategic points.

CAPETOWN, Sept. 22.—At a meeting of the African members of parliament today, Mr. Neething presiding, the following telegram was dispatched to President Kruger: "We Afrikander members of parliament thoroughly sympathize with our Afrikander relative in trouble. While appreciating the concessions already made in the interests of peace, we beg to urge the expediency of doing the utmost, short of sacrificing independence, to avert the horrors of war. While agreeing that the joint inquiry proposed by Mr. Chamberlain cannot be asked as a matter of right, we believe such a commission will provide a way out of the difficulties which are fast approaching a crisis, with results which might prove fatal not only to the civil and free state brethren, but also to the Afrikander party of Cape Colony. In the presence of immediate danger and the momentous issues awaiting the decision of your honor, the executive and the Volksraad, even the risk of being misunderstood is of a minor importance. We beg your honor to lay these words, only dictated by a keen sense of our common interests and risks, privately before the executive and Volksraad."

This message, which was signed by fifty-three members of parliament, received the following reply from President Kruger: "I wish you and your sympathizers will notice, as you have doubtless already seen by the reply of the imperial government, that we have, according to your desire, considered the matter and accepted the invitation to the joint commission. Why the acceptance was delayed is shown by the dispatches published. I wish to thank you and other friends once more from my heart for the manner in which you have aided our efforts for a pacific and satisfactory solution. Finally I express the hope that your work and ours will not be fruitless."

The meeting also adopted a resolution to the effect that it had heard with satisfaction that the executive of the Transvaal had accepted the invitation of the point inquiry and trusted the acceptance would render an outbreak of hostilities practically impossible.

HARRISON ON BOUNDARY.

Says Extension Can Be Claimed Only by Prescription.

PARIS, Sept. 22.—Continuing his argument in behalf of Venezuela before the Venezuelan arbitration boundary commission today, Ex-President Harrison said the issue of diplomatic correspondence showed that Great Britain had never claimed more than the Dutch had. He held that the legal and political departments of the foreign office did not seem to agree, the latter taking its inspiration to the surveyor, Sir Robert Schombergk, while Sir Richard Webster, the British attorney general, went further and claimed they extended Schombergk line.

Continuing, Mr. Harrison said he proposed to show that the Dutch rights of 1814 were much smaller than those of any line now suggested by great Britain and that those lines were now extinct through the disputed territory. Any extension, he asserted, of the original or adverse holding, and that all the rest of the country belonged to Venezuela.

Transport Buford Detained.

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—The United States transport Buford, which was about to sail today, was detained in her dock by the quarantine authorities for a second disinfection and will sail tomorrow. Health Officer Doty explained this action by saying: "One of the soldiers who arrived from Havana on the Buford is in our hospital at Swinburne island, and has developed suspicious symptoms today, which I have no doubt will prove the disease to be yellow fever."

Will Attend Dewey Reception.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., Sept. 22.—Governor De Forest Richards has decided to attend the Dewey reception at New York, and has wired his acceptance of the invitation of the mayor of New York to be present. De Forest Richards, jr., was a classmate and roommate of George Dewey, jr., and the two families are very well acquainted with each other, the Richards having spent a summer at the home of Dewey in Vermont.

A Soldier Goes Insane.

CHICAGO, Ill., Sept. 22.—William Sterling, formerly a private in Company K, First Colorado volunteers, and a son of James Sterling of Canton, O., was found by the police in a demented condition here today.

Sterling was wounded in a skirmish with the Filipinos a year ago, and it is supposed that this and the hardships undergone in the campaign have at last had the effect of temporarily unsettling his mind. In his pocket was found a letter from Miss Eunice Scott of Alcott, Colo., whom he declared he was going to marry.

To Study Beet Culture.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 22.—Nebraska will shortly be honored with a visit of a number of prominent Virginia agriculturalists, who intend to study the beet sugar industry there. The delegation will consist of Commissioner of Agriculture Kolner and about twenty Virginia farmers, who will spend some ten days in the locality of Grand Island for the purpose indicated. The party will be the guests of Mr. B. T. Spencer, who contemplates erecting a beet sugar factory near Fredericksburg, on the Snow Hill farm, which he recently purchased.

GRAND ARMY STAYS OUT.

So Do the Confederate Vets From the Parade in Dewey's Honor.

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—At General Roe's office today it is said the refusal of the Grand Army organization to take part in the Dewey land parade was final. General Roe is not disposed to recede an inch from his position. The ex-confederate veterans will not march either, being unable to parade in time. The line of march of the parade as at present agreed on follows:

General Roe and aides.

Sousa's band.

The men and officers of the Olympia.

Admiral Dewey and Major Van Wyck in a carriage.

Rear Admiral Sampson in a carriage with a committeeman.

The sailors of the North Atlantic squadron.

Regulars of the United States army.

General Roosevelt at head of New York state militia.

The Forty-eighth Highlanders of Toronto.

The Naval Reserves of New York.

Governor of Vermont and staff and the military organizations of the following named states to march in order of their admission to the union: Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Georgia, Connecticut, Maryland, South Carolina, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Mississippi, Missouri, Texas and District of Columbia all militia.

Veterans of the Spanish-American war.

Rear Admiral Schley and First Assistant Postmaster General Perry S. Heath, have sent acceptances.

"It will give me much delight," wrote Rear Admiral Schley, "to be present and participate in the city's honor to the peerless Dewey."

The mother and widow of Captain Gridley of the Olympia will be present. Governor Sadler of Nevada declined to attend, but said that state would be represented by Senators Jones and Stewart.

BIG COAL FAMINE IN SIGHT.

Railroads Unable to Furnish Cars for the Coal Men.

CHICAGO, Sept. 22.—The Record says: According to present indications, the central west this winter will experience a coal famine the like of which never before has been known in this section of the country. Prosperity, it is said, will be the primary cause of the famine. Ordinarily at this season of the year the railroad companies, especially those whose lines connect the east and the central west, derive their greatest benefit from the transportation of coal from the eastern fields of this section, but under the present conditions they are unable to provide cars for the hauling of the fuel, owing to the unprecedented handling of other and more profitable commodities.

Under ordinary conditions the lake carriers are engaged in carrying coal from the east to the west and stocking the great bunkers for the winter supply. But in the summer, which ends today, they have had more than they could do to haul other things, which contributed more generally to the exchequers of the various companies.

Strike on Drainage Canal.

JOLIET, Ill., Sept. 22.—Five hundred laborers on section 18 of the drainage canal struck today. The contractors have been paying them twice a month, but owing to the frequency of the sprees which resulted from this it was resolved to pay monthly. The men objected and struck. They are largely foreigners and trouble is feared.

Millionaire Cattle Breeder Dead.

DENVER, Sept. 22.—Charles N. Whitman, a millionaire breeder of Hereford cattle, with farms in Kansas and a 250,000-acre ranch in Texas, is dead at his home here of a disease of the stomach. He was 49 years old.

Bring Gold From Europe.

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—Reports are current in Wall street that the importation of gold from Europe is about to begin. It is said that £100,000, or $500,000, in gold has already been purchased in the open market in London for shipment to New York. It is said that the National City bank is arranging to bring $5,000,000 in gold from Europe and that Lazard Freres probably will import a large amount from Paris. If gold is coming to New York from the other side the effect will be to produce a relaxation in money, or at east to prevent a greater stringency.

Bonds Will Remain Unpaid.

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—A special to the Journal and Advertiser from Washington says: The decision by the Spanish cabinet that the interest on the Cuban bonds must be paid by the Cuban government is a virtual announcement that Spain will not pay the interest, and that the bonds are valueless. Involved in this announcement is the condition that there may be an attempt to entangle congress in a discussion of the responsibility of the United States government for the interest during the American occupation of the island.

A MAMMOTH INSTITUTION.

To those who are accustomed to sending away from home for their goods it is of the greatest importance to know the character and reliability of the establishments selling goods to families from catalogues. The great emporium of the John M. This firm enjoys the confidence of the public by its many years of fair dealing. It issues an immense illustrated catalogue that should be in every family, as it describes and gives the price of every article required for household use. A sample of the extraordinary values offered by this firm is shown in the illustration of the lady's ulster in another column of this paper. These garments are indeed wonderful values, and yet they are but a sample of the thousand and one useful articles illustrated and described in the beautiful catalogue of the John M. Smyth Company.

"David Aram."

"We often receive orders that puzzle us a good deal," said a bookseller quoted in the New Orleans Times-Democrat. "A lady who lays claim to considerable culture came into the store last evening and asked whether we had a copy of 'Eugene Aram.' 'Not alone,' I replied. 'But we can give you a complete set of Bulwer at a reasonable price.' 'Bulwer!' she exclaimed. 'Why, Bulwer is not the author of "Eugene Aram!"' He certainly wrote a novel by that title,' I said mildly, 'but perhaps you are thinking of "The Dream of Eugene Aram," by Hood' 'No, no,' she answered, 'I mean a novel. You certainly must have heard of it. It's quite recent and all the talk.' 'What is it about?' I ventured to ask. 'Why, it's a story of country life,' she replied, 'and there is a very amusing chapter in it about a horse trade.' Then a light broke in on me, but she had been so positive that I thought I would take her down a peg or two. 'Pardon the suggestion,' I said, 'but of course it is not possible that you are confusing "David Harum" with "Eugene Aram"?' 'Yes, that's it!' she cried brightly. 'I said Eugene instead of David. Give me a copy of "David Aram."' I wilted. It served me right for being a prig. By the way, the common way of pronouncing the title is 'David's Harem.'"

FIFTY CENTS FOR NOTHING.

What will the inventive brain of man do next? This is a question some one asks almost daily. There is one, though, who leads all others, who for a quarter of a century has been making fine laundry starch, and to-day is offering the public the finest starch ever placed on the market.

This is one of the greatest offers ever made to introduce "RED CROSS" laundry starch, J. C. Hubinger's latest invention.

A woman named Annie Winnington was buried on July 21 at Northwitch. She died at the age of 44 years, and had been the mother of twenty-five children, of whom it was stated that three are living, aged 20, 18 and 8 years, so that twenty-two of this number have died. She was married at 21 years and had twins three times.

Canned Catfish.

Nearly all kinds of fish are canned to more or less extent except catfish, and these are to be similarly treated in a short time, as an Atlantic City expert and a party of fifty men from Philadelphia have left for the Kissimee river, Fla., to catch and can all they can get. There is no reason why catfish should not be sold as readily as salmon or any sea product. Salt water catfish are not to be used, because the skin cannot be separated from the body, and only those found in the fresh water rivers and lakes in the south will be canned.

GEN. OTIS TO EXPLAIN

Information Wanted as to Why Chinamen are Excluded.

THEIR MINISTER WANTS TO KNOW

Desires Admission of Some of His People Into the Philippines—Telegram From Gen. Otis Regarding Use of Church Property—More Elastic Policy on Exclusion of Chinamen.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—At the cabinet meeting the subject of Chinese exclusion in the Philippines was discussed at some length. It was decided to ask General Otis for definite information as to what had been done, and especially in regard to a particular complaint from the Chinese minister that one shipload of Chinese had been stopped. General Otis will be asked to give reasons why this action was taken.

First Assistant Secretary Hill of the state department was present at the session on account of the Chinese exclusion topic.

The telegram from General Otis relating to the occupation of churches by United States troops in the Philippines was read and discussed. No orders will be sent to General Otis on this subject, as it is regarded as a part of warfare to occupy the churches.

The War department has received the following telegram from General Otis regarding the military use of church property in the Philippines:

"Referring to your cablegram of September 18, sixteen churches in different localities occupied by United States troops. Four only partially occupied and religious services not interfered with. Also three convents occupied. These three and ten of the sixteen churches were formerly occupied by insurgents. Church property is respected and protected by our troops."

The Chinese minister called at the state department and held a long conference with Acting Secretary Hill respecting the admission into the Philippines of some Chinese. The case is an exceptional one and it is said that the general question of the validity and propriety of General Otis' extension of the Chinese exclusion laws to the Philippines was not an issue in the conference.

Senator Davis, chairman of the committee on foreign relations, happened to call at the time, and was participant in the discussion, giving the department the benefit of his views of the attitude that would be assumed by his committee and perhaps by congress respecting such questions as that presented.

There are some indications that the adoption of a more elastic policy in the matter of Chinese exclusion will be suggested to General Otis, but nothing has yet been done in that direction.

RECORD BREAKING LAND SALES.

Union Pacific Conveyances in Nebraska Colorado and Utah Large.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., Sept. 23.—C. E. Wantland, special land agent of the Union Pacific railroad, who has just returned from a trip through Wyoming, Utah and Nebraska, reports September and October will be record breaking months in the land business of the road. Indications are the Union Pacific's land business for the two months will be the largest in the history of the company. The sales will exceed $100,000 for each month, and it is possible may reach $150,000.

The land sold is in Wyoming, Nebraska, Colorado and Utah, and among the purchasers and lessees are many prominent cattle and sheep men. Indications are there will be a movement late in the fall from Iowa to the ranch districts of western Nebraska and eastern Wyoming and Colorado.

New Battleship's Speed.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—Naval officers who were on board the new battleship Kearsearge on her run from Newport News to New York say she made thirteen and a half knots an hour, with a screw revolution of from 90 to 110. This and the fact that she had a foul bottom satisfies the officials that the battleship will make about 16.25 knots an hour on her trial next week, or a quarter knot above the required speed. It is said she is capable of greater speed than this, but as there is no premium for extra speed the engines will be pushed only enough to give a safe margin above the contract requirement.

Financial Bill Will Be Pushed.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—A prominent republican member of the next house of representatives today informed a reporter of the Washington Post that it was the purpose of General Henderson of Iowa, who will be the next speaker, to submit the new financial bill drafted by a special committee of republicans to a republican caucus soon after the house is organized and have it considered in caucus before reference to any committee.

White is Dangerously Ill.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 23.—The Post says that Former Senator White is lying dangerously ill at the Palace hotel and that today he suffered a severe hemorrhage of the lungs. Senator White returned but a few days ago from a trip to the country, but he was so feeble that he was compelled to take to his bed. His condition today was such as to greatly alarm his friends.

Dr. Miller's Gift Unveiled.

UTICA, N. Y., Sept. 23.—A bronze bust of the late Governor Horatio Seymour, presented to the Oneida Historical society by Dr. George L. Miller of Omaha, was unveiled in this city this afternoon.

Governor Roosevelt delivered an address. The presentation speech was made by Dr. Miller and that of acceptance by Thomas M. Proctor, president of the society. The exercises were held by Grand Army Republican veterans.

Dreyfus to Winter in Texas.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Sept. 23.—J. A. S. Eteen of Sherevport, La., has arrived here from Rennes, France, where he has been visiting his sister. He brings information that Captain Dreyfus and Mme. Dreyfus, together with Madame Bertha Morre, Lieutenant Max Rance-Morre, late of the French army, and Misses Ida and Emily Morre, will come to San Antonio and that Captain Alfred Dreyfus will spend the winter in this city for his health.

PHILIPPINE ARMY PLANS.

War Department May Create a Division Similar to That in Cuba.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 23.—A plan is under consideration at the war department to create an army division of the Philippines and divide the division into departments on a basis similar to that in Cuba. The idea is to create four departments in the Philippines, at least three of them to be commanded by major generals. The Philippines heretofore have been known as the Department of the Pacific.

It is expected that one department of the proposed new division will consist of General MacArthur's command north of Manila, another will be General Lawton's command south of Manila and a third will be a new command to operate from Lingayen or Dagupan.

A fourth department will probably consist of troops in the islands south of Manila, which include the commands now at Iloilo, Cebu and other points.

The scheme has not yet taken such definite form as to determine the commands of the departments and divisions. There is little doubt, however, that Lawton and MacArthur will remain where they now are and probably the command in the islands south will be under a brigadier general. Another officer will have to be selected for the department in the far northern part of the island at the terminus of the Dagupan railroad.

The plan is to give each department commander all the troops that can be successfully operated and also insure sufficient garrisons for all points taken. Protection to the peaceable tribes is one of the chief objects sought, as representations made to the war department indicate that many of the inhabitants do not want to fight and if unmolested and relieved from fear of attack by the Tagalos will assist in supporting the authority of the United States and make it impossible for the followers of Aguinaldo to subsist.

CAPETOWN, Sept. 23.—Writing to an intimate friend here, President Kruger says things are serious and will become graver, but a peaceful settlement will be attained.

In the Cape house of assembly yesterday, discussing the question of volunteers, Mr. W. P. Schriner said he hoped some day to see a force established, in which the English and Dutch would unite for the defense of the colony and render it independent of imperial troops.

POLITICAL EXILES RETURN.

Landing Arouses Great Enthusiasm at the City of Santo Domingo.

SANTO DOMINGO, Sept. 23.—A war ship from Porto Rico, with forty political exiles on board, arrived here today. The return of the exiles aroused much enthusiasm among the populace. The decree of the government fixing October 6 to October 8 for the primary elections and providing for the meeting of the eelctoral college during the last week in October, although a revolutionary action and against the constitution, has been well received. The government's action was ratified by a popular demonstration, the crowds crying: "Down with the constitution!"

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 23.—Believing that war between Great Britain and the Transvaal is imminent, most of the Russian newspapers make no attempt to conceal their sympathy with the Boers.

The Novoe Vremva raises the question of the maintenance of the Suez canal as an international waterway if the whole of east Africa, from Cairo to the Cape of Good Hope, is to be formed into a compact British colony. Wants Dreyfus to Lecture.

VANCOUVER, B. C., Sept. 23.—A Toronto capitalist and W. R. Jackson, one of the proprietors of Savory theater in this city, are trying to engage Dreyfus to lecture in Europe and America for $1,000 a day. Jackson today cabled Dreyfus as follows: "I respectfully offer you £200 per day and expenses for one year to lecture in Europe and America. Bonds to your satisfaction given. Reference, French consul here."

Mayor of Algiers Flees.

ALGIERS, Sept. 23.—Max Regis, the former mayor of Algiers, and a notorious Jew-baiter, during the night left the villa just outside of the town in which he and a party of adherents had been barricaded for some days, fearing arrest by the government. He is said to have gone on board a boat bound for Spain. Eight of his companions were arrested.

Fever Abates at New Orleans.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 23.—No new cases were reported today. This is thought to be due to the fact that weather has turned very cool. To the same reason is attributed the fact that two deaths occurred today.

Germans Who Want Peace.

BERLIN, Sept. 23.—The German peace society at its meeting in this city tomorrow will adopt resolutions protesting against a war between Great Britain and the Transvaal.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Sept. 23.—Charles S. Pillsbury left no will, at least none has been found. His wife, Mary A. Pillsbury, and his sons, John S. and Charles S. Pillsbury, petition to the probate court for the appointment of administrators of the estate. The sum named as the probable value of the estate is $300,000 in real property and $300,000 in personal property. The inventory may show a much greater value. The petition will be acted on October 18.

The height of the rock of Gibraltar is about 1,437 feet.

Exports From Havana.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 23.—The war department made public yesterday a statement showing that the exports from the port of Havana for the month of August, 189, usually considered the poorest month of the year, reached the sum of $2,170,294. The United States alone took $1,342,360 worth of mercantile products, and in addition, received $520,000 in gold coin. On this basis the export trade of Havana for the year would reach $25,045,000.

Thrashed by a Woman.

HEMINGFORD, Neb., Sept. 23.—William Willmott, a bachelor farmer living five miles west of here, received a sound thrashing at the hands of Mrs. Luke Phillips, a neighbor's wife. The cause of the trouble, it is said, was that Willmott's stock were trespassing on the Phillip's farm and after bearing the annoysnce for several days Mrs. Phillips penned up the stock, Mr. Phillips being away from home. This aroused Mr. Willmott's ire and when he came after his stock, she claims, he commenced to call her vile names, whereupon she proceeded to give him a lashing with a strap which had a buckle on the end. Willmott made no resistance, but when he made his escape he again abused Mrs. Phillips. She fears further violence from Willmott and came to town with a view of having him placed under arrest. Willmott was examined by the board of insanity a couple of years ago.

Big Day at David City.

DAVID CITY, Neb., Sept. 23.—The celebration and reception given in honor of Company E was a red letter day for David City. More people were in town than ever before. The celebration opened promptly at 10 o'clock by the parade under command of Captain Zelinger of Company E, and consisted of four bands, Company E, David City and Linwood fire departments and civic societies, with other attractions. The parade over dinner was served by the ladies of the G. A. R. and honorary members of old Company E. This meal was a great repast and nothing good to eat was missing from the table.

After dinner the program of the afternoon in the public square was carried out, the feature of which was the speech of Chaplain James Malley, who was pastor of the Methodist church here the year before he went to the Philippines.

The Reform School Act.

LINCOLN, Sept. 23.—The case of Scott against Flowers, a case involving the constitutionality of the reform school act, which has been dragging along in the courts in Lancaster county for several years, was argued and submitted to the supreme court last week. A young girl named Flowers was charged in the county court by her guardian with incorrigibility. After a hearing the girl was committed to the reform school, but was afterward released on an order from the court. Friends of the girl brought suit for damages against the guardian, Scott, and secured a judgment for her for $2,500. This case was appealed to the supreme court and the point is now raised that the entire reform school law is contrary to satute.

Fornell Against Pointer.

LINCOLN, Neb., Sept. 23.—It is probable that the case of Auditor Cornell against Governor Poynter, testing the Weaver act, will be argued before the supreme court at its next sitting. When the court took up for consideration the motion of Judge Ryan, attorney for Auditor Cornell, asking for an advancement of the case, Attorney General Smyth appeared and expressed his willingness to participate in the proceedings on behalf of the governor. The court granted the attorneys for the defendant two weeks in which to file an answer to the information of Auditor Cornell and Judge Ryan.

Telephone Case Decided.

LINCOLN, Sept. 23.—The supreme court handed down a decision of the case of the Nebraska Telephone company against the State Board of Public Lands and Buildings, affirming the dismissal by the lower court of the petition of the company for a permanent injunction restraining the board from taking action on the complaint of John O. Yeiser, who sought to have telephone rates reduced. It was thought the decision in the case would touch upon the constitutionality of the various state boards provided for by statute and not by consitution, but this point is not decided.

Narrowly Escapes Destruction.

M'COOK, Neb., Sept. 23.—The St. Charles hotel of this city narrowly escaped destruction by fire. Quick work of the department alone saved the large brick building, which, with its contents, was damaged to the extent of several hundred dollars by fire and water. There are indications that the fire was of incendiary origin. The city was full of strangers on account of the exhibition of Ringling's show.

School Teacher Becomes Insane.

NEBRASKA CITY, Neb., Sept. 23.—Miss Mary N. Case, formerly of Syracuse, but more recently a school teacher in the western part of the state, became suddenly insane here, it is believed because of overwork. She has been taken to Lincoln and placed in the asylum.

Probable Elopement at Lyons.

LYONS, Neb., Sept. 23.—Rodney McCathern, who has been for some time a clerk at the Logan house, disappeared recently. Nothing strange would have been thought of McCathern's departure had not a waitress, Dolly Cranford, left at the same time. McCathern is a married man and has a wife at Bancroft, Neb.

Mangled by a Thresher.

ELMWOOD, Neb., Sept. 23.—While assisting in threshing at Joseph Mullin's farm, west of town, Ferdinand Miergergen got his right hand in the machinery of the stacker and the third finger run through between the cog wheels and was badly mangled.

Watermelon Social at Clarks.

CLARKS, Neb., Sept. 23.—The local lodge of the Sons and Daughters of Protection gave a watermelon social on the beautiful lawn of William Harris' home. There was an excellent musical and laterary program.

Accidental Shooting.

ASHLAND, Neb., Sept. 23.—While Roy Beers of Sargent was flourishing a rifle at Charles Williams' place west of Ashland, the trigger caught, discharging a bullet into his abdomen, but not producing a serious wound.

Brakeman Killed.

FREMONT, Neb., Sept. 23.—T. P. Mahoney, a freight brakeman who has been lately making his home here, was killed at Arlington, being caught between the cars of his train. He lived but a few minutes after he was struck. No one saw him fall, and it is not known exactly how the accident occurred. The trainmen saw him after he was between the cars, but it was then too late to save him. His body was not badly mangled, the blow which killed him having struck nim either in the back or the abdomen.

HOW I SPENT MY VACATION.

Just a brief description of how I spent my vacation this year, with little more expense than the salary earned during my trip, may not be amiss. It was a most delightful change from the hated and dusty pavements to roll over the boundless prairies and view from the car windows of a Missouri Pacific train the magnificent scope of country between here and Pueblo. There is no coolness like that which comes with the shades of night on these vast plains, filled then with waving corn and ripening wheat. There is no more bracing air than that with which one refreshes his lungs in the early morning when the mountains of Colorado are just coming into view, the mighty Pike's Peak reaching the vision long before its lowlier neighbors. When taken comfortably, there is no pleasanter ride than over this same garden spot of the Western world, which in our geographies was laid down as the Great American Desert. So we rode into Pueblo and thence by the Denver and Rio Grande road to Denver, a fair city with all the comforts and handsome buildings of her older sisters of the East and lying in an altitude far above the air we breathe in our homes, a gem in an emerald setting of never yielding mountain heights. Continuing our journey over the Denver and Rio Grande and the Rio Grande Western roads we started for Salt Lake City, the capitol of the new state, which has been aptly termed the Mountain Walled Treasury of the Gods. And thus we are permitted to pass through the most varied and entrancing scenery of the Rocky Mountains and to witness the wonders of the Royal Gorge, where the cunning of man has overcome the difficulties presented by Nature in her efforts at the grotesque and the sublime. These chained out attention and drew breathless expressions, especially when crossing some chasm on an almost impossible bridge structure with a roaring, brawling stream beneath us. It is inspiring and grand every foot of the way to Salida and from there many other decided attractions we visited. Perhaps that which will most interest a large number of my fellow carriers is Marshall's Pass, that marvelous testimonial to American engineering skill. As the altitude grows greater the view becomes less obstructed. Miles of cone-shaped summits are in view. We are in and above the home of the clouds. We see the snow covered spires of the Sangre de Christo range. To our right is the fire scarred front of old Ouray. We reach the summit at an altitude of 10,852 feet. From this point a magnificent view can be had of the Sangre de Christo range. The pass is a scenic and scientific wonder; grades of 211 feet to the mile are frequent. The streams from the summit flow eastward into the Atlantic and westward into the Pacific. We are impressed with the feeling that we are on the pinnacle of the world.

It would require much space to tell of all the beauties of this trip and of the pleasures of our stay in the City of the Prophets. There are many points of interest and among those that claimed our attention were, naturally, the Mormon Temple and Tabernacle; Fort Douglas, United States Military Post, three miles; White Sulphur Springs, one mile; Beck's Hot Springs, three miles; Liberty Park, one mile; Calder's Park, three miles; together with other attractions and drives too numerous to mention. Thirteen miles from the city is located the magnificent bathing resort, Saltair Beach, on Great Salt Lake, the finest salt water bathing resort in the world.

Let me urge upon my friends to try this trip during some vacation. It will well repay the expense in the restoration of health, the broadening of the mind and the addition it will give to each one's general information, tending thus to raise his standard of citizenship and to help himself and his brothers thereby.

F. P. BAKER.

"David Aram."

"We often receive orders that puzzle us a good deal," said a bookseller quoted in the New Orleans Times-Democrat. "A lady who lays claim to considerable culture came into the store last evening and asked whether we had a copy of 'Eugene Aram.' 'Not alone,' I replied. 'But we can give you a complete set of Bulwer at a reasonable price.' 'Bulwer!' she exclaimed. 'Why, Bulwer is not the author of "Eugene Aram!"' He certainly wrote a novel by that title,' I said mildly, 'but perhaps you are thinking of "The Dream of Eugene Aram," by Hood' 'No, no,' she answered, 'I mean a novel. You certainly must have heard of it. It's quite recent and all the talk.' 'What is it about?' I ventured to ask. 'Why, it's a story of country life,' she replied, 'and there is a very amusing chapter in it about a horse trade.' Then a light broke in on me, but she had been so positive that I thought I would take her down a peg or two. 'Pardon the suggestion,' I said, 'but of course it is not possible that you are confusing "David Harum" with "Eugene Aram"?' 'Yes, that's it!' she cried brightly. 'I said Eugene instead of David. Give me a copy of "David Aram."' I wilted. It served me right for being a prig. By the way, the common way of pronouncing the title is 'David's Harem.'"

THE ills of women overshadow their whole lives.

Some women are constantly getting medical treatment and are never well. A woman best understands women's ills, and the women who consult Mrs. Pinkham find in her counsel practical assistance. Mrs. Pinkham's address is Lynn, Mass.

PRACTICAL HELP FOR SUFFERING WOMEN

MRS. MABEL GOOD, Correctionville, Ia., tells how Mrs. Pinkham saved her life. She says:

"I cannot thank you enough for what your medicine has done for me. I can recommend it as one of the best medicines on earth for all women's ills. I suffered for two years with female weakness and at last became bedfast. Three of our best doctors did me no good so I concluded to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. After taking a few bottles of your medicine, I was able to do all my housework. I know that your medicine raised me from a bed of sickness and perhaps death, and am very thankful for what it has done for me. I hope that every suffering woman may be persuaded to try your medicine."

Get Mrs. Pinkham's advice as soon as you begin to be puzzled. The sick headaches and dragging sensation come from a curable cause. Write for help as soon as they appear.

MRS. DOLE STANLEY, Campbellsburg, Ind., writes: "DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—I was troubled with sick headache and was so weak and nervous, I could hardly go. A friend called upon me one evening and recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, saying that she knew that it would cure me. I then sent for your medicine and after taking five bottles of it, I was entirely cured. I cannot praise it enough."

The improvements that are being made to the Baltimore and Ohio South Western railroad between Parkersburg and East St. Louis are being pushed rapidly to completion. Seventeen thousand tons of 85 pound steel rails have been placed in the track, and there are still 25,000 tons to come, delivery being delayed on account of rush of orders at the mills. The company has also put in 125 miles of gravel ballast and expects to get out 200 miles more during the season, and it is hoped by Fall that the track will rank as the best in the west. A great many grade reductions and changes in line are also being made between Cincinnati and St. Louis. The purpose is to make a uniform one-half of one per cent grade between Cincinnati and St. Louis, as well as to eliminate a large amount of objectionable curvature. At one point, for instance, the line is to be shortened a mile and a half, 360 degrees of curvature eliminated and seven bridges abandoned.

There is probably no success so sweet as that achieved by acting contrary to the advice of our knowing friends.

Gen. J B Weaver of Iowa, addressed the citizens of Table Rock at the opera house, on Saturday evening, a good sized crowd being present. His talk was devoted largely to expansion and aroused very little enthusiasm, although there was sufficient applause at the close to awaken the chairman of the meeting who is said to have gone to sleep on the platform.

M B Reese, the republican candidate for member of the supreme bench, was not an aspirant for the honor, but he was the choice of the convention by an overwhelming majority; he is not a politician in the popular meaning of the term, but he is an able lawyer; an honest man and a splendid citizen. On the bench he will be impartial and honest—just what is wanted in a supreme judge.

The republican judicial convention was held at Tecumseh Tuesday afternoon, with each county in the district represented by its full quota of delegates. Hon L A Varner, editor of the Sterling Sun, presided over its deliberations. One ballot decided the controversy as to the candidates, and resulted in the nomination of the two old judges—Stull and Letton—the Gage county candidate LeHane receiving 81 votes. The nominees are entitled to the honor given them by reason of their faithfulness and efficiency on the bench.

Judge Stull convened court last Monday morning and the wheels of justice began to turn. There were a number of very important cases on the docket and considerable interest was manifested in the proceedings. The majority of the cases on the docket were continued until the regular term of court which will convene in December. Monday afternoon the case of the State vs. George Wilson charged with criminal assault was called. The defendant was brought into court and plead guilty to the charge. The court then sentenced him to confinement in the state penitentiary at hard labor for the period of seven years. This was a painful surprise to Wilson as he had hoped that his punishment at the hands of the mob would move the court to greater leniency. This has been one of the most important cases that has ever been heard in the county and has attracted great attention. The sentence as imposed by the court gives universal satisfaction and Wilson should congratulate himself that he escaped with his neck.—Falls City Journal.

The fusion forces held a county convention at Pawnee City last Saturday, W H Talcott was chairman and R W Story and C L Chambers secretaries, and a corps of candidates was named as follows:

County Treasurer, A E Lane
County Clerk, J H Conover.
Sheriff, Lyvene Burnham.
County Judge—
Clerk District Court, W A Mayberry.
County Superintendent, W H Patchin.
Coroner, Fred S Hassler.
County Com'sr, 3rd district, G W Potts.

There was a spirited contest for treasurer, but the Argus candidate had on his fighting clothes and the way in which he tied up the "Indiana circle" was spectacular as well as gratifying to his henchmen. For coroner the convention was at loggerheads for some time to decide who of its number would make the most graceful subject for Charley Schapple to sit on; when Fred Hasslea's name was suggested, the convention was unanimous in its opinion that the right man had been found. There has ever been a spirit of jealousy exhibited by Pawnee City over the advantages Table Rock has over Pawnee and the fusion convention Saturday showed its petty spite against us by making our fusion friends supply three of the lambs for the November slaughter.

THE STATE OF WASHINGTON

As Seen by Mrs Linnie Faulkner.

Three large steamers are moored at the landing, and several sail and row boats are lying on the beach. Ere long we are out upon the lake enjoying a delightful row upon its smooth surface. The water is so clear that the thousands of fish which abound in it can be plainly seen at quite a depth. Tomorrow we will try our luck at fishing from the pier. When "tomorrow" arrives we sally forth at an early hour and drop our lines into the water among a whole regiment of the finny tribe, and smilingly watch to see which one of those big fellows will be first to snap at the tempting bait. The moments go by and still we wait; several more, and we begin to grow impatient. What can be the matter? All around our hooks are dozens of fish, yet not one deigns to accept the delicious morsel we offer. Now and then one approaches and just as we become positive he means to nibble the bait, he deliberately turns up his aristocratic nose and moves majestically away from the point of danger. On the farther end of the pier, with his legs crossed tailor fashion and his great black eyes fixed intently upon the line before him, sits a Siwash Indian. Ever and anon there is a sudden movement of his long sinewy arm and a speckled trout lies on the pier beside him. Now why those fish should single out that particular bait is a profound mystery. Perhaps the amount of saliva which he lavishes so freely upon it may have something to do with it. Happy thought! We will follow his example and perchance luck may turn in our favor.

But no; it is of no avail. For this charm to prove effective it seems that the saliva must be of the pure unadulterated Siwash variety.

An hour goes by, and at last we decide that angling is rather stupid sport anyway, and stealing an envious glance at the redman's basket of trout, we leave him alone in his glory, and soon forget our vexation in another delightful row on the lake.

Lake Chelan is 70 miles long and from 2 to 4 miles wide. The last soundings made showed a depth of 1800 feet and the bottom had not yet been reached. The scenery along its borders is simply wonderful, rivaling the famous scenery of Switzerland. Our party chartered the steamer Dexter and went to the head of the lake, and so had a fair opportunity for observing all the points of interest.

At another time we may describe this trip, and tell you more about Washington scenery.

By the way, oats are worth 2 cents per pound and one feed of hay costs 25 cents per team. Dress goods worth $1.50 in Omaha are sold here at $4 per yard. Groceries, drugs, and hardware are also very high priced.

So far as the healthfulness of Washington is concerned, that depends largely upon the individual and the locality. In some places the winters are very severe, and in others they are mild; the difference being caused by the altitude. For instance, at Waterville, which is 2700 feet above sea level, the winters are as cold as in Nebraska, while 25 miles from there at Chelan, the temperature rarely falls below zero.

At Pullman, Whitman county, there was a big snow storm on the 5th of June, while not many miles east of there the weather was so warm that people were almost prostrated with the heat. And thus it is all over the state. In driving from Chelan to Ellenburg, some 80 miles, one finds all kinds of weather, when the traveler starts out, he may be in his shirt sleeves, but by the time he reaches the summit of Wenatchee mountain (5250 feet altitude), he needs not only his coat, but an overcoat as well.

Very few maps give a correct impression of Washington most of them represent the eastern part as being level, while in reality it is very rolling and in many places mountainous. Hills which the Nebraska farmer would not think of cultivating are covered with wheat fields. From 12 to 14 horses are used on one plow, the latter being a new fangled affair which turns a number of furrows at once. How the horses manage to stay on the steep hillsides is a mystery, to say nothing of pulling a plow after them.

In one respect Washington is behind the times in that she has never had any big cyclones to boast of. Just imagine, you Nebraskans, who quake in your boots every time a cloud appears above the horizon, how pleasant it must be to fall sweetly to sleep each night with the assurance that you will not be blown into eternity before morning.

Wherever irrigation is found practical, fruit of all kinds is raised in abundance. One orchard at Chelan contains pears, peaches, apricots, plums, apples, prunes and almonds, besides a great amount of grapes, blackberries, raspberries and mulberries. Here we saw wagon loads of the finest kind of peaches lying under the trees, going to waste.

On the whole Washington is not a bad place in which to live; yet "there's no place like home," and to our mind Nebraska is still the banner state of the Union. It is very pleasant to travel about, and see the different parts of our country but when it comes to making a permanent home somewhere, Table Rock is the Mecca towards which our feet will turn.

Tomorrow we cross the Cascade range into the Sound country. If any one should desire farther information in regard to this state, we shall be pleased to answer such inquiries.

For the next 4 weeks our address will be, Buckley, King County, Washington, about 40 miles east of Tacoma. With kindest regards to all Table Rockers,

Yours very truly,
LINNIE FAULKNER.

Robbed The Grave

A startling incident of which Mr John Oliver of Philadelphia, was the subject, is narrated by him as follows: "I was in a most dreadful condition. My skin was almost yellow, eyes sunken, tongue coated, pain continually in back, and sides, no appetite—gradually growing weaker day by day. Three physicians had given me up. Fortunately, a friend advised trying 'Electric Bitters,' and to my great joy and surprise, the first bottle made a decided improvement. I continued their use for three weeks, and am now a well man. I know they saved my life, and robbed the grave of another victim." No one should fail to try them. Only 50 cts. guaranteed, at S G Wright's Drug Store.

A New Popular Song.

"Tonight His Face is Missing in the Old Home" is the title of a new song that is finding great favor with the song loving public. The words and melody are fine. DeWitt's Little Early Risers permanently cure chronic constipation biliousness, nervousness and worn-out feeling; cleanse and regulate the entire system: small, pleasant, never gripe or sicken—"famous little pills."

The strangest clock in the world is owned by a Hindoo prince. The dial is a huge gong. Beneath, scattered on the ground, are heaps of artificial bones of human beings, twelve in all. When the hands mark the hour of 1 the number of bones necessary to a human figure come together with a snap, the skeleton by invincible mechanism springs to its feet, seizes a mallet and strikes the gong one blow and then returns to its pile and falls to pieces. At noon or midnight the spectacle presented by the bones uniting to form twelve skeletons is described as very awe inspiring.

Working Night and Day.

Aguinaldo's Bull Cart.

Is not the only object of curiosity at the Greater America Exposition, Omaha. The Government building holds more than you can see right in a week. Then there is the $300,000 Art Exhibit. A silk weaving machine at work. An ice making machine at work. A gold mine in operation. A wild Indian camp. A great musical carnival on the Lagoon. An electrical fountain that beats the World's fair. The finest concert brass band in America. The best midway of any exposition. Complete colonial exhibits in every department. The people of the surrounding states will never see such an exposition in the west. To miss its educational advantages is criminal. Railroad rates are very low. Your children will learn more in a day than in months of school going.

Killed, 1,959. Injured, 31761. Force engaged, less than 300000. Above is the year's record of an army which has never left the boundries of the United States—the army of practical railway employees, the men who move the trains. The figures are taken from the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission just published. They tell their own story. The commission has gathered data showing that the danger of the trainmen, the engineer, the firemen, the conductor and the rest of the force actively employed about the trains is scarcely less than that faced by the soldier in the Philippines. The war department has made unofficial statements showing the casualities in the Philippines since the landing of our forces a year ago. According to these figures, the total killed in action and who have died of wounds is 375. In the railroad statistics the deaths from sickness are not taken into account, so it seems proper in making this comparison to leave out the 275 deaths in the army which are credited to this cause. Figuring the size of the army at Manila as 35,000, it is seen that the ratio is but little more than one man in 156. Unless the figures are wrong it would seem that the practical "railroader" stands more chances of being injured by an accident than the soldier does of being wounded. The total number of wounded in the Philippine service during the past year is given at 1,591; This is about one in twenty, while the proportion injured in the railway service is one to eleven; Actual military operations have been in progress for over five months. Supposing an equal number would have been wounded if there had been fighting during the rest of the year, the proportion of those wounded to the number engaged would be the same as the proportion of accidents on railroads.

A very pleatant affair occurred at the residence of Mrs Mary Bobst, east of town, last Sunday, in the way of a family reunion. This family consists of the mother and nine children, all of whom were present, together with all the grandchildren, thirteen in number. This is the first time in nearly six years that all have been together, and the day was very pleasantly spent by all. A bountiful dinner was served and a most enjoyable time is reported.—DuBois Times.

A HOT GAME

Yesterday our foot-ball team went to Hiawatha and met a team there. It was as pretty a game as you would want to see, both teams being in fine form and each determined to win if possible. Up to the last ten minutes of the last half the score was 0 0, but in the latter part of the first half two of our best men were "killed off," weakening the team and giving courage to the Hiawatha team. This half was played in a radius of twenty yards and some exceedingly pretty plays had been made—Charlie Billings making the play of the game, leaping over both lines and lighting on the full back as he received the ball, which elicited the admiration and applause of the crowd. Charlie Billings and Nate Myers were the star players of the game. In the latter part of the second half, the Hiawatha boys made a touch down and scored five—the only points made during the game—and they were declared the winners. A return game will be played here on Thursday October 26th. In the first half Frank Wemple and Nate Myers collided, Frank sustaining a scalp wound which required twelve stitches to sew up. During the same half, Charlie Billings' knee was badly sprained—and two raw players had to be substituted for them. The boys are a unit in praise of the treatment they received at the hands of the Hiawatha team and people, but declare the umpire was punk. Our boys demonstrated that they can play foot ball. The Lincoln High School team want to meet our boys and fixed next Saturday for coming down, but the condition of our team will not permit them to play at that time. On the 14th they will meet the Falls City team here.

The Breeders' Gazette, in a recent issue, has this to say of the Nebraska corn crop: "An estimate of Nebraska's corn crop, which is now safe from frost, is 300,000,000 bushels. It is hard for the mind to grasp just what these figures mean. Counting sixty bushels of shelled corn to the load, it would take 5,000,000 teams to haul the crop to market, a caravan that would reach around the world. It will take an army of 80,000 men over two months to husk it if they husk sixty bushels a day each. If loaded into cars of 30,000 pounds capacity it would take 600,000 cars to haul the crop, and make a train over 4,000 miles long.

Judge Reese, republican candidate for supreme judge, said at the ratification meeting in Lincoln the other night, that nothing could be more disgusting than a candidate for supreme judge running about the country engaging in talking matches with all who will talk with him—arraying neighbor against neighbor; that a judge should feel that he has no prejudices, political or otherwise, to sway his judgment. Since this speech the Argus is more than ever convinced that the republican state convention made no mistake when it selected M B Reese for its candidate for supreme judge. The people of Nebraska want a man in this position who cannot be swayed by party pejudice to render a false judgment; they want no political trickster to administer justice.

Various explanations have been offered for the re-enlistment of some 200 members of the Kansas regiment when the regiment started from Manila bound for home. It was supposed the Funston fighters had not had enough and that there who remained were anxious to be in at the finish. These patriotic motives do not tally with advices from Manila. One of the warm papers of that warm town insinuates that a hustling recruiting officer spoiled their longing for home by reading to the assembled troopers the resolve of a club of Kansas girls to marry a member of the regiment or remain single for life. That was a proposition some of the fighters did not care to go against. They preferred to hustle free-footed in Luzon.

THE FIGHT AT PARAC

American Forces in Luzon Get the Better of Insurgent Troops.

THE ENEMY AGAIN PUT TO ROUTE

Wheeler, Wheaton and MacArthur in Charge of the Troops Engaged—Few Losses on the American Side—Preparation for Other Forward Movements.

MANILA, Sept. 29.—The movement against Porac, about eight miles from Bacolor, in Pampanga province, which began at daybreak this morning, is conducted personally by General MacArthur. General Wheeler, with the Ninth regiment and a battery, was advancing by two roads, while General Wheaton, commanding the Twelfth and Seventeenth regiments, is moving to block the insurgents from retreating to the north. The Thirty-sixth regiment accompanies General MacArthur.

Firing has begun near Angeles.

Two Filipino majors came to the American lines last night with messages regarding the American prisoners, who were to arrive this morning. They also requested permission for General Alejandrino, one colonel and two lieutenant colonels to visit General Otis. They were refused entrance to the American lines until noon Friday on account of today's fight, and General Alejandrino alone will be allowed to visit General Otis.

The insurgents recently entrenched and garrisoned the town of Pueto, on Laguna de Bay, in the province of Laguna. Subsequently Captain Larsen, commanding the gunboat Napidan, landed for a conference with the citizens. As he was proceeding up the main street of the town with a squad he was received with a volley from a hidden trench. The party retreated to their boat under cover of the buildings and regained their vessel. The Napidan then bombarded the trench for an hour, completely destroying it.

General MacArthur entered Porac after an hour's fighting. The American loss was slight and the insurgent loss is not known. The enemy fled northward. When the Americans entered the town they found it practically deserted.

The attacking party moved on Porac in two columns. The Ninth infantry, with two guns from Santa Rita, was commanded by General Wheeler, and the Thirty-sixth infantry, under Colonel Bell, with one gun, accompanied General MacArthur from San Antonio. Both columns struck the town at 9 o'clock and opened a brisk fire, which was replied to by the enemy for half an hour. Then the insurgents fled and the Americans marched over their trenches and took possession of the place. Just before the fight Smith's command, at Angeles, made a demonstration by firing artillery up the railroad track.

Liscum reported one casualty and Bell reported four of his command wounded. The artillery did not have any men injured.

Today's movement was a strategical success, and resulted in the possession of Porac and the clearing of several miles of country thereabout. The columns, one from Santa Rita and the other from San Antonio, united before Porac, according to program, stretching around the place for some miles.

The insurgents are estimated to have numbered 609 men. Ten dead Filipinos were found, and the captain and commissary of the Mascarnos command were taken prisoners. The American loss is five killed, but there were many prostrations from the heat.

The Englishmen from the insurgent lines report that the Filipinos at Bamham have 7,000 new Japanese rifles.

FORMAL WELCOME TO DEWEY.

The Great City Brilliantly Decked in His Honor.

NEW YORK, Sept. 29.—New York was decked brilliantly in honor of the gallant sailor who is waiting at her gate. Had an ocean of color swept through the city, its ebbing tide could not have stained the streets more brilliantly. Hundreds of miles of red, white and blue bunting covered the noble facades of Broadway and Fifth avenue, and a million flags flutter over the town. Not even the churches have escaped the universal decorations. The doors and gothic windows of old Trinity on Lower Broadway are gracefully draped with the national colors, and in Ancient Trinity graveyard the tomb of that gallant sailor, who, dying, issued the command, "Don't give up the ship," lies shrouded in the silken folds of the flag for which he died.

A million visitors are here to participate in the glorious celebration. Every road is pouring in a steady stream until the streets are crowded morning and night, the surface and elevated cars are filled to overflowing, and the hotel corridors are jammed with visitors.

The gaily apparelled soldiers of many states, who are to take part in the land parade on Saturday, began trooping in today, and there was no hour when uniformed men were not moving in some quarter of the city to the sound of fife and drums and horns.

The democrats of the First Maine congressional district today nominated Luther F. McKinney of Bridgeton, for the seat amde vakant by the resignation of Thomas B. Reed.

Leache of Ground Sinking.

LIMA, Peru, via Galveston, Tex., Sept. 29.—The inhabitants of Candarave and Poolata, about 150 miles southeast of Arequipa, Peru, have been kept in almost constant alarm since August 15 by seismic disturbances in that district. In a territory about a league in circumference the crust of the earth is sinking. At many points there are wide cracks, and it is feared that the hill, on the side of which Canarave is situated, will collapse.

Along the path of persistence we pass to perfection.

"WELCOME HOME" IN FIRE.

Fireworks and Illuminations in New York Harbor a Great Feature.

NEW YORK, Sept. 29.—The appearance of New York harbor last night could be compared to a circle of intense light with the war ships off Tompkinsville as the hub from which the brilliancy radiated. The bay has never before had as brilliant or picturesque a display of continuous illumination as that seen last night, nor has the interest manifested by the shore dwellers been more manifest.

Beginning at the Brooklyn bridge, with its string of white electric lights punctuated at intervals with red and green-colored arc signal lamps, the immensely brilliant motto, "Welcome Dewey," was suspended as it were in midair. Looking from the bridge toward the Jersey coast similar signs coid be distinctly read on the gateway of the railroads that are bringing thosands to swell the paen of welcome to the returning warrior.

Further down the bay on the Brooklyn side was the same fiery "Welcome" and also on Staten Island. At the portal to the city shond out in letters of the brightest light the same hearty greeting, "Welcome Home," flanked by immense illuminated American flags that could be seen for miles.

The residents at Quarantine gave for the benefit of the sailors on the ships a display of fireworks, which was followed by other patriotic residents along the Brooklyn and New Jersey coasts. After these displays of fireworks the Olympia and New York gave an exhibition with their searchlights, lighting up passing craft and picking out in brilliant relief many of the pretty wooded spots on the Staten Island hills.

DEWEY'S GOING TO MANILA.

Senator Proctor Relates Incident, Which President Remembers.

NEW YORK, Sept. 29.—Senator Proctor of Vermont told today the story of his interest in having Admiral (then commodore) Dewey assigned to the Asiatic squadron. He said that when the question of a commander for the Asiatic station was under discussion he went to the president to recommend Dewey for the post.

"I saw the president last Tuesday," said the senator, "in regard to this very matter. He remembered the conversation we had quite distinctly and, to my surpise, in detail. I had spoken of the fighting qualities of Dewey and McKinley replied: 'Yes, but all naval officers are fighters.' Then I said that was true, but that Dewey was level-headed and that he could take care of his country and his country's interest, no matter how far away he might be sent. Mr. McKinley remembered all this perfectly. This seemed to have some effect on the president, for he wrote onto a card these words: 'Secretary Long—Assign Commodore Dewey to Asiatic squadron.

"WM. M'KINLEY.

"The president placed this note behind his inkstand on his desk. Then he said to me: 'Senator, that is fixed.' I told Dewey of this soon afterward and Dewey said: 'I will celebrate this. I'll give you a dinner.' I told Dewey that he did not owe me anything, but as he was an old friend of mine I would eat his dinner and I did."

CONQUERING BEAR IS DEAD.

Grizzled Sioux Brave Steps From Motor Car to Happy Hunting Grounds.

OMAHA, Sept. 29.—Conquering Bear, the grizzled warrior of the Ogallala Sioux, is dead. The old brave fell a victim to the onward march of civilization and lost his life because he was unaccustomed to the ways of the city. He was riding down town from the Exposition grouds in company with another member of his tribe about 3 o'clock. At Nineteenth and Cuming street the other indian alighted from the car without letting the old man know it. As soon as Conquering Bear saw that his companion had left the car he stepped off and as the car was at full speed he was hurled in a heap on the stone pavement and never made a motion of life afterward.

The ambulance was called from the exposition and the body removed. A physician did all in his power to revive the indian, but his efforts were in vin. There were no bad wounds on his person and no indication that his skull had been fractured. The doctor gave it as his opinion that he came to his death from a shock to his brain. His heart action was good, but he seemed unable to breathe. Fifteen minutes after he was brought to the hospital he was pronounced dead.

Details of Flood Disasters in India Beginning to Come In.

WOOD AND COMRADES DEAD.

Report Reaches Manilla of Fate of Captured Gunboat's Crew.

MANILA, Sept. 29.—It is reported from a person just arrived from Turdac that Naval Cadet Wood, who was in charge of the gunboat recently captured and destroyed by the insurgents in the Orani river, on the northwest side of Manila bay, where she was patrolling, and five of the enlisted men composing the crew were killed in the fight previous to the destruction of the vessel. The four other men and the captured cannon, a one-pounder, a rapid-fire gun, a Colt machine gun, and a Nordenfeldt 25-millimeter gun, were conveyed to Malac.

Commander Shaw Warms Up.

TOPEKA, Kas., Sept. 29.—General Shaw, national commander-in-chief of the G. A. R., in prefacing his address to the veterans at the state reunion today, spoke of the now famous controversy of the G. A. R. with the Dewey parade managers. He characterized those having the big parade in charge "as narrow minded blunderers, clothed with a little brief authority." He then reviewed the whole trouble.

'TWAS ALL FOR DEWEY

Most Magnificent Marine Spectacle Ever Seen in an American Port.

WORTHY OF THE NATION'S HERO

Crafts of All Descriptions Make Up the Immense Floating Procession—Newspapers Estimate There Were 1,500,000 Visitors in New York to Witness the Demonstration — Salute at Grant's Tomb.

NEW YORK, Sept. 30.—No Roman conqueror returned from his triumph of barbaric splendor, no victorious king coming home from a successful war ever received such a magnificent ovation as overwhelmed Admiral Dewey yesterday as he stood on the bridge of the Olympia at the head of a magnificent fleet of thunderers of the deep, followed by a thousand vessels of peace, each tiered and crested black with people, and sailed over the bright waters of the upper bay and up the broad pathway of the sun-lit river whose banks were gay with millions of flags and streamers dancing in the wind.

The sky was blue, the water rippled under the fresh wind that held flags out straight and jaunty, and the wharves and piers, and rocky heights and grassy knolls were black with frantic, enthusiastic people who strived weakly to make their shout heard above the perfect bedlam of tooting whistles that accompanied the admiral ashore and afloat.

As the tomb of General Grant on Riverside drive was reached the fleet paid its tribute to the memory of the great warrior with a national salute of twenty-one roaring guns. The fleet then anchored and reviewed the almost endless procession of craft that steamed past, all so crowned with humanity that they looked as if they would turn over before they got back to their piers.

Toward the end, the parade became disorganized, and it took nours for the heterogeneous flotilla to get by. Darkness at last brought relief to the tired admiral, who had stood on the bridge for six hours bowing his acknowledgments to the stentorian expressions of homage.

New York has never witnessed before anything approaching this wonderful, remarkable demonstration. The Columbian naval parade, the dedication of Grant's tomb and the reception of the North Atlantic squadron last fall all pale before this gigantic ovation to the sailor, who in a single morning destroyed an enemy's fleet without the loss of a man or a ship. It is not beyond the mark to say that 3,000,000 people viewed the pageant from ashore and that 250,000 were afloat.

When New York turned out to the celebration this morning a light haze hung over the harbor, but this was soon burned up by the bright sun which bathed sea and city in its brilliant radiance. The wind was strong and gusty and kept the flags snapping. The water rippled under the fresh breeze and the dancing little waves seemed to raise their crusty heads in anticipation of a sight of the conqueror.

People who went down the bay were lost in their admiration of the display of bunting along the water front. On the east river from the bridge to the Battery, where the sailing craft lay in droves, the ships were covered with such a mass of color that might be compared to a maple-grown hillside in deep autumn. Every craft in the harbor was decked out from stem to stern with all the grace and attractiveness known to shippers. But the display in the east river was not to be compared with that of the north river, up which the procession was to pass.

From the peaks of every pier long ropes strung with flags of every hue were stretched to the snubbing post at the corner, the fronts were decorated with the multitude of gay devices. There were flags on the staffs and lines of flags above the ropes.

CORNER STONE WILL BE LAID.

Labor Difficulties at Chicago Said to Be Settled.

CHICAGO, Ill., Sept. 30.—At midnight the differences between organized labor and the festival and federal committees were amicably adjusted and it was announced that the cornerstone of the new postoffice would be laid on October 9, in accordance with the original program. The compromise was reached after two days of conference between members of the organized labor. Under the terms of agreement the cornerstone will be cut by union men from a block of Illinois limestone.

GOSSIP NAMES MEIKLEJOHN.

May Be Appointed Governor of the Philippines.

CHICAGO, Sept. 30.—A dispatch to the Record from Washington says: The apparently reliable information that the president is about to appoint a civil governor for the Philippines is already causing gossip as to who the man may be.

The name of George D. Meiklejohn, assistant secretary of war, is most frequently mentioned. He has the confidence of the president and has shown himself to possess administrative ability of high order in his work in the War department.

Regulations During War.

PRETORIA, Sept. 30.—The government has issued notices of the order to be maintained during war. The mines wil continue to work, reasonable protection being afforded. The liquor trade is prohibited and special police will maintain order. The Rand gold produced during the war is to be deposited with the government, which will mint there, from sufficient to pay its working expenses. The rest will be returned after the war. Strict passport regulations have also been provided.

LOOKS VERY WARLIKE.

Situation in the Transvaal Appears to Be More Critical Than Ever.

LONDON, Sept. 30.—(New York World Cablegram.)—I obtained last night from a high ministerial source the following authentic facts concerning yesterday's futeral meeting of the British cabinet. When the ministers assembled they were already in possession of a draft of Chamberlain's proposed ultimatum to the Boer republic. The terms of the settlement laid down were:

1. The substitution of the articles of the Pretoria convention of 1881, for those of the London convention of 1884, respecting the Boer republic's relations with foreign powers. This substitution means the abolition of all rights on the part of the public to deal with foreign powers and would amply recall Dr. Leyds as Boer commissioner in Europe.

2. The abolition of all legislation respecting aliens adopted by the republic since 1881. This would remove all disabilities placed by successive Boer ordinances on the outlanders.

3. The granting of municipal autonomy to the Rand. This would give control of all local affairs such as police, sanitation, and so forth, to the district mainly inhabited by the outlander population. It is the revival of a scheme of home rule for the Rand, suggested by Chamberlain to Kruger after the Jameson raid and contemptuously refused by Kruger.

4. The removal of all religious disabilities. At present Catholics and Jews are disabled from holding many offices, even the most important kind.

5. The disarmament of the two great forts which command Johannesburg.

The report that Britain demands a population indemnity for military outlays already incurred is not accurate, though it is the intention of the government to raise that question in due course. Finally, I may add, the republic is called upon to denounce its treaty of 1872 with Portugal under which it is empowered to import arms and ammunition from Delagoa bay through Portuguese territory.

These may be accepted as entirely accurate, precise British proposals. They were adopted by the cabinet, but no dispatch was forwarded to Pretoria last night and a further cabinet meeting has been called for Tuesday. The ministers were much surprised that Kruger had not sent any reply to their dispatch of last Friday, but he seems to have delayed it deliberately to embarrass his enemies, as it is expected today.

OTIS REPORTS ON MOVEMENT.

Results in Clearing the Country for Future Operations.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30.—General Otis today cabled the following report of the capture of Porac:

"Lawton's troops at Calumpit and San Fernando, where concentration was taking place, ordered to cover the country near Mexico, Guaga, Bacolor and Santa Rita. MacArthur ordered to take his troops and clear the country west and in the vicinity of Porac, which he did yesterday, advancing on Porac at an early hour with the Ninth infantry and Thirty-sixth volunteers, capturing Porac and driving the enemy north. Wheaton, at Angeles, kept back the enemy on his north and moved his force westward to intercept Porac insurgents, but they retreated by the mountain roads. Results in clearing the country preparatory to future operation: Our casualties at Porac were five wounded. Wheaton does not report any casualties. Captured one officer and several enlisted men; some twenty of the enemy killed; number wounded unknown."

INSURGENTS ARE MASSING.

Escaped Spanish Prisoner Describes Mascardo's Retreat from Porac.

MANILA, Sept. 30.—New York World Special—An escaped Spanish prisoner, who has entered the American lines, says that General Mascardo, with 800 insurgents, began to retreat out of Porac yesterday as soon as the place was attacked. He moved to a Calumpit mountain stronghold, to the westward, where 1,500 other insurgents were massed and where also the insurgents have powder works.

Four prisoners from the captured American gunboat Urdaneta were in Porac and were taken to Calumpit by the retreating enemy. Letters regarding the return of the American prisoners now in the Philippine islands are passing both ways. A flag of truce will probably be sent in tomorrow. It is posible that Lieutenant Gilmore and his boat's crew of the Yorktown will not be among those surrendered now.

JOHN F. BASS.

Deaf Mute Asylum Burns.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 30.—At 2 o'clock yesterday morning fire broke out in the Arkansas Deaf Mute institution, one miles west of the city limits and gained such headway that all the brick buildings comprising the institution will be destroyed. Twenty-five teachers and other employes sleeping in the main building were rescued. There were no pupils in the buildings, the annual vacation not having terminated. Loss about $100,000 with no insurance.

May Visit Nebraska.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 30.—While the official itinerary of President McKinley is being made up with a view of visitation to several points in the northwest decided upon, he has not definitely stated that he would not visit Nebraska. There are several routes by which the president can still visit Nebraska and meet his other appointments.

Cattle Raiders Held.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., Sept. 30.—Manager Gleason of the Warren Live stock company received word today that the preliminary hearing of the persons arrested for raiding the company's sheep in Logan county, killing sixty of the animals, and beating the herder, has resulted in the accused being bound over to the district court for trial. The men are Hunter Smith, William Regdan, Charles and Prentice McEndaffer. One of the men is the owner of a large herd of cattle, one is the foreman for a large cattle outfit and the other two are employes.

Shafter Expects to Retire.

CHARLOTTE, Mich., Sept. 30.—Jerome Chapin, a business man of this city, has received a letter from General Shafter, in which the latter says: "Expect to go on the retired list next month unless the president sees fit to retain me in the volunteer rank, of which I understand there has been talk. I have not asked it, however, and I am not going to, but simply take it as it comes."

The chainless wheel is a success, but what the average cyclist wants is a tireless one.

ALL OVER THE STATE

The Bartley Bond Case.

LINCOLN, Neb., Sept. 30.—The district clerk, on application from Attorney General Smyth, handed the sheriff an execution on the judgment in the Bartley bond case for him to serve upon the Lancaster county bondsmen. The amount of the execution is $646,000, and this is to be served upon E. E. Brown, N. S. Harwood and John H. Ames. Mrs. Fitzgerald was released from liability in the trial court and her name is not included. Similar executions are to be served in each county where the bondsmen live or where property of bondsmen is situated. An execution is said to have been served in Douglas county some time ago, but no reports have been received to indicate that property has been actually levied upon. Attorney General Smyth recently said in an interview that he favored a compromise between the legislature and the bondsmen in case the judgment is sustained. This has given rise to the belief that no property of the bondsmen will be taken until the supreme court passes on the case filed yesterday by the bondsmen. Several of the bondsmen are reported to be execution proof.

Governor on the Boers.

LINCOLN, Neb., Sept. 30.—A New York newspaper telegraphed Governor Poynter that a public meeting would be held in New York city on or about October 9 to express sympathy of Americans with the Boer republic in its stand for independence. The governor was asked if he would authorize the use of his name as honorary vice president and send a brief sentiment for publication. His answer was:

"I am glad to allow my name used in the furtherance of such a laudable object. Every American citizen who loves our republican government and believes in our grand Declaration of Independence must sympathize with any people struggling for liberty."

Reversal of Judgement.

LINCOLN, Neb., Sept. 30.—The bondsmen of ex-State Treasurer Bartley filed a petition in the supreme court asking for a reversal of the judgment given recently in the district court of Douglas county. The judgment was for $646,318.45 and costs, taxed at $963.56. The judgment was the result of a suit by the state against the official bondsmen of Mr. Bartley. The first trial in the district court resulted in a verdict for the defendants. The supreme court reversed the judgment and remanded the case for a new trial, and on the second trial judgment for the amount named was given. The bondsmen did not attempt to give bond to supersede the judgment, but now brings the case to the supreme court on error.

Young Man Crushed to Death.

FORT DODGE, Ia., Sept. 30.—A fatal accident occurred on the Illinois Central at Tara. Engineer Gray and Conductor McKinsey were in charge of a gravel train to be used on the Fort Dodge & Omaha, when coupling pins broke in two places, allowing the parts of the train to come together. There were several employes on the train, and most of these were thrown from the cars by the jar, but all escaped without serious injury with the exception of Carl Hermingson of Newell, who fell under the wheels and had the life crushed out of him.

Anti-Toxine Association.

NEBRASKA CITY, Neb., Sept. 30.—The articles of incorporation of the anti-toxin association have been filed with the secretary of state and county clerk. The capital stock is placed at $25,000, and the incorporators are Dr. S. J. Champney, H. C. Freeman, James W. Eaton, John W. James, John W. Steinhart, Joseph Scroggs and W. A. Hughey. The business of the association is the manufacture and sale of anti-toxin serum and other chemical products.

Midway Cleaned Out.

BURLINGTON, Ia., Sept. 30.—The "midway" feature of the Burlington street fair is no more. It was situated on the Burlington route depot grounds by permission given with the understanding that no immoral exhibitions should be included. It was discovered that the shows were all vile and the authorities ordered the managers to suspend them. The order was ignored. The railroad officials then ordered Assistant McPartland to clear the grounds, which he did.

Girl's Suicide Plans May Fail.

FAIRFIELD, Neb., Sept. 30.—Elizabeth Hawes, aged 14, a domestic in the Kyrd hotel, attempted suicide by shooting herself with a 32-caliber revolver. She had evidently laid deliberate plans to kill herself, as during the day she had asked the exact location of the heart and if a bullet through the heart would kill at once. The bullet passed through the left lung and lodged in the muscles of the back. She will likely recover.

Edgar Livery Barn Burns.

EDGAR, Neb., Sept. 30.—The livery barn on the corner of Fourth and D streets was found to be on fire and when discovered about 2 a. m. the fire was under such headway that the building could not be saved. Two horses, some harness and one carriage, also a quantity of grain and hay were burned up with the building. The fire is supposed to be incendiary. There was $500 insurance on the barn, but none on the other property.

Insurance Complaints.

LINCOLN, Neb., Sept. 30.—George F. Staats and thirty-six other residents of Saunders county have petitioned Insurance Commissioner Bryant to investigate the management of the Grain Growers' Mutual Hail association of Omaha, a company that was licensed by Auditor Cornell. Frank C. May and twenty-five farmers living near Hickman and John Wels and three others of Cedar Rapids have petitioned similar action. Mr. Bryant has advised the farmers to employ counsel as he has no funds to prosecute an investigation.

The Saunders county farmers complain because they believe the company has asked them to pay assessments on losses that occurred before they became members of the company. They also claim that they were induced to join the company through false representations in that it was represented that no risks would be taken outside of the first tier of six counties west of the Missouri river, whereas they have learned that insurance has been written further west, where hail storms are more frequent.

Nine times out often when a man asks your opinion he is only looking for an opportunity to express his own.

Why the critics are laughing is thus explained by the London Chronicle: A certain popular lady novelist has attained to the dignity in Australia of having a race-horse named after her. An incident at the Melbourne city police court has brought the fact into prominence. A constable was giving evidence in a case of alleged illegal betting. "He said he backed Merry Gorilla," observed the witness. "Merry Gorilla?" exclaimed the presiding magistrate; "I never heard of a horse with such a peculiar name." "He means Marie Corelli," explained the prosecuting lawyer. Then the bench, the bar, the dock and the gallery laughed in unison.

Dewey Celebration.

Americans are quick to appreciate merit. The Dewey celebrations prove that, and it is again forcibly demonstrated in the praise and confidence which is accorded Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, one of the most meritorious remedies ever compounded for indigestion, constipation, dypepsia, biliousness, liver or kidney disease or any trouble arising from a weak stomach.

Queen Victoria is reported to have sent a copy of her family tree, with King David at the top, to Emperor William, of Germany. It is said to be a favorite idea with the queen that she is descended from the Psalmist through Zedekiah's oldest daughter, and the emperor's conviction of his divine origin may be the result of the same notion.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucus lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

as co[illegible] with the sum paid to New England pensioners last year. There are 55,667 names on the rolls for that section, which is an increase of twelve over 1898, and these draw from the national treasury slightly more than $7,000,000 a year. The decrease in amount will probably continue from this time on, and it is due to the fact that an invalid pensioner who drops from the rolls with a pension of from $8 to $72 per month may be succeeded by a widow whose pension cannot exceed $8 per month.

Possible Premier Waldersee.

If Prince Hohenlohe retires from the double post of German chancellor and Prussian premier it is rumored that he will be succeeded by Count Waldersee, who succeeded Moltke as chief of the grand general staff, and now commands the Ninth (Schleswig-Holstein) army corps, with the certain prospect—as the emperor publicly promised him on going to Altona—of commanding a whole army in the event of war. It was well known at the time that Count Waldersee left the general staff that he cherished the ambition to succeed Bismarck, and his interference in politics was one of the causes which then made for his removal from Berlin. He married a Miss Lee of New York and has marked Anglo-Saxon sympathies.

By virtue of his office, the Lord Mayor of London is admiral of the port of London, gauger of wine and oil and of other articles, measurer of coals, grain, salt and fruit, and inspector of butter, hops, soap, cheese, etc. He is governor of four hospitals, a trustee of St. Paul's cathedral and a magistrate "in several places." He is also coroner. The distribution of livery cloth is a curious survival. The court of aldermen sends every year to the Lord Chancellor, the lord chief justice and some ten other officials, national and municipal, four and a half yards each of the best black cloth. The town clerk has six yards of green and six of black cloth, and the principal clerk at the Guildhall four yards of each.

Nathan Tinker Draper, of Grand Rapids, Mich., will be 106 years old on September 6. He was born in New London, Conn., has been married twice, but both wives are dead. The old man draws a pension of $12 a month because of the killing of one of his sons in the war of the rebellion, but never saw any service himself. He has been a gardener nearly all his life, and is still able to do a little "fussing" about the yard, but not for any length of time. He says he remembers Thomas Jefferson very well, but never saw Washington. He has been a smoker all his life, but never to excess. He also drank liquor in his younger days, but never to an intemperate degree.

A radical change is being made in the appearance of the baggage, mail and express cars on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. The platforms and the hoods are being removed to increase the element of safety and save weight. The favorite riding place of tramps is also eliminated when the platforms are removed. General Manager Underwood has also issued an order to remove the numbers from locomotive tenders; so that in cases of emergency, those of the same style will be interchangeable.

The Dewey arch in New York is proving one of the most destructive engagements of the war. A fourth sculptor has been stricken down—Henry Balrer, who was modeling the medallion of Captain Lawrence of the Chesapeake. He had climbed the stairs to a station of the elevated railway, Thursday morning, when he fell with a stroke of paralysis. He will not die, however.

In the course of a day a person breathes about 2,600 gallons of air, weighing thirty-four pounds, about six times the average amount of food and drink consumed. It, therefore seems rather foolish to be constantly on guard against adulterated food and impure water, and to allow your neighbor to pollute the atmosphere because it is cheaper for him in his business.

William Kissam Vanderbilt, who has now become the head of the Vanderbilt family, will be fifty years old in December. He is essentially a man of the world; has owned a racing stable, defended the America's cup, driven a coach-and-four and cruised in almost every sea in his own steam yacht. The estimate of his present fortune varies from $75,000,000 to $90,000,000.

A Mysterious Major...

...BY...

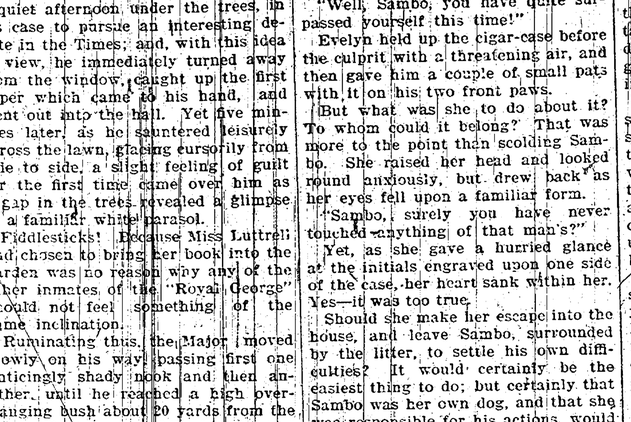
CHAPTER IV.—(Continued.)

But all thoughts of a stroll in the town had entirely forsaken him now. He also, like Miss Luttrell, had suddenly been seized with a longing for a quiet afternoon under the trees, in his case to pursue an interesting debate in the Times; and, with this idea in view, he immediately turned away from the window, caught up the first paper which came to his hand, and went out into the hall. Yet five minutes later, as he sauntered leisurely across the lawn, glancing cursorily from side to side, a slight feeling of guilt for the first time came over him as a gap in the trees revealed a glimpse of a familiar white parasol.

Fiddlesticks! Because Miss Luttrell had chosen to bring her book into the garden was no reason why any of the other inmates of the "Royal George" should not feel something of the same inclination.

Ruminating thus, the Major moved slowly on his way, passing first one enticingly shady nook and then another, until he reached a high overhanging bush about 20 yards from the group of trees which Miss Luttrell had selected, where he threw himself down upon the dry burned-up grass and gave himself up to the delights of a peaceful summer afternoon.

And yet, as he took out his cigar-case and lighting a fresh cigar, glanced casually down the columns of the newspaper, it was evident that something besides the perusal of the Times had brought him to that secluded spot, or he would have at least exhibited some annoyance when, instead of finding himself in possession of that star of London daily literature, he discovered himself aimlessly scrutinizing the visitors' list and the many advertisements which occupied at least two-thirds of the Saltcliffe Chronicle.



LYING BACK ON THE GREEN SWARD.

No wonder therefore that after some minutes he quietly discarded it, and lying back on the soft green sward, tilted his hat far over his eyes and prepared to enjoy the perfect calmness of the day.

But half an hour had passed quietly; his feelings of perplexity had given place to hopelessness, and hopelessness to a general sense of lassitude, which had brought him to that stage when the sights and sounds around him had grown vague and indistinct, and before long he was traveling peacefully in the land of sleep.

Thus he was quite unconscious of the fact that a little black French poodle had discovered him and had sniffed suspiciously round him for two or three minutes, and also quite unconscious that, when that little black French poodle had disappeared, his cigar-case, which had been lying on the grass at his elbow, had disappeared also.

Meanwhile Miss Luttrell, who had comfortably ensconced herself in a large bamboo chair, was deeply absorbed in the thrilling incidents of her three-volume novel. So deeply was she absorbed indeed that she had not the remotest idea that Major Brown had even crossed the lawn, or that Sambo, who had been lying on the rug at her feet, had grown tired of making little grabs at the army of gnats and flies which had been hovering round his head and had gone trotting off to pay a visit to that hapless individual.

Yet, when he returned again and settled himself in silence by her side—a silence which was perhaps ominous of coming evil from the very fact that any unusual calmness upon Sambo's part generally foreboded mischief—she bent forward and, raising her eyes from her book, asked what he was doing.

"Sambo!"

Horror and dismay were depicted upon her countenance, her tones were filled with the keenest reproach, as she sprang up from her chair and paused in consternation at the sight which met her eyes.

CHAPTER V.

There was Master Sambo literally surrounded by a mixed collection of cigars and cigarettes, whilst between his paws was calmly reposing a silver-mounted Russian leather cigar-case, at which he was gnawing with apparently as much enjoyment as if it had been one of the most tasty bones.

"Sambo, where did you get it? Oh, you bad dog! Whose in the world can it be?"

In an instant Evelyn had seized hold of the cigar-case and dragged it away from the poodle's clutches, but, alas, not before the whole of the leather had become indented with well-defined tooth-marks, whilst one of the corners had been entirely nibbled away.

"Well, Sambo, you have quite surpassed yourself this time!"

Evelyn held up the cigar-case before the culprit with a threatening air, and then gave him a couple of small pats with it on his two front paws.

But what was she to do about it? To whom could it belong? That was more to the point than scolding Sambo. She raised her head and looked round anxiously, but drew back as her eyes fell upon a familiar form.

"Sambo, surely you have never touched anything of that man's?"

Yet, as she gave a hurried glance at the initials engraved upon one side of the case, her heart sank within her. Yes—it was too true.

