The Weekly Bee will give away $15 000 in premiums for the closest estimate of the population of your own state as announced in the 1900, census. Think of it! $15,000 in premiums! Each subscriber will guess on his own state, thus estimating the population with which he is most familiar. The first premium will be awarded to the one making the closest estimate of the state in which he lives. (That is, closer that the guess of any other subscriber on his own state.) For example, if the nearest estimate is made by a Nebraska person, which is 30,000 from the correct 1900 census population of Nebraska, he will get 1st prize; but if a man in Iowa were within 29,999 of the correct figure for Iowa, the Iowa man would get 1st prize, an the Nebraska man 2nd prize.

In case of a tie, the estimate received first will be awarded the premium.

All territories, D. C., and Nevada are barred, and their inhabitants may estimate Nebraska instead.

Each estimate must be accompanied by $1.75, subscription price of The Omaha Weekly Bee, the greatest western weekly, and The Illustrated Bee, a splendid western weekly news magazine, both for one year.

Cherry Culture in Nebraska.

The cherry is undoubtedly the best and most successful fruit grown in Nebraska. One of its chief advantages is the fact that it transplants easily and thrives equally well in almost every portion of the state. It delights in dry soil, and will yield an abundant crop where other varieties of fruit fail. Another advantage is its season of ripening. The early fruiting varieties are ripe and harvested before the intensely hot weather begins, and the spring rains are always sufficient to ripen the crop. This gives the cherry a decided advantage over fruit that must remain upon the tree until October first.

The cherry needs but very little pruning—in fact none at all if the tree is trained right when first started. At most, all the pruning necessary is to remove limbs that cross each other and rub.

Another reason why the cherry is peculiarly adapted to Nebraska is the fact that it ripens its wood and fruit buds early in the season, and is thus much less liable to winter injury than varieties of fruit that grow late in the fall and go into winter quarters with wood and fruit buds only partially matured. The cherry has produced more full crops of fruit than any other variety of trees grown in Nebraska, which would indicate that it is the fruit especially adapted to this state.

In preparing for planting the soil should be loosened to a depth of 12 to 16 inches. The trees should be set two or three inches deeper than they stood in the nursery row, and the soil should be packed firmly about the roots. There is no danger of setting the tree too firm. When near the surface dry, loose soil should be used. This will prevent the trampled soil from baking around the tree, and will also act as a mulch or blanket to prevent evaporation of the moisture.

After planting the trees should have good, clean cultivation. By planting potatoes, sweet corn or other garden crops in the orchard sufficient returns may be obtained to pay for cultivating the ground until the trees require all the space. The trees should be planted 16 feet apart each way for three rows; then leave a space of 20 feet and plant three more rows 16 feet apart, and so on. The object of this wide row is to give an opening through which to drive and handle the fruit when the orchard comes into full bearing.

The varieties named in the following table have all been tested in Nebraska. They are named in the order of ripening, the time indicated being the average time from the first to the last picking of the crop:

Early Richmond	June	13	to June	25
Dyehouse	"	14	"	20
Early Morello	"	14	"	21
Montmorency	"	21	July	10
Terry	"	28	"	10
Ostheim	July	10	"	20
English Morello	"	14	Aug.	1
Wragg	"	15	"	1

While the varieties named in the above list are all well adapted for family use and are desirable for that purpose, for commercial orcharding would plant Early Richmond, Montmorency and English Morello.

We have saved many doctor's bills since we began using Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in our home. We keep a bottle open all the time and whenever any of my family or myself begin to catch cold we begin to use the Cough Remedy, and as a result we never have to send away for a doctor and incur a large doctor bill, for Chamberlain's Cough Remedy never fails to cure. It is certainly a medicine of great merit and worth.—D. S. Mearkle, General Merchant and Farmer, Mattie, Bedford country, Pa. For sale by S. G. Wright, Druggest.

The Union met with Mrs. White March 2nd, sickness in the family kept away some who are generally present so the attendance was less than usual; five members and three visitors. The treasurer gave in her report; had sent off the Semi-Annual dues for eighteen members and had six cents remaining in the treasury. A committee was appointed to prepare a program for March 20th, Neal Dow's birthday. Mrs Lulu Conklin, Mrs Jessie Phillips, Mrs. E. E. Linn. For the afternoon program Mrs. Mary Andrew read a beautiful poem entitled the "Sweetest Song" and Mrs. Ballou read a short but excellent paper on "The relation of diet to purity," showing how by irregular and improper feeding habits of intemperance and gluttony may be fostered in the growing child. Mrs Linn read an article from "The New Crusade on the Value of Toys" that contained some very helpful hints for mothers. The Union returned a vote of thanks to Mrs. Ballou for her paper and adjourned to meet with Mrs. Fair in two weeks March 18th.

The Temple.

Friends of the temple are inquiring, if we still hope to save the temple. Yes, our state president Mrs. S. M. Walker is one of the trustees and she says the trustees have never entertained a thought of a abandoning the enterprise. The rentals of the building at present are paying all running expenses and interest on the mortgage. The amount to be raised to finish the retirement of the $300,000 Temple Trust Bonds is 90,000, which will also secure a controling interest in the management of the building. Our state treasurer Mrs. Cobb urges every W. C. T. U. woman to secure a dollar in some way and give to the Temple by June 1st.

E. E. LINN.

It is very hard to stand idly by and see our dear ones suffer while awaiting the arrival of the doctor. An Albany (N.Y.) dairyman called at a drug store there for a doctor to come and see his child, then very sick with croup. Not finding the doctor in, he left word for him to come at once on his return. He also bought a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, which he hoped would give some relief until the docter should arrive. In a few hours he returned, saying the doctor need not come, as the child was much better. The druggist, Mr. Otto Scholz, says the family has since recommended Chamberlain's Cough Remedy to their neighbors and friends until he has a constant demand for it from that part of the country. A GAIN FOR MORALITY

WHAT THE PLATE COLLECTION CENSUS SHOWS.

Marked Increase in Contributions Shows That the Cause of Religion Has Shared Liberally in the Prosperity of the Period.

The results of the plate collection census instituted by the American Protective Tariff league show the extent to which the cause of religion and morality has shared in the great increase of prosperity which came to the people of the United States directly following the election in 1896 of William McKinley as President of the United States. This unique and interesting collection of statistics is valuable, instructive and gratifying. It proves beyond question that a gain in the material welfare of a country carries with it a gain in the spiritual welfare of its people. It proves that it is not true, as some enemies of protection have claimed, that the interests of the Christian religion are best promoted by poverty, want, deprivation and suffering. It proves the contrary and every person ought to be glad of what it proves.

In the limited time allotted for the collection of these church statistics it is not surprising that no larger number than 123 reports were received from twenty-four states and territories in answer to the Tariff league's inquiry as to the difference in the plate collections during the Wilson tariff year of 1895 and the Dingley tariff year of 1899. The surprise is rather that so many as 123 church organizations consented to make known the facts regarding the amounts realized from plate collections.

From the returns received, embracing eleven different religious denominations, it appears that there was during the Dingley tariff year of 1899 a marked and substantial increase in the sums of money deposited on the plates and in the contribution boxes as contrasted with the 1895 low tariff period of poverty and depression. The increase for 1899 amounted to 29.58 per cent. A very creditable showing for "McKinley and prosperity" in the churches, is it not?

The largest number of reports came from Ohio, where the increase was 86.95 per cent. In but four states out of the twenty-four reporting was a decrease shown—in one case of 25 per cent, in another 8 per cent, in another 4 per cent, and in the fourth 2½ per cent. It would be unfair to name these states, as in each case the number of churches reporting was small, and it is certain that returns from a larger number would have produced a very different showing. The denominations reporting the largest gains were the Reformed, Christian, Episcopal, Lutheran, Methodist, United Brethren, and Presbyterian, in the order named.

What Will They Do?

Word comes from New York that Col. W. J. Bryan will in all probability be the Democratic presidential nominee. His recent visit there seems to have settled the matter. Four years or so ago, when he visited the metropolis—in 1896—his presence sent a shiver through the financial centers. Prices were affected in the exchanges as if a great disaster or a colossal failure had taken place. It was the only case on record where an individual visiting New York caused general demoralization in the markets. But it is different now. His visit there a few days ago did not have the slightest effect in the exchanges. On the whole, they were glad to see him, and will probably be much more so after he is nominated. They are, perhaps, fully aware of what is in store for him after he gets on the track and more. They have an idea that the gold Democratic press will desert him as it did before, so they really have nothing to fear. If they don't desert him what an awful dish of crow some of them will have to eat. And if he should be nominated on a silver platform with a gold basis, what an immense amount of crow he will have to swallow. No matter how it is fixed up, crow threatens to be a fashionable dish in this country in November next. Crows are usually in very good condition during that month, and when properly cooked they are not such infernal bad eating.—Peoria (Ill.) Journal.

Prices were affected in the exchanges as if a great disaster or a colossal failure had taken place. It was the only case on record where an individual visiting New York caused general demoralization in the markets. But it is different now. His visit there a few days ago did not have the slightest effect in the exchanges. On the whole, they were glad to see him, and will probably be much more so after he is nominated. They are, perhaps, fully aware of what is in store for him after he gets on the track and more. They have an idea that the gold Democratic press will desert him as it did before, so they really have nothing to fear. If they don't desert him what an awful dish of crow some of them will have to eat. And if he should be nominated on a silver platform with a gold basis, what an immense amount of crow he will have to swallow. No matter how it is fixed up, crow threatens to be a fashionable dish in this country in November next. Crows are usually in very good condition during that month, and when properly cooked they are not such infernal bad eating.—Peoria (Ill.) Journal.

Eventful Indeed.

"The week was the most eventful in the history of labor for almost a decade," says a Pittsburg dispatch of January 8. What made it so eventful was the fact that during the preceding week 80,000 men, of whom one-half are employed in and around Pittsburgh, had their wages raised, or received notice of an increase in the near future. The Carnegie Steel Company, Jones & Laughlin, the United States Glass Company, the National Glass Company, and the American Steel & Wire Company are large employers of labor that announce wage increases ranging from 5 to 10 per cent., to take effect January 1. All the puddlers employed in mills controlled by the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers are figuring on an increase of from 15 to over 20 per cent, and the union carpenters have been assured an advance on May 1. The tin plate workers are also figuring on another increase.

These are eventful times for American labor. They began to be eventful early in November, 1896, when the election of William McKinley was made known, and they have been growing more and more eventful ever since.

Reaping Their Reward.

New mills are still going up as fast as labor can erect them and capital equip them. The Republic Iron and Steel company is building another new steel mill at Youngstown, Ohio, and is pushing the work on it as rapidly as possible. It is hoped to have it in operation at a time not later than April 1. When the Wilson law was before congress, the iron and steel workers of Youngstown sent a delegation of their fellows to Washington to protest against the passage of any free-trade law. They failed then. But in 1896, as loyal supporters of McKinley and protection, they saw failure changed to victory. Now they are reaping their reward. May all success and good fortune attend them.

Smoke Tells.

Consul Warner, at Leipzig, Germany, reports to the state department that a number of Saxony textile manufacturers declare that they cannot sell their goods in this country with the present competition here unless they remove their plants to Uncle Sam's domain. Smoke always tells where there is fire.—St. Louis Drygoodsman.

THE LAD AND THE HATCHET.

PAPER, PULP AND TARIFF.

Doubtful Expediency of Removing All Protective Duties.

In moving for the removal of all tariff duties from paper and paper pulp imported into the United States, as a means of destroying the so-called monopoly in the domestic production of paper, certain claims are advanced by the publishers which, if based on a correct knowledge of all the facts and conditions, would seem to be unanswerable arguments in favor of the proposed change of tariff schedules. But it does not appear on careful examination that these claims are supported by the facts and the conditions. It does not, for example, appear that the placing of paper and pulp on the free list would have the desired effect, that of cheapening the price of the product, for the very obvious reason that the price of newspaper is now cheaper in the United States than in any other country. In fact, the advance has been greater in paper prices in Europe than in this country.

The paper on which newspapers are printed is dutiable in the Dingley tariff at three-tenths of a cent per pound, or about 15 per cent of the present price of paper. This is a much lower rate of duty than that which is imposed on almost all other lines of manufactures. On wood pulp the current rate of duty amounts to about 17 per cent of the normal value of the pulp. Not an exorbitant rate on either paper or pulp, it must be conceded. The tariff on newspaper is now practically the same as it has been for the past twenty or twenty-five years. It is practically the same as it was under the Wilson law of 1894.

In view of all these facts and conditions, it is not easy to see just how the manufacturers of paper are unreasonably protected under the Dingley law, nor is it any easier to see the wisdom of depriving of the advantages of protection a giant industry which has grown up as the result of protection, and which has demonstrated in a notable degree the advantage of the protective policy in constantly lowering the cost of the product to the consumer. Such, as a matter of indisputable fact, is the history of paper-making in the United States as regards the steady cheapening of prices.

What It Means.

A most impressive illustration of the true character of the prosperity of this country is furnished in the annual statement of one of the leading life insurance companies. In the report of this company, which makes a specialty of "industrial" insurance—that is, the insurance of workingmen and their wives and families on the plan of small monthly payments—it appears that during 1899 the company wrote a total of about $222,700,000 of new business, which was by many millions of dollars the largest increase in its history, and was a larger increase than that shown by any other life insurance company in the world.

Consider for a moment the significance of this showing. The increase in new insurance of close upon $223,000,000 in 1899 came almost entirely from wage earners. It means that during 1899 money was more plentiful than it had been for many years among those who work for wages; that 1899 will long be remembered as a year of success and prosperity, after conditions causing for a time great uncertainty in the financial world; that during this banner year of Dingley tariff and McKinley prosperity factories and mills opened their doors to give employment to millions of idle hands, and gladness found its way into the hearts and money into the pockets of the people. That is what it means.

Who Pays?

The Mediapolis News thinks the question of a tariff or free trade between the United States and Porto Rico "will probably give some of the friends of high protection an opportunity to learn whether or not the manufacturer or consumer pays the tariff." It will shed very little light on the subject because conditions vary. Sometimes the consumer pays the tax, or part of it, and sometimes he does not. Much depends upon the article and upon the amount of the tax, and the demand and supply. There is no fast bound rule to govern the judgment. As a principle, a protective tariff (not "high protection," as the News calls it) fosters home competition, and it has happened that the home product, as in the case of thread and other goods, could be bought for a less sum than the tariff tax, thus effectually disposing of the assumption of Mr. Cleveland that "the tariff tax is always added to the price."—Burlington Hawk Eye.

It Used to Be Cheaper But—

"Three years ago," said a Democratic merchant to a lady of our acquaintance who had just paid him 25 cents for an article, "you could have bought that for 10 cents."

"I remember that, but I couldn't get the 10 cents. Now I have paid you the quarter, and look here," and she held open her pocketbook, in which were seen several 100-cent dollars.—Clark County (Ill.) Herald.

KING DON:

....BY MAVOR ALLAN.....

She looked up in his face with a little smile that would have appeased a very martinet in love.

"I am very sure that Roddy does not care a scrap nowadays for me," she said demurely, adding, with sweet contrition, "and I am not surprised, after the way I treated him. But I was only a thoughtless girl in those days, and I know he has forgiven me."

"How long ago is it since 'those days'?" queried Don, toying with a golden strand of her hair. Her words had restored his reassurance and calm.

"I try to think it is a long, long time, Don," she answered gravely, "for then I never thought of right or wrong, or how beautiful it makes life if we try to serve God rather than self. Oh," she broke off, with a thrill of emotion in her voice, "sometimes I pray I may live to be an old woman, just to try to make up for all those wasted years."

"And so I, too, pray that you may, though it were only to solace the declining years of a lost sinner like myself, sweet saint," he rejoined lightly. "And now, my darling, since I know your heart is mine, beyond retraction, I can risk to tell you my news from home today. That faithless Roddy is about to be espoused to my sister, Di."

"Oh, I am so glad—so glad!" she exclaimed, and there was no mistaking the genuine warmth of her words. "You will tell him that when you write, won't you, Don? And I myself will write to Di. Oh, Don, I think Di is one of the noblest women in the whole world. But for her example I should never have learned to remember our lives are not our own."

"You were not always such a little Puritan, Lillie," he rallied her, "or, don't you know, 'pon my word, I should have been afraid to think it possible you would ever look at such a reprobate as me, for—you know I am not a hypocrite, Lillie—I'm not a good fellow by any means, and, to tell the truth, I don't want to be one."

It was a bold thing for him to say in the face of her guileless professions of faith; but love made Lillie blind to everything but the bliss of knowing he had claimed her heart forever, and that into his hands had been put the wondrous power of making his chequered life blessed.

She rose, too, and put her hands out to him with a sweetness that banished all thought of alien opinion.

"Some day, Don, perhaps you will come to know, as I do now, that this world is not everything; and so long as you love me I am content to wait for I know that God will make it plain to you in His own good time."

"My white Lily, I am perfectly certain we shall prove a model Darby and Joan, for, since you will have me, what do I care for anything else?"

And then he kissed her again, and murmured "sweet nothings" in her ear that brought the color flitting happily to her lovely cheek. Lastly he drew from his little finger a gold band, bearing a diamond ivy leaf, and inscribed inside with the single word "Bydand"—steadfast—the Gordon badge and motto.

And when he had placed it on the third finger of Lillie's fair hand, she repaid him by throwing her arms about his neck and giving him the first shy kiss of love.

"Oh, Don, may we be like the ivy, and always cling close to each other. May nothing ever come between us two!" she cried.

Those words of deepest love might mayhap have fallen more fitly from the man's lips than the girl's; but Don read in their sweet solemnity the hidden meaning of a hoped-for higher bond of union, and he only smiled considerately as he held her close and returned her kiss with liberal interest.

"I hope," he said playfully, "that means you never, never would be so cruel as to jilt me as you did old Roddy. There! forgive me, sweet, I'm a brute to have reminded you of those days when you were such a dear little coquette. Are you quite sure you are not afraid of giving yourself to such a jealous beggar as I am, Lillie? For you know I am jealous."

"Do you know why I didn't tell you of Roddy's engagement till I knew that I had won your dear heart? Because I didn't want to be taken out of pity."

"You need never be jealous of me any more, Don," she said, with sweet earnestness.

"What of His Highness Prince Clement Sing, who your father told me sent you lately a present of a certain cashmere shawl, and a champac necklace?" he queried, laughing.

But the question turned Lillie's blushing face for the instant pale. It had suddenly reminded her of Captain Derwent's favor of this would-be suitor for her hand. Prince Clement Sing, though a native of the Punjaub, had European blood in his veins, and had lived from boyhood in England, and graduated at one of the English universities.

"I would have returned the presents, but father explained to me it would give serious offense," she said deprecatingly. "It was unpleasant to have to accept them; but if it is the custom of the country to give costly things like that as we give flowers and trifles at home——" She stopped.

"I was only joking," Don interrupted her calmly. "But this reminds me, love. I shall have to get your father's consent, I suppose, before I can ask you to name the happy day? For you know of old I'm not a patient fellow, Lillie. I like things to be assured and smooth-sailing. I stick to the fine old maxim: 'If 'twere well 'twere done, then 'twere well it were done quickly'."

She looked up in her tall lover's face with a piquant, dubious smile.

"That sounds almost like getting over a disagreeable duty," she objected. "And I am sure my father won't want me to run away from him just yet—not till this disturbance on the frontier is over, and he is ready to take me home."

For to the heart of a Briton, in whatever foreign clime, the sacred name of "Home" belongs to the beloved British Isles alone.

For answer Don drew her once more within his arms.

"I can't wait for that, Lillie." And if his mastery arose more from the dogmatic will of the man than the impetuosity of the lover, there was no doubt about his earnestness. "If you ever go back home, it must be as my wife; but, Lillie, I won't promise you I would take you. I could not bear it, for I am a homeless wanderer now."

"We will make a fresh home, Don, you and I, wherever you like in the whole world," she said.

Even Don, self-absorbed as was his nature, was touched by her devotion.

"You are very generous, my darling, and I am going to take you at your word by asking your father to give you to me before the summer. I hope to see him in a very short time, for I have just had orders to take a relief draft of our Derbys out to join his camp to-morrow."

She turned pale as her clinging gown.

"To-morrow? Oh Don, why didn't you tell me before you were going to leave me to-morrow?"

"Because ill news is told all too soon," he answered gently. "But cheer up, child, I don't expect to be gone more than three or four weeks at the most."

But she clung to him, with the tears swimming in her beautiful blue eyes.

"Oh, Don, my dearest, I shall be dreading all sorts of things happening to you on the way! I used to feel so frightened when my father went out first; but now I know he is safely in camp it is different. Oh, Don!" she broke off, "if you never come back to me it would break my heart!"

"My darling," he reassured her, "the tribes have surrendered, and the war is practically over. There's really nothing to be nervous about."

"You must think of me killing time counting the hours which will bring me back to the dear little woman who is going to open a paradise for the poor outcast wanderer."

"Don't call yourself that, Don. As we hope to be forgiven, forgive and forget the wrong your mother did you when she brought you up as Gadie's heir. Remember it was all for love of you she sinned."

"What then, sweet pleader, would you have it that love condones a sin?" he queried, capturing the hand and covering it with kisses.

"God forbid!" she answered earnestly; "but surely, because of that love, forgiveness should be easier?"

Ah! how both were to remember that conversation in a bitter day to come!

All too soon came the final moment for last caresses and parting words, for presently the red-turbaned native announced that "Gordon sahib's horse was at the gate as ordered, and his cloak also, as dew was falling."

Lillie picked up a silk coverlet from the divan, and throwing it over her shoulders, accompanied her lover to the veranda.

The moon had risen, and in its clear light her lovely face, with its aureole of golden hair, shone radiant with its love, but quivering with the pain which this moment of farewell brought.

The red fireflies were flashing, the perfume of rose and pink oleander wafted from the garden on the hot air. On the far-stretching terrace of the bungalow a great adjutant bird, with its head nestling under its wing, was silhouetted against the silvery expanse of sky.

All unconsciously, scene and hour were to be fixed irrevocably upon Don Gordon's memory down to the veriest trifle.

He took his cloak from the native's hand, and, throwing it on, stood trifling with its clasp to prolong the exquisite fascination of the spell which had suddenly fallen upon him and held him in its grasp.

Was it the mystic secret of love which was coming to him there on the silvery wings of the tropic night.

"What message shall I take to the father, little one?"

"That I love you," she answered simply, "and that I only live for you both to come back to me."

He sealed the confession with a passionate kiss, and tore himself away, to spring lightly to the saddle.

"Till we meet again." He spoke softly then, as, kissing his hand to her, he resumed his helmet and galloped away into the moonlit night.

"Till we meet again!"

She lifted her tear-dimmed eyes to the star-spangled heavens in a mute supplication that the Father of all would watch between him and her till that day came.

CHAPTER III.

"Impossible, my dear sir—impossible!"

It was Captain Derwent who spoke in that decidedly aggressive tone of decision, and he whom he addressed was Don Gordon, as they strolled in company along a narrow track by the side of a winding nullah, on their way back to mess at the Tirah camp.

It was nearly three weeks since the lover had bidden Lillie farewell, and she it was who was under discussion now.

Don's cheek was flushed, and his dark eyes glowed ominously as their glance followed the clouds of pale smoke from the cheroot he puffed for several minutes in proud silence.