Should she make her escape into the house, and leave Sambo, surrounded by the litter, to settle his own difficulties? It would certainly be the easiest thing to do; but certainly that Sambo was her own dog, and that she was responsible for his actions, would not it be rather a mean way of getting out of the mischief? She took up her book and set off with Sambo.

"This will be a very good test as to whether he is an educated man," mused Evelyn. "Common people can never disguise their feelings. Anyhow, it has to be done; so come along, Sambo, and bear the brunt of his wrath!" And, with an admirable assumption of indifference, as if prepared for any reception, Miss Luttrell braced herself up for the encounter and advanced slowly towards the recumbent form of the Major, who was still lying stretched at full length beneath the shade of the overhanging trees.

But, as she reached his side and was just about to begin a carefully prepared apology she paused, then hurriedly drew back, for the gallant Major was still indulging in the proverbial "forty winks."

Must she wake him? No—decidedly not, it would never do to disturb his slumbers. Any annoyance that he might feel would be ten times increased if he was so summarily roused. Besides cogitated Evelyn with a sigh of relief at the thought of a respite, if he were accustomed to dropping off to sleep in that way nobody could possibly be held accountable for what in the meanwhile might happen to his belongings. She would put the cigar-case down by his side, and then—well she might as well go into the hotel and think of what course to adopt next. It would not be nearly so disagreeable to confess that Sambo was the delinquent if at the same time she could provide him with another cigar-case the facsimile of his own. This new idea seemed so preferable to her first one that, as she stepped forward to place the case on the grass by his side, her heart almost ceased beating in her anxiety not to wake him. It was therefore with an expression of absolute dismay, which could scarcely have been more suggestive of guilt had she been detected in the act of committing some heinous crime, that, as the Major suddenly opened his eyes, she started back, and, dropping the cigar-case at her feet, stood the picture of hopeless confusion.

"I—I am so dreadfully sorry!" she stammered, thoroughly taken aback. "I—hope I have not disturbed you."

"Disturbed me!" echoed the Major, looking perfectly mystified. "Oh, dear no—not at all!" He had sprung to his feet, and, raising his hat, was vainly trying to collect his scattered senses.

"The fact is—I had come to ask you if you have lost anything," began Evelyn hesitatingly, looking round helplessly and forgetting in toto the calm dignified apology which she had intended to make; "because I am afraid my dog has been doing some dreadful mischief."

"Really?" returned the Major. "It is very good of you, I am sure. But what has your dog been doing? Is it anything so very serious?"

"Well, yes—that is what he has done!" answered Evelyn, with a rueful glance at the cigar case, the dilapidated state of which plainly told its own tale. "And now I want to know if it belongs to you, as, if so, I cannot tell how I am to apologize for Sambo's dreadful behavior. Where he discovered it, and how he came into possession of it, I have no idea, as I found it in his mouth only about a minute ago; but——"

LINCOLN, Neb., Sept. 29.—There has recently appeared in large numbers in Nebraska an insect which, although known some time to exist in the state, has not until this year become alarmingly numerous or destructive. Prof. W. D. Hunter, assistant entomologist at the state university, has investigated the damage done by the insect, and so far he has been able to observe it prefers alfalfa as food to any of the crops which are commonly grown, notwithstanding this plant has been widely recommended as one practically exempt from injury from this class of pests. The insect has been known to go twenty rods around a wheat field to reach one of alfalfa, and it has already been named "the alfalfa worm" by those whose crops have suffered from it.

Specimens which render the identification positive have been received at the experiment station of the university from Johnson, Gage, Nemaha, Saline, Fillmore, Douglas, Washington and Dodge counties. Specimens have also been found in Boyd county, in the northern part of the state, and in Dawson county, in the western portion, making its extent over the state quite wide. The greatest damage has resulted in Johnson county, where many entire fields of alfalfa have suffered the loss of the third cutting. Many beet fields were attacked as were also those of corn, kafir corn, wheat, oats and cabbage, and pasture grass and blue grass lawns were in many places injured or entirely destroyed.

Young Wife Repents of Action.

TEKAMAH, Neb., Sept. 29.—Warnie Taylor, who ran away with and married 13-year-old Emma Averill, and who is now under bond to appear before the district court on the charge of rape, endeavored to secure possession of his wife by habeas corpus proceedings. The case came before Judge Keyser, who, after hearing a number of witnesses, including the young wife, dismissed the case and returned the young lady to the custody of her parents. Since coming under parental authority the young woman seems to have repented her escapade and tired of her Lochinvar lover.

Fight on a Postmaster.

WYMORE, Neb., Sept. 29.—The appointment of J. C. Burch as postmaster at this place was quite a surprise, few persons being aware he was a candidate for the place. Since his nomination has been made public some unfriendly persons have been busy getting signers to a protest, which will be forwarded to Washington to have the appointment annulled. The fight against Burch is being made on the ground that he was president of the Bank of Wymore at the time of its failure.

Victim of Appendicitis.

WAHOO, Neb., Sept. 29.—The A. O. U. W. of this city were called upon to lay one of their respected members in his last resting place in Sunrise cemetery, near this city. Chris Jenson died at his home in this city of appendicitis after an illness of only two days. Surgeons were telegraphed to come from Lincoln. The offending organ was successfully removed, but the disease was of a peculiarly malignant form and developed so rapidly that his life could not be saved.

Two Farm Houses Burn.

AUBURN, Neb., Sept. 29.—Dock Lawrence lost his dwelling house by fire. The property was worth about $700, with no insurance. The home of Tom Engles was also burned. The fire is supposed to have started from the kitchen stove. The barn, corn cribs and granary were all licked up by the flames. Mr. Engle's loss, in addition to the buildings, which were worth about $900, is 3,000 bushels of corn, 1,000 bushels of oats and 500 bushels of wheat, with no insurance.

Painfully Bruised.

NEBRASKA CITY, Neb., Sept. 29.—George Ganz, an old resident here, while coming to the city with a load of wood, received quite a number of bruises by being thrown from the load. His team became frightened at a traction engine and started to run, when one of the front wheels of the wagon went into a gully, throwing Mr. Ganz from the wagon, and one of the wheels passed over his left arm and he was otherwise bruised.

Hogs Dying.

Fillmore County Hogs Dying.....

GENEVA, Neb., Sept. 29.—Reports have been coming in of heavy losses of hogs from cholera. Joe McDonald of Chelsea township called on Dr. Winebrake and reported that he had lost a large number of hogs from what he called cholera. The doctor went out to the farm and made a careful examination of several of the carcasses and found that death was the result of typhoid.

Disastrous Lamp Explosion.

FREMONT, Neb., Sept. 29.—The dwelling house of Edward Bokowski, on Jensen street, caught fire this morning from a lamp explosion in a bedroom. The family were in another part of the house and the entire building was afire before it was discovered and was completely gutted. The loss is about $800, with insurance on house and contents of $700.

Fatal Accident.

LEXINGTON, Neb., Sept. 29.—At the close of the one-mile bicycle race here Herman Kugler, who had won second money, continued at full speed until the rope stretched across the street at the boundary line caught him across the neck, throwing him to the ground. He was carried home and died soon after, his neck having been broken.

Progressive Beemer.

BEEMER, Neb., Sept. 29.—The establishment of a bank in this city is an indication of the town's progress. It is now doing business with G. Karzen as president, Felix Givens as vice president and W. A. Smith as cashier. Substantial improvements are under way in all quarters of the town and Beemer is advancing at a rate that bodes much for the future. Its weekly paper, the Times, is stirring up the people to the good work and is a potent influence in the progressive spirit that is abroad. Put down Beemer as one of the live towns of this live state.

Suicide by Strychnine.

SEWARD, Neb., Sept. 29.—During the absence of Mr. and Mrs. Alva Neff, residing near Utica, Mrs. White, a sister of Mrs. Neff, aged 63 years, making her home with the family, took a dose of strychnine and died before medical aid could be summoned. After taking the poison she told a son of Mr. Neff, who had remained at home, what she had done, and not to send for a doctor. Mrs. White had been an inmate of the insane hospital at Clarinda, Ia., at one time, and had since resided in her sister's family.

The True Pearl.

The origin of fine pearls was the subject of an interesting paper lately read by M. Leon Diguet before the Academie des Sciences, Paris. The author believes the true pearl to be pathological calcification or "stone" induced by parasites. The true spherical pearl is formed in any part of the shellfish except the mantle, and has no connection with the shell itself, but begins in a small sac of humor. This becomes gelatinous, and finally solidifies in a series of concentric layers. A pearl thus formed consists of alternate layers of crystalline matter and a substance resembling conchioline, and it has a central cavity containing calcareous crystals and the remains of some organized creatures, presumably the parasites which have induced the disorder in the bivalve. The small sac in which the pearl has been made, after a lapse of time, becomes thin, and can be easily broken by the oyster and the pearl ejected. It has been held by many investigators that pearls were caused by shellfish coating foreign bodies, such as grains of sand or insects, with nacre, and although undoubtedly such intrusive bodies are so coated and are often sold as pearls, M. Leon Diguet maintains that these are quite distinct from the true "Orient" pearl. They always occur between the mantle and the shell, and are usually attached to the shell by a neck of pearly matter, and they have not the fine iridescence and luster of true "Orient" pearl, but only that of mother-of-pearl. These "pearls of nacre" are the result of accidental intrusion and probably an effort on the part of the mollusc to allay the irritation caused by the presence of a foreign body in contact with its soft flesh, but are quite distinct from the spherical pearls formed in the shellfish itself.

What Sleeplessness Means.

Medical scientists have now demonstrated that a brain cell actually loses part of its substance during action. The cell of the exhausted brain, instead of being plump and full of nervous matter, is found to be hollowed out, or "vacuolated," a cavity having formed without its substance, which has become filled with water. This means that a part of the cell substance has been actually consumed, precisely as coal is consumed when one gets heat from a furnace. It has been found that if an animal whose brain cells are thus exhausted be permitted to sleep, its cells readily recuperate, new material is supplied from the blood until the cell is as good as new. The brain of a person, therefore, who is beset by sleeplessness is in the condition of a locomotive which runs night and day without going to the repair-shop.—Science Siftings.

Fed by the Eye.

A lady went into a pastry cook's shop the other day. On the counter were displayed all sorts of toothsome dainties. The only attendant was a little girl about 10 years of age. "Isn't it a great temptation to you my dear," asked the lady, "to see all those nice things? You must always be wanting to eat them." "Oh no, ma'am," was the answer; "it is enough for me to see them made."

Weak-Lunged Carnivora.

It is a somewhat curious fact universally noted by travelers that lions, tigers and other fierce carnivora are too weak in lung power to run more than a half mile.

If there is one thing on which the housewife prides herself, it is that of having her laundering done nicely, so that the wearing apparel may be the admiration of all. The washing is a small matter, any one almost can do that, but to have the linens present that flexible and glossy appearance, after being ironed requires a fine quality of starch.

Ask your grocer for a coupon book which will enable you to get the first two packages of this new starch—"Red Cross" trademark brand, also two of the children's Shakespeare pictures painted in twelve beautiful colors as natural as life, or the Twentieth Century Girl Calendar, all absolutely free.

This is one of the grandest offers ever made to introduce "Red Cross" laundry starch, J. C. Hubinger's latest invention.

One way to reduce rents is to sew them up.

To show how distance is being overcome by railroad speed Mr. Chas. T. Batelle, a young business man of Seattle, handed the Editor of the Times, a few days ago, an envelope, postmarked New York City, Aug. 28, 7 p. m., the reverse side containing these words: "Seattle, Sept. 1, 11 p. m." It takes but a little figuring to demonstrate that these postmarks indicate a lapse of just "100 hours" of time—or four days and four hours. It was only about two years ago that it took "six continuous days" of riding to cross the continent from New York to Seattle, and when this was reduced to "five days" the travelers rejoiced. What must their happiness be when they appreciate the fact that they can step on board a "lightning express" in New York City and step off a "Flyer" in Seattle in exactly "100 hours," and then have "thirty minutes" of leeway, as the Great Northern was due in Seattle at 10:30 September 1.

THE very word "operation" strikes terror to a woman's soul.

Nearly always these operations become necessary through neglect.

If the menses are very painful, or too frequent and excessive, get the right advice at once and stop taking chances. It will cost you nothing for advice if you write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for it, and if you let the trouble run along it will surely cost you a great deal of pain and may mean an operation.

WOMEN AVOID OPERATIONS

Miss Sarah J. Graham, Sheridanville, Pa., writes: "Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—I had suffered for several years with female troubles and doctored until I was discouraged. I felt wretched and tired of living. I had disease of kidneys; bladder trouble, dropsy and bloating, had womb trouble and a large tumor had formed; in fact all my organs were out of fix.

"Seeing a woman's letter praising your remedies, I wrote to her and she begged of me to try it, telling me all that it had done for her. I bought six bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and now cannot express my gratitude to you. The tumor began to come away in pieces and I got better all the time. I believe now that I am entirely cured.

"My doctors could not believe it at first, as they all had told me that my case was a hopeless one, and no human power could do me any good. They were astounded. If I can say anything that can help other women, I shall be glad to."

It is not safe to wait until the last moment. Head off trouble by prompt attention to it. Don't be satisfied without Mrs. Pinkham's advice.

The Table Rock Argus.

P. H. TAYLOR, Publisher.

Slippery Si is advising fusionists to stay away from republican meetings for fear of being won over to the republican cause.

H O Armour of Chicago paid $1-000 rent for a house on the line of the Dewey parade in New York, his leasehold covering only two days.

W H Jennings, of Tecumseh, was in town Saturday. He is on the stump for the fusionists and will make twenty speeches in the state, hoping to arouse enthusiasm for Slippery Si and the fusion ticket.

Judge Frank Martin of Falls City, is a dignified, cultured gentleman, a lawyer of great ability, an orator who reaches the intellect of his hearers by his logic, and it is no wonder that he has a wide circle of friends all over the state.

Business failures in the United States, according to Bradstreet's, continue remarkably small. For the week ending September 7, they were only 123, against 131 last year and 308 in the corresponding week of 1896, when Mr Bryan was telling the people from rear platforms of the dire calamity in store for the country in case of the rejection of his free-silver proposition.—Wymorean.

The Argus has no desire or intention to belittle a single candidate on the fusion county ticket, but say the best you can of them; give them credit for honesty and ability, and every word you say of them in this respect may be said of their republican competitors, and then the latter represent your ideas of what constitutes the best form of government. Vote the republican ticket and you'll make no mistake.

Three-fourths of the men for the new regiments are raised and the average number of enlistments increases rather than diminishes. The regiments now being recruited, of course, will not be in Luzon in time to take part in operations at the beginning of the campaign in November, but they will undoubtedly all be on hand by January or February. If Aguinaldo is still at large in the island and any fighting going on anywhere, they will take part in it.

OUR COUNTY CANDIDATES.

The republican candidates for county offices are men in every way worthy of the support of the citizens of the county. Capt. A D Strunk has served the people faithfully as treasurer during the past two years and is an honest, painstaking, efficient official. Wm Johnston is now filling his first term as county clerk, and after the first of January will begin on his second term, and he will be just as careful and thorough during the second term as he is in the first. Cloud Fuller has made an efficient deputy sheriff during the past four years and he will bring to the office experience and integrity when he takes charge of the sheriff's office; F A Barton, who was nominated for county judge when he wasn't a candidate for the place, is a good lawyer, an honest, upright citizen, and popular with all who know him. J R Utterback has been nominated for a second term as Superintendent of schools; he has made a splendid officer; courteous to everybody, he has devoted his energy and ability to developing our public school system. Major J B Brooks needs no introduction to the people of Pawnee county, whom he has served as district clerk for three terms, the duties of the office having been looked after in a satisfactory manner. Charley Schapple, our candidate for coroner, is one of the most popular men in the county, and the way he will "sit on" Fred Hassler will make the latter gentleman forget he is a candidate. V M Babbitt, is an old resident of the county, and will make an excellent surveyor.

Our precinct ticket will also commend itself to the voters. For assessor, Henry Shaw has been named; he is a young man; a successful school teacher, and will faithfully perform the duties of the office in an efficient manner. M H Marble and E C Phillips, candidates for Justice, have been tried in this position, and each made good and faithful officers. W G Ward and F W Baitey are our candidates for Constables and will be elected and make good officials.

Story of a Slave.

To be bound hand and foot for years by the chains of disease is the worst form of slavery. George D Williams, of Manchester, Mich. tells how such a slave was made free. He says: "My wife has been so helpless for five years that she could not turn over in bed alone. After using two bottles of Electric Bitters, she is wonderfully improved and able to do her own housework." This supreme remedy for female diseases quickly cures nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, headache, backache, fainting and dizzy spells. This miracle working medicine is a godsend to weak, sickly, run down people. Every bottle guaranteed. Only 50 cents. Sold by S G Wright, Druggist.

From a Soldier Boy.

San Francisco, Sept. 25, 1899
My Dearest Mother:—We left Leavenworth Saturday morning and went to Kansas City where we had a big parade. A handsome flag was presented to us by the Kansas City Star. It was a hard parade. The parade took nearly all the forenoon. After we were back on our trains Roy Martin came in for a few minutes and we were glad to see a face from home.

It was quite an enjoyable trip across the continent, though much of the country is poor and I would not take it if it were offered me as a gift. I rode on the engine a good deal which you know I enjoyed and had a fine chance to see the scenery. The boys all had nice sleeping cars all the way. The band played at many of the largest towns and received treats in the way of cigarettes in return.

The country much of the way is very desolate nothing but sand and mountains. Some of the mountain scenery was just grand. At the Loup you could nearly shake hands with the engineer on the back platform. We were once on an altitude of 3301 feet and went down to sea level in a little less than an hour, but it was rather shaky riding. We got here Wednesday night about 11 o'clock and slept in the Oakland yards. In the morning about 5 o'clock we crossed the bay to 'Frisco where we had to wait till 10 o'clock for one of the sections that had been delayed.

We finally got started for the Presidio and we were cheered to the Echo and had to stop to let the crowd get out of the way. This is a poor place for a company to stay any length of time.

About 4 o'clock every day a cold ocean breeze springs up and we have to build fires to keep warm. We have small stoves in our tents and we manage to keep fire enough to be warm all the same as in a house. Arthur has been sick for a few days but is all right now.

I bought me a Kodak at Leavenworth, thinking you would get pleasure out of the views I could take and other of my friends also. When you get this I shall probably be on the transport as we sail tomorrow (Thursday). We expect to be paid after we get on the transport.

I have not been sick or even felt badly since I have joined the army but I suppose my time to be sick will come with the rest when we get on the transport and I really dread it very much, for from all I hear said about it, sea sickness is not very plessant.

We are to go on three different transports all of them small ones.

The Sherman left yesterday with the 30th and we go next. Our band went down to meet the 1st Montana the other day who were just returning from a fourteen months stay in the islands. They all looked healthy though somewhat bronzed. They said it was not half as bad as the islands as it is pictured.

Did you get my appointment papers? Take care of them. I hope to have something better sometime. I shall try to do my best every place I am in. Remember me to all my friends; I think often of you all and will write whenever I can. It is time for band rehearsal and I must close.

Don't worry about me little mother. With much love,

WALTER S. WHEATON.

WOMAN'S COLUMN.

The reception given by the citizens of David City to our returning soldiers the week of the 19th was the chief cause of the postponement of our convention and caused us the loss of the promised entertainment by the little folks. "The Prohibition Shoe" so Mrs Lake's address was given on Tuesday night to a good sized audience, notwithstanding "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was a counter attraction. Father Roach the crisis had sent up word to his people that having heard her Sunday night at Fairbury, he wanted everyone of them to turn out and hear her and that he was going to organize a Total Abstinence Union among them soon as he returned. Mrs Lake was on the train with us, from Seward up and we had put her down as a Methodist minister's wife; until almost at David City we learned that it was Mrs Lake. A little above medium height, fair and well proportioned yet nothing striking in her appearance, a very ordinary woman you would say but at this convention some of us were very forcibly reminded anew that God's most useful and chosen vessels are not always ornamental but that his love enshrined in their hearts enables them to reach and satisfy the need of suffering humanity. The Twofold Obligations of Humanity, was the theme of Tuesday evening's talk as Mrs Lake called it. She said its strange that in this 19th century we have not discovered how to free ourselves from the charge, Man's Inhumanity to man, makes countless thousands mourn. Our first duty is to God who never created anything without a purpose; who made man in his own image that he might show his gratitude and know how to live. She went on to show that the liquor traffic was only evil, bringing out the animal, degrading man to the level of the brute making him a curse to himself, his family and the world. Our moderate drinkers form the school from which a hundred thousand souls go down to perdition every year. Boys follow their example saying if these can drink with safety why not I? She plead with men to safe guard their own lives, and sacrifice the glass of beer if need be for their brothers sake, saying, I've no right to use my strength in a way that may mislead my brother who is weak. If the men of America had a faint conception of the command, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and thy neighbor as thyself, there would not be a saloon in your country. Wherever she has spoken the verdict is we can easily raise 50 00 to have her again.

Wednesday's meeting being the rounding out of the first quarter century of organization the Crusade Psalm and hymn under the inspiration of which our women marched in their crusade 25 years ago were among the opening exercises. The president's annual address showed devotion to the work, earnest purpose and was full of practical suggestions, helpful to all the workers.

Wednesday evening the attraction was a medal contest given by seven silver haited ladies from different parts of the state. They made a beautiful picture on the platform all acquitting themselves creditably. One dear old lady who was there to fill the place of one unavoidably absent had never spoken in public before and gave a recitation she learned when ten years old. This was Mrs Emma Wellman, mother of the great Artic explorer and next day she was called on to give the recitation in convention and also gave us a very interesting account of her son's travels. The medal was awarded to Mrs Medora Nickel of Beatrice. Time will permit scarce any mention of the reports of Superintendents and numerous other good things interspersed with business. Mrs Upson, wife of a commercial traveler was introduced and stated that at the late convention of The Travellers Association they decided not to serve wine or any liquor at their banquets in the future. Little Carol Stewart three years old, was introduced and sang a temperance song, so sweetly, in her childish simplicity meanwhile surveying the banners, flags and flowers which decorated the platform, it called forth rounds of applause. It was a happy lot of all around women that met for business and as one said you would have guessed the ages of most of them anywhere from 25 to 50 but in reality most of them were grandmothers. The reports showed an advance along all lines and our treasurer reported all indebtedness paid for the first time in five years.

A New Popular Song.

"Tonight is Face is Missing in the Old Home" is the title of a new song that is finding great favor with the song loving public. The words and melody are fine. Miss Myrta Howe played, Rowing by Moonlight. Mrs Holmes, who has lately returned from Honolulu, told us some interesting things about the Islands, particularly the women.

Mr J B Pepoon with his daughter Mabel made a trip to Pawnee City last Saturday.

Here is something for the progressive whist players and other lovers of the pasteboards to think of. An exchange says: "Did you ever stop to think that an ordinary deck of playing cards is a perfect calendar? There are 52 cards representing the weeks in a year; 365 spots corresponding to the 365 days in a year; 12 faced cards representing the 12 months; 4 suits—clubs, spades, hearts and diamonds—representing the 4 seasons; 13 cards in a suit representing the 13 moons of the year, and the joker makes up for the extra day in the year. Did you ever think of that before?"

About 1 o'clock today a fire alarm was sounded, and the fire boys were soon on hand and in a few moments were at the scene of the fire with the fire apparatus. The fire was found to be in some ties, grasses and brush along the south side of the railroad track, back of Henry Shaw's residence. The wind was blowing fiercely and the fire rapidly spread, but the prompt action soon had it under way. The fire was started by coals from an engine.

Just as we were ready to begin running off the papers this afternoon the fire bell rang and our citizens were again called to put out a fire started by another railroad engine. This time it was west of town and was raging fiercely. For some time it looked as though it could not be controlled and would be sure to get into the buildings along the road and then there would be no telling where it would stop. But men and boys worked with energy, and by back fires, shovels, wet clothes, and every available means of fighting it, its progress was stopped, but not until it had burned its way back to the Stapple's farm. It has been a close call and will need watching all night whether the wind goes down or not.

A BUSY WOMAN.

This was the topic given one of the district presidents of our convention, who, when called on, said: "I have a nicely written paper in my valise, but our president said she wanted me to talk about myself and nobody else. You know the grain dealer has his samples of the various kinds and quality of grain, so Mrs Walker wanted me as a sample of the many women who belong to our W C T U. I am a farmer's wife, we keep 14 cows, raise chickens, turkeys, etc., and my only help is a daughter who has two little boys. She is keeping house for me while I am here. Have one daughter in Spokane, Washington, and one son in Manila who writes me three letters every week and insists he must have one from mother in return, one son sick in Idaho. He was 2 years in Alaska, was injured by a snow slide and carried in a state of unconsciousness to Seattle; for six months he knew nothing of what was going on around him and we had given him up for dead; when he got able he started for home but, nearly exhausted, ran across some acquaintances in Idaho who were shocked to see him in such condition and are caring for him until he is again able to travel, and they write us that he was alive and would come home as soon as he was fit to travel; so now we must write to him every week; then until this convention there were two sisters to write to; now one is dead. (She received this telegram from a niece the first day of the convention: "Mother fell asleep in Jesus today at 3 p m.") I have twenty correspondents, am one of the trustees of the church and have a Sunday school class of from 20 to 25 young people; am treasurer of three different societies and when I left home daughter said, "now mother, you know we have eight different monies to care for and you must tell so I can know each in case anything should happen to you while you are away." As district President W C T U have written 200 letters in district work the past year; as superintendent jail and prison work held services at the jail every Sunday; the railroad boys all call me mother." She related several touching incidents showing that she was called upon by all classes of people for help; how she had restored a lost boy to his mother; a young man came to her begging her to help find his sister whom he believed had been decoyed away to Chicago; she corresponded with the W C T U rescue workers there and the girl was found and restored to her brother; a woman whose husband beat her cruelly when drunk, came for help and she went with the woman into court and helped fix matters up so she would not live in constant terror; twenty times had she gone the rounds of the saloons and obliged them to take down their screens according to law. Space will not permit mention of all the many things she told in that very rapid, interesting talk, but at the last she said: "I was a scorner at the time of the crusade but I can never be thankful enough to the dear sisters who forgave me and took me in and set me to work for God and humanity." This dear woman was 67 years old and said she rarely slept more than four hours out of every twenty-four, so we did not wonder that she felt as if her work was nearly done.

CALL FOR COUNTY SUFFRAGE CONVENTION.

All friends of justice and equal rights in Pawnee county, are urgently invited to meet in mass convention in Table Rock opera house, October 23rd and 24th, 1899. The convention will be held under the joint auspices of the National American Woman Suffrage Association and the Nebraska Equal Suffrage association. Able speakers will be present and an entertaining, instructive program will be provided. Four states—Wyoming, Colorado, Utah and Idaho—have already granted full suffrage to women, while twenty-six additional states have admitted the justice of the claim by extending partial suffrage. The states which had full opportunity to observe the advantages of woman suffrage unite in the testimony that it has proved beneficial in every direction. It has in no way injured men, women or the state. Important business concerning methods of work best suited to hasten the establishment of woman suffrage, in order that the state may gain its consequent good effects, will be considered in the convention. The friends of suffrage are invited to aid in the formation of these plans; the indifferent are invited to attend the sessions that they may be converted; and the opposed are invited to participate in the discussion, presenting their side of the question. Every one is invited. Come one! Come all!

B W Ballou was around town early Monday morning offering $4 a bushel for corn, and swopping silver dollars even for a bushel of oats; when Main Fellers, his partner, took him to task for his rashness, he simply said: "It's the sweetest little girl baby that ever was born, and don't you forget it!" and Main excused him.

Capt R P Jennings attended the G A R reunion at Sutton last week and made an address to the old soldiers which aroused their enthusiasm to a high pitch, and they toasted the Captain to his hearts' content. Last Saturday afternoon the fifth birthday of Inez Linn, daughter of Mr and Mrs Charles Linn, was pleasantly celebrated at her home by a party of her little friends. The election of officers of the Epworth League was held at the residence of Prof Fair on Friday night of last week, with the following result:

President—A C Boyd.
1st Vice President—G M Gates.

4th " " Nellie Cotton.
Secretary, Helen Allinson.
Treasurer, Edgar Wood.

An informal meeting of Cabinet was held after the election, at which it was decided to hold literary meetings monthly and also to have a lecture course superior to any heretofore held. The Sunday afternoon meetings are well attended and much interest is manifested in them.

Among the speakers at the county suffrage convention to be held here the 23rd and 24th, will be Mrs Calkins, of South Bend, Ind., of whom the Little Falls, N Y., Times says: If all of the speakers are as eloquent, bright, and witty as Mrs Emor L Calkins, of South Bend, Ind., who spoke in Temperance Hall last evening in favor of woman suffrage, that cause would speedily come to a successful fruition. She talks entertainingly and is in every way well qualified to ascend the rostum to plead a cause. Another speaker will be Miss Lena Morrow and the Deadwood, S D., Pioneer Times says of her: The campaigns have all been opened in Deadwood, the last and probably the best opening speech being made by Miss Lena Morrow, of Illinois, at the City Hall, last night. She is a good speaker, rapid in enunciation, clear and logical in argument. Her own lady-like deportment on the rostrum was one of the strongest arguments in favor of Woman Suffrage.

The Table Rock boys foot ball team was met at the depot and escorted up town by the band and made to feel that they owned the town. They were a fine gentlemanly lot of fellows who played a good game and they might have won had it not been for the unfortunate accident to two of their men. The foot ball game was played in the street west of the square and it is a wonder that more of the players were not hurt on the hard ground. It was the great attraction of the day however and the crowd enjoyed it hugely. The foot ball team are proudly exhibiting their sore spots to day. The man who hasn't a black eye, a busted ear or a few scratches on his face feels as if he didn't do his whole duty in the game. Measured by the same rule, the best player in the lot was the Table Rock man who had to be carried to the depot on a cot.—Hiawatha, Kansas, Democrat.

Two new cases of yellow fever were announced in Jackson on the 1st, and no deaths. It is probable that owing to the number of exposures and rapid development of cases that the town will be declared in quarantine against the rest of the state during the week and placed in charge of a state health officer.

The Monongahela River Coal and Coke company is a fact, and the many coal concerns which have done business in the Pittsburg district for years have ceased to exist. Beginning on the 1st, the firms will be merged into one great combine and all business will be transacted with the Monongahela Coal and Coke company. The capital stock is $40,000,000.

A letter has been received in Cheyenne from Dr. Fulton of Fremont, Neb., owner of a pack of bloodhounds, which were used in the hunt for the Union Pacific train robbers last spring. Dr. Fulton states that two of his hounds got away during the chase and are now held by persons living in the interior of the state. The doctor is anxious to recover the animals, and will pay a reward for the return of the hounds to Fremont.

The western passenger rate war has been extended to Sioux City. Announcement was made by the Illinois Central on the 1st that it would reduce the rate from Chicago to Sioux City to $10.80. The fares from Chicago and St. Louis to all Missouri river points, Kansas City to Sioux City, inclusive, and from Chicago to St. Paul and Minneapolis, have gone down until they are a little more than half the regular tariff rates and the prospects are that further cuts will be made. Fears are expressed by the railroad officials that trans-Missouri rates also will go to pieces.

That Mysterious Major...

ETHEL A. SOUTHAM

CHAPTER VI.

"It is very awkward, but then it is just exactly what one might have supposed would happen." Lady Howard spoke in a strangely perturbed tone. For the past few minutes she had been occupied in reading the London paper, but the remark, which was accompanied by a faint sigh, was evidently the outcome of a previous conversation. "If one has a particular antipathy for a certain individual, one may be quite sure that, as ill-luck will have it, one will be brought in contact with that very individual at every turn and corner; and it has just been so with Major Brown. During the past four or five days we must have had occasion to speak to him at least a dozen times. What with lending us his umbrella on the day we were caught in that thunder shower, helping in the search for Sambo when you lost him the other morning, and to crown all, rescuing you almost from under the hoofs of that tiresome horse upon the shore yesterday, we seem to have passed our time in saying nothing but 'thank you,' to him. Really everything has happened as awkwardly as it could. Of course accidents are constantly occurring; still I cannot imagine how you managed to get under the hoofs of that horse."

"Well, yes—it was troublesome of me. It would have been almost better if it had killed me outright," was Evelyn's answer from the deep embrasure of the window, where she was sitting before a small writing table busily scribbling off several notes. "But, anyhow, we were under an obligation to him for getting wet through on our account the other night, when in that pouring rain he found us a cab after the theater. After that, we were obliged to be polite to him."

"Yes—polite of course," agreed her ladyship, twisting her rings somewhat thoughtfully round and round upon her fingers; "but you have to be more than ordinarily polite to a man who has saved your life."

"Yes—that is it," said Evelyn lugubriously.

"It is very annoying—the whole affair has been so unfortunate," proceeded Lady Howard with emphasis. "If it were absolutely necessary that you should be rescued by somebody, all well and good; but there is not another person in the hotel whom I would not have chosen to undertake the task in preference to that man."

Evelyn received the information in silence. Leaning her elbows on the edge of the table, she let her chin sink slowly into her two palms and gazed out reflectively through the open window.

"Still there is nothing really against him," she suggested at length, with slight though perceptible diffidence. "He—he is very nice to talk to. The only objection is that nobody knows who he is, and that his name is 'Brown'—plain common 'Brown'—without even an 'e' to add a little elegance to it. And of course one generally considers that an officer is at least a gentleman."

"An officer? Nonsense, child! Because he calls himself 'Major Brown,' do you suppose that is any criterion of his position in society?" Lady Howard spoke quite disdainfully. "He may be an officer, certainly—he has the appearance of a soldier—but it is far more likely, since nobody can discover what regiment he is in—and there is no such name in the retired Army list—that he is merely a major of volunteers in an obscure country town, following a vulgar but honest trade as soap boiler or sugar refiner."

"He may be, of course. Pigs, I believe, may fly," returned Evelyn, nibbling the end of her pen with a perfectly unconvinced expression. "But there is nothing suggestive of either soap or sugar about Major Brown."

"No—I do not say that there is; but I dislike making promiscuous acquaintances. Mr. Falkland was talking about him only this morning, and he seems thoroughly to understand my feelings upon the subject."

"Yet a month ago Mr. Falkland was quite as promiscuous an acquaintance himself. It was only by chance we got to know him; and in his case he had not even done anything for which we were under any obligation to him," was Evelyn's prompt reply.

"My dear child, what are you talking about?" Lady Howard's tones were slightly impatient. "Mr. Falkland's was quite a different case. We made his acquaintance by chance; but I should have been just as reluctant to have anything to say to him as I am about this other man if we had not discovered in him an old friend of both my husband and your father. At the same time I must say I never met anybody before in whom I could place such complete confidence. He is so different from the general run of young men, who can talk of nothing but their shooting, their horses, and their dogs."

"Oh, yes—he is very nice, of course; but"—Miss Luttrell paused for a moment—"he is not exactly a young man!"

"Possibly not." The touch of impatience in her ladyship's tones was superseded by one of distinct annoyance. "Neither," she added, "is this mysterious individual with whom you have struck up such a warm friendship. I should imagine there are only a very few years difference in their ages."

"Now, Aunt Lydia, do not talk nonsense! Major Brown may be as old as Methuselah for all I care! And, as for saying that I have struck up a friendship with him—well, that is really mean of you!" Evelyn pushed back her chair, advanced to the middle of the room, and with her hands clasped behind her, gazed serenely at her aunt. "You surely know that you did more towards making that acquaintance in the ten minutes when you talked to him last evening and overwhelmed him with thanks for rescuing me than I could have done in a whole year! Why, if I had not known to the contrary, I should have thought he was the one person in the hotel for whom you had the greatest respect!"

"Yet, what else could I do, when, but for his timely aid, you might at this very moment be lying lamed for life or even dead?" returned Lady Howard, with a little shudder.

"Oh, no! You did quite right, of course!" said Evelyn thoughtfully. Perhaps nobody realized more fully than herself how much she had to be thankful for. "But do not say it is my fault if he—well, if for the future he does not merely take off his hat and pass on with a distant bow when he chances to meet you!"—laughing lightly.

No; the distant bow was quite a thing of the past, their acquaintance was on a totally different footing now—a state of affairs to which Major Brown himself was thoroughly alive when, half an hour later, he chanced to meet Miss Luttrell in the garden. He welcomed her warmly, persisted in showing her some new plans for a projected golf course, and was still walking by her side when a turn in the path brought them face to face with Gilbert Falkland.

"So there you are, Miss Eve!" he began by way of greeting, utterly ignoring her companion. "I was just wondering where the bird had flown." The words were spoken lightly, in the same familiar half-patronizing strain which Mr. Falkland usually adopted towards the daughter of his old friend. "Five minutes ago, when I was passing along the verandah I noticed that the window of your sitting room was wide open, that the apartment itself was empty, and that a check book was lying on the table."

"A check book?" Evelyn nodded. "Ah, I dare say it was mine."

"So I suspected," observed Falkland calmly. "Are you aware, though, that it is a most dangerous practice leaving your check book about like that?"

"Dangerous!" Evelyn laughed. "Well, yes; I suppose that it would be considered dangerous by some people who go on the principle of locking up everything, from the wine cellar itself down to such trifles as penny stamps and halfpenny post cards."

"Yet check books, I should imagine, scarcely come under that category," remarked Falkland with quiet sarcasm. "But perhaps you have forgotten our conversation of a week ago?" he supplemented, with a significant glance from Evelyn to Major Brown, who was standing silently passing his stick along the edge of the gravel path, an edified listener to the discussion.

At his words the hot color rose quickly to Evelyn's cheeks, mounting to her forehead and spreading over throat and ears. Like lightning her thoughts had gone back to that morning when her first encounter with Major Brown had taken place; and, as she realized to what Mr. Falkland was alluding, a feeling of the utmost annoyance took possession of her.

But worst of all was the knowledge that Major Brown had raised his head and was wonderingly surveying the crimson hue of her cheeks, and probably even divining the cause of her confusion. This last thought was too much for her. Without another word, and giving Gilbert Falkland only one flash of her angry eyes, she suddenly turned away and walked off indignantly towards the house.

"The wretch!" I hate him!" she murmured a moment later, as she stepped through the open window of Lady Howard's sitting room and threw herself into a low chair.

One contemptuous glance she gave at her check book as it lay open on the table by her side, and then, as though annoyed by the very sight of it, she took it up, and, thrusting it into her writing case, locked the key angrily upon it.

CHAPTER VII.

It was two days later—a soaking wet afternoon. Ever since early morning the rain had been descending in a steady persistent downpour, beating upon the scorched grass, dashing to pieces the rows of stately calceolarias and geraniums, and converting every path and flight of steps into as many miniature streams and turbulent cascades of seething waters.

Major Brown, driven almost to despair by the depressing prospects of the day, wandered aimlessly from billiard room to smoking room, from smoking room to library, and at last sat down before one of the writing tables and hastily dashed off one or two unimportant letters. His correspondence completed, he directed and sealed the envelopes, and was leisurely affixing the stamps, when his attention became suddenly arrested by something on the sheet of blotting paper before him.

What was it? With the exception of a number of indescribable hieroglyphics and the impression of a line of more boldly written characters, which had evidently been hastily blotted, the surface of the pink sheet was perfectly blank. Putting up his eye glass, he scanned them for at least a couple of minutes in absolute silence, and then, giving a cautious glance round the room, as though a sudden thought had struck him, he advanced, blotting book in hand, towards a fantastically-framed mirror which stood above the marble mantel. This further scrutiny was, to all appearance, even more successful, for, as Major Brown held up the strangely interesting sheet close to the glass, a smile of satisfaction immediately lit up his face.

Analysis of Instinct.

An English traveler in northern Russia, telling how he made his way through a forest after a fall of snow simply by keeping that side of the tree to which the snow clung always in the same relation to his course, is led to examine how it is that a savage gains the instincts of his race. We often hear of "the instinct of direction," as we may call it, possessed so marvelously by savage races. People profess to explain it in one of two ways. It is either said that the Indian actually does take note of the sun, the wind, the lay of the land, or the course of the streams,—which, as a fact, it is often, in the dense forest, impossible for him to do,—or else it is set down simply as "instinct," and this, although it is nearer the mark, is, in a sense, to beg the question. Instinct, however it may be in the case of animals, is here, no doubt, hereditary experience. The sun, the wind, the streams are influences, but only that. The Indian does not consciously observe them. Just as you, using an experience gained in daylight, can follow without hands in the dark a winding staircase between the baluster and the wall, so with the Indian in his forest. His "observation" is entirely subjective; an unconscious impression, the sum of small influences, to which, by heredity, his senses are alive, as the retina to light pictures. In the same way I had not consciously remarked the lay of the snow on the trees, yet the fact kept me from going astray.

Two Happy Thoughts.

From far-away Ceylon comes a funny little story. A tea planter who had a glass eye was desirous of going away for a day's shooting with a friend, but he knew that as soon as the natives who were at work on the plantation heard that he was going they would not do a stroke of work. How was he to get off? That was the question. After much thought an idea struck him. Going up to the men, he addressed them thus: "Although I myself will be absent, yet I shall leave one of my eyes to see that you do your work." And, much to the surprise and bewilderment of the natives, he took out the glass eye and placed it on the stump of a tree and left. For some time the men worked industriously, but at last one of them, seizing his tin in which he carried his food, approached the tree and gently placed it over the eye. This done, they all lay down and slept sweetly until sunset.—Waverly Magazine.

The Parrot Gave Him Away.

Victor Chevalier, a clever criminal in Paris, was run down in a shrewd way. He was known to be exceedingly fond of a pet parrot, and the police were instructed to look for a loquacious bird of this kind. After a few weeks' search the talkative parrot was discovered in the Montmartre district. The police kept a close watch on the house, and in time the criminal appeared to have an affectionate chat with the bird.

Strong Glasses.

Mr. Stubb—Can Sally see good through her new glasses? Mrs. Stubb—Yes, John, but she says they exaggerate. Mr. Stubb—Exaggerate, Maria? Mrs. Stubb—Yes, outrageously. The other night she declared the moon had a golden rim, and then she found out it was her glasses that had a golden rim.

Grounds for It.

Quinn—I wore one of those new rubber collars to save laundry bills. De Fonte—Was it a success? Quinn—No. I had to throw it away. Every one I met yelled "Rubberneck."

MASSING BOERS WITH ARTILLERY

British Reserves Will Be Summoned to Bring the Regiments Up to War Strength—Authority for the Statement That an Army Corps Is to Be Mobilized at Once—The Outlook in General.

LONDON, Oct. 7.—There has been almost a complete dearth of news from South Africa today. The few dispatches received recording military movements at various points all tend to confirm the belief that President Kruger will restrain any forward movement by the Boers unless they are fired upon or war is actually declared. It is now practically certain that parliament will meet on October 17.

Reserves will be summoned tomorrow in sufficient number to bring up to war strength the regiments warned to hold themselves in readiness for service in South Africa, or about one sixteenth of the total reserves.

The Daily News asserts that an army corps will be mobilized tomorrow.

A dispatch from Mafeking announces that Commandant Cronje of the Boer forces has been promoted to the rank of general and is massing 6,000 Boers, with artillery, near Ramathlabah, north of Mafeking. The dispatch adds that General Cronje has sent a message to the camp of the Imperial troops that he will cross the border at the first shot fired in Natal.

It is stated that Rt. Hon. Harry Escombe, formerly premier of Natal, is going to Pretoria in the interest of peace. H. M. S. Philomel suddenly left Durban today for Delagoa bay.

The Daily Chronicle Rome correspondent says that the British government has applied to Signor Marconi with a view of employing his system of wireless telegraphy in the Transvaal campaign.

London—The Capetown correspondent of the Daily Mail says:

A sensation has been caused here by the statement that the Free State government has seized 800 tons of coal belonging to the Cape colony, which had to traverse the state. J. W. Sauer, commissioner of public works, when questioned in the assembly regarding the matter professed ignorance, but I learn that the report was telegraphed to the cape ministry early in the day. I learn that the Transvaal's threat to put British subjects over the border would necessitate the withdrawal of Conyngham Greene.

Some surprise is fanifested over the report that a large number of British troops are to be landed here instead of Durban. This is to signify that the Transvaal will be invaded from the west.

Johannesburg—Thousands of natives have invaded the town, and the authorities decided to march them under escort out of the country.

Last night two natives entered a clothing store kept by a Jew and stabbed the proprietor in the neck, severing his windpipe. Two Jewish storekeepers have been murdered by natives and the Kaffirs are raiding all the places where they think liquor is stored. The war commission, acting under the government's instruction, will today issue advice to shopkeepers to remove the barricades they have erected on the ground that the government's guarantee of protection ought to be sufficient.

GRANT MAKES AN ADVANCE.

Charges the Insurgents and Drives Them Back.

MANILA, Oct. 7.—Genral Fred Grant, with three companies of the Fourth infantry, two companies of the Fourteenth infantry and a band of scouts, attached to the former regiment, advanced from Imus this morning, driving the insurgents from the entire west bank of the Imus river. Three Americans were wounded. It is estimated that ten of the Filipinos were killed.

Companies C and H, with the scouts, crossed the River at Big Bend and advanced westward in the direction of the Bincayan road, the insurgents firing volleys but retiring. Twenty Filipinos were discovered entrenched at the Bincayan church, about midway between Bacoor and Cavite Viejo. These were routed, six being killed.

Riley's battery of the Fifth artillery made an effective sortie about a mile south of Bacoor and shelled the west bank of the river at close range. That bank is now held by the Americans.

D'Arcos on Dewey.

BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 7.—The Spanish minister, Duke de Arcos, who has just left his house at Manchester, said with regard to the receptions being given Admiral Dewey:

"It does not surprise me in the least. Admiral Dewey is a brave and noble man, and for the extraordinary service he has rendered his country no honor that can be shown him in return is too great. He has aroused the admiration of the whole world by the gallantry of his conduct, and he would be a small man, indeed, who could not recognize his merit and give free expression to his admiration for Dewey's valor."

Bryan in Two States.

COLUMBUS, O., Oct. 7.—Bryan's tour of Ohio will be confined to the democratic counties in the northwestern part of the state. He will leave Kentucky on the evening of October 18, coming directly to Ohio, where a special train will carry him through the counties of Shelby, Vanwert, Mercer, Paulding, Defiance, Henry, Ottawa, Miami, Harding, Seneca, Sandusky, Wyandotte, Marion, Crawford, Auglaize, Hancock and Putnam. He will make six speeches a day, the first being at Greenville at 7 a. m. on October 19, and the last at Sandusky City on the evening of October 21.

Raise Eastern Rates.

CHICAGO, Oct. 7.—Representatives of the continental lines decided today to raise the rates from Chicago to the Atlantic seaboard from 14 to 20 cents per 100 pounds, and from 18 to 22 cents on domestic corn. All other export grains will be placed at 22 cents. The advance to go into effect November 1. At the present time the railroad companies are having a great deal of trouble in moving the eastbound shipments, car famine troubling many of the roads.

LARGER NAVAL ESTIMATE.

For Next Year an Increase of Some Twenty-Four Millions.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7.—Acting Secretary Allen has prepared the full statement of estimates, which will be submitted to congress, for the maintenance of the naval establishment for the next fiscal year. These amount to $73,045,183, which is an increase over the appropriations for the current year of $24,537,187. Included in the increase for the next year are appropriations of $12,268,474 for public works and navy yards and stations. There is also an estimate of $2,021,000 for the new naval academy.

The item for the navy including armor guns and machinery is $22,983,101. The estimate for the bureau of construction and repair is increased over the current appropriation about $3,000,000, for steam engineering $1,000,000 and for pay of the navy about $700,000, while the estimates for ordnance are decreased about $700,000.

The estimate for public works at the New York navy yard is $1,669,000, including $300,000 to begin the work on the new $1,000,000 granite dry dock and $300,000 to repair dock No. 2. The items for the Boston navy yard aggregate $1,498,300, which includes provision for a general enlargement of the construction of the yard. For League Island, Pa., the estimates for new public works aggregate $1,395,092; for Norfolk navy yard, $1349,000; for Mare Island, Cal., $692,500; for Puget Sound station, $216,065, and for Washington, $875,017.

DEWEY ACCEPTS THE HOUSE.

Receives It as a Gift From Over Forty Thousand Americans.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7.—Admiral Dewey has elected to accept a house in Washington, already constructed, instead of having one built for his occupation. In compliance with the invitation of the committee which has in charge the Dewey home work he called at the office of Acting Secretary Allen in the Navy department at 11 o'clock today, to indicate his preferences in the matter of a residence. There were present, besides Mr. Allen, Assistant Secretary Vanderlip, Assistant Postmaster General Heath and General Corbin.

The admiral was officially informed of the purpose of the people of the United States to present him with a home in Washington. He frankly expressed his gratification at the tender, which he immediately accepted. He said, had the proposed home been the gift of a few wealthy men, he should feel indisposed to accept it. But he understood the fund had over 43,000 subscribers, indicating that the home was really to be the gift of the American people, and as such he would accept it with as much pleasure as he had the sword bestowed upon him by congress. He then talked upon the location of the residence.

MORELY ON THE SITUATION.

Accuses Hot Heads and the Blunders of Causing Trouble.

LONDON, Oct. 7.—Addressing a peace meeting at Cannavon this evening, John Morley asked the country to realize the predicament to which it had been brought by unhappy diplomacy and the bedlamite counsels of the war press and the war party.

"If," said Mr. Morley, "President Kruger had accepted the franchise proposal of September 8, with reliance upon the convention of 1884, he would have been planted behind diplomatic entrenchments which by fair and reasonable means could not have been forced. Even after that refusal there was still room for friendly settlement, but just as the Transvaal made a mistake our government capped it by withdrawing the franchise proposals."

Mr. Morley dwelt upon the seasonableness of the recent speech of the Duke of Devonshirt, which proved that Great Britain did not desire to interfere with the Transvaal's independence.

"VOLUNTEERS" ABOLISH DRUM.

Ballington Booth's Organization Takes a Step in Advance.

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—At the opening session of the Grand Field Council of the Volunteers of America, convened at Blue Point, Long Island, and composed of the officers of highest rank from all parts of the country, presided over by General Ballington Booth, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That in view of the conflict with the civil authorities on the part of other organizations, and in view of our strong desire to respect and uphold the municipal laws, we authorize that the use of the drum be abandoned both outdoors and in, in connection with the whole movement, except with a brass band, a parade officially authorized by the sectional officers. It is recommended, however, that in place of the drum a cornet, small organ, concertina, guitar or other stringed instrument be used.

Slaughtering South Dakota Game.

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., Oct. 7.—A number of Luverne (Minn.) sportsmen are engaged in the wanton and wholesale slaughter of ducks at Lake Thompson, northwest of here in Lake county. In addition to violating the new game law by not taking out hunters' licenses, they take out of the state more than the specified number of ducks. On a recent trip they smuggled into Minnesota a whole wagonload, a total of about 350 of the fowl. Their arrest is expected momentarily.

Dewey With the Veterans.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7.—Admiral Dewey received an ovation today at the United States Soldiers' home, about two miles beyond the city limits. He drove out there during the afternoon, and General Ruggles, the governor of the home, introduced him to the veterans. The admiral told the veterans in a brief speech that he had never learned to appreciate the true valor and the noble qualities of the American soldiers till he had seen them fight in the Philippines. He had nothing but the highest esteem, he said, for the American soldiers and would always treasure their friendship.

Cowboys' Contest.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 7.—A vast concourse of people witnessed the cowboy riding contest today for the championship of the world, given under the auspices of the St. Louis Fair association. Their feats electrified the spectators. One thousand dollars was put up in purses, of which $700 went to the winner. Each man rode two horses. Bruce Norton of Texas captured the big prize, Jack Joyce of Buffalo Bill's Wild West show took second money, and Frank Schramm of California third.

In addition to 4,000 freight cars the Baltimore and Ohio South Western railroad has purchased two new postal cars, 60 feet in length, four 65 foot baggage cars, five 60 foot combination baggage and coaches, three 60 foot first class coaches with wide vestibules and modern in every respect, and two combination parlor, dining and observation cars each 67 feet in length.

(From advance sheets of "The Philosophy of Trusts," by Prof. Ernest Mas.)

Grandmother Independence had two beautiful daughters, both American to the core. The elder's name was Agriculture. She was a handsome girl of pure unmixed stock, calm, very laborious and of bucolic inclinations. The younger daughter had a little foreign blood in her veins. Her name was Industry; a very pretty girl, indeed, full of life, not averse to flirtation, and of extremely vivacious temperament. Seldom indeed have two sisters presented a more striking contrast.

To complete her education, the younger daughter, the more promising, went abroad. She visited Lancashire and spent some time in the old ancestral manor. While there she made a lot of desirable and undesirable acquaintances, which were subsequently to exert a most disastrous influence on her happiness. This phase of her history would fill a good-sized volume.

The wayward girl came back home in cosmopolitan attire, affecting a London accent, a free thinker in matters of economy. As she exhibited all the outward signs of unrestrained prodigality, old Sister Agriculture could never get along with her. The original chasm had developed into an abyss.

It was not long before Mother Independence's keen eye could detect the dangerous propensities of her prodigal daughter; so she deemed it wise to apply a strong corrective at once, in the shape of a healthy, vigorous husband. Young American Industry needed it very badly.

Her mother had beforehand selected a virile companion of athletic frame, and equally well built morally. His name was The Tariff. He was not of noble extraction, had not been educated for diplomacy; but in place of a university diploma or a heraldic coat of arms could on almost every occasion show a lot of hard American common sense, character and individuality. He had been raised at the school of strictest economy, and was sure to be a model of domestic virtues. A marriage took place on a good day early in November, and the mother at last felt relieved of all anxious cares and responsibilities.

The young wife was at first very fond of her husband, whose kind attentions anticipated her smallest wants and most capricious desires. She had more pin money than any wife of a successful business man ever dreamed of. This was the beginning of the trouble, as Industry was too versatile to stand, like Sister Agriculture, uninterrupted prosperity and domestic felicity.

A most happy event of providential timeliness prevented, or, better said, postponed a family cataclysm. Two lusty sons, twins, were the legitimate fruit of this union.

Father and mother decided to call the first one Labor and the second one Enterprise. As they had in their veins the virile blood of the father and the healthy constitution of the mother, both boys were very strong, full of health and appetite, but—and very likely owing to the widely different characteristics of the father and mother—they were far from being physically and morally alike. Baby Labor was fond of the milk bottle, but, for some reason or other, Baby Enterprise ever managed to have it most of the time in his little mouth.

"What a big glutton!" used to say the mother. "Each baby should have his turn. This is not fair." "Never mind," rejoined the father; "I shall make one boy a lawyer and the other a mechanic. With such blood in their veins as that of Father Tariff and Mother Industry, both will succeed in their respective callings." And this was to happen some day; but we must not anticipate.

Four years after marriage the temperament of Industry, for some time under restraint, asserted itself more violently than ever before. All was not harmony under the conjugal roof. To make matters still worse, the two children, Labor and Enterprise, had to be separated, as they were fighting all the time over the milk bottle. Baby Labor, like Aunty Agriculture, was of a happy and conciliatory disposition, never seeking quarrels without motives, but Baby Enterprise had more of his mother's blood, and no amount of milk could stop him from making trouble. The separation of the two boys was easily accomplished by giving each baby a nurse, and letting them see each other from time to time when the "spirit of Enterprise" was in the right mood.

But what could not be so easily accomplished was harmony between husband and wife. The union of Miss Industry with Mr. Tariff, having been prompted chiefly by considerations of interest, did not prove altogether a love match. The extravagant wife had at her command untold thousands; she wanted untold millions. This her kind husband could not give. A cataclysm was in the air.

One day, coming home after business hours, earlier than usual, Mr. Tariff found his beautiful wife in the arms of a false friend, a Trust Magnate. He shot the destroyer of his home and robber of his affections. The drama ended in a divorce, and the court gave Father Tariff the custody of Labor and Enterprise, his two legitimate boys.

The divorced wife, having become again Miss Industry, lost no time in trying to secure another husband more to her fancy, but she found only temporary acquaintances, who never would consent to let her bear their names nor share their rank and social position. Illegitimate children were the result of Miss Industry's culpable relations. They bear the genus name of Trusts, but have no relations whatever to Mr. Tariff, and are universally ostracized.

And what became of Mr. Tariff, the divorced husband?

Why, there is still another chapter to this sad story.

Miss Industry, after four years of abandon and miserable life, bitterly regretted her faults. She repented, and tearfully asked forgiveness, pledging herself to become a faithful, devoted wife. Mr. Tariff, being of kind and generous nature, forgave and welcomed Industry under the conjugal roof. The reunion of the mother with her two legitimate sons, Labor and Enterprise, was one of those events which can be better imagined than described. Father Tariff went so far as to adopt the "little Trusts" children and to look after them, but never consented to legitimize them nor allowed them to bear his name.

When they became of age they were placed in a good school for infant industries, and received there a splendid education at Father Tariff's expense.

Father Tariff's early prediction as to the future of his two legitimate sons, Labor and Enterprise, was to be fully realized. Today Baby Enterprise is somebody. He is a prosperous lawyer and successful politician, often talked of as a possible candidate in some future campaign. As to Baby Labor, he is now a mechanical engineer and inventor of the Edison type, who sets the world to thinking all the time as to what is to come next from him in the way of inventions.

Moral! There is a moral to this story, too, and it is this:

Trusts are the offspring of American industry, but are not and never were the legitimate sons of the tariff.

ERNEST MAS.

Stimulate Competition.

The news comes from Anderson, Ind., that the Hazen Wire Nail Company has reorganized and that the factory will be refitted with new machines and will resume operations as an independent concern, giving employment to more than 200 operatives. The plant has been shut down for four years. This factory seems to have been left out rather long from the swift march of prosperity in which the whole country has joined since the enactment of the Dingley law. Its turn was sure to come in time, though, as it has come now.

There is one little point about this bit of news which is worthy of special attention, and that is the fact that this concern is to be an "independent concern." Those who are exhausting the resources of rhetoric to denounce the protective tariff as the "mother of trusts" would do well to ponder on this instance of an "independent concern" resuming operations by reason of the prosperous outlook which has resulted from the restoration of the protective tariff system. Protection leads to the establishment of new enterprises, it stimulates industry and, therefore, stimulates competition.

Tariff and Trade.

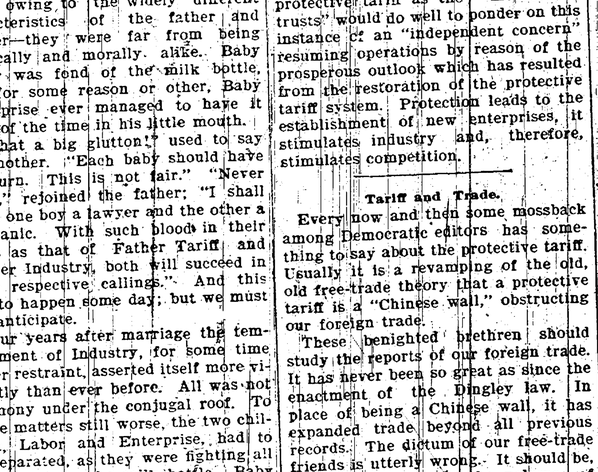
Every now and then some mossback among Democratic editors has something to say about the protective tariff. Usually it is a revamping of the old, old free-trade theory that a protective tariff is a "Chinese wall," obstructing our foreign trade.

These benighted brethren should study the reports of our foreign trade. It has never been so great as since the enactment of the Dingley law. In place of being a Chinese wall, it has expanded trade beyond all previous records. The dictum of our free-trade friends is utterly wrong. It should be, "protection increases the volume of our foreign trade." That is the experience of the past two and a half years. It was our experience under the McKinley law. Under the Democratic Wilson tariff our foreign trade declined.—Toledo Blade.

It Fosters Domestic Competition.

Protection is the mother whose offspring is ample remuneration for manual labor; the trusts are simply bloodsuckers that seek to live upon the body politic and return nothing. The trouble in sugar and oil promoters' camp under the Dingley tariff is that it is fostering domestic competition, home against foreign productions.—Gettysburg (S. D.) Courier.

ILLEGITIMATE OFFSPRING.



"Mr. Tariff, being of kind and generous nature, forgave and welcomed Industry under the conjugal roof. * * * Father Tariff went so far as to adopt the 'little Trusts' and to look after them, but never consented to legitimize them nor allowed them to bear his name."—From Advance Sheets of "The Philosophy of Trusts," by Prof. Ernest Mas.

The Masses in Two Hemispheres.

Archbishop Ireland, who but a short time since returned from a prolonged trip abroad, has said a few most significant words in respect to the contrast between conditions abroad and those in this country. His statement is that:

"The contrast between the masses in this country and the masses in the old world in and out of the church is more remarkable than ever. The American poor are happier and a hundred per cent more intelligent. Their surroundings are better, their chances are better. Where there is one case of misery here there are hundreds abroad, and by abroad I mean England as well as the continent."

The one thing which more than all else is responsible for the advantage which Americans have over the citizens of other countries is the protective tariff. That it is which keeps wages in this country high; that it is which makes employment sure for the laborers of this country; that it is which prevents the foreign manufacturers who employ the pauper laborers of other countries from sending their products to the United States to enter into free and unrestricted competition with the products of the well-paid labor of this country. Archbishop Ireland is a man whose word can be relied upon, and the contrast which he draws between the situation in this country and that abroad is worthy of most careful attention.

Will Not Be Doubtful.

A short time since twenty-five buyers, representing the same number of departments in one of Chicago's department stores, arrived in New York city at the same time. It was stated that not only was this the largest number of department buyers ever sent to the New York market at one time by this concern, but that it was the largest number of buyers ever sent to New York for the purchase of goods at the same time by a single firm during the entire history of American retail merchandising. Apropos of this event, the son of one of the members of the firm represented by these buyers said in conversation with a reporter:

"Every trade condition in Chicago and throughout the West is indicative of a more prosperous fall season than has been experienced for many years. These evidences of prosperity are not confined to any single branch of commercial industry, but seem to cover the entire field. We have enjoyed a period of unprecedented activity this summer in every department of our establishment, and the statements of business asspciates in Chicago indicate that these conditions are well-night universal."

It is safe to say that the West will not be "doubtful" territory in the next campaign if the maintenance of the protective tarfff is put in the balance.

Buying Better Goods.

Merchants all over the country are reporting through the medium of newspaper correspondents that not only are their customers buying more goods but also that they are buying better goods. A St. Paul, Minn., merchant said, for instance: "Women who last year were buying 25-cent stuffs for shirt waists and dresses are now getting dollar materials." It is the buying of higher priced goods which in part swells the volume of trade for 1899 beyond that of 1898. It is the better quality of goods which is represented by these higher prices which in large measure marks the advantage which the people of the country will have in 1899 beyond that which they had in 1898.

Last year the prosperity which came in with protection was of sufficiently great proportion to give to all the people of the country who were willing to work all the necessities of life, and in many cases to settle up the debts contracted in tariff reform times and to make them square with the world. The additional year of prosperity, of increasing prosperity, since then, has meant such an increase of money that the luxuries of life, in quality as well as in quantity and variety, have been brought within reach.

Tin Plate Prices.

Every one knows that tin plate has advanced considerably in price within the present year. The Democratic theorists claim that the advance in the United States is due incidentally to the tin plate trust and primarily to the tariff, it being their theory that a protective tariff is a promoter of trusts.

Now let us look at the prices which the Welsh tin plate manufacturers receive. They now obtain $3.45 a box more than they did in January last. This is a greater advance than has been made in the United States.

We respectfully ask our Democratic friends to explain this. If the protective tariff and the trust caused the advance in the prices of tin plate in the United States, what caused a greater advance in price in Wales, where there is no tariff at all? We pause for reply.—Toledo Blade.

Which Do You Want?

The McKinley ("robber") tariff enacted by Republicans, brought prosperity to our country. The Wilson tariff, enacted by the Democrats, "for revenue only," brought us hard times, disaster in business and a general depression throughout the country. The Dingley Republican protective tariff again brought prosperity to our homes. So Republicanism and protection mean prosperity, happiness and contentment, while Democratic laws for revenue only mean want, desolation and hard times.

Which do you want?

Take your choice.—Macon (Mo.) Citizen.

Reason to Celebrate.

Labor day this year should have had an extra big celebration. It stands for more than it has stood for for a number of years past; for more, at least, than it has stood for since the free traders got in their knock-down blow at American industries in 1892. It is the year's holiday which is especially dedicated to the wage earners, and the wage earners of the country have plenty of reason to celebrate this year. They have had more work for which to celebrate and more money with which to pay for their celebration.

The rays of happiness, like those of light, are colorless when unbroken.—Longfellow.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS FREE.

One of the Grandest Offers Ever Made.

The first five persons procuring the Endless Chain Starch Book from their grocer will each obtain one large 10c package of "Red Cross" starch, one large 10c package of "Hubinger's Best" starch, two Shakespeare pictures printed in twelve beautiful colors, as natural as life, or one Twentieth Century Girl calendar, the finest of its kind ever printed, all absolutely free. All others procuring the Endless Chain Starch Book will obtain from their grocer two large 10c packages of starch for 5c, and the beautiful premiums which are being given away. This offer is only made for a short time to further introduce the famous "Red Cross" starch and the celebrated "Hubinger's Best" cold water starch. "Red Cross" laundry starch is something entirely new, and is without doubt the greatest invention of the twentieth century. It has no equal, and surpasses all others. It has won for itself praise from all parts of the United States. It has superseded everything heretofore used, or known to science in the laundry art. It is made from wheat, rice and corn, and is chemically prepared upon scientific principles by Mr. J. C. Hubinger, an expert in the laundry profession, who has had twenty-five years' practical experience in fancy laundering, and who is the first successful and original inventor of all fine grades of starch in the United States. If you would have the best, ask for "Red Cross" and "Hubinger's Best," which are the finest starches on the market today.

The jobbing houses all handle it, the retail grocer has it on his shelves, you find it in all the homes, while the careful housewife has adorned the walls of the home with the beautiful Shakespeare pictures which are being given away in introducing "Red Cross" and "Hubinger's Best" starch.

Everbody wants to get in on the ground floor. That's why there is always plenty of room at the top.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address

They Would Laugh.

If a man should wear his pantaloons so long that whenever he appeared on the street he would be obliged to reach around behind and grab hold of the basement and hold them up, wouldn't the ladies laugh?—Lowville (N. Y.) Journal.

A well preserved Roman camp has been discovered on the right bank of the Narenta, in Herzegovina. A section 310 feet long by 270 feet wide has been traced. Part of the walls, gates and towers are still standing, and many utensils and weapons have been dug up. It is believed that the camp was erected in the time of Nero.

Traveling on the Burlington Railroad on the way to Denver, a little town called Atlanta, near Hastings, Nebraska, is pointed out as a point of interest because of the corn cribs built there along the tracks. In all there are twenty-four separate cribs, 12 feet wide and 12 feet high, with a total length of 5,964 feet, or a distance of nearly a mile and a quarter. This year's enormous crop (three hundred million bushels for the State of Nebraska) will test their capacity. Everybody seems prosperous in Nebraska. One change in the new election law is that the voter must place an X after the name of each candidate he votes for. For instance, if you want to vote a straight republican ticket you must put an X in the circle opposite each name in the republican column, instead of making an X in the circle at the head of the column. Voters should bear this in mind.

Here is one of the little things General Prosperity is guilty of right here at home: J M Elston held a public auction last Saturday, the time sales of which amounted to about $600; Mr Elston had arranged with the State Bank to sell the notes to it, but when the settlements at the sale were made, only four little notes amounting to $80 appeared, all the other buyers prefering to pay the cash for their purchases, and nobody but the Bank is kicking on the General's work.

Owing to the failure of Dr Ziegler to file an "expense account" as provided by law the republicans found themselves without a candidate for coroner, and the committee met one day last week and placed the name of Dr G J Rubelman upon the ticket. Under the new law it appears that a man must file an itemized statement with the county clerk setting forth what it cost him to procure the nomination, and after an additional statement must be filed with the same official giving an account of campaign expenses. Some of the candidates may find themselves ineligible to the office, even after being elected, if great care is not exercised.—Tecumseh Tribunal.

WOMAN'S COLUMN.

The Union met last Friday with Mrs Lydia Andrew and spent a delightful afternoon. Mrs Andrew and Mrs Conklin sang a beautiful temperance song and Mrs Holmes gave an account of the Flower Mission Work in the hospitals, jails and prisons of Honolulu and told how a committee of ladies always went to meet the transports as they came into the harbor and the soldiers and sailors would hang over the ship's rail greeting them with cheers and shouts of joy, their faces all aglow at sight of a bit of green and flowers after the weeks' of life on the Ocean. No one could doubt after hearing her description of the jail work that the Flower Mission department alone was carrying on a grand work. The first time they visited the jail in company with Mrs Newman, her talk to the boys brought tears in the eyes of many and the flowers were eagerly grasped as a reminder of home and mother. At their second visit the Warden said I shall be glad to help you ladies in your work and as you are helping me hereafter the freedom of the yard and permission to meet you ladies on Sunday will depend on their good behavior. This time every man as he took his boquet, repeated the scripture text given him with the flowers the week before. We who have all the privileges of christian civilization do not half appreciate them or realize that God seems much nearer and more real to the Castaway in the far off isles of the sea than he does to the man who sits in his pew planning how he may make more money, or the one lying at ease reading his Sunday newspaper while the gospel feast is spread in vain.

Mrs Linn gave reports of Convention work until the lateness of the hour compelled adjournment. As every one is so busy contest at Mission Creek and Suffrage Convention coming on it was decided to hold our next meeting in three weeks, Oct. 27th.

Fashions for winter are handsomely displayed in the November number of The Designer. They are shown in colored and in black-and-white illustrations accompanied by descriptive matter which tells just what materials and decorations to employ for their development. Cold weather millinery is likewise attractively pictured and described. Women who have passed their youth but who still rightly wish to dress becomingly, will be interested in Appropriate Costumes for Elderly Ladies. The deft needlewoman will take delight in reproducing the many pretty fancy-work designs in embroidery, lace, knitting, tatting and crochet shown in this number, while the amateur photographer and kindergarter will appreciate bright articles on the subjects in which they are respectively interested. Hand Beautifying, is the theme of the November installment of Health and Beauty, and Pickles, Catsups and Sauces are treated in the culinary department. Do not suppose the foregoing comprises the entire contents of the magazine—far from it. In addition there are Floriculture, Book Notes, the continuation of Martha McCulloch-Williams' story, The Silver Spur, a short story, Camille's Confession, a comedietta, The Best-Laid Plans, Cabinets Serviceable and Ornamental, Points on Dressmaking, Literature for Little Ones, and All Around the House. Surely a liberal supply of good things for 10 cents.

Spain's Greatest Need.

While driving into town from the east last Saturday night J W Hutt became involved in a quarrel with a mover outfit, the point of difference being as to which should yield the right of way. Some pretty strong language passed back and forth and finally one of the movers picked up a club and struck Mr Hutt a terrible blow on the head, cutting a long gash from which the blood flowed profusely. Fortunately no bones were broken. Mr Hutt came to town and swore out a warrant for the arrest of his assailant, who was later taken into custody by the sheriff but was released on giving security for his appearance. The following day the parties to the fray made some sort of a compromise and the case against the mover was dismissed. He accordingly girded up his loins and went on his way rejoicing and probably looking for more trouble.—Tecumseh Chieftain.

HON. MANOAH B. REESE.

THE REPUBLICAN LEADERS.

Hon. M. B. Reese, Candidate For Justice of the Supreme Court.

Judge M. B. Reese has been a resident of Nebraska 23 years. He is a native of Illinois, having been born in Macoupin county in 1839. He received a common school education and being desirous of further culture attended a seminary for two years, paying his own expenses. During that period he developed the spirit of independence and self-reliance characteristic of all men who attain eminence. His father was a farmer and the son followed the same occupation until he was 24 years old. Meanwhile Mr. Reese had married and settled down, but an accident occurred which disabled his arm for life.

Mr. Reese then commenced the study of law. Shortly after the breaking out of the war he enlisted, but when he came to undergo the physical examination necessary, much to his chagrin, he was rejected because of the injury referred to. He then again applied himself to the study of law and was admitted to practice in March, 1865. He practiced in Osceola, Ia., until 1871, when he came to Nebraska. He has lived in Plattsmouth and Wahoo and now in Lincoln.

Judge Reese was elected a member of the state constitutional convention in 1875 and assisted in framing our present constitution. In the following year he was chosen for state senator by the Republicans of his district, but he declined the nomination. In the fall of 1876 he was elected district attorney of the then Fourth judicial district and was re-elected in 1878 and again in 1880, practically without opposition.

In November, 1882, Mr. Reese resigned his position, lacking two months of holding it six years. In the fall of 1883 he was nominated for the position of supreme judge and was elected, remaining on the bench for six years.

About six years ago Judge Reese was appointed dean of the law department of the State University of Nebraska, which position he still holds.

For University Regents.

Dr. W. B. Ely was born in Boston in 1843. His parents died while he was quite young. He began the study of music at an early age and taught music in the female seminary at Canandaigua, N. Y., several years also in the female seminary at Rome, Ga. He commenced studying medicine at Rome, Ga., and entered the college of medicine at the University of Michigan in 1876, graduated in 1878, practiced medicine in New York until 1889, when he removed to Ainsworth, Neb., where he has resided ever since. Dr. Ely was a candidate for state senator in the Fourteenth district in 1896, on the Republican ticket, and cut a majority of 1,000 down to 350. He is considered one of the brightest and best physicians in northwest Nebraska, having a very large practice in Brown and surrounding counties. He is a good citizen and highly esteemed by all.

Edmund G. McGilton, nominee for regent of the State university, was born in Wisconsin 40 years ago. When he was 13 years old his father moved on a farm and from then on his boyhood and youth was that of a farmer's son. He attended the State University of Wisconsin, graduating therefrom in 1883, and afterward the law department of the same institution, from which he graduated in 1885. In 1888 he came to Omaha and engaged in the practice of law and has practiced his profession there ever since, and has attained a position in the estimation of his fellow jurists which can be placed second to that of but few lawyers in the state.

We saw an old lady going to church Sunday. She was bowed down with care and toil of this life and age had turned her hair to a silvery white. The one great consolation she has in this world is that there is a brighter, better world to come. It is the one grand hope of her life; a hope that soothes her to rest at night. Waiting, waiting—for what? For that reward promised the virtuous, the good, the pure in heart. Who would rob her of that peace of mind, that bright hope, that wonderful joy which her faith teaches is in store for her beyond the grave?—Keokuk News.

A NEGLECT OF DUTY.

How Governor Holcomb "Settled" With State Treasurer Bartley.

The failure of Governor Holcomb to make a proper settlement with State Treasurer Bartley in 1895, and the acceptance of a worthless bond, whereby the state lost half a million dollars, is a matter of record that will not soon be forgotten by the people of Nebraska. That Holcomb was to blame for this loss the record clearly shows, his own halting and confused evidence given in the bond trial being the best proof.

The public mind needs only to be refreshed. Holcomb was elected governor in the fall of 1894. Bartley had served two years as treasurer and there was a suspicion that his accounts were in bad shape. The governor-elect was warned by Rosewater and others that the treasurer was a defaulter and that a very careful accounting should be had, to protect the state.

In spite of this warning, and in spite of the law, the new governor plainly entered into a deal with Bartley. After a long private consultation he accepted a new bond upon which most of the old and already accountable bondsmen qualified for fabulous sums. No attempt was made to examine into the real worth of the bond.

One of the bondsmen was the president of a bank that held over $200,000 of state money. The bank was not a depository at the deposit was unlawful. Governor Holcomb knew this and yet he accepted this bank president as a bondsman, qualifying in the sum of $200,000 "over and above all debts and liabilities." The public knew then and knows now that the deposit was unlawful, and that the bondsman was not worth anything like the sum mentioned.

The acceptance of the straw bond was bad enough, but the worst part of the deal was in the pretended settlement with the treasurer. The transcript of Holcomb's evidence in the Omaha trial is the best proof, and it is accessible to all.

According to this testimony, Holcomb first held a private consultation with Bartley, and then they entered the treasurer's office, where they remained about two hours. The governor says he looked over a ledger or some such book in which there were some accounts. He is not sure what book or what accounts.

Then Bartley produced a cigar box containing some slips of paper, representing what should have been about $460,000 in cash. He also produced some $50,000 in cash. The law required it all to be in cash, but, according to Holcomb's testimony, "the law was a farce and a sham." This testimony is a matter of record.

The governor did not examine the slips of paper closely. He admitted that he did not know sure whether they were genuine. He knew that the one bank which was not a legal depository was represented in the cigar box by a slip calling for over $200,000.

The story of the "settlement" is best told in the exact words of the record. The case was heard at Omaha in February, 1898. Governor Holcomb was on the stand, and the following extract is from pages 617 to 618 of the record, bill of exceptions:

Question. I ask what he was chargeable with?

Answer. $956,000 or $958,000, if I remember rightly; that included the money in suspended banks.

Q. I understand. There was about $47,000 only in cash?

A. In the treasury vaults; either that or $57,000.

Q. There was about $241,000 that was tied up in suspended banks, was there not?

A. Yes sir; I think so.

Q. That would leave about $713,000 in loose money?

A. In that neighborhood; I was thinking it was about fifteen thousand; I may not have the exact figures.

Q. I will ask you again what it was he brought these papers that you call certificates of deposit out in?

A. Well, as I remember, it was a little box.

Q. Cigar box?

A. Something of that shape.

Q. Of the balance of this, outside of the $47,000 he produced none of it in cash—or if it was $57,000, you may say it may be?

A. No, sir; no different from what I said.

Here followed a few questions as to what Holcomb had testified to on a former occasion, and the examination continued:

Q. He opened this box that was like a cigar box; did he show you these papers he had?

A. I do not remember that it had any cover.

Q. And then took out papers that he called checks and certificates of deposit, did he?

A. He took out mostly certificates of deposit. There may have been a few checks.

Q. Have you a list of these?

A. No sir.

Here followed some questions covering the same ground, and the examination concluded as follows:

Q. And then he brought out a box that looked like a cigar box, from which he took a lot of papers that he called certificates of deposit, amounting from $440,000 to $449,000?

A. I do not know whether he called them certificates of deposit or not; they were certificates of deposit mostly. There may have been some bank checks.

Q. He showed you the papers?

A. He showed me the certificates of deposit.

Q. You looked them over and took no list of them?

A. No sir, I took no list of them.

Q. Took no memorandum of them?

A. No, I took no memorandum of them.

Q. And you turned them back to him and he put them back in the cigar box and went off with them. Is that right?

A. He put them in the vault.

Q. Did you see him put them in the vault?

A. I will not say positively that I did

Q. And that was the end of the examination?

A. Yes, that was the end of it.

The man who gave this weak and halting testimony—who accepted a worthless bond—who made an illegal settlement with a defaulting official—who declared the law of the state to be "a farce and a sham," and by his failure to enforce it caused the state to lose half a million dollars, is now a candidate for a place on the supreme bench.

The people will not be deceived the second time. The record is open for their investigation. They will decide to place a jurist on the bench. The professional politician with the unsavory record will not be given further opportunity.

For the past three or four months Mr Parker has been the pastor, having came to us from the church in Utica. Rev Price, pastor of the Presbyterian church of Humboldt, acted as Moderator and preached the installation sermon; Rev Parker of Blue Springs, delivered the charge to the pastor, and Rev Junkin, of Adams delivered the charge to the congregation. The services were impressive, interesting and instructive to the large audience present. A number of her old friends were present to greet her and the evening was spent in progressive crokinole in which Mrs Gray won the first prize and Mrs Lulu Conklin the booby prize. TABLE ROCK. — NEBRASKA

Good advice is easy to get and easy to forget.

Some stump speakers branch out altogether too much.

Too much help has started many a man on the road to ruin.

The gossip delivers many a telling blow, but they are always foul.

No man is a hero to his valet, and no man wants to be a valet to his nerc.

The man who is satisfied with himself is usually disappointed with other people.

An axiom goes without saying. Would that all earthly bores were axioms.

A man isn't necessarily rich when he is accused of having more money than brains.

A man may forget the dollar he borrowed, but he always remembers the one he loaned.

A broken heart must be worse than a broken head, no man being compelled to carry the latter around with him.

These are the days when no man can safely go away from home without carrying a fall overcoat, a straw hat and an umbrella.

The man "who knew Lincoln intimately" will have a whole lot of new ones thought up by the time the Dewey hurrah sobers down.

A year ago the $200,000,000 cloth combine would have attracted considerable comment, but coming at this late date it finds the public too familiar with such institutions to notice it.

Krupp, the gunmaker, has completed a number of excellent paper cannon and now proposes to make armor for war vessels out of the same material. Paper armor will be the final blow to the romance of naval battle and the song of the naval poet. The poet, after a hard struggle, was able to forget the towering mast and swelling sail and to write "songs of the ships of steel," but how can he handle rhyme and rhythm to glorify the ships of paper?

Now that the European demand for American apples is heavy, it being estimated that it will be this season 1,217,767 barrels in excess of the demand last year, apple-growers in this country are looking forward to much higher prices, especially as this year's home crop is from one-half to three-quarters less than what is looked upon as a full crop. In New York state farmers are now getting from 75 cents to $1.25 a barrel for apples under the trees. The standard apple for the European market is the Baldwin. Of the 12,437 barrels of this year's crop shipped since Aug. 1 the lowest price netted to the American exporter is $3 per barrel, and the price has kept nearer $4.

"Let a man tell you his story every morning and evening," said a famous Englishman, in characterizing the newspaper, "and at the end of a twelvemonth he will have become your master." What if the man is brazen-faced, a chronic liar, one who rejoices in iniquity, and is utterly reckless in principle, who is thus welcomed daily to the home circle? Ought not a newspaper that is indifferent to truth, is self-seeking, and has no regard for individual rights or for public morals, to be treated as you would deal with a scoundrel who seeks admission to your room and company? Let an unprincipled journal tell you its daily story, and by an inexorable moral law you will in due time have an "evil spirit" for your master.

Under the terms of his father's will, which have just been made public, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., has been cut off with the portion of a younger son as punishment for marrying Miss Grace Wilson. According to information given by a person who should know the facts, this is the ultimate division of the $100,000,000 scheduled in the vest-pocket memorandum by which the late Cornelius Vanderbilt always knew how much he owned: To Cornelius Vanderbilt, Gertrude Vanderbilt Whitney, Reginald Vanderbilt and Gladys Vanderbilt, his children, $10,000,000 each. There are large special bequests to relatives, to Yale, Columbia and Vanderbilt Universities, to the Metropolitan Museum of Art and to various charities. The remainder of the estate, subject to a life interest held by his widow, is left to Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, his second surviving son. William K. Vanderbilt and the widow of Cornelius are trustees.

Porto Rico has an unfinished railway whose securities are held chiefly by French and British citizens. A scheme is on foot to complete the line by means of American capital. Is there not sufficient patriotism left over from war times to insure the buying out of these foreign shareholders and the sole American ownership of what will ultimately prove a valuable property? Porto Rico deserves encouragement. But what of the foreign bondholders of our own railroads? All our railroad bonds are owned in England and Holland.

Aguinaldo has delivered up sundry prisoners, who report that the Filipino leader fed them well, treated them kindly, and only waited the most suitable opportunity to return them to their friends. This conduct on the part of the Tagal chieftain is highly creditable and will count strongly in his favor when the final wind-up comes.

After all, there are but two really bad things about cigarette smoking. One is the cigarette and the other is the fellow who smokes it.

That Mysterious Major...

...BY...

ETHEL A. SOUTHAM

"So far, so good!" he muttered. He turned round to take another cautious survey of the room, and then hurriedly tore off the sheet of blotting paper. "With my heartfelt apologies to Mr. Gillibrand!" he added, as he carefully secured it between the pages of his pocketbook. "If this is to be of the slightest use to me, however, my greatest difficulty will be in discovering if it is genuine or not. Is it possible that Miss Luttrell herself has been in here writing, or can it be that somebody else has been simply directing an envelope to her? That is the question; and, considering that I am at present hopelessly in the dark even as to the hand Miss Luttrell writes, I hardly see how this blotting paper affair is to benefit me in any way, unless—" Here the Major broke off somewhat abruptly, and, walking to the window, gazed out dubiously through the blurred panes. "Nonsense, though! I will manage it somehow!" he exclaimed after a moment's reflection. "By the aid of a little diplomacy and a plan which I believe I can carry out, the rest should be easy, and, without raising the suspicions of either Miss Luttrell or anybody else, I should gain for myself some knowledge of considerable value. All the same, if I intend to go seriously to work, the sooner I make a beginning the better; and, as in this case the beginning means a walk to the town in the pouring rain, I may as well start at once, without putting off the evil moment any longer. Ah—it is a curious affair"—he gave a significant shrug of his shoulders—"and to think that, of all people in the world, that girl should be the victim!"

Two minutes later the Major, with his hat drawn well over his eyes and the collar of his mackintosh turned up closely round his throat, set out at a swinging pace upon his unpleasant expedition.

ANYHOW, YOU ARE NOT GOING TO REFUSE.

CHAPTER VIII.

Notwithstanding that the rain never ceased during the Major's walk into Saltcliffe and back, and that he returned with his gaiters splashed to his knees and with the water running in a thin but steady stream from the brim of his hat, fortune certainly favored him that afternoon. In other circumstances he might have waited in vain for hours, but, as it happened, he had scarcely returned to the library and taken up his position before the fire more than a couple of minutes, when the door opened and Evelyn Luttrell entered the room.

"Oh, please do not move!" she exclaimed, as the Major pushed back his chair and, glancing round to discover who the intruder might be, immediately started to his feet. "I have only come for a book which my aunt wanted, so do not let me disturb you."

"Oh, do not mention such a thing! Perhaps I can help you to find the book for Lady Howard."

"Well, most likely you can," was the reply, accompanied by a bewitching smile. "It is a thick green— Ah, that is the one! Thank you very much!" she broke off as the Major handed her the rather ponderous looking volume. "Aunt Lydia will have plenty to occupy her for the rest of the day if she reads this through."

"Yes, from its appearance, I should say that one wet day would be hardly enough. She will need two or three more of the same stamp. But I am just wondering," he proceeded, regarding her with a slight air of perplexity, "whether you happen to be in a particularly neighborly frame of mind this afternoon. The fact is— Do you know, Miss Luttrell, I have rather a strange fancy—at least, it is not exactly strange, for dozens of people have such fancies at one period or another of their lives. With some it takes the form of collecting all kinds of stamps, crests, and epigraphs, whilst with me" —he spoke in a somewhat apologetic tone—"the mania is for keeping a record of the birthdays of my friends."

"The birthdays of your friends!" echoed Evelyn.

"It is a peculiar taste no doubt, Miss Luttrell; but still I must acknowledge it; and, if you will condescend to add your name to my list of signatures, I shall esteem it the highest of compliments."

"But," commented Evelyn, "how very odd! Do you know, I always thought before that the host of birthday books which are constantly being published were used principally by girls at school and certain individuals whose whole existence is one perpetual reminiscence of pressed flowers, faded ribbons, and sentimental odes."

"Oh, yes—I know the persons exactly! Your description is most graphic!"—and the Major laughed heartily. "But, as I never wrote an ode in my life, pressed even a leaf, or have such a thing as a ribbon—faded or otherwise—in my possession, there must, at all events, be one exception to the rule."

"Well, certainly." Still I was just thinking" — contemplating Major Brown with an expression of decided gravity—"that you are the very last person in the world I should have believed would trouble with anything so trifling as a birthday book."

Again he laughed—an apparently careless laugh—as he made a futile attempt to balance a paper knife on the edge of the table, but this time his laugh rather lacked its hitherto cheerful ring.

"Anyhow, Miss Luttrell, you are not going to refuse? Tell me—what are the day and month of your birth?"

"The day and month?" repeated Evelyn, raising her eyebrows. "Oh, the 15th of August! I suppose you do not insist upon the year as well!"

"No—I do not insist; but anybody who is particularly anxious to give it is quite at liberty to do so. There, Miss Luttrell—the 15th of August!" He had pulled out of his pocket a small rather fantastically bound book, and, opening it at a certain page, he now laid it down before her. "There is a verse of poetry for you, and a line of Shakespeare; but whether either the poetry or the Shakespearean line is in the least appropriate I do not know."

"But how strange—nobody else has written on this page at all! Am I to have it quite to myself?"

"Yes—it seems as if you are to reign supreme. It is all the better, though, for, with five lines at your disposal" —and the Major glanced at her significantly—"you can add as many particulars as you like. Want of space cannot be made an excuse for omitting the all-important year."

"Well, at any rate, let me have a good pen!" She drew the ink stand towards her, took up a quill, and in clear legible characters wrote "Evelyn C. Luttrell." "There, Major Major Brown—will that satisfy you?" —looking up, to find the Major, who had come close to her side, staring down at her signature most attentively.

Her words seemed to recall him to himself.

"Thank you. I cannot tell you how much obliged I am. You have done me a great service, Miss Luttrell."

"No, indeed—I have done nothing. I am honored that you should care for my signature at all. But have you a great many names down? May I look through the book?"

"Certainly, if you care to do so, only—".

Why did he suddenly hesitate? Evelyn, who had turned over a couple of pages and was contemplating in obvious astonishment the blankness of their condition, instantly dropped her pen and glanced quickly from the leaves before her to the Major, who stood watching her movements, with the color mounting slowly but surely to his very brow.

"This is a new book," she announced in a rather ominous tone. "It is not only the 15th of August which is empty—every page is the same!"

"Yes, of course—did I not explain?" The Major's face was steadily averted from the inquiring gaze of Evelyn's blue eyes. "You see, books of this kind do get filled up in time. When there are only five lines to each date, they are gone directly—the result of which is that a new book has to be immediately supplied."

Evelyn looked slightly incredulous. "What a number of friends you must have!"

The Major gave an expressive shrug of his shoulders.

"Yes; when one comes to count them by the lines in a birthday book, it is really astonishing how many one seems to have. However, Miss Luttrell, as you have been the first to enter your name in this one"—he turned to her with a smile—"for the future I shall reserve it only for my most particular friends, and label it 'Special!'"

"So you do not mix up all your friends indiscriminately—you have different grades of birthday books?" Evelyn clasped her hands behind her head and laughed amusedly at the bare idea. "A book for the people you like, a book for the people you dislike, and another for those you simply tolerate!"

"Yes—that is my method," replied the Major, really accepting the suggestion. "As it happens, though, you see you did not come exactly under one of my three headings; therefore I had to start a new book entirely on your account."

"It was very kind of you, I am sure; but how will you manage in the future? If you now have four instead of three books, you will have to divide your friends quite differently."

"Well, it would seem so, certainly." The Major possibly detected the touch of cynicism underlying Evelyn's words. "I believe I shall have a difficulty in finding any one else to place under this new heading. The book has been begun with your name, but there, I am pretty well sure, it will have to end. Miss Luttrell, please do not go! I know you think I am stark staring mad, and in the circumstances you may be excused if you do; but, believe me, I was never more sane in my life."

Evelyn, however, had pushed back her chair, and at the sound of steps in the corridor had risen somewhat hastily to her feet.

"Oh, no—I do not think you are mad! It is not that at all," she returned; putting the writing paper together and closing the blotting book with an unusually calm air, though his words, spoken so earnestly, so much more earnestly than the occasion or subject seemed to demand, had sent all the hot color rushing to her cheeks. "It is Aunt Lydia's book which is troubling me; she will be in despair. But here comes Mr. Falkland! Ask him to write his name in that wonderful birthday book of yours; only remember, whatever you do"—in a tragic aside—"insist upon the year!" And, with a parting nod, Miss Luttrell turned and fled.

CONDITIONS IN ALGERIA.

The Idea of Assimilating the Native Is Absurd.

The present constitution, based on assimilation of Algeria to France, was framed with the chimerical idea that the native element would shrink and the French increase, says the National Review. The contrary has happened. The Mohammedans increased between 1856 and 1876 by 155,000; between 1876 and 1896 by 1,300,000. During the former period famine and typhus and the insurrection of 1871 kept down their numbers; also the oriental dread of being counted led to some falsification of the records. The idea of assimilating the native is absurd. Mixed marriages between them and Christians are practically unheard of, and they do not take up French citizenship, preferring to live under their own law. Nor do they aspire to be represented directly in the French chamber, and any idea of the sort is as extravagant as that of directly representing Hindoos at Westminster. Machinery must, however, be provided by which the natives may make themselves felt, and secure respect for their interest in the local councils. The result of the laws in force during the last twenty or thirty years, whether laws of property, justice or taxation, has been the impoverishment and discouragement of the Arabs. Yet Algeria will never be prosperous till they are rich, nor secure till they are contented. In particular, the local functionaries should be able to talk their language, as our civil servants are required to do in India. When at Biskra, the chief center of the Constantine Sahara and mainly an Arab city, I ascertained that in the local postoffice there was not a single clerk who understood Arabic, and on one occasion I was able myself to explain to one of them what an old gesticulating sheik wanted him to do. It was merely a matter of telegraphing a remittance of 50 francs or so to his son in Algiers. Such ignorance in the chief postoffice of the Sahara of the language of the people is inexcusable.

TEACHING MUSKRATS TO SWIM

How the Mother Animal Gave Her Babies a Lesson.

That sensible portion of the animal kingdom which naturalists are wont to term the "brute creation" has a wonderful faculty for distinguishing between friend and foe; also a no less wonderful aptitude for encouraging a close acquaintanceship with those whom it trusts, says Forest and Stream. Were it not for terror inherited through generations of abused confidence and malicious cruelty, the timid thrush would proudly lead us to the sylvan paradise where she has hidden her birdlings, and the coy doe would bring us to her trembling offspring that we might stroke its spotted side. At the pool our attention was attracted by a comical picture made by an old muskrat trying to teach her babies to swim. It struck us as strange that she should go to such trouble; the little rats should have known instinctively how to navigate, but they clung to the bank and to shallow water, above which arose their fluffy backs, bright eyes and sharp noses. The mother set them the example of swimming across and back. She endeavored to coax and finally she pushed them over their depth and let them make their own way to the shore, though you may be sure she stayed close by. When we were seen the old lady shrieked "Tramps!" in characteristic muskrat language and fled to her subaquatic vestibule; I suppose to call the police. The little ones did not attempt to escape. Ostrichlike, they hid their heads among the roots and left their naked tails waving above the water like a new species of juncus waiting to be examined. The madam could not quite ignore the maternal instinct, as she returned and conducted her happy family to the nursery, where they received their first lesson in misanthropy.

Austrian returns indicate that there are in that country 1,101 persons whose income exceeds 40,000 florins a year, and who are, therefore, rated as millionaires.

ROUT THE INSURGENTS!

Filipinos Being Driven Back by the American Forces.

ANOTHER UPRISING IN MANILA.

Forces of General Schwan, After One of the Hardest Marches and Fiercest Campaigns of the War Arrive at Bacoor—A Lieutenant and Native Police in Manilla Arrested—Threatened Uprising in the City.

MANILA, Oct. 14.—Major Cheatham with a scouting party while proceeding along the west shore of the lake yesterday encountered a force of rebels strongly entrenched at Muntinlupa.

Major Cheatham reports that he drove the rebels from their position and that in the engagement three Americans were killed and two were wounded.

Rumors are in circulation in Manila that Major Cheatham discovered three American prisoners, who had been bound, gagged and shot by the insurgents. These rumors, however, are not confirmed.

At Sandago a lieutenant of the native police has been arrested and lodged in jail, his subordinates having reported to the authorities that he was endeavoring to enlist them in a plot to turn the police against the Americans in the event of an uprising.

Reports having reached the provost marshal that arms were concealed at the headquarters of the Dominican Friars, a detachment of soldiers made a search of the building. They found a small stock of Mausers, revolvers and ammunition, which was confiscated, despite the protests of the friars that the arms were not intended for unlawful use.

General Schwan, with the infantry, has reached Bacoor.

The troops are greatly exhausted, having had one of the hardest marches of the campaign. From Malation to Perez Diaz they marched through rice fields. The fourth infantry from Imus joined General Schwan at Perez Des Marinas. The Filipinos deserted the town on learning of the approach of the Americans.

Two strong shocks of earthquakes lasting several seconds were felt in Manila at 10 o'clock this evening.

DEWEY WIELDS THE TROWEL.

Lays Cornerstone of a Hall Named for Him at Norwich University.

NORTHFIELD, Vt., Oct. 14.—Admiral Dewey today laid the cornerstone of Dewey hall, which is to be a part of Norwich university, the institution in which the admiral received his earliest military training. Admiral Dewey was escorted from his train to the university by the Norwich university cadets and the First regiment of the Vermont National Guard.

Admiral Dewey spread the mortar and as the corner-stone wsa lowered, said: "I now declare this stone duly and truly laid and according to my wish."

Senator-elect Chauncey M. Depew of New York delivered the address of the day. At the conclusion of Mr. Depew's address Admiral Dewey held a reception for a short time. He left for Boston, where a public reception will be held.

BALANCE OF TRADE OUR WAY.

Exports of Merchandise Exceeded Imports by $76,606,787.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14—The monthly statement of the imports and exports of merchandise of the United States during the month of September, 1899, together with the increase or decrease as compared with September, 1898, shows as follows:

Dutiable merchandise imported, $39,425,521; increase about $10,600,000. Domestic merchandise exported, $109,123,647; increase, $19,800,000. Gold imports, $2,572,028; decrease, $14,300,000. Gold exports, $1,056,749; decrease, about $2,000. Silver imports, $2,040,914; increase, $4,000,000. Silver exports, $3,622,147; decrease, $1,500,000.

The exports of merchandise during the last nine months are shown to have exceeded the imports by $76,606,787.

Convict Porto Rican Editor.

PONCE, P. R., Oct. 14.—The United States provisional court and a jury of prominent natives today convicted Izica Diaz, editor of El Combate, formerly La Bomba, which General Guy Henry suppressed, of sending obscene matters through the mail. Diaz was sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment with a fine of $500.

El Combate has been strongly anti-American in its policy. This was the first trial by jury in the islands.

Dakotan Gets Ninety Years.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Oct. 14.—A special from Anaconda, Mont., says: Cinton Dolson of Deadwood, S. D., has been found guilty of murder in the second degree. His punishment is fixed at ninety-nine years in the penitentiary. He was arrested with Oliver Bronson, a nephew, and Ellias Persinger, charged with murdering Eugene Cullinate at American Gulch, August 18, for his money. Bronson was sentenced to ten years. Persinger's case was continued until November 12.

HOLD UP NORTHWESTERN.

Five Masked Men Gag Station Agent, Flag Train and Blow Express Car.

CHICAGO, Ill., Oct. 14.—The Northwestern limited train leaving Chicago at 10:30 p. m. last night was held up not far from Dekalb, Ill., and robbed. The train is due at Dekalb at 12:20, and the holdup occurred at tower W, three miles from Maple Park, Ill. It is not known whether the robbers secured any great amount of booty. A special train containing a number of armed men and detectives left the Northwestern station in Chicago tonight, bound for the scene of the robbery.

It is said there were five masked men engaged in the operation. The train was flagged, and while two of the men compelled the engineer and fireman to run the engine ahead, the balance of them robbed the train. The train dispatcher's office of the Northwestern road in this city admitted the truth of the story to the central police officials.

The robbery was evidently carefully planned. Twenty minutes before the train was due at Maple Park the robbers burst into the station house and presenting revolvers at the head of the station agent, compelled him to remain quiet while they bound him. After tying him fast to a chair they forced a gag into his mouth and left him utterly helpless.

The signals were then changed so that the train would be compelled to stop before reaching the depot. The robbers went down the track to a point where the train would stop and waited for it. As soon as it came to a halt two of the men covered the engineer and fireman with revolvers and after uncoupling the engine, compelled the engineer to run it down the track two miles.

With dynamite the robbers blew up the express car, practically demolishing it and blocking the track.

They then cracked open the safe and rifled it. It is not known how much money was secured. Immediately after grabbing what they could from the safe the robbers fled into the darkness. They are now being pursued, but the robbers have quite a lead over the posse that is after them.

REED RETURNS TO A GAVEL.

Presides at a Session of International Commercial Congress.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 14.—Ex-Speaker Thomas B. Reed today made his first appearance in public since his retirement from official life, presiding at the second session of the International Commercial congress. Mr. Reed was enthusiastically greeted. The proceedings were opened by Director Gen. Wilson, who appeared upon the stage, accompanied by Speaker Reed, Assistant secretary of State Secretary David J. Hill, General Lowery of London and Dr. Vosburg Rekow of Berlin. About twenty-five of the most conspicuous members of the convention, including the Corean, English, Chinese, Argentine and other South American representatives, occupied seats on the platform. Dr. Wilson introduced Mr. Reed, who said:

"Whatever doubts may have arisen because of scientific differences and political distinctions, I am one of those who believe that God made out of the men of all nations one humanity. He did not see fit to make them acquainted one with another; that He has left to us. We desire to become acquainted with you; we desire that you shall become acquainted with us. You may receive too many welcomes while you are here, but I desire to add my one to them in this welcome of you here today. It is my belief that this welcome will become warmer and warmer by the advance of years as between the nations which you and we represent."

BOERS ARE VERY ACTIVE.

Rumor Current that an Attack Will Soon Be Made.

LADYSMITH, Natal, Oct. 14.—(New York World Cablegram.—A rumor is current that Ladysmith is to be attacked tonight. There is the utmost activity in the British camp here. Yet I doubt the report because the Boers hate attacking and rarely leave their laagers (camps) after sundown.

I am strongly of the opinion that the Boers will find a tough job at what-ever point they invade. The British officers and soldiers are well prepared and eager to fight. Authentic news from the Transvaal is most difficult to obtain, but it cannot be that war has not been declared. It is also impossible to doubt that the Boers have taken a position on the Ingogo Heights on the British side of the border. They have moved their camp from Albertina, near the border, and are at present in force at Mount Tintwa.

Bnak Looted.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Oct. 14.—A special to the Post Dispatch from Nevada, Mo., says that burglars entered the Farmers' bank at Schell City, near there, last night, blew open the safe and secured $3,500 in cash, with which they escaped. A posse has been sent out to capture the robbers, if possible.

About 1 a. m. the town watchman was captured on the street by armed men and a bag was thrown over the man's head to stifle his cries. The burglars, of which there were several, then broke into the bank, blew off the door of the safe and took the money.

Advance the Price of Underwear.

ALBANY, N. Y., Oct. 14.—Practically all the mills in this state are now organized under the name of the American Asosciation of Knit Underwear manufacturers, which has decided to make a 15 per cent advance in the pricce of fleece underwear, which is the kind most generally worn, and in which line the competition heretofore has been the fiercest.

Senator Hayward in Washington

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 14.—Senator Hayward of Nebraska, accompanied by his wife, arrived from New York last night and is stopping at the Normandie. They will remain in the city until Sunday night. Senator Hayward says his visit is wholly informal and unexpected, as he is on his way home. He made several calls on department officials, but found most of the cabinet officers out of town with the president.

COST OF THE CUP DEFENDER.

Racing Yacht Has Cost a Handsome Fortune to Its Owners.

A correspondent of the Army and Navy Journal having applied to it for information on the subject, that paper answers that the cost of the building of the Columbia has been variously estimated at from $100,000 to $150,000, and for the Shamrock at from $150,000 to $200,000. It then adds: "A summary of the cost of the Shamrock, based on estimates from various sources, is as follows: Construction and rig, $200,000; pay roll officers and men, including sailmakers and carpenters (eight men), for four months at average of $40, $12,800; provisions for men and officers, at $5 a week for eighteen weeks, $7,200; clothing for crew, $1,000; for dry-docking, twice, $600; tender at $150 a day, for sixty days, $9,000; tugboat at $60 a day, for sixty days, $3,600; derrick and lighter services, $500; lighter for storage of spars for six weeks, $800; freight for spars and sails by steamer, $500; passage for thirty workmen, riggers, etc., $5,000; total, $242,600. If the special services of the designer, Mr. Fife, and of Sailmaker Ratsey, who came to this country, are a charge against the account, the sum would, of course, be so much augmented. Recapitulation shows that the Erin and Shamrock represent a first cost of $725,000. The cost of running the Erin increases the expenses to $875,000."

Famine in British East Africa.

The famine in British East Africa is a serious one. The protectorate officials have been put to sore straits to provide food for their subordinates, and in some cases the garrisons have been fed very largely on the game which the officers could shoot. The distress and disaffection among the natives is taking some very unpleasant forms. Recent travelers over the Uganda railway report that in places the line has been torn up by the natives, thus causing great delay both in the passenger traffic and in the transport of stores. It is probable that the natives in some way connect the present scarcity with the making of the railway, and it must not be overlooked that the employment of ten or twelve thousand Indian coolies on the construction of the line may have materially affected the local supplies of food stuffs. The unusually low Nile which is reported from Egypt points to a severe drought in the Upper Nile regions and in the Abyssinian highlands.

The hissing of Nevada, the American prima donna, by a Barcelona audience recently shows that intense bitterness exists in the breasts of the Spaniards against the people of this country. The insult was more than the singer could stand, and she canceled her entire Spanish tour, though she afterward went to Madrid, where she was most cordially received by the queen, who is her great friend, and who was greatly mortified at the rudeness of her subjects in Barcelona.

Samuel Sherard, an inhabitant of Pittsburg, owns what is probably the most costly hat in the world. Its price was $1,250 and it is made of spun glass. LITTLE KNOWN INDUSTRY.

Oyster and Clam Shells Do Not Go to Waste.

A singular and but little known industry is carried on in this city in the sale of oyster and clam shells, says the New York Tribune. The dealers in this commodity pursue their calling in so unostentatious a way that it attracts no attention. From the eating houses where oysters and clams are consumed the year round the shells are collected by persons who either carry on that business for themselves or are in the employ of the wholesale dealers. It seems incredible how large an area of ground can be covered many feet deep with the conglomeration of shell and foreign matter that is unavoidably collected with it, and apparently amalgamates without destroying the characteristics of the harder material. Seeing a number of carts loaded with shells moving toward the same point would induce the supposition that more reclaimed land was being filled in with material that would exclude the possibility of such land ever being used as a market garden; or it might be taken for granted that another dump heap was allowed in some of the still unoccupied upper west side lots. But if curiosity should lead to investigation it would be found that the carts were bound for a big yard at Fifty-fourth street and the North river, where they deposited their loads. Every autumn the yard is so filled up that a considerable hill of shells is formed. This being excavated from the bottom as loads are again carried away leaves the mass with the appearance of having been geologically formed, and offers a curious sight to the uninitiated. How the shells are used is one of the most astonishing things to those ignorant of the value of the material for anything except filling in streets and making beach drives, such as that one famous in the history of Savannah. But this shell suffers a curious change. It is sold to the gas-works and is used as a purifier.

Rich in Ancient Roman Relics.

At Dorchester, Dorset, England, which has proved so rich in ancient Roman relics, another interesting discovery has just been made. During some excavations on a building estate on the confines of the borough, and only a few hundred yards from the ancient Roman amphitheater, a splendid specimen of a villa pavement has been disclosed. Several similar discoveries have been made of late years, but nothing so fine or well preserved has yet been recorded. The pavement is about two feet below the surface, and the design is unusually elaborate, while the coloring of the tesserae remains almost as fresh as when laid down. The discovery is regarded as of great importance. The find will probably be secured for the British museum.

The amount of espionage carried on by the ambassadors in foreign countries as revealed by the Dreyfus affair it is said to have so impressed the German emperor that he is taking steps to see if it will not be possible to abolish such a system entirely and if not to modify it. He seems to be finding out, however, according to report, that no one government can stop it without the co-operation of all the others.

The late Charles A. Pillsbury was not one of those men who make a success of everything they undertake. It is feared that the result may be an epidemic of disease, arising from the undiluted sewage of the city.

ROTTEN FUSION RECORD

On Account of Which Many Former Adherents Are Leaving the Party.

SPEAKERS HAVE NO ARGUMENT

Admonished to Eschew State Politics and Talk About the Philippine War. Holcomb's Record is Such as Not to Admit of an Airing—Speakers Steer Clear of the Question.

The state house is practically deserted these days, says a Lincoln dispatch. The heat of the campaign has driven the faithful few from their posts at the helm of state and they have taken refuge at the popocratic headquarters, where they are concerting their efforts in the mighty task of rescuing the old ship "Reform" from inevitable destruction. The movement towards this point is general from all branches of the state government under popocratic control. The popocratic committees have called for aid and there was a ready response. Even the secretaries of the board of transportation, each of whom draw $2,000 a year from the state, have put their shoulders to the wheel and are working with their fellow reformers to save the state for Bryan. The board of transportation office, which has always been a quiet place, is now in charge of a stenographer. Secretaries Laws and Edgerton were among the first to volunteer their services to the campaign committee and Secretary Jim Dahlman is performing faithful service for the democratic machine in Omaha. Across the state house corridor in the office of Land Commissioner Wolfe, there was also a ready response. Deputy Nelson, who asked for an increase in salary last year because he was overworked, did not hesitate to throw on the burdens of state to accept the secretaryship of the populist committee. The treasurer's office is represented by Charles DeFrance, who has been appointed official press correspondent for the populist committee. H. G. McEntee of Governor Poynter's staff of statesmen has engaged apartments adjacent to the populist headquarters in the Windsor hotel and is devoting his time to the work of the committee. Henry Blum, another of the chief executive's clerks, is taking an active part in the campaign and on dull days puts in his time in the interests of the "reform" ticket in Douglas county. At the Kearney industrial school the boys of the printing class are enjoying a vacation while their instructor, C. M. Farris, is working for the cause in Lincoln.

The fusion machine is not working to perfection for the reason that a great many of the warhorses who helped to build up the populist party now refuse to get into the harness. For some time Chairman Edmisten has been addressing frantic letters to old time populists asking them to go out and stump the state. One of those most sought after was G. A. Abbott of Richardson county. Abbott made speeches over the state for several years and in 1898 was a member of the platform committee at the populist state convention.

It seems that Abbott does not take kindly to the new style of reform. A letter which he recently wrote to Edmisten has been seen, and reads in part as follows:

What shall our speakers say to the voters this fall? It will not do to point to the rotten fusion record at the state house, with the systematic plans for for holdups and the raids on the treasury. Lawlessness runs rampant there and the free pass curse knows no end. In defying public sentiment our present state house gang beats all republican records. Meserve even made a statement to the legislature that he proposed to do as his predecessors had done.

We sent one man up there whom we knew could be trusted. He protested manfully among that crowd for two years and did his best to have things go as they should. But every crook and the entire free pass gang tried to break him down. Every one of you, from janitor up to the highest officer, helped to persuade Lichty, and the entire 100 of you rejoiced when he was finally driven from the capitol.

By no means allow any of your speakers to talk state issues. The record of our men in power forbids any such thing. Tell your men to talk about the Philippine war and keep the minds of the voters on the other side of the earth. That is all that is left for the "hold up" gang and the free pass grabbers to do.

And why don't some of you take a good hickory club and knock out what little brains old Buck Tibbles has in his bullet shaped head? The Independent used to be a creditable party weekly and opposed rottenness among our leaders. But for the last eight months the editorials in that paper have been a shame to the party. It is now simply laughing stock in this county. Sincere populists despise a man who takes money from our leaders to defend their crookedness.

No Encouragement for Fusionists.

Wahoo Wasp: It is a source of inconsolable grief to the fusion managers that the returned heroes from the Philippines have not set up a whine against the government and about the treatment they have received while in the employment of Uncle Sam. The boys have steadily maintained the same soldierly and dignified bearing that has ever characterized their demeanor all through the period of their enlistment. They have shown far more sense than their versatile self-constituted proxies who have been weeping and wailing from the beginning and refuse to be comforted. Every resource has been exhausted in an attempt to create discontent and lamentation in the camp, on the field and at home, but the gallant boys have refused to hearken unto the voice of hypocrites. They will not dim the lustre of their glorious records one iota to gratify the unholy ambition of unscrupulous politicians, whose only guide in life is an insatiable greed for place and power.

Not Fit for the Bench.

New York Times (Ind. Dem.).—Nebraska, according to the last election in that state, was populist by a plurality of 3,422 in a whole vote of 189,984. In 1897 the fusion of Populists and Democrats carried the state by 13,619 in a whole vote of 194,251. According to the reports of the department of agriculture Nebraska's corn crop in 1836 was 298,599,638 bushels, valued at $38,800,000. In 1897 the crop was one of 241,268,490 bushels, valued at $41,000,000. The crop of 1898 was 158,754,666, valued at $34,900,000.

We do not undertake to maintain with positiveness that the appreciation of the value of corn since 1896 fully explains the changed attitude of the voters in Nebraska. It is apparent that in three years the corn of which they raise such superb crops advanced from about 13 cents a bushel to 19 cents, and in 1898 was valued in the state at aoout 22 cents. It is also apparent, according to political reports that are undisputed, that the Populist or fusion vote in Nebraska has fallen off as corn and other agricultural products increased in value.

Nebraska is promising to gather a crop of 300,000,000 bushels of corn this year. This is to be her contribution to the enormous aggregate of 2,500,000,000 bushels expected from the whole country. If this corn is as valuable to Nebraska for consumption, for the development of beef and pork, as corn was a year ago, it represents aoout $80,000,000 of money to the farmers, or twice as much money as the corn crop of 1897, when attachment to the party of calamity began to wane.

Colonel Bryan's opening speech in the Nebraska campaign, spoken at O'Neill, seemed to us to breathe an unwarrantable spirit of dissatisfaction, a somewhat irrationable disposition to promise disaster in the face of prosperous conditions, and to invite support upon the theory that when the existing conditions have changed his fellow citizens of Nebraska will be willing to admit that he was guessing right and to help him to be president with some purpose of averting disaster.

We have already remonstrated with Colonel Bryan for misleading the farmers of Nebraska in this same O'Neill speech by stating that failures were more frequent immediately following the election of McKinley than they were before he was elected. It was not good policy to make such a statement to farmers who can read and probably do read newspapers, and who can verify Colonel Bryan's statements, or prove them unveracious, by government publication. If "honesty is the best policy," he should have told a diametrically contrary story, even if it were likely to increase confidence in the other party.

Reports from Nebraska lead us to believe that there are other grounds in that state for satisfaction than a good corn crop. The people are employed; they have something to give for the money they desire to have, and instead of being borrowers to a man, it is intimated that they have money to lend. Colonel Bryan is a popular man in the state. His eloquence charms the people when he addresses them. But it seems to us that he would be justified in looking for a better harvest of votes for his party if the corn and other crops had been smaller and less valuable this year.

Unfortunates Have to Suffer

Omaha Bee: The deaf and dumb institute, a state institution located just outside the city limits, is suffering from the blight of populistic and fusion rule, and, instead of the poor unfortunates who should be protected and cared for there, and receiving the attention to which they are entitled, they are permitted to roam about the country at will, while he officers of the school and the members of the board, having its affairs in charge, are chasing up and down the state, rolling in the political mire and fostering the interests that placed them in power.

The deaf and dumb institute should have commenced its school year on September 6. Circulars setting that date as the time for the opening were sent to the patrons throughout the state. Some of the pupils who attended the school last year arrived and with them came several new ones, but instead of finding the school ready for their reception, they found things in a very chaotic condition. The school rooms were in bad repair, the dormitories and the workshops were in even a worse state, and a general run-down appearance prevailed everywhere. Many of the teachers were absent and nothing about the place indicated that the scnool was ready for the arrival of the pupils. Of course, some of the mutes did not arrive at the date indicated in the circulars, and to these circulars were sent announcing that the school would open October 1st.

Of the pupils of the deaf and dumb institute who arrived early in September some have remained at the institute, but no attention has been given to their care. They have been permitted to come and go as they please, coming down town or wandering about the country.

On the morning of October 1, acting under the supposition that the institute would open on that date, another lot of the pupils arrived, but like those who came early in September they found nothing ready for their reception. Instead they learned that the officials of the institution were out campaigning and assisting in pushing along the political interests of the candidates on the fusion ticket.

When the deaf and dumb institute will open its doors seems to be a mooted question at this time. It is given out semi-officially that everything will be in readiness for pupils on October 12, but little credence is placed in the statement. People feel that on account of the delays that have heretofore occurred and also on account of the fact that the political campaign is growing warmer each day, the workers will not be called off while their services are needed.

The state league of republican clubs, in annual session at Pittsburg, adopted resolutions condemning the civil service law as being in opposition to the free institutions of the government and requesting national and state representatives to have it modified or repealed. The resolutions state that the present law is calculated to establish an office-holding class to the exclusion of the average citizen.

DEATH UNDER WHEELS

A Volunteer at Fort Crook Ground Beyond Recognition.

SUICIDE OF A MAN AT HAVELOCK.

Master Mechanic of the Burlington Sends a Bullet Through His Brain—Horse Thieves Busy in Platte County—Miscellaneous Nebraska Matters.

Volunteer Killed by a Train.

FORT CROOK, Neb., Oct. 13.—A Thirty-ninth volunteer infantry soldier was run over and killed by a Missouri Pacific train at this place. The engineer of the train, a southbound through freight, saw the body lying across the track, but could not stop his train before it had dragged the body some distance and ground the head and shoulders beyond recognition. As no one was with the soldier, his name cannot at present be learned or the facts leading up to the accident be ascertained. It is supposed while in a drunken stupor he had fallen asleep across the track or had attempted to get aboard of the southbound passenger while it was leaving the station. The body was taken to the regimental hospital.

Takes His Own Life.

LINCOLN, Neb., Oct. 13.—Edward S. Greusel, master mechanic of the Burlington locomotive shops at Havelock, committed suicide at his home in Havelock by sending a bullet through his brain. Previous to the suicide there had been nothing in either his demeanor or his conversation to indicate that anything was preying upon his mind. It is thought the man killed himself because of domestic troubles. The coroner's jury returned a verdict to the effect that he came to his death by suicide. Greusel had been in the employ of the Burlington many years and was considered a good workman. He leaves a widow and several children.

Pythians in Session.

LINCOLN, Neb., Oct. 13.—The meeting of the grand lodge Knights of Pythias and associate organization closed with a grand banquet at the Lindell hotel. The report of the financial officers showed the organization to be in good condition and the records indicate that the growth has been vigorous and entirely satisfactory to the most sanguine members.

The number of members of the subordinate lodges is given at 6,667, a net increase during the year of 407. The total value of the investments and property of the subordinate lodges is $73,002.56 and the cash on hand is reported to amount to $18,874.74.

Bond Election for Takamah.

TEKAMAH, Neb., Oct. 13.—The city council passed an ordinance calling for an election to vote upon the question of issuing $12,000 in 4 per cent bonds, in aid of the proposed Omaha & Sioux City railroad.

This is the second ordinance of the kind passed by the council. The first one had a clause incorporated in it whereby the bonds were to be void in case the proposed line should pass into the hands of the Chicago & Northwestern any time within twenty years. The company would not accept the terms and the present ordinance was agreed on.

More Work Than Men at Auburn.

AUBURN, Neb., Oct. 13.—The contractor building the new court house finds it impossible to get enough men to excavate the foundation, and the Burlington has been obliged to use all its section men between Auburn and Beatrice to lay track for a new switch to the Johnson stone quarry, as extra men could not be found to do the work.

A telegram from the Missouri Pacific roadmaster to Section Foreman Kinsley authorizes him to pay his men $1.25 per day. The road has considerable work to do at this place and it is impossible to get men at $1.10 per day.

Finds His Stolen Property.

WYMORE, Neb., Oct. 13.—James Giles returned from Lincoln, where he went to identify the team and buggy which was stolen from him two weeks ago. He found his buggy and harness and one horse, but the other horse had been disposed of. The men who stole the team have not been captured, but the man who received it, whom the Lincoln authorities believe to be the leader of one of the worst gangs in the west, was captured and held.

Horse Thieves at Columbus.

COLUMBUS, Neb., Oct. 13.—Horse thieves stole a couple of horses, one belonging to ex-Judge I. L. Albert and the other to Frank Van Alstine. Sheriff Byrnes offers a reward of $50 for the return of the property and apprehension of the thieves. It is believed to be the work of a gang of horse traders who have been camping on the outskirts of town.

Two Bad Men Captured.

RISING CITY, Neb., Oct. 13.—Two brothers named Brodgan were arrested here last night, hailing from Humphrey, Neb., having in their possession stolen property to the amount of $100, consisting of a lot of tobacco, blankets, dry goods and one team.

Eaten by Hogs.

CHENEY, Neb., Oct. 13.—The dead body of John A. Barton, who lived near here, was found by his sister, Mrs. L. A. Brunson, in a hog pen, partially devoured by hogs. Barton had been subject to fainting fits, and it is supposed that while feeding the hogs he fell in a faint and that the hogs then attacked him.

The woman stood guard over the body as it lay from 1 o'clock in the afternoon until evening, when neighbors, who heard her cries, came to her assistance. Several times she started to leave the pen, but in each instance the hogs would rush for the body.

C WITH A TAIL!

Every One Has Noticed the New "C" in Town.

It Has Come to Stay With Us Forever—Health Follows in Its Trail—A Welcome Awaits It Everywhere.

Not so long ago everybody's curiosity was aroused by the appearance in town of a new "C."
It looks like this:

The queer "C with a Tail" has made its way all over the United States, and here as everywhere it promptly jumped into popularity.

Why?

Because the "C with a Tail" is a comet of health followed by a coma of happiness and joy. It has come to stay with us and radiate its benefits in all directions.

The new "C" is part of the trade-mark of Cascarets Candy Cathartic, the ideal laxative and guaranteed constipation cure. They make the liver lively, tone up the bowels, purify the blood, brace the brain, put everything right as it should be.

Buy and try Cascarets to-day. It's what they do, not what we say they'll do, that proves their merit. All druggists, 10c, 25c, or 50c, or mailed for price. Send for booklet and free sample. Address Sterling Remedy Co., Chicago, Montreal, Can., or New York.

CCC

This is the CASCARET tablet. Every tablet of the only genuine Cascarets bears the manic letters "CCC." Look at the tablet before you buy, and beware of frauds, imitations and substitutes.

The pope has received from an English Catholic a present of a beautifully constructed motor car. The automobile is seated for two. As his holiness has not for three years taken carriage exercise, it is improbable that he will ever use the motor car.

THE PRESSMEN PLEASED.

The Transcontinental Trip Was a Surprise to Them.

The following telegram has been received by Mr. D. McNicoll, assistant general manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway, from Mr. W. S. Dingman, president of the Canadian Press Association:

"Vancouver, Aug. 21, 1899.

"One hundred members of the Canadian Press Association are deeply grateful to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the unremitting courtesy and hospitality which has made their trip across the continent the most interesting and pleasant of all their outings. Though conscious of the sterling work accomplished in the spanning of a continent, for a large part remote from settlement, and in the opening up of a territory as vast as some empires, the actual view unfolded on the journey has impressed the excursionists more forcibly than words can represent. The development all along the route, in cities as well as in agricultural and grazing sections, has surprised us, and is most encouraging to lovers of solid progress and hopeful prosperity. The ease and comfort with which the trip from ocean to ocean is attended in the cars and in the C. P. R. hotels, through a service unexcelled anywhere, is a triumph for Canadian skill and enterprise second only to the financial and engineering victories attained in the building of the greatest scenic and developing line in America.

"W. S. DINGMAN,
"President Canadian Press Association."

It was shown some time ago from investigation that bribery in Connecticut elections was most prevalent among the native population of the rural sections. Now comes a statement from one of the eastern counties of Maryland, which has a population of 19,702 natives and only 45 foreign born, two-thirds of which is white, that the purchasable vote has increased to 2,000, and this number amounts to early one-half of the total electorate. The evil is so widespread, says the Worcester (Md.) Advocate, that a jury is rarely ever drawn in the county that does not have one or more men upon it who are known to belong to the vote-selling class.

The hissing of Nevada, the American prima donna, by a Barcelona audience recently shows that intense bitterness exists in the breasts of the Spaniards against the people of this country. The insult was more than the singer could stand and she canceled her entire Spanish tour, though she afterward went to Madrid, where she was most cordially received by the queen, who is her great friend, and who was greatly mortified at the rudeness of her subjects in Barcelona.

Some members of the co-operative colony at Ruskin, Tenn., have just founded a new commonwealth at Duke, Ga. One hundred and twenty persons have joined the new colony, which will be conducted on similar lines to the Tennessee experiment, all property being held in common and members receiving pay for their labor in goods.

Since the opening of the free employment bureaus in Chicago, six weeks ago, 9,556 persons have applied for employment, and of this number work for 3,992 has been secured. During the same time 6,658 people have endeavored to employ labor through the offices, and 3,076 of the applications have been filled.

An example of the life-preserving powers of British civil positions is the Hertslet family, one member of which has completed sixty years' service in the queen's household. He has two brothers who spent fifty years each in the foreign office, while his father was in the same office for fifty-six years.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. Vegetable Compound that I made up my mind to try it. I was troubled with falling of the womb, had sharp pains in ovaries, leucorrhœa and painful menses. I was so weak and dizzy that I would often have severe fainting spells. I took in all several bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier and used the Sanative Wash, and am now in good health. I wish others to know of the wonderful good it has done me, and have many friends taking it now. Will always give your medicine the highest praise."

MRS. A. TOLLE, 1946 Hilton St., Philadelphia, Pa., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—I was very thin and my friends thought I was in consumption. Had continual headaches, backache and falling of womb, and my eyes were affected. Every one noticed how poorly I looked and I was advised to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. One bottle relieved me, and after taking eight bottles am now a healthy woman; have gained in weight 95 pounds to 140 pounds, and everyone asks what makes me so stout."

Both the republican nominees for district judge are good men. J S Stull has lived in Nemeha county for many years; for four years he has performed the duties of Judge in a fair and impartial manner; C B Letton is a younger man, but before he was elevated to the bench he had won a high place among the lawyers of Nebrsska, and on the bench he has been honest and fair. Vote for Stull and Letton.

Rev E I Davies of Kansas City has been called to supply the pulpit of the Presbyterian church of this city and has accepted. He is the gentleman who has filled the pulpit during the past two Sundays. At the conclusion of the service last Sunday morning a congregational meeting was held at which time the action noted above was taken. Rev Mr Davies has had some fifteen or twenty years' experience in pastoral work and is a gentleman of much ability. He will move his family to Tecumseh in the near future.—Tecumseh Chieftain.

Time was, not so very long ago, either, when the delinquent tax list of either Pawnee or Richardson counties would occupy three or four pages of a seven column newspaper, but it isn't such a "phat take" for the poor printer these days. The Pawnee county list, printed this week in the Press, occupies but little more than three columns of space and is an eloquent plea for the "Advance Agent of Prosperity." In the next campaign the title can be shortened by dispensing with the word "Advance." The prosperity heralded in the '96 campaign is camping right in our midst.—Humboldt Standard.

John A Barton, living near Cheney, was found dead in a hog pen near the house where he lived Vicious hogs had eaten his face and torn the flesh from his arms. The body was discovered by Mrs L A Brunson, a sister of the dead man. She was alone, and being unable to move the body, she stood guard from 1 o'clock in the afternoon until evening, when help arrived, and the neighbors were summoned. The dead man had been subject to sinking spells and fits, the result of gunshot wounds received twelve years ago, and his mind had become affected. It was supposed that he fell in a fainting fit in the hog lot, and that he had been attacked by the hogs and had died of hemmorrhage from the wounds.—Hickman Enterprise.

The suicide of E S Gruesel, master mechanic at the Burlington's Havelock shops, Tuesday night, was a shock to a large number of acquaintances in Wymore. He had been at Havelock in charge of the 400 men there since the establishment of the plant and was well known by many railroad men here. The despondency that led to the act is traced to the notification of his discharge from the employ of the company and to the estrangement from many of his old friends since his second marriage, a short time ago, to Mrs E W Allen, formerly of Lincoln. The marriage took place in Council Bluffs and the sensational stories accompanying it were published in the Omaha papers at the time. None of Mr Greusel's friends supposed he contemplated suicide when he calmly walked into a bedroom and blew out his brains, the wife and friend he had just left could not realize what had happened for some time.—Wymorean.

The increase in prosperity as shown by the real estate mortgage record of the state is no less remarkable. Here are the figures showing the totals of those filed and those released during the past seven years:

	Filed.	Released.
1892	$38,847,633	$31,912,267

1897	15,630,721	22,215,759
1898	21,303,855	27,498,070

These figures are taken from the records in the "labor bureau" that tried to prove that "farming does not pay in Nebraska."

FROM LINCOLN.

Lincoln, Oct. 16, 1899 Editor Argus—The last three weeks have been comparatively quiet in this city. The people here seem to desire a season of rest after having exerted themselves to the utmost in entertaining the crowds that were in Lincoln during the G A R reunion, the First Nebraska reception, and the street fair. The latter enterprise will be repeated next year.

State headquarters for the republicans and the populists are open here, but both committees are pushing the campaign rather quietly. There is little excitement over politics so far, although it is expected that the personalities of the two candidates for supreme judge, as well as the matter of Bryan's prospective presidential candidacy, will draw out a larger vote than that of last year.

The Thirty-ninth infantry passed through Lincoln last Saturday night on its way to San Francisco. The regiment is composed largely of Nebraska soldiers, many of whom served in the First, Second, and Third regiments. Capt Taylor, who commanded Company L of the First regiment, is commissioned as a Captain of the Thirty-ninth, and Colonel Mulford goes out with the regiment as one of its majors.

The Nebraska university and the Kansas City Medical college football teams played a tie game here on Saturday, the score being 6 to 6.

Table Rock has quite a representation in Lincoln now, especially at the university. The Table Rock students there are Etta Bankson, Lotta Talcott, Rhinehart Wessel, Phillip Pepoon, Thomas Goodrich, and Harry Lane. They are all doing good work. Louis Wolfe is attending the business college.

Cora Bray, who has finished the shorthand and typewriting course in the business college, is said to be as expert in operating the typewriter as anyone who ever graduated from there. During the street fair she made a public record of exceedingly fast work while blindfolded. Myrtle Peck has also acquired much proficiency along this line and is at present doing work for the Nebraska Teacher, a state educational journal. Lizzie Dare is teaching school in a district just east of town.

C R Judkins is still with the Dierks lumber company and Mrs Judkins says that she has become nearly reconciled to living in Lincoln. Howard Cleveland is working in the B & M storehouse at a comfortable salary. Fred Thompson is passing out lunches to hungry railroad men, as usual.

Your correspondent was at Omaha a week ago and found Will Carmichael busy doing typewriting and stenographic work for a coal firm. The town seemed to be lively enough, but the exposition is not proving much of an attraction this year. ELLIS E. WOLFE.

His Life Was Saved.

Mr J E Lilly, a prominent citizen of Hannibal, Mo., lately had a wonderful deliverance from a frightful death. In telling of it he says: "I was taken with Typhoid Fever, that ran into Pneumonia. My lungs became hardened. I was so weak I couldn't even sit up in bed. Nothing helped me. I expected to soon die of Consumption, when I heard of Dr King's New Discovery. One bottle gave great relief. I continued to use it, and now am well and strong. I can't say too much in its praise." This marvelous medicine is the surest and quickest cure in the world for all Throat and Lung Trouble. Regular sizes 50 cents and $1.00. Trial bottles free at S G Wright's Drug Store; every bottle guaranteed.

HOLCOMB'S HOUSE RENT.

Official Record Showing the Facts of the Scandal.

Silas A. Holcomb, while governor of the state, not only accepted an unconstitutional appropriation for the payment of his private house rent, but by the use of padded vouchers he took from the state treasury almost double the amount of money that the house rent actually cost. It takes no argument to substantiate this. The records are the best evidence.

When the legislature of 1893 made a house-rent appropriation for Governor Crounse, the last Republican governor, it was promptly vetoed. Crounse, in his message declared it unconstitutional, and said the legislature had no power to increase the salary or perquisites of any state officer.

Governor Holcomb had no such regard for the constitution or the law. He regarded the law as "a farce and a sham," as his sworn testimony later disclosed. He was glad to take the house-rent appropriation, and he intended to make as much as possible out of it.

The records show that for the first six months after the appropriation was available in 1895, Holcomb lived in a house belonging to A. C. Crandall. There is no evidence of the actual amount paid Crandall for the rent, but the vouchers drawn show that for each quarter the governor drew $180 in advance. He had Crandall sign the vouchers.

On the 1st of October Holcomb rented a house from Mrs. Gould at the rate of $30 per month. And yet the records show that for the quarter ending Jan. 1, 1896, he drew in advance $180 for "house rent." The date of this voucher is Sept. 30, 1895.

The next voucher drawn was on March 3, 1896, when Holcomb took $350 all in a lump, the voucher saying it was for "house rent," but did not say what period of time it covered. This was the case with all future vouchers, an adroit effort having been made to cover up the misappropriation or steal. The record of all the vouchers drawn, as shown by the books in the auditor's office is as follows:

May 2, 1895	$180.00
July 11, 1895	180.00
Sept. 30, 1895	180.00
March 3, 1896	350.00
Dec. 24, 1896	300.00
Aug. 7, 1897	120.00
Dec. 24, 1897	360.00
May 26, 1898	250.00
Aug. 8, 1898	100.00
Dec. 10, 1898	200.00
Jan. 6, 1899	83.30
	$2,303.30

Governor Holcomb deliberately misappropriated and put in his pocket each month a little over $19. All this in spite of the fact the appropriation is for a certain amount for house rent, "or so much thereof as may be necessary." No quibble will justify the steal. The state officials now admit the wrong, and to prevent the vouchers from being inspected by the public, the auditor has removed them from their usual places with the other vouchers in the vault, and has them concealed at the present time in Deputy Pool's desk. A good way to prove this is to go and ask to see them.

The sworn evidence given by Mrs. Gould shows how much was paid for the house which Holcomb rented of her on the 1st of October, 1895, and which he still occupies. She testified before and investigating committee as follows:

Q. Who rented the property?
A. Both of us; my husband and myself.
Q. Who is the tenant?
A. Mr. Holcomb.
Q. What does he pay now?
A. Thirty dollars.
Q. Who pays the water rent?
A. He does.
Q. The rental price is the same as when you rented it?
A. Yes, sir.

Here followed a number of questions relating to the rental value of property in the city as compared with years ago and the testimony resumed as follows:

Q. What year was it with reference to his being elected governor? Do you know the year that you rented it to him?
A. Why, I am not positive when the rent began, but I think it was in October, 1895; I could not swear to that. I hadn't only 15 minutes to get ready in and I hadn't much time to look anything up. I think it was October, 1895, he first rented it.
Q. After that your husband did the leasing?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you don't know how many years he rented it for; that is, you can't recall now?
A. I suppose it would be since 1895. It would be four years. This is 1899.
Q. In collecting the rent, Mrs. Gould, to whom was it paid?
A. It was usually paid to me, but to Mr. Gould when he was at home.
Q. Who paid it to you?
A. The governor.
Q. How did he pay it to you, by check or money?
A. Sometimes in money and sometimes in check or draft.
Q. Were you ever paid by warrant from the state? Did the state pay you?
A. No.
Q. It was always paid either by money or a private check?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was it paid monthly or quarterly?
A. Monthly.
Q. In advance?
A. Not always. Sometimes it would be pretty near two months. Sometimes the 15th and sometimes near the last. It never was paid right at the day.
Q. Did you collect it by going after it, or was it brought to the house?
A. He usually brought it to me.

The legislative investigation committee, before which this evidence was given, tried to get Holcomb to testify. He refused to come forward and explain himself, for the good reason that no explanation was possible. The following is a part of the committee's official report:

"The 24th session of the legislature of the state of Nebraska, by house roll No. 632, a bill making appropriation for current expenses for the biennium, appropriated the sum of $1,500 for house rent for the governor. The 25th session of the legislature, by house roll No. 614, also appropriated for the purpose of house rent for the governor the sum of $1,500 for the biennium. Complaint having been made to the committee that this sum had been misappropriated, evidence in relation to the same was heard, and from the evidence we find: That the first two vouchers drawn against this fund thus created were each for the sum of $180, each purported on its face to be for three months' house rent; the warrants in payment thereof being drawn to A. C. Crandall. These vouchers were, to say the least, irregular in that the first drawn May 2 was for rent to July 1, 1895, while the second, drawn July 11, 1895, was for rent to Oct. 1, 1895, thus paying the bills for rent before they matured.

"The committee further finds that from about the first of October, 1895, to the end of his term of office the governor occupied a residence on A street in the city of Lincoln, owned by Mrs. C. A. Gould, and for which he paid a rental of $30 per month, which sum was paid monthly at the convenience of the governor, and to the entire satisfaction of Mrs. Gould; that during the time he occupied said residence as governor he presented vouchers in his own name amounting to $1,043.20, three of which, amounting to $710, were not sworn to as required by law, for the payment of which the state auditor issued his warrants on the state treasurer.

"The committee were unable to procure the attendance of A. C. Crandall, to whom the first two warrants were issued, to ascertain the amount actually paid to him for rent, but giving the benefit of the doubt to the vouchers as filed, and admitting that $60 per month was the amount of rent actually received by him, it will be seen that $77.20 of the amount set apart for the payment of house rent has been misappropriated by Governor Holcomb, and your committee would recommend that your excellency refer this matter to the attorney general with instructions to take such steps as may be necessary to recover from Mr. Holcomb the amount thus misappropriated."

This same man who makes out padded vouchers, who arranges to have them concealed from the public gaze, who refuses to appear and testify before a committee, and who fails to explain in any way why he pocketed this money, is now a candidate for the office of supreme judge. The house-rent fraud is only one of the many reprehensible deals entered into by this "politician for spoils only." He is not fit for the supreme bench, and should be repudiated at the polls.

Mr. Bryan's Political Morals.

Some time ago the Hon. J. Sterling Morton made the public assertion that William J. Bryan had said "it is the money that is in the office and not the honor that attracts me."

Such a remark from Mr. Bryan could not be regarded as a probability by those who believe him to be a leader with high moral standards and honorable purpose. The charge having been made by so prominent a citizen as Mr. Morton, on the other hand, created much comment. Mr. Bryan's friends refused to believe Mr. Morton and vigorously denounced him for making such a false accusation against their idol. Finally, on Sept. 26, Mr. Bryan, when at his home in Lincoln, was interviewed on the subject and he denied ever having given expression to such an utterance and added that whatever Mr. Morton might say was unworthy of credence. It was then "up to" Mr. Morton. Accordingly in the issue of his paper, The Conservative, of Oct. 12th, he published a facsimile letter received by him from Mr. Bryan in which the language quoted is found. A photographic reproduction of the letter leaves no doubt as to whether Mr. Bryan did or did not make use of such language. The decision is in Mr. Morton's favor.

Friends of Mr. Bryan will offer the excuse that the letter is ten years old, that he was, when he wrote it, much younger than now and that, if such language and sentiment be objectionable, the transgression has been outlawed. If this lenient view of the case be granted the fact still remains that Mr. Bryan was, on Sept. 26th, 1899, at the zenith of his powers and perhaps of his fame, and how, therefore, will he be excused from denying the utterance?

Obviously Mr. Bryan's political opponents have too generously conceded the sincerity of his purposes, the integrity of his character. Mr. Morton has not convicted him of any greater defection from the straight path of rectitude than he purposely and publicly made in 1896, when, on his tail-end campaign, he advised voters to wear gold badges and vote for silver. This endorsement of hypocrisy and deception was certainly as unbecoming a presidential candidate as anything Mr. Morton has proven against him or of which he stands self-convicted.

If "a vote for Holcomb is a vote for Bryan" is to be adopted as the fusion shibboleth this year in Nebraska, then these things are to be legitimately considered along with the Holcomb "cigar-box" settlement with Defaulting Treasurer Bartley, the house-rent record and ballot-fraud connection.

Mr. Bryan, profiting by his correspondence with J. Sterling Morton, should not forget the postscript, "burn this letter."

Readers of this paper are being furnished some impartial evidence of the questionable acts of Silas A. Holcomb, taken from the records. A consideration of it by the public is all that is necessary to elect M. B. Reese justice of the supreme court.

Dewey was going to blow the administration clear out of the water when he arrived. He would tell the world the mistakes of the government. He would give Aguinaldo a patriot's certificate. So said the "antis." Dewey is home again and he reaffirms what he has always said since the 1st day of May, 1898—that the authority of the American flag must be established in the Philippines.

There were many loyal Democrats of the north, who, in the sixties, gave their support to the administration of President Lincoln because they believed their country more worthy of preservation than any political party. The indications are there are many such in Nebraska today. They realize that to vote against the administration by supporting the fusion party this year will be to give aid and comfort to enemies of the American flag in the Philippines, and thus commit a grave and irreparable blunder. That Nebraska will stand by the president in this emergency, as the brave boys of the First Nebraska stood by the flag in the Philippines, is practically a foregone conclusion.

The "Plow Boy Preacher," Rev J Kirkman, Belle Rive, Ill., says. "After suffering from Bronchial or lung trouble for ten years, I was cured by One Minute Cough Cure. It is all that is claimed for it and more." It cures coughs, colds, grippe and all throat and lung troubles.

The Argus office was favored Monday evening by a visit from Mrs Fox, Mrs Allie Carmichael, Mrs Nancy Taylor and Mrs Lizzie Faulkner.

A very pretty wedding which took place at the residence of Mr and Mrs O W Fellers, on Sunday, October 22nd, at high noon, was that of Miss Viola Dare and Mr Luther Bowen. at 12:15, p m to the strains of the wedding march played by Miss Elsie Pepoon, the bridal party, accompanied by Miss Wilma Heywood as brides maid and Mr Will Aylor, as best man, entered the palor, where Rev Gates, in the impressive marriage service of the M E church, performed the ceremony which made them husband and wife. Congratulations followed after which the guests, about 25 in number, were invited by Mrs Fellers, who is a cousin of the bride, to partake of a bountiful wedding repast. Mrs Fellers who is famous for her excellent spreads, fairly excelled herself, as all who were fortunate enough to attend will testify. The bride was prettily and becomingly attired in a gown of the new French blue, elegantly trimmed in lace and ribbons, in her hair, which was most becomingly arranged she had a bunch of typical Orange blossoms. The groom were the conventional wedding suit and looked as happy as grooms usually do. The presents were useful and numerous and testified to the affection in which the young couple were held by their relatives and friends. The bride is particularly admired for her devotion and self denial, exhibited during the long illness of her mother, and we feel assured that the adage, "A good daughter will make a good wife," will be examplified in this instance, and her whole circle of acquaintances, as well as her relatives and near friends, wish for her an unusual amount of happiness and good fortune.. Mr and Mrs Bowen left on Monday afternoon train for Lincoln where on Monday evening, Mrs Hook, sister of the bride gave a reception in their honor.

W. S. A. Convention.

The W S A County Convention met at the Opera House in Table Rock, Monday Oct. 23 at 3 o'clock, p m. Present Miss Morrow, State; Miss Johnson, Manager, Prayer Rev Green, Singing, New America. Address by the Manager, Miss Johnson, she said she came to Table Rock with anticipations of a pleasant time, a daisy time, as she was told, and her reception and entertainment fully equalled her expectations, she said Nebraska was the field, chosen for the work of this year. Working county seats usually, and organizing county associations. The union state convention at Lincoln is Nov. 28th and 29th.

Next came Symposium on woman's suffrage; Does the wife and mother need it? Answered by Mrs Marble in a very fine paper.

Does the working woman need it? Unanswered.

Does the Prof and Business woman need it? Mrs Fox read a selection. Miss Howe responded with a paper.

Does the taxpaying woman need it? Answered by Mrs Fulton, verbally and by a paper from Mrs Linn.

Should women voters hold office? Answered by Mrs A Fellers by a paper, by a paper from Mrs Gates, read by Mrs Norris.

Discussion opened by Mrs O'Loughlin, Mrs Cotton being unavoidably absent. 16th Amendment omitted; Miss Irene Lane, not being present. Collection. Adjourned.

Evening session opened by music by Mrs Myrtle Howe. Prayer by Rev Green. The manager, officers and speakers were escorted to the platform by 4 little girls, dressed in suffrage colors. Joy Fellers representing Colorado, Ella Snyder, Utah; Rella Snyder, Idaho; Georgia Fulmer, Wyoming. Hazel Taylor representing Nebraska, the coming and expected new suffrage state. These little people gave a song in which they gained to themselves much praise and also gave much pleasure to the audience.

Miss Morrow followed with a fine address; interesting, analytical, logical and forcible.

Meeting adjourned to meet at 10:30 Tuesday morning.

Exercises opened with prayer by Rev Green. The Manager Mrs Johnson opened with a talk on compensation and followed by a talk on county organization. She also asked that the little girls song of last night be repeated tonight and also that they be at Lincoln at the state convention, thinking it would add largely to the interest. She told us of Susan B Anthony on her 76th birthday being visited by 76 tiny children each carrying a white rose each rose representing a year of her life and the great effort she made to restrain her tears, but she hardly did for the sake of the cause. These 76 children were introduced to her as the women of the 20th century. She told us how when in California Miss Anthony walked to the platform through a way strewn ankle deep in roses. Mrs Johnson next read the constitution recommended by state and national association, each article was read separately and voted upon. Then the constitution as a whole was adopted by the convention. Prayer by Rev Green. Committee was appointed by the local president to nominate county officers. Said committee report directly; President appointed Mrs Nesbitt, Mrs Norris, and Mrs Fulton. Moved by Mrs Cotton, seconded by Mrs Fellers that a recess be taken for the committee to prepare nominations for county officers. Convention resumed after recess, the committee appointed, responded with the following names.

Mrs J R Utterback, President; Mrs Lizzie Fellers, Recording Secretary; Mrs Ella O'Loughlin, Corresponding Secretary; Mrs Lilly Fellers, Treasurer; Mrs Lydia Butler, Vice President at Large. Auditors Mrs Fare and Scism.

A motion was made that these officers be elected and the Secretary was instructed to cast the final ballot for the convention. Rev Green made an address. Convention adjourned to meet at 3 o'clock p m.

The fifteenth wedding anniversary of Mr and Mrs J C Beck was celebrated in their new house last night, by a gathering of their friends. They knew nothing of the contemplated raid on them until the arrival of forty or fifty people, provident with the necessities for a splendid lunch, and a merry time was had. On behalf of the friends Rev Parker presented them with an elegant couch as a testimony of the esteem in which they are held.

The twentieth wedding anniversary of Mr and Mrs W N Kerns was celebrated at their home on last Thursday evening by their numerous friends, in a manner greatly enjoyed by all participants. It was a surprise to the worthy couple, but it was none the less pleasant on that account. About 10 o'clock the bride and groom of 20 years before, took their position before squire Marble who, in the following original poem tied the connubial knot:

Stand up Nanuie! Stand up Wes,
While I shall my thoughts express—
Twenty years, you've dwelt together,
In both fair and stormy weather;
Till you now, are termed "Old Folks!"
This isn't one of Wes's Jokes,
You say you're young—it will not do,
With Wes's gray hairs in plain view.
As Wes, has asked for no divorce,
And all are gathered here, of course,
By virtue of this writ I hold,
[and also of a fee of Gold—]
Which I expect upon my life
I now pronounce you man and wife.

Sunday October 22nd, '99, was a great day for weddings. About 12:30 p m at the home of Mr O W Fellers, in the presence of a few of the nearest relatives, Rev Geo M Gates spoke the words that made Luther N Bowen and Miss Viola Dare, husband and wife. Miss Mabel Pepoon played the wedding march, and C W Aylor and Miss Wilma Heywood, stood on either side to witness the event. As fine a dinner as was ever spread on such an occasion, was prepared by Mrs O W Fellers, of which all present partook with delight.

In the evening of the same day as had been previously announced at the close of an address, by Mrs Calkins, national organizer of the W C T U and W S A, another couple were made one. The Methodist church was crowded to its utmost, scarcely room for passage way in the vestibule. Promptly at 8:30, Mrs F H Taylor began a wedding march and Brothers F H Taylor and Clyde Barnard ushered Mr Chas W Aylor and Miss Wilma Heywood to the altar, accompanied by Mr N A Aylor and Miss Florence Jones, who stood with the couple, when Pastor Geo M Gates, performed the ceremony that made the happy couple husband and wife. After congratulations by the many friends, a few of the guests went to the home of Mr and Mrs Heywood, parents of the bride, where a delightful repast was served. Cream. Cake and Fruit, the finest in the land, and all enjoyed it. Many beautiful and valuable presents were made to both couples. Both the newly married couples are well known and highly esteemed. Their many friends and The Argus joins all in best wishes for a happy, prosperous and successful journey through life. Mr and Mrs Aylor will reside in their own home recently purchased of Mr Bowen, in north part of city. Mr and Mrs L N Bowen left Monday to visit for a while in Lincoln and will perhaps locate there. The infare was held to both couples Monday noon, at Mr Aylor's home north of the city.

Everybody was interested in foot-bal last Saturday afternoon, and a big crowd witnessed the game between the Lincoln High school team and the Table Rock eleven. F A Harrison umpired the game. The teams were about evenly matched and the first half was played without a score, but early in the second half Lincoln made a touchdown and kicked goal, scoring 6. From this time on to the finish it was a hot game, our boys making a big fight to tie the score, and during the last three minutes made big gains, but time was called and the Lincoln boys declared the winners. The visitors were given a reception in the evening at the home of Mr and Mrs W S Linsley which was a very pleasant social affair. The second game with Hiawatha will be played on the Table Rock gridiron tomorrow afternoon and if you want to see a red hot game go to the grounds at 4 o'clock.

Minneapolis, Minn., Oct. 22.—A special to the Times from Stillwater, Minn., says: J. C. McBride, a convict at the prison received from Jackson county in December last to serve three years and five months for an assault, has made a remarkable confession, showing him to be one of the most high-handed murderers in the country. His confession was made to Warden Wolfer in a letter written October 8, and in it related the murder of two officers, Joseph Grant and John McNott, at Geneva, Ill., August 29, 1886, the murder of Julia Buckmore, at Geneva, a postoffice robbery and the murder of Marshot of Ottawasma, Kan., the burglary of a hardware store and the shooting of a policeman at Guide Rock, Neb., and many burglaries and highway robberies. If the story is true he has been a veritable terror. Speaking of the circumstances of the murder of Grant and McNott at Geneva, he says: "I shot Joseph Grant and John McNott. Three of us, two pals and myself, were in the act of committing a burglary at Geneva about 1 o'clock in the morning, August 29, 1886. We entered the house of an undertaker for the purpose of robbery. My two pals were arrested by these officers. I walked some distance away from the place of the robbery to the court house and secreted myself behind a tree. When the officers came along with my two pals I shot them, killing Officer McNott instantly and wounding Officer Grant fatally."

Continuing he says: "I also murdered a woman by the name of Julia Buckmore in the outskirts of Geneva about two weeks before I murdered the officers. I cut her throat with a razor because she recognized me while in the act of committing a robbery. I carried the body to a hencoop and set fire to the house. The body was found in the hencoop the next morning." McBride says his right name is George Bullock and that he was born of respectable parents who have resided in Geneva since 1871. He has served two prison terms in Illinois and one in Nebraska. After receiving the letter and calling McBride into his office for a more explicit story of his crimes Warden Wolfer communicated with the authorities at Geneva and elsewhere. He learned that the crimes were committed, but has received no additional information. McBride is now 33 years old and says he has followed the life of a robber and murderer since he was 18 years old. While relating the story of his crime he gave all the details in a matter-of-fact manner and evidently felt relieved. He claims to have confessed because his conscience bothered him and says he is anxious to be punished for his many crimes. In the murder of the officers at Geneva he says he had two pals, one of them, Harry Ester, was later arrested and sentenced to Joliet penitentiary for fifteen years. The confession covers four large manuscript pages.

The above was in the associate press dispatches, and as Guide Rock had no such murder as indicated, it is supposed to mean Table Rock, and refers to the killing of N A Craig, by an unknown person on Monday night, Sept. 21, 1896; Notwithstanding the fact that $1000 was offered for the murderer, and vigilant search was maintained by officers, the murderer has remained undiscovered.

Most things come to those who hustle while they wait.

There are some truths that never get too old for men to learn.

The mildest kind of lying is bound to injure a man's standing.

All the world can see through men who make spectacles of themselves.

A bachelor says that matrimony is one of the blanks in the lottery of love.