That he had never contemplated Captain Derwent's blunt refusal of his suit was very certain, by the easy assurance with which he had courted and won Lillie's own consent.

"You say it is impossible your daughter should ever be my wife?" Don spoke at last, with painful distinctness.

It was characteristic of Don's nature that he was rarely roused to passion; but, once roused, it was deep and lasting; and by the pallor that had replaced the flush upon his face it was too evident he was moved to passion now.

"Perfectly impossible, my dear fellow, though I hate telling you so, don't you know?"

"Since you have told me so much, I should like that you will tell me more," said Don, in that calm voice that little betrayed the fire at his heart. "May I ask why it is perfectly impossible?"

"My dear sir," exclaimed the elder officer, somewhat sharply, "if your own common sense does not tell you my chief reasons, then you must pardon my being outspoken. You've said yourself you haven't a rupee beyond your pay and what your uncle, Colonel Gordon, chooses to allow you yearly. Now, honestly, do you consider you are at all a suitable match for my little girl, who, you must remember, is now an heiress. Had you been heir of Gadie——"

"Thanks," said Don curtly. "I do not need to be reminded of my reversed fortunes, and, I will confess, I should never have asked Lillie to share my poverty. It is only the fact of her being an heiress makes it possible she could ever become my wife."

"'Pon my word, sir, you're frank!" exclaimed Captain Derwent, irritated by what he deemed effrontery on Don's part. "My daughter should be honored to know that, had she been a 'tocherless lass,' as we say in the north, you would have had none of her."

He laughed, as if to pass the matter off as a joke; but he was genuinely annoyed.

Love's Playfulness.

"And there's nothing more between us?" he asked. "No, Harry, dear," she replied, nestling against his shoulder; "I can't get any closer to you."—Philadelphia North American.

MORE THAN 50 DEAD

Awful Calamity in a West Virginia Mine.

EXPLOSION COMES WITHOUT WARNING

Very Worst in the State's History—Forty-five are Yet Entombed—Slight Hope of Rescuing Any of Them Alive—Relief Prompt.

A dispatch from Fire Creek, W. Va., dated March 6, says the most disastrous mine explosion ever known in the New River district occurred at the Red Ash mine shortly after the miners went to work. Although the most heroic work of the rescuing party has been going on incessantly all day it is impossible tonight to estimate the full extent of the loss of life and property. More than fifty dead bodies have already been taken out and the number of the dead may reach seventy-five or more. It is thought tonight that at least forty-five miners are yet entombed in the wrecked mine.

The Red Ash mine is a large drift and the explosion occurred near the entrance, which was thus closed by the falling slate, entombing a large number of miners.

The scene of the disaster is between this place and Thermond, on the south branch of the Chesapeake & Ohio railway, and every assistance possible was rendered by the railway company and the adjoining mining towns. Relief parties from great distances arrived as soon as possible.

J. Fred Ellinger, the owner, and his manager, Fred Howell, spared no effort in the work of rescue.

The scenes around the entrance to the mines were beyond description. The wives and children and the neighbors of those who were known to be entombed were there in full force and their anxiety and distress was most intense.

The general belief is that the explosion occurred by contact with dust when the miners entered in the morning with their lamps, and that it was not fire damp as had been currently reported. Nearly all the men employed in the mine were white, only about one-fifth being colored, and most of the men were married and had families.

MANY STOCKMEN INJURED

Two Illinois Central Freight Train Collide Near Chicago.

Twenty stockmen and railroad employes were injured, two probably fatally, in a collision between two Illinois Central freight trains near Broadview, a few miles out of Chicago.

The two trains had been running a long grade a coupling pin in the middle of the head train broke. The rear section of the broken train immediately started down the back grade and struck the engine of the oncoming freight train with a terrific crash.

Both trains were on the way to Chicago from Western, Ia., and were made up mostly of loaded stock cars, with a caboose and passenger coach for the stockmen.

The caboose telescoped the coach and pinned a number of the passengers in the debris. Fire added to the peril of the situation, but happily no one was burned.

HE GETS TEN YEARS.

In the district court at Auburn, Neb., Judge Stull passed sentence upon Geo. H. Ray who was tried at this term for the killing of Frank Cheesman at Brownville, during the month of November, 1898. Counsel for plaintiff and defendant mutually agreed that the defendant might plead guilty to the charge of manslaughter, which he did. The court passed the sentence, giving Ray ten years in the penitentiary at hard labor. The result of the trial gives general satisfaction.

Bank Building Burns.

The State bank building at Indianola, Neb., was completely destroyed by fire. The loss of the bank is fully covered by insurance, and it will rebuild immediately. The loss will not interfere with the business of the bank.

The fire started in the Reporter office in the bank building. The bank and fixtures are nearly a total loss. Dr. McKechihe's loss is $600, insurance $200; Reporter loss, $800, insurance $500; S. R. Smith, $600, no insurance.

Zaza May Be Suppressed.

The police of Cleveland, Ohio, received instructions to attend the performance of "Zaza," at the Euclid avenue opera house, by Mrs. Leslie Carter, for the purpose of securing evidence as to its morality. Mrs. Carter did not appear, however, and it is thought her engagement will not be finished. It was announced that she was suffering from an affection of the throat.

FERVID RELIGIOUS APPEAL

A special from Lourenzo Marques, dated March 4, says: Persistent reports continue that the Transvaal republic has opened negotiations looking to the securing of peace. On the other hand it is asserted the Boers will make a stand at Glencoe and Laing's nek and that in the meantime entrenchments at Pretoria are being extended in anticipation of a siege. A conference between the Boer presidents, it is added, and the general commanding the Boers in Northern Natal was hurriedly arranged on receipt of the news of General Cronje's surrender. Until Thursday night official confirmation of the surrender was withheld from the public. President Kruger sent a fervid religious appeal, with orders that it should be read by all the officers of the burghers, urging them to stand fast and strive in the name of the Lord, for, unless they had faith in Him, cowardice would set in and their position would be hopeless the moment they turned their backs on the enemy. The past victories, he declared, showed that the Lord was on their side. The president beseeched the burghers not to bring destruction on their progeny.

Continuing the special says that a high authority in Bloemfontein declares that in the event of a repulse of the Free State forces the latter will retire towards the Transvaal and unite with their brethren there, maintaining the struggle to the last.

A MYSTERIOUS ROBBERY

Much Money Missing, But the Method Not Understood.

When Cashier Wier opened the vault of the Farmers bank at Farmington, Ia., Monday morning, he discovered that it had been rifled of a portion of its contents. The lock showed no sign of having been tampered with, and the door to the bank was locked as usual. It is claimed that nearly $17,000 was secured by the robbers, but F. D. Barr, one of the directors, said tonight that the sum taken amounted to but $1,700. Cashier Weir left the bank at 3:30 Saturday afternoon to spend Sunday at Eldon. President Lightfoot and Director Barr left an hour later, after closing the vault and setting the time lock for 5 o'clock Monday morning. There is no clue to the thieves, although suspicious characters who left here Sunday are being hunted for. No suspicion rests on the cashier.

MAYOR MOORES RE-ELECTED

Has a Majority of at Least One Thousand Strong.

A dispatch from Omaha says: After a hard fought battle Frank E. Moores has been elected mayor of Omaha by a handsome majority. Moores carried eight out of the nine wards in the city by a majority ranging from eight in the Second to 580 in the Third. The Seventh gave thirty-nine majority for Poppleton, making Moores' majority in the city 1,080. At 2 o'clock Wednesday morning complete figures on the balance of the ticket are not obtainable, but the entire republican ticket is probably elected. The republicans have elected seven of the nine councilmen sure, and possibly the entire nine.

Kills Himself.

Prof. F. L. Harvey of the university of Maine shot and killed himself at his home in Orono, Me. He had been suffering from mental troubles, resulting from overwork. Mr. Harvey was professor of natural history and etymology. He was about sixty years old and a native of Ithaca, N. Y. He was at one time president of the Iowa agricultural college, and was later connected with Humbolt college, Iowa, and the Arkansas industrial university.

Cole Indicted.

Charles R. Cole, formerly president of the defunct Globe National bank of Boston, was indicted on twenty-five counts by the grand jury in the United States district court before Judge Lowell. Sixteen of the counts are for false entries on the books of the bank and nine counts are for misapplication of funds. The case is set for trial during the first week of April. The amount of Cole's alleged misappropriation is $1,067,270.

AGAIN FOR MORALITY

WHAT THE PLATE COLLECTION CENSUS SHOWS.

Marked Increase in Contributions Shows That the Cause of Religion Has Shared Liberally in the Prosperity of the Period.

The results of the plate collection census instituted by the American Protective Tariff league show the extent to which the cause of religion and morality has shared in the great increase of prosperity which came to the people of the United States directly following the election in 1896 of William McKinley as President of the United States. This unique and interesting collection of statistics is valuable, instructive and gratifying. It proves beyond question that a gain in the material welfare of a country carries with it a gain in the spiritual welfare of its people. It proves that it is not true, as some enemies of protection have claimed, that the interests of the Christian religion are best promoted by poverty, want, deprivation and suffering. It proves the contrary, and every person ought to be glad of what it proves.

In the limited time allotted for the collection of these church statistics it is not surprising that no larger number than 123 reports were received from twenty-four states and territories in answer to the Tariff league's inquiry as to the difference in the plate collections during the Wilson tariff year of 1895 and the Dingley tariff year of 1899. The surprise is rather that so many as 123 church organizations consented to make known the facts regarding the amounts realized from plate collections.

From the returns received, embracing eleven different religious denominations, it appears that there was during the Dingley tariff year of 1899 a marked and substantial increase in the sums of money deposited on the plates and in the contribution boxes as contrasted with the 1895 low tariff period of poverty and depression. The increase for 1899 amounted to 29.58 per cent. A very creditable showing for "McKinley and prosperity" in the churches, is it not?

The largest number of reports came from Ohio, where the increase was 86.95 per cent. In but four states out of the twenty-four reporting was a decrease shown—in one case of 25 per cent, in another 8 per cent, in another 4 per cent, and in the fourth 2½ per cent. It would be unfair to name these states, as in each case the number of churches reporting was small, and it is certain that returns from a larger number would have produced a very different showing. The denominations reporting the largest gains were the Reformed, Christian, Episcopal, Lutheran, Methodist, United Brethren, and Presbyterian, in the order named.

What Will They Do?

Word comes from New York that Col. W. J. Bryan will in all probability be the Democratic presidential nominee. His recent visit there seems to have settled the matter. Four years or so ago, when he visited the metropolis—in 1896—his presence sent a shiver through the financial centers. Prices were affected in the exchanges as if a great disaster or a colossal failure had taken place. It was the only case on record where an individual visiting New York caused general demoralization in the markets. But it is different now. His visit there a few days ago did not have the slightest effect in the exchanges. On the whole, they were glad to see him, and will probably be much more so after he is nominated. They are, perhaps, fully aware of what is in store for him after he gets on the track and more. They have an idea that the gold Democratic press will desert him as it did before, so they really have nothing to fear. If they don't desert him what an awful dish of crow some of them will have to eat. And if he should be nominated on a silver platform with a gold basis, what an immense amount of crow he will have to swallow. No matter how it is fixed up, crow threatens to be a fashionable dish in this country in November next. Crows are usually in very good condition during that month, and when properly cooked they are not such infernal bad eating.—Peoria (Ill.) Journal.

Eventful Indeed.

"The week was the most eventful in the history of labor for almost a decade," says a Pittsburg dispatch of January 8. What made it so eventful was the fact that during the preceding week 80,000 men, of whom one-half are employed in and around Pittsburgh, had their wages raised, or received notice of an increase in the near future. The Carnegie Steel Company, Jones & Laughlin, the United States Glass Company, the National Glass Company, and the American Steel & Wire Company are large employers of labor that announce wage increases ranging from 5 to 10 per cent., to take effect January 1. All the puddlers employed in mills controlled by the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers are figuring on an increase of from 15 to over 20 per cent, and the union carpenters have been assured an advance on May 1. The tin plate workers are also figuring on another increase.