Most people have more curiosity than sympathy for the troubles of others.

Shots from the pulpit usually pass over the heads of the sinners in the front row.

A preacher often labors with men, but the confidence man is the one who works them.

A clock keeps right on working when it goes on a strike; that's where it gets the bulge on a man.

The language of gloves is now being promulgated. Young men have long understood with fear and trembling the language of the mitten.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer says that the best courting days of the year are at the threshold. Does the Plain Dealer speak officially for the spinsters of that region?

Double-decked turrets are to be tried in some of the new ships now building for the American navy and experts claim that they will prove failures on account of the complicated mechanism. The talk of complicated mechanism still further emphasizes the passing of the old days—the time of mast and sail. Forty years ago the man most valuable on a warship, aside from his fighting qualities, was the man who could go up a rope and trim a sail. Nowadays the valuable man is the sea-dog who can not only fight, but operate several hundred cogs and screws, besides giving practical exhibitions of ability as a practiced electrician.

The first thing done toward building the great dam across the Nile at Assuan has been the erection and equipment of extensive hospitals and dispensaries, for caring for the health of the army of laborers. A generation or two ago such a thing was unheard of, while in ancient times the disregard of human life was such that the bones of those who perished from disease or fatigue in building the pyramids would have made greater heaps than the pyramids themselves. There are not many more impressive measures of the progress made by modern civilization than such care for the welfare of human lives.

According to Colonel Wright's studies of the census, "the rich are growing richer; many more people than formerly are growing rich; and the poor are growing better off. Statistics prove that while the proportion of persons engaged in unskilled and poorly paid labor remains nearly stationary, the proportion employed in skilled and semi-professional pursuits, which bring higher wages, steadily advances. He illustrates from Boston the improved distribution of wealth. In that city the rich men of 1824 were relatively richer than now. Then nine large taxpayers owned eight per cent of the property; now the nine largest own less than four per cent. In 1845 the three hundred and thirty-three richest men owned a larger proportion than twelve hundred of the richest citizens of today. This is good as far as it goes, and we can stand some more of it.

Harvard, Yale and other universities have long-standing feuds with the townspeople at their doors. The doubtful feelings with which these antagonists regard each other culminate now and then in what are known as "town and gown" riots. During certain annual rites held the other day by Harvard students to celebrate rowing and baseball victories the roughs of Cambridge attacked the students with stones and knocked one of their number insensible. When the Harvard men went after their foes the latter fled ignominiously, and the promptness of the police alone prevented a serious riot. With tradition to back him up and the fierce fighting tyrannical blood to urge him on, the student, as years pass by, does not seem inclined to forego the physical pleasure of exercising his fists on his natural enemy, the town "hoodlum." It seems a pity that learning, notwithstanding the old saying, does not soften the warlike feelings of the natural man when in the presence of his foe. The recent war experiences are likely to perpetuate human savagery for many years to come.

Rudyard Kipling is out in another editorial in verse on a current topic—that of Admiral Dewey's return. If the admiral had turned upon his course as often as Kipling turns upon the words work, kings, best, etc., he would not have entered New York harbor until some time next year.

The late craze for arresting people who have escaped imprisonment for crimes committed about twenty years ago suggests the idea that that must have been rather a bad epoch.

Toledo, Ohio, arises to claim the title of "city of brotherly love," and alleges that Philadelphia has utterly forgotten even the meaning of the appellation. The very grass growing along the principal business streets of Philadelphia should curl and crinkle at such a cruel calumny.

The Olympia anchored at Tompkinsville, Staten island. This is liable to create considerable jealousy in the bosoms of all other Tompkinsvilles along the coast.

That Mysterious Major...

ETHEL V. SOUTHAM

CHAPTER IX.

On the following evening Lady Howard and her niece, accompanied by the indefatigable Falkland, were taking a little stroll along the terrace, when Major Brown appeared and handed a note to Evelyn.

"The last delivery, and only one letter! Dear me, the postman is treating us badly to-day!" exclaimed Lady Howard, with symptoms of astonishment. "I have been expecting to hear from the boys. Their school breaks up on the twenty-ninth, and I was wanting to arrange about the trains. Why, Evelyn dear, whoever is your correspondent? You look surprised," she broke off suddenly.

"Well, yes—I am," said Miss Luttrell, with a little nod, contracting her brows into a distinct frown. "It is from the bank; but what it means I have no idea. I cannot make head or tail of it."

"From the bank?" repeated Lady Howard questioningly.

"Yes," explained Evelyn. "They say that the enclosed check was presented at the bank this morning, but that they refused to cash it on the ground that only the initial of my second name was signed instead of my name in full."

"Ah—I understand! It is merely your own mistake, I suppose? You wrote the check in a hurry and forgot how you usually sign your name."

"That must be it, of course," mused Evelyn in a tone which, in spite of her words, sounded slightly doubtful. "All the same, though"—with sudden decision—"I am perfectly certain that I have not written any check for five hundred pounds!"

"Five hundred pounds! My dear child, why did you not tell me that at once?" Lady Howard turned anxiously towards her niece. "Let me look at the check. Is that your signature? Oh, ridiculous! It is the most glaring case I ever saw! Mr. Falkland—Major Brown"—in her agitation her ladyship would have appealed to her bitterest enemy—"come and say what you think about it. It is a forgery, of course!"

A forgery! The word acted like magic upon the two men. Falkland, with his head almost buried in an evening newspaper and his whole thoughts occupied with the interesting "Beauchamp Case," instantly dropped the paper and stood perfectly immovable, looking from Lady Howard to Evelyn, from Evelyn to her aunt, whilst Brown, who had sauntered off to the edge of the terrace, started perceptibly and grew white to the very lips.

For a moment not a word was uttered. Everybody gazed in fascinated silence at the thin slip of innocent looking pink paper fluttering softly to and fro in her ladyship's fingers, and then it was Falkland who was the first to speak.

"But the money? Five hundred pounds, did you say?" There was strange energy in his voice, a dash of feverish excitement in his manner. "The check has been cashed?"

"Oh, dear no—certainly not! Luckily for Evelyn, the flaw in her signature was discovered in time, so that no harm has been done."

"How very fortunate!" was the reply, terse rather than jubilant.

"And yet I hardly understand," came dubiously from the Major, who, from the moment the expression and alarm had come into his face, had stood, with his head bent, glaring fixedly at the glowing ash of his cigar. "Of what does the flaw consist?"

"Of the merest trifle," answered Lady Howard readily. "It is simply that my niece is always in the habit of signing her name in full—Evelyn Chantry Luttrell"—whereas in this case it is signed only 'Evelyn C. Luttrell.'"

"Yes," added Evelyn, speaking for the first time. "And, as one of my check books, upon which I had very foolishly written my name, 'Evelyn C. Luttrell,' was lost in the post last year, they said at the bank that for the future, as a preventive of forgeries, they would never cash any checks that were not signed with 'Chantry' in full."

"Then this check," suggested Falkland in the same calm deliberate tones, is of course one of those which you lost last year?"

"It must be, I suppose," she returned, gazing down in genuine astonishment at the forged signature, which was so like, so alarmingly like, her own that she could scarcely believe, despite the convincing "Five hundred pounds," that she had not really written it herself. "And the finder has evidently considered it advisable to let some months pass before trying his experiment; only, now that I come to think of it"—Miss Luttrell paused, and, glancing up quickly as if for inspiration, encountered Falkland's dark penetrating eyes fixed steadily upon her—"the checks I lost were blue—I know they were—whilst this one is pink, payable to order like those I am using now."

It was undoubtedly rather an astounding piece of news. Falkland looked distinctly perturbed, whilst Brown examined the end of his cigar more intently than ever and tried to appear perfectly unimpressed.

"Are you certain of that, Miss Luttrell?" The question came somewhat abruptly from Falkland.

"Certain!" answered Evelyn decidedly. "But, if you like, I will fetch my check book; then you can see for yourself."

She jumped up from her chair and turned to hurry off along the terrace, when, to her surprise, she found that Major Brown had turned likewise, and that consequently their paths both lay in the same direction.

"This is a very serious business, Miss Luttrell," he began as he walked along by her side, going straight to the all-important object.

"Yes; it is rather serious—at least, it might have been," was Evelyn's philosophical rejoinder.

"Anyhow, it is annoying, and of course some steps ought to be taken in the matter at once, or the same thing may be occurring again, only next time it will probably be your full name, instead of merely the initial."

"Yes; but, whatever we do, it is quite hopeless expecting to succeed," returned Evelyn, with a rueful shake of her head. That poor Sir Adrian Beauchamp has been offering his reward for months in the hope of discovering the man who has forged his name; but it has been perfectly useless. The only wise thing is to keep one's check book safely under lock and key. After all, Mr. Falkland's advice to me the other day was pretty sensible."

"Yes—lock up your check book, by all means; but even locks and keys are not always proof against such villains as—the writer of that check. It is all very well, Miss Luttrell, but because he has not succeeded in robbing you of that five hundred pounds is no reason he should be allowed to go scot-free."

"Still how are we to trace him?"

The Major shrugged his shoulders.

"Well, your first and only chance of discovery would lie with an expert. The thing is'—he looked at her anxiously; notwithstanding the studied calmness of his manner, there was a strange inexplicable fear almost noticeable beneath his tones—"will you trust that check to me? If so, I will send it straight up to town in the morning for the advice of one of the best men in the country."

"Could he find out anything, though, without having the least clue? You see, we have not the faintest suspicion as to who it is; we have no writing to show or anything of that sort," observed Evelyn, with a rather doubtful expression.

Certainly there was weight in her words.

"No—of course not," returned Brown hurriedly; perhaps nobody realized the truth of her assertion more vividly than he. "But this expert that I know of is such a wonderfully clever man that, if anything can be found out, you may be quite sure that he will succeed."

"Oh—if you think there is even the smallest hope, try him, by all means! Anyhow, it is really the only thing that can be done; and, if it fails"—Miss Luttrell laughed; she was evidently not in the least sanguine—"we can but have recourse to our locks."

"At any rate, you will let my expert have a chance first? Thank you, Miss Luttrell," was the reply, accompanied by a glance so full of gratitude that, had his companion conferred the greatest of favors upon him, it could scarcely have been received with more apparent appreciation. "But what about the check? May I have it some time this evening? In order to lose no time, I shall take it myself by the first train in the morning."

"Oh, yes—take it now, if you like! I shall be only too thankful to get rid of it. I cannot help thinking that there is something rather uncanny about it, and that as long as I have it in my possession the writer of it will be coming to haunt me. I only hope, though," she added, as she handed the precious paper into the Major's charge, "that he will not haunt you."

"No such luck, I am afraid. Forgers are only horribly commonplace beings at the best of times. But never say 'Die,' Miss Luttrell! We shall succeed—see if we don't!"

With these prophetic words the Major raised his hat and went slowly on his way, whilst Evelyn, who was just on the point of entering Lady Howard's room, paused and looked round quickly, her attention having been arrested by a crunching of the gravel and a shadow which had suddenly fallen across her path.

It was Falkland. Evidently he must have followed almost immediately upon their footsteps; and, as Eve turned and surveyed him, she was instantly struck by the deathly whiteness of his face.

"THIS IS A VERY SERIOUS BUSINESS," HE BEGAN.

FISHED WITH DANIEL WEBSTER

How Capt. Pratt Scraped Acquaintance with the Great Statesman.

Every visitor to Scituate or the neighboring villages along the shore and farther inland knows Capt. Pratt, says the Boston Transcript. He is among the oldest of the town's inhabitants, and from an inexhaustible fund of entertaining stories he relates with inimitable drollery many amusing happenings of a time before the south shore became a famous resort. It is counted an important part of the summer's programme nowadays to call on this old man and hear him narrate some of the varied experiences of his ninety years' life. He dearly loves company, and when the wind is in the right direction he can be very entertaining. For more than forty years he was master of ships that visited all the ports along the Atlantic coast. After that he retired to a somewhat quieter life fishing round the zigzag shores of his native Massachusetts. He believes himself to be the only survivor of the company that built the first Minot's Ledge lighthouse, and, although his memory lapses when recent events are under discussion, he is undisputed authority on matters relating to that wonderful undertaking as well as the disastrous storm that swept it and its occupants from the earth, when he was also one of the workmen. Sitting beneath the apple trees that shelter his home, with his little granddaughters at his feet, Capt. Pratt looks up at the sound of every passing vehicle and nods and smiles at the never-failing greeting of "the summer folk." All of his reminiscences are worth hearing, but there is one which he tells with special glee. It relates to a certain day, long ago, when he was fishing in his boat just off the shore with several companions. They anchored at noon and prepared to feast upon a fish chowder the cook had made. Just then a rowboat appeared, carrying two men in rough attire. They asked for bait, which was promptly handed over the side, and as they started away the hospitable captain mentioned the chowder, and invited the strangers to come aboard and join the hungry company. They accepted readily and ate with a keen appreciation of the savory dish. "They do say," remarked one of the fishermen, "that Dan'l Webster brags about the chowders he makes over to Marshfield. I don't believe he could hold a candle to this one. Why, it's the best chowder I ever eat!" "Daniel Webster thinks so, too!" came in thundering tones from the man who had borrowed the bait. "Sure enough," says Capt. Pratt, after a series of chuckles, "it was the great statesman sitting on a pile of rope and holding an empty tinplate in his hands. We were all stirred up, you better believe, but he enjoyed the joke. He and I were great friends after that, and many's the fine luck at mackerel fishing we've had together."

An Idea About Money.

Two men were recently looking at the new mint building, at Seventeenth and Spring Garden streets, and one of them spoke of the fact that in the vaults are stored 65,000,000 silver dollars. His companion made the statement that he would be willing to undertake the job of carrying the coin home in his pockets and hands if allowed to keep it. He claimed that he could readily do it in one year. His house is about one mile distant from the mint. The other man doubted his ability to carry out the contract, and they computed the matter, allowing 10 trips a day as a fair average. As about 20 coins would weight a pound it was agreed that 4,000 coins a trip would be the limit, thus giving a load of fifty pounds. This would make 65,000 trips, or at the rate specified it would take 6,500 days. The would-be coin-carrier now has a better idea of the number represented by the figures and has a poorer opinion of his own guessing abilities.—Philadelphia Record.

Two of a Trade.

From the London Spare Moments: A barrister passing through Chancery lane was accosted by a beggar. "Spare a copper for a poor feller, sir?" whined the mendicant. "Get out of my way! Don't you know I could give you in charge for begging?" replied the man of law. "All right, guv'nor; don't cut up so rusty. I'm only in the same perfesshun as yerself. We both get our livin' by pleadin'," was the unexpected reply.

MONEY THE ATTRACTION

Not Honor, but Real Ducats, is What Bryan Wants.

THE SILVER ORATOR IN BAD LIGHT

Production of a Letter that Makes the Perennial Presidential Candidate Contradict Himself—J. Sterling Morton Produces a Document that Looks Bad for the Self-Constituted Reformer.

J. Sterling Morton made the assertion in the Conservative several weeks ago, says a Lincoln correspondent of the Omaha Bee, that W. J. Bryan had said he wanted office for money and not for honor. The Bee, in its issue of September 27, contained an interview with Bryan, in which he positively denied that he had ever made such an assertion. Undeniable proof is now presented that Mr. Bryan did say that he wanted the money for the office and not for honor.

Because of this unequivocal and sweeping denial of Mr. Bryan and because with the denial he named the editor of the Conservative in an offensive and accusing manner, J. Sterling Morton produces for vindication and verification and as a rebuttal of the unequivocal denial, a letter written by Mr. Bryan on January 11, 1899, in which he says:

"I assure you that it is the money that is in the office and not the honor that attracts me."

The publication of this letter recalls Mr. Bryan's early political history. The man who sprang so quickly into world-famed reputation located at Lincoln in 1888 and a short time later formed a partnership with A. R. Talbot, under the firm name of Talbot & Bryan. In December, 1889, or the year following Mr. Bryan became an applicant for the position of secretary of the State Board of Transportation. He had taken an active part in politics from the day he located in the city and he naturally had many political friends who were willing to assist him in getting the position. He had supported J. Sterling Morton for congressman from the First district during the campaign of 1888 and Morton reciprocated by endorsing him for the secretaryship.

The monetary issue was not an important issue at that time and Mr. Morton and Bryan were warm political friends. Considerable correspondence passed between the two and the following is a copy of one of the letters written by Mr. Bryan:

"LINCOLN, Neb., Jan. 11, 1889.—Hon. J. Sterling Morton, Nebraska City, Neb.: Dear Friend—Your kind letter to Mr. Lease was received and delivered. I think it was well received. The P. S. was judicious, I think. I am grateful to you for your indorsement. Had hesitated to write you because I dislike soliciting aid. I assure you that it is the money that is in the office, not the honor that attracts me. If successful in getting it, it will tide me over my beginning here. With regards to the ladies, I am, yours very truly, W. J. BRYAN."

Failing to secure the appointment to the railway commission Mr. Bryan continued the practice of law, but in 1890 he announced his candidacy for congressman, and in fact, has been a candidate for office ever since. A. J. Sawyer and a number of other prominent First district democrats asked Mr. Morton to come out as a candidate, but he replied "No; not to go and ask any one to vote for me or work for me." His refusal to run made the nomination of Bryan possible and those in charge of the democratic machinery turned to the young orator and he was nominated. John H. Ames of this city, now a gold standard man, was chairman of the congressional committee and it was he who started the Bryan boom. Since the memorable state convention of 1892 the two men who worked together in the campaign of 1888 have been drifting farther and farther apart. Morton pronounced for the gold standard and laid down his views from typewritten manuscript so that there could be no dispute as to where he stood on the situation. Bryan left the party, Ames resigned from the chairmanship of the congressional committee because of the congressional nominee's views on the money question and after he had supported him in his previous campaign.

Bryan's repeated utterances concerning the heinousness of the money power and the greed for wealth recalled to J. Sterling Morton's mind the assertion made in 1889 and a search was instituted among the files of papers at Arbor Lodge for the letter. It was found among a number of other letters written by Mr. Bryan, all somewhat similar and equally interesting. One of them is a message sent after Mr. Morton's defeat for congress congratulating him for running ahead of his ticket. Only a few months after this Mr. Bryan told his friends that he could get even more votes than Mr. Morton got or could get.

What Ails the Letter.

Lincoln Journal: The popocratic organs are all declaring as with one voice that Mr. Bryan's old letter to J. Sterling Morton avowing that he wanted office for the money that was in it and not the honor, is perfectly straightforward, proper and creditable to the great wearer of the Jeffersonian mantle. Then why did Mr. Bryan deny it and why did the popocratic organs denounce Mr. Morton fiercely as a liar and a libeller because he said that Mr. Bryan had once made a statement to that purport to a friend?

Morton doesn't appear to have set any great store by the letter but merely alluded to it because of Br. Bryan's violent and theatrical attacks on people who, according to his pure mind, were in politics for money and whose greed for wealth was undoing the country. And Bryan and his friends evidently saw the point and vociferously denied it and challenged Morton to his proof. That is what is the matter with that letter.

Misrepresentation of Mailley.

York Republican: Do you have confidence in the statements of men who wilfully misrepresent things to you? Things, too, that come within your own knowledge, so that you personally know that they are misrepresentations? Chaplain Mailley is quoted as saying, "Stand by McKinley, right or wrong." He never said anything of the sort. "In times of peace I am for the administration when it is right; in times of war, so long as a rebellous gun is aimed at the stars and stripes, I am for the administration right or wrong. This is not a time for criticism; it is a time for united." That is what Chaplain Mailley said at York, and it is what he said at Lincoln. This is just what he said. Any paper which quotes him as saying otherwise is guilty of a blameworthy action. What they make Mailley say sounds narrow and partisan. What he really said is patriotically American, and right or wrong, is concurred in by all patriotic people. The republican party agreed with the contention of the democrats during the rebellion that the income tax levied and collected for war purposes was unconstitutional. It was necessary, however, as one of the means for the preservation of the country as a nation, and right or wrong, the people stood by it and defined it until it was no longer a necessity, and then it was repealed. The disloyal citizen was opposed to it, but, right or wrong, the men of America stood by it, and so in times of war they stand by any administration that represents their country.

Even Coin Drops Silver.

A citizen of Hebron writes that even the author of "Coin" has stopped talking on silver. He says:

"Coin Harvey, on behalf of the fusion forces, addressed an audience of about 200 at the court house here last night. The meeting had been largely advertised, but no hearers were present outside of this city. The speaker, though advertised as the exponent of free silver, entirely ignored that subject, devoting himself to a schoolmaster's dissertation on the subject of trusts, and an attack on the government and a laudation of the insurrectionists, especially the leaders. The administration was branded as oppressors; the government as unjust. An invitation was extended for queries and the speaker had some fired at him that are still unanswered. The audience was about half republican and they left the hall with renewed determination to stay by the administration, caused by the abuse of the speaker. If the fusionists have any more campaigners like this one the republicans are hopeful that they will be sent here, for, with a few more speeches like this one, success for our candidates is assured."

Bryan Here and Bryan There.

Lincoln Journal: Colonel Bryan is hopping around so much on the expansion question and on the issues of 1900 that it is never safe to guess what he will say unless you know in what part of the country he is doing his talking. In Iowa he says he does not want the troops removed from the Philippines, and lays down a policy for the future of the archipelago that almost amounts to an indorsement of the administration. He did not talk that way in Nebraska, and will not talk in that strain if he happens to be called to Massachusetts before the close of the campaign. Bryan is the most ready man in the world on the stump, and one of his most pronounced accomplishments is his recently acquired ability to shift his ground to suit the prejudices of his different audiences.

Mountain Out of a Molehill.

Seward Reporter: The Omaha World-Herald, followed by its feeble imitators like the Seward Independent-Democrat, is making a great ado about a circular issued by the president of the federation of republican publishers. Among other things, the suggestion is made that republican publishers should not club with populist papers. This causes the virtuous World-Herald and its satellites to go into spasm of horror, and the way they talk about the attempt to "suppress fusion literature" is indeed distressing. One would think that they were in the habit of urging their partisans to subscribe for and read republican papers. But this is the last thing they would do, and they and all their class practice the same thing which they so roundly denounce.

Pops Petered Out.

Topeka Capital: What is the use of talking about populism in Kansas any longer? Let the old republicans come out of it and back where they belong and the democrats go over to their own party. There is only one populist congressional representative in Kansas, and he is a good expansionist, and the party is no longer of national significance. The scheme of fusion, where both sides give up their principles for the offices, is the most corrupt practice in politics. Now is a good time for populists to let go. It ever had any, and the contest is it ever has any, and the contest is strictly between the old parties. A populist in Kansas can never be anything else again but an aid to the democratic party.

Note the Contrast.

There is a marked contrast in the manner in which Judge Reese, the republican nominee, and Silas Holcomb, the fusion nominee, received nominations for supreme judge. In the case of Judge Reese it was with great reluctance that he was induced to accept the nomination, it being strictly a case in which the office sought the man, while with Holcomb he was after the office tooth and toenail and chased after and sought the office in anything but a dignified manner. The voters who believe the office should seek the man and not the man the office, should be quick to make up their minds to cast their ballot for Judge Reese.—Wood River Interests.

A Curious Situation.

The funniest thing about the present state campaign, says the Lincoln Journal, as reported by the visitors to the republican headquarters, is that the fusionists are utterly ignoring state and county issues and are even saying nothing about the silver question. All there is left of the campaign is a sort of idolatory of Bryan. Dyed in the wool popocrats will refuse to discuss political issues with republicans. These fellows will get together like a secret sect and declare to each other that they must swallow Holcomb "to save Bryan." It is the most curious situation ever seen in Nebraska.

'Twas a Ten Strike.

Genoa Leader: The nomination of Judge Reese as candidate for supreme judge by the republicans was a ten strike from a republican standpoint. Judge Reese is 10,000 votes stronger than any man they could have nominated. If he is defeated it will not be the votes of any man honestly interested in reform. His nomination is also gratifying to those republicans who have been fighting the past few years for clean candidates and honest politics within their party.

If.

Silas A. Holcomb addressed the Custer county populist convention which indorsed the following: "We are opposed to the use of passes by our public servants and would recommend the retirement to private life all who accept the same." If populists vote as they have resolved, Mr. Holcomb will be retired all right—Sutton Advertiser.

Passing of the Horse.

So soon as nature sees an improvement there is a change. The candle gave way to electricity and the horse to the automobile. The fact that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters has been sold for over half a century, proves its value. There is nothing to equal it for stomach or liver trouble.

The Queen's Ice.

The stores of ice at Windsor, Osborne and Balmoral castles are very large. At Windsor there is storage room for about 500 tons. There the supply is obtained from the lake beneath the north terrace, from Frogmore, and from the lake between Frogmore and Virginia Water. Ice is not only lavishly used in the royal kitchen, but also for reducing the temperature of her majesty's apartments in hot weather. Then it is packed in pretty wooden buckets and stood in the fireplaces.

A Remarkable Career.

Jno. M. Smyth, head of the great house of Jno. M. Smyth Co., of Chicago, commenced life in a very humble way, but by dint of hard work and great business ability has built up the largest concern of its kind in the world. His name is a synonym for honesty and fair dealing. A German has constructed a bacillus-proof house. The supply of air is first forced through a pipe, it is then filtered through cotton-wool, and, lastly, is driven against a sheet of plate-glass coated with glycerine. This is supposed to catch all the bacteria which have not been seized by the cotton-wool. It is built entirely of glass, that the heat of the sun may kill any stray microbes that have entered by chance.

THE BALLOT FRAUD

A Plan Concocted by Silas A. Holcomb and His Political Lieutenants to Steal Two Seats on the Supreme Bench.

The darkest page in the political history of the state of Nebraska is the story of the infamous recount deal which was engineered during the legislative session of 1897. The attempt was made by a crowd made up of state officials and disreputable politicians to so change the ballots cast by the people that two additional judges of the supreme court could be counted in. The details of the plan were arranged at the house of Silas A. Holcomb, on "A" street in the city of Lincoln. The purpose was to place on the supreme bench William Neville, who is now the fusion candidate for congress in the Sixth district, and J. S. Kirkpatrick, the relative and law partner of Governor Holcomb.

According to sworn evidence that is too well fortified and corroborated to be questioned, the plan to deliberately change the ballots was carefully arranged. Members of the legislature must have been taken into every secret of the scheme, as the most high-handed proceedings took place in the legislative halls to further the ends of the conspirators.

RECORD IS OPEN.

The record in this matter can be inspected by everybody. The house and senate journals of 1897 will show the date of the introduction of the first recount bill; they will show how this was railroaded through in order that the conspirators might get at their work; they will show how the seats of the republican members from Douglas county were stolen in order to increase the majority of the party that was behind the scheme; they will show how the courts were defied, and how the work of changing the ballots was begun in star chamber sessions, part of the time at the dead of night, and part of the time in daylight, but behind locked doors in the office of a state official!

When the recount of the ballots was first publicly proposed a delegation composed of G. M. Lambertson, George W. Post and others called upon the governor and urged that the ballots be publicly counted, and that none but the most reputable citizens of the state be selected to do the work. They pledged the moral support of all good citizens in case the business was thus transacted.

But Silas A. Holcomb paid no attention to their suggestions. He had other plans, and the proof is now plain that the men who were to perform the work were selected long before the recount law was passed.

BAD CHARACTER OF THE MEN.

It is well that the attention of the people be again called to the class of men selected for this work by Silas A. Holcomb. One was a man who had a case he wanted reversed by the supreme court, and who had openly threatened to kill one of the judges if the right kind of a decision was not rendered. One was a roustabout, who had a son serving time in the state penitentiary. One was a political mountebank who was later kicked out of the service of the exposition commission because of questionable dealings. All of the men were men who placed political success before honesty, and who, as future events proved, were promised good places or substantial rewards at the expense of the state treasury. It was a force of men well equipped to perform secretly by night and by day.

The men in the legislature who were assisting in the deal did their part well. They stole seats to gain the necessary majority, and they passed a recount bill which contained no penalty for fraudulent counting. All this is down in black and white in the public records, and is an open page in the minds of the people of Nebraska.

When the public indignation became so strong that the conspirators were compelled to do the balance of the work in the light of day the plan to count in the judges failed, and an attempt was made to destroy the proof of the fraud. The secretary of state, the ink upon whose certificate and oath of office was hardly dry, made way with the original tally sheets, and has never since dared to make them public. All this was done to protect Silas A. Holcomb and his law partner and his political partner and the chairman of his state committee.

Of the men who participated in the recount fraud, all received future rewards except one, and he turned state's evidence on the others. He first confessed to his attorney, who was a man high up in the counsels of the populist party, and then to a populist newspaper man, who gave the story to the public. Chairman Edmisten of the state committee at once confessed his own guilt by making an attempt to kidnap the informer and hustle him out of the country before he could testify to a grand jury.

THE INFORMER CORROBORATED.

The man Simons, who gave away the story, was not a reputable man, and he was known to be absolutely without character when Holcomb appointed him to handle the people's ballots. Under ordinary circumstances his testimony would be viewed with much suspicion. But he has told a straight story, both to the newspapers and on the witness stand, and step by step his story has been corroborated by others, until it must be accepted as the truth. Every opportunity has been given for the conspirators to deny or refute the story, and none of them have had the hardihood to appear.

Last July, when the legislative investigating committee was in session, E. L. Simons and Silas A. Holcomb were both called as witnesses to testify as to the counting of the ballots. Holcomb denied the authority of the committee and hurriedly took the train for Broken Bow. Simons appeared and retold under oath the story which had already been made public. The appearance of the ballots and the evidence of a dozen witnesses from Lincoln and from York corroborated the testimony of the informer, and not a one of Holcomb's cohorts dared to come forward to deny the story. The testimony of the man Simons, in which he gave the details of the fraud and told of Holcomb's connection with it, is given in part below, and will bear the close reading of thoughtful people:

SIMON'S TESTIMONY.

Edward L. Simons, being duly sworn testified, as follows:

By Mr. Pound:

Q.—Mr. Simons state your residence and occupation.

A.—I live in Lincoln, Lancaster county and a brick-layer by occupation.

Q.—How long have you lived there?

A.—Fifteen years.

Q.—You lived here the winter of 1897 when the legislature was in session?

A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Were you employed in any capacity by either of the recount commission about the ballots cast for the constitutional amendment in the election of 1896?

A.—I was employed as a guard to watch the ballots in the vault of the secretary of state's office at the time that the legislature took the ballots from the recount commission.

Q.—You were guard also in the second recount?

A.—I was guard over the ballots during the intermediate time of the two sessions.

Q.—Prior to the time the second committee was appointed did you have anything to do with the ballots or any of them?

A.—Not in the official capacity.

Q.—Did you in any other?

Q.—I did.

Q.—Did you have any special interest in the matter of the result of that recount?

A.—I did.

Q.—State what that was?

A.—I had had a law suit with a party for 150 acres of land and the rent of it for 13 years—200 acres of land and the rent of it for 13 years.

Q.—Where was that suit pending at that time?

A.—At this time it had been settled by compromise but I was figuring on having the heirs' interest taken to the supreme court.

Q.—Did you think that gave you any interest in the result of this recount?

A.—I think it did or would have.

Q.—In what way?

A.—I thought if I would steal the judges in they would help the boy out.

ARRANGED FOR A STEAL.

Q.—Did you approach any one in authority or office with reference to this, particularly about the time these ballots were to be recounted?

A.—I spoke with the parties manipulating the recount.

Q.—Who did you speak to?

A.—Mr. Edmisten.

Q.—Give his initials?

A.—James H. Edmisten, he was state oil inspector and chairman of the State Central Committee.

Q.—When did you speak about this?

A.—Before the legislature convened.

Q.—What did you tell him?

A.—I told him how I was situated and I wanted to help steal those judges in.

Q.—How many times did you speak to him about that?

A.—After the legislature convened I was there every day.

Q.—Did he have an office in the capitol building?

A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—State where it wa ssituated?

A.—It was situated where General Barry's office is now.

Q.—In pursuance with your talk with him was there anything done and if so what was it and when?

A.—There was a bill passed by the legislature for a recount commission and the commission was appointed by the governor and when they was appointed that organized the next day and the next night we—

Q.—Who were we?

A.—That is Edmisten Blake and myself and several other parties.

Q.—That was the night after the commission was appointed and organized?

A.—Night after the organization.

Q.—Where did you meet?

A.—In Edmisten's private office.

Q.—Who procured you to meet there?

A.—We knew where to go.

Q.—Who told you where to go?

A.—It was mutually understood among all of us.

Q.—What preparation did you make there?

EDMISTEN SWIPES THE BALLOTS.

A.—Why we had a talk and Edmisten went into the secretary of state's office and got the first bunch of ballots.

Q.—The secretary of state's office is on the same floor?

A.—Yes, sir; he occupied the corner opposite Edmisten's.

Q.—Where were these ballots at that time?

A.—In the secretary of state's office.

Q.—In what manner?

A.—They were in packages as received by the secretary.

Q.—Was there a guard over them?

A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Who was it?

A.—Kelsey.

Q.—When Edmisten got the ballots what did he do with them?

A.—Opened the envelopes and got them out.

Q.—What was done with them in the room?

A.—We took them in the vault and opened the envelopes and marked up all the blanks excepting three or four in each precinct and changed those that were opposed to the amendment.

Q.—State who was doing the marking?

A.—Blake, Edmisten, myself and another party.

Q.—What preparations for secrecy if any were made? What did you do in the way of preventing intrusion?

A.—Why, we had the outside door that leads from the hallway shut up and the door that leads between the private office and the big room closed and we had the vault door pretty near shut and we put paper over the inwindows so you couldn't see any light in there.

Q.—Was there a light in the outer rooms? Was the gas lighted?

A.—No, sir.

Q.—Where did you get the material you used, the ink and so forth?

A.—We used Edmisten's ink, after that there was about four bottles got of black ink.

Q.—After the ballots were marked as you described, what was done with them?

A.—Wrapped up and packed to the secretary's office.

Q.—Would you go back and forwards several times during the evening or only once?

A.—As soon as we got one bunch finished, we would go and get some more.

Q.—Describe how the ballots were marked?

A.—The blanks were marked for the amendment and those voted against amendment we would put a cross for the amendment at the top and one below.

Q.—That would leave a mark for the amendment and still another for the Supreme Judge creating the impression that the voter had voted for those two and against the others?

A.—No; the commission had passed a resolution to give the benefit of all the doubtful votes for the amendment and we would make two crosses for the one as against the other.

Q.—So the object was to change them so as to create the impression in favor of the amendment?

A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—How long were you engaged in this work?

A.—We worked until about midnight.

Q.—You say the commission passed a resolution to give the benefit of the doubt in favor of the amendment; how do you know? Were you present?

A.—I wasn't present. I was informed by the commission.

Q.—By the commission themselves?

A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—What number informed you?

A.—Blake.

Q.—He was one of the gentlemen present altering the ballots?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—George W. Blake?

A.—Yes sir.

FIRST NIGHT'S WORK.

Q.—Did you have any counties marked the first night?

A.—The first two counties were Blaine and Banner. Edmisten carried one and I carried the other.

Q.—When the ballots were marked, how were they returned?

A.—They were put back in the envelope and the package wrapped up and taken back to the secreary's office.

Q.—Restored to their former appearance as near as possible?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—In taking the ballots to and from the secretary's office describe the manner in which you did it.

A.—The first two nights I had a large overcoat that I threw over my shoulders and I had the package under that.

Q.—Did you go through the main hall?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—Was there any secret way in the way of knocking so the guard would know who it was?

A.—Yes sir, we had a private rap.

Q.—Describe what that was?

A.—Three single raps.

Q.—When you gave that rap he opened the door?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—Did you make any change after the first night?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—Describe that.

A.—We were getting along to the big packages. I couldn't carry them under my coat any more and it was dangerous to go through the hall with them and we found a way from the hall in the basement, into the basement room under Edmisten's office, which had a place leading to the upstairs. By opening a trap door we could get through into the private office.

Q.—Did you carry them through the basement after the first night?

A.—Yes sir.

AFRAID OF GETTING CAUGHT.

Q.—Describe to the committee the reasons that led you to do that. Was it in fear of any interruption?

A.—Well, there was. A person was liable to be caught with the package in his possession.

Q.—Was there any sign of interruptions?

A.—The second night we were there Mr. Norval was in the hall.

Q.—Judge Norval of the Supreme court?

A.—Yes sir, he was looking around and we were afraid of being caught. His wife was down there to a meeting of the ladies of some institution and he was waiting for her and walking up and down the hall and didn't know but somebody was watching us.

Q.—How many nights in all were you engaged in this matter you described?

A.—Four nights.

Q.—Tell about the date of this?

A.—The first night of the day after the commission was organized. It was the four nights following that.

Q.—I wish you would tell the manner in which the ballots were kept in the secretary's office. Were they in a vault?

A.—No sir, they were in the big room.

Q.—Piled up were they?

A.—Yes sir, on the east side of the room leading to the main hall from the secretary's office.

Q.—Was that one of the rooms used by the secretary of state in his ordinary business?

A.—Yes sir. Well, it wasn't used at the time of the recount at all. There wasn't anybody else in there excepting the recount commission. When the legislature meets they generally use that for an investigating room or to give audience for the committees to work in.

Q.—Were the same parties present each of the four nights that you have mentioned?

A.—Yes, they were all there.

Q.—Do you know who occupied the room where those ballots were kept. Isn't it a fact that Mr. Starrit of the secretary of state's office occupied that room?

A.—No, I wouldn't be positive. He might have had a desk there to work an hour a day or so.

Q.—He was not in there in the day time?

A.—No sir, he had an office at another place.

Q.—The room that I was speaking of. You may state whether or not the same persons were present on all of these occasions.

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—Take Mr. Edmisten for instance. Was he present the whole length of time?

A.—No, he used to go and open the door and start the work, and when we started he would leave.

Q.—How long would he stay there?

A.—About an hour or so.

Q.—Did he take part in the marking?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—Did you have anything to do with the ballot boxes in any other precinct?

A.—The first night we opened the poll books to see how many votes were cast, and we found out it didn't do any good and we didn't have the ballots to mark up and we didn't open the poll books any more.

Q.—Just describe what kind of mark you would make and how?

A.—Well, if the ballot was blank entirely we would just mark opposite the amendment.

Q.—Was there any effort made in the marking of the ballots to make them appear differently as though marked by different hands?

A.—What I marked I changed the form of the mark and the other fellows as much as I took notice of just went right ahead and had the same cross all the way through.

Q.—How long on the average would you be engaged in this on the four nights you have mentioned?

FIXED YORK COUNTY.

A.—The first three nights. One night we worked until 2 o'clock. The last night when we fixed up the York county ballots we worked until half past 1 o'clock, and then two of us. I got York county, and two of us stayed until morning.

Q.—Can you name any of the counties the ballots of which were marked in this manner?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—Name some of them?

A.—Blaine, Banner, Chase, Dodge, Brown, Keya Paha, Dawson, Gosper, Keith, Wayne, Box Butte, McPherson, Scotts Bluff, Cherry.

Q.—How about Harlan county?

A.—Harlan county.

Q.—How about Dundy county?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—And Sioux?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—And York county?

A.—York county was the last.

Q.—And Dodge county?

A.—That was fixed afterwards.

Q.—You did fix Dodge county?

A.—The way we fixed that we laid one precinct on another and counted them.

Q.—Explain that again please?

A.—After the legislative committee took the ballots I got on first as one of the clerks and it was my place to open the packages of ballots and the envelopes and then I would give the counters the ballots and they would hand them back to me and I would take half of those and lay them on the next precinct and send them back as much as I thought the package would stand.

Q.—In other words you would count them over several times?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—That was done during the session of the recount committee?

A.—And the legislative committee, yes.

Q.—The committee was all present?

A.—They didn't know anything of it.

Q.—Who did know of it besides you?

A.—The man we was counting for.

Q.—Who was he?

OBERFELTER A BALLOT FIXER.

A.—I think it was Oberfelter.

Q.—He was a member of the committee?

A.—He was a member of the governor's commission, and after the legislature started the count the commission was all employed as clerks helping to count them except Hedlund.

Q.—Do you recognize any of those exhibits lying before you on the table?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—If you were to look at any of those could you identify them as the ballots you had marked?

A.—This package of ballots were blanks that had not been used at the polls and we got them down there and we just marked them for the amendment and we put them in.

Q.—Can you explain how they come to be separate in this matter?

A.—They were put in different wards.

Q.—In other words you distributed those uncast ballots?

A.—Yes sir. They were distributed and rejected by the recount people.

Q.—Was there anything done by way of trying to affect the signature of the judges on any of those ballots?

A.—There was in one precinct.

Q.—What precinct?

A.—At the precinct in which McCool Junction is in.

Q.—Could you identify any of those if you could see them?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—At the time that you opened the envelopes containing the ballots on this amendment in the several precincts in York county, or they were opened by you and others, were there any uncast ballots in any of the packages?

A.—In the large package there was a big roll of unused ballots.

Q.—Not signed by any particular person?

A.—They were signed by nobody they were blank.

Q.—What was done with those?

A.—We marked them up with crosses and scattered them in.

Q.—Was the names of the judges purported to be signed or written on any of them?

A.—They was in one or two places.

BALLOTS IDENTIFIED.

(The envelope marked Exhibit "11" was opened by the committee and the ballots marked with the initial letter "F" at the top and are counted by the committee and found to contain 202 ballots.)

Q.—Handing you a bunch of ballots taken from the envelope containing the ballots cast for the constitutional amendment of McFadden township I will ask you if you can identify any of the ballots altered by you or those with you and will ask you if you can identify any of the ballots and the names of the judges written by you on them or any of those with you?

A.—I identify some of the ballots as ballots charged by myself and the other man that was with me. I also identify some of the ballots there that never went through the ballot box.

Q.—Handing you this ballot exhibit 37 I will ask you to point out any alterations you discover on them?

A.—That ballot was voted no at the top of the page that was not for all the amendments and it was changed by putting one yes at the head and one cross opposite the head for the judges and one cross opposite the yes down below for another amendment.

Q.—Was that your usual method?

A.—That is the method that was adopted for the ballot that had a no voted in at the head of the ticket.

Q.—What was your proceedure in case the ballot was blank?

A.—In case the ballot was blank the cross was put opposite the upper yes.

Q.—Suppose you found a ballot with the no, opposite the proposition for the supreme judges, what did you do then?

A.—We would put a cross opposite the yes and a cross opposite the upper yes, that is, voting two yeses for the amendment.

Q.—Then how would you count it?

A.—The commission gave the amendment the benefit of the doubt.

Q.—The two yeses overcame the one no?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—And you were there to create a reasonable doubt for the committee?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—In case of a ballot in which there was a no cross, opposite each of the proposed amendments, what was your procedure in such a case?

A.—Make a yes opposite the amendment and a yes at the end of it.

Q.—Handing you exhibit 38 I will ask you whether you recognize that as an altered ballot?

A.—Yes sir, it is.

Q.—This ballot identified as exhibit 38 shows a cross after the word no, after each of the amendments, at the top it also shows a cross after the yes, and it shows a cross after the yes on the amendment increasing the number of judges, how would a ballot of that kind be counted?

A.—For the amendment.

Q.—And was that the rule you followed right along?

A.—Yes sir, we counted the yes for the amendment for the judges and the no for all the balance.

Q.—Do you remember how many ballots were changed or altered in any way?

A.—No sir, I do not, we just altered them as we got to them, we kept no track of that, we had not time for that.

Q.—Can you make an estimate?

A.—Why there was in the 21 counties I think there were something like seven thousand. Harlan county had something over a thousand.

Q.—Do you remember how many York county had?

A.—Twelve hundred.

Q.—Mr. Simons, when was it that Mr. Edmisten first spoke to you in relation to those ballots?

A.—Why, when Edmisten spoke to me it was about the beginning of the session, others spoke to me prior to that.

Q.—Who had spoken to you before that?

A.—Some of the rest that was helping count.

Q.—What was said?

THE SCHEME OUTLINED.

A.—They said they were going to have a recount of the judges and they would find enough ballots to show that they were elected.

Q.—When did you first talk with Edmisten?

A.—That was prior to the beginning of the legislative session.

Q.—He told you did he that you would be one of the parties to help do it?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—And engaged you to, that is told you what was to be done?

A.—No sir, he didn't say we were to do any marking, only we would steal the judges in.

Q.—Where were you when this conversation took place?

A.—In his office.

Q.—Did you talk over your affairs or operations?

A.—Not until the commission was appointed.

Q.—What was said when you started if anything. Give the conversation that was had as to what should be done?

A.—I don't know only to mark them that is all.

Q.—Did Edmisten mark any?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—He set the example for you, did he show you what he wanted done?

A.—Yes sir. He started off showing where to change the ballots and where to mark no, and to mark the yes and that would count. I learned the next day they had passed a resolution by the commission to give the benefit of the doubtful ballots to the amendment, two yeses and one no was counted for the amendment so that was the way it was carried on all the way through.

Q.—What compensation or reward were you to receive?

A.—I wasn't to receive any except the consideration of my case before the courts.

Q.—That was the understanding was it, your case should be decided in your favor?

A.—Yes sir, among the parties interested in the ballots.

Q.—Who gave you the assurance that would be done?

A.—Edmisten and Blake.

Q.—Was Blake a member of the legislature?

A.—No sir, one of the commission.

Q.—What connection if any did he have with the democratic or populist party?

A.—He was treasurer of the State Central committee.

Q.—And Edmisten was chairman?

A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—How did you know you could help yourself by helping them count the ballots, who told you or where did you get your information from if anybody told you?

A.—Blake and Edmisten knew I had a case ready for the supreme court and if we would steal those two judges in I had two of them favorable to me.

HE WAS A REFORMER.

Q.—At that time what particular party did you affiliate with?

A.—I affiliated with the populists.

Q.—Now with reference to those ballots before from those precincts in York county, McFadden precinct, have you examined all those ballots to-day?

A.—Mostly.

Q.—Did you find any ballots there that are ballots that were marked by yourself or anyone else for this recount commission?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—While you were in the vault the first night you were changing the ballots who did the marking first?

A.—Edmisten got the first county and took it in, and when I came in with the second county they were marking, Edmisten, and Blake and another party. Edmisten got the first package of ballots from the secretary's room.

Q.—Where did he get it?

A.—Out of the secretary's room.

Q.—How did you get in the Secretary's room?

A.—There was a guard there let us in.

Q.—About what time was that?

A.—Eight o'clock.

Q.—Did you see anything when he came in?

A.—It was under his coat.

Q.—How do you know if you couldn't see it?

A.—I did see it.

Q.—Who told you to go to the secretary's office?

A.—Edmisten.

Q. What for?

A.—To get the ballots.

Q.—And what did he say if anything about what he wanted with the ballots?

A.—We understood what we wanted.

Q.—You learned that in a private conversation?

A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—How did you understand they were to mark two yesses to overcome a "no?"

A.—They were doing it and Edmisten said the commission would count those for the amendment.

Q.—Did he say that was the way to mark them?

A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Did you commence marking on the package you took in.

A.—I started to mark on the package they had there.

Q.—And continued to mark until they got through that package?

A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—How many were marking altogether?

A.—Seven.

Q.—How long did you continue at it that night?

A.—Until half past eleven or twelve.

Q.—How did you get the ballots out of the package?

A.—Untied the string and broke the seal open.

Q.—What did you do with the ballots after you got through?

A.—Wrapped them up in a package again.

Q.—And put a seal on them?

A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Couldn't anyone tell the seal had been opened?

A HANDY MAN.

A.—Yes, sir but the man that opened them in the morning was helping fix them at night.

Q.—That man was whom?

A.—Blake.

Q.—Did you see the commission at work in the morning?

A.—Yes, sir; I saw them there.

Q.—Who was opening the packages?

A.—Blake.

Q.—After they told you that this marking ballots had to be stopped did Mr. Blake or Edmisten ever talk with you about what had been done. Did either of them ever talk with you about it? Ever say anything to you about secrecy?

A.—Well, at the last election—

Q.—No, right at this time after you stopped marking ballots?

A.—No, they didn't say anthing then.

Q.—Did you know it was a crime and there was a penalty attached to it?

A.—I know there was a law to that effect but I knew it was no good.

Q.—How did you know it was no good?

A.—We all knew it up there.

Q.—How did you find it out, you are not a lawyer?

A.—I am no lawyer, but I knew the way they passed the bill it wasn't any good.

Q.—Did you get any information from any source?

A.—Only what we talked over there.

Q.—Did you have any assurance from anybody that they would stand by you if you would take the chances?

A.—Nothing only that I wouldn't be imprisoned long.

Q.—Who told you that?

A.—Edmisten.

THE GOVERNOR WOULD FIX THINGS.

Q.—What did he tell you he would do if you were tried and convicted?

A.—He said if they should catch us and send us up as long as we had the governor with us we wouldn't stay in prison long.

Q.—The governor would pardon you?

A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Are you positive Edmisten told you that?

A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Did Blake tell you that?

A.—We were all in the room while the talk was going on.

Q.—Did you have any communication with the secretary of state?

A.—Not until after it was all over with.

SUPPLEMENT TO THE ARGUS.

Table Rock, - - - Neb.

Q.—What was that conversation you had with the secretary of state after it was all over with?

A.—My step-son died then there was two jobs of masonry. I went to ask for one of them and they promised it to me.

Q.—Who did?

A.—Blake, Edmisten and the whole outfit.

Q.—Who were the whole outfit?

A.—Maret.

Q.—Who was Maret?

A.—The private secretary of the governor.

Q.—How did Maret come to promise you that place?

A.—They promised to use their influence to get me the position.

Q.—Did Maret know anything about what you had been doing in the vault?

A.—Yes. sir.

Q.—Did he ever say anything to you about it?

A.—No; in marking the ballots he only said to be careful, don't let them catch you.

Q.—When did he say that?

A.—While the work was going on.

Q.—How did you know what he meant?

A.—I saw him in Edmisten's office.

Q.—Was he there while the work was going on?

A.—No, sir.

Q.—Did he ever say anything or did you hear anybody say anything while the work was going on?

A.—I got some pencils to mark up the ballots with from him and he sharpened up a little one.

Q.—What was the little one made for?

A.—To put in my fingers so when I made a cross it couldn't be distinguished.

Q.—About how long was this pencil Maret made for you?

A.—A little over half an inch.

Q.—How did you use it?

A.—Between those two fingers.

Q.—That is between the index finger and the one next to it?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—The pencil was easily concealed there?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—How did you learn how to hold it?

A.—I made one and when I got in a hurry I told him to make one?

Q.—You didn't make the first one?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—And he made the second one?

A.—Yes sir.

MARET WAS ON HAND.

Q.—When Maret made the second pencil for you did you say anything to him about what you wanted it for?

A.—Yes sir, he saw me use it.

Q.—Where?

A.—Where we were working.

Q.—What were you doing?

A.—Working for the second count.

Q.—What were you doing?

A.—Counting the ballots.

Q.—And marking ballots?

A.—I was.

Q.—And was Maret in there when you were marking the ballots?

A.—Yes sir.

STOLE EIGHT THOUSAND VOTES.

Q.— Now have you any way Mr. Simons by which you can tell or approximately tell the number of ballots, before the governor's commission and before the legislative commission took hold of them, were changed?

A.—I should judge about seven or eight thousand ballots.

Q.—And this increase of votes was all made from the remarking ballots, and some substituting ballots?

A.—I judge there was seven or eight thousand ballots marked.

Q.—Did you use any of the ballots that had not been marked at all, by the voters, I mean?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—What would you do with them?

A.—Mark a cross on them.

Q.—Then there were but two ways if I understand you that you increased the ballots in favor of the amendment, or three ways rather, by marking two yeses to overcome one no, and by using blank ballots and by taking out ballots that were against the amendment?

A.—No, I didn't take any out.

Q.—Then there were only two ways you increased the vote in favor of the amendment?

A.—Some of the ballots had two marks on at the top and one at the bottom against the amendment, and we would put two for it, we would mark the blanks if it had a cross at the head for all the amendments or against it we put one at the top and one below.

Q.—You mean where you changed one for the amendment you make a cross at the top and then make another down at the bottom and by these two marks you would increase the ballots?

A.—Yes sir.

SCHEME HATCHED AT HOLCOMB'S

Q.—Mr. Simons, didn't you have a conversation with Mr. Holcomb at one time about this matter?

A.—No, I never had a conversation with him, the thing started in his house.

Q.—At his home?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—Who was there?

A.—Maret, Dahlman, Edmisten and I forget who else.

Q.—You were there?

A.—No, I wasn't there.

Q.—How did you know these men were all there.

A.—I was told so by a party that was there.

Q.—Who were you told by?

A.—I don't know whether it was Dahlman or Edmisten, but as I was informed by a party that was there they decided to give this charge to Edmisten and he was to see to it.

Q.—That is all hearsay you don't know anything about it of your own personal knowledge?

A.—Those that was there told me.

Q.—Edmisten you say told you that?

A.—I wouldn't say whether it was Edmisten or Dahlman.

Q.—Would you be positive it was either one of them?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—Then one or the other of those men told you of the meeting at the home of the governor?

A.—Yes sir.

PORTER PROVIDED CUSTODIAN.

Q.—Who put the custodian in charge of these ballots?

A.—Porter.

Q.—Was that the man that let you in after the ballots?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—Who fixed that with him?

A.—Edmisten.

Q.—Did you hear Edmisten when he was doing it?

A.—No sir.

Q.—How do you know?

A.—When he started for the first package of ballots he said I will go in and see Kelsey.

Q.—Where is Kelsey?

A.—He is chief janitor of the State house.

Q.—Do you remember talking with me last winter during the legislature about this matter?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—What was it you told me there in relation to your going into the ex-Governor's office and telling him about doing this and he said don't stay and talk to me here, I don't want to hear it here?

GOT HOLCOMB TO HELP.

A.—We were working on Fremont in Dodge county. We had the Dodge county ballots on our table and I took the first ward and put on the second and the second on the third and counted them and we had more ballots than voters and I was afraid of an investigation and I went in and told the Governor to hold the commission back until after I got back to the ballots for a few minutes so I could straighten them out.

Q.—That was during the first count, during your manipulation of the ballots?

A.—No sir, it was during the legislative second recount.

Q.—Did you tell the Governor at that time the difficulty you had got into?

A.—Yes sir, I told him I had made a mistake, that we had more ballots than voters and I didn't want an investigation.

Q.—What reply did he make?

A.—He said I am sorry you told me about that, I didn't want to know anything about this.

Q.—What else did he say?

A.—That is all I remember.

Q.—Did he say he would hold the commission back?

A.—He didn't say he would.

Q.—He did do it?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—You had time enough?

A.—Yes sir. I fixed the matter.

Q.—How long did it take you to fix the matter?

A.—It only took long enough to take up three packages and put a part of them in different envelopes. When the committee went to work the legislative proposition was so they didn't see anything anyway.

Q.—I will ask you whether at any time you have stated what you here testified to other than your testimony here given and the published account in the paper?

A.—Well, I have in a private conversation.

Q.—To whom?

A.—Oh, I made it to Hedlund and William Leese.

Q.—When did you tell Hedlund?

A.—I don't know that I told him, he knew there was work being done.

Q.—Was that after it was all done?

A.—Yes sir.

Morris F. Tyler, Yale, 1870, president of the Southern New England Telephone company, and professor of general jurisprudence in the uinversity, has been elected treasurer of Yale, in place of Mr. Farnum, whose resignation takes effect January 1 next.

A BOLD PLOT UNCOVERED

KEARNEY, Neb., Oct. 18.—(Special.)—"Why did Juan Boyle resign chairmanship of the democratic congressional committee for the Sixth district?" That is the question that has been frequently of late propounded by the Bee, but no fusionist of the district has rushed into print with the explanation sought.

It will be remembered that when the populists and democrats met in two conventions some weeks since at Lexington to nominate a candidate for congress to fill the vacancy in the Sixth district created by the death of the late W. L. Greene last winter in Omaha, the efforts of the fusion conspirators to secure a combination upon a joint candidate slipped a cog. As a result two candidates were placed in nomination. The democrats presented M. C. Harrington of North Platte, and the populists put up William Neville of the same place. At the time both parties were obdurate and considerable bitter feeling was engendered by the unavailing contention.

No sooner was the result of the conventions heralded broadcast than the leaders of the fusion machine, who conveniently find lodgement in both parties and manage to act as bellwethers to the neighborly herds of confiding voters, began to clamor for the withdrawal of Harrington. For a time Harrington and his friends put on a determined front, protested that the democrats were entitled to the nomination and that he would certainly make the race. This apparently dauntless determination of Harrington to hold to the nomination remained unshaken until the gathering of the fusion clans later at Omaha for the triangular state convention, when it went out with a suddenness akin to that which marks the extinction of an electric light tickled by a broken circuit.

Of course Colonel Bryan was in Omaha at that time and from his room in a hotel was directing the operations of the three conventions through his lieutenants in each much as one would marshal the pawns upon the boards in a three-cornered, one-sided game of chess.

Noon of the day of the conventions, before they had been called to order, saw a rush of Sixth district fusion statesmen toward Bryan's room. Among them was M. C. Harrington, and it was given out that the "row in the Sixth district was about to be straightened out." Just what occurred in that room during the secret conclave that followed may never be definitely known to those not actually present, but, judging from events that immediately followed, a plan was agreed on that contemplated the election of a populist to congress from the Sixth district by the aid of deception and perjury, the conspirators being moved to this sacrifice by the consideration and understanding among themselves that

"After 1900 there will be no necessity of a third party and by our many sacrifices we will win over nearly all the populists to our party."

It is not merely surmised that this was the moving consideration that prompted the participants in that meeting. It is absolutely known that Mr. Harrington came out of the meeting imbued with that conviction, as it appears in his correspondence subsequently had with Juan Boyle, the chairman of his congressional committee. Whether Harrington suddenly conceived this idea or imbibed it from Bryan is not stated, but something new must have been presented to him during that meeting by his doughty leader which prompted him to relinquish his nomination, as that is the reason he assigns to the chairman of his committee for giving up his fight. It must have been Bryan who suggested to him that his withdrawal would wipe out the third party by winning the populists over to the democracy.

It was also undoubtedly in pursuance of the plans adopted at that meeting that Harrington at once placed himself in correspondence with Juan Boyle, chairman of his committee, in order to justify his withdrawal. His letters to Boyle afford an insight into those plans, which can rest on nothing less than downright perjury. In one of them he writes to Boyle a suggestion that must be of intense interest to the honest follower of the populist cause, namely, that "We must accept the inevitable—The future of democracy in the Sixth district depends largely upon the number we can draw from populist ranks. There will be but two parties, and the leaders of the democratic party now will be the recognized leaders then. Submit gracefully, even though we have to stretch a point to do so."

What Harrington meant by this invitation to "stretch a point" is the act at which Juan Boyle balked. It meant simply that Boyle should make a sworn certificate to the effect that the convention which had nominted Harrington had by resolution authorized the congressional committee to fill any vacancies that might occur on the ticket. With the letter Harrington sent a certificate ready prepared, even ambodying therein what purported to be the resolution adopted for the filling of vacancies. The reason Mr. Boyle balked was that n such resolution was ever passed by that convention, and he was not ready to perjure himself even for Bryan's sake. That was the rock upon which the ark of fusion conspiracy split for some time, until a more servile tool was found and Mr. Boyle, finding that his scruples had made him distasteful to some of his former associates, resigned.

This is the simple story of facts revealed in the correspondence of its participants, the original letters of which are reproduced in the public statement of Juan Boyle as follows:

JUAN BOYLE'S ADDRESS.

The crime for fusion. Mr. Boyle exposes the fraudulent scheme to place the name of Neville on the ballot. Correspondence that passed between Boyle and Harrington:

To the Democrats of the Sixth Congressional District:

I desire to state to you my recent action as chairman of your committee. I had the honor to preside as your chairman at the convention at Lexington. We nominated Hon. M. C. Harrington. We made every effort to have him accepted by the populist convention; even offered to join them in convention with our 137 delegates, while they had 208, and abide by the result. They turned us down with scorn, demanding that the only thing we could do was to take Mr. Harrington off. I was elected chairman of the congressional district committee. Soon after the convention Mr. Harrington withdrew, although just pervious to this he issued a notice that he would make the race, I receiving my notice by telegraph. He afterward withdrew. Soon after that I received the following letter, enclosed the appended certificate for me to make affidavit to, which I declined to do on the grounds that the convention at Lexington had not authorized the committee to place any name on the ticket:

HARRINGTON'S GIVE-AWAY LETTER.

NORTH PLATTE, Neb., Sept. 27, 1899.

JUAN BOYLE, Chairman, Kearney, Neb.:

Dear Sir—I trust by this time that you are reconciled and satisfied with my intentions to withdraw from the race for congress. There is no other solution of the matter. It is the only logical thing to do. It will not hurt the democratic party of this district, on the contrary it will strengthen us for all time to come. After 1900 there will be no necessity for a third party, and by our many sacrifices we will win over nearly all the populists to our party. I will prepare a communcation to the congressional committee of the Sixth district, today—making formal withdrawal and send a copy of same to you. The vacancy ought to be filled at once by the chairman and secretary by placing the name of William Neville at the head of the democratic ticket. The chairman of every county central committee in the Sixth district has written urging prompt action as above indicated excepting Dawson county. It would be disastrous to wait any longer.

Please give me your answer as soon as you receive official notice of my withdrawal. Mr. Neal, secretary, is absent in Virginia and I am authorized to act for him—and can sign any paper necessary. The procedure next will be to file with secretary of state a document substituting the name of William Neville by virtue of authority vested in the congressional committee. They have all agreed to it excepting Dr. Baker of Lexington. Yours very respectfully,

M. C. HARRINGTON.

On October 3 another (fac-simile of which is herewith given) and a certificate formed to sign and swear to was secured from Mr. Harrington.

WHAT THEY ASKED BOYLE TO SWEAR TO.

State of Nebraska, Sixth Congressional District, ss:

We hereby certify that at a delegate convention held on the 18th day of August, 1899, at Lexington, Dawson county, Neb., pursuant to a duly advertised call for the purpose of placing in nomination a candidate for congressman for the Sixth congressional district, which convention was composed of voters representing the democratic party, a political party which at the last election polled more than 1 per cent of the entire vote cast in this congressional district, the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, By the democratic party of the Sixth Congressional district of Nebraska, in convention assembled, that the congressional committee consisting of the chairman of the county central committees of the several counties in this district, be and they are hereby empowered and authorized to fill any vacancies which may occur on the ticket named by us here today."

We further certify that a vacancy has occurred by the resignation and withdrawal of M. C. Harrington as a candidate for congress, and we further certify that the said committee was organized by the election of Juan Boyle of Kearney, Buffalo county, Neb., as chairman and presiding officer, and W. B. McNeal of North Platte, Lincoln county, Neb., as secretary, and that said committee hereby names and nominates William Neville of North Platte, Lincoln county, Neb., as the regular candidate representing the party above named, for the office of congressman for the Sixth Congressional district of Nebraska.

_____Chairman.

_____Secretary.

State of Nebraska, Buffalo County, ss:

I, Juan Boyle, of Kearney, Buffalo county, Neb., do solemnly swear that I was duly elected chairman of the democratic congressional committee of the Sixth congressional district of Nebraska and that the above certificate and the statements therein are true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Subscribed in my presence and sworn to before me this —— day of ——, 1899.

State of Nebraska, Lincoln county, ss:

I, W. B. McNeal, of North Platte, Lincoln county, Neb., do solemnly swear that I was duly elected secretary of the democratic congressional district of Nebraska and that the above certificates and the statements therein are true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Subscribed in my presence and sworn to before me this —— day of ——, 1899.

MR. BOYLE'S REPLY.

KEARNEY, Neb., Oct. 5, 1899.

Dear Sir: I had expected to visit North Platte and see you in person. I received your letter and enclosed affidavits which you sent for me to sign; also telegram from Mr. McNeal. Of course I could not sign the affidavits, as the convention did not pass any resolution authorizing the committee to place any name on the ticket in case you should withdraw. While I am greatly disappointed in your withdrawal, I realize fully that you have only yourself to consult as to your best interests in this matter.

I neither rely upon any promises that were made for the future by the populists nor do I believe anything that is square of honorable can be expected from them. I have no sympathy whatever for the socalled democrats who have for years been trading with these people and each year using the argument that this would be the last year we would be called upon to do it.

When it comes to stretching the pointing and making a false oath, I must decline to do it, even when urged by my friends or by this reform movement, so-called.

I believe that you should have been endorsed by the populists, but I believe you would have won whether endorsed by them or not.

I attended the last convention as a democrat and I am perfectly willing, if the democrats wish another convention called to renominate in your place, to call the same if the committee will indicate its desire on the subject.

I am sorry, Mr. Harrington, that you did not make the race and am also sorry to be obliged to decline to do what you apparently wish me to do. I do not understand, of course, how it is in human nature for you to sincerely desire this, as, if you will take warning by what I say, there is nothing in the future for you to expect by being a party to this trade between a few democrats and populists, no matter what their professions may be.

I will be very glad to hear from you further in this matter and if I can in any way serve you will be glad to do so. Yours very truly, JUAN BOYLE.

As will be seen I offered in this letter to call together a convention where the democrats would have the privilege of deciding who should be named on the ticket. I received no reply to this but my attention was called to a call made by Mr. McNeal, secretary of the committee, for last Monday to be held in North Platte. I received no notice by mail or wire as to this committee meeting, but I went to North Platte to look after the interests of the democrats of the district. Mr. McNeal and myself were the only persons present. At 5 o'clock, after waiting all day for some one of the committee to appear, we issued a notice to the democrats of the district and sent the same to the World-Herald and Bee, saying that the democrats could vote as they pleased, committee was not authorized to act, as none were present. At 6 o'clock p. m. a Mr. McEvoy appeared on the scene and wanted to claim that he was the committee and wanted me to call the meeting to order. I declined to do so, as the committee numbers thirty and he was only one-thirtieth of the number. I saw I was very distasteful to him so told him I would resign, which I did, placing my resignation in the hands of Mr. McNeal to be handed in when the committee would meet. McEvoy has placed a certificate on file at the state house, placing the name of Mr. Neville as our candidate. This is contrary to law and to the usage of the democratic party for one man to assume to be chairman and committee. The party is controlled by the majority. I protest against it, and if we are to have a party in the Sixth district now is the time to assert ourselves. Mr. McEvoy had a few letters from members of the committee advising Neville's name be placed on the ticket through the committee, but in almost every case they were men who had received nominations in the counties on the so-called fusion ticket, for coroner or some other office and wanted Neville to help them through. Mr. Neville, I see by a notice in the World-Herald, denies the writing of a letter showing him as advocating expansion, but says his brother wrote it, but I am informed by Mr. Minor and Mr. Harrington of North Platte that they heard Neville in a speech a short time since declare himself in favor of expansion. Mr. McEvoy says a man may change his mind. This is true, but he may change it again at Washington if he should be elected.

Our convention at Lexington was, with few exceptions, a representative body of rock-ribbed democrats, the exception being a few court reporters and those receiving pap from pop judges and at the state house. Let us be democrats and not recognize this fraud and let the gentlemen at Lincoln and Omaha understand that hereafter they must make us acquainted with their trades before we call our convention and have to travel hundreds of miles to fulfill our duty to the party, and when we do nominate a clean, honorable gentleman as our candidate, not be ordered by those out of our party, as well as some in it, to take him off our ticket.

Believing I am acting in harmony with the wishes of all honest, honorable democrats in the Sixth district, I will make the contest of this placing Mr. Neville's name on the democratic ticket, and hope that in the future we will be permitted to act without the interference of any other parties outside our district. In our votes on election day let us shuck corn or vote for Mr. Harrington, although he is not on our ticket, so as to show our loyalty to the democratic party. Mr. McNeal, our secretary, informed me that there was no record whatever of a resolution having been passed to place the name on the ticket, although he had every other record of every motion and resolution passed. Respectfully,

JUAN BOYLE.

Sun Baths.

It is being urged by high authorities that the relief afforded by the sun's rays to wearing pain, neuralgic and inflammatory, is more effective and lasting than that of any application whatever. Those who have face ache should prove it for themselves, sitting in a sunny window, where the warmth falls full on the cheek. For nervous debility and insomnia the treatment of all others is rest in sunshine. There is no tonic like it, provided the good effects are not neutralized by ill-feeling. To restore a withered arm, a palsied rheumatic limb, or to bring a case of nervous prostration up speedily, a most efficient part of the treatment will be to expose the limb or the person several hours.

The snail is blessed with great powers of vitality. A case is recorded of an Egyptian desert snail which came to life after having passed four years glued to a card in the English museum. Some species in the collection of a certain naturalist revived after they had apparently been dead for fifteen years, and snails, having been frozen for weeks in solid blocks of ice, have recovered upon being thawed out. The eggs are as hard to destroy as the snail itself. They seem perfectly indifferent to freezing, and have been known to prove productive after having been shriveled up in an oven to the semblance of grains of sand.

Father of Mother Goose.

A movement has been started in England to erect a fitting monument over the tomb of John Newbury, the first man to collect and publish the immortal melodies of Mother Goose. Newbury, working in conjunction with the poet Goldsmith, was also the man who gave to the world "Goody Two Shoes" and a number of other infantile classics. His grave in St. Thomas' churchyard, Waltham, is fast falling into ruin and, unless something is shortly done, there will be nothing left to mark the spot.

A CRUSHER FOR SHAMROCK

The America's Cup Will Remain in America.

THE COLUMBIA WINS LAST RACE

Spanking Breeze Makes Final Contest Best of the International Series—Columbia Proves to be Gem of the Ocean.

	Columbia	Shamrock
Start	11:01:35	11:00:34
Outer mark	12:19:00	12:19:17
Finish	2:40:00	2:45:17
Elapsed time	3:38:25	3:44:43
Corrected time	3:38:09	3:44:43

Through wind and hoary seas, in a breeze that approached the dignity of a gale, the gallant sloop Columbia vanquished the British challenger Shamrock Friday by six minutes and eighteen seconds actual time and six minutes and thirty-four seconds corrected time, thus completing the series for the America's cup with a magnificent rough weather duel and a glorious Yankee victory.

For the eleventh time the attempt of a foreigner to wrest from America the yachting supremacy of the world has failed. The trophy won by the old schooner America forty-eight years ago is still ours, a monument to the superiority of American seamanship and American naval architecture and a standing challenge to the yachtsmen of all nations.

The intrinsic value of the reward, which hundreds of thousands of dollars were expended to secure, is small—simply an antiquated piece of silverware, which Queen Victoria offered to the best sailing ship of the world in the early days of her reign, but around it cluster the precious memories of unbroken American triumphs and the honor of mastery in the noblest of sports.

To Sir Thomas Lipton, whose name is now added to the list of defeated aspirants for the honor of carrying the cup back across the Atlantic, failure was a crushing blow. His hope had been high. But like the true sportsman that he is, the sting of defeat has left no bitterness, and with undaunted courage he intimates that he may be back with a better boat to try again. During his stay here Sir Thomas has made himself more popular than any previous challenger, and the yachtmen of this country will be glad to welcome him back. Except for the repeated flukes and the unfortunate accident to the challenger on Tuesday this series of races has been unmarred by a single untoward incident. The boats have had two fair and square races, one in light air and the other in a heavy blow, and Sir Thomas is perfectly satisfied that he was beaten by the better boat.

After the race was over a grand spectacle followed. The victor, after lowering her sails, set the stars and stripes at her topmast truck at both ends of her spreader and at the taffrail, soon the whole fleet blossomed out in American flags. The Corsair, the flagship of the New York yacht club, had six flags flapping in the stiff breeze as she went alongside the Columbia and gave her three shrieking blasts. Then her crew cheered and the hardy Deer Islanders aboard Columbia responded with bared heads.

Later the Erin, which had remained behind for a few minutes with the Shamrock, steamed up to the Columbia, the stars and stripes fluttering from main and mizzen. The Corsair greeted her with cannon, which Sir Thomas acknowledged by dipping the English jack at the taffrail. Then, by Sir Thomas' orders, the crew of the Erin lined up to the rail and gave three good Anglo-Saxon cheers for the victors. They were returned by the proud crew of the Columbia.

Sir Thomas Lipton went aboard the Corsair, where he was joined by Oliver Iselin, owner of the Columbia, where toast were drunk to victor and vanquished. Good feeling prevailed throughout.

Burn Negro at the Stake.

A posse Friday night captured Joe LeFlore, a negro who confessed that he and Bob Anderson, on the preceding night, went to the house of H. H. LeFlore was burned at the stake. Bob Anderson was caught and partly burned, but the fire was extinguished before he was dead, because information which may clear him was received.

BRITISH DEFEAT THE BOERS

Halt Transvaal Forces at Talana Hill—Losses Very Heavy.

A dispatch from Clencoe Camp dated October 20, at 2:50 p. m., says: After eight hours of continuous heavy fighting Talana hill was carried by the Dublin fusileers and the king's rifles under cover of a well-served artillery fire by the Thirteenth and Sixty-ninth batteries. The Boers who have threatened the British rear have retired.

The fight was almost an exact counterpart of that of Majuba Hill, except that the positions of the Boer and British forces were reversed.

General Symmons was severely, but not dangerously wounded.

The battle was a brilliant success. The Boers got a reverse which may possibly, for a time, at any rate, check all aggressive action.

The British artillery practice in the early part of the day decided the battle. The seizure of Dundee hill by the Boers was a surprise, for although the pickets had been exchanging shots all night, it was not until a shell boomed over the town into the camp that their presence was discovered. Then the shells came fast. The hill was positively alive with the swarming Boers, still the British artillery got to work with magnificent energy and precision. The batteries from the camp took up positions to the south of the town, and after a quarter hour's magnificent firing silenced the guns on the hills.

Envoys of Aguinaldo Ask Conference With General Otis.

Under date of the 20th a Manila dispatch says: Three insurgent officers entered Angeles and applied to General Mac Arthur for permission for a Filipino commission, headed by a Filipino major general, to visit General Otis in order to discuss peace terms and to arrange for the delivery of more American prisoners, as well as to consider methods for the release of the Spanish prisoners. The request was referred to General Otis.

General Young's advance guard of General Lawton's column left Cabia and entered San Isidro.

One Spaniard and fifteen insurrectos were captured. The loss of the enemy is not known. The townspeople appear to be friendly.

SETTLED FOR TIME BEING.

Amicable Adjustment of Alaskan Boundary Dispute.

Mr. Tower, the British charge at Washington, called at the state department and handed to Secretary Hay a note formally accepting for his government the proposition for the temporary adjustment of the Alaskan boundary line proposed by Secretary Hay. The division line on the west pass, by which the Dalton trail is reached, is placed twenty-two and one-quarter miles above Pyramid harbor, which is regarded under the treaty as tidewater mark, so the Canadians are not allowed to reach any point on the Lynn canal. Moreover, there is no permission for a free port or even for the free transfer across American territory of Canadian goods except of miners' belongings. The modus vivendi follows the precedent established by Secretary Evarts in 1878 in agreeing on a temporary boundary on the Stikeen river in Alaska by an exchange of notes.

Kills His Son and Himself.

Joseph Haigh, a farmer living five miles west of Donnelly, Minn., shot his twenty-three year old son, Russ, blowing his head completely off. He then shot himself through the heart. There was a $2,000 mortgage on his farm, and it is thought he killed his son to get $2,000 insurance from the Modern Woodmen of which order the latter was a member, and then killed himself to escape legal punishment. In this way he expected to leave his family with the farm clear of incumbrance.

The relations of the three consuls who were left here as a provisional government by the commissioners are strained.

Twenty-five minutes after the yachts had crossed the starting line on Tuesday's race the topmast of the challenger was carried away, and her enormous club sail with its 3,000 feet a canvass, came rattling down upon the deck, leaving the boat a hopeless cripple. Captain Hogarth abhndoned the race, towing back to anchorage, while the Columbia continued over the course alone, placing to her credit the second of the races for the America's cup. Under the rules there was no alternative left, for if anything happens after the starting line is cpossed, the unfortunate boat must do the best it can.

QUALITY AND NEWS.

FAME AND EXCELLENCE ARE DETERMINING FACTORS IN SUCCESSFUL DEVELOPMENT.

One of the Important Functions of High-Class Newspapers.