These are eventful times for American labor. They began to be eventful early in November, 1896, when the election of William McKinley was made known, and they have been growing more and more eventful ever since.

Reaping Their Reward.

New mills are still going up as fast as labor can erect them and capital equip them. The Republic Iron and Steel company is building another new steel mill at Youngstown, Ohio, and is pushing the work on it as rapidly as possible. It is hoped to have it in operation at a time not later than April 1. When the Wilson law was before congress, the iron and steel workers of Youngstown sent a delegation of their fellows to Washington to protest against the passage of any free-trade law. They failed then. But in 1896, as loyal supporters of McKinley and protection, they saw failure changed to victory. Now they are reaping their reward. May all success and good fortune attend them.

Smoke Tells.

Consul Warner, at Leipzig, Germany, reports to the state department that a number of Saxony textile manufacturers declare that they cannot sell their goods in this country with the present competition here unless they remove their plants to Uncle Sam's domain. Smoke always tells where there is fire. —St. Louis Dry Goodsman.

THE LAD AND THE HATCHET.

Doubtful Expediency of Removing All Protective Duties.

In moving for the removal of all tariff duties from paper and paper pulp imported into the United States, as a means of destroying the so-called monopoly in the domestic production of paper, certain claims are advanced by the publishers which, if based on a correct knowledge of all the facts and conditions, would seem to be unanswerable arguments in favor of the proposed change of tariff schedules. But it does not appear on careful examination that these claims are supported by the facts and the conditions. It does not, for example, appear that the placing of paper and pulp on the free list would have the desired effect, that of cheapening the price of the product, for the very obvious reason that the price of newspaper is now cheaper in the United States than in any other country. In fact, the advance has been greater in paper prices in Europe than in this country.

The paper on which newspapers are printed is dutiable in the Dingley tariff at three-tenths of a cent per pound, or about 15 per cent of the present price of paper. This is a much lower rate of duty than that which is imposed on almost all other lines of manufactures. On wood pulp the current rate of duty amounts to about 17 per cent of the normal value of the pulp. Not an exorbitant rate on either paper or pulp, it must be conceded. The tariff on newspaper is now practically the same as it has been for the past twenty or twenty-five years. It is practically the same as it was under the Wilson law of 1894.

In view of all these facts and conditions, it is not easy to see just how the manufacturers of paper are unreasonably protected under the Dingley law, nor is it any easier to see the wisdom of depriving of the advantages of protection a giant industry which has grown up as the result of protection, and which has demonstrated in a notable degree the advantage of the protective policy in constantly lowering the cost of the product to the consumer. Such, as a matter of indisputable fact, is the history of paper making in the United States as regards the steady cheapening of prices.

What It Means.

A most impressive illustration of the true character of the prosperity of this country is furnished in the annual statement of one of the leading life insurance companies. In the report of this company, which makes a specialty of "industrial" insurance—that is, the insurance of workingmen and their wives and families on the plan of small monthly payments—it appears that during 1899 the company wrote a total of about $222,700,000 of new business, which was by many millions of dollars the largest increase in its history, and was a larger increase than that shown by any other life insurance company in the world.

Consider for a moment the significance of this showing. The increase in new insurance of close upon $223,000,000 in 1899 came almost entirely from wage earners. It means that during 1899 money was more plentiful than it had been for many years among those who work for wages; that 1899 will long be remembered as a year of success and prosperity, after conditions causing for a time great uncertainty in the financial world; that during this banner year of Dingley tariff and McKinley prosperity factories and mills opened their doors to give employment to millions of idle hands, and gladness found its way into the hearts and money into the pockets of the people. That is what it means.

Who Pays?

The Mediapolis News thinks the question of a tariff or free trade between the United States and Porto Rico "will probably give some of the friends of high protection an opportunity to learn whether or not the manufacturer or consumer pays the tariff." It will shed very little light on the subject because conditions vary. Sometimes the consumer pays the tax, or part of it, and sometimes he does not. Much depends upon the article and upon the amount of the tax, and the demand and supply. There is no fast bound rule to govern the judgment. As a principle, a protective tariff (not "high protection," as the News calls it) fosters home competition, and it has happened that the home product, as in the case of thread and other goods, could be bought for a less sum than the tariff tax, thus effectually disposing of the assumption of Mr. Cleveland that "the tariff tax is always added to the price."—Burlington Hawk Eye.

It Used to Be Cheaper But—

"Three years ago," said a Democratic merchant to a lady of our acquaintance who had just paid him 25 cents for an article, "you could have bought that for 10 cents."

"I remember that, but I couldn't get the 10 cents. Now I have paid you the quarter, and look here," and she held open her pocketbook, in which were seen several 100-cent dollars.—Clark County (Ill.) Herald.

KING DON:

.....BY MAVOR ALLAN.....

She looked up in his face with a little smile that would have appeased a very martinet in love.

"I am very sure that Roddy does not care a scrap nowadays for me," she said demurely, adding, with sweet contrition, "and I am not surprised, after the way I treated him. But I was only a thoughtless girl in those days; and I know he has forgiven me."

"How long ago is it since 'those days'?" queried Don, toying with a golden strand of her hair. Her words had restored his reassurance and calm.

"I try to think—it is a long, long time, Don," she answered gravely, "for then I never thought of right or wrong, or how beautiful it makes life if we try to serve God rather than self. Oh," she broke off, with a thrill of emotion in her voice, "sometimes I pray I may live to be an old woman, just to try to make up for all those wasted years."

"And so I, too, pray that you may, though it were only to solace the declining years of a lost sinner like myself, sweet saint," he rejoined, lightly. "And now, my darling, since I know your heart is mine, beyond retraction, I can risk to tell you my news from home today. That faithless Roddy is about to be espoused to my sister, Di."

"Oh, I am so glad—so glad!" she exclaimed, and there was no mistaking the genuine warmth of her words. "You will tell him that when you write, won't you, Don? And I myself will write to Di. Oh, Don, I think Di is one of the noblest women in the whole world. But for her example I should never have learned to remember our lives are not our own."

"You were not always such a little Puritan, Lillie," he rallied her, "or, don't you know, 'pon my word, I should have been afraid to think it possible you would ever look at such a reprobate as me, for—you know I am not a hypocrite, Lillie—I'm not a good fellow by any means, and, to tell the truth, I don't want to be one."

It was a bold thing for him to say in the face of her guileless professions of faith; but love made Lillie blind to everything but the bliss of knowing he had claimed her heart forever, and that into his hands had been put the wondrous power of making his chequered life blessed.

She rose, too, and put her hands out to him with a sweetness that banished all thought of alien opinion.

"Some day, Don, perhaps you will come to know, as I do now, that this world is not everything; and so long as you love me I am content to wait for I know that God will make it plain to you in His own good time."

"My white Lily, I am perfectly certain we shall prove a model Darby and Joan, for, since you will have me, what do I care for anything else?"

And then he kissed her again, and murmured "sweet nothings" in her ear that brought the color flitting happily to her lovely cheek. Lastly he drew from his little finger a gold band, bearing a diamond ivy leaf, and inscribed inside with the single word "Bydand"—steadfast—the Gordon badge and motto.

And when he had placed it on the third finger of Lillie's fair hand, she repaid him by throwing her arms about his neck and giving him the first shy kiss of love.

"Oh, Don, may we be like the ivy, and always cling close to each other. May nothing ever come between us two!" she cried.

Those words of deepest love might mayhap have fallen more fitly from the man's lips than the girl's; but Don read in their sweet solemnity the hidden meaning of a hoped-for higher bond of union, and he only smiled considerately as he held her close and returned her kiss with liberal interest.

"I hope," he said playfully, "that means you never, never would be so cruel as to jilt me as you did old Roddy. There! forgive me, sweet, I'm a brute to have reminded you of those days when you were such a dear little coquette. Are you quite sure you are not afraid of giving yourself to such a jealous beggar as I am, Lillie? For you know I am jealous."

"Do you know why I didn't tell you of Roddy's engagement till I knew that I had won your dear heart? Because I didn't want to be taken out of pity."

"You need never be jealous of me any more, Don," she said, with sweet earnestness.

"What of His Highness Prince Clement Sing, who your father told me sent you lately a present of a certain cashmere shawl, and a champac necklace?" he queried, laughing.

But the question turned Lillie's blushing face for the instant pale. It had suddenly reminded her of Captain Derwent's favor of this would-be suitor for her hand. Prince Clement Sing, though a native of the Punjaub, had European blood in his veins, and had lived from boyhood in England, and graduated at one of the English universities.

"I would have returned the presents, but father explained to me it would give serious offense," she said deprecatingly. "It was unpleasant to have to accept them; but if it is the custom of the country to give costly things like that as we give flowers and trifles at home——" She stopped.

"I was only joking," Don interrupted her calmly. "But this reminds me, love. I shall have to get your father's consent, I suppose, before I can ask you to name the happy day? For you know of old I'm not a patient fellow, Lillie. I like things to be assured and smooth-sailing. I stick to the fine old maxim: 'If 'twere well 'twere done, then 'twere well it were done quickly'."

"That sounds almost like getting over a disagreeable duty," she objected. "And I am sure my father won't want me to run away from him just yet—not till this disturbance on the frontier is over, and he is ready to take me home."

For to the heart of a Briton, in whatever foreign clime, the sacred name of "Home" belongs to the beloved British Isles alone.

"I can't wait for that, Lillie." And if his mastery arose more from the dogmatic will of the man than the impetuosity of the lover, there was no doubt about his earnestness. "If you ever go back home, it must be as my wife; but, Lillie, I won't promise you I would take you. I could not bear it, for I am a homeless wanderer now."

"We will make a fresh home, Don, you and I, wherever you like in the whole world," she said.

Even Don, self-absorbed as was his nature, was touched by her devotion.

"You are very generous, my darling, and I am going to take you at your word by asking your father to give you to me before the summer. I hope to see him in a very short time, for I have just had orders to take a relief draft of our Derbys out to join his camp to-morrow."

She turned pale as her clinging gown.

"To-morrow? Oh, Don, why didn't you tell me before you were going to leave me to-morrow?"

"Because ill news is told all too soon," he answered gently. "But cheer up, child, I don't expect to be gone more than three or four weeks at the most."

But she clung to him, with the tears swimming in her beautiful blue eyes.

"Oh, Don, my dearest, I shall be dreading all sorts of things happening to you on the way! I used to feel so frightened when my father went out first; but now I know he is safely in camp it is different. Oh, Don!" she broke off, "if you never come back to me it would break my heart!"

"My darling," he reassured her, "the tribes have surrendered, and the war is practically over. There's really nothing to be nervous about."

"You must think of me killing time counting the hours which will bring me back to the dear little woman who is going to open a paradise for the poor outcast wanderer."

"Don't call yourself that, Don. As we hope to be forgiven, forgive and forget the wrong your mother did you when she brought you up as Gadie's heir. Remember it was all for love of you she sinned."

"What then, sweet pleader, would you have it that love condones a sin?" he queried, capturing the hand and covering it with kisses.

"God forbid!" she answered earnestly; "but surely, because of that love, forgiveness should be easier?"

Ah! how both were to remember that conversation in a bitter day to come!

All too soon came the final moment for last caresses and parting words, for presently the red-turbaned native announced that "Gordon sahib's horse was at the gate as ordered, and his cloak also, as dew was falling."

Lillie picked up a silk coverlet from the divan, and throwing it over her shoulders, accompanied her lover to the veranda.

The moon had risen, and in its clear light her lovely face, with its aureole of golden hair, shone radiant with its love, but quivering with the pain which this moment of farewell brought.

The red fireflies were flashing, the perfume of rose and pink oleander wafted from the garden on the hot air. On the far-stretching terrace of the bungalow a great adjutant bird, with its head nestling under its wing, was silhouetted against the silvery expanse of sky.

All unconsciously, scene and hour were to be fixed irrevocably upon Don Gordon's memory down to the veriest trifle.

He took his cloak from the native's hand, and, throwing it on, stood trifling with its clasp to prolong the exquisite fascination of the spell which had suddenly fallen upon him and held him in its grasp.

Was it the mystic secret of love which was coming to him there on the silvery wings of the tropic night.

He stooped at last and gathered the trembling girl in a lingering embrace.

"What message shall I take to the father, little one?"

"That I love you," she answered simply, "and that I only live for you both to come back to me."

He sealed the confession with a passionate kiss, and tore himself away, to spring lightly to the saddle.

"Till we meet again." He spoke softly then, as, kissing his hand to her, he resumed his helmet and galloped away into the moonlit night.

"Till we meet again!"

She lifted her tear-dimmed eyes to the star-spangled heavens in a mute supplication that the Father of all would watch between him and her till that day came.

Ah! she little knew what the interval held in store.

CHAPTER III.

"Impossible, my dear sir—impossible!"

It was Captain Derwent who spoke in that decidedly aggressive tone of decision, and he whom he addressed was Don Gordon, as they strolled in company along a narrow track by the side of a winding nullah, on their way back to mess at the Tirah camp.

It was nearly three weeks since the lover had bidden Lillie farewell, and she it was who was under discussion now.

Don's cheek was flushed, and his dark eyes glowed ominously as their glance followed the clouds of pale smoke from the cheroot he puffed for several minutes in proud silence.

That he had never contemplated Captain Derwent's blunt refusal of his suit was very certain, by the easy assurance with which he had courted and won Lillie's own consent.

"You say it is impossible your daughter should ever be my wife?" Don spoke at last, with painful distinctness.

It was characteristic of Don's nature that he was rarely roused to passion; but, once roused, it was deep and lasting; and by the pallor that had replaced the flush upon his face it was too evident he was moved to passion now.

"Perfectly impossible, my dear fellow, though I hate telling you so, don't you know?"

"Since you have told me so much, I should like that you will tell me more," said Don, in that calm voice that little betrayed the fire at his heart. "May I ask why it is perfectly impossible?"

"My dear sir," exclaimed the elder officer, somewhat sharply, "if your own common sense does not tell you my chief reasons, then you must pardon my being outspoken. You've said yourself you haven't a rupee beyond your pay and what your uncle, Colonel Gordon, chooses to allow you yearly. Now, honestly, do you consider you are at all a suitable match for my little girl, who, you must remember, is now an heiress. Had you been heir of Gadie——"

"Thanks," said Don curtly. "I do not need to be reminded of my reversed fortunes, and, I will confess, I should never have asked Lillie to share my poverty. It is only the fact of her being an heiress makes it possible she could ever become my wife."

"'Pon my word, sir, you're frank!" exclaimed Captain Derwent, irritated by what he deemed effrontery on Don's part. "My daughter should be honored to know that, had she been a 'tocherless lass,' as we say in the north, you would have had none of her."

He laughed, as if to pass the matter off as a joke; but he was genuinely annoyed.

MORE THAN 50 DEAD

Awful Calamity in a West Virginia Mine.

EXPLOSION COMES WITHOUT WARNING

Very Worst in the State's History—Forty-five are Yet Entombed—Slight Hope of Rescuing Any of Them Alive—Relief Prompt.

A dispatch from Fire Creek, W. Va., dated March 6, says the most disastrous mine explosion ever known in the New River district occurred at the Red Ash mine shortly after the miners went to work. Although the most heroic work of the rescuing party has been going on incessantly all day it is impossible tonight to estimate the full extent of the loss of life and property. More than fifty dead bodies have already been taken out and the number of the dead may reach seventy-five or more. It is thought tonight that at least forty-five miners are yet entombed in the wrecked mine.

The Red Ash mine is a large drift and the explosion occurred near the entrance, which was thus closed by the falling slate, entombing a large number of miners.

The scene of the disaster is between this place and Thermond, on the south branch of the Chesapeake & Ohio railway, and every assistance possible was rendered by the railway company and the adjoining mining towns. Relief parties from great distances arrived as soon as possible.

J. Fred Effinger, the owner, and his manager, Fred Howell, spared no effort in the work of rescue.

The scenes around the entrance to the mines were beyond description. The wives and children and the neighbors of those who were known to be entombed were there in full force and their anxiety and distress was most intense.

The general belief is that the explosion occurred by contact with dust when the miners entered in the morning with their lamps, and that it was not fire damp as had been currently reported. Nearly all the men employed in the mine were white, only about one-fifth being colored, and most of the men were married and had families.

MANY STOCKMEN INJURED

Two Illinois Central Freight Train Collide Near Chicago.

Twenty stockmen and railroad employes were injured, two probably fatally, in a collision between two Illinois Central freight trains near Broadview, a few miles out of Chicago.

The two trains had been running about a mile apart. While climbing a long grade a coupling pin in the middle of the head train broke. The rear section of the broken train immediately started down the back grade and struck the engine of the oncoming freight train with a terrific crash.

Both trains were on the way to Chicago from Western, Ia., and were made up mostly of loaded stock cars, with a caboose and passenger coach for the stockmen.

The caboose telescoped the coach and pinned a number of the passengers in the debris. Fire added to the peril of the situation, but happily no one was burned.

HE GETS TEN YEARS.

In the district court at Auburn, Neb., Judge Stull passed sentence upon Geo. H. Ray who was tried at this term for the killing of Frank Cheesman at Brownville, during the month of November, 1898. Counsel for plaintiff and defendant mutually agreed that the defendant might plead guilty to the charge of manslaughter, which he did. The court passed the sentence, giving Ray ten years in the penitentiary at hard labor. The result of the trial gives general satisfaction.

Bank Building Burns.

The State bank building at Indianola, Neb., was completely destroyed by fire. The loss of the bank is fully covered by insurance, and it will rebuild immediately. The loss will not interfere with the business of the bank.

The fire started in the Reporter office in the bank building. The bank and fixtures are nearly a total loss. Dr. McKechnie's loss is $600, insurance $200; Reporter loss, $800, insurance $500; S. R. Smith, $600, no insurance.

Zaza May Be Suppressed.

The police of Cleveland, Ohio, received instructions to attend the performance of "Zaza," at the Euclid avenue opera house, by Mrs. Leslie Carter, for the purpose of securing evidence as to its morality. Mrs. Carter did not appear, however, and it is thought her engagement will not be finished. It was announced that she was suffering from an affection of the throat.

FERVID RELIGIOUS APPEAL

A special from Lourenzo Marques, dated March 4, says: Persistent reports continue that the Transvaal republic has opened negotiations looking to the securing of peace. On the other hand it is asserted the Boers will make a stand at Glencoe and Laing's nek and that in the meantime entrenchments at Pretoria are being extended in anticipation of a siege. A conference between the Boer presidents, it is added, and the general commanding the Boers in Northern Natal was hurriedly arranged on receipt of the news of General Cronje's surrender. Until Thursday night official confirmation of the surrender was withheld from the public. President Kruger sent a fervid religious appeal, with orders that it should be read by all the officers of the burghers, urging them to stand fast and strive in the name of the Lord, for, unless they had faith in Him, cowardice would set in and their position would be hopeless the moment they turned their backs on the enemy. The past victories, he declared, showed that the Lord was on their side. The president beseeched the burghers not to bring destruction on their progeny.

Continuing the special says that a high authority in Bloemfontein declares that in the event of a repulse of the Free State forces the latter will retire towards the Transvaal and unite with their brethren there, maintaining the struggle to the last.

A MYSTERIOUS ROBBERY

Much Money Missing, But the Method Not Understood.

When Cashier Wier opened the vault of the Farmers bank at Farmington, Ia., Monday morning, he discovered that it had been rifled of a portion of its contents. The lock showed no sign of having been tampered with, and the door to the bank was locked as usual. It is claimed that nearly $17,000 was secured by the robbers, but F. D. Barr, one of the directors, said tonight that the sum taken amounted to but $1,700. Cashier Weir left the bank at 3:30 Saturday afternoon to spend Sunday at Eldon. President Lightfoot and Director Barr left an hour later, after closing the vault and setting the time lock for 5 o'clock Monday morning. There is no clue to the thieves, although suspicious characters who left here Sunday are being hunted for. No suspicion rests on the cashier.

MAYOR MOORES RE-ELECTED

Has a Majority of at Least One Thousand Strong.

A dispatch from Omaha says: After a hard fought battle Frank E. Moores has been elected mayor of Omaha by a handsome majority. Moores carried eight out of the nine wards in the city by a majority ranging from eight in the Second to 589 in the Third. The Seventh gave thirty-nine majority for Poppleton, making Moores' majority in the city 1,069. At 3 o'clock Wednesday morning complete figures on the balance of the ticket are not obtainable, but the entire republican ticket is probably elected. The republicans have elected seven of the nine councilmen sure, and possibly the entire nine.

Mr. Harvey was professor of natural history and etymology. He was about sixty years old and a native of Ithaca, N. Y. He was at one time president of the Iowa agricultural college, and was later connected with Humbolt college, Iowa, and the Arkansas industrial university.

Cole Indicted.

Charles R. Cole, formerly president of the defunct Globe National bank of Boston, was indicted on twenty-five counts by the grand jury in the United States district court before Judge Lowell. Sixteen of the counts are for false entries on the books of the bank and nine counts are for misapplication of funds. The case is set for trial during the first week of April. The amount of Cole's alleged misappropriation is $1,081,370.

The republican county convention will be held at Pawnee City at 2 o'clock on Saturday March 31. There will be 148 delegates to the convention of which Table Rock is expected to supply 20.

The democratic convention at Pawnee City last Saturday selected delegates to the conventions, The Pawnee Chief was selected as the official organ of the party and a series of resolutions were adopted censuring the Press for its fight on Prof. Fulton. It's not the first time Fred Hassler has been censured.

We have received and read the much advertised Sheldon Topeka Capital, and believe there are hundred of papers in the United States whose publishers and editors are following as closely in the footsteps of Jesus, and doing as much for the uplift of humanity, as would a paper conducted continously on the lines adopted Mr. Sheldon.

Mr. Clark, the proprietor of the Ravenna, Neb., Creamery, and Hon. Wm. Sutton of Table Rock, both experienced creamery men, attended the creamery meeting in this city Saturday afternoon. Owing to some misunderstanding the attendance was small and little was accomplished, except to talk over the proposition with Mr. Clark, who is looking for a location in this section. If the farmers can be counted on to furnish the desired number of milch cows, Mr. Clark will doubtless return to Pawnee and establish a creamery here. He will ask no bonus of any kind, and only that he be guaranteed the farmers will do their part. He was very favorably impressed with our city and its educational advantages, and being an experienced man in the business we have no hesitancy in saying that with the help of the farmers he could make the creamery a mutual success.—Pawnee Republican.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C. March 11, 1900. (Special Correspondence). It has been noticed here that there is a movement on foot in Nebraska to raise a popular subscription for Mrs. John M. Stotsenburg, widow of the Colonel, Washington papers have made mention of the fact that Stotsenburg was a hero, who like Lawton, died at the head of his troops, and that Nebraska was doing the proper thing in raising a fund to assist the widow and the children.