In presenting interesting phases of scientific and economic problems, high-class newspapers frequently give information of as great value in their advertising columns as in those devoted to the publication of the principal events of the day; and when the fame of a product is extended beyond its natural limits into foreign lands, and a large demand created throughout Great Britain and her colonies and the principal seaports and cities of Europe, Asia and Africa, it becomes a pleasant duty to note the fact and to tell of the points of excellence on which so great a success is based. We refer to the now world-famed laxative remedy, Syrup of Figs, the product of the California Fig Syrup Company. The merits of this well-known excellent laxative were first made known to the world through the medical journals and newspapers of the United States; and is one of the distinct achievements of the press. It is now well known that Syrup of Figs is an ethical proprietory remedy, approved by the most eminent physicians everywhere, because it is simple and effective, yet pleasant to the taste and acceptable to the system, and not only prompt in its beneficial effects, but also wholly free from any unpleasant after-effects. It is frequently referred to as the remedy of the healthy, because it is used by people who enjoy good health and who live well and feel well and are well informed on all subjects generally, including laxatives. In order to get its beneficial effects, it is necessary to get the genuine Syrup of Figs, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only.

Pianos Try Her Nerves.

A funny story about Miss Marie Corelli comes from Stratford-on-Avon, where that mystic novelist has been living opposite a young ladies' school. It appears that in this school are many pianos, daily practice upon which by the pupils has been excessively damaging to Mis Corelli's nerves. Driven to desperation, the New York Tribune says, she wrote to the principal of the school asking that when pianoforte practice was going forward the windows might be kept closed, as the noise interfered with the progress of literary composition. To which the schoolmistress replied that if the noise would prevent the composition of another book like the "Sorrows of Satan" she would order a dozen more pianos.

Baltimore, Oct. 21.—Should the present rate of increase in the net earnings of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad continue, almost the entire interest charges and the rentals for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, will have been earned by Dec. 31, 1899. This was foreshadowed today when the net earnings for September were made public. The estimated gross receipts were $2,804,203, the largest for one month in the history of the company and an increase of $216,597 over September, 1898. The net earnings for September, 1899, were also a record breaker, being $1,030,493, an increase of $271,806 over September, 1898. The net earnings for the first three months of this fiscal year—July, August, and September—aggregate $3,042,759, an increase of $1,174,663 over the same months in 1898.—J. H. Maddy.

An Interesting Family.

An exceptionally interesting family gathering was witnessed the other day at Lichfield. The occasion was the celebration of the ninetieth birthday of Mrs. Selwyn, widow of Bishop George Augustus Selwyn, who died in 1878. Four generations were represented, the party consisting of Mrs. Selwyn herself—who is still in very good health, able to take walks in the city, and to participate in the services of the cathedral—her son, the Rev. William Selwyn, two daughters-in-law, four granddaughters, one grandson and one great-granddaughter.

MRS. PINKHAM says that irritability indicates disease. Women who are nervous and snappish are to be pitied. Their homes are uncomfortable, their dispositions grow constantly worse. Such women need the counsel and treatment of a woman who understands the peculiar troubles of her sex.

EVERY-DAY TALKS WITH WOMEN

MRS. ANNA E. HALL, of Milldale, Conn., was all run down in health and had completely lost control of her nerves. She wrote to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for advice. Now she writes:

"I wish to thank you for what your Vegetable Compound has done for me. It has helped me more than anything else. I suffered for a long time with nervousness, pains in back and limbs and falling of the womb; also had neuralgia in my head and could not sleep. I told my husband that something must be done, for I was nearly frantic with pain. Having read of the wonderful cures Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had performed, I determined to try it. I have taken it and am happy to say I am cured. I recommend it to all my friends and never tire of telling the benefit I have derived from its use. I have you alone to thank for my recovery."

MRS. ELLEN FLANAGAN, 1810 Mountain St., Philadelphia, Pa., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—Three years ago I was a sufferer from chronic dyspepsia, was irritable and cross, and can say that after taking seven bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was entirely cured. I take great pleasure in writing this to you and would be pleased to be interviewed by any one who is afflicted with that distressing complaint. I am very grateful to you."

We heard a democratic leader assert on our streets the other day that Mr Bryan was responsible for the ratification of the peace treaty; that he left camp and made a hurried trip to Washington to influence certain senators who were opposing it, to vote for it. And that peace treaty ceded the Philippine islands to the United States for $20,000,000, and that same democrat professes to believe we have no right to maintain law and order in the Philippines?

I have noticed boys on our streets, between the ages of 10 and 14 years, whose schoolastic career is apparently ended, but whose attainments would be put to a severe test were they required to write their names or find the product of 2 and 2. And yet we have a compulsory school law in Nebraska, and I have frequented wondered if some parents in our vicinity would not be mad and indignant, and their sensitive feelings intensely outraged were they forced to pay even the petty penalty prescribed as punishment for violation of this law. And this leads me to ask: which is better, ruffle the sensitive feeling of the parent, enforce the law, develop the mental capabilities of the boy and graduate a noble, intelligent citizen to be a credit to the community, and the pride and joy of the parents, or spare the parental feelings, let the boy graduate from the streets to the prison and in after life curse the parental laxity which allowed him to grope all his life amid the ignorance and vice of a street education.

WOMAN'S COLUMN.

The Union Signal of Oct. 19th, calls for action by the churches and pastors and has set the last day of October as a special day of appeal from the pulpits, against the threatened perpetuation of the practice of polygamy in Utah and in behalf of the Christian home and the fair name of our beloved land. It calls upon white ribboners everywhere, to give the day to prayer and thought for America's security against polygamous pollution and to make sure that some utterance or the theme in question is made from the pulpit under whose ministration she sits.

In regard to Dewey's return it says, no American was ever before accorded such a reception and the courage which Admiral Dewey and his men showed when they sailed into the harbor of Manila, not knowing at what moment a hidden mine might send hundreds of them into eternity, well deserves and will always receive the homage of mankind. It was not the result of chance or fortunate circumstances that made these men send with accuracy and marvelous rapidity shot after shot squarely into the ships of the enemy until nothing was left of the once proud fleet but battered and burning wrecks, while they themselves escaped without the loss of a man or ship. It was long years of regular faithful practice, when to all human appearances it seemed that they would never have occasion to use the skill acquired with such great pains. The victory at Manila displayed wisdom, courage of the highest type, faithfulness, patriotism. We pity anyone who hesitates to award all honor to its chief hero.

From A Soldier.

Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, Oct. 9, '99. We arrived here safely after a seven days voyage from 'Frisco.

We have still twenty-one days more of sea life ahead of us. We are very glad to be here and see land again.

It gets very old to see only water, water everywhere rolling and tumbling around us. The first three days nearly everyone was seasick. Rich and I were not sick at all. The way the boys added to the treasures of the deep was something wonderful. Yesterday we saw great school of flying fish. I wish I could send a couple for our fish jar. They are tiny things about the size of largest gold fish and are almost transparent being white in color. They do not rise more than three or four inches above the water but they go sometimes a hundred yards before going down into the water again.

Our ship's name is the Glenogle and she comes from Glasgow, she is neatly fixed up and a very good sailer.

We had lots of playing on the trip so far. Band concerts mornings and afternoons to pass away the times. All the boys are much improved by so much practice and play very nicely now.

But if needed we are to go into the company's and fight with the rest if there is any fighting to do.

We are all in good health.

It is very warm here and we wear as few clothes as possible on board ship and so manage to keep comfortable.

We saw Guy Gere this morning but have not seen Ned yet.

I do not get shore leave till this afternoon when a squad of men will go to see the town. Part of the boys went ashore this morning, with the drum major.

We got here last night and this morning the water was full of little negroes, swimming around the ship diving for any thing thrown overboard.

We get no pay till we reach Manila. We shall probably stay here from 4 to 5 days, for coal and water and repairs on the ship. We want to go ashore tomorrow and camp in our shelter tents.

The climate seems to suit me nicely and I enjoy good health.

I can hardly see what Honolulu is like. I was up in the rigging this morning seeing all I could. The Queen's palace being the first thing to catch the eye. About 50 negroes are carrying coal on board in baskets and such howling and jabbering you never heard.

I got a picture of the battle ship Iowa at 'Frisco, and also of the transport Sherman both being noted for size and power. The Sherman is one day ahead of us and has the 33rd infantry on board. Our boat is smaller but faster and we hope to pass the Sherman between here and Yokohoma, Japan where we expect to stop again for coal.

If I go on shore this afternoon I shall take my kokak and secure some more pictures. October 10—this is another day and I have been ashore and if you will believe me this is the garden spot of the earth or seems so to me after seven days out of sight of land. I never saw such beautiful flowers and trees in my life and the climate is such it leaves nothing to be desired better. Hedges are 7 or 8 feet tall of foliage plants and rows of oleander trees 15 to 20 feet high, one solid mass of bloom. The trees all seem to bear flowers and fruit both. The residences are beautiful I could not find words to describe them. I should like to own one of them.

I could go to work here tomorrow at my trade for 6 dollars per day, in several places. Mechanics are scarce and prices high in that line.

Clint, Art, Rich, George and I were with Guy and Ned Gere and treated us like kings. We are going up to dinner with them this evening. I like Guy very much, he is a fine man.

Honolulu is fine; you would be as enthusiastic as I am if you could see it. We shall probably leave here on Friday. They say Aguinaldo is coming to terms now, so perhaps there will not be much fighting and 18 months may see us at home again.

THE WEDGE OF GOLD.

Achen stole the golden wedge,
And while he kept it
Hidden in his tent,
The curse of God,
Who hates a thief,
Rested on Israel.
But when the whiskered prophets
Took Achen to the suburbs
Of the camp,
And stoned him there with stones
'Till he was dead,
The curse was lifted
And Israel in the next campaign
Carried every precinct
In the state.

You are the Achen, Si,
You took the wedge.
You, Si, took everything in sight,
And now
The whiskered prophets of reform
Are after
You.
They're pelting you with stones.
They've driven you to the suburbs
Of the camp,
And there they'll fling you,
Si,
As worthless rubbish, into the Ash barrel
Of oblivion.

They're building now
A mighty wall
Around the supreme court,
With iron gate so high
And bars so close
That even Maret,
The slipperest weasel of your gang
Cannot squeeze through.
And on that gate they'll carve
"No cunning fox of Sham reform,
No trap door conjurer of Ballot frauds,
No constitution breaker
With stolen house rent
In his jeans
Can enter
Here."

Tough?
You bet it's tough.
But Si,
You had your chance.
You've had your day in politics.
The people have been kind to you,
They tucked you in a carriage
And at Broken Bow,
They cheered your cause.
And waved you on with banners.
And you, old fox,
You,
Bowed and smiled,
With sanctimonious mien,
Knowing full well
That all the while
You had
The wedge.
Oh, Silas! Silas!
Had you but served the people.
And not yourself,
They would not now,
In this election,
Remain at home to husk the corn
And leave you
Naked to your enemies.

Harrington Writes a Letter.

M. C. Harrington, Democratic nominee for congress in the Sixth district, is also a victim of the habit of letter writing, as witness the following sent by him to Juan Boyle of Kearney, chairman of the Democratic district committee:

Kearney, Neb.

Juan Boyle, Esq.,

Dear Sir—The state central committee is urging prompt action. We must accept the inevitable. The future of Democracy in the Sixth district depends largely upon the number we can draw from Populist sources. There is only one more year to wait and fusion will be all over. There will be but two parties and the leaders of the Democratic party now will be the recognized leaders then. Submit gracefully, even tho' we have to stretch a point to do so. Find enclosed a certificate which please sign in the two places marked before a justice of the peace or a notary public who has a seal. McNoel, who has been absent in Virginia, will be at home in a few days and want to have it ready for him.

M. C. Harrington.

This letter is of particular interest and significance to all Populists of Nebraska. It sets forth the avowed purpose of the Democrats to swallow the Populists next year. What concessions are made this year by the Democrats are expected to bear fruit an hundred fold next year, when Candidate Bryan and the silverplated Democracy will put the Populist party out of sight. This is the meaning of the adherence of Bryan to Holcomb in the state convention, despite the protest of many leading Democrats who objected to supporting Holcomb, but who are doing so in a desultory sort of way merely to profit by it next year, when the Populist party, just as Mr. Harrington writes, is to disappear and when leaders of Democracy now will continue to be leaders after the swallowing has taken place. Mr. Harrington's letter, which has just come to the surface, throws a strong side light on the working of Boss Bryan and his Democratic machine.

General Fred Funston, like Admiral Dewey, has disappointed the opponent's of the administration's war policy. He has confirmed what the admiral has said since his return. He denies the capacity of the Filipinos for self-government and favors going ahead in a vigorous manner to subdue the rebellion in Luzon. He characterizes Aguinaldo as a "con" man. He is confidencing his followers into believing they can whip the Americans and drive them out of the islands. As a disciple of George Washington, according to General Funston, the little rebel is a miserable failure, and Nebraskans who may think they are supporting a pure and high-minded patriot by voting against the administration should open their eyes to the facts.

Silas A. Holcomb as governor repudiated Mr. Sturgess, recommended by organized labor for appointment on the state commission for the Omaha exposition. United labor now has its opportunity to repudiate Mr. Holcomb and the prospects are very good that it will do so. The truth is there is positively no warrant for labor of any kind supporting Mr. Holcomb and his ticket, on general principles. All kinds of labor is in great demand all over the state, at enhanced wages, and this in no wise because there is a Populist state administration, but because the good Lord has sent big crops and the Republican party has maintained sound money and kept its promise to reopen the mills and restore prosperity.

"If you scour the world you will never find a remedy equal to One Minute Cough Cure," says Editor Fackler, of the Micanopy, Fla., "Hustler." It cured his family of LaGrippe and saves thousands from pneumonia, bronchitis, croup and all throat and lung troubles.

MUTUAL INSURANCE.

How Governor Holcomb Defeated It Till He Organized a Company.

The remarkable record of Silas A. Holcomb in the matter of insurance legislation challenges the attention of the people of the state and leads at once to the inevitable conclusion that it would be unsafe to place such a man on the supreme bench. A weak man in the presence of temptation while in the gubernatorial chair, what could be expected of him as a judge? What case would be safe in his hands?

During the legislative session of 1895 there was a determination to pass a law which would allow the organization of mutual companies for the insuring of village and town property. To defeat this there was present at the state house an organized lobby, possessed of ample means for oil room purposes. It was well known at the time that $10,000 in cash was on hand to be used in defeating mutual insurance legislation.

On Jan. 17th Mr. Brockman of Richardson introduced house roll 246, a bill authorizing the formation of mutual companies. It was perfectly satisfactory to the people who were demanding mutual insurance. The record of the introduction of the bill is found on page 261 of the house journal.

On Feb. 28th the bill was reported to the general file and was delayed there until March 27th, when it was taken up in the committee of the whole and recommended for passage. On March 30th (page 1183 of the house journal) it was passed by unanimous vote. Such reformers as Barry, Hull and Soderman were there and voted for the bill. The reason for the unanimous vote was that the insurance boodle had been in sight so notoriously that any man voting against the bill would have been marked at once as a boodler.

The lobby concentrated its efforts to defeat the bill in the senate. Every method of delay was resorted to. At least one prominent clerk was bribed. Money was offered to senators to get them to delay or lose the bill. At one time the one crooked clerk and one boodling senator carried it away, and were made to disgorge only after the senate had issued warrants for their arrests.

In the senate, as in the house, all the boodle plans failed. The bill passed with but one dissenting vote, and that one senator was politically blacklisted for that act, and has never since been allowed to hold office.

But the old-line insurance people knew what they were doing. They had delayed the final passage of the bill until the last day of the session. They knew what Governor Holcomb would do. They knew that he would wait until after the adjournment of the legislature, when all danger of passing over his head was past, and then he would veto the bill.

The record shows that on April 5th (page 1359 of the house journal), the bill was presented to the governor by a joint committee. Until it reached his hands it was carefully guarded to keep the lobbyists and boodlers from stealing it. At that late day one of the clerks was offered $1,000 if he would lose the bill or allow himself to be held up and robbed of it.

After the adjournment of the legislature Governor Holcomb carried out his part of the contract. After numerous consultations with a Lincoln lobbyist he vetoed the bill. For this action he was never able to give a decent excuse, and left himself open to the strong suspicion that he had entered into a satisfactory deal with the boodling lobby.

The defeat of this meritorious bill in such a suspicious manner caused much indignation over the state and the next legislature met with the determination to pass a mutual insurance bill and put it through so early that a cowardly governor could not head it off. Jones of Nemaha on the 18th of January, 1897, introduced house roll 183, a bill exactly similar to the Brockman bill, except that it had several more sections relating to assessments and other matters, which were also covered in the laws already on the statute books. The bill passed the house on the 18th of March by unanimous vote. It passed the senate on the 2d of April with just one negative vote and was presented to the governor on the 3d of April.

For some reason not orally explained, but which is pretty well shown up by the records, Governor Holcomb held the bill until the 8th of April, when he announced to the legislature that he had signed it.

Now the sequel: That same day the news was given out that a new insurance company had been organized under the new law and that Silas A. Holcomb was elected as its president. This action had been taken before the bill was signed and the salary of the president was fixed at $50 per month. Comment on this transaction is unnecessary. The records are the best evidence."

From that date to the close of his official term as governor Holcomb drew money every month as follows:

Salary as governor	$208.33
Salary as insurance president	50.00
Bake-off in house rent deal	19.80
	$278.13

This was a pretty comfortable salary for a "plain man," and did not count the other perquisites he might get in the way of railroad passes, assessments from clerks and appointees and other "complimentaries," as O. W. Palm would term them.

Silas made the office pay, but the insurance scandal will be remembered. It will have another chapter.

A search party created lots of fun Tuesday evening. The young ladies gathered at the home of one number and the young gentlemen were expected to find them; which they finally succeeded, having traced them to the home of Miss Lizzie Copeman.

The birthday of Mrs J D Longwell was celebrated at the new home in this city Friday evening, by a big crowd of her friends, who came with the necessities for an elegant lunch and had a delightful time. The lady had the misfortune to break her collar bone while moving to town, but is getting along nicely.

M. H. Marble received a letter from the warden of the Stillwater penitentiary regarding the confession of a prisoner to having killed a marshal here. The letter indicates that the fellow is familiar with this locality, but whether he can be connected with the murder of N. A. Craig or not remains for the future to develop.

Our foot-ball team demonstrated the fact last Saturday that they can play ball, and play to win. The husky fellows from Hiawatha lined up against Table Rock on the Table Rock Gridiron, with the evident intention of running away with our boys, "that's where they made a mistake." Table Rock secured the first kick off and the fun commenced; on the first line up Hiawatha discovered that the left end of Table Rock line lacked weight and commenced to pound it hard, for repeated gains, Table Rock being unable to hold them until Table Rock's 20 yard line was reached, where Hiawatha lost the ball. Table Rock by a series of end runs first around one end and then the other, carried the ball to Hiawatha's 2 yard line, and here the Kansas boys held them taking the ball on downs. Hiawatha made a desperate effort to get around Table Rock's left end, but by quick, hard work, Table Rock tore their line to pieces, letting Shaw through to tackle their big half with the ball, making a touch back.

The ball was placed on Hiawatha's 25 yard line and Hiawatha again tried Table Rock's line but found it too solid, and lost the ball on a kick, sending it to Table Rock's 45 yard line. Table Rock commenced working the ball back towards Hiawatha line, time being called with the ball on Hiawatha's 10 yard line.

In the second half Hiawatha kicked to Table Rock's 35 yard line. Shaw got the ball and by good interference carried the ball to center—after the hardest kind of playing by both teams, first one having the ball and then the other. The ball was forced to Hiawatha's 10 yard line, Hiawatha unable to make the necessary gain against Table Rock line sent the ball back to their half back for a kick, and then occurred one of the plays that fairly raises your hair and makes you wish you had a thousand hats to throw up, and a voice like a Rock Island freight engine, Josh Billings (our Josh) went over Hiawatha's line like a Nebraska cyclone, lighting on the man with the ball, and blocking it on Hiawatha's 2 yard line. Table Rock bucked the line through Guard and Tackle, Pangburn carrying the ball through for a touch down—Wright missed a hard kick for Goal, and the score was Table Rock 7 Hiawatha 0.

Hiawatha kicked to Table Rock's 25 yard line, Deck advancing the ball to yard line. On the first line up by special interference Wright got around Hiawatha's left end and started for home with the ball under his arm; Pickett, full back for Hiawatha tackled him but Meyers knocked him off and Wright made a touch down making a run of 75 yards. This ended the score getting, both teams being too tired to do much hard work in the four minutes left.

The features of the game were the line rushes of Hiawatha, the end runs by Table Rock with the perfect team work of both teams and the wonderful interference of the Table Rock team. With so many good players in the game it is hard to make any special mention. Pangburn made some wonderful gains and played a great game. Wright made several fine runs, and kicked well, considering the condition of the field. Billings and Wood played the usual brilliant game.

Length of Halves 25 minutes. Weight of teams, Table Rock 152; Hiawatha, 164. Umpire, C C Covert. Referee Reavis of Fall City.

Table Rock vs. Tecumseh will play at Table Rock, Tuesday, Nov. 7th. A big republican rally was held at Pawnee City Monday evening, at which Senator Hayward, Hon F W Collins, Hon G A Murphy and Capt. R P Jennings were the speakers. Of the Captain's speech the Republican says: The last speaker, but not the least, was Capt R P Jennings, of Table Rock, one of the former wheel-horses of Pawnee county democracy. Capt. Jennings made a good talk and said he proposed to remain with the republican party so long as the republican party did right, and he believed that party was right now. He was frequently applauded, and as Mr Murphy said to our reporter, if he had known Capt. Jennings was billed for a speech he would never have consented to talk, as the Captain carried away all the honors of the evening.

Comes from Dr D B Cargile, of Washita, I T. He writes: "Four bottles of Electric Bitters has cured Mrs Brewer of scrofula, which had caused her great suffering for years. Terrible sores would break out on her head and face, and the best doctors could give no help but her cure is complete and her health is excellent." This shows what thousands have proved,—that Electric Bitters is the best blood purifier known. It's the supreme remedy for eczema, tetter, salt rheum, ulcers, boils and running sores. It stimulates liver, kidneys and bowels, expels poisons, helps digestion, builds up the strength. Only 50 cents. Sold by S G Wright Druggist. Guaranteed.

Wireless telegraphy is likely to be the subject of litigation. Professor Amos E. Dolbear of Tufts college declares that he is the discoverer of wireless telegraphy and he proposes taking steps to prevent Marconi from infringing on his rights. Professor Dolbear is prepared to show that he holds and controls the United States patent on the whole art of wireless telegraphy and wireless telephony. His patent was granted in 1886. According to Professor Dolbear's statement he was sending messages for a distance of a mile and a half without the use of a wire when Marconi was only 8 years old.

The New England Educational league is urging the electric railways to follow the example of Springfield and Toronto by providing half-fares for school pupils. It is claimed that more children than adults can be carried in a car, that they would ride at hours when other travel is light and that the companies would find their advantage in the numbers and regularity of this class of passengers. President Eliot of Harvard thinks the location of secondary schools should be determined by accessibility rather than by local boundaries; and he adds that fifteen miles by rail is easier than two miles afoot on a country road.

A French savant has published an interesting paper in which an explanation is solicited of the formation of clouds, threads and crystals that are produced in the so-called chemical or camphor barometer which consists of a solution in alcohol of equal parts of three substances, nitrate of potash, camphor and hydrochlorate of ammonia, when the glass tube that contains the solution is hermetically sealed and the variations of temperature to which it is subjected have no influence on the phenomenon. In English-speaking countries this form of barometer, under the name of "the farmers' weather glass," "the domestic barometer" or some other equally misleading title, is found everywhere. In some forms there is but little apparent change in the clearness of the liquid from the beginning to the end of the year. In other instruments the crystals of camphor, from day to day, assume different forms, which, however interesting they may be to observe and study, have nothing to do with the weather and storms, and but little with the current temperature. Skilled meteorologists know that for their purpose, as well as for that of the farmer, these instruments are of no value, but to the student of molecular physics they are well worth an investigation.

The battleship Kearsarge on her official speed trial over the Cape Ann course Sept. 25 averaged 16.84 knots an hour. On the outward run of thirty-three knots she averaged 17.32 knots with smooth sea and wind abeam. On the return she averaged 16.37 knots against a head wind. The contract requirement was sixteen knots. It is to the credit of the Kearsarge that her relative speed, with 500 less horse power, and 350 tons greater displacement, was approximately equal to that of the Iowa, although the latter on her trial made 17.02 for an average.

Once more has American enterprise beaten the British on their own ground. The corporation of Glasgow, the largest city in Scotland, having planned to erect a new electric power station, accepted the bid of a Pittsburg (Pa.) firm for the steel work. Notwithstanding the heavy handicap of ocean transportation the American bid was $375,000 below the lowest British bidder. If this is to continue the English may as well extinguish their furnaces and go out of the steel business before bankruptcy overtakes them.

That Mysterious Major...

ETHEL A. SOUTHAM

"Is anything the matter?" she asked, glancing anxiously in the direction of her aunt.

"Nothing whatever," was the brusque reply; "it is merely a shawl which Lady Howard wished for. But you did not hear her call, I suppose, you were too much taken up with that fellow Brown."

Evelyn raised her eyebrows, and gave him a swift utterly disdainful look.

"It is strange what you see in that man," he went on, folding his arms; "and, whilst you persistently avoid my society, you seem everlastingly ready to enter into conversation with him. It is not fancy, Miss Luttrell—it is perfectly true. Three times to-day have I attempted to speak to you; three times have you made some trifling excuse and turned to leave me."

"And why have I," exclaimed Evelyn, her eyes flashing fire—"why? Simply because you persist in discussing the most ridiculous of subjects!"

"I have certainly made half a dozen attempts during the last few days to tell you that I love you, to ask you to be my wife; but perhaps that is a topic of conversation which you care to discuss only with your friend Brown, since you appear to find him so very interesting."

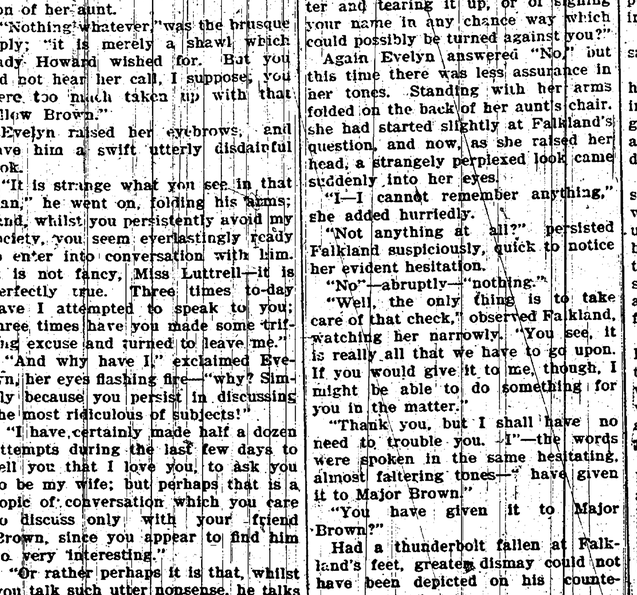
"Or rather perhaps it is that, whilst you talk such utter nonsense, he talks sense!" was the cutting reply.

"You call a declaration of love, a proposal of marriage, nonsense, then."

"Yes; I call anything nonsense that is so contrary to all reason," returned Evelyn, her voice trembling. "And, since you know how much I hate it, I wonder you pester me as you do."

"Oh, very well! If that is the case, I will not attempt to renew the subject again—in that way, at any rate; my attentions shall annoy you no longer, and——"

"Thank you," interrupted Evelyn in low angry tones—"that is all I care about;" and, without another word or look, she turned to the open window and disappeared, leaving Falkland with ruffled brows and lips set in angry determination gazing drearily into vacancy.



AGAIN EVELYN ANSWERED "NO!"

CHAPTER X.

It was certainly true. Miss Luttrell had not been mistaken in declaring that the forged check was not one of those which she had lost some months before, and a careful investigation quickly revealed the fact that the check in question had been dexterously extracted from the book in such a manner as to leave no blank counterfoil to raise the suspicions of its owner.

"It is clear that the forgery has been effected quite recently, and, no doubt, during our stay here," declared Lady Howard, looking towards Evelyn and Mr. Falkland for confirmation of her words, the latter having, despite her niece's protestations, been called in for consultation upon the weighty matter. "But the thing is, who can have done it? There are half a dozen men in the hotel who may be really professional forgers for all we know; but I do not suppose that one of them even knows Evelyn's Christian name, much less her signature."

"I beg your pardon, Lady Howard—you forgot the visitors' book," suggested Falkland promptly.

"The visitors' book? Ah, yes—her name is there, certainly! But who could be sure it was her writing? Who would dare to forge a check with such doubtful assistance? And, now that I think of it"—Lady Howard tapped her gold-rimmed fan against her forehead—"I fancy I myself was the one to write our names. Can you remember, Evelyn?"

"Yes, I remember quite well. You did write them, I know," answered Evelyn, with a vindictive little nod towards Gilbert Falkland.

"Oh, indeed! But, even if that is so, there are twenty other ways in which a clever forger could get hold of your signature. You have not written to anybody staying in the hotel, I suppose, Miss Luttrell?"

"Written to anybody? No—certainly not!"

"Nor lent any books in which your name is inscribed?"

"No," returned Evelyn, with the same decision, "I have not lent anything."

"Then, as far as your recollection goes, you can give us no clue to the mystery? You have no remembrance, for instance, of writing a letter and tearing it up, or of signing your name in any chance way which could possibly be turned against you?"

Again Evelyn answered "No," but this time there was less assurance in her tones. Standing with her arms folded on the back of her aunt's chair, she had started slightly at Falkland's question, and now, as she raised her head, a strangely perplexed look came suddenly into her eyes.

"I—I cannot remember anything," she added hurriedly.

"Not anything at all?" persisted Falkland suspiciously, quick to notice her evident hesitation.

"No"—abruptly—"nothing."

"Well, the only thing is to take care of that check," observed Falkland, watching her narrowly. "You see, it is really all that we have to go upon. If you would give it to me, though, I might be able to do something for you in the matter."

"Thank you, but I shall have no need to trouble you. I"—the words were spoken in the same hesitating, almost faltering tones—"have given it to Major Brown."

"You have given it to Major Brown?"

Had a thunderbolt fallen at Falkland's feet, greater dismay could not have been depicted on his countenance.

"Yes; he suggested it ought to be put in the hands of an expert at once; and so he is taking it up to London in the morning," she added, giving the necessary explanation as tersely as possible, and then turning away quickly, as though she could not trust herself to utter another syllable.

"He is taking it! Great heavens, Miss Luttrell, you cannot mean it! Surely you have never been so foolish as to allow such a thing?" gasped Falkland, starting forward, his face livid, an expression of absolute incredulity in his eyes.

A faint nod—a very different one from that with which she had favored him a moment before—was Evelyn's only reply.

"Oh, Miss Luttrell, this is worse than madness!" Falkland passed his hand across his forehead with a gesture of despair, of dazed indescribable bewilderment. "Did not instinct, your own common sense, tell you the truth? If nothing else, the very fact of his anxiety to secure that check should have aroused your suspicions. You might have guessed whose handiwork it is!"

"Guessed?" repeated Lady Howard. "Good gracious, Mr. Falkland, you do not mean to say that you have found a clue to this affair already?"

"Yes, Lady Howard; I believe"—he gave a triumphant glance towards Evelyn—"our suspicions"—with a very decided emphasis on the plural pronoun—"are correct. That fellow Brown is the forger!"

"That fellow Brown is the forger!" Falkland's voice sounded miles and miles away yet how the words reverberated in Evelyn's ears—with what clear distinctness they seemed to ring through the silent air, to echo round the dusky lawn! A moment before a horrible fear had possessed her, a fear which had sent all the blood coursing wildly through her veins; and then— Oh, impossible! Major Brown a forger! It was impossible! Mr. Falkland always had disliked him. From the very first he had been prejudiced about him, and had done his utmost to make both Lady Howard and herself share in his suspicions.

It was too terrible! In that one moment it seemed as though she lived through all the past fortnight again. One after another the various events of the well remembered days passed in rapid succession through her mind, whilst above all, as a climax, a crowning point to the whole, a certain afternoon, scarcely thirty-six hours before, stood out clear and defined from the confusion of the various occurrences. Every syllable which had been spoken, every subject which had been broached, came back to her as vividly as though once more she was sitting in the forsaken library, pen in hand, with Major Brown standing attentively by her side.

Oh, why had she been so dense, so blind as to see neither through his evident manœuvers nor the strange yet palpable eagerness of his manner? If nothing else had roused her suspicions, she ought at least to have realized that Major Brown was not at all the kind of man to waste his energies upon a simple birthday book. A birthday book! How could she have allowed herself to be so easily taken in? She had certainly expressed some astonishment upon the occasion—she was undoubtedly somewhat dubious at first—but how quickly he had overruled her! Without appearing the least perturbed, he had explained away everything—yes, everything! He had even been able to find an excuse for the blankness of the pages, and she had actually believed him, had believed the whole of his fabrications, though in reality that horrible book had been purchased simply as a means for securing her signature!

"You hear what Mr. Falkland is saying, Eve?"

How far her thoughts had carried her, or how long she had been standing with her hands clasped tightly together, gazing out straight before her at the shadows growing deeper and deeper, Evelyn had no idea.

Did she hear what Mr. Falkland was saying? No, she had not heard a word, and, what was more, she was utterly indifferent as to what it might be, yet it was with a gesture suggestive rather of acquiescence that she sat down on the low bamboo chair and waited resignedly for anything further that had to come.

"You see, Miss Luttrell"—it was Falkland himself who claimed her attention this time—"we can do nothing without the check; we have no proofs whatever as to the forgery. Brown is safe as if he had never put pen to paper at all."

"Is he?" observed Evelyn calmly. His words seemed to imbue her with a sense of strange undefinable relief. "Ah, yes—I suppose that would have been the only evidence against him! But of course it does not matter. It is really not of much importance," she added in a voice particularly free from any suspicion of regret.

"It does not matter! Why, Miss Luttrell, I have just been pointing out to you the greatest importance of this affair, and have been saying how easily the whole thing can be managed! But no time must be lost. You ought to ask the Major for the check this evening without fail."

PAID IN THEIR OWN COIN.

How the Yankees Got Ahead of the Shrewd Filipinos.

The native Filipino has the reputation of being the shrewdest among the Asiatic races. Like the Parsee, he is known as the Yankee of the orient, says the Philadelphia Press. He lost no opportunity to trim up his occidental Yankee brother whenever the opportunity presented itself, but the American Yankee, and particularly he of the Pennsylvania breed, usually gave him a Roland for his Oliver. When the Pennsylvanians left San Francisco on their way to the Philippines the Red Cross society gave each one of them an aluminium badge the size and shape of an American quarter, bearing the name of his regiment, his company and his company number. Shortly after their arrival in Manila the officers of some of the companies found these identification badges in the hands of Filipino merchants, upon whom the Pennsylvanians had imposed them as quarter-dollars in return for articles of barter. Another trick of the Yankee soldier was to take a new copper penny, mill the edges of it with a file, polish the coin till it shone like gold and then pass it upon the guileless and unsuspicious natives as a $5 gold piece. The gullibility of the native in this regard led some of the men to write home for samples of confederate scrip, which, when duly received, were put in circulation among the yellow packets as bona fide American greenbacks, the natives willingly accepting them as standard paper money of the United States.

The Census of Germany.

The Times publishes a careful analysis of the German census, taken on June 14, 1895, from which it appears that the population amounted on that day to 51,770,000, of whom 24,400,000 were males and 26,360,000 females, the excess of females being, therefore, nearly a million. This population increases at the rate of a little more than a million a year, for which new means of maintenance, education and housing must be provided. The rush is, of course, to the towns, the general urban population having increased since 1832 by 36 per cent, while the population of towns with more than 100,000 persons had more than doubled. Of the total, 8,292,000 are occupied in agriculture, 8,281,000 in industry, 2,238,000 in trade, 794,000 in the professions, 631,000 as soldiers or sailors, and 1,399,000 as servants. The proportion of servants is the lowest in the census-taking world, not half the proportion in Great Britain. The Catholics are about a third of the population, while of the whole commercial class 5.71 per cent are Jews.—London Spectator.

Ik Marvel's Home.

Donald G. Mitchell, known far and wide as Ik Marvel, lives on a 200-acre farm upon a hill near New Haven. From the road the house is invisible, a high evergreen hedge concealing it, but from the porch a fine view of New Haven is afforded. For many years Mr. Mitchell has lived there, indulging in his love for nature and agriculture. It is an ideal place. The house is covered by English ivy, and evergreen trees surround it. The fields are level as floors, and the stone walls have been built with neatness and accuracy. A little house on the farm is built from stones gathered from the fields and cost only a trifle over $1,000. Mr. Mitchell is 72 years old, but he walks in the woods every day. He is very fond of walking and thinks to it he owes his life, for when young he was told he had consumption. For two years he tramped over Europe, walking 600 miles in England alone. He successfully staved off the disease, but has always kept up his walks.

Little 4-year-old Mabel was running down hill, holding her dress tightly. "Be careful," called her mother, "or you will fall." "Oh, no, I won't," replied Mabel, "'cause I'm holding tight to myself."

DESIRES A PROTECTORATE

Such Said to Be Aguinaldo's Dearest Hope

HE SENDS A REPRESENTATIVE

Senor Regidor, Personal Representative of the Filipino Chief On His Way to Washington to Treat For Cessation of Hostilities.

A dispatch from Washington says that Senor Antonio Regidor, now in London, will sail for the United States within three weeks, and as a fully accredited representative of Aguinaldo will present to President McKinley new terms of ending hostilities and reconstructing the government of the islands. The coming of the representative is kept a close secret by the administration, but from a high authority the World correspondent learns that these are the exact terms Aguinaldo desires:

Absolute free trade between the United States and the Philippines; perfect religious freedom; coaling stations for the United States upon all important islands of the archipelago; military reservations on such islands as may be determined upon, the employment of United States officials in the customs, and all other international branches of the government to be selected by the United States and paid by the Filipino government; the introduction of the American police system; the establishment of a judiciary as now existing in Cuba; the reconstruction of the entire Filipino government upon lines as nearly consistent with those prescribed by the constitution of the United States and adapted to the requirements of the natives and recognition of the Filipino government as an independent republic under protectorate of the United States.

Senor Regidor will have plenipotentiary powers to treat with the United States government upon all these in order to reach an agreement by which hostilities may cease.

Senor Regidor will be the most important political emissary ever sent to the United States by the Filipinos and will represent Aguinaldo himself. Regidor is said to be a man of great ability and learning, having had a long experience in European diplomatic circles.

The administration has been fully informed of the demands of Aguinaldo and his advisers through the dispatches of General Otis and the secret service maintained by this government in Europe.

THE WAR IN AFRICA.

British and Boer Have Many Minor Engagements.

Conflicting reports come from the scene of the British-Boer war in South Africa, and it is hard to determine accurately just what is transpiring there. Wednesday's news, via Cape Town, says that General Yule has performed a brilliant strategetical movement. By a swift march to the south, leaving Glencoe empty, he has effected a junction of his forces with those of Sir George Stewart White, slightly to the north of Ladysmith. The two are now in position to offer battle. A telegram from General White to the war office in London, does not say that he has joined forces with General Yule, but that he moved out from Ladysmith with a strong force to cover the movement of Yule's column. The enemy was discovered about seven miles out from Ladysmith in a position of great natural strength west of the road.

General White says he confined his efforts in occupying him and hitting him hard enough to prevent his taking action against Yule's column.

The war office dispatch seems to realize the worst fears. General Yule has abandoned not only Dundee, but Glencoe also, and so far as present news would indicate, he has neither joined General White nor reached Ladysmith.

It is evident from the official dispatches that both Commandant Joubert's column on the north and the Orange Free State troops on west now occupy strong positions, and that nothing hinders the Boers from following up General Yule's retirement and getting around Ladysmith from the southeast. Until reinforcements arrive it seems that General White is obliged to concentrate on Ladysmith.

While the Boers have failed to take advantage of strategic positions secured, owing to the incompetence or haste of their leaders, the British have no cause for congratulations over the results of the Natal operations. They have suffered heavy losses in men and their victories have practically gone for nothing, the whole of northern Natal now being abandoned to the Boers. A few more victories like those of Glencoe and Elandslaagte would leave the British without officers.

Trouble on Border Land.

The secretary of war Wednesday afternoon received a telegram from Governor Murphy, of Arizona, saying that considerable trouble has occurred at Naco, on the border between Arizona and Mexico, between cowboys and Mexican officers. He prays that a company of troops be ordered there from Fort Huachuca to remain until the trouble has subsided. He says that the civil officers will do everything possible to maintain order, but may not be able to do so.

Company Gets No Land.

The secretary of the interior Thursday affirmed the opinion of the commissioner of the general land office on the holding that the Union Pacific Railroad company is not entitled to the odd-numbered sections of land in the abandoned Fort McPherson military reservation in Nebraska.

Dawson Offers Men.

A dispatch from Victoria, B. C., says Dawson has offered for service in South Africa 100 expert riflemen for such time as the empire may need them.

CENSORSHIP IS PERFECT.

Ominous Veil Hanging Over Army Movements Causes Uneasiness.

Under date of October 26 a London special says: With unconscious humor a Cape Town correspondent telegraphed yesterday:

"The censorship, which is always a delicate matter, is working smoothly and without a hitch."

This exactly hits off the state of affairs today. An ominous veil is still over the movement of General White and General Yule. Beyond belated Ladysmith dispatches describing the Elandslaagte fight, which are still filtering in, the British public is left in complete darkness and to conjecture over "cooked" war office dispatches. The officers of the war office last evening said that very few dispatches have arrived and that nothing further was to be expected until morning.

Since it is practically certain that General Yule has now effected a junction with General White, and as both are now in a position of safety, conjecture concerns itself chiefly with the manner of General Yule's retreat. That it was hasty is evident. Since the receipt of General Whites curious first description of the Ladysmith fight, in which the British lost a hundred men, little reliance can be placed on the official dispatches.

Will Insure Its Employes.

A plan for insuring its employes has been inaugurated by the management of the Chicago & Alton railroad as a result of the prohibitory premiums demanded by the insurance companies. The proposition of the company is to defray one-half the premium of each policy, the men to stand the other half. So far as can be learned this is the first instance of a railroad offering without condition to help defray the expenses of an insurance policy for its employes out of its own pocket.

Possibly a Murder.

The death of Mabel Schofield, whose body was found in the Des Moines river Sunday has been a complete mystery till Wednesday. It is now believed she was drugged and thrown into the river. Three men, all of good standing, have testified that Sunday afternoon they saw a boat come down the river in which were two men and a woman, and when shown the body they testified positively that her clothes were the same as those of the woman in the boat.

Confesses His Crime.

William Brockett, arraigned at Rockford, Ia., for the attempted wreck of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northwestern passenger train at Rockford, Ia., Thursday, confessed at the preliminary examination of two attempts, October 1 and 15, and implicates Frank Fay his brother-in-law. Brockett testifies that Fay got him drunk and led him into crime. Both were held to the grand jury in $5,900 bonds each.

Gift to His City.

The agent of John D. Rockefeller in Cleveland announced Thursday the gift by Mr. Rockefeller to the park board of $225,000 to construct arches and roadways under the Lake Shore railway for the purpose of connecting Gordon park with Rockefeller park, which he gave the city, and for roadways and arches under Superior street to connect two sections of Rockefeller park.

Davitt Goes Out.

The Irish protest against the war on the Boers culminated Wednesday in a sensational manner, when Michael Davitt, a prominent Irish nationalist, and a member of parliament for Mayo, south, announced in the house of commons that he would resign from he body. "If offered an Irish republic," he said, "in exchange for one word favoring this war, I would not utter it."

Exceeds The Requirements.

By obtaining a speed of thirty-one knots an hour during several hours' trial at sea Thursday, the new torpedo boat Dahlgren exceeded her contract requirements and proved herself a very able boat. At the same time the made better time over a mile course than has ever been reached by a torpedo boat of her size in the world. The trial was made under very favorable conditions.

Riots to be Investigated.

Eyeglasses In Fish's Stomach.

J. Semple Hopple, a well-known Philadelphia lawyer and an expert angler, recently lost his eyeglasses while fishing in the Delaware. A day or so later he was fishing at the railroad bridge and hooked a fine bass. Returning home, Mr. Hopple gave the fish to a son of Adam Transue, proprietor of his hotel, to clean. Presently the lawyer heard a shout, and the boy came running to him, exclaiming: "I found your glasses in the bass you caught." On opening the fish the glasses were found uninjured. Such a thing is not altogether surprising to expert fishermen who know the habits of bass.—Philadelphia Times.

Welsh in English Courts.

The Welsh language is beginning, after many long years, to at least find recognition in the English courts of law. Recently, for instance, at the Anglesey quarter sessions, Sir Richard Bulkley Williams ordered his summing up to the petty jury to be translated into Welsh in every case, while a little before that date, at Carnarvon, J. E. Graves, an Englishman, who was acquainted with the language of Gwalia, followed some evidence given in Welsh very closely, and interpreted it when necessary for the benefit of a cross-examining counsel who had not mastered the vernacular.

Composed on Trains.

Sir Arthur Sullivan was once asked where he was able to compose best, and under what circumstances his ideas flowed most freely. "There is no place," he said, "where I have so many inspirations as in a railway carriage. There is something in the rapidity of the motion, in the clanging of the iron, and in the whirring of the wheels, which seems to excite the imagination and supplies material for a host of harmonies."

Novelties at Paris Next Year.

Nothing brings novelties to the front like an international exhibition. One of the wonders at Paris will be an exhibition of artificial clouds, and another a machine that weaves the photographic portrait of a sitter into the threads of a pocket handkerchief while he waits. The photographic image is taken in dots and these are reproduced from the loom in a perforated sheet of metal.

Pompeiian Ruins.

Near the town of Capljina, in Bosnia, archaeologists have exhumed a new Pompeii in the form of a Roman camp. All the walls are well preserved and some of the rooms are decorated with fine paintings, while weapons, lamps and various other objects have been found in them.

The Funny Bone.

That which is popularly known as the "funny bone," just at the point of the elbow, is in reality not a bone at all, but a nerve that lies near the surface and which, on getting a knock or blow, causes the well-known tingling sensation in the arms and fingers.

Most Singular Ship.

The most singular ship in the world is the Polyphemus of the British navy. It is simply a long steel tube, deeply buried in the water, the deck rising only four feet above the sea. It carries no masts or sails and is used as a ram and torpedo boat.

Plague of Spiders in Japan.

Spiders are a serious plague in Japan. They spin their webs on the telegraph wires and are so numerous as to cause a serious loss of insulation. Sweeping the wires does little good, as the spiders begin all over again.

Live Stock in Kansas.

Kansas has two head of cattle, one hog, one-third of a horse, and one-fifth of a sheep for every man, woman and child in the state.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Human Heart.

The human heart is of almost uniform size in all adult subjects, which accounts for the prevalence of heart trouble among large people.

Curious Funeral Custom.

In Switzerland a death is attended by a custom which calls upon all charitable and Christian people to show their sympathy. A notice edged with a wide black line appears in the daily papers setting forth the day and hour when sympathizers must assemble before the house of the deceased. At the time named, a little cloth-covered table supporting a good-sized jar is stood before the house—table, cloth and jar all being of a somber, ebony hue—and into the latter small mourning cards, bearing the name and address of their owners, are deposited. The day the funeral takes place is the day selected for the exhibition of the jar. No ladies are allowed to follow at a Swiss funeral.

Will Spy Upon Mars.

It is expected that the new Delorcle telescope, which is much the largest ever built and which is to be one of the great attractions of the Paris exposition, will reveal wonders in the heavens of which astronomers have so far caught hardly a glimpse. One of the vexed questions which it is expected to settle is that of the fabled inhabitants of the planet Mars. At any rate there is hope that the new instruments will make plain the meaning of the mysterious canals of Mars and of the curious ovals and circles on its surface, which have perplexed astronomers. The illustration shows all that science has yet been able to discover on the planet.

Beavers Plentiful in the Rio Grande.

It is said that almost the only place where the beaver is to be found in any number is in the Rio Grande canyon, on the border between Texas and Mexico. For the 300 miles between El Paso and Eagle Pass little is known of the canyon. The few persons who have traversed the region report dangerous and impassable falls. A French Canadian passed through in 1895, and brought out 400 beaver skins, which he sold at El Paso for the tidy sum of $4 each. He told tales of the abundance of beavers in the canyon, but the perils of the journey have prevented many others from following in his course.

A Popular Tradition as to Mules.

The popular tradition that no mule ever died a natural death is based largely on fact. Mules are drowned; they fall from bridges, they are exploded by dynamite, and they die in battle as did the gallant creatures at Matanzas, but they seldom expire peacefully in lots or in their own stables surrounded by home comforts of fodder and a straw bed. In Arkansas it is the common belief that when mules have done their appointed work they dry up and blow away.—Savannah Press.

Cigarettes Made of Tea.

The fierce crusade against tobacco cigarettes in London has developed the tea cigarette, which is particularly patronized by women. Tea cigarettes are made of a coarse grade of tea, which has but little dust and is composed of unbroken leaf. This dampened so that the leaves may be stuffed into the paper cylinders, but not sufficient to affect the papers. The taste is said to be disagreeable at first, the effect on beginners being a sense of oppression in the head and a desire to take hold of something.

Blood Velocity.

It is estimated that the velocity of the blood movement in the arteries is about twelve inches a second, and that the length of time required for the blood to make an entire circuit of the vascular system is about twenty seconds.

A Newspaper Town.

Chicago Tribune: Murphysboro, Ill., stands pre-eminent, not only among the cities and towns of the United States, but of the world, in the number of daily and weekly newspapers in proportion to its population. Within the corporate limits of this city are published four daily and three weekly newspapers, namely: Murphysboro Daily Era, Daily Independent, Daily Republican, Daily Bulletin, Jackson County Era, Weekly Independent and Weekly Republican. The official census of 1890 gave the city's population as 3,880.

A Dramatist's Working Power.

In illustration of the working powers of George R. Sims, the dramatist and poet, it is said that one night a new piece was produced at a leading theater in London. Sims sat it out, and then returned to his office, where he wrote a column and a half of criticism in rhyme. It was near the time for the paper to go to press when he began, and the boy took the piece verse by verse from him to the composing room; the boy walked continuously from one to the other for an hour.

What a Fine Day Means.

There are ten million bicycles in use in the world. If half of these turn out on a fine day, five million cyclists will be having a spin. If they do on the average twenty miles apiece, that will make a total distance of 100,000,000 miles in that day. A hundred million miles is 4,000 times round the world. Each wheel of the average machine turns round 700 times in a mile. So that one fine day, when half the cyclists in the world do a twenty-mile spin witnesses 140,000,000,000 revolutions of the 10,000,000 wheels.

Seventy Babies a Minute.

About 36,000,000 babies are born each year, an average of seventy every minute; that is, ten more in each minute than there are beats of the clock. A man with a pronounced weakness for statistics has figured that if all the 36,000,000 little ones were ranged in a line of cradles the cradles would girdle the earth. If carried one by one in the mothers' arms past a given point the procession would continue night and day for a twelvemonth.

There have been various stories written about the stealing of the Baltimore and Ohio Rail Road engines at Martinsburg, W. Va., during the rebellion and their transfer across the country for service on southern railroads by Col. Thomas Sharp, who is still living in Ohio. Recently, an official of the Baltimore and Ohio Rail Road made some inquiries of old employes who were at Martinsburg at the time the incident happened and they say that on June 19, 1861, 200 men of Gen'l Stonewall Jackson's command were detailed to destroy the Baltimore and Ohio's equipment at Martinsburg. They piled wood and coal over 41 engines and nearly 400 cars and then set fire to them. Only ten or twelve of the engines, however, were seriously damaged, and these not by the fire, but because the water was first let out of the boilers. Col. Sharp arrived in Martinsburg on August 18, 1861, and remained there until the following March, engaged in removing engines, machinery, etc. He took eight engines across the country over the turnpike, either to Staunton, Winchester or Strasburg, (and there are some historians who disagree on this point) 32 horses being required to haul each engine. He also removed all the duplicate parts of engines and cars and all the rough iron at the station, and took away all machinery and tools which were afterward used in the Southern arsenals. The country around Martinsburg is extremely hilly and the work of getting the engines over the country roads required considerable engineering ability. It has been currently reported in late years that one of the locomotives was the Winans camel-back No. 99 which at that time was numbered 77, but Col. Sharp did not care for this class of engines and took only ten wheel and passenger engines. There was only one eight wheel locomotive taken and that was No. 34. Some years after the war Col. Sharp was employed on the Baltimore and Ohio Rail Road a Master of Transportation.

Live By Fishing.

There are $50,000 men in the world who gain a livelihood chiefly by fishing, making an annual catch of $225 worth of fish for each man. The fisheries of the United States supply 800,000 pounds annually, and those of Europe 1,800,000 pounds. The American citizen eats about twenty-five pounds of fish and 140 pounds of meat in a year, while the European eats sixty-four pounds of meat and eleven pounds of fish annually.

Richest Farmer in the World.

David Rankin of Talkio, Mo., who is said to be the richest farmer in the world, made his beginning with no other capital than a horse. This he sold for $52, invested the money in calves, and bought an eighty-acre farm. He is now, at the age of 74, tall, athletic and rawboned, with gray hair and beard and keen blue eyes. He owns 23,000 acres of land, worth from $50 to $100 an acre.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured
by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucus lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucus surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The Walnut Crop.

The English walnut is said to be the most profitable of all nut-bearing trees. When in full bearing they will yield about 300 pounds of nuts to the tree. The nut sells on an average at about 8 cents per pound. If only twenty-seven trees are planted on an acre, the income would be about $675.

PLOT PROMPTLY PREVENTED

Americans Squelch Incipient Uprising at Iloilo.

CHIEF CONSPIRATOR CAPTURED

Had Taken Oath of Allegiance, But Proved False to the Trust Imposed in Him—Insurrection of Bisayans Nipped in the Bud.

A Manila special dated October 27, 6 p. m. says: M. Ruperto Santiago, one of the wealthiest Bisayans, who had taken the oath of allegience to the United States and who posed as a friend of Americans, has been arrested at Iloilo, while other Bisayans are being watched. The prisoner is charged with organizing a revolutionary junta. It is asserted that a council of ten and the manager of the junta met daily at Santiago's office for the purpose of engineering an extensive scheme of collections for an insurrection. One of Santiago's steamers was captured carrying supplies to the rebels. His arrest caused rumors of an outbreak of the natives of Iloilo and precautions have been taken to prevent trouble.

A battalion of the Eighteenth regiment and the marines of the gunboat Concord form an expedition at Concepction, northern Panay, which is searching for the Concord's coxswain, who was lured ashore by a white flag and who is supposed to be a prisoner. They found the place deserted, and burned every house as a punishment.

Oct. 28.—10 a. m.—General Young's column, which left San Isidro yesterday morning at daybreak, moving northward in the direction of Santa Rosa, encountered the enemy strongly entrenched just beyond the Tuboatin river. A brisk fight ensued and the rebels were repulsed. Two Americans were killed and one wounded. Pursuit was impossible on account of the width and depth of the stream.

The war department has received the following from Manila under date of October 27:

Adjutant General, Washington: Insurgent government submitted application to send five commissioners to Manila to arrange difficulties attending release of Spanish sick prisoners and discuss peace conditions. Declined: no negotiations necessary, as we would gladly receive all Spanish prisoners at our lines, welcome them from their cruel captivity and labor for their welfare. Correspondence by mail. (Signed) Otis.

The following cablegrams have been received at the war department from General Otis.

Lawton advanced, under Young, north of San Isidro, near Cabanatuan. Established permanent station three months supplies being forwarded by San Juan river route. Lawton meets little resistence. Twenty-sixth volunteers and battalion Nineteenth infantry sent to Iloilo.

The hospital ship Relief has arrived at Manila. She reports the disappearance at sea of Lieut. Robert D. Carmody who went to Guam with the marine battalion on the Yosemite when Captain Leary was sent out as governor to take possesion of the occurrence. Lieutenant Carmody was taken aboard at Guam, presumably sick and on orders home or else on a furlough. It is thought he may have jumped overboard while delirous.

Death of General Henry.

Brigadier General Guy V. Henry, U. S. A., late military governor of Porto Rico, died a few minutes before 4 o'clock Friday morning at his home, 139 Madison avenue, New York, of pneumonia, aged sixty years. He had been unconscious for several hours an his end was peaceful. At his bedside were all the members of his family except his son, Capt. Guy V. Henry, who is in the Philippines.

Go After the Confessor.

A Stillwater, Minn., special of October 28 says: Warden Wolfer has just received letters from J. F. Ward, city attorney at Osawatomie, Kas., and J. C. Dort, county attorney of Pawnee county, Nebraska, saying they are preparing to begin criminal proceedings against Jesse C. McBride, the confessed murderer, upon his release from the penitentiary.

Believe Andreo is Alive.

Evelyn B. Baldwin, the Artic explorer and observer in the United States weather bureau, who has been assigned to duty at Mobile, Ala., has arrived from Washington. He has just received a letter from Captain Ernst Andree of Sweden, brother of the Polar aeronant. The letter expresses belief in his brother's safety.

Legal Hanging at Austin, Texas.

A Saturday special from Austin, Tex., says: Samuel Watrous, one of the murderers of C. W. Engberg and his wife, was hanged in the jail yard here today. Before dying Watrous said he was going to heaven. James Davidson, convicted of the same crime, will be hanged on November 24.

Two Union Miners Shot.

The first bloody fight of the coal miners' strike at Decatur, Ill., which was declared seven weeks ago, occurred Saturday. Two union miners were shot, one fatally.

As four non-union men, accompanied by a guard of twelve policemen and six deputy sheriffs, were about to enter the shaft they were accosted by five union miners who asked them to stay out. One of the four non-union men for answer made a motion as if to strike a union man with a club. Instantly there was a fight and two shots were fired.

Murdered His Sweetheart.

A Saturday morning telegram from Dallas, Tex., says: Walter Ford, who cruelly murdered his sweetheart, Lucinda Moore, at Waco, in June, 1896, was hanged in that city today. He died without faltering, saying he was going straight to heaven.

Will Offer to Mediate.

At The Hague, Holland, at the meeting of the committee of the second chamber on the foreign budget a resolution was adopted urging the government to offer to mediate between the Transvaal and Great Britain.

HAS NO NEW FEATURES

The South African Situation Contains Nothing New.

According to a London dispatch of the 28th, the war situation presents no new features. It is presumed in Natal that the Boers are reconstructing their plans and that the English are resting, but telegrams from Ladysmith at express rates still occupy forty-eight hours in transmission to London, and therefore it is not impossible that something is happening. The special dispatches assert that Colonel Baden Powell, the British commander at Mafeking, is aware that Pretoria has General Cronje orders to stay his hand, as already there is quite enough to employ his Boers in Natal.

The government has chartered the City of Rome as a hospital ship. According to the latest account of the first battle at Glencoe, the Boer army amounted to 7,000 men, and about noon another army almost as large, under General Joubert, advanced within six thousand yards of Glencoe camp and then retired.

Commenting upon the petition to President McKinley, promoted by the New York World, urging that the good offices of the United States be offered in settling the differences between Great Britain and the Transvaal, the London Standard says:

"We very much doubt whether the Washington government will at all appreciate the suggestion, but in any case it is as well for those whom it concerns, and particularly for those whom it does not concern, to understand that the Transvaal question is one which exclusively affects ourselves and which we propose to settle without assistance or intervention of any kind."

The government has gratefully accepted the offer of the American women in England to equip the steamer Maine as a hospital ship for use in South African waters.

Castro Not Recognized.

At Caracas, Venezuela, dispatch of Friday says: The foreign ministers met at the American legation and decided not to recognize the Castro administration without instructions from their respective governments.

President Andrade has cabled from Barbadoes, where he arrived recently, to the commander at Puerto Cabello to defend that city against General Castro to the last extremity.

Coro and Maracaiboy have surrendered to General Castro. Other reigns here.

Industrial School for Boys.

A Santiago de Cuba special, under date of October 28, says: General Leonard Wood issued an order today establishing an industrial school for boys, orphans of Cuban soldiers, in the Spanish military hospital, which was abandoned by the American troops last June. Some two hundred boys will receive instruction in various trades and education in elementary branches. Competent American teachers will be engaged.

Dewey's Home Turned Over.

The house on Rhode Island avenue, Washington, recently purchased by the popular people for Admiral Dewey on subscription, was formally turned over to him Saturday by Assistant Secretary Vanderlip of the Dewey home committee. The purchase price was about $50,000. Two subscriptions were received Friday, which completed the payment, including the expenses incident to the project.

Georgia Negro Lynched.

John Goesby, a negro, was lynched at Reagan's Hill, about six miles from Macon, Ga., last Friday night by a mob from Twiggs county. Goesby, a few days ago, provoked a difficulty with his employer, John Robinson which resulted in the negro cutting Robinson's throat. Robinson's neighbors pursued Goesby and he was captured at his father's house near Macon. Robinson will probably recover.

Civil Governor Resigns.

Gen. Ruis Rivera has resigned the civil governorship of the province of Havana. The post has been offered to Gen. Emilio Nunez, but his friends say they doubt that he will accept. In explanation of General Rivera's resignation it is said his nominations have not received the recognition due them.

Entry Held for Cancellation.

Secretary Hitchcock Friday affirmed the land office decision in the case of James S. Leonard against Orren A. Shafter, from the Alliance district of Nebraska. Shafter's timber dulture entry is held for cancellation on the ground that he failed to comply with the law as to planting.

Test of Wireless System.

The navy department on Thursday began a series of experiments with the Marconi system of wireless telegraphy, with the object of determining its practicability for general use for naval purposes on sea and land. The experiments will extend over a period of several days.

Paul Jones' Grave.

The grave of Capt. John Paul Jones has not been located by the government, through its inquiries of the embassy in the French capital. He died on July 18, 1792, in Paris, and was buried with highest honors by the French government, but the place of his burial cannot now be determined.

Pigeon Lays Two Eggs.

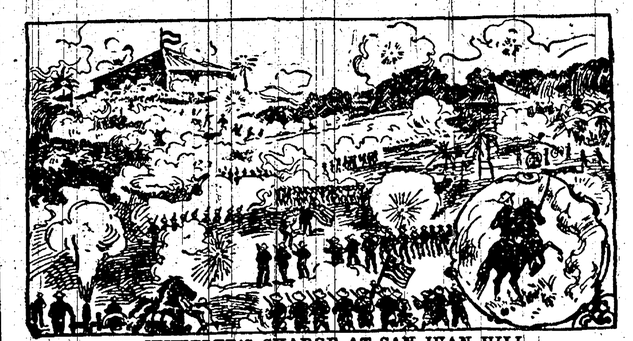
Before beginning to hatch a pigeon lays two eggs, and they invariably produce a male and a female. Experiments have demonstrated that the egg first laid produces a male.

In the Linen Press.

Braids of sweet grass made the full length of the grass are excellent for linen closets. The spicy sweetness is lasting and has a refreshing odor equal to that of lavender. It can be bough or visitors to Canada in summer can pick it for themselves, which is most satisfactory. A braid of sweet grass makes a pretty and pleasant remembrance for friends at home.

The motives of men are to be judged more by their actions than by their words.

GEN. JOE WHEELER
PRAISES PERUNA,
The Great Catarrh Cure.



JOE WHEELER'S CHARGE AT SAN JUAN HILL.

Major General Joseph Wheeler, commanding the cavalry forces in front of Santiago and the author of "The Santiago Campaign," in speaking of the great catarrh remedy, Pe-ru-na, says: "I join with Senators Sullivan, Roach and McEnery in their good opinion of Pe-ru-na. It is recommended to me by those who have used it as an excellent tonic and particularly effective as a cure for catarrh."

United States Senator McEnery.

Hon. S. D. McEnery, United States Senator from Louisiana, says the following in regard to Pe-ru-na:

"Pe-ru-na is an excellent tonic. I have used it sufficiently to say that I believe it to be all that you claim for it.—S. D. McEnery, New Orleans, Louisiana."

United States Senator Sullivan.

"I desire to say that I have been taking Pe-ru-na for some time for catarrh, and have found it an excellent medicine, giving me more relief than anything I have ever taken.—W. V. Sullivan, Oxford, Miss."

United States Senator Roach.

"Persuaded by a friend I have used Pe-ru-na as a tonic, and am glad to testify that it has greatly helped me in strength, vigor and appetite. I have been advised by friends that it is remarkably efficacious as a cure for the almost universal complaint of catarrh.—W. N. Roach, Larimore, North Dakota."

A free book on catarrh sent to any address by The Pe-ru-na Drug M'f'g Co., Columbus, Ohio.

Hindoo Women as Servants.

According to the custom of Hindoo households, where the women servants call their master and mistress "father and mother," and the daughters "jewel sisters," nothing is commoner than for old attendants to attach themselves to a family as grandmother, claiming the privilege of scolding their employers and spoiling those employers' children, to the end of their days. In such cases the social inferiority of this member of the family group would not be easily perceived by a stranger. The mistress prepares her servant's food and gives it to her with her own hands (a curious inversion of our notions); and when the latter dies, in the fullness of time, she is mourned by these kindred of her adoption as one of their own blood.—Church Gazette.

A Turkish Dainty.

The sultan of Turkey has a great liking for a delicacy known as "rahat," and keeps in his palace a man exclusively to manufacture it for him and his household. "Rahat" is a great favorite with the sultan's wives, who indulge plentifully in this luxury. The different flavors given to this preparation are obtained from the juice of pressed flowers, such as roses, violets and lilies, and a special hand-press is employed for the purpose. "Turkish Delight" is the popular name for "rahat."

Ireland's salmon fisheries are in serious danger of exhaustion.

Green corn is served in but one restaurant in Paris.

A Prosperous Manufacturing City.

Brockton's prosperity is so closely allied to the prosperity of the shoe industry that it will, no doubt, prove a matter of interest to a large number of people to learn the actual average earning capacity of each individual employed in the making of the world-famed Brockton shoe. For illustration: At the factory of the W. L. Douglas Shoe company the pay roll for the week ending Sept. 30, excluding superintendent, foreman, salesmen, and all clerical help, shows the average earnings of the employes, large and small, to be $15.54 per week. This was not an extraordinary week. It was the customary pay roll.

The amount earned per week, however, does not always tell the story of prosperity. The number of weeks employed each year is the determining factor in the wage earners' prosperity. The Douglas factory has been closed but one week this year, and that for the usual summer stock taking, and it will be closed but three days the latter part of December. This would make but nine days out of the year that the factory is closed, which is surely as steady work as the most industrious shoemaker could desire.

It is believed that the average pay and the number of days worked is larger at the factory of the W. L. Douglas Shoe company than at any manufacturing institution in Massachusetts.

Owing to increased business, another addition is to be made to the Douglas factory. It will be 100 feet long, 40 feet wide, and five stories high. It will be ready for occupancy early in December. This addition increases the capacity 25 per cent. The W. L. Douglas Shoe company has the largest factory in the world, producing an advertised line $3.50 and $3.00 shoes.

Mr. Douglas says that the prospect for successful business for Brockton manufacturers was never so good as now, and that collections are better than for years.—The Brockton (Mass.) Times, Oct. 10, 1899.

Rapid Fire Organ.

A new electric organ placed in St. Michael's church, London, possesses 64,500 miles of wire. The action of the organ is so rapid that it would "repeat," if necessary, 60 times per second.

WOMEN do suffer!
Even so-called healthy women suffer!
But they are not healthy!
The marks left by pain are on the young faces of many of our daughters. Pain that leaves its mark comes from a curable cause. If that cause is not removed its influence reaches out and overshadows a whole life. The reason Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been so uniformly successful for over a quarter of a century in overcoming the suffering of women, is that it is thorough and goes directly to the cause. It is a woman's remedy for woman's ills.

MUST WOMEN SUFFER?

MISS EMILY F. HAAS, of 148 Freeman St., Greenpoint, Brooklyn, N. Y., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—I wish to state that I used your Vegetable Compound with the greatest success. I was very sick for nearly a year with hysteria, was down-hearted and nervous; also suffered with painful menstruation and pain in back and limbs. I often wished for death, thinking nothing would cure me. I had doctors, but their medicines did me no good. At last, by the advice of a friend, I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I am happy to say it has entirely cured me.

JENNIE SHERMAN, of Fremont, Mich., Box 748, writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I feel that I must write you and tell you what your medicine has done for me. I had neuralgia of the stomach for two years, so bad that I could not do any work. I had two or three doctors, but did not seem to get any better. I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills and improved from the first, had better appetite, and after taking three bottles of Compound and one box of Liver Pills, can say that I am cured. Your Vegetable Compound is a wonderful medicine."

FOR 30 DAYS YOU CAN TRY IT FOR 10 CENTS.

READ WHAT A PROMINENT PHYSICIAN

Has to say who has had 35 YEARS of active Practice of Medicine:

I have never before in my 35 years of practice of medicine given my testimonial or recommendation to any patent medicine, but there is a remedy, the result of which has come under my own observation; for there is no Disease which has so baffled the medical skill of all ages as Rheumatism and to find a Reliable remedy for the same. At last we have found it in "5 Drops," manufactured by the Swanson Rheumatic Cure Company, Chicago, Ill. The "5 DROPS," has proven itself wonderful for its curative power in Rheumatism, not as a Temporary Reliever only, but to give a Permanent Cure even in chronic cases. Sometime ago, I had among others several Rheumatic cases under my treatment and prescribed for these patients the very best Remedies which I skillfully selected, but without desirable results. I then heard of "5 DROPS" and of its Wonderful Cures, and prescribed it to a few patients who found relief from its use within a few days. After that I prescribed it to a great number and to my surprise, I will say that in the course of Two or Three Weeks after they had used "5 DROPS" and "5 Drop" Plasters they were Cured. Among these were a few who had, for a number of years, been suffering with Chronic Rheumatism, who had piloted themselves around on Crutches. They came to my office without Crutches and told me they were perfectly Well. They give all the credit to "5 DROPS" and to "5 Drop" Plasters and this is their testimony to the Swanson Rheumatic Cure Company for their kindness and for the conscientious way in which they are placing these Wonderful Remedies among suffering humanity, which they told me to write to the Company as an acknowledgement. As I have seen the Curative Power of "5 DROPS" and "5 Drop" Plasters, in a great many instances, I can Truly recommend them and also that the firm is perfectly honest and reliable to deal with.

Every voter should make it a point to cast a ballot next Tuesday.

When you vote remember you must place an X in the square opposite each name you vote for.

It's an old saying that "an old calf is the hardest to wean," and it applies with force to a certain phase of local county politics.

Next Tuesday the voters of Nebraska will record their verdict on the political questions which have occupied the attention of the people for months past. The campaign in this county has been largely on the "still hunt" plan, but it has been none the less persistent and determined. In some quarters a fight has been waged against Captain A. D. Strunk, the republican candidate for county treasurer, by persons who in the past have been the recipients of the party's favor, and thereby held remunerative offices, but Mr. Strunk's faithfulness as a public servant and his sterling honesty is so well recognized all over the county that the disaffection of these men will have little effect on the result. The entire republican ticket is worthy the support of every republican in the county—in fact no citizen who votes for any man on the republican ticket will ever have cause to regret it.

A dispatch from Washington under date of October 30, says:—Admiral Dewey announced to some of his more intimate friends tonight the fact of his engagement to Mrs W B Hazen of this city. Mrs Hazen is the widow of General Hazen, formerly chief signal officer of the army, who died about ten years ago, and is a sister of John R Mc'Lean, democratic candidate for governor of Ohio. Mrs Hazen, since her husband's death, has made her home with her mother. She is a woman of large means, about 40 years of age and popular in the best social circles of Washington. The news of the admiral's engagement first became known tonight when the admiral announced the fact to a few of his friends. Later in the evening he visited the Lafayette Square theater and while there also communicated the news to some of his near friends and to Secretary Long, who occupied one of the boxes. While the date of the wedding is not definitely known the understanding is that it will take place sometime during November.

London, Oct 31—The war office has received a dispatch from General White, commanding the British forces at Ladysmith, reporting that the royal Irish fusileers, the No 10 mountain battery and the Gloucestershire regiment were surrounded in the hills by the Boers, and after losing heavily, obliged to capitulate. General White adds that the casualties have not yet been ascertained.

While minor reverses were not wholly unexpected, nothing like the staggering blow General Joubert delivered to General White's forces yesterday was anticipated. The full extent of the disaster is not yet acknowledged, if it is known at the war office. The loss in effective men must be appalling to a general who is practically surrounded. Two of the finest British regiments and a mule battery deducted from the Ladysmith garrison weakens it about a fifth of its total strength, and alters the whole situation very materially in favor of the Boers, who have again shown themselves stern fighters and military strategists of no mean order.

The disaster cost the British from 1,500 to 2,000 men and six seven-pound screw guns, and as the Boer artillery is already stronger than imagined the capture of these guns will be a great help to the Boers.

Further news must be awaited before it is attempted to fix the blame where it belongs. General White manfully accepts all the responsibility for the disaster, which apparently was at least partially due to the stampeding of the mules with the guns. Forty-two officers were made prisoners, besides a newspaper correspondent, J Hyde.

WOMAN'S COLUMN.

The W C T U met with Mrs Lulu Conklin last Friday on account of the mud which made it almost impracticable to meet with Auntie Cotton as previously announded. Nine members and one visitor present. The president being absent, Mrs Jennings led the meeting. Sketches and reminiscences of most of the State and National officers were given, also a beautiful guitar Solo by Mrs Covert. A bit of news from the Associated Press dispatches concerning the National convention now in session at Seattle caused a lively discussion but it was thought wise to let the matter drop until we get our own official reports. November 17 was decided on as the time for our reception to the teachers and the committee Mesdames L Andrew, Jennings, and Bessie McCasland with the Superintendent's Parlor Social work, Misses Gertie Norris and Nellie Cotton were instructed to make all arrangements. The Union will meet with Mrs Conklin again the 10th of November, when the Evangelistic department will be taken up, assistant Superintendents are requested to report work done in September and October and every member to come with a scripture text or promise bearing on our work and any helpful thoughts and suggestions that come to her. We shall be able to get some echoes from the National convention by that time and hope to have an interesting meeting.

Discovered by a Woman.

Another great discovery has been made, and that too, by a lady in this country. "Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly, and could not sleep. She finally discovered a way to recovery, by purchasing of us a bottle of Dr King's New Discovery for Consumption, and was so much relieved on taking first dose, that she slept all night; and with two bottles, has been absolutely cured. Her name is Mrs Luther Lutz.' Thus writes W C Hamnick & Co. of Shelby, N C. Trial bottles free at S G Wright's Drug Store. Regular size 50c and $1.00. Every bottle guaranteed.

ENDORSED BY ALLEN.

The President's Philippine Policy Warmly Supported.

EXTRACTS FROM A RECENT SPEECH

Patriotic Utterances of the Former United States Senator—The Islands Must be Held by this Country Until Their People Are Prepared for a Larger Degree of Self Government—No Bugaboo of "Imperialism" for Him.

"We are dealing with savages as bloodthirsty and as incapable of being reconciled as the Ogallala Sioux. They precipitated the conflict of their own volition."

"A duty is imposed upon us by our occupancy of the Philippine islands that we cannot escape. I fully concur in what I understand to be the policy of the president of the United States."

Perhaps the testimony of Admiral Dewey, concerning the situation in the Philippines and the nation's present duty there, does not appeal strongly to the average fusionist, who is being led by the party managers into opposition of the government, for the reason that the admiral is a Republican. Perhaps the opinion of General Funston, the intrepid volunteer from Kansas, has little weight with them, because he, too, is a Republican. May be the views of General Joe Wheeler will be more seriously considered by them, for the reason that he once offered some pretty active and effective armed resistance to the principle of government without the consent of the governed, enforced by Abraham Lincoln, and because he has been a life-long political opponent of the Republican party.