Mrs. Stotsenburg lives here with some relatives. Her health is so bad that she is under a physicians care all of the time. She has small children to care for. In the meantime, the proposition to grant her a pension has probably been defeated for the present, at least, by the move of Senator Allen, who introduced a pension bill in the other end of Congress, without consulting either Mrs. Stotsenburg or the introducer of the House bill, the intention being to get a little cheap advertisings and at the same time to interfere with the House bill, which should have had the right of way. The two bills call for different amounts, and it is not probable that either will get through. It will be a good idea to watch Senator Allen and his bosom friends and see how much they donate to the popular fund.

Another Nebraska Congressman has made a mark on the floor of the House. Burkett of the First District, was on the elections committee, and took up the case for the majority in the Aldrich vs. Robbins contest from Alabama. It was one of the rankest cases that has come up from the south—a case where the Republican voters were not allowed to vote, where the colored men were warned to remain at home on election day, where the ballot boxes were taken up into hay lofts by outsiders to count the ballots, and where the most fraudulent of southern frauds was rampant. When Burkett took the floor to show up these frauds, two democrats tried to have some fun with him because he was a new member. The fun did not materialize on that side of the House. The Nebraskan surprised the whole outfit by making a strong speech, in which he swept the interruptors off the floor. He paid full respects to the frauds in the south, and their threatening the Mason-Dixon line, he told how the democrats always meddle with the ballot when they get in power, and he gave some strong hints about recent performances in Nebraska. It was not a real pleasant speech for the democrats to listen to.

Those who have been reading the newspapers for the past ten days will have noticed the performance of the democrats in shedding crocodile tears for the Porto Ricans, and then refusing to vote money to relieve them when asked to do so by the President in his special message. The sympathy for the islanders was all a pretense,—a scheme to manufacture cheap political thunder. The Nebraska members who pretend to be populists simply aroved the Democratic order on this question. In fact they always obey orders from that source, and there is no pretence here of the populist party being a separate organization. They are all democrats.

The American Agriculturist, a non-partisan publication devoted purely to agricultural matters, presents some figures of interest to farmers in a political way, though such was not the object of their collection. The comparative statement of the value of farm products in recent years shows that during the past year they were worth $1,600,000,000 more than during the years of democratic depression. On live stock the increase is 38 per cent, on staple crops 25 per cent and on dairy and miscellaneous products 40 per cent. These figures speaks volumes for the value of republican policies to the farmer as well as the manufacturer.—Omaha Bee.

M. M. Stover, an old citizen, died suddenly at his home in this city, on Saturday night, at 10.30 o'clock. On Tuesday he was taken ill and a physician was called to see him, and he was given relief; from this attack he had apparently fully recovered, and on Saturday evening with his son-in-law, John Morton, looked over some business letters, and then retired for the night. Mr. Morton sat up read up for a time and about half-past 10 was attracted by gurling sounds coming from Mr. Stover, and found him struggling for breath; help was summoned and a physician sent for, but before the doctor arrived the book of life on earth of M. M. Stover had been closed. Michael M. Stover, sr., was born in York county Pennsylvania, and was in the 70th year of his age at the time of his death. He was the father of eight children—six of whom are still living—one daughter and five sons. He was an earnest Sunday School worker; a deacon in the Baptist church and a minister of the gospel for eight years. About forty years ago he took a homestead in Nemaha county, upon which he resided until he came to Table Rock—twenty-seven years ago. The funeral services were held at the home at 4 o'clock Monday afternoon, and the remains buried in Table Rock cemetery. Those of the children present were: Mrs John Morton, George, from Pawnee; Mike, Morris, Kas., Ed., Wayne; Jefferson, Tecumseh.

It is claimed he assaulted Dalton at Centralia on Saturday night and almost killed him with a stone. The trouble began over a game of craps. W. W. Huff was in the country six miles west of here and overtook Johnson on the road. He knew him at once as he was in Centralia Sunday where the assault was made. The negro asked him where he would strike the railroad for St. Joe. He was told that at Pawnee City he could take the Rock Island road. He replied that that would take him through Seneca and he did not want to get into Kansas. He was induced by Huff to come to town with him, but got off the wagon at the edge of town and started toward the Burlington depot. Huff went to the nearest telephone and called the marshal and constable, who at once went on his trail. He was caught about a mile out of town and lodged in jail. The sheriff of Marshall county will take him as soon as a requisition can be obtained.

From Manila.

Balango, Luzon, P. I., Jan. 13, 1900. Miss Maggie Sutton. Table Rock, Neb., Dear Sister:—As it has been nearly six weeks since I have written a letter I will make an attempt.

We have been on the move a greater part of the time since we left Angeles; have been over the mountains to Subic Bay and over all the country between Orion and Angeles, some of it several times.

I believe I told you in my last letter that part of Co. E. were to be mounted; we have the natives which are very small and as I am not fat myself I have one of the smallest, when he is saddled, his saddle and all can pass under my arm when I hold it out straight and the horse is the saddle will be about four inches below it; my pony will weigh about 500 pounds; when I am on his back, and he steps in a little whole my feet drag on the ground, it may sound like a fish story to you but these horses carry as far as thirty miles a day over rough mountain roads where one would think it impossible for a horse to travel until he had seen them, they will walk a river on a single plank and follow rice paddies that are so narrow that a man can hardly walk them.

I forgot to ask you to excuse this paper, or rather me for using it, but it is a sad fact that it is this or nothing, and this is some that Jack found in an old building and gave to me.

We have had lots of fun, excitement, and some hard times since we started on this trip, sometimes we would get so far ahead of our provisions that we would have to get out and hustle what we had to eat, which would be rice, sweet potatoes, chickens, bananas, carabeon or buffalo or what ever we could get our hands on.

We were issued revolvers when we were mounted but still carry our rifles.

We have had several wild rides or charges which were very exciting have captured several guns, some ammunition and supplies.

Our last engagement was on the 5th, the day we came into this town, the unmounted men in Co. E., Co's M. and G. were in advance when we entered the town, the mounted men being held in reserve and used as an escort for the artillery.

When the United States soldiers entered the town from the north the insurgents retreated to the south and so fast that the infantry could not overtake them so when we came up we were ordered to make a charge through the city (which has a population of about 15,000) and out the principal road leading to the south.

We passed through the streets and down the road about one-half of a mile before ever taking any armed insurgents, although the streets and road was full of unarmed men, women and children who tried to hide in the brush and weeds by the roadside as we overtook them.

The Philippine soldiers run and run well, but can be caught with a horse if they will keep in a good smooth road which they did a short time until we came up with them, we first opened fire with our pistols while our horses were going at full speed, the road was soon cleared of armed insurrectors as they all took to the fields when they saw we would catch them, some of them threw down their guns and took to the brush without firing a single shot. When the dust had settled, for there was more dust than smoke in the charge, we had six guns, six dead, one fatally wounded and three prisoners to our credit, while we did not have a single man even wounded.

Have not seen Art or Richard since we left Angeles. Walter was with the scouts for a while but is with Art now or was the last I heard of him. James McCurry is at Manila in the hospital, he has been very sick but think he will get all right again, have not heard from him since he was taken to Manila about two weeks ago. Jack Ross is with the Company and is getting along in good shape although he has had few attacks of chills and fever.

Have not seen Clinton for about two months; think he is still at Mertie

I am enjoying good health myself have had a few off days but think I am doing fine so far.

Will try and write oftener in the future; think we have done the biggest part of our hiking.

Write me all the news anything that happens in Table Rock and vicinity will interest me.

Your loving brother,
George Sutton.

WATERING THE LAND

HOW IRRIGATION IS PROGRESSING IN IDAHO.

(Boise, Idaho, Letter.)

Most of the people who farm in the rainfall regions suppose that the irrigation of land is a complicated process and that the art of doing it can only be acquired after years of experience, whereas, as a matter of fact, it is about the easiest and most simple work the western farmer has to do. In most cases the children attend to it under the direction of their parents, and any boy of 10 or 12 can do a man's work when it comes to irrigation.

The western farmer is wholly indifferent as to rainfall. He doesn't depend upon it in the least. The water that interests him is that which flows down into the valley from the melting snows in the mountain ranges. These waters he diverts into great canals which run along the rim of the valley about the irrigable lands and are tapped at stated intervals by what are called "laterals" or sub-ditches which flow from farm to farm and out of which the farmer takes the water for his fields. In some cases the waters of these mountain streams are acquired by the community of farmers along their course, each one holding as many shares of stock in the co-operative canal scheme as he owns acres of land, and being entitled to so many inches of water for every acre of his ownership. This is the usual plan. But when the construction of the main canal, owing to engineering difficulties, is too expensive a piece of business for the farmer to afford, irrigation companies undertake the work and build the canal into portions of the country where large areas of land are to be reclaimed. These irrigation companions are "common carriers" of water and furnish it for a nominal price per acre per annum to the farmer. Sometimes these irrigation companies own large tracts under their ditch which they sell in small farms with the water right, to settlers at a nominal prices per acre. In other instances they do not own land at all, leaving that to be acquired by the settler under the various acts of congress.

Perhaps no portion of the Union is now making such active progress in irrigation development, or is receiving so large a quota of immigrants as southern Idaho. There are millions of unoccupied acres in that state which only await settlement to become as productive as the lands upon the Nile. Efforts are being put forth by the state authorities to bring the advantages of these lands to the notice of the eastern farmer, and the several railroads of the state are engaged in the work.

Perhaps the easiest and the best way to acquire information is from the General Passenger Agent of the Oregon Short Line at Salt Lake City, from whence conservatively prepared pamphlets descriptive of irrigation methods and containing reliable information about the various localities now open for settlement, are being mailed free.

The time is certainly not far distant when the unoccupied public domain of Idaho will be entirely taken up, a condition which will be most unfortunate to those who delay taking advantage of the rare opportunities now offered.

Insignificant Wounds.

A Berlin physician has written an article on the dangers resulting from what are considered insignificant wounds to the thumb; permanent disability followed in 60 per cent.

SMALLPOX DISTRIBUTORS.

How the Germs Are Nurtured and the Disease Is Spread.

It would seem that people will never learn to be careful. The recent alarming spread of that dire epidemic, smallpox, throughout different sections of the country has been traced by physicians and sanitarians in many instances directly to the moldy and rotting layers of paper and paste which cover the walls of many houses. The practice of laying layer after layer of paper on a wall, using common flour paste, is especially calculated to create homes for disease germs. People could not do more to effect such a result if they tried. The rotting vegetable matter affords caves from which are ready to dart forth the infection at every opportunity. There is no excuse for this practice, as walls and ceilings can be coated with a pure, cleanly and sanitary material like Alabastine, for instance, at no greater expense. Alabastine is a rock-base cement, which incorporates itself with the wall or ceiling. It is easily applied, comes ready to mix with cold water, requires no washing or scraping before renewing or retinting, is beautiful, long-lasting and safe.

For walls that have been infected, nothing is equal to Alabastine as a disinfectant to render them pure and clean and the rooms once more habitable.

SHOOTS HIS WIFE.

Crime of Madly Jealous Husband at Omaha.

ENDS HIS OWN LIFE WITH A BULLET.

Frank Steele Fires Four Shots at His Better Half and Two at Himself—Wife Is Mortally Wounded.

As a result of jealousy Frank Steele of 419 Walnut street shot his wife and killed himself at the home of Rev. A. F. Nelson at 2839 Cass street, Omaha, Neb. Steele fired six shots, four of which took effect, two in the body of his wife and two in his own body. Mrs. Steele was taken to the Clarkson hospital and the body of Steele was removed to the coroner's office, where it was found that he had shot himself in the center of the forehead and just below the heart. The course of the bullets in his wife's body have not yet been traced.

Steele was formerly employed by the Swift Packing company, at South Omaha, but for some time has been out of employment.