We are sure, coming nearer home, that Nebraska fusionists will put some stress upon the opinion of William Vincent Allen, who was a member of the United States senate until March 4, last. Senator Allen voted for the ratification of the treaty of Paris, according to recommendation of William Jennings Bryan. He not only voted for it, but he urged its ratification in stirring speeches. He vigorously endorsed the course of the administration. He severely condemned the Filipinos for their treachery, and declared them as "bloodthirsty as the Ogallala Sioux." For the benefit of his political brethren we here with reproduce extracts from his speeches—lest they forget, lest they forget.

Feb. 6, 1899, in a debate on joint resolution, S. R. 240, declaring the purposes of the United States toward the Philippine islands, Senator William V. Allen said:

"Mr. President, the news has come to us within the last few hours of a conflict between the American army and navy and the Filipinos. To my own state has fallen much of the loss of life and limb. Ten out of 20 of the young men who lost their lives in the battle that has been fought within the last 48 hours were members of the First Nebraska infantry. There is mourning in Nebraska today; there will be weeping in many a Nebraska home tonight. Mr. President, this ought to be a warning to us. I cannot condemn too severely the assault, the treacherous assault, made upon our troops. We were dealing with savages as bloodthirsty and as incapable of being reconciled as the Ogallala Sioux. They precipitated this conflict of their own volition.

"We are in the Philippine islands as a conquering military power. We hold them by virtue of the power to make war and in no other sense and there these islands and these people must remain, respecting the dignity and the sovereignty and the flag of this nation, until their status among the nations of the earth shall be defined by congress, the sole power to deal with this question."

A few days later, in a debate on the McEnery resolution, page 1,787 of the Congressional Record, Senator Allen said:

"Mr. President, our attitude in the Philippines is a military attitude altogether. There is no civil power there. We have held these islands and will continue to hold them by virtue of this government until congress, carrying out a duty imposed upon it by the constitution, shall formulate and see that there is adopted a system of civil government for those people. I think that position cannot be successfully contradicted.

"Mr. President, a duty is imposed upon us by our occupancy of the Philippine islands that we cannot escape. I would not incorporate those people into the body of our population or make citizens of them at this time. I fully concur in what I understand to be the policy of the president of the United States, to hold them for such reasonable time that the influence and education of this government may prepare them in some slight degree for the duties of an independent form of government. That furnishes no excuse for their assault upon the duly constituted authorities in those islands. That comes from their lack of knowledge. It comes possibly from those who have given them bad advice. I think it does so largely, but whether they be responsible or irresponsible, the first great lesson they must learn is obedience to the duly constituted authorities of the islands until the sovereignty changes from that authority to them."

A prominent railroad man of Nebraska says that during the past 18 months the receipts of the Burlington road for excess baggage have doubled. This excess baggage is paid by commercial travelers almost entirely and indicates that there are more of these commercial men on the road, and they are each of them carrying a larger amount of sample trunks with them. This is a true index of the commercial prosperity of the state.

PROOF OF PROSPERITY.

A Few Facts For the Benefit of Calamityites.

After having gone through four years of depression and hard times, the people of Nebraska are all the better able to recognize and appreciate the present era of prosperity. And they are all the more able to detect the fallacies of the arguments advanced by the free silver shouters and the calamity howlers, who were making such direful predictions three years ago.

Under the circumstances it is remarkable that any business man or any farmer should vote for the calamity crowd and against his own interests. It is remarkable that he should allow himself to be fooled by any such a bugaboo as "imperialism," "militarism," "foreign alliance" or Sulu "treaties."

The prosperity here at home is apparent. To correctly judge how it is all over the country, it is only necessary to read the reports which have been gathered from among the industrial institutions of the surrounding states.

The 2,239 concerns which have sent in reports not only employed 64,749 more hands in 1898 than they did in 1895, but there was an increase in the amount of wages paid of $37,415,763.90. Does this not look like prosperity? What would the showing be if all the industrial concerns in the country had reported? For these 2,239 concerns alone it means that the 64,500 hands who were out of employment in 1895 were all employed at good wages in 1898. With this great prosperity among the consumers is it any wonder that the farmers of the west are prosperous?

In 1895 where ten men were at work and received $100 in wages, in 1898 12 were at work and received $114 in wages. The ten men not only had three new companions beside them, but they were themselves getting 14 per cent more wages. Those ten men understand it and so do the three men beside them.

From Colorado there are reports from 60 concerns which employed 4,758 hands in 1895 and 6,621 in 1898. The increase in wages was $617,676.72. There was an increase of 40 per cent in the number of hands and an increase of 15 per cent in the wages of each man.

From Connecticut there are reports from 72 concerns which employed 3,999 hands in 1895 and 15,570 in 1898. The increase in wages per month was $26,411.96.

From South Carolina there are 15 reports from concerns which employed 2,718 hands in 1895 and 5,893 in 1898. The increase in wages paid was $811.-206.56 each month, or over 100 per cent, while the wages of each man was increased over 19 per cent.

From Missouri there are 206 reports from concerns which employed 5,057 in 1895 and 7,466 in 1898. The total increase in wages was $96,431.80 for one month alone.

In Ohio, from 88 reports there was an increase of 3,735 in the number of hands and an increase of $430,040.87 in the amount of wages paid every month.

In the state of Washington there was an increase of 3,644 in the number of hands employed by 148 firms, and a monthly increase of wages paid of $941.-936.03.

Taking the country at large, reports from 208 lumber firms which employed 9,078 hands in March, 1895, employed 15,485 in March, 1898, and the increase in wages for the month was $236,122.76.

Reports from 176 woolen mills show the employment of 23,436 hands in March, 1895, and 29,556 in March, 1898, an increase in wages of $360,139.40 for the month, or an increase of over two million dollars for the year.

In the manufacture of iron and steel 64 firms have reported with an increase of 8,451 hands for the month of March and a yearly increase in wages of $811.-459.72.

In the coal industry 94 firms report an increase of 3,307 in the number of hands and an increase of $2,421,689.64 in the amount of wages paid during the year. During the month of March, 1895, the hands received each an average of $37.49. In March, 1898, the average wage was $43.80.

These great increases mean a great deal to the laboring men, and they mean a great deal to the producing class who have the chance to feed a larger number of working men. And the working men have the money to pay for the produce.

There are at the present time 1,000,-000 more hands employed in the factories and industries of this country than there were in 1896. This represents a wage earning of more than one million dollars per day. In 1896 the free silver shouters talked much about the silver interests and their importance to the country. What a small item the silver business is, after all, compared with the increased amount of money paid out for wages.

In the state of Nebraska, according to the government reports, 187 institutions employed 698 hands in March, 1895. The same institutions in March, 1898, employed 1,464. The total increase in wages paid amounted to $36,-567.31 for the month. Taking the whole country over, the wages paid per capita for the month of March, 1895, averaged $34.62; for March, 1898, the average was $38.60—a hot gain of over 11 per cent.

Metoric photography will be extensively employed to make a permanent record of the great periodic star showing due on the nights of Nov 13, 14 and 15. The maximum display of meteors emanating from the constelation Leo comes three times in a century, and 1899 is one of the years. Photographic plates are more sensative than the eye to all celestial movements and without the aid of photography some of the satellites and asteroids would still be undiscovered. An ordinary camera with a lens from one inch to three inches in diameter, simply mounted to be shifted in position and pointed at the constellation from which the meteors radiate, will give good results in the hands of an amateur. Exposures may last from forty to sixty minuets. The constellation rises after midnight, and observations should be continued till near sunrise.—St Louis Globe-Democrat.

Americans can have good country roads, if they want them. It is only a matter of taking proper care of them when they are once made, and this must be done with regularity and system. In England the road-mender is always at work. He lives in a cottage on the road and takes care of a section which has been assigned to him. With his harrow he fills the worn places with flint and removes the litter from the roadway, keeping it neat and tidy. There is an inspector for every county division, and all the roads are under the charge of a committee of the county council. From beginning to end of the year nearly every mile of English country road is under the charge of a road-mender, paid to do his work.

Russia has agreed to arbitrate with this country the claims for damages for seizure of American sealers eight years ago. England and Canada have also agreed on the temporary Alaskan boundary and Germany and England seem inclined to settle the Samoan affair in accordance with their respective interests and the rights of the United States. This somewhat extraordinary disposition to settle all outstanding disputes with this country is flattering, of course, to America, but it suggests that one or more of the complaisant powers mentioned is likely soon to spring a surprise in some part of the world and that it is thought best to be on friendly terms with Uncle Sam before attempting a coup. However that may be, the United States is ready to come to a fair understanding with one or all as to any grievances or disputes between the countries, and as to future events is quite able to look after its own interests. But we will not become too intimate with any of them.

An English railway engineer has invented a car for lessening the loss of life in railway accidents. The plan adopted, which is favorably regarded by English experts, is extremely simple. On the ground that the danger from railway accidents is in the tendency of the modern car to telescope, and in the inability of the present style of buffers to take up very severe shocks, the inventor has designed a car that will take up and break a very heavy shock without injury to itself, except in extreme cases. His buffer car is filled with powerful springs, calculated to resist ordinary pressure, but to telescope under intense strain to one-third its normal size, thus exhausting the force of the shock and saving the passenger cars from injury. The cars are to be used in pairs, one to follow every train and another to precede the baggage car, separating it from the engine and tender. The force of a collision would thus be broken, whether it should come from the front or rear.

A grocer in southern Ohio, who had taken an active part against the sale of liquor to boys, was recently visited by a delegation of saloonkeepers. An answer that transforms an humble trader into a moral hero.

After all, young Alfred Vanderbilt gave up that $6,000,000 to young Cornelius merely to keep peace in the family. And it really would seem to be enough to keep peace in a much larger family. There are lots and lots of people who would be only too glad to be pacified by $6,000,000.

It certainly does seem as if there must be some mistake in the sex of the patient in a New York hospital who kept on talking after his heart had stopped beating.

That Mysterious Major...

...BY...

ETHEL A. SOUTHAM

CHAPTER XI.

"I ask him! Do you dream for one moment that I shall ask him for it?" Evelyn opened her eyes in amazement. She began to think she had perhaps made a mistake in pretending she had been an interested listener to the recent conversation.

"Certainly! Did you not understand me? You have merely to say you wish for the check in order to compare it with your own signature, and the rest becomes easy. Lady Howard, you quite agree with me?"

"And do you suppose that Major Brown's suspicions will not be aroused at once?" exclaimed Evelyn, caring nothing either for her aunt's or for Falkland's opinion upon the subject. "No—it is ridiculous! It would be worse than useless!"

"But, Eve dear, surely Mr. Falkland must know better than you."

"He may of course; but, for all that, I should not like to be the one to make the attempt. If you think your plan will answer, though, why not ask Major Brown yourself?" she added, turning a somewhat indignant look upon Gilbert Falkland. "You have always disliked him; so you ought to be satisfied now if there is a chance of convicting him of forgery."

"Yes, Miss Luttrell, you are right—I had my suspicions of him from the first," returned Falkland, a rather peculiar expression coming into his face. "I never dreamed, however, that they would be so speedily realized. But as to your suggestion. I would willingly follow it if I could, only it is ten to one that where he would most probably comply with one of your requests mine would absolutely fail. But think it over to yourself for half an hour. Anyhow, we must do something tonight. Every moment is of consequence, and— We must secure it—if not by fair means—well, in such a case as this I suppose any means are allowable!"

"IS THAT THE COFFEE AT LAST?"

Evelyn's only answer was a deep sigh as she rose slowly to her feet and turned away with a strange inexplicable longing to be left alone to her own thoughts, conflicting ones though they were, to be worried by no more cross-questioning or cynical taunts concerning the man whom, despite her short acquaintance with him and her aunt's strong prejudices, she was beginning to regard with something which was not exactly mere interest.

No wonder, therefore, that this latest affair had been to her like a blow, that for the time being she was simply stunned by the seriousness of the discovery. She could hardly believe that everything had been done with one aim and object in view, that all the Major's attentions, his numerous little acts of kindness to both her aunt and herself, had been part of a deeply laid scheme. It was too terrible to think how easily she had been duped, how she had been carried away by his well assumed courtesies, in many cases falling readily into the traps which had been so ingeniously contrived for her. Yet, as she reviewed the past two weeks, it seemed incredible to her that it should really be so—that a man who could commit such a deliberate felony could at the same time possess such fascinating manners and appear, as he always did, so thoroughly at his ease.

It was growing dark when Evelyn roused herself wearily from her somewhat harassing reveries, and turned her footsteps in the direction of the brilliant lamplight which was streaming forth from Lady Howard's room.

Her aunt had disappeared some time previously, alarmed no doubt by the heavily falling dew, and it was only as the hour was struck by some distant clock that Evelyn remembered she would be waiting for her to make her coffee.

Great was her astonishment, however, as she drew slowly nearer and nearer, to hear the sound of voices and to behold not only her aunt, but two other figures sitting in the shade of the veranda. One was Falkland—she would have recognized his pale, rather cadaverous-looking face a mile away—and the other— Oh it was absurd! She must be dreaming! It was beyond the bounds of possibility! It could not be Major Brown!

Whether it was beyond the bounds of possibility or not, it was certainly the Major who sprang up at her approach, and who moved his chair to one side to allow her to pass with that same spontaneous courtesy which had struck her from the first.

"Dear me, child, where have you been? I thought you were lost!" exclaimed her ladyship by way of greeting. "Ring the bell, dear, and say we are ready for coffee. They are later than usual this evening."

But Evelyn did not utter a word as she passed silently through into the sitting room. At the sight of the Major her heart had given one tremendous bound, and now it was beating almost to suffocation. What was he doing there? What could be the reason? Never before had she seen either her aunt or Falkland making themselves so obviously agreeable to him. Never before had he even been made welcome to their room.

"Miss Luttrell"—it was Falkland who had followed her through the window—"this will be your opportunity. You cannot have a better chance. Go out the instant your aunt leaves the veranda, and in as casual a way as possible try to gain possession of that check."

At the sound of the low, rather hurried words, Evelyn started slightly and suddenly dropped the parasol which she was swinging slowly to and fro in her hand.

"The check!" she gasped, gazing wildly round.

There was no need to wonder any longer what the unusual affability meant. The Major had not been proclaimed innocent of the forgery, as she in a vague sense of despair had almost imagined. It was clear why he had been welcomed so warmly into their private room; and yet, as her eyes rested for one brief moment upon the accused as he stood talking to her aunt, a handsome, wonderfully distinguished-looking man in his faultless evening dress, all her old feelings of incredulity came back to her as forcibly as ever. She forgot any doubts and suspicions that she had, never for an instant remembered the episode of the birthday book and the strange manoeuvres he had adopted to secure a specimen of her writing and her signature, and with a decided shake of her head put an immediate veto upon Falkland's carefully worked out plan.

"Then you refuse to do anything in the matter? Really, Miss Luttrell, your astonish me!" observed Falkland, a cynical smile curling his lips. "But you have a tender heart, I suppose, and dislike the thought of your elegant friend being provided with a suit of broad arrows at the nation's expense."

"I refuse," returned Evelyn, her head erect, her eyes flashing, "simply because I am certain that Major Brown is as innocent of forging that check as"—pausing to add greater emphasis to her words—"as you are!"

"Oh, very well—there is nothing more to be said, I suppose!" was Falkland's calm reply as he turned away and, without even attempting to argue the point further, walked across to the other side of the room.

Evelyn looked after him with an air of satisfaction, and then drew a sigh of relief. She was agreeably surprised by the way in which he had received her refusal; knowing that he owed the Major a grudge from the very first, she had felt that, if he could annoy him over anything he would assuredly avail himself of the earliest opportunity. But what was the meaning of this alteration of his manner, considering how determined he had been a short time ago to secure that check without an instant's delay? He was taking her decided refusal to help him in his scheme with wonderful placidity. Yes—he was too calm—far too calm. He must have some other plan in his head. Some other plan? Clearly he was not the kind of man to be so plainly balked.

The entrance of one of the waiters with a tray of coffee cups diverted her thoughts for a moment. Moving slowly towards the window again, she stood gazing out on the starlit night. Lady Howard, engrossed in an interesting conversation with Major Brown, turned with a slight start at her approach.

"Is that the coffee at last, Evelyn? You might bring it to us out here—the air is so pleasant this evening."

Miss Luttrell drew a faint sigh. Returning to the small table where the tray had been placed, she found Falkland hovering over the cups and saucers somewhat uneasily, a sugar basin in his hand.

"Let me see, Miss Luttrell—will you make your aunt's coffee? I believe you generally do."

"Yes—I will make it," replied Evelyn, taking up the half-filled cup of coffee which was nearest to her, filling it with cream, and then carrying it off to Lady Howard without offering as much as a glance in Falkland's direction.

She wished he would not thrust his company so persistently upon her. As he knew how detestable his presence was to her, she wondered he had not the delicacy of feeling to remain on the veranda or to absent himself entirely from her aunt's room for the rest of the evening. But no—it seemed as though he took a delight in tormenting her this evening, for, looking around again, she saw him still standing by the table contemplating the coffee cups in the most meaningless fashion.

Evelyn gave a little gesture of impatience and marched boldly past him; even if Falkland was annoying her, it would never do for Major Brown to suffer in consequence. With this object in view, she took up the cream jug, and was trying to reach another cup of coffee, when Falkland stretched out his arm before her and placed one into her hand.

"For Major Brown, I suppose?" he interrogated, with unusual deference.

Evelyn murmured some word of thanks and turned away. But what was it that arrested her attention? What was it that made her start, bend hastily towards the cup, and then, growing whiter than ashes, look round at Falkland?

"By fair means" or "any means." Those were the words he had uttered; and now back in her ears they were ringing, back in her ears she could hear them clanging, clashing, whilst a horrible idea struck her—an idea which seemed almost to paralyze her.

UNIQUE COURTSHIP.

There is something very comic according to our notions in the way a Boer manages his love-making. Having asked the permission of his father to court a certain damsel in the neighborhood—by that is meant anywhere within about fifty miles—he proceeds to purchase the most strikingly decorated and loudly colored saddle-cloth for his steed that he can possibly obtain. He will very likely spend a large sum of money on this, for it is a special occasion, and no one knowing the country and the habits of the people will have the least doubt from the appearance of his horse that he is in quest of a bride.

Having made his preparations, he mounts his most spirited horse and journeys to the lady's home, but instead of seeking out the object of his affections he respectfully asks permission of her father to court her. The old man cautiously refrains from answering, but consults his wife, and the youth joins the younger members of the household.

No further notice is taken of the suitor for the rest of the day, but if the parents approve of him, when the rest of the household retire for the night the mother solemnly approaches the young man and maiden with a long tallow candle in her hand. This she places on the table and lights and then, having taken an affectionate farewell of the couple, she retires. This is a sign to the lover that his suit is acceptable. As long as the candle lasts the young people are allowed to sit up and talk.

Doing Penance for Sins.

In former times persons guilty of grievous and notorious offenses were required to make open confession, and further to make satisfaction for the scandal given by their bad example by doing penance publicly in a white sheet in their parish church. The sheet was used to show clearly to everyone which was the offender. The last time that public penance was done in an English church was on Sunday evening, July 30, 1882, when a man named Hartree, in the church of All Saints, East Clevedon, made an open confession of immorality, and promised to perform the penance thus imposed on him by the vicar. No white sheet was used on this occasion. The last case in which one was used appears to have been one in St. Bridget's church, Chester, in 1851. But on that occasion the penance was not public, the church door being locked. In the previous year, however, public penance in a white sheet was done in a country church in Essex, and a similar thing occurred in Ditton church, near Cambridge, in 1849.—Stray Stories.

Metropolitan Beggars' Trust.

The New York police have recently made the discovery that most of the successful beggars in the city belong to a trust. The beggars' trust is said to own a large house in Brooklyn, which provides every description of beggars' supplies, including bogus wooden arms, legs, hump backs, pitiful placards for alleged blind men and cripples, etc. The beggars pay the trust a certain percentage of their earnings, and the trust regulates the hours of their labor, selects the districts, furnishes a list of charitably disposed people, and looks after members when ill. The police say that several wealthy and cultured mendicants belonging to the trust live in fashionable flats. Several attended the grand opera last season, and one rides in his own carriage.

Dewey Salve.

From the New York Press: One of the big firms in the shopping district decorated the front of its store with an immense portrait of Dewey and beneath it placed the word "salve" in large letters. A stranger in town, much pleased at the decoration, openly expressed his admiration, but, being a trifle short on Latin and not understanding that "salve" meant hail! instead of ointment, remarked indignantly: "Don't you think it's a pity that people will spoil a fine picture of Dewey like that one by trying to advertise with it a poultice for wounds and bruises?"

"The memory of man," remarked the Stockton sage, "differs from romance in that it usually runneth not to the contrary."

DUAL GOVERNMENT FAVORED

Progress Made in Negotiations to Divide Up Samoa.

GERMANY IS LIKELY TO WITHDRAW

United States and Great Britain Destined to Continue Jointly in Control—Three Powers Seem Likely to Reach Agreement.

Under date of November 2 a Washington special says: The negotiations for the partition of the Samoan islands are proceeding rapidly, and officials here would not be surprised if a final agreement were reached in the near future. The discussions, which is going on in London with the co-operation of the authorities here and in Berlin, has brought out certain essential features on which all three powers—Great Britain, Germany and the United States—appear to be agreed. At the outset it is said that the determination was reached that the tripartite government of the group should come to an end, and that no more than two powers, and preferably one, should govern the islands. The chances seemed good for an agreement that two powers divide the islands, thus giving a dual government in place of the present unwieldy tripartite arrangement.

It seemed to be generally accepted by the negotiators that the United States would be one of the two powers to be represented and the island of Tutuila, on which the harbor of Pago-Pago is located, would naturally fall to the lot of the United States. It is understood that the British authorities quite fully coincided with this view.

The main point to be agreed upon is whether Great Britain or Germany shall be the party to withdraw, with chances in favor of England remaining.

Lipton Sails for Home

Sir Thomas Lipton sailed Thursday for his home in England. He received a surprising tribute of the esteem in which he is held by a great many people, in a kind of a triumphal march through several down town streets, a great reception at the American line pier, where he went on board the St. Louis, and a series of informal receptions from thousands of people. He also received word of the presentation of a loving cup, which will be ready by Christmas for him. He was visibly affected. In accepting the cup he said: "I have failed to win the cup, but I have won the good wishes and the heart of the American people and I shall prize that more than the cup."

Imports Into Hawaii.

Special Agent Sewall, at Honolulu, reports to the state department that the total imports into Hawaii during the first nine months of 1899 amounted to $13,667,372, an increase of $5,305,792 over the corresponding period of 1898 and $2,016,482 more than the imports for the entire year 1898.

SPAIN PRESENTS A CLAIM

Three Islands of the Philippine Group Not Included in Cession

A sensation was created in the senate at Madrid, Spain, Wednesday, by the declaration of Count d'Almenac that, owing to the ignorance of the Spanish-American peace treaty commissioners, three islands of the Philippine group, both north of Luzon, were not included in the scope of the treaty. These islands, he asserted, ought to be made the basis of negotiations for the liberation of the Spanish prisoners.

At Washington, the islands in the Philippine group, referred to in the Madrid dispatch as not having been included in the treaty ceding the archipelago, to the United States, are not regarded by the members of the Philippine commission as of any importance, and no regret, they say, need be felt if the statement should prove correct. The opinion was expressed by one of the commissioners that the islands referred to are not worth negotiating for as they would not be of any material benefit, as they are out of the way of the regular ocean travel.

DETAILS OF THE CAPTURE.

Dispatch From General White Tells How He Lost His Left Wing.

A dispatch was received on Wednesday from General White giving the details of the capture of his left wing Monday. He says: "Sunday night Colonel Carleton, with the lost detachment, started to seize Nicholson Nek. When within two miles of that point boulders were rolled down the hills and rifleshots fired. This stampeded the mules drawing the ammunition wagons and the started in the direction of the enemy with practically all the equipment. Carleton entrenched his forces on the hill and the Boers attacked in heavy force. The fire was searching and two companies of the Gloucester regiment were compelled to retire from their advanced position. The enemy pressed in at close range, and our loss was numerous. When our ammunition had practically given out the Boers stormed our position and our survivors were captured. The failure of the column was due to the stampeding of the mules. The security of Ladysmith is unaffected."

MESSAGES CONGRATULATE

Cheering Telegrams Sent to Transvaal Representative.

A special from Brussels of October 30 says that Dr. Leyds, the special representative of the Transvaal government in European countries, in the course of an interview regarding the situation at Ladysmith, said he was greatly surprised at the news of the partial British disaster. While paying warm tribute to the candor of Sir George White, he pointed out that a tactical error had been committed by the British commander in dividing his forces and underrating the strength of the Boers. He declined to give an opinion regarding future developments in the Transvaal.

Telegrams of congratulation had been received by him, he said, from all parts of Europe, and from all classes of society.

PRESIDENT WAS PRESENT

On Hand at Richmond When the Torpedo Boat Shubrick was Launched.

The torpedo boat Shubrick was launched at Richmond, Va., Wednesday, in the presence of President McKinley, many members of his cabinet, Governor Tyler of Virginia, and an immense outpouring of people.

The demonstration was marred in some of its features by a hevy rainstorm. The civic carnival parade had to be abandoned owing to the weather and decorations of the buildings had a bedraggled and woe-begone look. But those who went to witness the launching and to see the president, made the best of it and were enthusiastic.

The president made an address full of good cheer, saying the north and south were now welded for all time.

THINKS HUSBAND IS GUILTY

Chicago Man Charged With Sending Infernal Machine.

The sheriff of Waterloo, Ia., arrived in Chicago Wednesday, with a warrant for the arrest of Jerome W. Hoot, charged with attempting murder. Hoot is believed to be in hiding in Chicago.

Mrs. Hoot, who is not living with her husband, received a package from Chicago, which, upon being opened, was found to contain an infernal machine, with enough dynamite in it to blow up an ordinary block of buildings. Mrs. Hoot, who resides in Waterloo, is possessed of some means and her husband in the event of her death would be her heir.

Helpless Lawyer Murdered.

William G. Deale, a helpless lawyer of Chicago, was found dead in his office from asphyxiation. A gas jet three feet above his head was open, and a rubber tube attached was found hanging around his shoulders to his nostrils. It is thought he was murdered, as, being absolutely helpless, he could not possibly have arranged things as they were found.

Lawton After Filipinos.

General Lawton is making rapid strides in the campaign against Tarlac, where Aguinaldo and the main body of insurgents have been located for some time. Major Parker, leading part of the advance force, entered Aliaga, while Major Hayes' command captured Talvera and Cabgnattan. They also made an important capture of war munitions and food supplies. Bates' Macabees are performing excellent service, and are well in advance of the main body of American troops.

It is about ten years since about seventeen Egyptian mummies in the old museum of Berlin proved to be the bodies of fellows who, a short time ago, took their beer in the saloons of the capital of the empire of William II. It is now believed that there is not a museum in the world that has not been imposed upon by frauds of this kind.

FLIM-FLAM GAME.

Variations, But It Failed To Work This Time.

New York Sun: A young man holding two addressed and stamped letters in his hand entered Louis Mendelssohn's cigar store, at 8 St. Mark's place yesterday, and asked the proprietor to give him a $10 bill for ten ones, so that he could send it in a letter to his sister in Philadelphia. Mendelssohn gave him the $10 note and then counted the $1 bills and found there were only nine. "Mother must have made a mistake. I will go home and get the other $1," said the young man, moving toward the door. "Hold on! I want my $10," called out the proprietor. "That's so. Give me the $9 and there's the letter with the $10 in it. You hold on to that until I come back from mother's," said the young man. He got back his money, handed a sealed letter to Mendelssohn and again started for the door. The proprietor tore open the letter and found only a blank paper inside. He shouted for the police, and his wife, who was just outside the door, stopped the young man. He told her to keep quiet, handed her the $10 bill and ran down the street. Policeman arrested him and took him to police headquarters, where his picture was found in the rogues' gallery labeled "flim-flam worker." He gave the name of John Williams. Mendelssohn having got back his money refused to make a complaint. The prisoner was discharged.

The Baltimore and Ohio South Western Rail Road placed in service several months ago five large ten-wheel compound passenger engines for use on fast trains between Cincinnati and St. Louis. The performance of these engines has been eminently satisfactory and up to the highest expectation. The same line has also in service 50 consolidation compound freight engines which provide ample power for the entire line in addition to what was already in use. The compound engines were an experiment but hard service has proved that they are entirely successful and show a saving of 15 per cent in fuel as compared with simple engines of the same type. Exhaustive tests were made with both the simple and compound locomotives before the order for the entire lot was placed with the result vastly in favor of the compound locomotives.

A pun so good that it was not only pardoned, but enjoyed, was once made in a reply to Lord North, says the Youth's Companion. It could not have been made outside of England, where a clerk is invariably a "clark." Lord North had just begun to make his annual budget speech in the house of commons when a dog, which had wandered in, lifted up his voice in a series of lively yelps. "By what new opposition am I attacked now?" inquired Lord North, facetiously. "I think, my lord," replied a voice well known to most of the hearers, "it was the member from Berkshire."

The Russian Calendar.

The Russian government has, after years of discussion, resolved to give up the old style, or Julian, calendar, which is twelve days behind the Gregorian system. The old style was a source of great annoyance to Russian merchants doing business with other countries, who were forced to use both dates. It was also annoying to foreigners trading with Russia. The St. Petersburg Astronomical society has taken the matter in hand and the necessary details will be arranged. It is expected the new calendar will come into effect in 1901.

PINS FAITH TO CONGRESS

Aguinaldo Asks His Followers to Remain Firm.

CRISIS IN THE PHILIPPINE CABINET

Resignation of Two Members Causes Dismay—Funston's Followers Greeted With Open Arms at Topeka —Other General News.

A Manila, P. I., dispatch of Friday morning says: Aguinaldo has issued a proclamation announcing that the American congress will meet in December to decide whether "the imperialistic policy" and "this bloody work" are to be continued. He exhorts his soldiers to conduct themselves so that congress will consider them worthy of independence, and requests the priests to abstain from politics and to redeem the church from the name the misdemeanors of the friars have given it.

A crisis in the Filipino cabinet is predicted as the result of the resignations of Paterno and Buencamino, two Filipino leaders, who have lost the confidence of the rabid revolutionists.

Some Filipinos who attempted to come to Manila with the Spanish commission, received a message from Major General Otis saying the women and children would be given American protection, but that the men who had cast their lot with the insurgents must remain with them. The party included a brother of General Luna, who was assassinated by the guard before Aguinaldo's house, with his family and the Filipino secretary of the treasury's family. The families returned to Tarlac.

REPORT OF ADJT. GENERAL

Present Fighting Force of the Nation Nearly 100,000.

The annual report of Adjutant General Corbin has been made public. Aside from the strictly technical recital of all the details of a busy year in military life, the report gives much information of an interesting character and submits numerous recommendations for the betterment of the service. General Corbin sums up the military forces now in the service of the United States as:

Regular army, 64,586; volunteers, 34,574; total, 99,160. The distribution of these troops, up to October 1, was as follows:

In the United States, 34,229; Porto Rico, 3,360; Cuba, 11,187; Philippines 22,315, enroute to Philippines, 17,099; Alaska, 499; Hawaiian islands, 466.

It is expected that by December 1 next all the infantry regiments, U. S. V., will have sailed for the Philippine islands. These with the troops now there will give a total strength of 2,117 officers and 63,608 enlisted men (an aggregate of 65,725.)

The service of many of the troops after their enlistments had expired caused General Corbin to recommend that "each officer of the several volunteer organizations and each enlisted man who continued in service in the Philippines after the second of March, 1899, until honorably discharged, be awarded a suitably inscribed medal."

He pays a glowing tribute in the volunteers.

SELLS DISPUTED TOWNSITE

Cass Lake, Minnesota, is Purchased by Three Interests.

The Cass Lake, Minn., townsite, on the Chippewa Indian reservation over which there has been a hard contest for a long time, was sold at the St. Cloud land office Friday. The townsite went in four parcels, the total price being $17,994.38, going to Sidney L. Wright of Philadelphia, the eastern Minnesota railway and A. Sauk Lumber company.

Secretary Hitchcock, six or eight months ago, ordered the eviction of the settlers from this town, and there were several applicants later for the land. After a contest the secretary ordered a sale, which finally disposes of the matter.

WILL GO OUT OF BUSINESS

New Minnesota Law Proves a Bar to Commission Men.

Owing to the Minnesota supreme court decision, holding the Grindeland law, which provides for licensing all grain and produce commission men, to be constitutional, the produce commission men of Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth have banded together and claim that to comply with the law would make the business unprofitable. Pending the legal fight they have decided to go out of the commission business and buy all produce outright. No more quotations on produce will be given out as there is no longer a commission market.

German Plea For Mediation.

The Berlin, Germany, Tageblatt says Count Bothmer, president of the German peace societies, has telegraphed to Queen Victoria, praying her to accept the mediation of the United States in the war with the Transvaal.

Director of Mint Reports.

The monthly statement of the director of the mint shows that during the month of October last the total coinage at the mints of the United States was $11,838,109, as follows: Gold, $8,220,000; silver, $3,313,569; minor coins, $304,540.

Indian Commissioner Jones at Washington has been advised by Special Agent Jenkins that the Pine Ridge and Rosebud Indians, who were stranded at Omaha after the exposition closed, have all been paid and will be taken to their reservations immediately.

Porto Rico's Census.

Census officials have been appointed for all the districts of Porto Rico, and the first enumeration will be taken between November 10 and December 10. Already the various offices are busily engaged in the preliminary work and they are making every effort and taking every precaution to avoid errors and to get complete and accurate data.

Prof George D. Herron of Iowa college, at Grinnell, Friday tendered his resignation to the trustees. The resignation will probably be accepted.

ARE STILL IN DANGER.

Sir George White's Forces are in a Very Grave Position—Ladysmith Invested.

A special says: The Havas agency this evening published the following extraordinary dispatch, which the agency says was received through its correspondent at Brussels:

Cape Town: The news of the Boers' two victories around Ladysmith has created considerable excitement among the Afrikanders, who do not conceal their joy. Sir Alfred Milner, the British commissioner, is much perturbed at their attitude. General White in these two engagements, lost about 350 men killed, wounded and prisoners. The second victory was won by the Free Staters, commanded by Lucas Meyer, who seized Calenso, thus cutting off the retreat of General White, who is wounded. The investment of Ladysmith is complete and the Boers are master of Pietermaritzburg and Durban railway.

"News has reached General White that Mafeking is closely besieged, and that the Boers have successfully repulsed the sorties. The surrender of Mafeking is expected.

"It is also confirmed that the Free Staters have seized Colesburg."

Denial Made by London.

The English secretary of the war office, who was shown the Cape Town dispatch of the Aavas agency, said the statements made were utterly baseless.

PRELIMINARY REPORT

Philippine Peace Commission on Past and Present of the Rebellion.

A Washington special of November 2 says: In accordance with the understanding reached at the conference at the White house the Philippine commission submitted to the president the preliminary report which it has promised to prepare.

The report appears to be a compact summary of conditions on the islands as the commission left men; of the historical events which preceded the Spanish war and led to the original Filipino insurrection; of the exchanges between Admiral Dewey and the other American commanders and the insurgents, the breaking out and progress of the present insurrection and finally a statement of the capacity of the Filipinos for self-government. A notable feature of the report is a memorandum by Admiral Dewey explanatory to his relations with Aguinaldo.

The commission tells briefly how it conducted the task entrusted to it hearing statements from all classes of people in Manila as to the capabilities of the Filipinos for self-government, the habits and customs of the people and also the establishment of municipal governments in many towns. All this matter is to be included in the final report.

GREAT DAY FOR KANSANS

Sunflower State Goes Wild Over Funston and His Men.

Returning warriors never received a more royal welcome home than that accorded Thursday to the soldiers of "Kansas famous fighting Twentieth" on its arrival at Topeka from San Francisca. Gen. Frederick Funston came in for the lion's share of attention shown the officers, and "the little hero of Manila" was literally taken off his feet by his admirers in their eagerness to display their regard for him.

At every station in Kansas after the Colorado line was crossed, early in the morning, cheering crowds met the soldiers and greeted them in unstinted fashion. The schools and colleges along the line were closed, business was practically suspended and the people flocked to the trains by the thousands.

Go To Prison for Life.

Two negroes, James Render, alias "Denver Kid," and Richard Williams, alias "Trilby," were convicted of murder at Alma, Kan., Friday and sentenced to hang, which, under the Kansas procedure, means life imprisonment. They murdered and robbed Harry L. Landy and Calvin Burger, boys, at McFarland in last June. When arrested "Trilby" was strung up there by a mob, but was cut down and resuscitated.

Anxiety Felt.

A Capetown special says: Grave anxiety is felt regarding the situation at Ladysmith. A telegram got through from Durban, Natal, Thursday night which announced that the Boers were threatening Colenso, twenty miles south of Ladysmith, where there is a big railroad bridge. If the Boers should destroy this General White would be isolated.

Entire Class Suspended.

The entire sophomore class of Capital university, east of Columbus, O., where young men prepare for the Evangelical Lutheran ministry, has been suspended. The class went to town without permission and refuse to make public apology for having done so.

Little Changed.

No apparent change was reported in the condition of Vice President Hobart at 3:30 this, Friday, morning. He is sleeping quietly.

TWENTY-FIVE HARD ROUNDS

Jim Jeffries and Tom Sharkey Fight Full Limit.

THE SAILOR BOY PROVES A SLUGGER

Was Able to Give the Champion Just as Good as He Sent—Tide of Battle Never Strong on Either Side—a Most Remarkable Fight.

James J. Jeffries retains the championship of the world, Referee George Siler giving him the decision at the end of the twenty-fifth round over Sailor Tom Sharkey, at Coney Island sporting club Friday night. It was one of the most marvelous battles that has taken place, and the greatest crowd that ever gathered at the Coney Island club house witnessed the desperate struggle for supremacy.

In five rounds Jeffries had the better of the fight, in the first two and the last three. During the other twenty Sharkey forced the issue, and like a bull terrior was at his man with both hands unceasingly. In those twenty rounds Jeffries' great weight and brawn helped him to hold off the sailor, and in the twenty-second round he swung in a couple of vicious upper cuts that made Sharkey groggy. Tom came back again in the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth, but he was weakened greatly by Jeffries' vicious blows. One minute before the gong sounded to end the fight Jeffries' left glove came off, and practically the contest was over.

The referee motioned the men to Jeffries corner, an American flag was flung around the champion's shoulders, and the crowd on that side and end of the arena cheered wildly. The crowd on the opposite side and end, in Sharkey's corner, yelled for Sharkey, and the men were led back to their dressing rooms.

Ten thousand spectators gathered around the ringside. Though Coney island was swept by a gale, the cars came down crowded to the guards in a swiftly moving line and the sports waded to the narrow entrances leading to the arena.

The commission consists of leading educators of the country. In case it is decided to undertake the establishment of the university, it is understood the president will be requested to recommend it in a message to congress.

GEN. WHITE IS IN A TRAP.

Position of the English General is Considered Precarious.

A London, November 3 special says: Gen. White's position is acknowledged to be precarious, that the landing of a big naval brigade to go to his assistance is being advocated.

While yesterday's rumors of Boer and British victories are taken here to indicate that some serious operations have been carried out, it is generally recognized that most of the news at present is largely rumor and must be accepted with great caution.

A 4:05 a. m. Saturday advices from London say there is very little fresh intelligence today but it is believed that the Delagoa Bay route, if not already restored, speedily will be, thus giving quicker communication with the cape. The situation is still hopeful.

MR. HOBART'S SUCCESSOR.

Vice-President's Retirement Sets Republican Politicians to Figuring.

A special to the Herald from Washington says:

Vice-President Hobart's announcement, through members of his family, of his retirement from public life, will make it necessary for the republican national convention to choose another running mate for President McKinley, should the president be renominated next year. It will also necessitate the choice of a president pro tem for the senate to preside over its deliberations until a new vice-president takes office.

Republican politicians are practically agreed that Mr. Hobart's successor on the Republican ticket next year must come from New York state.

New Bureau Proposed.

It has practically been decided that a colonial bureau will be established to take directly in charge all matters pertaining to the outlying dependencies of the United States. The office will be a bureau of the war department and not a separate department, as has been suggested, and the matter has so far advanced that the selection of a chief of the bureau is now under consideration.

CARRIES MEALS TO WORKMEN.

How an Enterprising Pennsylvania Boy Is Making His Fortune.

From the Philadelphia Record: Thos. Mintzer, a 14-year-old lad of Conshohocken, is probably the most energetic youngster in Montgomery county. Through his own devices he earns $15 a week and only works on an average of six hours a day. His business is meal carrier. About three months ago Tommy called on the employes of the different mills and offered to carry their meals for 15 cents a week. As many of the mills are running night and day his offer included suppers as well as dinners. Most of the employes were paying 25 cents a week for the same service, and the boy's offer was promptly accepted. At first Tommy was able to carry the dinners in a large express wagon, which was hauled by a goat, but as he steadily gained customers it became necessary to get a large push cart, which he fitted up with shelves. His business finally increased so much that he had to hire a horse and wagon. His customers now number 130. In order to give general satisfaction Tommy starts out with the dinners at 11 a. m. and delivers those that are farthest away. He then makes a second collection at 11:45 o'clock, and, as these customers work in mills near their homes, the boy manages to have all the dinners delivered by 12:05 noon. His weekly collections average $19.50 and as he pays $4.50 for the use of the horse and wagon it leaves $15 clear, which is more than some of his oldest customers earn in the mill.

STRIKE!
Hundreds of Thousands Are Involved.

Trouble in an Important Part of the Organization Affects All the Rest—A Perfectly Harmonious System Easily Thrown Out of Gear.

Organized labor has reached such a stage that anything affecting a particular branch of it draws all the rest into the difficulty.

It is exactly the same way with different organs of the human body. Work too hard, eat too much, drink too much, exercise but little, be a little irregular in any way, and the liver quits work.

Then the bowels become constipated and the stomach goes on strike. The heart is affected, the brain follows suit, and every part in the body is dragged into the trouble.

The only way out of it is to go at the source of all this—the liver. Square yourself with the liver and all will get back to regular natural work.

Cascarets Candy Cathartic make things right with the liver. They perfume the breath, prevent food from souring on the stomach, give tone to the bowels, strengthen the intestinal muscles, while they are cleaning and stirring up the liver to renewed activity.

No matter how long a case has been incurable, Cascarets are guaranteed to put things right as they should be, and set the whole machinery a-going. And you can get them at any drug store or by mail for price—10c, 25c, or 50c. Address Sterling Remedy Co., Chicago or New York.

CCC This is the CASCARET tablet. Every tablet of the only genuine Cascarets bears the magic letters "C C C." Look at the tablet before you buy, and beware of frauds, imitations and substitutes.

The Sponge Animal.

If the sponge as brought up fresh from the sea-bottom were a familiar object, says Doctor Lydekker, few would be in doubt as to its being an animal. When fresh, it is a fleshy-looking substance covered with a firm skin, and if cut it presents somewhat the appearance of raw meat. Its cavities are filled with a gelatinous substance called "milk." American sponges and those of all other parts of the world are inferior to the sponges of the eastern shores of the Mediterranean. The finest of all sponges is the Turkey toilet sponge, which is cup-shaped. The American sponge most nearly approaching it in quality is the West Indian glove sponge.

Production of Salt.

The salt production of the United States, which the newest trust seeks to control, amounts to 15,000,000 barrels a year, valued at over $5,000,000. Salt was first made in the United States in Ohio in 1798, and the Michigan mines have been worked since 1859. There are two methods of obtaining salt, it being gathered either from mines or by evaporation. Sea water is seldom evaporated for salt. The more saline water in certain springs and pools is used, being placed in pans and exposed to sun or artificial heat until the water passes away in vapor, leaving the salt deposit.

How Mrs. Pinkham HELPED MRS. GOODEN.

[LETTER TO MRS. PINKHAM, NO. 12,733]

"I am very grateful to you for your kindness and the interest you have taken in me, and truly believe your medicines and advice are worth more to a woman than all the doctors in the world. For years I had female troubles and did nothing for them. Of course I became no better and finally broke down entirely. My troubles began with inflammation and hemorrhages from the kidneys, then inflammation, congestion and falling of the womb and inflammation of ovaries.

"I underwent local treatment every day for some time; then after nearly two months the doctor gave me permission to go back to work. I went back, but in less than a week was compelled to give up and go to bed. On breaking down the second time, I decided to let doctors and their medicine alone and try your remedies. Before the first bottle was gone I felt the effects of it. Three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and a package of Sanative Wash did me more good than all the doctors' treatments and medicine.

"The first remark that greets me now is 'How much better you look!' and you may be sure I never hesitate to tell the cause of my health."—MRS. E. J. GOODEN, ACKLEY, IA.

RINEHART'S INDIAN PICTURES.

In the summer of 1898 the Government Indian Bureau invited all tribes of Indians in this country to send delegates to an Indian Congress, and they gathered from far and near with their ponies and tepees and gaudiest trappings in the Exposition Grounds at Omaha. Never before had there been and never again will there be such a gathering. There were about five hundred of them, some partly civilized, but the greater portion picturesque in original savagery. Strange as it may seem at this late day many of the Indians declared that before coming to Omaha they had no idea what multitudes of white men there were or how hopeless it was to try to stand against them. This was probably the last time that so complete and spectacular a view of the North American Indian will be possible and those who had the privilege of witnessing it are to be counted fortunate. At the time of the Indian Congress a prominent photographer obtained permission to take the photographs of the most noted chiefs present and succeeded in obtaining a collection which never will be equaled. Mr. Rinehart, the photographer, copyrighted all these pictures and placed in a few art stores some hand-colored proofs which, notwithstanding their high price, sold at once, and these Indian pictures have become the fad of the year. The Chicago Great Western Railway has succeeded at large expense in obtaining from Mr. Rinehart the privilege of reproducing the best four of these pictures, Chiefs "Wolf Robe," "Louison," "Hollow Horn Bear," and "Hattie Tom," and have incorporated them in an art calendar for 1900, which is pronounced the most artistic production yet attempted. The heads are 6x8 inches, one on sheet, wonderfully reproduced in all their original colors, and when framed make most striking and effective pictures, particularly suited for holiday gifts. Owing to the expense but a very small edition has been issued. They will be sent, however, while the supply lasts to any person sending 25 cents in stamps or silver to cover the royalty charges and the expense of packing and mailing to F. H. Lord, General Passenger & Ticket Agent, 113 Adams street, Chicago.

Iron in Elba.

The little island of Elba, once celebrated as the temporary abiding place of the great Napoleon, has recently come into prominence in a new way. Years ago deposits of iron were discovered on the island, but the mines were never worked. Now, where once Napoleon reigned in solitary state, great smelters and machine shops have been set up and the whole island is alive with the hum of industry.

A rumor is current to the effect that republicans in Nebraska do not want to carry the state as it might have knocked Mr Bryan out of the democratic nomination in 1900 and they want him renominated, as an easy victim.

James C Longest of English, Ind, butchered a hog which was not quite thirty months old, and which net dressed 578 pounds. It weighed nearly 1,200 pounds gross. The hog was of the Irish Grazier and Chester White breeds. It was one of the largest ever raised in the state.

An error in the published date of sale of delinquent real estate in Johnson county, is affirmed by some lawyers to invalidate the collection of delinquent taxes. The published date was November 1st, when the law says the sale shall begin the first Monday in November.

Business men have been giving literally of their time in saving the county during the past several weeks and now that the campaign is over and the holiday season near at hand they will rustle business hard. Tell the people about it through the advertising columns of the Argus.

"The old maid stood on the steamboat dock, whence all but she had fled, and calmly faced a kissing bug that circled overhead. The maidens shrieked and the matrons swooned and the men all swore amen, but the old maid like a hero, stayed and whispered come again. There was a buzz—a thunder sound, the old maid—was she dead? Nay, still she stood and cried for more, but the kissing bug had fled."—Ex.

The potato crop of this country this year is one of the largest ever raised, a matter of a good deal of importance as affecting the question of food supply. The yield is estimated at 242,000,000 bushels, or about 40,000,000 bushels larger than in 1893 and 68,000,000 bushels larger than in 1897. The yield per acre this year is estimated at eighty-one bushels, which is slightly below that of 1896, but far ahead of last year, or 1897, when it was but sixty-four bushels.—Ex.

Col J D Cockerill, who crossed the plains in 1849 and is familiar with all the trials and tribulations of the early settlement of Nebraska, was up from his home near Elk Creek last Monday. The Colonel is well advanced in years but is still a dead shot with a rifle and can send a bullet into a snakes eye at 50 paces. His close friends tell us that he never showed fear of but one object—a rattle snake, and for years carried about his person an antidote for use in case of an emergency. Of late years he has discovered that a little sugar added assists one to swallow the antidote when water is scarce.—Tecumseh Tribunal.

A peculiar case is on hearing at Atlanta, Ga., in the Superior court. W H Baker recently recovered judgement in a justice's court against the Central railroad for the death of his horse. The railroad company appealed.

According to the contention of the company the horse's death was due to heart failure, occasioned by a fright. The animal became badly frightened at witnessing an accident at Fort McPherson. It was driven home and nothing wrong was discovered with it. The next day it was driven to the city again. On the way home, at the same point where the horse first viewed the accident, he was seized with a violent tremor, and died.

Moscow, Idaho, Nov 6—The culminating scene in the long drawn out labor troubles in the Coeur d'Alene mining region, was enacted in the federal court here this afternoon, when the ten men found guilty of interfering with the United States mails near Warden, during the riots of April 29, were sentenced by Judge Beatty to each serve twenty-two months in the United States prison at San Quentin, Cal., and pay a fine of $1,000 (with the exception of Dennis O'Rourke, who, on account of his youth, gets off with twenty months and a fine of $1,000. Motions in arrest and suspension of judgement were previously overruled by Judge Beatty. The prisoners will start for San Quentin as soon as the term of court ends.

Notwithstanding the fact that a bitter personal fight was made on A D Strunk by republicans who were disgruntled because they were not recognized as all there is of the republican party in Pawnee county, and the pie which they had partaken for years was passed around, and the further fact that his opponent, Mr Lane, is one of the most energetic campaigners in the county, he was re elected by a bigger majority than that by which he was elected two years ago; at that time his majority was 118 and this time it is 167—a gain of 49 votes. This tells in eloquent language of the estimation in which Mr Strunk is held by the people of the county and shows that the people resent attacks upon an honest man by deceitful politicians, and that a campaign of slander and abuse does not win in old Pawnee. The Argus congratulates Mr Strunk upon his victory.

How Table Rock Pawnee County Voted Last Tuesday. Lane Comes Out 27 Votes Ahead of Strunk.

Marble and Pepoon Elected Justices.

Election day was dull for voting the county and 369 citizens of Table Rock precinct exercised the right of suffrage; 234 of these were registered in the First district, and 135 in the Second. In the First it was the largest vote ever cast, but was a light vote in the Second. Did you ever hear tell of the man who was too economical to take his home paper, but sent his little boy to borrow the copy taken by the neighbor? In his haste the boy ran over a two-dollar hive of bees and in ten minutes looked like a warty summer squash. His cries reached his father who ran to the rescue and failing to notice a barb wire fence ran into that, breaking the fence down, cutting a handful of fish bate out of his anatomy and ruining a four dollar pair of pants. The old cow took advantage of the gap in the fence, got out and ate forty cents worth of alfalfa and died of bloat. Hearing the racket the wife ran out, upsetting a four gallon churn of milk into a basket of kittens and drowned the whole mess. In her hurry she dropped and broke a seven-dollar set of false teeth. The baby left alone, crawled through the flood of milk into the parlor, ruining a bran new carpet. During the excitement the eldest daughter ran away with a book agent, the dog broke up eleven setting hens and the calves got out and chewed the sleeves from four fine shirts which hung on the line.—Exchange.

A dispatch to the State Journal from Wymore, under date of Monday says: John Cornwall, who was so badly burned by the explosion of a lamp Friday evening, died from his injuries yesterday, after suffering fearful pain all night. The old gentleman lived alone up over a wagon shop, and it is supposed that he started down stairs with a lamp, when it exploded and caught his clothing afire. Before help could arrive he was fearfully burned about the face, hands and body, and before he died both hands had been amputated. He is supposed to have inhaled some of the intense heat.

Another catastrophe in which a human life was nearly lost by fire occured at the home of Tim Rawley, a well known farmer, who lives south of town, Friday afternoon. Mrs Rawley was burning some trash in the yard and her dress caught fire from behind and was in flames; before she could extinguish the flames her hips, arms and neck were terribly burned. She only saved her life by jumping into a barrel of swill, but she was so badly burned that it is feared she cannot live.

Table Rock took the ball at Wright kicked to 40 yard line. Plunging through tackle for 15 yards. Wright took the ball around end for 15 yards, and Wood for 10.

Tecumseh lost the ball on fumble and Slade kicked to Table Rock's 30 yard line, a 50 yard kick. Wright and Shaw carried the ball back to center. Tecumseh's line on their 40 yard line. Devenney made a 45 yard run around the end and looked like a touch down but Wright got him on Table Rock's 25 yard line. Slade carried the ball through the line for 5 yards. Deck, Wood, and Patchin advanced the ball 12 yards, for Table Rock.

Sayer made 10 yards for Tecumseh and Slade 5 yards. Wood made 18 yards for Table Rock. Devenney, Slade and Snyder advanced the ball to Table Rock's 25 yard line. Time was called for 1st half with the ball in Tecumseh's possession on Table Rock's 25 yard line. Second Half—Wright kicked to Tecumseh's 15 yard line. Snyder returning the ball 15 yards. Slade punted to Table Rock's 45 yard line—Tecumseh lost 10 yards for an offside play. Wright kicked to Tecumseh's 30 yard line. Devenney made a 30 yard run, Slade made four yards through the line and Devenney again made 15 yards to Table Rock's 15 yard line. Table Rock took the ball on a fumble and Wood went around the end for 60 yards; it looked like a touch down but the Tecumseh halves were too fast and downed the ball on Tecumseh's 35 yard line.

Table Rock lost 10 yards for offside play. Snyder took the ball 10 yards to center. Shaw went through Tecumseh's line blocking the ball, and losing Tecumseh 5 yards. Wood, Pangburn, and Wright went through Center for 8, 3, and 7 yards respectively.

Tecumseh lost 10 yards for offside play; Wood went around the end for 8 yards and through the line for 7 yards after hard pounding with two minutes to play with the ball on Tecumseh's 10 yard line. Wood carried the ball to the two yard line and Pangburn carried it over for a touch down, as he lost the ball in the play after he crossed the line the Umpire called it a touch back giving Table Rock two points. Score Table Rock 2, Tecumseh 0. The playing of the Tecumseh team was good, the work of the men back of the line being brilliant. Devenny and Snyder the halfbacks are very fast, and Slade is a great kicker.

Wood, Patchin, Wright and Deck played fine ball for Table Rock, but the team work was not up to their usual form, the interference being poor.

Tecumseh lost their best chance to score when they failed to try for a Goal from the field when they had the ball on Table Rock's 15 yard line straight in front of the Goal.

It was a nice clean game and the Tecumseh boys are gentlemen and a fine set of fellows, the return game at Tecumseh on the 25th will be a battle royal.

The preliminary trial of George H Ray, charged with the murder of Frank Chessman at Brownville on the 29th of last November, took place before County Judge Lambert, and resulted in binding over of Ray to the district court without bail.

The prisoner was brought into court and was represented by C W Cornell. County Attorney Ferneau and Attorney Miles appeared for the state. The state had five witnesses present at the preliminary, namely: Francis Barnhoff of Tecumseh, John Cheesman of Rockport, Mo., Marshal Chas Wright and Alonzo Bickford of Brownville, and Ex-Coroner Dr J B Blackmore of Wymore.

Barnhoff is the man who brought back to Brownville the pony that Ray rode off the night of the shooting and he testified to what Ray told him of the shooting. The testimony of the other witnesses was in substance what Cheesman told them of the affair.

At the conclusion of the preliminary Judge Lambert bound Ray over to the district court without bail to answer the charge of murder.

Ray was cool and collected and did not act like a man who was charged with such enormous crime.

He was remanded to the county jail where he will remain until his trial. The next term of district court convenes next Wednesday but whether Ray will be tried at this term is for him and his attorneys to decide.—Auburn Herald.

Giles H Gere and Miss Dena Loomis were married at 5 o'clock last Thursday evening. The ceremony was performed by the Rev Mr Hindman at the home of the parents of the bride, Mr and Mrs C E Loomis, 1305 G street. A few intimate friends of the bride and groom were present, in addition to the relatives. The wedding was simple and beautiful. After the service the congratulations, the wedding collation and an inspection of the presents filled the time until 7 o'clock, when the guests began arriving for the reception. The presents had been selected as a rule, with special reference to the long journey to Honolulu and few bulky pieces were found in the collection. Silver was the favorite gift, and the array was something to delight the eye of an expert. The house was crowded during the hours of the reception, and as the young university people were well represented there was no lack of joyful hilarity. Mr and Mrs Gere will spend a few days with relatives in Kansas City. They will return to Lincoln and start from here for San Francisco in about ten days. At the close of the month they will sail for Honolulu, their future home. Mr Gere has lived in the Hawaiin islands since 1893. He occupies a post of responsibility in the department of public works, which has charge of the roads, docks and buildings under the care of the government. He was a student in the university here for many years, and now comes back to claim one of the most popular of the young ladies on the roll of the university alumni. —Last Friday's State Journal.

For some time J A Irwin, an old citizen of Table Rock has been suffering from a sore on his left foot, which he recently injured, and a running sore on the bottom of his foot was the result. On last Saturday gangreen developed, three toes, the top of the foot and instep being involved, and it became evident that the only thing that would save his life was amputation of the diseased foot. The fact was conveyed to Mr Irwin and he said he would prefer to risk death in undergoing amputation, if there was a chance of success, than to linger along and die of the disease; and the opperation was decided on. It was performed on Wednesday by Dr Broyles, assisted by Drs Ramsey of Elk Creek, and Anderson of Pawnee. The old gentleman standing the operation better than was expected, his age and condition considered, bnt he is still in a critical condition. He is 70 years old and the doctors thank the sore probably dates from an injury received during the war. In addition to the family here, his son John, from near Broken Bow, a daughter from Glenwood, Iowa, and a sister from Beaver City are now with him.

Senator Hayward was stricken with a second attack of paralysis and fatal results are feared. Of his condition this morning's Lincoln News says: The belief is steadily growing that Senator Hayward will never recover from his present illness. Dr Bridges of Omaha, who was summoned here yesterday, had another consultation this morning with the local physicians. After they had concluded the statement was made that the prospects are not encouraging for his recovery. He is at present a very sick man and the attack has to some extent affected his mental faculties and it is somewhat similar to the Brownville attack of last August. Mr Hayward's last illness dates from last Thursday. He had been working hard during the day, and was attacked by what was at first thought to be acute indigestion. He did not rally much and the physicians tried cupping. This relieved him and he seemed to be getting along fairly well until Monday, when alarming symptoms developed. He suddenly found that he could not articulate clearly and that his brain seemed to be confused. Usually he uses long sentences in his conversation, but he seemed unable to form these in his mind. Dr Bridges was sent for and he has been at the senator's bedside ever since. At no time has he felt confident of pulling the patient through, and is reported to have said last evening that death was only a matter of time, and that no improvement could be looked for.

MUSICAL ENTERTAINMENT.

The musical entertainment given by the member of Miss Emma M Clema's class was not by far a success, owing absence of her pupils, but Miss Clema bore her disappointment exceptionally well and gave a most interesting talk upon Music and Education. She carried her subject from beginning to end and brought up illustrations that were a benefit to every one who is interested in the musical line.

The first selection on the Program was her own composition which shows that she not only knows that notes are in existence but she know also where to place them.

The young ladies did justice to the expression of the piece and sympathized with each other.

Miss Ruth Cooper did well in playing Duett with Miss Clema; she was well composed and perfectly at home.

Perhaps little Marie Dvorak carries the honor of the whole entertainment, she took a part in a Trio which was placed before her that she had never seen before and played it well. Miss Marie has a very promising future.

Qui Vine Galop was played well and the expression was something worthy of mentioning. Miss Clema shows great power in teaching of expression. Miss Cooper's song took well and her graceful pose is worthy of mentioning.

Miss Clema's substitute for Miss Springer was well interperted and every note was given its due expression. Miss Clema certainly did justice to the composer.

The Mountain Stream played by Miss F W DeArnold was exceptionally good and Miss DeArnold's imitation of the stream was fine, especially the strain representing the dripping of the water over the rocks.

Miss Mae Martin sang, Sweet Evening Bells, although she forgot her words but she possesses a fine voice.

Miss Margaret Sutton gave two recitations, which were well appreciated. Miss Sutton possesses high talent in that line of work.

The Duett, Witches Flight, was well brought out.

Miss Clema played Shepherd Boy with great justice to herself and still better to the composer, the quality of tone she produced was excellent every tone was made use of in expressing the composer's thoughts.

The Solo, La Fete de Fees was one of the best of the evening. Miss DeArnold did justice to the piece, bringing out the expression of every strain; although there was considerable confusion in the audience. It did not seem to confuse her the least, but her graceful manner in getting up from the instrument showed that she sympathized with those that lack intelligence to appreciate a descriptive solo. Miss Elizebeth Sutton gave good expression to the piece she performed. Miss Sutton's technic shows careful training and study. The strain giving the last dance of the witches, was well played; the expression and interpertation was fine. The octavies of the piece were well brought out and the method which she uses in striking her octavies is most excellent.

"Electricity as we know it" is just a hundred years old. In 1799, the Italian scientist Volta gave definite form to the method of producing the current; and it is from his name that we have the term "volt-meter" to describe the instrument which measures the force of the current, and "volt" as the unit of that measurement. We know several persons who would like to wait around and see what developments along this line may be reached by the end of another century.

American commercial alertness seems to have taken away the breath of those British merchants and commercial bodies that have been watching the progress of the Philadelphia commercial congress. The complete collection of foreign samples gathered for the use of the home manufacturers has filled their minds with astonishment, and they are now urging the British board of trade to adopt similar measures. The British merchant must exhibit more activity and less indifference than he hitherto has done if he expects to regain any of the business taken away from him by the United States through superior enterprise.

According to telegraphic reports from Austin, Tex., at no time in its history has Texas ever had so many drouths as during the past summer and this fall. Every section of the state from the Panhandle to the gulf has been visited by a drouth. The outlook in most of the larger cities of central Texas is anything but promising. Dallas, Fort Worth, Waco, Austin and one or two other larger cities of the state are at present in the throes of a water famine. From points along the Missouri, Kansas & Texas railroad from the Indian Territory down to Bastrop comes the announcement that there is a distressing scarcity of water. Reports from the ranges say that cattle are dying for want of water and as there is little promise of any heavy rains before December the situation is grave.

Before the passengers of the stranded steamer "Paris" separated, last spring, they presented to the officers and crew resolutions of thanks for the wonderful discipline, courage and unfailing helpfulness they had shown. After this had been voted, Baron Oppenheim, one of the wealthiest Jews of Europe, rose to his feet. The resolutions, he observed, included the captain, the under-officers, the stewards, cooks and crew, but of the one to whom each directly owed his safety—of God—he had heard no mention. They were folk of many beliefs, gathered there. He would not even call for a spoken prayer, but he suggested that they bow their heads there in silent thanksgiving to the common Protector of them all. One is forcibly reminded of another shipwreck, nearly nineteen hundred years ago, when a Hebrew of the Hebrews, one Paul by name, gathered the Gentile soldiers and sailors about him to give thanks to the Ruler of the seas.

A census "family" means the number of people who are fed from the same pantry. A hotel, a boarding-school or a prison is a family in the eye of the census. Domestic servants are always counted as a part of the household with which they are living. This use of the term makes the average size of the family in a town which happens to have a great institution unusually large, but in the long run it works out about even, since actual families must be reduced in number by so much to supply the members of these inordinately large families.

That Mysterious Major...

ETHEL A. SOUTHAM

In an instant, however, she had recovered herself. Quick as lightning, she turned to the table again, seized the china slop basin, and, raising the cup, was just about to empty the whole of the contents, when, as though detecting her intention, a detaining hand was laid upon her arm, and Falkland, in his suavest tones, said—

"Ah, that is for Major Brown! Will you not give it to him?"

"Oh, do not trouble,please, Miss Luttrell!" exclaimed Brown, who at that moment appeared in the window. "Let me fetch it myself!"—and before Evelyn was even aware of what was happening he had taken the cup of coffee from her hand and, turning to the sugar basin, was carefully searching for a piece of sugar of the exact size he required.

"You—you will not like that!" gasped Evelyn, making a quick movement forward, with an expression of absolute perplexity upon her face. "Let me get you another cup—that is not strong enough!"

"No, certainly not, thank you! This is delicious!" declared the Major, helping himself to some cream; and, before she had even time to utter another word, Evelyn saw him pass out on the veranda and, to her horror, actually raise the cup to his lips.

It was too terrible! She made one despairing effort to reach him, one vain attempt to dash the cup from his hand. But what was it seemed suddenly to hold her back, to rise up like a cloud before her eyes? She passed her hand in a dazed, bewildered manner across her forehead, made one staggering step forward, and then, with an instinctive sense of preservation, grasped hold of the arm of a chair and sank back among the cushions perfectly unconscious.

CHAPTER XII.

"Yes, Evelyn—it is quite true. I never saw you looking so pale before. That affair of last night has quite upset you. You had better take Sambo for a good run this morning, in the hope of bringing back some color to your cheeks; and, as Mrs. Courtenay has just told me that her husband has been called suddenly to London and will not be able to accompany her to the theater to-night, I shall send to say you will be delighted to accept the offer of the ticket if only she will be so good as to chaperon you. I believe, child, a little excitement will do you all the good in the world."

Evelyn's only answer was a faint sigh as she leaned back in her chair and clasped her hands above her head. At that moment, with her head throbbing continuously and the feeling of utter weariness, which was the result of a sleepless night and hours of inexplicable worry, the very idea of play was intolerable to her. She seemed to have lived days instead of hours since the events of the previous evening—since that terrible moment when she had suddenly lost consciousness, to remember nothing more until she found herself lying on her own bed, with her aunt's maid, who had evidently been left to keep watch, fast asleep in a chair by her side.

And then how utterly helpless she had felt when vivid recollections of all that happened rose up in horrible distinctness before her mind! What could she do? Alas, nothing—nothing whatever! She had no actual knowledge that Falkland had administered anything to Major Brown. She could give no reasons for supposing that the coffee which he had handed to him had been drugged. If she roused the whole hotel she could not possibly state anything for a fact. Yet at the same time she was haunted by the thought of the fearful alternative—the thought that even then Major Brown might be lying under the influence of some frightful narcotic, perhaps perfectly unconscious.

As long as she lived never would she forget the wretchedness she endured as hour after hour she lay awake, watching wearily for the first streaks of dawn to break through the closely-drawn blinds. Still, when even eight had been struck in muffled tones from the depths of the little leather traveling case—even then, what was there to be learned?

Parker looked thoroughly puzzled when questioned for news of Major Brown.

"Major Brown, miss? Why, there is nothing amiss with him!" she had returned decidedly. "He looked as well as anybody need last night when I saw him fanning you down stairs."

But what small comfort poor Evelyn derived from this information was speedily destroyed by the maid's announcement a little later that the major had evidently overslept himself that morning, as, in passing down the corridor, she had noticed that long after the usual time his door was closed, and his boots and hot water were waiting on the mat outside.

It was thus that Evelyn, in a state of strange hopelessness, had dressed and gone downstairs. She had prepared herself for the worst. She felt she would not be astonished then whatever happened, and yet every step which sounded on the corridor, every time a waiter entered the room, she started up as white as ashes, dreading the news that might come.

It was, therefore, almost as great a shock when, chancing to look out of the window, she beheld, strolling leisurely across the lawn, a tall, well-built figure, which she recognized at a glance as the major's. And this had been the cause of Lady Howard's remark concerning the necessity for some little excitement as a diversion from her thoughts!

And perhaps Lady Howard had never spoken with greater wisdom; for, having satisfied herself on the score of the cup of coffee, which she had quite made up her mind had been fatally drugged, all the feelings of horror which Evelyn had experienced when the suspicion of the forgery had first fallen upon Major Brown, but which she had forgotten in the alarm that followed, returned to her now with a force which seemed ten times increased in its intensity.

Never before in her life had Evelyn known a day which proved itself so interminably long as did this particular morning and afternoon. To see, to speak to, Major Brown again was impossible; and so, rather than undergo the risk of a meeting with him she absolutely shut her ears to all of Lady Howard's entreaties and remained in strict seclusion in her own room, never once during the whole of the day venturing out of her customary rambles.

It was thus probably through sheer weariness that Evelyn, tired to death by her own society and conflicting thoughts, at last gave in to Lady Howard's persuasions, and allowed herself to be driven off under the chaperonage of Mrs. Courtenay to the little seaside theater.

The house was packed to overflowing, and a loud burst of applause was greeting the appearance of the principal actress, when Evelyn, bending forward to catch her program, which had fallen to the ground, caught a glimpse of the occupant of the seat next but one to Mrs. Courtenay.

Instantly a flash of annoyance rose to her face as she recognized the individual in question as Gilbert Falkland. Turning away quickly she fixed her eyes upon the stage, where they remained for the rest of the scene.

She had held herself aloof from him most carefully all the day, never venturing downstairs at any time when he was likely to be about, and, though in one instance she had had the misfortune to encounter him, she had preserved the strictest silence regarding the previous night's proceedings, not even asking if he had managed to secure the forged check, nor evincing any curiosity as to the means he had adopted.

"Beg pardon, miss, but is this letter for you? A messenger has just brought it from the 'George,' and asked for it to be given to you himmediately."

The words borne to Evelyn's ears above the strains of one of Sullivan's most popular airs made her look up in surprise, to find herself confronted by a small program boy, who was holding out for her inspection a note directed in her aunt's handwriting to "Miss Luttrell—Stalls, No. 14."

"Dear me, I hope there is nothing wrong!" murmured Mrs. Courtenay in agitated tones.

BOTH SIDES CLAIM VICTORY

The Contest in Kentucky Reaches the Bitter Stage.

LEGISLATURE WILL HAVE TO SETTLE

Returns So Far Favor Republicans But Democrats Make Counter Claims—Partisan Feeling Running High—Threats of Force Are Made.

A Louisville, Ky., special of November 10th says: A confusion of claims and counter-claims to quiet which the official count, or perhaps a contest before the legislature will be necessary, is all that is left of Tuesday's election. Above it all vehement cries of fraud, committed or contemplated, are heard. Each side claims the election of its ticket by a plurality of about 4,000, and presents figures to back up the claim. These figures in some counties vary widely, and it is impossible to tell which side if either, has accurate returns.

The indications point more strongly than ever to a contest before the legislature, which, there seems no reasonable doubt, will be controlled by the democrats. Whether or not the members belonging to that party will stand together on questions affecting a contest cannot now be foretold.

A Cincinnati, O., Nov. 9 special says: The Western Union issues the following bulletin today on the Kentucky election: Kentucky—With complete returns from eighty-one counties and incomplete returns from thirty-five, making a total of 116 counties out of 119, three counties remaining unreported. Taylor's vote stands, 165,098; Goebel's, 163,815, leaving Taylor's plurality 1,283.

The unreported counties are Leslie and Martin. The result of the election is still in doubt. Complete returns from the counties only partially reported may make a material change in the figures.

About Ohio.

Incomplete returns from all the counties in Ohio, as reported to the republican state headquarters, give Nash (rep.) a plurality of 50,364. The democrats are not willing to concede the state by over 40,000. Their figures give Nash a plurality on republican counties of 79,440 and McLean a plurality of 40,280 in the democratic counties, making Nash's estimated plurality in the state 39,160. The Jones vote (independent candidate for governor), according to estimates given out at both republican headquarters, will be 100,000. Returns from Cleveland, Columbus, Toledo and other manufacturing centers show that 60 per cent of independent votes came from the democrats.

HOLCOMB'S VOTE GROWING

Unofficial and Incomplete Figures Place His Majority at About 15,000.

Returns have been received in some form from all of the counties in the state except Antelope Boyd and McPherson. The majority for Holcomb on the face of these returns is 13,540. The three missing counties gave Poynter a majority of 300 last year. Unless these returns contain many errors it probable that Holcomb's majority will reach between 14,000 and 15,0000.

The District Judges.

It will be some time before all the returns are in on district judges. The republicans have certainly carried the First, Second, Third and Fourth districts. Evans is reported defeated in the Eighth and Sedgwick in the Fifth. Ex-Senator Allen is reported elected. Grimes, republican, was announced as elected in the Thirteenth. The fusionists claim to have made many gains to offset the loss of one judge in the Second and one in the Fourth.

THE ADMIRAL SURRENDERS

Craft Cupid Proves Too Strong For the Hero of Manila Bay.

Admiral George Dewey and Mrs. Mildred M. Hazen were married quietly at the rectory of St. Paul's Catholic church in V street, near Fifteenth, in Washington. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Joseph H. Foley, assistant pastor, and Rev. Sidney Hurlburt. The ceremony was of the simplest character, according to the rites of the Catholic church.

The arrangements for the wedding were made with all the secrecy which has attended the whole affair. After procuring the license for the wedding yesterday, Lieutenant Caldwell called on Father Mackin of St. Paul's, of which Mrs. Hazen is a communicant, and arranged for the wedding this morning. As Admiral Dewey is not a Catholic, a special dispensation was required, and this was procured by Father Mackin from Bishop Curtis, vicar general of the diocese of Baltimore, who granted it in the absence of Cardinal Gibbons, who is at present in New Orleans. Father Mackin went to Baltimore for this purpose.

Major J. H. McGrath Dead.

Major H. F. McGrath of Eau Claire, Wis., has received a cablegram from Manilla announcing the death of his son, Major J. H. McGrath, captain of the Fourth cavalry. The major was wounded in an engagement near Novelta over two weeks ago.

Clevenger Convicted.

Ernest Clevenger, a young farmer, was convicted of murder in the first degree at Liberty, Mo., for killing George Allen and Della Clevenger in a fit of jealousy, last December, near Missouri City. Sentence has been deferred.

Will Hang Friday.

Unless Governor Tanner interferes August Becker, the condemned wife murderer of Chicago, will hang today (Friday) at noon, as Judge Becker has refused to release Becker on his petition that the indictment had been changed after leaving the hands of the grand jury.

Bringing Gold From Alaska.

The steamer Homer has at San Francisco, from St. Michael, Dutch Harbor and Cape Nome. The vessel brought 170 passengers and about $100,000 in gold.

GREAT BRITAIN STEPS OUT

Samoan Question Practically Settled and Long Controversy Ended.

It was officially announced in Berlin, Germany, Thursday that an agreement, subject to the approval of the United States had been arrived at between Great Britain and Germany, by virtue of which the Samoan act is repealed and the islands of Upolu, Savaii and the small adjacent islands fall to Germany as free property, the island of Tutuila and the subsidiary islands go to the United States.

Great Britain, it is added, renounces any claim to the Samoan islands and Germany in turn, renounces any claim to the Tonga islands and to Savage islands in favor of Great Britain, and also cedes Choiseul and San Isabel, the two easterly islands of the Solomon group, with their insular surroundings to Great Britain. The partition of the Samoan group of islands marks the close of a long standing source of international controversy and also brings about new territorial arrangements in the South Pacific.

GREET PRESIDENT M'KINLEY

American Executive Hears From President of Autonomous Government.

The following cablegram has been received at the war department from General Otis: The following received from Negros, dated November 7: "To the President of the United States: The civil governor, councilors, judges and secretaries, who constitute the new government of this island, in taking possession thereof on this day, have the honor of affectionately saluting your excellency and trust that in the inauguration of this form of government, based on the liberal and democratic institutions which have made that great republic so grand and prosperous, a new era will open to this region which will enable it to reach the legitimate goal of its inspiration.

MENECIO SEVEBILO."

DANGER BASUTO UPRISING

Admitted to Be Imminent and Buller Will Plan Accordingly.