When a reporter visited the house Mrs. Steele was reclining on a sofa in the basement of the house. She was conscious and took a lively interest in the arrangements being made for her removal to the hospital, but was growing rapidly weaker through internal hemorrhage. She said: "Frank was jealous of me. He accused me of having improper relations with various men, and his sister, who lives in town, supported him in his accusations. He was crazy through jealousy and for a long time he has been acting queerly. Last Easter he ran away from home and went to Chicago. He stayed there a day or two and came back home. Since then he has been quarreling with me.

"Have they made any arrangements for the funeral? But I suppose his sister will do that. Do you think if I am strong enough they will let me see him before he is buried? I would like to see him again on earth."

FUND GIVEN MRS. LAWTON

Check for Nearly a Hundred Thousand Turned Over to Her.

An interesting scene occurred at the Riggs National bank in Washington, when the fund raised by a grateful people in recognition of the services of the late Major General Lawton was formally transferred to his widow. The parties to the transaction were Mrs. Mary C. Lawton, Adjutant General Corbin, Acting Commissary General Weston, and C. C. Glover, the last named representing the bank. General Corbin, as treasurer of the fund, drew a check for $98,432.07 in favor of Mary C. Lawton, and saw that it was transferred to her credit on the books of the bank. At the same time his account as treasurer of the fund was closed.

In addition to the money, the committee turned over to Mrs. Lawton all the letters received from subscribers to the fund, many of which contain beautiful tributes to the memory of her lamented husband.

AFFIRMED THE JUDGMENT

Supreme Court Takes Action in Several Important Cases.

The Nebraska supreme court has adjourned after a sitting of two days. The court handed down several opinions, among them one affirming the judgment of the Lancaster county district court in refusing to enjoin the board of transportation from acting under the new law which gives the board power to regulate express, telegraph and telephone rates. The court touched on the deficiency judgment law, affirmed two judgments in damage suits growing out of the Rock Island wreck that occurred near Lincoln in the year 1894, affirmed a judgment holding that Knox county shall not be divided and sealed down the judgment for libel secured by the Omaha World Herald against the Omaha Bee from $4,000 to $1,000.

Not a Pleasing Record.

The trial of the George Coil murder case at Chadron, Neb., brought out the fact that within the history of Dawes county, including the time before it was divided from Sioux county, there had been twenty-one murders committed and there had not been a single conviction in all that time; that Dawes county had had more murders than any county in the state, with the exception of Douglas and Lancaster, in which the cities of Omaha and Lincoln are situated.

Both Found Guilty.

At Cleveland, Ohio, the jury in the case against Albert E. Davis and Samuel G. Brookes, charged with defrauding the city in connection with the so-called city hall steals, brought in a verdict finding both guilty. They were employed as clerks in the public works department, and were charged with making out and receiving money on false bills to the extent of many thousands of dollars.

TO TEST THE GOLD CLAUSE

Much Mooted Question Gets Into the Supreme Court.

Justice Brown, as circuit justice of the Seventh district court, says a Washington dispatch, allowed a writ of error to the supreme court of the United States which will probably call out an opinion on the validity of the contracts specifying payment in gold coin. The case is that of Eliza and George Dorr vs. Amy Hunter, from the supreme court of Illinois. The Dorrs gave Miss Hunter a note for $4,500, payment to be made in gold coin. Default being made, suit was brought and collection was resisted on the ground that the clause requiring payment in gold was contrary both to the constitution and to the acts of February 28, 1888, and July 14, 1890. The contract is therefore claimed to be both unconstitutional and illegal.

PAUNCEFOTE IS TO REMAIN

Day of Ambassador's Retirement Put Off a Third Time.

Lord Pauncefote has received a cablegram from Lord Salisbury notifying him that he would be continued at this important post for the present, at least. Reference was made to the pendency in the United States senate of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, and of the several open issues of great importance with which the present ambassador is better fitted to deal than any other person by reason of his perfect familiarity. The ambassador had made arrangements to return with his family to England on the 28th inst.

It is understood that Lord Pauncefote will remain at the head of the embassy until some time in the fall. It is said that such an extension as this, the third, has only one precedent in the British diplomatic service.

Engine Drops Into River.

The west-bound track of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago railway, which spanned Robinson street, Allegheny, sank under the weight of a heavy freight engine, letting the engine and a freight car drop to the street. There were four men on the engine, two of whom were killed outright, and a third one probably fatally injured. Conductor James Martin was badly scalded and his recovery is hardly possible. The engineer escaped by jumping.

Brakeman Has Arm Mashed.

At Broken Bow Ed Landsigan of Alliance, brakeman on the second division of No. 45, had his right arm badly mashed while attempting to adjust a coupling. The train had just started out when he noticed the pin was nearly out. He motioned the engineer to slack, thinking he could readjust the pin without stopping the train. Just as he passed between the cars the bumpers caught his arm, mashing the flesh, but fortunately missing the bone.

Corbin Courts Full Inquiry.

The resolution adopted by the senate calling for a complete record of the court-martial which tried Adjutant-General Corbin when lieutenant-colonel of the Fourteenth colored infantry on a charge of cowardice, and other information as to his military career, called for a mass of papers that will require a week's time to copy, according to the estimate of the war department. General Corbin courts the fullest inquiry.

Falls Heir to a Fortune.

Maurice Baumgarten, who has been a resident of Nebraska City for many years, has received from Denmark the news of the death of his mother. By her death Mr. Baumgarten and a sister, who are the only heirs, come into possession of between $25,000 and $30,000 each. As soon as he can make arrangements he will, with his family, go to his old home, and it is thought will reside there in the future.

CHINESE HISTORICAL METHODS

Work of Writers Not Published Till Long After Dynasty's Close.

The Chinese court historian's work does not see the light until the reigning dynasty comes to an end, says the St. Louis Republic. In this way these celestial historians have an opportunity to describe most truthfully the virtues and vices of the various rulers and the real significance of the events which take place during their regime. They can write what they please without fear of censure, for they know that their work will not be published as long as the reigning dynasty lasts. This has been the rule for more than 2,000 years. The duty of these historians is to write a plain account of all events that occur during their tenure of office. At regular intervals their completed work is taken from them and locked up in an iron safe or vault. There it remains until the first member of a new dynasty ascends the throne. It is then given, with all the other histories in the vault, to the court historian who is then living, and from the mass of documents he is expected to prepare a truthful history of the dynasty which has just expired. The present dynasty has been reigning since 1644, and consequently, no court history has been published since that time.

Our Nation's Wealth.

The material wealth and strength of our nation is in iron, the most useful of all metals, just as the wealth of a human being lies in a useful stomach. If you have over-worked yours, try Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It will relieve the clogged bowels, improve the appetite and cure constipation, dyspepsia and biliousness.

How to Take Medicine.

The taste of disagreeable medicine may usually be removed by a draught of pure cold water. In some cases this is not effectual, and then a piece of dried orange peel will answer the purpose. It is a good plan to save a little very thinly pared orange peel, and to dry it in the oven or before the fire till it is crisp and hard for taking after medicine. This costs nothing and is far better than sweetmeats.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

6,434 Letters a Day.

The John A. Salzer Seed Company, LaCrosse, Wis., received 6,434 orders last Monday, which is a monster day, but they expect to double this number by the middle of March. The firm is having a great trade in its specialties—potatoes, speltz, Bromus Inermis, rape, Big Four oats, Three-Eared corn and earliest vegetables. There is a wonderful demand for onions, cabbage, peas and bean seed this year. Early Bird radish and Lightning cabbage, the earliest of this kind in the wide, wide world, are having a tremendous sale.

AMERICAN TRANSVAAL FUND.

To Aid Widows and Orphans of the Boers.

A pathetic appeal of the committee of Africander and Bond members of parliament was issued at Cape Town, Oct. 10, 1899, signed by Messrs. N. F. DeWaal, Joseph N. Hoffman, J. H. Hofmeyr, Thomas P. Theron and D. J. A. Van Zyl, which says among other things:

"What may, what can, we colonial Africanders do in this sorrowful time? Join in the work of warfare with the weapons? The law and our duty as British subjects forbid this, even should other circumstances not oppose such a course of action.

"But what neither the law nor the duty of the subject forbids, and what, moreover, agrees in every respect with all principles of religion and humanity, is the offering of help to the wounded, to the widows and the orphans."

In the name of the Africander bond, on behalf of the citizens of the South African republic and their noble ally, the Orange Free State, I appeal to all Americans to show their sympathy with the brave people who are now, in the words of John Hancock, literally offering all that they have, all that they are, and all that they hope to be, upon the altar of their country, fighting to the death the arrogance and imposition of the great British empire, in order to remain free and independent, as did our American forefathers in 1776 and 1812. THERE WILL BE NO BOER WOUNDED ON THE BRITISH-AMERICAN HOSPITAL SHIP.

Send to me your subscriptions, small and large, and I will send the amount to Mr. C. C. de Villiers, Cape Town, the honorable treasurer of the committee of the Africander bond, to be expended under that appeal. I sent $2,000 on Feb. 23, 1900.

The above illustration shows one of the mammoth buildings occupied by the great Mail Order House of the John M. Smyth Company of Chicago.

For one-third of a century this Company has been in business. Beginning in a small way, they supplied their neighbors in the near-by towns, each year widening their field. They are now selling merchandise direct to the consumer at wholesale prices throughout the United States.

Some years ago they began supplying their customers with an illustrated catalogue. As the business expanded they were obliged to increase the size of this catalogue, until today it exceeds 1,000 illustrated pages, quoting the lowest wholesale prices on everything to Eat, Wear and Use. By a superior process of color photography they illustrate many of their goods in natural colors, bringing out the rich color value of curtains, carpets, draperies, and the latest designs in wall paper, etc., thus enabling the customer hundreds of miles distant to select goods at his own fireside, knowing by the description, illustration and price the class of goods he may expect.

This feature of their business is becoming more and more popular each year, for it not only saves long and tiresome railroad journeys but is a great time saver. It leaves out the profit of the jobbing house, the retailer, the expensive commercial traveler, the general agent, the sub-agent and thus eliminates from one to four profits, saving this amount for the consumer. In short, it is a great wholesale store brought to the home. The mammoth catalogue referred to is a 20th century dictionary of economy.

The illustration below shows the recent building added to this great enterprise.

The success of this Company seems incredible, considering the fact that they have advertised so little. Their spirit of fairness and industry is the secret of this wonderful success. The quantity of goods they require in some lines enables them to handle train loads of merchandise secured at the lowest possible cost and freight rate.

When goods in the rough are coming from the mills and factories in the East, the lake steamers are pressed into service at a freight expense which is but little in advance of the iron ore rates.

Their references are: Any bank or express company, or any man, woman or child in Chicago.

GOEBEL'S SLAYERS

Sensational Movement Begun at Frankfort

A BOLD MOVE OF THE DEMOCRATS

Warrants Issued for Secretary State Powers and Other Leading Men on the Charge of Complicity in the Murder of Governor Goebel.

A Frankfort, Ky., March 9 dispatch says: W. H. Coulter, a clerk in the office of State Auditor Sweeney, was arrested and placed in jail tonight, charged with complicity in the murder of the late Governor William Goebel. The arrest was made by Chief of Police Williams at 9 o'clock tonight. Warrants have also been issued for the arrest of Secretary of State Caleb Powers, Captain John W. Davis, policeman of the state capital square, ex-Secretary Charles Finley and John T. Powers, brother of Secretary of State Powers. None of these warrants have been served.

COMMITTEE AMEND TREATY

Senate Thinks United States Must Control the Canal.

The senate committee on foreign relations Friday agreed to report the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, amending the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, with an amendment granting authority for the defense of the canal by this country when constructed.

The foreign relations committee was practically unanimous in favor of the amendment to the treaty. Some objection was made by Senator Morgan of Alabama, but he will not oppose the measure in the senate.

The amendment is brief. It simply provices that the restrictions in the treaty shall not operate to prevent the United State from using its own force for the protection of the interests of the United States and the maintenance of order.