A dispatch from London says: The danger of a Basuto uprising is now admitted to be imminent, and this will effect General Buller's plan of the campaign and may render necessary the mobilization of a second army corps. Great confidence is felt in the personal influence of Sir Godfrey Lagden, the British resident in Basutoland, who prevented Lerothodi from assailing the Free State at the time of the Jameson raid. It is now hoped that he can keep under restraint the paramount and lesser chiefs. The Basutos have a large force of mounted warriors armed with rifles and highly skilled mounted infantry, and they have an innate passion for fighting.

THROWN INTO A CELLARWAY

Collapse of a Sidewalk Causes Injuries to Many Persons.

By the giving away of a sidewalk at Columbus Junction, Iowa, Thursday, 100 persons who were watching a parade in honor of the returned Iowa volunteers were precipitated into a cellar. No one was fatally injured, but all were badly bruised. Among those seriously injured were Mrs. Samuel Edmondson; Miss May Walker; Mr. Burrell, and Mrs. Alla McNamee.

Abolishes Apostle's Creed.

The Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, author of "In His Steps," who is a bold and original thinker along regilious lines, has abolished the apostle's creed in his church, the Central Congregational of Topeka, Kan., and has decided to adopt one in its stead, which is simple in form and language and stripped of what he terms "obsolete" features. The essential features of the new creed were agreed on at a church meeting and a committee appointed to draft the new document.

New Candidate for the Cup.

A cable message was received in New York saying that Alfred Harmsworth, editor and proprietor of the London Daily Mail, intended to have a challenger prepared to race here for the Americas cup next summer. Mr. Harmsworth has written a letter to Sir Thomas Lipton, saying that unless the owner of the Shamrock intended to try again in 1900 he (Mr. Harmsworth) would like to put in one.

Boy Kills His Father.

At Plano, Calif., Reese Martin was shot and killed by his nineteen-year-old son Alfred. The young man accused his father of striking his mother. A quarrel ensued and the son discharged both barrels of a shotgun at the old man, causing instant death. He claims that he acted in self-defense.

Commits Suicide.

Captain Lewis McNabb, colored, thirty-five years old, commanding officer of company K, Forty-ninth U. S. volunteers, the colored regiment in camp at Jefferson barracks, St. Louis, committed suicide by blowing the top of his head off with a Krag-Jorgensen rifle.

Jones Never Said It.

Mayor Jones of Toledo, O., has issued a signed statement in which he denies that he said "if my race has in any way contributed to the success of John R. McLean and a rebuke to the infamous policy of the administration I feel it has not been in vain."

Miners Quit Work.

The miners at the mine of of Joseph Taylor, near Belleville, Ill., struck because Mr. Taylor had been shipping coal to the districts in Arkansas and Kansas where the union miners are striking.

Brewing Building Burns.

At 1:30 Wednesday morning the old Roos brewery, in the southern part of Nebraska City, was discovered to be on fire and was burned to the ground. The loss is estimated at $6,000, with $2,000 insurance. It had not been in operation for some time.

The proposed Noel amendment, providing for an elective judiciary in Mississipi, was defeated by a majority of nearly 5,000. The chief opposition to the measure was based on the belief that its phrasing was unconstitutional.

HOLCOMB IS ELECTED JUDGE

Fusionists Refused to Stay at Home on Election Day.

HIS MAJORITY IS TWELVE THOUSAND

Early Returns Point to Fusion Gains in Almost Every Precinct—No Gleam of Hope in Returns From Over the State for Republicans.

The first returns from precincts scattered all over Nebraska indicate that the fusion state ticket has been successful.

At no time Tuesday night did the republicans find a gleam of hope in the precinct returns. From the first they indicated fusion gains over the vote cast for Poynter last fall. When the first fifty precincts were tabulated and compared with the vote of 1898 they showed a fusion gain of 300. When eighty were grouped it was found that the fusion gain was 446. When 121 precincts had been added up it was found that they represented a fusion gain of 848. At 2 a. m. Wednesday morning 305 had been received, showing a fusion gain of 2,320. The rate of gain was large enough to make it practically impossible to overcome the lead.

As early as 10 o'clock the republican leaders, while not yet ready to concede the state, were fully satisfied in their own minds that it had been lost by about 10,000. Some of the more despondent ones were inclined to think that it might be half as much more.

To say that they were surprised is putting it mildly. The only explanation they could make was that the fusion managers were right when they claimed that their partial reverse of last year had been caused by the stay-at-home vote. Their campaign this year was aimed directly at the reclamation of these careless fusionists. The figures are eloqtent of their success.

At 1 a.m. Wednesday morning 180 precincts had been received from outside of Lancaster and Douglas counties. They showed a gain for Holcomb of 1,531. This was at the rate of about eight to the precinct.

At the same hour the republican state central committee, basing its figures on a different set of returns, found a gain of about nine to a precinct for Holcomb. It was said by the secretary that the indications pointed to the election of Holcomb by about 10,000. He believed, however, that the later returns would show smaller gains per precinct than those first received.

Reports from Douglas county at 1 a. m. were that 52 precincts showed a fusion gain of 701, and that the republican county ticket was probably defeated.

Rosewater Concedes It.

Holcomb, fusion candidate for supreme bench, has carried Nebraska by ten thousand votes. Edward Rosewater, editor of the Bee, at midnight conceded the state to the fusionists, due, he thinks, to the opposition of the foreign voters to policy of expansion. More votes were cast this year than last, there being gains for both republican and fusion candidates, but Holcomb's gains are larger than those of Reese. One hundred and five precincts give Reese 10,466 and Holcomb 10,613; last year republican 10,240; fusion 9,701.

Lancaster County.

Returns from seventeen Lancaster county precincts and nineteen city precincts give Reese 4,409 and Holcomb 3,325, leaving Reese in the lead by 1,034 votes. His majority in the county will fall below 1,000 when the returns are in.

Aaron Buckstaff is probably defeated for county treasurer by William McLaughlin. Returns received show Buckstaff 2,986, McLaughlin 3,569.

The fusionists claim the election of McLaughlin for county treasurer, Fred Shepherd for county judge and P. H. Cooper for sheriff.

The race for sheriff is a close one with chances favoring Branson, the republican candidate. The returns received show Branson 3,234, Cooper 3,085.

The result of the vote for county judge is very close. Frank R. Waters, republican, has 3,268, so far as heard from, and Fred Shepherd, fusionist, has 2,996 votes.

The Sixth District.

In view of the meagreness os the figures received from the Sixth congressional district, the following from Lincoln county is of interest: Hall precinct, Lincoln county, Reese 36, Holcomb 23, Kinkaid 39, Neville 27; Hinman precinct, Reese 35, Holcomb 43, Kinkaid 37, Neville 49; Lemon precinct, Reese 14, Holcomb 3, Kinkaid 15, Neville 2; Osgood precinct, Reese, 28, Holcomb 12, Kinkaid 26, Neville 18; precinct No. 2, North Platte, Kinkaid 222, Neville 118; Sunshine precinct, Reese 10, Holcomb 7, Kinkaid 10, Neville 7; Fallon precinct, Reese 33, Holcomb 43, Kinkaid 38, Neville 40; precinct, North Platte, No. 1, Reese 109, Holcomb 126, Kinkaid 103, Neville 147.

The returns from the Sixth district last night came in with so much slowness as to render it impossible to figure out the result.

Mr. Bryan said last night that "the campaign in Nebraska was fought on national issues, and the result is a protest against the policy of the republican administration."

Tea Poisoning.

Victims of tea poisoning are becoming alarmingly prevalent. Women demand the life and variety of Health, and instead of doing it naturally by building up their system they resort to tea. They should take Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It tones up the nerves, regulates the bowels and cures dyspepsia.

No matter how costly a thing may be, a woman considers it valueless when she has lost all interest in it.

NEW AND DISAGREEABLE

Seen Three Times in 100 Years.

Among the places visited by the German exploring ship Valdivia, recently returned from the Antarctic ocean, was Bouvet island, which, although discovered in 1739, is known to have been sighted only twice since and until the Valdivia's visit had not been seen for more than seventy years. The island is the summit of a volcanic mountain rising 2,000 feet above the sea. Its crater is entirely covered with ice, which caves down in a steep wall to sea level. It is about 1,800 miles west of south from the cape of Good Hope.

Tracing the Grasshopper

W. D. Hunter, a special agent, has reported to Dr. Howard, the entomologist of the agricultural department, in regard to a recent statement to the effect that it was considered by entomologists that the Turtle mountain region, in North Dakota and Montana, probably was a permanent breeding ground of the destructive migratory grasshopper, a statement which occasioned much alarm and indignation on the part of railroads and other land owners. This region, therefore, was carefully scrutinized by Mr. Hunter, who reports that the migratory grasshopper does not breed permanently in the Turtle mountains nor in that vicinity. The ground is perfectly unsuited to breeding, and, moreover, swarms descending further east have been traced from far to the northeast of that place. The probable breding ground, he thinks, is on the Assiniboine river, north and east of Regina.

"Peruna is the best tonic I have ever known for general debility, a sure cure for liver complaint, and a never failing adjuster in cases of dyspepsia.

"I have used it in cases of female irregularities and weak nerves common to the sex, and have found it most satisfactory."

With Peruna the thousand and one ailments dependent upon catarrh of the pelvic organs can be wholly averted.

New Name for Indians.

At a recent meeting of the Anthropological society in Washington the name "Amerind" was proposed as a substitute for the various terms now employed to denote the Indians, or red men, or America. The new name is compounded from the leading syllables of the phrase "American Indian," and the working ethnologists of the society, led by Major Powell, were practically unanimous in approving the word Amerind, and recommending its adoption. The adjectives derived from the new name would be "Amerindic" and "Amerindian."

Immense Gold Deposits.

Henry A. Salzer, manager of the famous John A. Salzer Seed Co., La Crosse, Wis., as also president of the Idaho Gold Coin Mining & Milling Co., of the Seven Devil District, Idaho, is in great luck. They have recently struck an immense deposit of gold ore on their properties. As a result the stock of this company doubled in price in twenty-four hours. Quite a number of the Salzer Seed Co. patrons are interested in this mine with Mr. Salzer.

His Conclusion.

The authorities of a South Wales railway were on the scene of accident, investigating the cause of a collision between two coal trains. "How do you account for this?" said the superintendent to one of the drivers. "Well, sir," replied the drive., "I've been thinkin' a good deal about it, and I can only come to the conclusion that two trains can't pass on a single line."—Stray Stories.

TROOPS ABANDON ALL FEAR

Capture of San Fabian a Spectacular Affair.

NAVY AND ARMY CO-OPERATE

Troops Plunge Waist Deep Into the Water While Under Fire—Insurgents Flee on Approach—Aguinaldo Preparing to Fly the Coop.

A Manila dispatch of November 10, 5:05 p. m., says that the landing of the American troops at San Fabian was the most spectacular of its kind since General Shafter's disembarkation at Daiquiri. The co-operation of the troops and the navy was complete. The gunboats maintained a terrific bombardment for an hour, while the troops rushed waist deep through the surf under a heavy but badly aimed rifle fire from the insurgent trenches, and charged right and left, pouring volley after volley at the fleeing rebels. Forty Filipinos were captured, mostly noncommissioned officers. Seven insurgent dead and five wounded were found in a building, which had suffered considerably from the bombardment. The town was well fortified. The sand dunes were riveted with bamboo twenty feet thick, which offered a good cover.

On landing, the battalions formed in good order. Captain Buck, with Price's and Patton's companies, pursued the insurgents on the left into the bamboo thickets. On the right was a frail footbridge across the river, leading to the towns. General Wheaton, personally commanding, ordered a charge across the bridge, and Captain Howland of his staff, led Coleman's and Elliott's companies of the Thirteenth and Shield's company of the Twenty-third, who behaved splendidly under their first fire, into the town, which was found to be nearly deserted except by the aged and some Spaniards who had hidden in the buffalo wallows, and who came shouting detoward the Americans.

The troops camped in the rain during the night and in the morning General Wheaton established his headquarters in a church, and quartered his men in the houses.

FREE STATERS GET CREDIT

Said to Have Decimated an Entire British Regiment.

A London special of November 10th says: Another rumor emanating from Amsterdam sources says: "A British regiment was decimated Friday by Free Staters."

It is added that 639 of the British soldiers were killed or wounded and that 300 horses were captured.

Another one dated Saturday morning 4:30 a. m., says: "Complete silence has again fallen upon affairs in South Africa. The British public must perforce be content with the brief stereotyped report which the censor allows to filter through from Capetown. That this condition of things is no longer due to pressure of work or defective cables has been amply proved. The Eastern Telegraph company reckons that the real delay in transmission is about two days. It is evident, therefore, that censorship is responsible for the other two days of delay, which seems to befall the dispatches.

Moreover, the Daily Telegraph announces that its "appropriated" dispatch from Ladysmith, dated Monday, which the war officers published on Tuesday, was not delivered in Fleet street until yesterday (Friday) morning. It is believed that the war office received further dispatches last evening, but nothing has been published.

HE REFUSES TO SURRENDER

Adherent of Andrade Defies the New President.

A Puerto Cabello, Venezuela, November 10 dispatch says: General Parades absolutely refuses any proposal to surrender. A conference was held today between the British, German, Dutch, and American captains here, and as a result W. W. Russell, secretary of the United States legation, was sent to discuss the matter with General Parades, and to try to effect an arrangement. He proved to be defiant and intimated to Mr. Russell that he was ready to fight any force General Castro would send against him.

A La Guayra, Venezuela, November 10 dispatch says: Francis B. Loomis, United States minister to Venezuela, has asked the commanders of the foreign cruisers off Puerto Cabello to act together in order to prevent Gen. Antonio Parades, formerly a commander in ex-President Andrade's army, who refuses to recognize the authority of General Cipriano Castro, from bombarding Puerto Cabello, by bringing moral pressure to bear upon him. The British, French, German, Dutch, and American commanders will confer at Puerto Cabello and will take all proper measures to prevent Parades from sacrificing the lives of innocent persons. The United States legation will protect the French sisters of charity by special request.

Andrade is President.

A Ponce, P. R., November 8, special says: General Andrade, deposed president of Venezuela, who has arrived at San Juan, is quoted as having said in an interview that he was still president of Venezuela and that he would soon return to that country.

Rhodes' Plan Advanced.

The Berlin correspondent of the London Daily Mail says he has learned that the Samoan agreement contains secret clauses relating to South Africa, whereby the plans of Cecil Rhodes are advanced a step toward realization.

Figures Little Changed.

With all of the counties in except McPherson, which cast only twenty-three votes in all last year, Holcomb has 107,657 votes against 93,792 for Reese, a majority of 13,792 for the fusion candidate.

The republican vote is larger than it was a year ago by 872 votes.

Lord Minto of Ottawa, Canada, has received a cable from the imperial war office, stating that the second offer of troops for the Transvaal by Canada would not be accepted as they were not required.

THE NEWS IS KEPT BACK

London Fears that General Sir Redvers Buller is Suppressing the Truth.

A London special dated November 10, 4:30 a. m., says that the scant and conflicting news from the seat of war, and the fact that General White has not yet said a word about the alleged fighting around Ladysmith, are again producing a feeling of gloom. It may be that General Buller has thought best to keep it to himself. Indeed, this is the version that is beginning to be believed, as it is held to be impossible that the news of heavy fighting brought in by Kaffirs in such circumstantial detail can be wholly groundless. If this be so, it is ominous, for there could be no grounds for concealing favorable news.

It cannot be long, however, before a change occurs. General Buller's forces will soon arrive at Durban, and will probably begin the advance to the relief of Ladysmith about next Tuesday.

An Orange River, Cape Colony dispatch says that the Boers are investing Kimberley and have been reinforced by 2,000 men and have succeeded in corraling about 5,000 pounds worth of stock belonging to Kimberley merchants which was intended for the sustenance of the town.

KNOW WHERE AGGIE IS AT

War Department Definitely Locates Insurgent Chief at Boambang.

The war department has definitely located Aguinaldo as on his way to the town of Boambang, about seventy-five miles northeast of Tarlac. The recent calculations have been that the insurgent leader was at the town of Bayambang, not far from Tarlac, in which case the several forces under Generals MacArthur, Lawton, Young and Wheaton would have had him practically surrounded. There has been some doubt, however, as to the name Bayambang, and this has been cleared up by the definite information that fixing Boambang as the place of Aguinaldo's refuge.

HIS BODY CUT TO PIECES

Relative of Mrs. Cleveland Killed by Cars at Tekamah.

Arthur Bryant, the seventeen-year-old son of E. W. Bryant, was killed at Tekamah by the cars. He got on the St. Paul limited train which arrives at 7:15 p. m., and attempted to get off the train after it had moved one block from the depot. His body was cut to pieces, the head being severed from the body and pieces of the remains being carried six or seven miles from the scene of the accident. The father of the young man is a well to do merchant of Tekamah, and his mother was a cousin of Mrs. Grover Cleveland.

BUTCHER BECKER HANGED

Protests His Innocence and Accuses His Second Wife.

Albert August Becker, the Chicago German butcher, who on January 27 last murdered his wife, Rachel, and afterwards chopped up and boiled the remains in order to dispose of them, was hanged in the Cook county jail at 12:05 Friday afternoon. Becker's neck was not broken by the fall, and it was sixteen minutes before he was pronounced dead. On the scaffold Becker protested his innocence and declared George Sutterlin, the father of his second wife, was the real murderer.

Still Doubt in Kentucky.

The uncertainty regarding the result of Kentucky's election is not likely to be removed for some time. Both sides still claim victory, the state chairman of each party asserting that his ticket has a plurality of about 4,000. Newspaper returns from Republican sources give Taylor a plurality of 4,438, while those from democratic sources make Goebel's plurality 941.

Unveil Davis Tablets.

The tablets in St. Paul's church to Miss Winnie Davis and the Davis sons were unveiled at Richmond with impressive ceremonies. The monument to Winnie Davis, erected in Holywood cemetery by the Daughters of the Confederacy, and the monument to Mr. Davis and Jefferson Davis jr., will be be unveiled today, Saturday.

A Michigan Central passenger train from Toledo, O., to Detroit, was ditched by train wreckers between Alexis and Vienna, Mich. Three people were fatally hurt and many were more or less seriously injured.

Sherman Copeland was hanged at Orlando, Fla., for the murder of Mary Cook, Cook, colored. Jealousy was the cause of the murder.

Legal Status of Sheep.

According to an English exchange, the Welsh mountain sheep have obtained legal recognition of their ability to distinguish boundaries and their own roads through their pastures. One flock of sheep fought a trespassing flock, and the court decided that the sheep were each worth a half crown more than others because they knew their roads and boundaries.

SAMUEL C SAMPLE DEAD

Prominent Nebraskan Expires Suddenly in an Omaha Hotel.

Samuel C. Sample, a banker from Butte, Neb., died at the Merchants hotel at Omaha from a stroke of paralysis Mr. Sample was seated at the writing desk in the hotel, and was just finishing a letter to his wife when he fell over in his chair practically helpless. Mr. Sample has been prominent in Masonic circles in Nebraska, and was a member of the Omaha lodge of Elks. As soon as his death occurred representatives of the Elks' lodge took charge of the body and the funeral will be held under the auspices of the lodge.

Hobart Greatly Improved.

After a restful night, during which he slept most of the time, Vice President awoke at an early hour Wednesday morning and said he felt much better. Dr. Newton, his attending physician, said that he was well pleased with the apparent change for the better in his patient's condition.

Dies as Result of Wound.

Torrence McClain Idle, the young son of Mr. Saunders Idle, who shot himself in the leg a short time ago with a revolver, died from the effects of his wound at the family residence three miles southeast of Creighton. He was buried in the cemetery at Creighton. He was fourteen years old.

Fire at Grand Island.

Fire destroyed Luke's foundry at Grand Island and part of Egge's coal sheds. The origin is believed to be incendiary, as it started in a small barn alongside the foundry without apparent cause, and there have been numerous fires in barns of similar nature recently.

Stabbed by a Boy.

Frank Krasny, a Humboldt baker, was stabbed in the side and thigh by Charles Mann, a seventeen-year-old boy, who was raising a disturbance at Krasny's place of business. The wound is serious, but not necessarily fatal. The boy was arrested and lodged in jail.

Stabs His Son by Mistake.

Sam Brock, an aged farmer living near Owenton, Ky., last night mistook his son for a burglar and stabbed him, inflicting a wound from which he died. Brock has disappeared and it is feared he has committed suicide.

World's Largest Grapevine.

La Para Grande, the biggest grape vine in the world, has reached the end of its long outdoor life, and will soon be cut down. Seventy-five years it has been growing on a ranch in The Montecito valley, near Santa Barbara, Cal., but it has shown signs of dying, so the owner, Albert Magee, the Pittsburg stove manufacturer, has ordered it removed. From the pride of the California vineyards the vine will be turned into a museum curiosity. The Santa Barbara chamber of commerce will preserve it as a specimen of what the soil of Santa Barbara county is able to produce. La Para Grande has a trunk or main stem three feet and a half in circumference, and the trells, higher than a man's head, on which the spreading branches of the vine are supported, measures nearly six feet in each direction. In its prime this single vine produced full four tons of grapes in a single year. Those days of its glory are, however, long past.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The Czarina as Cartoonist.

In an illustrated life story of the empress of Russia in the Young Woman, we are told that the czarina speaks five languages, and that riding, painting, rowing, sketching, swimming and tennis are among her recreations. But one of her favorite amusements is in drawing caricatures. Freed from the fear of the censor, she indulges with her pen and pencil in a way which makes even Russian ministers tremble, drawing them in caricature, which would mean death or Siberia to any other artist. She has drawn the czar himself—a solemn, bearded, but bald infant in long clothes, tied in an armchair and surrounded by a host of grand dukes and grand duchesses armed with feeding bottles, all insisting on feeding him in a different way. No wonder the czar is screaming at the top of his voice.—London Globe.

Natural Gas Failing.

The state geologist of Indiana, Prof. Blachley, reports that the supply of natural gas in the state is decreasing constantly, and that the end of its use for manufacturing purposes will soon be at hand. He suggests that factories in the gas field can use petroleum in liquid form, can make petroleum gas, can ship coal from the Indiana field or manufacture gas in the coal field and force it to their furnaces.

Rare Chinese Fishes.

The most beautiful and costly fishes in the world come from China, and the rarest and most expensive of all is the brush-tail gold fish. It is so small that a twenty-five-piece will cover it, and probably there is no living thing of its size and weight that is worth so much money.

The productive capacity of the labor-saving machinery of the United States at the present time is equal to a hand-working population of 400,000,000.

Those persons on the lookout for coincidences may find one in the sailing of the Mayflower with the Pilgrim Fathers, and the departure of the Oceanic on her first voyage.

The Mayflower sailed from Plymouth for the land of the west on Wednesday, Sept. 6, 1620.

The new Oceanic sailed from Liverpool for New York on Wednesday, Sept. 6, 1899.

It will be of interest also to compare the size of the Mayflower with that of the Oceanic.

THERE are women everywhere who suffer almost constantly because they cannot bring themselves to tell all about their ills to a physician.

Such women can surely explain their symptoms and their suffering by letter to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for the confidence reposed in her has never been violated. Over a million women have been helped by her advice and medicine.

A WOMAN HELPS WOMEN

Mrs. Pinkham in attending to her vast correspondence is assisted by women only. If you are ill, don't delay. Her reply will cost you nothing and it will be a practical help as it was to MISS ELLA E. BRENNER, East Rochester, Ohio, who says: "I shrunk from the ordeal of examination by our physician, yet I knew I must have treatment. My troubles were backache, nervous tired feeling, painful menstruation and leucorrhœa. I am so grateful to you now that I am willing to have my name published to help other girls to take their troubles to you. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound used as you wrote me has made me entirely well and very happy. I shall bless you as long as I live."

Mrs. Pinkham receives thousands of such letters from grateful women.

MISS NELLIE RUSSELL, of 138 Grace St., Pittsburg, Pa., in a letter to Mrs. Pinkham says: "From childhood I suffered from kidney trouble and as I grew older my troubles increased having intense pain running from my waist to my womb and the menses were very painful. One day, seeing your advertisement in one of our papers, I wrote to you.

"When your reply came I began taking your Compound and followed your advice and am now in perfect health, and would advise any lady rich or poor to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which I can praise above all other remedies. It is a wonderful help to women."

FROM LINCOLN.

Lincoln, Neb., Oct. 14, 1899. Editor Argus:—After a month of more or less political excitement, the capital city has again subsided into something like its normal equanimity. The closing fortnight of the campaign here was one of intense interest. Speakers like Warner of Missouri for the republicans and Towne, Arnold, and Bryan for the fusionists held big meetings at the Oliver theatre and raised a good deal of enthusiasm among their respective partisans. The fact that Lincoln is the home of Judge Reese, coupled with the five years' residence of Judge Holcomb in the city, made the contest for supreme judge more exciting than it would otherwise have been. Both state committees worked hard all through the campaign and the result of the election in the state was as much of a disappointment to the republican official representatives as it was a cause of rejoicing to the fusion workers.

The republicans, however, took the unfavorable election news philosophically and the State Journal even worked off some jokes at its own expense and that of various members of its party. Most republicans attribute their defeat to the personal popularity of Mr Bryan, but the fusionists insist that, while the personality of their favorite leader was a strong factor in the contest, the verdict of the people must be accepted as a condemnation of the national administration so far as Nebraska is concerned.

The populists, democrats, and silver republicans held a mass ratification meeting on the capital grounds last Friday evening. The speaking was preceded by a parade through the the business section of the city. One of the banners in the parade bore a sardonic pictorial representation of the famous cow named "Speck" and the black boar pig. This feature caused more amusement than anything else.

Mr and Mrs F A Harrison left for Washington last Saturday afternoon. They will work together as correspondents for the Omaha Bee and the State Journal. Their early departure is made for the purpose of getting somewhat acquainted in the national capital before Congress convenes. Congressman E J Burkett will go from here to Washington about the 20th of this month. Mr Burkett has many strong admirers in all parties and he is expected to acquire a Congressional standing that will bring the First Nebraska district into additional repute as a producer of statesmen.

There was great rejoicing among university students in this city last Saturday night when the news reached here that the Nebraska foot-ball eleven had defeated Drake at Des Moines. It was the first victory the team had won this year and the students here proceeded to celebrate. They tore up street crossings and old sidewalks around town and several hundred of them yelled themselves hoarse beside a bonfire on the campus. The eleven received a great reception on their return. The victory has put a great deal of life into the boys and they will go into the Kansas game next Saturday determined to win if muscle and united team work can be made to prevail against the sturdy Jayhawkers.

Speaking of foot-ball, it is rumored up here that Table Rock has a pretty good eleven. The team from the Lincoln business college expects to play the Table Rock boys next Saturday. The high school team, who played there several weeks ago, say that they were well treated at Table Rock and had a good time while there. They came away with a good deal of respect for the prowess of the boys down there.

I did not start out to write either a political or a sporting letter, but it seems that this one is a composition of both. If I should chance to write you another letter some time, I will try to make it contain something of interest to more sedate minds.

Very truly yours,
ELLIS E. WOLFE.

P. S. The Table Rock delegation up here extends congratulations to Andrew Lane. They hear that he received a majority of 27 votes in his own precinct.

Savary Escaped.

Dick Savary, who was confined in the county jail charged with the murder of a man named Thompson near Humboldt last spring, broke jail early Wednesday evening.

The news of Savary's escape first became known when Tom Cox, who is an inmate of the jail, called John Tinker and told him that Savary had gone. John examined the door and found it properly locked and thinking that there might be a conspiracy to get him to unlock the jail in order that he might be overpowered and all the prisoners escape, he went down town and got his father, Sheriff Tinker, and Officers Schlosser and Stump. Together they went back to the jail and the sheriff went to open the door, but he found that his keys were missing. The door was quickly opened with John's key and the party entered and began to search the jail. They soon found that the statement made by Cox was true and that Savary had maped good his escape. A search was immediately begun and telegrams were sent to surrounding towns, but thus far nothing has been heard of the fugitive. Cox says that Savory had been planning an escape for some time and that he had said he would get out if he had to kill the sheriff. He was provided with a 44-calibre revolver which he kept hidden under the cage. Savary was held for murder in the first degree and it is probable that he will take any means however desperate to escape capture. Sheriff Tinker is at a loss to account for the manner in which Savary gained possession of the keys.

Another prisoner was confined in the jail and in the afternoon he was taken out and given a preliminary hearing and ordered discharged. The sheriff brought him back to get his things which were in the jail and when he unlocked the door, he put the keys in his side overcoat pocket. It is supposed that the discharged prisoner then picked his pocket and secured the keys. The door is protected with a spring lock and consequently the sheriff did not miss the keys when he came out. The thief then either came back and unlocked the door, or handed Savary the keys through the bars.

The prisoner asked John Tinker about six o'clock to leave the outer door open, as it was too warm in the jail and John did this, locking the barred door. It is probable that Savary then had the keys in his possession and made this request, knowing that they would be useless with the outer door closed.—Falls City Journal.

Nov. 10th, Union met with Mrs Lulu Conklin, five members and one visitor present. The Department of Evangelistic work had a program prepared but owing to the absence of a number that were to take part, it was postponed till the next session. An invitation was read that came from Mrs Nesbitt of Pawnee City inviting our Union to meet with her and help quilt a quilt for the temperance hospital, was no able to accept on account of our reception to be given to the teachers and school board at Mrs Cotton's on the evening of Nov. 17.

As the National W C T U passed a resolution against President McKinley and the government in regard to the Philipyines, our members present decided it was a political issue, and the intentions organizers of this society were for a Temperance League of all denominations and parties to unite in one effort to put down the Liquor Traffic—not a political organization—the following resolution was passed.

Resolved that we allow no political discussion what ever in our meeting, and that we follow out the work for Temperance, God and Humanity.

The December Number of The Delineator is called the Yuletide Number, and with its beautiful new cover and innumerable illustrations is certainly one of the most artistic magazines ever sent out. Aside from being the leading Fashion publication, it contains much choice Literary matter from the pens of well known authors. The Household and Social discussions are ably dealt with and are of real worth. The delightfully humorous fantasie Over the Plum Pudding, by John Kendrick Bange, is thoroughly witty and enjoyable. There is an admirably illustrated article on the Dewey Celebration in New York. An interesting story, The Poppy Lady, by Cornelia Atwood Pratt, disposes of the impression that the union of artistic temperaments is hostile to domestic happiness. Fidele, by Helen Choate Prince, is a dainty sketch of the implicit, odd devotion animal pets have for masters and friends. A Christmas poem, The Legend of the Yuletide, by Edith M Thomas, is an impressive effort: in a somewhat lighter strain are the verses, Kisses Kept are Wasted, by Edmund Vance Cooke. A timely and suggestive article is Some Woman's Occupations, by Lafayette McLaws. Concluding the series The Great Scourges of Humanity, by Grace Peckham Murray, M. D., is a valuable paper on Cerebral Disorders. In College News Carolyn Halstead gives an interesting analysis of the inspiration and strength of college friendships. In the department Club Women and Club Life, Helen M Winslow writes charmingly of the Women's Clubs of Kansas. A very clever and instructive article by Emma Haywood gives directions for making Christmas gifts. Of particular interest are the Household topics: Inexpensive Christmas Gifts, and Some Holiday Desserts. In addition, the regular departments are unusually bright and original—Social Observances, by by Mrs Frank Learned; The Milliner, The Dressmaker, Crocheting, Tatting, Knitting, the Newest Books, etc.

J D Bridges, Editor "Democrat," Lancaster, N H, says, "One Minute Cough Cure is the best remedy for croup I ever used." Immediately relieves and cures coughs, colds, croup, asthma, pneumonia, bronchitis, grippe and all throat and lung troubles. It prevents consumption.

The December number of the Designer is a credit to everyone concerned in its production. The many fashions and millinery designs illustrated in it are stylish, refined, and just what are needed for the outfitting of adults and juveniles. Evening waists in particular are most attractively set forth, also party costumes for the boys and girls. Whoever has the pleasant task of dressing a doll for Christmas should certainly purchase this number, for in it the whole doll family is represented, from papa to the baby. Window gardners will appreciate the floriculture article on this subject; the house furnisher will find some delightful suggestions for cosey corners in "Home Decoration;" the amateur photographer will rejoice in the help which "Half Hours with the Camera" brings him, while the dressmaker is remembered in a new installment of "Points on Patterns." As for fancy work, knitting, crocheting, and tatting—there are designs galore, all accompanied by explicit directions. "All Around the House," "Cookery Receipts" and "The Kindergarten at Home" will please and interest the house mother, and "Book Notes," "Among Ourselves" short and continued stories, a little comedy, "The Minister's Christmas Gifts," and poems will be enjoyed by all around the evening lamp. The Designer is just the kind of magazine to please the whole family, and its publishers have every reason to be proud of it in general, and of this issue in particular.

The voice of Olive Schreiner rings true and clear for liberty for her country and her sex. Of all the champions of the Boers in their present difficulty with England none is more logical and more fervent than the famous author of "The Story of a South African Farm" and "Dreams." Mrs Schreiner brings into the fight for her countrymen the same brilliant logic, high intelligence and remarkable talent that she has displayed in the November "Cosmopolitan Magazine" in her article on "The Woman Question." She has made this subject a special study for ten years, and pleads the cause of her sex with a fortiness of purpose and a strength of argument that will command instant and world-wide attention. The article is the most notable pronouncement on this eternal question that has been printed in the last ten years. It will be concluded in the December number.

Yesterday in going from the house to the barn Mrs C W Chambers spied a skunk; she went back to the house, got the gun, loaded it, and went after Mr Skunk; he was quietly resting under the corn crib and Mrs Chambers, resting the gun on a stone, pointed it at Mr Skunk, shut her eyes and pulled the trigger, there was a loud report and the remains of the skunk were found on the other side of the corn crib when the smoke had cleared away.

Mrs I Spurlock spoke at the M E church, Sunday morning in the interest of the Woman's Home Missionary Society, and the Mother's Jewell Home at York, Neb. Her address was fine and greatly appreciated. In the evening she presented the Mormon question in a most able manner—having been a missionary to Utah for two years. She says, "Mr Roberts has 3 wives, and about 40 children; he wouldn't know some of his children when he saw them."

One of the most pleasing entertainments given in Table Rock during the season was the one given at the opera house on Wednesday evening of last week by the W S A in commemoration of the 84th birthday of Elizabeth Cady Stanton. The program was interesting from beginning to end, some of the numbers being especially fine—particularly the boys quartette, the good-night drill by eight little girls, a song by little Ella Snyder, a recitation by Georgia Fulmer and in fact the entire program was greatly enjoyed by the large audience present.

OBITUARY.

James A Irwin was born in White county, Tenn., April 18, 1830, and died Nov. 17, 1899. He was united in marriage to Miss Harriet Slick, Dec. 7, 1855. Six children were born to this union, of which two survives him. Mrs Harriet Irwin died Dec. 27, 1868. In 1870 he was united in marriage to Miss Mary M Russell. Three children were born to this union of which two survive him. The oldest Miss Jennie Irwin, having died seven years ago. Mrs Mary M Irwin died March 18, 1894. He was converted and joined the M E church when quite young, about thirty-two years ago.

He was a soldier in the late war, member of 112. Ill., Infantry. He leaves 4 children to mourn his departure. M H Irwin, Mrs Carter, Glenwood, Iowa, Mrs Higgins, and John A Irwin of Broken Bow.

He was an honorable citizen, a tender loving father, greatly beloved by his children, who in last sickness, gave him the fullest measure of their love—being constantly at his bedside to minister to his last wants, but the hour of his departure was at hand—God called and he went home.

The children will miss him; his footsteps, fattering with age, will not return again. His loving smile, they will only see in memory—for father has gone.

The men who wore the blue, and fought with this Brother Irwin for our country's flag and for freedom, will miss him from their number, but he is safe, resting in triumph, under King Emanuel's banner.

The funeral services were held at the M E church; Friday at 4 p m, the sermon preached by Pastor Gates, after which his remains were laid to rest in our cemetery. The funeral was largely attended by friends and neighbors, and the G A R and W R C's attended in a body. The sympathy of all is extended to the bereaved ones in this hour of their bereavement.

It is said that Admiral Dewey's son receives a sample every time an article named for Dewey is put on the market, whether it be a cravat, a collar, a hat, a cigar, a brand of whiskey or anything else. A good character is more easily lost than gained.

To the pure all things are more or less adulterated.

Somehow badness is far more contagious than goodness.

Habit is a sort of chattel mortgage on a man's individuality.

Perhaps the good die young because the young always die good.

More good intentions would be carried out if they didn't live forever.

A candidate never discovers the good points of his opponent until after his defeat.

A contortionist may be completely wrapped up in himself without being conceited.

It's a good thing theatrical "angels" have no wings, otherwise they might get too fly.

Probably the most difficult man in the world to please is the one who doesn't know what he wants.

Many a man who poses as an architect of his own fortune has to plan a large addition for his son-in-law.

The reform movement that doesn't interfere with the rights of a number of people usually dies in its infancy.

The New York Telegram has an editorial headed: "As to Liars." Rather a dangerous headline to spring in that town.

Evil wins now and then, not because it is stronger than good, but because good does not realize its own strength, and does not use it to the best advantage.

Readers of the Transvaal war dispatches may have failed to note that a good-sized revolution is now in progress in Colombia, S. A. Up to date the "rebels," as they are called, have had the worst of it. Should the revolution prove successful the present president doubtless will follow the example of the recent president of Venezuela in resigning and taking an extended tour in Europe for the benefit of his health.

The Viscountess Harberton, in a recent speech before the English sanitary institute, ascribed woman's tendency to grow old fast to the worry of holding up skirts. A costume appropriate for the house may be as incongruous for the street as a scarlet coat and white helmet of a soldier on parade would be in a Transvaal battleground. The new uniforms of British soldiers in South Africa are scarcely distinguishable from the dry grass of the fields. The person who, by dress, speech and manner cries out, "Here am I, shoot me!" usually gets wounded, at least, for his pains.

The latest thing in surgery is a voice made to order. Actual operations have demonstrated that the larynx, or vocal box, can be successfully removed, and the patient may not only survive the shock, but recover. In order to restore speech to the patient an artificial larynx and vocal cords must be provided. This larynx is made of pure silver, and consists of a tracheal tube of larger size, with rings at its lower end, permitting a slight motion, corresponding to the natural flexibility of the trachea or windpipe. Through the front plate of this tube and through an opening on its upper curvature passes a second tube, also flexible, with an opening on its lower curved surface. This is so placed that a stream of air may play freely through both tubes, even though the external outlet be closed. The upper end of the second or pharyngeal tube—the tube which takes the place of the pharynx—lodges behind and below the base of the epiglottis—the leaf at the base of the tongue which covers the larynx in the act of swallowing—or behind and below the base of the tongue, as the case may be. Around it the esophagus, or gullet, granulates and closes, so that after the healing process is complete the only passage from the pharynx to the larynx is by way of the metal tube. In order that fluids and solids may not pass through this a device is provided which, while cutting off the connection, enables the patient to breathe freely. But a substitute has also to be provided for the vocal cords. This takes the form of a metal strip, which is so inserted as to vibrate under the influence of the articulating parts. The voice is incapable of inflexion, but, although it is a monotone, the patient is perfectly able to carry on a conversation.

An old resident of New York recalls the time when he saw on adjoining buildings in Burling slip these three signs: "Daniel F. Tiemann, paints and oils;" "Peter Cooper, glue;" "Cyrus W. Field, rags." Tiemann became mayor of the city; Cooper founded Cooper Institute; Field organized the Atlantic Telegraph company. Three more witnesses to three trite truths: It is worth while to have a business, whatever it may be; it pays to mind one's business; and the man who keeps stepping gets somewhere.

The speech upon the natural history of the London cabman, delivered by the earl of Crewe, at the annual festival dinner of the Cab Drivers' Benevolent association, contained a good deal of interest. It is certainly surprising to learn that there are in London 1,000 cabmen over 60 years of age, and 150 who are over 70, to say nothing of three who have turned 80. This is a remarkable testimony, not only to the advantages of a life spent in the open air, but to the salubrity of the much-abused climate of London.

That Mysterious Major...

—BY—

ETHEL A. SOUTHAM

CHAPTER XII.—(Continued.)

But Evelyn did not utter a syllable as she tore open the envelope and read the following hurriedly-penned words, which she instantly passed to her companion:

Dear Evelyn—I have scarcely a moment to write to you, having only just received a telegram from Royston School, asking me to go immediately, as Wilfred, poor lad, had a serious fall this afternoon, and is lying in a most critical condition. I am therefore starting off to him at once, and am hoping to catch the 8:30 express. If not, there is a fairly train at 9:10. Anyhow, you will receive this in time for you to catch the latter, as, of course, it is impossible for you to return to the hotel alone; so there is nothing for you to do but follow immediately. If I am in time for the express, I shall leave Parker at the station to wait for you. Your affectionate aunt, LYDIA HOWARD.

"Dear me, child"—it was Mrs. Courtenay who was the first to speak—"how very dreadful! Poor Lady Howard—what a state she must be in!"

"Yes, indeed; but what am I to do?" asked Evelyn, who was only just beginning to grasp the situation and to realize that there was not a moment to lose. If I am to leave on the 9:10 train, I ought to start at once—it must be almost that time now"—with a despairing glance round.

"Nearly 9:10? Oh, it cannot be so late already! But surely, somebody can tell us! Ah, yes! Is that you, Mr. Falkland? How fortunate!" broke off Mrs. Courtenay, with a sigh of relief, for Falkland was passing back to his seat after the interval. "You will be able to give us the right time."

"The right time? Certainly!" Falkland paused and pulled out his watch.

BEHELD FALKLAND'S GAUNT FORM COMING TOWARD HER.

"It is exactly four minutes to nine. But something has happened, I am afraid. Can I be of any assistance to you?"

Mrs. Courtenay rose quickly from her chair.

"Oh, Mr. Falkland, of the very greatest in the world! The fact is, Miss Luttrell has just received a note from her aunt telling her of an accident which has happened to her son; and, as Lady Howard is going straight off to the school, Miss Luttrell has to leave also, and is to catch the 9:10 train."

"Then in that case, Miss Luttrell, you have not a second to lose," returned Falkland, taking a rapid survey of the troubled-looking pretty face, which at the sound of his voice had grown, if possible, a shade paler. "You may just catch the train, but only just; and you will have to drive with the greatest speed imaginable. However, come at once, and I will promise it for you; only—— Don't you trouble, pray, Mrs. Courtenay—there is not the slightest occasion; you can trust your charge with perfect confidence to me, and I will give you my word not to leave her until I have delivered her safely into the hands of either Lady Howard or the redoubtable Parker."

And so two minutes later it happened that Evelyn found herself dashing along at breakneck speed through the streets of Saltcliffe, seated side by side with her rejected suitor, Gilbert Falkland.

"It is very kind of you to trouble so," she had tried to tell him above the rattle of the wheels the instant he had given directions to the driver and they had started off at a pace more suggestive of a fire engine than a crawling English "growler;" and perhaps her conscience smote her a little as she remembered with what disdain she had treated him during the past few days.

CHAPTER XIII.

After all, it seemed that her aunt was right when she so emphatically declared that they would have been utterly at sea without the kindly help of Mr. Falkland; and she began to think that for the future she would not be so ready to venture her opinion when two such unreadable characters as Major Brown and Gilbert Falkland were on tapis. Alas, could it be possible that she had been so hopelessly mistaken in the former? To her it was incredible.

There was the usual bustle and excitement consequent upon the departure of a train reigning at the small terminus of Saltcliffe as Evelyn and Falkland stepped out of the cab and made their way quickly through the throng of hurrying porters and trucks of baggage, Falkland made a rush for the ticket office, and then hastened forward to find Evelyn, who had gone on to the platform, looking anxiously around for signs of her aunt and maid.

"Aunt Lydia must have left by the express—she is not to be seen anywhere," she said in some agitation; "but Parker—both Parker and Sambo—they must be here."

"Yes—of course they must; have you not seen them yet? But you get in here, Miss Evelyn, and make sure of a carriage to yourself, and I will go and find Parker at once and bring her to you."

"But if she is not here—if she has mistaken the train?" The girl's tone was thoroughly hopeless.

"Take your seats! Take your seats!" came the voice of the guard. "Are you going, miss? Then take your seat," he said to Evelyn.

What was she to do? She was in despair as she mounted up quickly to the first-class compartment, and then paused with her hand upon the open door, gazing anxiously down the platform. The next instant, however, she beheld Falkland's gaunt form coming rapidly toward her.

"Where is Parker? Have you found her?" gasped Evelyn, as, to her horror, she perceived that he was quite alone.

"It is all right, Miss Luttrell—there is no need for alarm;" and to Evelyn's astonishment, Falkland himself jumped into the carriage, pulling the door to with a vigorous slam, as the train immediately steamed out of the station.

"There—we are off at last!" He sank back into the seat opposite her with a sigh of relief.

"Yes—but I do not understand. Where is Parker? What is she doing?"

"What is she doing? You may well ask that!" laughed Falkland. "Did you ever know a maid yet who managed to catch the train she was expected to? The fact is, she made some mistake about the luggage; it was put into a wrong train—one which left ten minutes earlier. At any rate, there was no time to get it out again when the mistake was discovered; so that Parker has gone on with it to the next station, where she was to see it taken out, and then wait for you."

"How very tiresome! I never heard of such a thing in my life!" exclaimed Evelyn, with some annoyance. "Fancy, if nobody had told you, I might have been waiting at Saltcliffe still! I should not have known what to do; and, as it is"—again her conscience gave her one or two undoubted pricks—"what a fearful trouble I am— But really, there was no need for you to have come. I could have managed by myself."

"Nonsense, Miss Luttrell! Did you not hear me promise to deliver you safely into Parker's hands? And surely you do not suppose I should be so remiss as to leave you in such straits as these? No"—decidedly—"I shall carry out my promise to the letter; and, sooner than any blame should fall upon me, I shall certainly escort you all the way to Royston. Let me see, though. I suppose it is Parker who has made the mistake. What did Lady Howard say in her letter? Are you sure the train she told you to come by was the ten minutes past nine one, and not the nine train?"

"Oh, yes, I am quite sure! But here it——" She broke off somewhat abruptly, however, as she glanced down at the paper in her hand, and found that it was only the program of the theater which she had been keeping so securely. "How tiresome! I must have dropped Aunt Lydia's note!"

THOUGHTS FOR THANKSGIVING

UNCLE EZRA'S THANKSGIVING.

Yep, Thanksgivin' Day is playin' out, er so it seems to me.
Fer it don't make no comparison to what it use' to be;
Though the turkey and the mince pies is the same we've alw'ys known
An' I'm here an' Sary Ellen, but we're eatin' 'em alone.

It's the buildin' of the railroads thet hes made it that-a-way,—
Thet hes tuck our children from us an',
hes sp'ilt our holiday—
Holdin' out their wild shameeries about lan's that can't be beat (But whar cyclones digs the taters, an'
whar chinch bugs mows the wheat).

Why, it use' to be thet youngsters didn' seem to want to go
From the homestead of the ol' folks
any more'n a mile er so;
They 'ud take things 'twas given 'm, an' they'd settle thar an' stay,
An' they'd fill the homestid table when it come Thanksgivin' Day.

Law me! yes, them times is ended!
Little Sary married fust,
An' Jim Medders 'lowed he'd take her out to Idyho er bust,

BUT WE'RE EATING 'EM ALONE.

An' he dustid, an' I've ben a-sendin'
money ever sence,
Though it's more fer little Sary thet I care than the expense.

An' then Chrissy went to Texas—
Chrissy alw'ys was our pride,
But he headed off some cattle, an' he hurt his spine an' died.
An' now Sammy's in the city, an' that ain't so fur away,
But he's writ us that a baby's brought
'em their Thanksgivin' Day!

So we narrered down the table, bein'
by ourselves, you see,
An' the turkey'll las' forever, jes' fer
Sary an' fer me;
An' the raisins in the mince pie, bought fer Sammy's special taste,
Sence he didn't come to eat 'em, sorter
seem to be a waste.

Yep, the railroads tuck 'em from us,
an' we're all alone at last,
An' Thanksgivin's like I told yeh, jest
a mem'ry of the past.
But we're countin', me an' Sary, on a better place, an' then
We will have a big Thanksgivin', an'
the children home again.

HIS THANKSGIVING.

Tinkle-tinkle, tinkle-tinkle, tinkle-tinkle.

The leading man engaged in an attempt to remove a black spot from his dress cravat by means of an application of white grease paint, paused and listened.

"It's a mandolin," he said. "That's a new wrinkle. We've had all kinds of fiends in this company since we started out, everything from cigarettes to bicycles. Who's the musician, I wonder? Oh, I say, Jenks! Jenks! Who's the band wagon?"

There was a step in the narrow passageway that led to the dressing rooms, and Jenks, the property man, appeared in the doorway. "Sh!" he said, "not so loud. The old man'll hear you."

The leading man started. "The old man, did you say—not Merriam?"

"Yes, Merriam," in a whisper.

The leading man sat on his trunk. "That beats me," he said. "The Ancient Mariner tinkling a mandolin. Now I'm prepared to see Father Time playing sentimental ditties on a jew's harp."

Jenks did not laugh, a fact which helped to sober the other man. "It's no surprise to me," said the property man, gravely. "I says to Mrs. Jenks just before I left the hotel, says I, 'Mrs. Jenks, you know what night this is?' 'Thanksgiving,' she says. 'Why, right,' says I, 'and it'll be a hard night for Merriam.'

I WANT YOU TO LEARN IT.

"'Poor old man,' says Mrs. Jenks, a-wipin' of a tear. 'Poor old man, I suppose he'll be playing of his mandolin again.' 'That he will,' says I.

"He hasn't missed it, as near as I can judge, for thirty years. As sure as Thanksgiving night comes, just so sure he gets out that old mandolin of his and tinkles away. And it's always the same tune. God! But it does make my mind go back. I'll never forget the first time he played it. You see, me and Merriam have been together, off and on, so long that I know his story most as well as he does himself. Not that he ever talks about it. To-night, after the show, that instrument 'll go back to the bottom of his trunk, and it won't come out again till this time next year."

The leading man was all ears.

"Thirty years ago I was stage doorkeeper at the old California theater. Now, the stage doorman ain't so unimportant as some folks think. There's mighty little goes on that he don't know something about. He gets the flowers first, and he usually sees the cards. He's a good friend to the actor when the actor's a friend to him, and he can do a favor now and then that's worth the while.

"Merriam was just beginning to climb up the ladder in those days. He had come into the stock three years before as utility, but he was a handsome chap, with brains and ambition to back his good looks, and it wasn't long before he got to playing leads. Say, when Merriam went on as Romeo at the matinees you couldn't see three rows in front of you for the bonnets. Mrs. Jenks used to live in a regular garden those days, for Merriam wouldn't have none of the flowers the silly girls used to send him. When I'd offer to bring them home to him he'd laugh, and tell me he reckoned my wife cared more for flowers than he did.

"But I often noticed that he came into the theater with a big bunch of violets or roses that he'd bought himself to give to the little woman who played opposite parts to him. I asked him once why he didn't give her the flowers the girls sent him, instead of spending money that way. I took a kind of fatherly interest in Merriam in those days. Lord bless you, to look at him now you'd think he was my grandfather. He looks that old.

"Well, I seen how things was going with him and Nellie Moore, and everybody else seen it, too. When she was on the stage he stood in the wings, and his eyes followed every move she made. I remember one of the women saying that it was worth while to have a man care for you like that, and certainly Nellie seemed to like it. She came to me one afternoon—that Thanksgiving I'm telling you about—and said that she was too tired to go home after the matinee. She asked me if I'd run across the way and order dinner for her. Then she whispered in my ear that she wanted it served for two, and asked if I couldn't fix a bunch light on the stage, so she and Merriam could have a cozy Thanksgiving dinner all alone.

"Of course I done it for her, and while they were eatin' I went over to my boardin' house. There was to be a change of bill that night, so I came back early to get my props in shape, as I had them to attend to as well as looking after the door. When I came back to the theater I heard Nellie Moore playin' a mandolin. She was always fond of music and carried the instrument around with her.

"'Now you try,' she said, and Merriam answered that he didn't know a note.

"'I'll teach you,' she said. 'There's an air I want you to learn and remember.'

"'All-right,' said Merriam, and he took the mandolin from her. She showed him where to place his fingers and kept humming the tune until he could play it with only one or two breaks. Then she went to her dressing room to get ready, and Merriam sat there thrumming until the half hour was called.

"That night there was a good deal of hand-shaking, and the word went around that there was to be a weddin' at Christmas.

"The next night on my way to the theater I noticed a crowd around the stage door, and heard talk of a runaway. I hurried up, and as I did so Merriam came out, his face as white as a ghost's.

"'For God's sake, get a doctor, Jenks!' he cried.

"I rushed to the nearest drug store, and, luckily, found one there. When we got back to the stage door Merriam was waiting, and, without a word, he led us to a sofa in the wings on which Nellie Moore was lying. The doctor bent down over her for a minute, shook his head and said he was too late.

"An understudy played Juliet that night and Merriam as usual was the Romeo. The audience didn't know the real reason for the change, but in the tomb scene I don't see how they could help feeling it.

"Those of us who saw it from the wings will never forget it. The women were in hysterics and the stage hands and flymen were nearly as bad. I don't know how Merriam ever lived through it, but this I do know. He was a different man from that night. He seemed to lose all his ambition and he withered up so, that when I met him at a rehearsal two years later, I hardly knew him. He was bent much as you see him now, and was playing character old men. Every year he dropped down further, until they wouldn't trust him with anything better than bits and servants. Yes, sir, and that old man has played Romeo with the best of them."

The story was finished, but the mandolin still tinkled. The leading man's face was drawn, and Jenks sat thinking. Perhaps the former was thinking of his own high tide of prosperity, and of what the future had in store for him.

But sympathy and curiosity are closely allied, and soon the two men were tiptoeing through the passageway. They paused before the old actor's room. A ray of light filtered through a crack in the thin pine door. Merriam was dressed and made up for a comedy servant. His green livery coat hung on a peg on the wall, and the red wig with which he covered his own white hair lay on the dressing table before him. There, too, was a faded photograph of a pure-faced girl in the dress of Juliet. The actor was bent over his mandolin and the leading man now caught the tune for the first time, broken, but recognizable.

"When other hearts and other lips
Their tales of love shall tell,
Then you'll remember, you'll remember——"

Twang! There was the sound of a broken string.

"First act! All up for the first act!" The callboy came tumbling down the passage and the listeners hurried up to the stage. A few minutes later the callboy came up, too, and he found the stage manager fuming.

"Where's Merriam?" he cried. "I can't hold the curtain all night for that doddering old fool. Hurry him up, will you?"

The boy disappeared, and reappeared almost instantly.

"Mr. Merriam's——" The tears choked his voice and he got no further. The stage manager made a rush for the stairs. Ten minutes later he came up dressed for the comedy servant, but the man whose name was down on the bills for the part lay in his dressing room clutching an old mandolin, with his eyes fixed on a faded photograph.

The Soldiers in Battle.

It is not easy for the hearts in darkened rooms today, mourning sons and brothers to see God's face in the gloom, and if we give thanks for brave men and brave deeds, for the heroism that faced death unflinchingly in the trenches or on the seas, it should be in humility, that the world has not progressed far enough in God's way to be relieved of the curse of war, but we can be unreservedly thankful for the voices that have rung out in all the land for peace. Let us be thankful that never before have so many men and women been pleading for the right in defiance of the wrong. Never before have so many thoughtful ones faced the evils of the times, the great underlying causes of sin and misery, and sought to solve the knotty questions of our modern civilization.

Mothers of the Nation.

We are thankful for the mothers of the nation, their increasing interest in the care of little children, as well as in the welfare of the nation. The banding together of women in various organizations and their handling of practical questions is making the world a better place to live in. They are touching vital questions here and there, and calling a halt to the onsweeping of vice and impurity. They are helping to make ugly places beautiful, and are reaching out a hand to the unfortunate—educating, protecting, uplifting. This intellectual enlightenment and the heart culture that stands for the regeneration of the world is something for which to give thanks.

Things to Be Thankful For.

We are thankful for a day that brings a resting, breathing place to this work-a-day world for all, when we can think of God's goodness to us, when we can remember His poor, and can have a special opportunity to do good to others.

That Thanksgiving day may not be a mere name or a time of questionable indulgence, determine to make it a beautiful anniversary in the home, help to make the Thanksgiving service a success by being there yourself, do everything possible to make the aged, the sick and the poor happy, and the spirit of gratitude will fill your own heart.

Still More Counterfeiting.

The Secret Service has just unearthed another band of counterfeiters and secured a quantity of bogus bills, which are cleverly executed. Used His Brains.

Sometime ago a brakeman on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad used his brains and saved a passenger train from running into two derailed cars. The Company sent him a check for $50 and posted a bulletin complimenting him for his quickness of thought. A few days later, Engineer John Hagerty was oiling his engine at Connellsville, while waiting for the passengers to alight. He heard another train coming and believed that it was not under proper control. He sprang into his cab, opened the throttle and started his train. The other engine struck the rear car but it was not a hard blow and Hagerty's promptness saved ten or a dozen lives. The Company has ordered a handsome gold watch, suitably inscribed, and a gold chain for Engineer Hagerty, as a reward for his devotion to duty and "using his brains" in time of emergency.

A New Variable Star.

Mme. Ceraski of Moscow has discovered in the constellation Cygnus a star of between the eighth and ninth magnitude, which undergoes wonderful variations in its light. It belongs to the same type of variable stars as the celebrated Algol, but its variation is larger. Its period is four days, thirteen hours and forty-five minutes. When at a minimum it is three magnitudes fainter than when at a maximum; in other words, it periodically loses and then regains so much light that at one time it is sixteen times brighter than at another. In stars of this type the changes of light are supposed to be caused by a dark body revolving around the star, and producing eclipses as it comes within our line of sight.

American Push in Saving Souls.

From the Kansas City Journal: An amusing story is told in illustration of the way in which energy, push and practical methods have carried Americans to the front in all spheres of life in South Africa. An English missionary spent the first two years after his arrival in studying the native language and building a house for himself. In that time he had made no converts. An American missionary, who arrived at almost the same time, rented a hut and hired interpreters. At the end of two years he had 150 converts and many more natives who were learning useful occupations and trades, and had sent home a request for more missionaries.

Income Tax in Great Britain.

Statistics just completed by the income tax commissioners of Great Britain show that out of a total adult male population of 12,500,000 more than 10,000,000 earn less than $860 a year. The income tax is collected at the rate of 16 cents on each $5 above $860, and the total tax, which last year amounted to nearly $100,000,000, was contributed by not more than 2,000,000 people.

The Hope Was Reciprocated.

He was somewhat taken aback with the universal response of "Same to you, sir."

My Mother Had Consumption

"My mother was troubled with consumption for many years. At last she was given up to die. A neighbor told her not to give up but try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. She did so and was speedily cured, and is now in the enjoyment of good health." D. P. Jolly. Feb. 2, 1899. Avoca, N. Y.

Cures Hard Coughs

No matter how hard your cough is or how long you have had it, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is the best thing you could possibly take. But it's too risky to wait until you have consumption, for sometimes it's impossible to cure this disease. If you are coughing today, don't wait until tomorrow, but get a bottle of Cherry Pectoral at once and be relieved. It strengthens weak lungs.

ZULUS GETTING UGLY

Are Becoming Insolent and the British are Uneasy.

THE RESIDENTS FEAR AN ATTACK

Boer Spirits Fast Rising From This Time On—Free State General Says Battle of Elandslaagte Will Be First and Last Boer Defeat.

Advices from Zululand testify to the growing uneasiness of British residents, whose stores are looted by the Boers, with the result that the Zulus themselves are growing insolent, giving rise to the fear that they may attack the unarmed British population.

A dispatch from Lourenzo Marques says:

"A Pretoria newspaper announced last Wednesday that 4,000 Burghers had left General Joubert's force around Ladysmith to join Commandant Botha's force near Estcourt, with a view of assisting to intercept the British advance to the relief of Ladysmith.

"General Lucas Meyer, the Free State commander, has asserted in the course of an interview that he is convinced that the battle of Elandslaagte will be the first and last Boer defeat of the year.

A November 18, 5 a. m. special says: The absence of news of any serious movement against Ladysmith seems to show that the Boers are repeating the strategy adopted by them at Dundee, when they appeared in front and endeavored to effect a surrounding movement. This seems to have been their object regarding Estcourt, and since it is impossible that relief should reach there for some days to come it is not unlikely that a further retiring movement of Mooi river will be made.

BULLER CONFIRMS REVERSE

Sends News of Disaster to Armored Train Troops.

The British war officer has received the following dispatch from General Buller.

"Capetown, Thursday, November 16—Evening.—Have received from Hildyard, Pietermaritzburg, a telegram, dated November 15, of which the following is the purport: 'The officer commanding the troops at Estcourt reports at midday, that an armored train left Estcourt this morning with a company of the Dublin fusileers and a company of the Durban volunteers. North of Frere they encountered a party of Boers and began to withdraw. While retiring some of the trucks were derailed. The Dublins turned out and advanced towards the enemy, while the rest of the train appears to have returned without them to Estcourt.

"The officer commanding the troops reports that he was sending mounted troops in order to cover their withdrawal, but that about 100 are missing."

SHORT SESSION OF CABINET

Satisfaction Expressed Over Action of Secretary Gage.

The cabinet meeting Friday was brief and unimportant. General satisfaction was expressed with the result of Secretary Gage's invitation for the purchase of bonds. Most of the time was taken up in the discussion of plans for the exhibit of Porto Rico and Cuba at the Paris exposition. The secretary of agriculture outlined his plans for extending the work of his department to Porto Rico, Hawaii and the Philippine islands. He spoke of the possibilities of the rubber industry, and thought that the climate and soil conditions in Porto Rico should make it as favorable for the growth of the rubber tree as in Central and South American countries.

To Maintain Martial Law.

A Madrid, November 17 telegram says: At a cabinet council today Premier Silvela said the organized agitation in the chamber of commerce regarding financial projects was directed not against the government, but against the state, but the government had decided to deal energetically with them, and also with non-taxpaying Barcelona, where, he explained, the situation was intolerable. The government intended to maintain martial law until the normal conditions of affairs was established.

HAS A NEW LEASE OF LIFE

Senator Hayward's Condition Much Improved—Family Encouraged.

Hayward's condition is such as to give much encouragement to his family and physicians. The paralysis is gradually leaving his arm and his speech is much improved. Hopes are now entertained for his ultimate recovery, barring any sudden relapse. His vocal organs are gaining strength and he seems to have taken a new lease on life. The blood clot on the left side of the brain, caused by the lesion, is what the physicians say has caused the paralysis. Dr. Whitten, the family physician, is quoted as saying that while he hopes to see the senator again on his feet, he would strongly advise against him attempting to go to Washington, as absolute quiet and retirement is essential to recovery.

DWIGHT MOODY STRICKEN

Noted Evangelist Obliged to Give Up Kansas City Engagement.

Dwight L. Moody, the evangelist, who has been preaching to thousands at Kansas City nightly, in convention hall, is broken in health and suffering from heart trouble. His engagement was cut short Friday night, and he is now enroute for his home at Northfield, Mass., in the care of Dr. Schauffer of Kansas City, and Mrs. C. M. Vining, teller of the Union National bank. It is admitted that his condition is extremely critical.

An Insane Man's Mad Act.

A Chicago, November 18 special says: Carrying out a plot he had apparently planned with deliberation, Cornelius Corcoran shot four of his children, killing two of them and ending his own life. The police are convinced the man was insane. For some days he had plotted for the death of his children and he nearly accomplished his purpose Tuesday night. Hearing the children cough he arose and in the dark administered laudanum to five of them. He failed in this, and his act of today followed.

Outgrowth of Capital Fight.

At Sioux Falls, S. D., United States Judge Garland handed down two decisions growing out of the memorable state capital fight in 1889. The decisions are in the cases of Isaac Elwood and Everett M. Warren against the city of Huron, granting the former a judgment of $8,147.65 and latter one of $8,450.50 against the city of Huron. The suits were brought on bonds issued by Huron in September, 1890, to raise funds for furthering the candidacy of Huron for the state capital.

Race of Steamer for Life.

The steamer Conestoga of the Anchor line, sank at the mouth of the Chicago harbor, after a race for life. The steamboat, bound into Chicago from Buffalo, in the dense fog that hung over Lake Michigan, ran into the half-way crib, a mile and a half out from the harbor entrance, and a great hole was stove in the bow. The boat commenced to fill with water fast and there was a dispoition to rush for the boats, but the captain gave orders to turn on all steam and, make a quick run for the harbor.

Far From Cordial.

A Victoria, B. C., November 17 dispatch says: Accordiug to advices from the orient, brought by the steamship Empress of China, the difficulty arising out of the Masampo affair is evidently far from adjusted. As Masampo lies in a commanding position between Fusen and Tsushima, and as it is of immense importance from a strategical point of view, Russia is anxious to gain possession of it to use as a naval base connecting Vladivostock and Port Arthur.

Favor the Present Boundary.

The San Francisco chamber of commerce has adopted and sent to Secretary of State Hay the following resolution, referring to the Alaskan boundary question:

"We earnestly request that the present boundary lines as established be maintained and that no territory now lying on the American side thereof be yielded up or granted to the Dominion of Canada."

A Year Too Soon.

Dr. P. J. See, one of the most advanced astronomers in the government's service, has made the announcement that the meteoric display which has been a mere sputter this year would be repeated at about this date in November next year, with a brilliancy quite equal, if not superior, to any of the tri-century displays with which the modern world has been startled.

Henderson in Washington.

Hon. David B. Henderson of Iowa, who is slated to be speaker of the next house of representatives, has arrived in Washington, and has established himself at the Normandie hotel. Colonel Henderson is accompanied by his wife and daughter.

Collins Sure of Nomination.

Complete returns of the vote at the democratic primary election for mayor held at Boston give Gen. Patrick A. Collins 168 of the 291 delegates to the nominating convention.

Minnesota Loses Its Case.

The state of Minnesota loses in its attempt to secure over 1,000,000 acres of land herefore included in the grant to the Duluth & Iron Range railroad. United States Judge Lochren having announced his decision in favor of the railroad. The land is very valuable, being in the iron ore part of the state.

Against Tobacco Company.

The supreme court of Tennessee has decided against the American Tobacco company in the case brought to test the law prohibiting the sale of cigar in Tennessee.

Hunged By a Mob.

William Huff was taken from the county jail at Bloomfield, Mo., and hanged by a mob of about 100 men. Huff, who is charged with the murder of Andrew Melton last week, showed remarkable nerve, facing the mob and asserting that he was not afraid.

American Colony to Celebrate.

The American colony at Mexico City will celebrate Thanksgiving day by a ball on a superb scale, and President Diaz and family have accepted an invitation to attend.

JASON CROW, OSCARVILLE, GA. Writes us, May 31, 1899: "I feel it my duty to write and let you know what your medicine, '5 Drops,' has done for me. I have had rheumatism about eighteen years, but was able to be up most of the time until a year ago last May, when I was taken down and not able to move about. About six weeks ago I saw your advertisement and wrote for a sample bottle. After taking a few doses it did me so much good that I ordered some more for myself and friends, and in every case it has done wonders and given perfect satisfaction.

"Dr. Woodliff, my family physician, who has had rheumatism for fifteen years, is taking the '5 Drops,' and says it is the most efficient rheumatic medicine he has ever used."

"5 Drops" is the most powerful specific known. Free from opiates and perfectly harmless. It is a perfect cure for Rheumatism, Sciatica, Neuralgia, Dyspepsia, Backache, Asthma, Catarrh, La Grippe, Neuralgic Headache, etc. If you or any of your friends are suffering, do not delay, but send for a bottle of "5 Drops." Large-sized bottles (300 doses), $1. For the next thirty days we will mail a 25-cent sample bottle for 10 cents. SWANSON RHEUMATIC CURE CO., 160 to 164 E. Lake Street, Chicago, Ill.

Titles for Wives.

In Germany a controversy has arisen with regard to the style which should be adopted in addressing married ladies. There are four names by which a man's better half may be described in the language of the vaterland, viz: Gemahlin (consort), gattin (spouse), frau (lady), and weib (wife). To save the frequent disputes and heart-burnings arising from ignorance or impertinence in the use of any one of these forms it is proposed that they shall be officially attached to the recognized graduations of the social scale. Thus a general's wife would be addressed as "his consort," the partner of an official of a certain rank as "his spouse," the middle-class wife would be addressed as her husband's "lady," and the workman's helpmeet would be simply his "wife."

World's Steel Production.

The production of steel throughout the world last year was estimated, according to Engineering, at 24,127,000 tons. This total was made up approximately as follows: United States, 3,900,000 tons; Great Britain, 4,600,000 tons; Germany, 5,700,000 tons; France, 1,400,000 tons; Russia, 1,100,000 tons; Austria and Hungary, 880,000 tons; Spain, 190,000 tons, and other countries, 480,000 tons. It will be seen that the proportion sustained by each country in the production of steel was as follows: United States, 37.02 per cent; Great Britain, 19.23 per cent; Germany, 23.96 per cent; France, 6.11 per cent; Russia, 4.78 per cent; Austria and Hungary, 3.65 per cent; Belgium, 2.71 per cent; Sweden, 1.14 per cent; Spain, 0.83 per cent, and other countries, 1.72 per cent.

There Is a Class of People

Who are injured by the use of coffee. Recently there has been placed in all the grocery stores a new preparation called GRAIN-O, made of pure grains, that takes the place of coffee. The most delicate stomach receives it without distress, and but few can tell it from coffee. It does not cost over one-fourth as much. Children may drink it with great benefit. 15 cents and 25 cents per package. Try it. Ask for GRAIN-O.

English a Rich Language.

A German philologist has prepared statistics upon the comparative richness of all the spoken languages of the world. English figures at the head of the list with an enormous vocabulary of 260,000 words. Next comes German, with 80,000 words; Italian has 75,000; French, 30,000; the Turkish language, 22,000, and the Spanish tongue only boasts of 20,000 words. It is not, however, by the number of words that we measure the value of a literature. The great French writers of the seventeenth century for their chef d'oeuvres were content with a vocabulary which only contained 5,000 words.

For the Pope's Eye Only.

The most secure way of having a letter read by the pope is to address it as follows: "To his Holiness the Pope, Prefect of the Holy Roman and Universal Inquisition," as any other than the head of the church guilty of opening a document so addressed will be excommunicated, according to a bull promulgated by the Carafa pope, Paul IV.

If there weren't any bad men to be horrible examples probably there wouldn't be any good women to be shining examples.

Some women show their appreciation of their husbands by dangling them before other women like a child dangles a piece of meat before a puppy.—New York Press.

HIGH LIGHTS.

Nature is kind; any artist can paint a sunset and sell it for a sunrise.

Knowledge is power sometimes when communicated, at other times when withheld.

Life is not short when we count up all the foolishness we have had time to indulge in.

Dignity and pride are lonely because happiness always wants to sit in somebody's lap.

Love can't break a man's heart after he has got old enough to take an artistic interest in his dinners.

Luck consists in getting a few of the desirable things we have started out in life determined to have.

When a woman truly loves a man she admires his indifference more than the attentions of other men.—Chicago Record.

Spruce Gum Crop of Maine.

The spruce gum crop of Maine for this year has been harvested and sent to market. It has proved to be the largest crop in the history of the state—thirty tons, worth about $63,000. This is all collected by the lumbermen, and contains considerable bark and chips, but is sorted over by the thrifty Yankee, who sells it to the trust. An interesting and peculiar thing in connection with the gum crop of this year is the fact that the harvesters have combined to crush the trust. They will sell none of their product to any dealer who does not give his promise that no gum handled by him shall be manufactured and put on the market by the trusts.

What a Fine Day Means.

There are ten million bicycles in use in the world. If half of these turn out on a fine day, five million cyclists will be having a spin. If they do on the average twenty miles apiece, that will make a total distance of 100,000,000 miles in that day. A hundred million miles is 4,000 times round the world. Each wheel of the average machine turns round 700 times in a mile. So that one fine day, when half the cyclists in the world do a twenty-mile spin witnesses 140,000,000,000 revolutions of the 10,000,000 wheels.

A Main Point.

From the Cleveland Plaindealer: What the United States bought of Russia and has held ever since must be retained, and if the case goes to arbitration it should only be after the United States has declared its boundary line in Alaska, and put Canada in the position of having to prove a right to strictly defined United States territory, instead of claiming ownership of territory that has remained unsurveyed and unmarked by the United States.

Fire Squad on Wheels.

The commissioners of the District of Columbia have decided to equip the fire department with forty bicycles and have firemen designated to use them. These firemen will be provided with small fire extinguishing outfits for small fires. By this provision the police will be enabled to ring an alarm on the slightest indications of a fire, and the bicycle squad will reach the scene quicker than the big engines.—Pathfinder.

Why the Pagodas Stand.

In Japan there are pagodas of considerable height, which have withstood the effects of frequent earthquake shocks for centuries. The secret of their stability is that they are fitted inside with a heavy timber-beam construction, which hangs from the roof like a clapper of a bell. On the occurrence of a shock the effects of the vibration are wholly counteracted by this comparatively simple device.

Church for the Deaf.

In a Ballarat (Australia) church special accommodation is provided for deaf worshipers, a diaphragm having been rigged up in the vicinity of the pulpit, from which the sound of the clergyman's voice is carried in tubes to the ears of such of his flock as may be afflicted with a hardness of hearing.

Revival of the Minuet.

New York Tribune: It is reported that the waltz has lost its hold on fashion's votaries, and that the sprightly two-step is its successor. The graceful gavotte is steadily growing in favor, and bids fair to have resumed its olden popularity by the time the season has reached its height. There are several variations of the gavotte that are to be introduced during the coming winter. The stately old minuet, too, is to be revived. There is a marked tendency in the fashion of today toward the dress of the colonial period, when the "grave and gallant gentlemen," and "stately ladies with fair faces" danced the minuet.

One of Lady Aberdeen's Reforms.

The Countess of Aberdeen, who is well remembered by Chicago people for her connection with the world's fair, is a woman of many advanced opinions and original ideas. One of her latest innovations, in which she hopes to be imitated by other people of prominence, is dining with her servants at least once each week. Her object is to bring about a better understanding with the domestics and to teach them that their interests and her own are identical.

Cheap Paper Making.

There is talk in Canada of manufacturing news paper at a cost not exceeding 1 cent a pound, and of competing in the market on this side of the border. It is considered that such a thing is possible if the manufacture be conducted on a large scale. News produced at a cost of a cent a pound, even with duty and freight charges added, would be a disturbing element in the New York market, for example, and would compel our manufacturers to do some very close figuring.

A Perfect Woman.

A woman of perfect figure should weigh 138 pounds and be 5 feet 5 inches tall. She should measure 5 feet 5 inches from the tip of one middle finger to the tip of the other when the arms are extended. The length of the hand ought to be just one-tenth of this, and one-seventh should be the length of the foot.

Europe's Armies.

France in war has 1,000 soldiers to 15,407 inhabitants, Germany in war has 1,000 soldiers to 17,427 inhabitants, Great Britain in war has 1,000 soldiers to 72,413 inhabitants, while under the house bill during the late war the United States provided for only 1,000 soldiers to about 791,000 inhabitants.

The Walking Fish.

The "walking fish" of Santa Catalina channel, California, is a member of the Pediculati tribe, and has congeners among the gulf-weed of the Mexican gulf. Its pectoral fins are shaped so as to serve for legs, and it can rest on them so as to snap its prey. It builds a nest of seaweed.

The Table Rock Argus.

P. H. TAYLOR, Publisher.

Bryan's hunting trip to the Ozarks ended Monday.

Rumors of a new north and south railroad through Table Rrck are rife.

Senator Thurston was married last Saturday to Miss Pearmen of Washington.

Dewey has transfered the home given him by popular subscription to his wife, and has been quite freely criticised therefor.

The face of the Kentucky election returns show that Taylor was elected governor by 2000; there are over 3000 contested votes, and the Goebelites say they intend to have the whole Louisville vote thrown out.

W H Jennings a young attorney of Tecumseh whose ad has appeared in the Sun, writes us that he has abandoned the law business and will devote his entire time to the profession of Christian Science, which he has been practicing for some time.—Sterling Sun,

Among the transfer passengers here last Sunday were Brother Libby of the Elk Creek Herald and Brother Black of the Hickman Enterprise. Nels glanced cautiously out of the car window and seeing Jeff Carter on the platform, asked if our smallpox scare was over and if there was any danger to transients if they exercised due procautions and took a magnetic bath when they got home.

In the death of Garret A Hobart—which occured at Patterson, N. J., on Tuesday morning at 8:30 o'clock the nation loses a strong man. By industry, perserverance and business capacity he worked his way up from poverty to wealth and honor. He served his home city as counsel, his state in its legislature and the nation as vice president; as presiding officer of the United States Senate he won the admiration of members by his fairness. He was a kind and loving husband and father and the nation mourns with the bereaved family in their sorrow.

The Table Rock Vitrified Brick Company have quit making brick after a most successful season. During the season they have made 4,000,000 brick, which have been shipped all over the western country. Beatrice has used 1,000,000 of this in improvements, and Lincoln has also used a large number. The pay roll of the company has run over $900 a month during the season, making it one of the leading avenues of employment in the county. They have five or six kilns to finish burning yet and then the season's work will be finished.

Major John A Logan's death while leading his battalion in action ends the direct male line of a heroic family. Gen Logan went through a storm of shot and shell for years, but survived to serve his country in civil life. His horse was shot under him at Fort Henry and he was severely wounded at Fort Donelson. He always led his men, and no one saw him in battle can forget the spectacle. Maj. Logan has fallen in his first fight in the Philippines. The supreme sacrifice of the patriot has come to him and the sympathy of the country goes forth to his family and his distinguished mother. The name of Logan, father and son, will shave a prominent place in the history of the American volunteer, who has never yet failed to carry the flag where his country asked him to plant it.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

The Washington correspondent of the Omaha Bee gives the following in regard to the vacancy caused by the death of Vice President Hobart: By the death of Mr Hobart the office of vice president of the United States becomes vacant for the rest of President McKinley's term, as the law provides no succession. A president pro tempore of the senate will be elected by that body when congress assembles, who will hold the office until March, 1901. By law the succession to the presidency of the United States in event of vacancy falls upon the vice president, and, in the event of the latter's death, to the secretary of state, the next in line being the secretary of the treasury, then the secretary of war and down through the list of cabinet officers in order of prepedence fixed by act of congress when the death of Vice President Hendricks disclosed the necessity for such a provision.

Senator William P Frye of Maine is now president protempore of the senate. He will call that body to order when it assembles on December 4 and preside until a successor is chosen. That he will succeed himself is generally conceded.

Now that the figures are in from the different counties of this judicial district Judge Stull and his friends are feeling well satisfied over the result as his majorities is 1357 over Kretsinger where the fusionist's declared they would carry the district and 2157 over Story the other fusion candidate. He received 427 votes more than Judge Letton his running mate. Judge Stull carried every county in the district except Richardson where his decision on a railroad bridge was used to defeat him. In Nemaha county he ran 132 votes ahead of Judge Reese the head of the ticket. In Gage county the home of Kretsinger and where there was internal dissension Judge Stull's majority over Kretsinger was 579 and 74 more than Judge Letton. In Pawnee county the home of Candidate Story Judge Stull polled 126 more votes than Story. And in Jefferson county the home of Judge Letton he received 157 majority over Letton. These figures shows that Judge Stull has run ahead of his ticket in nearly all of the counties in the district. In the light of these figures and many more that could be made they do not show that the Judge is loosing any of his popularity.—Auburn Post.

VICE PRESIDENT HOBART DIES.

Paterson, N. J., Nov. 21.—Vice President Hobart died at 8:30 a m. The family and physician were at Mr Hobart's bedside when he expired.

The vice president had been failing since late yesterday afternoon, although the reports given out at the house were that he was holding his own.

At midnight he became unconscious and at 7 o'clock this morning he had an attack of angina pectoris, from which he never rallied. His death followed at 8:30 o'clock.

Mrs Hobart, Dr Newton, Mrs Newton, who is a cousin of Mrs Hobart, and Miss Alice Waddell, the nurse, were at the patient's bedside constantly from the time he became unconscious.

At 7:30 o'clock the vice president's private secretary, Mr Evans, called up the White House by telephone and notified President McKinley that Mr Hobart was dying. At 9 o'clock Mr Evans communicated again with the president, notifying him of the vice president's death.

Mr Hobart's funeral will take place Saturday afernoon at 2 o'clock, at the Church of the Redeemer, Presbyterian.

Merwin, Mo., Nov. 16, 1899. Bro. Taylor, Dear Sir:—I want to tell you about a time we had last week. I was looking over your little paper after I went home from the store; I see you had a political meeting, and I came to the place where Cap Jennings made a Republican speech—well, Taylor, I just dropped my paper on the floor; the whole family was spell bound for a minute; we looked at each other and not a word, until my hat went up to the ceiling. E W Gray jumped to his feet and gave us a clogg dance, T H Cooper said "well he is the stuff." Mrs Davis clapped her hands and said "well, well." We called the house to order, and had an old fashion love feast.

Well, if we had some Milwaukee beer I would have been tempted to have taken a small glass. Now, Taylor, I want you to get a good, stout man with a good grip to shake Cap for me. Tell Cap for me I never had anything do me as much good since I left Pawnee county and he has my best wishes.

We are having nice weather, its so warm we are going in our shirt sleeves. We are all well; old Ktuck is safe, Aguinaldo is licked; Missouri is getting better, soon will come over; Wm McKinley is the stuff.

Yours Respect,
A. D. DAVIS.

FOOT BALL.

The great championship game of foot-ball that the foot ball world looks forward to each year is the Harvard-Yale game This game was played last Saturday; Harvard had not been beaten this year, and Yale had lost a number of games, the wise ones said, Harvard will surely win. After 70 minutes of terrific playing the score was 0 to 0 and Yale had played the Giants to a stand still. No one hurt in the game. You can't always tell who will win. That's the reason you ought to go to Tecumseh next Saturday with our boys. The last game between these teams stood 0 to 0, until the last 2 minutes of the game when Table Rock succeeded in making 2 points. The boys will leave on the 9 o'clock freight, Saturday morning, and hope to have a good big crowd go with them. Give the boys the encouragement of your presence at this game.

Table Rock 18—Lincoln B. C. 0. Saturday Nov. 18th. The game was to one sided to be very exciting, but the people got their money's worth in seeing the Table Rock team do some fine team and individual work.

Wood, Pangburn and Wright went around the ends for gains of 4 to 40 yards repeatedly, and Cotton and W Billings went through the line like veterans. Table Rock got their first touch down by hard work—Billings making the touch down and Myers kicked goal.

Lincoln kicked the ball to 25 yard line; Myers advanced it 10 yards. On the first down the ball was given to Clyde Wright, clever interference by Wood, Myers and Pangburn got him around the left end, after dodging the Lincoln Full back he ran 75 yards and made a touch down, two minutes after the ball was put in play; Myers kicked goal Lincoln kicked to 25 yard line, Myers again advanced the ball 15 yards. Table Rock lost 10 yards for offside play—after the ball had changed hands several times it was given to Wright on Table Rock's 20 yard line he got ahead of his interference, dodged one player, threw Bullard who tackled him, outran two others and made a touch down; a 90 yard run. Myers kicked goal, time was called with ball on Table Rock's 25 yard line.

In the second half Cotton made his presence felt by going through Lincoln's line repeatedly.

Lincoln punted to 40 yard line and by clever runs by Nichols, Mollick and Harrison the ball was carried to Table Rock's 2 yard line; time was called with the ball there.

For Lincoln the work of Nichols, Mollick, Harrison and Bullard was good and at times brilliant, they lacked team work though.

For Table Rock the work of Capt. Wood, and Clyde Wright was the feature, these two always have their heads at work, taking advantage of every chance. Wright uses his interference for allit is worth, and then his head and heals do the rest.

Capt. Bob Wood always does all any one could with the chance given, and generally more. It seems almost impossible to get him off his feet.

Josh played a great game at end. Myers kicked goal 3 times and was always at the front in the interference.

A nice clean game, no one hurt, and everyone satisfied, even the boys who lost. They say Table Rock is the whitest town they have struck.

Kodol Dyspepsia Cure
"Digests what you eat."

Last week I had the privilege of attending a reception given by the good people of Elk Creek to their new Methodist pastor, Rev Harmon and family. A meeting of the Sunday School officers was appointed at the church on Tuesday evening, ostensibly to plan for Christmas exercises, but meantime the people were notified quietly that the design was to give the pastor a good pounding, so at the hour of eight the church was well filled with individuals carrying mysterious packages of all shapes and sizes. A large table was placed on the rostrum close to the altar rail, the pastor and wife brought in and seated in easy chairs close by. Then the choir began to sing, Fall into Line Brother, Fall into Line, and under the direction of Brother Rogers, the people fell into line, each one depositing a pound or pounds on or under the table until one began to think the ministers might be a good place to board for a time. Two brothers each carried a large sack of oats and three had sacks of flour, while graham meal, oatmeal, potatoes and groceries of all kinds followed. Brother Rogers informed the Minister that this was simply a small token of the good will of his people, and Rev Harmon expressed the heartfelt thanks of himself and wife and invited every body to come up and shake hands and get acquainted, which they proceeded to do. The choir sang some good selections, Mrs Stanton gave a recitation and after a social hour all went home well pleased to have been there.

I found Mrs Bates somewhat improved in health but not yet able to be out. She renewed her interest in our W C T U by paying her year's dues and hopes to be able to visit us soon. I took a goodly number of orders for holiday books and each of the lady teachers requested me to send them at once, "Short Studies in Scientific Temperance" which I did. Thursday I went to Pawnee City to talk over the Sunday School work with Mrs Harrington, County Corresponding Secretary, and be present at Mrs Nesbitt's Friday where the Unions of the County were invited to quilt a quilt for the Temperance Hospital. All the unions except Mission Creek were represented, some 27 women being there before noon and more were expected afternoon,—Mrs Bull of Bookwalter, and Mrs Wolf of Summit Union (Violet) are each looking after the Scientific Temperance Instruction work in their section of the County, and each came prepared to take part in a Matron's Contest which they supposed was to be held at night at Pawnee. A telegram and resolutions of condolence were passed and sent to our dear Sister Fulton in her sad bereavement. Friday night our annual reception to the School Board and teachers of our schools was held in Mrs Cotton's parlors which were filled. A short program of music, instrumental music, by Nellie Cotton. Songs by Hazel Taylor, Rena Kerns and Mrs Lulu Conklin. Recitation by Max Marble, and impromptu talks by Prof Fair, Rev Green and others were given, after which Ice Cream, Cake, and Coffee were served, and a good social evening enjoyed. Friday the 24th the Union will meet with Mrs Marble, when we hope to have our New Year Book, a feast of good things everybody will want and can have for five cents. Come everybody. E. E. Linn.

Two years ago a Brown county farmer gave his daughter a chicken and promised to feed the increase for four years, provided she would take care of them. "I have seen thousands of persons die under all sorts of circumstances, and never yet have I seen one display the slightest fear of death." This remarkable statement was made by a physician who has practiced many years in Philadelphia, and who has seen a great deal of hospital service. 'It is a popular fallacy," he went on, "to imagine that a deathbed scene is ever terrible, other than as a parting between loved ones. The fear of the unknown is never present at the last."—Philadelphia Record.

Tecumseh's foot-ball team is composed of pretty good fellows, but they lack in that sterling characteristic denominated courage. They made a date with our boys for a game on their gridiron last Saturday, but they were afraid to keep the date and on Thursday announced that they would call the game off. You know the old adage in regard to cowards.

Today is thanksgiving and everybody is thankful for the blessings the past year has brought. Friends are entertaining friends and roast turkey and etceteras are the average dinner bills of fare. Public thanks were given in a union meeting at the Christian church, Rev Green delivering an appropriate and interesting sermon. In the afternoon the foot-ball game attracted a crowd in spite of the bad weather, and the ladies of the Presbyterian church served an excellent dinner and supper in the old hardware building.

Nebraska City, Nov. 29.—(Special to Omaha Bee.)—Senator Hayward's condition has taken a decided turn for the worse during the last twelve hours. Owing to the patient's extreme restlessness Dr Whitten was called at 3 o'clock this morning and remained at his bedside until 8 o'clock. At 11 a m he issued this bulletin: "Senator Hayward passed the most restless night of any since his illness, but slept three hours this forenoon. His temperature is 101, pulse 90, respiration 22 and intermittent."

The woman's suffrage association held a most successful two days convention at Lincoln this week; some interesting addresses were made and some excellent papers read and the ladies are much encouraged over the growth and outlook of the movement in Nebraska. In the selection of officers for ensuing year, the following were chosen: President, Mrs Mary Smith Hayward of Chadron; vice president, Mrs M J Marble of Table Rock; treasurer, Mrs Getty Whitecomb Drury, of Pender; corresponding secretary, Mrs J F Spirk, Wilbur, Neb.; recording secretary, Miss Edna Naylor, Johnson, Neb.; auditors, Mrs Young of Broken Bow and Mrs Lewis of Valentine. Table Rock society was well represented, the following ladies being present from here: Mrs A J Marbie, F C Norris, Lillie Fellers, Mrs Fulmer and Mrs A Feilers.

Table Rock 6, Humboldt 0.

On a muddy, slippery field in a drizzling rain, Table Rock and Humboldt fought for supremacy, the game was unsatisfactory to all concerned, the constant kicking and attempts to delay the game by Humboldt being the feature. For the first time in the history of foot-ball at Table Rock the spectators interfered with the game by getting on the field. The entire game was played on Humboldt's territory.

For Humboidt Griffith got away with the ball on a fumble once for 25 yards and Reid went around the end for the same. Table Rock blocked every kick Humboidt tried but one.

For Table Rock W Billings went through the line repeatedly and Wright did the same around the ends; with 3 minutes to play with the ball on Humboldt's 3 yard line Table Rock lost the ball on a fumble, and Cully in the darkness stole away for 80 yards. Table Rock took the ball on downs and time was called. Table Rock outplayed Humboldt in every way, and the mud only prevented them from making a good big score.

Even that view of the juvenile court which one may get from reading the newspapers is enough to show that the court's highest efficacy may consist in suggesting its terrors to the youthful defendants rather than in applying them. The boy of 12 charged with truancy, for example, who wept and pleaded when confronted with the court, will never be so much afraid of it again. Perhaps he will never be so much afraid of any other court. Indiscriminate leniency would, of course, in time destroy the usefulness of the institution. But there is no other court in which the chance to try again may be extended with so large a probability of good results to so great a number.

At the Sanitary Institute at Southampton Dr. Manby stated that several outbreaks of typhoid fever in Liverpool had been traced to contaminated ice cream. Since 1898 319 persons had applied to the Liverpool health authorities for permission to sell ice cream, and 56 had been told that owing to unsuitability of premises they must make other arrangements. There had been two convictions, and in one case the stipendiary magistrate remarked that the best punishment for the defendant would be to make him live on his own ice cream for a time. Dr. Manby stated that Glasgow had adopted a similar policy to Liverpool, and advised local authorities to apply for parliamentary powers on the lines of those granted by the Liverpool act of 1898.

In a paper read before the Paris Academy of Sciences entitled "Action of Some Gases on Caoutchouc," M. D'Arsonval showed that at pressures varying from one to five atmospheres caoutchouc absorbs large quantities of carbonic acid gas and at the same time increases in volume and becomes more gelatinous and less elastic. On exposure to air the gas is gradually lost and the caoutchouc resumes its original properties. Hence vessels of caoutchouc readily allow carbonic acid gas to pass through their walls. The action is much slower in the case of oxygen and is slight with nitrogen. From these experiments M. D'Arsonval suggests that bicyclists should inflate their tires with nitrogen. This, however, would not seem to be necessary, according to Invention, for after the tires have been repeatedly deflated through loss of oxygen and then pumped up with ordinary air the proportion of oxygen inside the tire becomes small and practically pure nitrogen remains.

That Mysterious Major...

ETHEL A. SOUTHAM

"Dropped it! You do not mean to say that the letter is lost?" exclaimed Falkland, starting forward with a look of terrible anxiety on his face. "Really, Miss Luttrell, how very——" But, discovering Miss Luttrell's gaze concentrated upon him in absolute amazement, he seemed suddenly to bethink himself; for, leaning back against the cushions, he folded his arms with an air of calm complacence and laughed indolently. "It is so annoying, I always think, to lose one's correspondence; one never cares to have one's private affairs published from the housetops. But, great heavens, why are we stopping here?" Falkland sprang up from his seat and let down the window with a bang as the train began to slacken speed.

"Why, what do you mean? We stop at Redhill, of course; this is where Parker will be waiting with the luggage;" and Evelyn commenced rubbing vigorously at the window nearest her, at the same time peering out anxiously through the dimmed glass in the hope of catching a glance of the missing maid.

But Falkland, who had his head half way out of the window as the train came to a standstill by the side of the lamp-lit station, all at once drew back into the carriage and brought up the window again with a resounding bang.

"Redhill, Miss Luttrell? Oh, did I not explain?" As he turned his face toward her Evelyn noticed that he was deadly pale. "This train was not down on the time table to stop here. Lynwood is the first stopping place; so that it will be the next station where Parker is to be found."

"Are you sure?" Evelyn bent forward anxiously. "Had you not better ask somebody to make certain? Yes, here comes a guard; ask him."

She had risen to her feet and was about to lay her hand upon the window, but Falkland was before her. He had seized the strap and seemed to be making a vain attempt to let the window down, when suddenly a key was inserted in the lock, the door was hastily thrown back, and the light of a lantern was directed into the carriage.

There was a momentary pause as both Falkland and Evelyn, completely dazzled by the light, stared vacantly at the dark figure before them, and then—

"Great heavens! Miss Luttrell, is that you? I thought I must have been mistaken."

It was Major Brown himself who stood there indistinctly defined in the darkness; and at the sound of his voice Evelyn's heart gave a great bound, whilst every particle of color retreated from her face. Only now did she realize that after that evening she would most probably never see him again—never again! Full of this new thought, she immediately thrust out her hand, forgetting as she did so all terrible suspicions of the past four-and-twenty hours.

"Yes, I am here," she answered; "and, as there can be only a second to wait, I suppose it is—good-by? I am going now," she added falteringly, "to join my aunt, who has hurried off at a moment's notice to one of her boys, who has met with an accident at school."

"I do not understand. An accident? And Lady Howard has left Saltcliffe?"

"Certainly! Lady Howard left by the 8:30 express," supplemented Falkland in a tone of some impatience. "Miss Luttrell had a letter to that effect; but of course, it is quite likely that you have heard nothing. The whole affair has occurred in the space of about an hour."

"Oh, no, of course not—that is quite likely," was the major's reply in a voice which made Evelyn survey him in silent wonder, whilst Falkland's face became simply livid. "Only, as it happens, it was fully ten minutes to nine when I took my departure from the hotel; and I can assure you that barely two seconds before I was in your aunt's room, talking to Lady Howard herself!"

"At ten minutes to nine you were talking to Aunt Lydia at the 'Royal George!' What on earth do you mean?"

"I mean what I say, Miss Luttrell; and, if it is true that you are now off to join her in London—because this is the express, which does not stop before you reach town—I am afraid you are the victim of another forgery and some vile scheme concocted simply with an idea of inveigling you away." And, having so delivered himself, the major folded his arms and, with an air of studied calmness, stood looking from one to the other of the two horrified countenances.

CHAPTER XIV.

There was an awful silence, and then Evelyn passed her hand with a gesture of dazed bewilderment across her eyes and slowly recovered herself.

"A forgery—that letter!" she gasped. "Oh, surely, you are mistaken! It—it cannot be!"

Yet, even as she spoke, even as her eyes rested for one brief moment upon the major's face, a terrible fear took posession of her, and, starting to her feet, she made one quick movement toward the door. Instantly, however, a hand was laid upon her arm.

"Miss Luttrell, what are you doing? Are you mad? Have your senses forsaken you?" expostulated Falkland, with a sudden vehemence, "that you can believe such an absurd, really outrageous fabrication?"

"You mean to say——"

"That it is a lie—a downright lie," he exclaimed, all his pent-up fury bursting into a flame—"as I myself happened to see Lady Howard passing on her way to the station now more than an hour ago!"

"You saw her driving past?" Evelyn gave one wild despairing glance around.

"And at ten minutes to nine I left her sitting in her own room at the 'Royal George,' Miss Luttrell," declared the major in the same peculiarly calm tone. "Which do you believe?"

"Which? Great heavens, do you suppose there is any question?" interrupted Falkland, with a harsh laugh.

"MOST LIKELY YOU WILL RECOGNIZE IT."

The major smiled.

"Well, perhaps not, when one takes into consideration that on the one hand the statement comes from a man who would stoop to anything in order to secure his own ends—an individual, in fact, who habitually carries about with him a supply of a most dangerous drug, which he administers, as occasion requires, to any passing acquaintance. That reminds me, Mr. Falkland. For the future, a third of that amount which you gave to me last night will be quite enough; and even then you will have plenty of time to make a thorough search and disappear, bag and baggage, before your unfortunate victim, whoever he may be, has enjoyed more than his allotted share of dreams; only be quite sure he does drink it—that is all. I had the sense not to do so."

"I beg your pardon, Major Brown; but, if you wish to insinuate——"

"Thank you, I wish to insinuate nothing. I am merely anxious for you to know that you have not been quite as lucky as usual in the choice of your subjects." Here the major raised his foot to the carriage step and looked steadily at Falkland. "You may never have seen me before—I do not suppose so, or you would hardly have behaved as you have—but I once had the pleasure of seeing you. Possibly," he continued, "you may recollect the time of which I am thinking. It was at Monte Carlo, just before the notorious forgery affair was made public. But perhaps my name is not altogether unfamiliar to you. Most likely"—and he pulled out a case of cards and handed one across to him—"you will recognize it."

A deathly paleness came over Falkland's face.

"Sir Adrian Beauchamp indeed!" he muttered, flinging the piece of pasteboard to the ground in a sudden tumult of wrath. "Who do you suppose would be fool enough to be taken in by such a piece of trickery as that?"

"Yet the mere question of identification becomes the simplest matter in the world," was the major's reply, as he gave one swift, furtive glance in Evelyn's direction, a smile involuntarily crossing his face. "The difficulty has been to remain incognito all this time. As for you, I suppose you would prefer to sail along under false colors as long as possible. As Gilbert Falkland you have more scope altogether—a better chance, in fact, of claiming an acquaintance with the absent relatives of any of your fellow travelers—than as plain, unvarnished Samuel Cripps, the forger."

"You blackguard—you—"

"Pray do not forget that Miss Luttrell is present," interrupted the major in low, concentrated tones. "But it is useless to attempt to argue the point. Your guilt is now thoroughly established. That check, which fortunately fell into my hands last night, also a few lines of your writing and the impression of the forged signature upon a piece of blotting paper, are all the proofs that were needed to join the links in one long chain of evidence; and, since the whole affair rests with the authorities at Scotland Yard, you will very speedily have an opportunity of explaining anything that you wish to be made known to one of their representatives."

Here a warning shriek from the engine made him suddenly stop short and, with an anxious glance at the advancing porter, turned hurriedly to Evelyn.

"Miss Luttrell, what can I say for myself? You have heard both Falkland's statement and my own. Which do you believe? I am afraid that my story sounds almost as suspicious as his. In fact, you know less of me. But, on my honor, I assure you that Lady Howard is now at the hotel! If you can trust me"—with a supplicating look that was far more potent than words—"come! I will take you straight back to her at once."

Already the train was beginning to move. The porter had actually reached the carriage; his hand was on the door. For one instant Evelyn hesitated, whilst her gaze wandered from the cold, cynical countenance of Gilbert Falkland to the dark, handsome one of Major Brown, and then, with a little shiver, she thrust out her hand to the one held out to her, and answered in a low, hurried tone—

"I will come!"

And the next moment she was standing on the platform watching the crimson lamp of the departing train rapidly disappearing in the gathering mists of the summer evening, alone with the man whom for the past four-and-twenty hours she and her aunt, and even Falkland himself, had been regarding in the light of the most notorious criminal.

A few minutes' conversation with one of the porters elicited the fact that there was no train back to Saltcliffe that night. There was, however, a gig available which would convey them the eight miles to their destination.

(To be continued.)

OYSTER EATING.

The Capacity of a New Orleans Citizen.

A young man sitting on a stool in an oyster bar the other night had just finished his fourth dozen. He drew a satisfied sigh and looked at the barricade of empty shells with a mixture of pride and apprehension. "Gee whiz!" he exclaimed, "that must be pretty near a record, ain't it?" The opener smiled scornfully and went on washing his knife. Such a foolish assertion did not call for a reply. "Well" said the young man, a trifle chop-fallen, "it's certainly a right fair snack. What's the most you ever knew anybody to eat?" "Straight away, or heats?" inquired the opener, with an air of one who weighs his words. "Oh right at one time; hand running, y' know." "Well, the most I ever opened for anybody myself was fifteen dozen an a half, for two—when I was working on Royal street. One gentleman eat eight dozen and a half and the other gentleman eat seven dozen." "Right and a half" said the young man enviously. "Holy snakes! That's 102 oysters!" "They was large oysters, too," continued the opener, "and that makes all the difference in the world. A dozen such oysters is equal to three dozen small culls, and you want to bear that in mind when you hear fellows blowing about their records. Five dozen, though, is nothing out of the way in the winter time. I open that many for single customers every night." "What's supposed to be the record among the oyster openers in town?" "Well, they say a man ate seventeen dozen, medium size, at a place here last season. He came from New Iberia and he wasn't a big man to look at, either, but he sure had a capacity. The shells filled a barrel." "Yes, that's straight," spoke up a customer from the other end of the bar. "I was there when he did it, but pshaw! that wasn't anything. I claim the championship myself. I won it about six years ago, eating a barrel of oysters in a wholesale house here, opening them myself as I went along. I admit they were not very big, but the score was 306 and up to date I haven't heard of anybody who has beaten it." The speaker was a well-known resident of New Orleans, and several bystanders confirmed his statement. The young man with the four dozen record changed the subject.—New Orleans Democrat.

His Chief Concern.

A party of excursionists visiting a large city on one of the Great Lakes during the summer went out one fine morning for a sail. There were several enthusiastic amateur photographers on board, and in their zeal for taking "snap-shots" of the shore scenery as they sailed along they did not notice that the wind was freshening and the lake becoming rough. At last, however, an unusually high wave rocked the boat, and one of the young men standing near the gunwale lost his balance and pitched headlong into the water. He was a good swimmer, but it was several minutes before the boat could be rounded to, and when he was finally reached with the aid of a line and dragged on board he was almost exhausted. "That was a narrow escape, Charley," said one of his friends, after the young man had partially recovered his breath, and was able to speak. "Yes!" he gasped. "Another lurch like that and my camera would have gone overboard!"

Height of Vulgarity.

Among the French, formerly, to make even the most casual reference to a handkerchief was considered the height of vulgarity.

There is nothing good in a man but his young feelings and his old thoughts.

VICTORY WAS DEAR

British Troops Claiming Big Triumph at Belmont.

DEFEAT A STRONG BOER FORCE

Success Comes Only at a Cost of Many Men—Boer Forces Well Entrenched—British Forced to Carry Three Ridges in Succession.

A London, Nov. 24, special says: Before anxiety as to the situation in Natal has been relieved there comes news of a great battle at Belmont. Only the official account is yet to hand, but so far as can be gathered the fighting appears to have been almost a repetition of the battle of Elandslaagte. A dispatch of the previous day estimated that the Boers in that vicinity numbered 2,000 and that they had five guns, and judging from the absence of any statement to the contrary in the official report it is believed that the British were slightly superior in number to the enemy.

The Boers had chosen a position with their customary skill and were strongly entrenched. The British were obliged to carry three ridges in succession. Apparently the guards bore the brunt in carrying the last ridge by a bayonet charge, after its defenders had been shaken with shrapnel.

Nothing is said as to whether the positions so gained were held, and the destruction of the ammunition seems to indicate that the contrary was the case.

While General Methuen can be congratulated upon a brilliant victory, it is again at the cost of a heavy loss of officers and men.

The secretary of war received the following from General Methuen, dated Belmont, November 23:

"Attacked the enemy at daybreak this morning. He was in a strong position. Three bridges were carried in succession, the last attack being prepared by shrapnel. Infantry behaved splendidly and received support from the naval brigade and artillery. The enemy fought with courage and skill. Had I attacked later I should have had far heavier loss.

"Our victory was complete. Have taken forty prisoners. Am burying a good number of the Boers, but the greater part of the enemy's killed and wounded were removed by their comrades. Have captured a large number of horses and cows and destroyed a large quantity of ammunition."

NEW SCALE TAKES EFFECT

Ten Hours' Pay for Nine Hours' Work Among Printers.

The new scale for the typothetae of ten hours' pay for nine hours' work went into effect at Indianapolis, Wednesday. President Donnelly of the I. T. U. said that the scale has been generally accepted. No trouble occurred in the larger cities. The agreement was violated at Pittsburg and trouble occurred at Cincinnati, Dayton, Frankfort, Ind., and Detroit. A strike occurred at Rockford, Ill., and trouble is expected at Bay View, Mich. Trouble is expected at the Pope Manufacturing company at Hartford, Conn. President Donnelly sent $10,000 to aid the striking job printers at Kansas City. Mr. Donnelly says the I. T. U. is prepared to make a vigorous fight to support the new scale.

France Seeking Control.

Lieut. Gontrad. Faramound de Lafajole, naval attache of the French embassy, Washington, D. C., and M. Louis Revier, naval engineer, representing the French government, have been in New York recently inspecting the Holland boat and it is announced that negotiations have been entered into between the representatives of the French government and the company controlling the submarine torpedo boat for the construction of several vessels of the Holland type, and also for the exclusive use of the patents for the submarine boat for the French government.

Engineer Sticks to His Post.

The second section of Baltimore & Ohio passenger, No. 9, westbound, known as the oyster train, crashed into the first section in South Cumberland, Md., and was badly wrecked. Engineer L. R. Kindle of Baltimore stuck to his post on the second section, checked its speed and prevented the telescoping of the passenger section. He was seriously injured and may die. His fireman, Lewis Massey of Baltimore was badly scalded and died. No one was dangerously hurt.

Will Not Attend Funeral.

As dean of the diplomatic corps Lord Pauncefote has received a number of inquiries as to whether the corps would attend the funeral of Vice President Hobart at Paterson. After conferring with the secretary of state it was decided that this attendance was inexpedient, and instead most of the ambassadors and ministers have sent sympathetic messages to the family of the deceased.

Gold Medal For Blue.

The South Carolina society for patriotic award has received a magnificent gold medal, given by the women of the state, which will be presented to Lieut. Victor Blue at an early date. The medal is two and a quarter inches in diameter and a quarter of an inch in thickness.

Major William J. Volkmar, assistant adjutant general, has applied for retirement, thereby creating one of the most desirable vacancies that has occurred in the staff of the army for a long time.

General Manager F. C. Hills of the Sioux City, O'Neill & Western railroad died at Sioux City of arsenic poisoning, he having eaten something at breakfast in which the drug had been mixed for the purpose of killing rats, and which was used by mistake. Mr. Hills was an old railroad man, and had been connected with western roads since the sixties. He was an old soldier and a thirty-third degree Mason.

At the preliminary trial of the British turbine torpedo boat Viper, the boat attained a speed of thirty-two knots an hour.

SAMOAN TREATIES DRAWN

The Partition of the Islands Formally Agreed To.

Two treaties for the final partition of the Samoan islands have been drawn up and one of them already has been signed. The main treaty is between the United States, Great Britain and Germany, by which the territorial arrangement of the islands is fixed. It is quite brief, the essential feature being that Great Britain and Germany renounce all claims in the island of Tutulia and the outlying islands which go to the United States, and this government's and Great Britain's interests in Opolu and Savaii, which go to Germany. The present expectation is that this treaty will be signed in Washington.

The second treaty is between Great Britain and Germany covering the rights and interests in the Tonga and Solomon islands and other settlements brought about by the Samoan partition. The United States does not sign this treaty, and is only indirectly concerned. It is understood that this collateral treaty has already been examined in Berlin.

FIND ARSENIC IN STOMACH

Sudden Death of a Woman Leads to an Investigation.

On April 15 last Mrs. Jane Fowler, while on a visit to her son-in-law, who resided at Vermont, Ill., took ill suddenly and died in great agony. She was buried at Rushville, where her home was. Five days ago her body was exhumed and the body sent to Prof. James Gardner of Peoria for analysis, who found it contained arsenic in large quantities, and the remains of some peaches that Mrs. Fowler had eaten were also found saturated with the poison. Her son-in-law, whose wife is dead, had a law suit with Mrs. Fowler over the possession of his child, which has inherited considerable property, and Mrs. Fowler was given the custody of the child, with the understanding that the little girl should be taken to visit her father occasionally. It was during one of these visits that the death happened.

IMPALED ON IRON PICKETS

Fatal Accident to a Man Attempting to Catch a Train.

Andrew Lyren, sixty years old, in his haste to catch a train on the south side elevated railway at Chicago was hurled over the railing around the platform and was impaled upon an iron picket fence which is built along the edge of the track. He landed face downward on the iron pickets, the points of which penetrated his breast. To the horror of the passengers he remained thus transfixed and suspended twenty feet above the ground until Conductor Watrous had stopped the train and with several other spectators had hurried to his assistance and removed him to the ground. Three pickets penetrated his chest and inflicted injuries which will cause his death.

SALE OF A FAMOUS FARM

Warwick Farm in Chester County, Pa., Disposed of.

The famous Warwick farm of 515 acres, in Warwick township, Chester county, Pa., has been sold for $12,000. On this property the old Warwick furnace, probably the first to make iron in the United States, was put into blast about the year 1730, and here many of the cannon used by the patriot army in the revolution were cast.

In the meadows pieces of ordnance lie buried, having been thus secreted to prevent them falling into the hands of the British after the battle of Brandywine, in 1777, when General Washington and his army were retreating northward through Chester county, leaving the furnace exposed to the mercy of the enemy.

Strike Is Ended.

The strike of the Union Pacific machinists at Cheyenne has been ended and the men will return to work. They went out on November 6, on which date they made a demand for an increase of wages from 22½ cents to 35 cents per hour. The time schedule will be nine hours per day instead of eight hours as heretofore. The striking boilermakers, thirty in number, have not yet decided to return to work, but it is believed they will follow the action of the machinists.

Women Indulge In a Riot.

Women relatives of the Nanticoke strikers attempted to prevent the pump runners from going to work at the mines and a small riot resulted. Michael Corrigan, a special policeman, discharged a revolver and wounded a boy in the arm. Policeman A. A. Ente and Superintendent John Tonkin were stoned and beaten with clubs. Foreman Idris Tonkin was blinded with pepper and several of the women were injured.

Only a Border Row.

At the war department it is stated that the information received from the department of Texas is to the effect that the trouble at Ft. Ringgold is nothing more than a border row, and the belief is expressed that it has been exaggerated as to its proportions.

Lieut. Harry Caldwell, Admiral Dewey's flag secretary and aide, was banqueted at Quincy and was presented with a magnificent loving cup of solid silver and gold, standing eighteen inches high. Only a few years ago Caldwell was a carrier on the Quincy Herald.

CLOSE FIGURING.

A Day's Marketing Bought for Only Ten Cents.

Ten cents is a small fund with which to do a day's marketing for a family of three, but there are families on the east side who make a dime purchase food enough for twenty-four hours. Friday is market day on the east side, and if you want to see marketing that is marketing, with keen competition and close dealing, with the ceal as a measure of value, go on that day into the Essex and Hester streets district—the most populous in the world—where small shops abound and push-cart peddlers congregate, and you will see a sight to be witnessed at no other place on earth. I went with a Rivington street housekeeper into an Essex street butcher shop and saw her spend at least five minutes in purchasing half a pound of corned beef, for which she paid 4 cents. It was good, full weight, and she insisted that a bit of meat no larger than the nickel she handed the butcher should be put on the scale after it was down. She was marketing for Sunday for her family of three persons. Corned beef hash was evidently in her mind, for she went to a cart in the street and bought a pound of potatoes, for which she paid one cent, and had a most desperate argument as to the size of the last one, put on the scale for good weight. She had her way, and the dealer said something about "a woman." She had spent half of her ten cents, and next purchased from a sidewalk stand one pound of [illegible] cut from a loaf that weighed about ten pounds, and paid two cents for it. Then she went to another cart and bought half a pound of white beans for a cent, and three-quarters of a pound of cornmeal for another cent. She had one cent left, and that went for four somewhat ancient looking tomatoes. Her dime was gone, and she disappeared in the throng with her purchases and threaded her way to a rear tenement in Rivington street.—New York Herald.

PRESIDENT BAUTISTA COMES INTO CAMP

President of Filipino Congress Surrenders—Others Will Do Likewise—Are Ready to Lay Down their Arms When the Truth Is Known.

Bautista, president of the Filipino congress, presented himself to General McArthur at Tarlac Friday and renounced all further connection with the insurrection.

He was one of the influential Filipinos who hesitated at the beginning of the war as to which side on which to cast his lot. He was offered a judgeship of the supreme court, but declined.

He now announces that he desires to accept the position and says the Filipino congress and cabinet are scattered, never to reassemble.

Some of the members, he added, have returned to their homes, while others are flying for safety. Many of the congressmen have resigned, and he believes the Filipino soldiers will lay down their arms everywhere as soon as they learn the truth.

General Young is still in the mountains on the trail of Aguinaldo.

Later reports do not show any improvement in Senator Hayward's condition. He has been restless during the day, with pulse and temperature above normal. He was sleeping at the latest report.

HE WILL TELL OF CUBA

This is the Purpose of General Wood's Trip to the United States.

The war department has advised that the transport McPherson has sailed from Santiago with General Leonard Wood aboard. The officials of the war department from the secretary down refuse to make any statement as to the meaning of the visit of General Wood to Washington at this time. It is beyond question, however, that it is the purpose of the president to advise with the general upon Cuban affairs in order to strengthen his hands in dealing with that subject before congress.

Robert Alexander Simpson, better known as Prof. Ray Simpson, was shot and mortally wounded in his dramatic agency and school at St. Louis by James T. Roberts, a lawyer. Robert's wife, from whom he had lived apart for the past year, was taking lessons in stage-craft from Simpson. Roberts tried in vain to pursuade her to give up her lessons and called on Simpson and forbade the latter from giving his wife any more lessons. Hot words ensued and the shooting followed.

Hero of Maine a Suicide.

William Anthony, better known as "Brave Billy" Anthony, died at the Presbyterian hospital at New York, Friday, half an hour after he had swallowed a quantity of cocaine at Central park. ONCE GRACED THE STAGE

Romance In the Life of Senator John M. Thurston's Bride.

The publication in the New York Journal of a story from Boston regarding the new bride of Senator Thurston has caused a mild sensation in Washington. It seems from the story that Miss Lola Purman is the daughter of a southern family that lived for a few years in Boston. Miss Purman was very pretty, had a gift of elocution and took part in amateur theatricals. She became a pupil of the Boston school of oratory and just before her graduation married Professor Tripp, then instructor in the school. After the marriage the two travelled through the east and gave readings together, being general favorites. Later Mrs. Tripp was seized with a fever to go on the stage and went abroad with the Daly company. It is asserted that in this movement there was a disagreement and after Mrs. Tripp had spent one season abroad as a professional actress she returned to Boston and a legal separation followed. Mrs. Tripp retained her maiden name of Lola Purman. Miss Purman has many warm friends in Boston, where she was admired for her beauty and accomplishments.

DEDICATE THE MONUMENTS

Governor Tanner and Other Illinois People Take Part in the Ceremony.

The exercises of dedicating the 107 monuments and markers of the state of Illinois on the battle fields surrounding Chattanooga, Tenn., were held Thursday at Orchard Knob, the site of one of the principal memorial shafts and famous during the civil war as the headquarters of General Grant. It is estimated that more than 1,000 residents of Illinois and at least 3,000 Chattanooga people attended the exercises. Among the distinguished visitors were Senator Cullom, Governor Tanner and staff of Illinois, Commissioner of Pensions H. Clay Evans, Gen. H. V. Boynton, representing the secretary of war, and a large delegation from the confederate camp of this city. Major Charles A. Connelly delivered the speech presenting the monuments to the governor of Illinois on behalf of the Illinois commissioners.

Governor Tanner of Illinois received the monuments, delivering an eloquent speech of acceptance, and in turn presented them to the government.

ALASKA ASKS STATEHOOD

Governor Brady Recommends It in His Report.

Governor Brady of Alaska in his annual report pleads for statehood, government establishment and operation of cable and telegraphic lines and persistent branding of fur seals an cessation of killing them for at least ten years. An appropriation of $110,000 is asked for a penitentiary and suitable public buildings at Sitka. The governor says that to preserve the fur seals the United States should, as a property right in the seals, brand the letters "U. S." four inches long on the backs of every female seal, thus spoiling them for furriers' use.

The gold output for the season follows: Eagle City and Forty Mile Creek district, $750,000; Birch creek and its tributaries, south of Ukon, 1450,000; Manook, Hoosier, and other creeks about Rampart City, $250,000; Cape Nome district, $1,500,000.

BODY OF MAJOR HOWARD

It Arrives at San Francisco On Board the Belgian King.

On board the transport Belgian King, just arrived at San Francisco from the Philippines, is the body of Major Guy Howard of Omaha, who was connected with the quartermaster's department of the army and was killed on October 21. He was passing up the Rio Grande river near Arayat in a small launch, when he was shot by a native concealed along the banks of the stream. He was a son of Major General O. O. Howard, retired. The body was placed on the transport after funeral services had been held at Manila on the morning of October 25. It will be sent to Omaha for interment.

A NEW COLLEGE FOR GIRLS

William L. Elkins Will Beneficiently Endow It.

A college for girls that will rival Girard college in beneficence and scope is to be established at Philadelphia by William L. Elkins, the traction magnate of that city. The idea of a girl's college is said to be an old one with Mr. Elkins and his friends assert that he has been considering the main feature of such a project for several years. It is pointed out that girl orphans have no such advantages as are enjoyed by boys under the Girard will and it is the chance to supply this badly needed institution that Mr. Elkins has embraced.

WHAT A LOAF OF BREAD COSTS

Result of a Series of Investigations by Professor Snyder.

An interesting contribution to a series of publications being issued by the department of agriculture embracing investigations into the food and nutrition of man has been made by Prof. Henry Snyder of the Minnesota Agricultural college. The paper contributed by Prof. Snyder relates the experiments made at the Minnesota university in bread making. The average "pound loaf" of fresh bread as sold by bakers, says the professor, weighed on an average about one pound one ounce. A pound loaf of bread can be made from about three-quarters of a pound of flour, about 25 per cent of water being added to the flour during the process of bread making. With some flour 5 to 10 per cent more water can be absorbed, making a greater weight of bread from a given weight of flour. This additional weight is water and not nutrients. At 2 cents a pound for flour, it is estimated by Prof. Snyder that a pound loaf can be made, not counting fuel and labor, for about 2 cents, one-half cent being allowed for shortening and yeast. The loss of dry matter in bread making is usually considered as amounting to about 2 per cent of the flour used. In exceptional cases, as in prolonged fermentation, under favorable conditions the loss may amount to 8 per cent or more.

Ekaterinsk's Importance.

Through the opening recently by Grand Duke Vladimir of the new naval stronghold and seaport of Ekaterinsk, Russia may be said to enter upon a new era of considerable importance, not only to Great Britain, but also to the United States. For in Ekaterinsk she obtains for the first time a seaport on the Atlantic open all the year round, whence her northern fleet can sally forth at will to the Atlantic ocean without any danger of its being shut up in the Baltic sea. Until now the northern half of Russia's navy has been practically useless during the whole of each winter—that is to say, for nearly six months of the year—owing to the ice in the Baltic, while in the event of war it would be the easiest thing in the world for Sweden and Germany combined, or even one of these two powers separately, to bar the entrance of the Baltic and thus prevent the egress of the Russian fleet. The entrance to the Baltic is so narrow and so difficult that it may be said to be commanded by the guns of the Swedish forts, while it would require but a small British naval force to blockade the outlet, it being assumed, of course, that Germany would close the Kiel canal to Russia.—New York Tribune.

Women as Students.

It is said that women are much more interested and harder working students than men, and that brings up the question about why the women in co-educational colleges walk off with the honors as often as they do, to the dismay of the men. In a recent peace argument on the subject one of the aggrieved men said that it was because the women were under no obligation to keep up the standing of a college in sports, while the men couldn't settle down to mere grinding, they are too busy. The discussion was about one of the men's colleges, whose students object to the presence of young women. It seems very unreasonable, indeed, for them to feel that way; but when they turn the tables and ask how the students in a woman's college would feel to have three or four young men in each class it's different again—though the average young student might have her own opinion on the subject.—New York Sun.

German Girl Graduates.

In Germany the number of girl graduates is increasing in a remarkable fashion. Three years ago the ten great schools had on their books 177 female students. At the end of 1897 the total had risen to 347, every university except Munster contributing to the roll of female graduates. At the beginning of this year the total gain had again increased to 400. Philology and physiology are the favorite subjects of the fair students.

The Baltimore and Ohio lines west of the Ohio River present a very busy appearance these days, as there is scarcely a ten mile stretch without a bridge or a construction gang at work. There are still a few of the 53 bridges purchased last January to be erected, and almost all of the 20,000 tons of 85 pound rails have been laid. At several points sidings of 100 car capacity are being constructed, and between Newark and Chicago Junction thousands of men are working on extensive grade reductions. Between Chicago Junction and Chicago nearly a score of passing sidings are being constructed with a view of a double track some time in the future. They are to be long enough in most cases to hold three 50 car trains.

[LETTER TO MRS. PINKHAM NO. 94,398]

"I am so grateful to you for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me that I feel as though I must tell about it. A year ago I was taken very sick. Doctors could do me no good only to deaden the pain which I had almost constantly. I got some of your Compound and took one bottle and received benefit from it at once. I have taken it ever since and now have no backache, no pain in my side and my stomach and bowels are perfectly well. I can honestly say there is nothing like it. If I could only tell every woman how much good your medicine has done me, they would surely try it."—MARTHA M. KING, NORTH ATTLEBORO, MASS.

Women Would Surely Try Mrs. Pinkham's Medicine if They Only Knew, Says Mrs. King.

The way women trifle with health shows a degree of indifference that is past understanding. Happiness and usefulness depend on physical health; so does a good disposition. Disease makes women nervous, irritable and snappish. The very effort of ailing women to be good-natured makes them nervous. Write to Mrs. Pinkham, she will help you to health and happiness. It costs nothing to get Mrs. Pinkham's advice. Her address is Lynn, Mass.

A Boat 2,000 Years Old.

In the course of excavations at Bruges in connection with the west basin of the port, a boat dating before the Christian era has been discovered, says a Brussels correspondent of the London Daily Mail. The boat, which is of oak, is about 30 feet long and 7 feet broad, and its mast, which is broken in four pieces, was apparently about 24 feet high. It was unearthed at a depth of twenty feet and must have been stranded when the sea covered part of Bruges, a period anterior to the Christian era.

Only One Girl for Him.

It was rumored in the city of Providence a while ago that the pastor of the Center church was about to marry a certain Miss S., a beautiful society young woman, but belonging to the Episcopal church. The good people of the pastor's church talked it over and came to the conclusion that he might choose more wisely. Finally it was left to the elders to wait upon and expostulate with him. They visited him and expressed to him the feelings of the church. The pastor listened patiently till they were through, and then laconically remarked: "Gentlemen, there is more than one Congregational church in the world; there is but one Miss S."

The Table Rock Argus.

P. H. TAYLOR, Publisher.

Four Americans are said to be serving the Filipinos; three are from a California regiment and the other man's regiment is not known.

The official canvass of the votes cast at the late election reveals the fact that in nearly every county in the state, the head of the ticket was scratched, some thousands of voters refusing to express a choice between Holcomb and Reese.

Admiral Dewey has announced positively that he was not a candidate for the presidency and said he wanted to see McKinley re-elected. He also said he hoped Aguinaldo would escape from the country and not be captured, as that would solve the problem of what to do with him.

So far Bryan has given no voice to the unseemly scramble made by certain pop leaders in this state, to fill Senator Hayward's place, while that gentleman still lives. Hitchcock, Poynter and other fellows, of like ilk, have been planning and scheming for the place ever since the Senator's illness.

The Thanksgiving number of the Omaha Illustrated Bee, which appeared last Sunday, was a beauty, and from title page to outside back was filled with interesting matter, elaborately illustrated. The Bee is showing commendable enterprise and easily maintains its position as the leading newspaper of the Transmissisippi valley and its special Thanksgiving number is one of the practical proofs of this statement.

We take it for granted that John L Webster is away up in G, now that the World-Herald has nominated him for Vice President on the republican ticket. John is naturally gifted with a goodly amount of admiration for his own individuality and now that a newspaper has been found to give expression to sentiments so nearly in accord with his own ideas of himself, it would require a building about steen times the size of the Kansas City auditoium for John to shine forth in all his glittering beauty and persuasive loveliness.

The Roberts question was given new interest in and around Table Rock, by the advent of two Mormon elders in our midst. Our reporter has been unable to keep close tab on them and therefore is unable to say how many converts they have made. They are smooth gentlemen, and apparently well fitted for the work they have in hand. They asked the pastors of the different churches in town for the use of their churches in which to hold a series of meetings and were in each case most emphatically refused, and they rather incline to the belief that Table Rock is a hard town and doomed to the fate of the ungodly.

The following precinct officers were elected in Clear Creek, Sheridan and Table Rock:

Clear Creek—Assessor, C. G. Gottula; justices of the peace, W. F. Huff, M. H. Lum; constables, E J. Strahl, J. P. Uri; overseers, dist. No. 1, Jos. Herman; No. 2, Lewis Waterman; No. 3, M. Conradt; No. 4, Ira Thomas.

Sheridan—Assessor, Arthur Jake; justices of the peace, P. Asher, Jacob Rist; constables, L A. Fisher, L. W. Leonard; overseers, dist No. 1, James Fritz; No. 2, Jas. Blache; No. 3, S. Anderson; No. 4, H. Hunzeker.

Table Rock—Assessor, H. Shaw; justices of the peace, M. H. Marble, J. B Pepoon; constables, F. W. Baitey, W. G. Ward; overseers, dist. No. 1, Jos. Fritz; No. 2, G. J. Morton; No. 3, Geo. Purcell; No. 4, John Lehman.

Mrs Annie E Gunning. Tyre, Mich., says, "I suffered along time from dyspepsia; lost flesh and became very weak. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure completely cured me." It digests what you eat and cures all forms of stomach trouble. It never fails to give immediate relief in the worst cases.

Rebellion Crushed.

Manila, Nov. 25.—The news which the steamship Brutus brings from Dagupan dispels all doubts that the so-called Filipino Republic is crumbling like a house of cards. Aguinaldo is deserted or being abandoned by the politicians and the army, and the rebel leader who a fortnight ago was intrenched at Tarlac, and exercised a de facto government over nine-tenths of the population of Luzon, is a fugitive in the mountains, with small hope of re-establishing the machine.

The army is scattered in the hills on both sides of the railroad and widely separated detachments are within the cordon which Gens. Lawton and Wheaton have cemented.

The ruling spirit of the cabinet is a prisoner in Manila—a white elephant on the hands of the authorities—and the small fry are tumbling over one another to get to Manila.

Three provincial Governors have arrived in Manila to request Gen. Otis to install them in their offices under the new regime. Dr Luna, a brother of Gen. Luna and a prominent insurrectionist, has arrived here, and his friends and many others are applying to Gen. Otis for permission to enjoy the luxuries of Manila after months of separation from civilization.

There were no demonstrations over the victory here. The flags are flying at half mast out of respect for Vice President Hobart. The natives appear to be unmoved and business is unruffled.

"One Minute Cough Cure is the best remedy I ever used for coughs and colds. It is unequalled for whooping cough. Children all like it," writes H N Williams, Gentryville, Ind. Never fails. It is the only harmless remedy that gives immediate results. Cures coughs, colds, hoarseness, croup, pneumonia, bronchitis and all throat and lung troubles. Its early use prevents consumption.

THANKSGIVING.

Thankful for what? For the blue sky above us,
And the brown earth below, with its harvest of corn;
Thankful to God for the dear ones that love us,
Grateful to Him for this Thanksgiving morn.

Thankful are we for the prospect before us,
Honor and victory, freedom so dear,
For the bright Stars and Stripes that still proudly wave o'er us,
For peace and its blessings now drawing so near.

Grateful to Him for freedom extended,
Reaching as far as the isles of the sea;
That the reign of the tyrant oppressor is ended,
And that the oppressed and the captive are free.

Let us, then, thank Him for blessings abounding,
Joyous and happy, light-hearted and free;
Until our glad voices in praises resounding,
Rise like the sound of the waves of the sea.
—F. E. Griffing, Nov. 19, 1898.

W. C. T. U.

The union met Nov 24th at Mrs Marble's. Seven members and two visitors present, President Mrs Lydia Andrew in the chair. As planned before hand each one present was called on for some Scripture reference bearing on our work and a goodly number of references were given and discussed. Our president suggested that when our next Quarterly Temperance Lesson was pending in the Sunday School that we have an evening meeting to which all the Sunday School Teachers be invited, which met the hearty approval of all present. Seeing notice in the Union Worker that the minutes would be in the hands of the Union's soon. Mrs Linn has engaged 20 for our Table Rock Union, as by taking that number we could get them for 5 cents apiece. It was decided to take up the study of our Year Book, as it is christened this year, until Mrs Gates our Superintendent of Mother's meetings, is able to plan some work in that line. We expect to have a supply of minutes at Mrs McCasland's where our next meeting will be held Dec. 8th and those who apply at the Post Office can get them of Mrs Phillips before that.

Government reports show that the consumption per carita, of distilled liquors and wine, is steadily decreasing. The United States Beer Brewers Association becoming alarmed has issued a circular calling attention to the multiplying foes of the liquor business and showing that they must push beer, must induce more people to drink beer. It also exhorts beer dealers to quit the ruinious competition of the can and "growler" business and lop off the abuses that make the beer business receive the recognition as a perfectly legitimate calling to which the popular demand for the commodities they furnish clearly entitles them. They say the only hope for prosperity to the beer brewing industry is to win the people of this country of all classes to the habitual use of fermented malt drinks that it is more important and more desirable that more people should drink beer, making it in reality here what it is in other countries "the people's drink." The American Issue commenting on this says: we call upon the people of America to note that we are to have a propaganda of beer; doctors will boom it. New social customs will be encouraged, which look to its consumption. We will have the saving temperance gospel of beer preached to us in season and out of season by brewers and their echoes in the press, on the platform, possibly in some pulpits. While Germany, the home of beer, is becoming alarmed at the inroads the national beverage is making upon the physique of her soldiers and is casting about for means to counteract the evil and while insurance companies of America are about to take steps to protect abstinent patrons from the higher death rate of beer drinkers, it is no time for people to yield to this new seduction. We will have to lift the temperance standard everywhere against beer and consider it our greatest foe. Most drunkards commence on beer and wine and bitterly resent any insinuation that they will ever want anything stronger, yet the facts are everywhere plenty to prove it. The new German Civil Code disfranchises drunkards. How can our shouters for "personal liberty" swallow that dose right in the faderland of "personal liberty" (The Cornerstone.)

BUNKER HILL.

Our farmers are progressing rapidly with their corn picking, many having finished.

Mr Gibson the railroad contractor made a business trip to Chicago last Friday, returning Monday.

There was a candy pull given by Miss Bertha Morris last Saturday evening, which was attended by a merry crowd of young people.

Mr Charles Libby of Elk Creek, lately from St Louis, did a two days job of carpenter work for Mr Howe.

Mr and Mrs D H McClure visited friends at Bunker Hill last week. They expect to leave soon for some new location having sold their property at Elk Creek. They intend first to visit relatives in Unionville, Mo.

Miss Dolly Morton is assisting Mrs White at Table Rock.

It takes but a minute to overcome tickling in the throat and to stop a cough by the use of One Minute Cough Cure. This remedy quickly cures all forms of throat and lung troubles. Harmless and pleasant to take. It prevents consumption. A famous specific for grippe and its after effects.

Miss Emma Clema is arranging to give a musical entertainment in this city on Monday evening, December 4. Miss Clema is an accomplished musician, being a graduate of the Nebraska conservatory of music at Lincoln and also having studied under the best instructors in Omaha and Shenendoah, Iowa. A rare treat is in store for all who attend this entertainment.—DuBois Times.

Mrs R Churchill, Berlin, Vt., says, "Our baby was covered with running sores. DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve cured her." A specific for piles and skin diseases. Beware of worthless counterfeits.

FOOT BALL.

Table Rock vs. Wymore.

Table Rock foot ball team met Wymore team at Wymore on the latter's gridiron, Saturday, Nov. 25, and compelled them to hoist the white flag as a signal of defeat by a score of 5 to 0; which proved to be one of the most exciting games of the season. Wymore eleven out weighed our home team by about 15 pounds to the man but notwithstanding this fact our boys repeatedly carried them off their feet for good gains through their line.

The game was called at 3 p m with each team on the grounds, ready for the great struggle for supremacy. The Captain of Table Rock's team won the toss and chose to defend the north goal.

At prompt 3 p m the pig-skin was put in motion by a kick off by the Wymore boys. From the start our boys by their superb interference was able to make repeated gains of from 35 to 40 yards.

While Wymore repeatedly hit our line in search for a weak place but found it impossible to find such as the line up of the Table Rock team is composed of such material that they always find themselves capable of the task which they are to perform, and Wymore found it was like coming against a stone wall when they hit our line. Bob Wood, our little captain, covered himself with glory by the head work he manifested in managing the game and also by his gilt edged individual work. To mention other stars in the game we would have to mention the entire personal of the team.

The stars for Wymore were Craig, Mock, Wheeler and Jeffries, who showed up in fine shape. The verdict of our boys are that Wymore has a good team and with more practice would give Table Rock a hard tussle. Our boys claim the hardest man in Wymore which they had to play was the referee whose decisions were simply punk, and had the decision been according to football rules, our verdict would have that this was the cleanest game played during the season. The decisions of referee did not receive the sanction of even the home team of Wymore. Our treatment at the hands of boys at Wymore was simply grand, had it not been for the referee.

Our boys cannot speak in too glowing terms of Ed Wheeler's work in trying to show our boys a good time.

What the Saloons Cost.

"You may ransack the pigeonholes all over the city and country," said the presiding judge of one of the Chicago courts, "and look over such annual reports as are made up, but they will not tell half the truth. Not only are the saloons of Chicago responsible for the cost of the police force, the fifteen justice courts, the Bridewell, but also the criminal courts the county jail, a great portion of Joliet state prison, the long murder trials, the morgue, the poor house, the reform schools, the madhouse.

"Go anywhere you please, and you will find almost invariably that whisky is at the root of the evil. The gambling houses of the city and all other evil resorts are the direct outgrowth of the boon companions of drink. Of all the boys in the reform school at Pontiac and in various reformatories about the city, ninety-five per cent are the children of parents who died through drink, or became criminals through the same cause. Of the insane or demented cases disposed of here in the court every Thursday, a moderate estimate is that ninety per cent are caused by alcohol.

"I saw estimated, the other day, that there were ten thousand destitute boys in Chicago who are not confined at all, but are running at large. I think that is a small estimate. Men are sent to jail for drunkenness, and what becomes of their families? The county agent and poorhouse provide for some. It is a direct expense to the community Generally speaking these families go to destruction The boys turn out thieves and the girls and mothers generally resort to the slums. The sandbaggers, murderers, and thugs generally of today, who are prosecuted in the police courts and criminal courts are the sons of men who fell victims of drink. The percentage in this case is fully sixty-five per cent.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Mr J Sheer, Sedalia, Mo., saved his child's life by One Minute Cough Cure. Doctors had given her up to die with croup. It's an infallible cure for coughs, colds, grippe, pneumonia, bronchitis and throat and lung troubles. Relieves at once.

The little city of Beattie, Kas., which last spring elected a municipal government of women, is enjoying unusual prosperity in consequence. Streets are kept clean, sidewalks repaired, laws enforced a nd municipal affairs administered with an economy unknown before. Mrs. Elizabeth Totten is the mayor, Margaret A. Sheldon, Lulu Smith, Elvira Watkins, Lettie Kerlin, and Mary E. Schleigh are councilwomen, and Katie O'Neil is city clerk. The nomination of a board of women was at first regarded by the irreverent as a joke and was nicknamed the "Mamma Ticket" and the "Broom Brigade," but the new officers have done so well that a prominent citizen of Beattie is now reported as saying: "Women can beat men in domestic economy, and our experience looks as if they could beat them in political economy, too." The ticket was a strong one. Margaret Sheldon is the richest woman in Beattie; Lulu Smith is a college graduate and has been a teacher; Lettie Kirlin is the wife of a traveling man; Mary E Schleigh is the mother of a family and is training her children to be good citizens; Elvira Watkins belongs to one of the wealthy families in the business connection of Beattie, and Mayor Totten is a matron descended from a long line of New York politicians. Councilwoman Sheldon is reported as saying. "Politics is the best cure for rheumatism." Mrs Sheldon was a rich woman with nothing to do; inactivity made her an invalid; active work in the service of the city has cured her.—Kansas City World.

On Tuesday morning Sherriff Anderson made his appearance at the store of Layton & Keiser in this city with a search warrent for intoxicating liquors; he found certain stuff which led him to arrest the two members of the firm for keeping intoxicating liquors; and also arrested an insurance man named Quinby on a charge of selling it. The special object of his undertaking north was to make trails along the Yukon river, that winter travel to Dawson might be accomplished without the danger and hardships which have hitherto been the invariable attendants of such expeditions. To minimize these inconveniences McArthur's party cut out 120 miles of trails, while the Yukon and White Pass Railroad Company also constructed about fifty miles of trails. Under these improved conditions, the Rink Rapids, White Horse, Fifty-Mile and Five Fingers can now be avoided in the course of a winter's journey to Dawson.

A man in Pennsylvania, who was recently discharged of his debts as a bankrupt, under the law, afterward made application to the judge of the United States District court to have the sheriff restrained from selling his property, saying that at least two thousand dollars more could be realized on it if it were disposed of by trustee's sale. The court asked what difference it made to him, since the proceeds from the sale would go to his creditors and not to him. His reply was notable: "My religious feelings will not permit me to accept my discharge in bankruptcy as releasing me from my moral obligation to pay in full all my debts. If this property is sold for two thousand dollars less than it would bring at a trustee's sale I shall have just that much more to pay." The judge commended the debtor's sense of honor.

Reports from the West Indies state that Jamaica has just recovered from what are termed the seasonal rains, answering to the Indian monsoon. For days the island has been deluged, from thirty to forty inches of rain falling in various parts in the course of four days. Many lives have been lost, people being washed away by the torrential gullies and swollen rivers. Dry water courses in a day became raging torrents a mile wide. Bridges have been swept away in many places, railway communication is suspended owing to innumerable landslips, the electric tramway system in Kingston has been so badly cut up that it will not run for some time, and the roads have been everywhere torn to pieces by the raging gullies. The seaport town of Savanna-la-Mar was flooded for days, and communication was only possible by means of canoes. Many coastwise vessels have been wrecked, and several steamers from America were a day or two late in consequence of hurricane weather. The crops, especially the bananas, which are Jamaica's principal export to the United States, have been everywhere destroyed, and acute distress is likely to result in some parts of the island for a time. The heavy rains will, however, prove generally beneficial.

The department has invited proposals for carrying mail by automobiles between the postoffice in Chicago and two postal stations in the business center, and also for the same service in screen wagons, one of these methods to be selected later.

That Mysterious Major...

—BY—

ETHEL A. SOUTHAM

CHAPTER XIV.—(Continued.)

It was not until the gig had been brought round from the stables, not until the major had helped Evelyn up to the front seat and taken his place by her side and they had actually started on their homeward drive, that a single word was spoken regarding the subject which was uppermost in both their minds.

"Well, we are off at last," observed the major, with a twirl of his somewhat dilapidated whip; "and now we shall have to entreat this old mare to put her best foot forward, or Lady Howard will be in hysterics if Mrs. Courtenay returns from the theater without her charge."

"If—" A look of horror came into Evelyn's face. "Oh, but we must get back before that! What would Aunt Lydia think? But I—I can scarcely believe even now that that letter was not from her. Are you certain you have not been mistaken? It was so exactly like her writing."

"Miss Luttrell, I assure you there is not a shadow of a doubt; for, besides knowing for a fact that Lady Howard was at the 'Royal George' at ten minutes to nine, I found an envelope directed to you which you had evidently dropped at the station, and it was as clearly a forgery of your aunt's writing as that check was of your own last night; and in both cases I saw at a glance that it was Falkland's handwork."

"But I—I cannot understand! I was never so puzzled in my life!" Evelyn shook her head and gazed blankly before her at the thick shroud of mist rising slowly from the surrounding fields. "Can it be possible that Mr. Falkland is really that fearful man whom the authorities have been trying to find? Have you known all this time and never told us?"

"I had my suspicions, certainly," he confessed, with a half smile; "but then, that is just it—they were only suspicions. If I had come to you and boldly declared that my own convictions warned me that this fellow was Samuel Cripps, the forger, what would you have said? Why, you would probably have answered that it was far more likely that I myself was the renowned Samuel Cripps. The truth is, I had seen this fellow Falkland abroad, and something about his appearance—I do not know what it was—told me that he was the very man who had been connected with a tremendous forgery in New York, and who, only a few days afterward, I discovered, had forged my name to the amount of 25,000 pounds. It was a most curious affair altogether. How he had gained possession of my check book, or had learned that the amount of money was lying idle in the bank, remains to this day a mystery. And, though I felt certain that this fellow, who had so attracted my notice at Monte Carlo, was the same man who had forged my name, there was unfortunately not the slightest evidence really against him. The moment, however, that I saw him here on the night of my arrival I recognized him at a glance, even though he had disguised himself most effectually by shaving off his mustache and dyeing his hair two or three shades lighter. I had really come with the intention of staying only one night in order to look at some property which had been left me by an uncle; but the instant I saw that man I resolved, whatever happened, to remain until doomsday, if necessary, in the hopes of finding out what grounds I had for my suspicions. At the same time I saw you"—here the major gave one swift glance at the slight form beside him—"and it struck me that, if this fellow Falkland were the man I suspected him to be, he had most probably chosen either you or Lady Howard for his next victim, and I immediately realized how helpless you would be in the hands of such a villain. We have put a stop to his games at last, though," he proceeded, after a momentary pause. "Falkland no doubt imagines that he will be able to make his escape with perfect safety when he arrives at his destination. He is blissfully unconscious that a pair of handcuffs is following closely in the next carriage."

"Do you mean to say that—"

"Exactly," acquiesced the major with a smile, as he noticed her horrified expression. "For once in my life fortune favored me. I telegraphed up to Scotland Yard this morning, telling them to send down the detective who had helped me before in this affair; and, receiving an answer to say he would be here by the five minutes past nine train, I went to the station to meet him. He had only just arrived, when, to my astonishment, I saw you and Falkland alone together upon the opposite platform, hurrying to the London express, and, feeling certain that something was wrong, we instantly made a rush for the train, only just managing to jump into the guard's van before it had moved off. Here again the luck was on our side. Knowing it was the London express, we had quite made up our minds that we should be able to find out nothing until it reached town; but fortunately there was a block on the line, which immediately set our fears at rest. You of course supposed that you were right for Royston."

"Yes—and that Parker was waiting for me with the luggage and Sambo at the next station," answered Evelyn, with a rueful shake of her head. Even now she seemed scarcely to realize the enormity of Falkland's act. "But what in the world could he hope to gain by such conduct? He must have known that sooner or later I should find him out."

"Yes; but that was it. How entirely he would have had you in his power! Alone in London at that time of the night, what could you have done? It would have been the easiest thing imaginable for him to circulate a report saying that you had eloped with him; and how could you have prevented him, except by satisfying him with a bribe of perhaps some thousands of pounds?"

"All the same it was a risky thing to do," proceeded the major decidedly. "And I do not suppose Falkland would have attempted it if he had not really been at the end of his tether; otherwise I am perfectly certain that he would never have been so venturesome as to allow one of his confederates to cash that check of yours whilst he was actually living under the same roof with you."

"Yes, but if it had not been for you, who would have found him out?" observed Evelyn, suddenly raising her eyes to his with a sense of the deepest gratitude. "I cannot think how you managed. You seem to have had so little to go upon—only a piece of blotting paper and some of his writing—at least"—dubiously—"that is what you said, was it not?"

"Yes—cannot you believe it?" laughing. "But really it is quite true; it was your signature—the forgery of it, at least—that I found blotted on a sheet of blotting paper. Somehow my suspicions were aroused at once. I was sure you never wrote in the public room; but then there was no reason that some person in the hotel, or Falkland himself, might not have had occasion to write your name with no criminal intent whatever. It was, therefore, with the object of arriving at some more definite conclusion that I had to make an excuse for asking you to give me your signature; and the only way out of my difficulty which I could think of was"—and here a quizzical gleam of amusement came into the major's eyes—"by that birthday-book."

"Yes, indeed—that horrible birthday-book!" Evelyn stopped short and regarded him as if words absolutely failed her.

"Ah, Miss Luttrell, you will forgive me! You are not very angry with me, I hope?"

The major suddenly put his whip aside, and, leaving the old gray mare to her own devices, bent forward, anxiously surveying the flushed, pretty face at his side.

"Well, no—I am not exactly angry. Considering that that wonderful book had so much to do with the discovery of the forgery, it would perhaps be rather unreasonable if I were. At the same time," she added, wrinkling up her forehead into a perplexed little frown, "though it might have been quite necessary for you to start a birthday-book for the occasion, I hardly think that there was any real need for you to have invented the endless stories that you did. I believe you thoroughly enjoyed taking me in!"

"Well, at any rate, I spoke the truth when I told you that not another person should enter his or her name in that one particular book—"

"Yes—you spoke the truth then"—

"And when I declared that I should value your autograph more than any other that I possessed," he added quickly. "Miss Luttrell, there was truth in every word of that. You may think that I valued it merely because I thought it would meet my own ends; but you are quite mistaken. From the very first hour I saw you I have been in love with you, over head and ears in love, and for the past fortnight I have been longing for the day to come when I might throw off my disguise and"—with sudden recklessness—"ask you to be my wife. Miss Luttrell—Evelyn—tell me, is it possible you can ever give me any hope?"

"You must surely have known that I admired you—you must have seen all along that each day I was falling deeper and deeper in love with you," he went on, absolute despair in his tones, an expression of keenest anxiety on his face. "Dearest, I know that I am not worthy of you, that I have no right to ask you; but, if only you will marry me, it shall be my one aim and object in life to make you happy. I will do anything on earth for you!"

There was a long pause, and then—"Major Brown," came slowly, hesitatingly from Evelyn.

"Ah, that Major Brown," he interrupted ruefully. "I know that your answer to him can never be satisfactory. Please"—entreatingly—"do not call me that again! Try to forget that you ever knew me by such a name, and for the future try to think of me as Adrian Beauchamp."

"I am afraid that that is impossible;" and Evelyn gave a lugubrious little shake of her head. "I could no more call you Sir Adrian Beauchamp than I could our worthy landlord, Mr. Gillibrand himself."

"Then let me suggest a way out of the difficulty," he answered with a covert smile. "Suppose you drop both 'Sir' and 'Beauchamp', and call me 'Adrian.'"

How soon the baronet prevailed upon Miss Luttrell to consent to his arrangement remains a profound mystery; but three weeks later two paragraphs appeared in the morning papers, one announcing the forthcoming trial for forgery of Samuel Cripps, alias John Barton, Gilbert Falkland, etc., the other the marriage shortly to be solemnized between Major Sir Adrian Beauchamp, Bart., late of the Hussars, of Beauchamp Manor, Wilts, and Belgrave square, W., and Evelyn, only daughter of the late William Luttrell of Luttrell court, Devonshire.

KITCHEN AT WINDSOR CASTLE.

A Hundred and Thirteen Thousand Persons Fed at Dinner.

The last of the works of the much maligned George IV. to be mentioned here is the enlarged and improved royal kitchen at Windsor castle, says Pall Mall Magazine. It stands—perhaps the largest single kitchen in the world—on ground where royal kitchens have stood from time immemorial. George IV. it was who in 1828 gave it its lofty roof and top-light ventilators, its splendid clock let into the stone walls, and its generally medieval appearance. At either end of the kitchen is fixed an immense and venerable smokejack, whose origin is lost in the mists of antiquity. One of these annually has the honor of roasting her majesty's baron of beef. The hot-plate table in the center of the kitchen measures no less than 14 by 9 feet. The batterie de cuisine, in its brilliant array of glittering copper, is large enough to cheer the hearts of a small army of gourmands, and to show its office is no sinecure one may mention that it has to make an annual visit to the manufacturer for restoration and repair. Lady Bloomfield says of this kitchen in 1842: "The fire was more like Nebuchadnezzar's 'burning fiery furnace' than anything else I can think of; and though there is now no company at Windsor, there were at least fifteen or twenty large joints of meat roasting. Charles Murray, controller of the house, told me that last year they fed at dinner a hundred and thirteen thousand persons."

How to Care for the Watch.

A watch should be wound up every day at the same hour. Avoid putting it on a marble slab or near anything excessively cold. A sudden change of temperature, contracting the metal, may sometimes cause the mainspring to break. The cold also coagulates the oil, and the pivots and wheel work less freely, and affect the regularity of the timekeeping. In laying aside a watch be sure that it rests upon its case. If suspended, the action of the balance may cause oscillation, which will interfere with its going. To keep your watch clean take care that the case fits closely and see that the watch pocket is kept free from fluff, which is so often given off by linings. Avoid sudden jars and falls, for even if it does not seem to affect it at the moment, a watch will resent rough handling by becoming gradually "out of order" without apparent cause.

"Eggscused."

A teacher in a Boston suburban public school received the following "eggscuse" from the mother of a boy who had failed to be present on a certain day: "Dear Teacher—Please eggscuse Andrew James for not having went to school yesterday. He started all right, but him and another boy stopped for a little swim in the river, and a dog came along and carried off Andrew James' pants and shirt and he had to stay in the water until the other boy come home and got more pants and shirts for him, and then it was too late. Under the circumstances you could not expect him to be there, so kindly eggscuse."

FEARFUL STRUGGLE

Boer and British Fight for Supremacy for Ten Hours

FORCES MEET ON BANKS OF MODDER

Boers Check Advance of General Methuen to Relief of Kimberley—List of Casualties Likely to Be Large—Indecisive.

The war office at London has received the following dispatch from General Buller, dated at Cape Town, conveying report from General Methuen:

"Modder River, Tuesday, November 28.—Reconnoitered at 5 a. m, enemy's position on River Modder, and found them strongly entrenched and concealed. No means of outflanking, the river being full. Action commenced with artillery, mounted infantry and cavalry at 5:30, guard on right. Ninth brigade on left, attacked position in widely-extended formation at 6:30 and, supported by the artillery, found itself in front of the whole Boer force, 8,000 strong, with two large guns, four Krupps, etc.

"The naval brigade rendered great assistance from the railway.

"After desperate, hard fighting, which lasted ten hours, our men, without water or food, and in the burning sun, made the enemy quit its position.

"General Pole-Carew was successful in getting a small party across the river, gallantly assisted by 300 sappers.

"I speak in terms of high praise of the conduct of all who were engaged in one of the hardest and most trying fights in the annals of the British army. If I can mention one arm particularly, it is two batteries of artillery."

A London, November 30 special says that after twelve hours' reflection upon Lord Methuen's brief dispatch, it has only served to increase public anxiety and suspense. All kinds of speculation are indulged in. In the absence of any indication as to whether the Boers occupied the north or the south side of the river, the best opinion inclines to the latter theory, and it is pointed out that the British must have been utterly exhausted if they could not follow up the retiring Boers and crush them as the enemy crowded over the bridge, their compulsory line of retreat.

The Morning Post's military correspondent, who has usually shown great ability, suggests that the Boers are still on the south side of the river and that the bridge is in their hands. He points out "the great danger to the small British force which crossed on pontoons."