ROAD IS LEFT OPEN

Nothing to Stop British From Entering Bloemfontein.

A Poplar Grove, Orange Free State, March 9 dispatch says: General French who is ten miles ahead, reports that his fropt is clear of the Boers. All other reports tend to confirm the state of disorganization of the Boer forces, Transvaal as well as Free State. The general impression is that the further progress of the British to Bloemfontein will not be opposed.

A great amount of ammunition was destroyed today. This included several boxes of explosive bullets, on the outside of which the Boers had marked "Manufactured for the British government."

BONDSMEN WILL BE SUED

Shortage of Ex-Treasurer Lynch Must be Settled.

The county supervisors of Platte county in session at Columbus have directed the county attorney to proceed without unnecessary delay against the bondsmen of Ex-Treasurer J. U. Lynch for a balance of about $13,000 in his shortage in settlement with the county. Lynch was treasurer prior to January 1, 1896, and his original shortage was $30,000, over half of which he managed to make good.

Barely Escapes Lynching.

Fred Dunker, the tramp who attacked and chloroformed Mrs. Henry Wise, wife of a prominent farmer, six miles south of Marion, Ind., and who with great difficulty was placed in the Marion jail to protect him from the indignant neighbors, was secretly removed to the jail at Wabash, Ind., by the sheriff. The mob made strong demonstrations and twice very nearly succeeded in getting possession of the prisoner.

Not the Bubonic Plague.

Telegraphing from San Francisco Surgeon Gassoway says: Reliable information that the Chinaman who died and who was suspected of having had the plague has been in San Francisco continuously for fifteen years, and for the last six months under treatment of other diseases. Probable cause of death, congestion of lungs and pneumonia.

"5 DROPS" is perfectly harmless. It does not contain Salicylate of Soda nor Opiates in any form. The Child can use it as well as the Adult.

[TRADE MARK]

Read carefully what Mr. L. R. Smith, of El Dorado Springs, Mo., writes us under date of Nov. 27, 1899, also Martan Bowers, of Caraghar, Ohio, under date of Dec. 16th, 1899:

NEURALGIA

I do not know how to express how wonderful I think your "5 DROPS" medicine is. I was suffering intensely with NEURALGIA and thought for a month that I would have to die. One day a lady called to see me and brought me an advertisement of your "5 DROPS." I resolved to try it and sent for a sample bottle. Have been taking it for three weeks and have not had an attack of suffering since I took the first dose. I believe it has saved my life. This statement is positively true. I shall also take pleasure in recommending your "5 DROPS" for the cure of NEURALGIA.

L. R. SMITH.

RHEUMATISM

Your "5 DROPS" came to hand on the 11th of last month and was glad to receive it for I was suffering at the time with untold agonies. The first dose helped me out of my pain on short notice. Bless the name of God for it. It will do all you say it will, and more too. I had severe pains all over my body, when night came I could not sleep. The worst pain was in my left leg. I could not put my foot to the floor without suffering great pain. Have used four different kinds of medicine for RHEUMATISM and got no relief until I got your "5 DROPS," which gave me immediate relief as above stated. MARTAN BOWERS, Box 83, Caraghar, Ohio, Dec. 16, 1899.

30 DAYS to enable sufferers to give "5 DROPS" at least a trial, we will send a sample bottle, prepaid by mail for 25c. A sample bottle will convince you. Also, large bottles (300 doses) $1.00, 6 bottles for $5. Sold by us and agents. AGENTS WANTED in New Territory. Don't wait! Write now!

Lord Mayor Tallon of Dublin upon Woman Suffrage in Ireland.

Hon. Daniel Tallon, Lord Mayor of Dublin, has recently visited this Country, and in answer to an inquiry says of woman suffrage in Ireland:

The Irish Local Government Act of 1898, which came into operation on Jan. 16, 1899, gave the suffrage to women with men on all question of local government in Ireland; that is, on every question on which the Irish people vote, except that of sending Parliamentary representatives to the British House of Commons in London.

In Dublin, previous to the Local Government Act, we had only about 8,000 votes none of whom were women. Now our voter's list numbers about 45,000 of whom about 15,000 are women.

Women in very large numbers availed themselves of their new privileges or rights, in January, and I have every reason to believe that their votes helped to secure the election of candidates pledged to important social reforms.

As regards the manner and conduct of the elections, not alone in Dublin, but also in Ireland, they were most orderly and well conducted; no disorder of any kind took place at any of them. This was certainly unique, as it was the first occasion on which the masses of the people exercised the franchise, and the sudden enfranchisement of an entire people might not have been expected to work smoothly on the first occasion it was exercised.

I also desire to point out that the new privileges of women are not confined to the franchise. The Local Government act of 1898 created the following bodies:

1. County Councils for the 32 administrative Counties of Ireland.
2. Borough Councils for the six cities of Dublin, Belfast, Cork, Limerick, Londonderry and Waterford.
3. Urban Councils for all other towns.
4. Rural District Councils for the country districts.
5. Boards of Guardian for the care and control of the poor.

Women can be elected members of the Urban Councils, Rural Councils, and Boards of Poor Law Guardians; and the enactment did not remain a dead letter even on the first occasion of its application. The talented wife of a foremost merchant of Dublin, Mr. Maurice Dockrell, was a Councillor of the Urban District of Blackrock, and on the first meeting of the Council she was unanimously elected Deputy Chairman—if such a name is permissable—but I do not know that any other name is used. I have every reason to think that the presence of Mrs. Dockrell in the Blackrock Urban Council is for the good of the Council, and that the womanly dignity of Mrs. Dockrell has in no way suffered, but on the contrary has been enhanced.

In Templemore, Mrs. Bracken, a graduate of the Royal University of Ireland, was elected chairman. I think the lady was the only member of the Council possessed of a University education.

But the bodies to which the largest number of women were elected were the Boards of Guardians. I myself, nominated a lady long distinguished for her charitable and philanthropic work in Dublin for the position of Poor Law Guardian. She was elected. In all, as well as I remember, about fifty women were elected Guardians. As the Guardians control the Poor Houses, the Poor Hospitals, and the administration of medical relief to the poor, I am satisfied that the election of women on these boards is for the advantage of the community.

In conclusion, I have no reason to think that the women who were elected or voted for Councillors or Guardians in any way suffered a loss of dignity or domesticity; but, on the contrary, I think the entire community is better and richer by the new powers accorded to women, who are so devoted to the social amelioration of the human race.

It is very hard to stand idly by and see our dear ones suffer while awaiting the arrival of the doctor. An Albany (N.Y.) dairyman called at a drug store there for a doctor to come and see his child, then very sick with croup. Not finding the doctor in, he left word for him to come at once on his return. He also bought a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, which he hoped would give some relief until the doctor should arrive. In a few hours he returned, saying the doctor need not come, as the child was much better. The druggist, Mr. Otto Scholz, says the family has since recommended Chamberlain's Cough Remedy to their neighbors and friends until he has a constant demand for it from that part of the country. For sale by S. G. Wright, Druggist.

Every happy home contains children, and yet with children come anxieties that for years fill mothers' hands and hearts. Recognizing the universal need of such a series of subjects, The Delineator has been publishing articles from the pen of Dr. Grace Peckham Murray dealing with The Sick Child. The April article refers to The Fevors of Childhood. All Dr. Murray's work is characterized by careful thoroughness, and her advice is of the practical kind needed by anxious mothers. There are sixteen portraits of the fair and patriotic daughters of the South in the April number of The Delineator. The article that they illustrate deals with "The Patriotic Work of Southern Women." It is a testimonial to the ability of southern women for public organized work. Waldon Fawcett is the author and he touches his subject most sympathetically. A novel method of illustrating and at the same time a very useful one, is adopted in the April number of The Delineator, where in connection with a cookery article pictures are shown photographed directly from the dishes they represent. The fourth and last article by Cornelia Atwood Pratt regarding The Young Girl appears in the April number of The Delineator. It is a wise and careful discussion of that interesting period in a young girl's life when she becomes conscious that the company of a young man is at times more interesting to her than the com of her sister.

Lewis Ackerman, Goshen, Ind., says "DeWitt's Little Early Risers always bring certain relief, cure my headache and never gripe." They generally cleanse and invigorate the bowels and liver.

W. F. Tracey traded his stock of dry goods in this city last Saturday to F. J. Munneke, of Burchard, for Mr. Munneke's 80 acre farm and a cash consideration. The parties are invoicing this week and the new proprietor will take charge about March 17. Mr. Tracy has been engaged in business for himself since May 1st, 1894, since which time he has built up a large and lucrative business. He has been connected with the dry goods trade for the past twenty years, his first position being with Hankins & Wright in the stone store opposite the Exchange hotel. Mr. Munneke was formerly the proprietor of a store in Burchard and has had a life-time experience in the business, having grown up, we might say, behind the counter. He will move his family to this city as soon as he can rent a house. We are sorry to loose Mr. Tracy from among our business men but bespeak for Mr. Munneke the liberal patronage of the community.—Pawnee Republican.

We have saved many doctor's bills since we began using Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in our home. We keep a bottle open all the time and whenever any of my family or myself begin to catch cold we begin to use the Cough Remedy, and as a result we never have to send away for a doctor and incur a large doctor bill, for Chamberlain's Cough Remedy never fails to cure. It is certainly a medicine of great merit and worth.—D. S. Moarkle, General Merchant and Farmer, Mattie, Bedford country, Pa. For sale by S. G. Wright, Druggest.

SELECT THE RIGHT MEN

Good and Strong Words that Republicans Ought to Heed.

RESPONSIBILITIES TO BE FACED.

Ringing Words on True Republicanism—Experiences of the Past Should Be a Guide for the Future—Only Honest and Capable Men Should Be Honored With Place.

(From the Nebraska State Journal.)

The decision for an early convention for nominating all candidates for state and county officers, including members of the legislature, brings the republicans of this county face to face with important responsibilities that must be dealt with within the next thirty days.

The experiences of the last session of the legislature have taught the people of Lancaster county the absolute necessity of sending some strong men and trustworthy men to represent them in the legislature. In the last legislature adequate leadership was lacking to a painful degree on the republican side of the house.

A sufficient number of republicans, some of them from Lancaster county, got into the habit of bolting the decision of the republican caucus and joining with the fusion minority for personal or political ends to prevent wholesome action by the majority party and to endanger for a time republican success in the election of a United States senator.

This sort of thing cannot be submitted to and it behooves the republicans of Lancaster county to make no more mistakes in candidates. Whether the republicans of Nebraska will succeed in electing again a majority of the legislature, thereby securing with ordinary good faith and party allegiance, two republicans in the United States senate in place of Senators Thurston and Allen, remains to be seen, and there will undoubtedly be a lively campaign in the senatorial and representative districts of the state.

Every precaution should be taken by the republican organization to guard against accidents and failure, in case the republicans have a majority, when the votes are polled.

The majority will be a slender one in any event, probably, and that makes it exceedingly desirable, first of all that there shall be strong men elected in the republican districts, and second, men concerning whose fealty to the republican party there shall be no shadow of doubt.

No men should be nominated for the legislature weak enough and personally greedy enough to sign any sort of contract with the members of the fusion minority in case of a republican majority, binding themselves to act with the fusionists either in matters of legislation or in the matters of the selection of a senator.

The republicans of this county especially cannot afford to forget for a moment the occurrences of a year ago, nor can they afford to nominate or elect any man to the legislature who has been recreant in the past to the republican party, or who has bolted a republican caucus, and made ignoble terms with our political opponents.

Only by living up to this rule can the Lancaster county republicans hope to preserve their organization. It is a sine qua non this year.

To retain her proper influence in the legislature it may be necessary to call upon gentlemen of Lancaster county who seek no office, legislative or otherwise, to make the sacrifice of allowing themselves to stand for a legislative nomination. The interests of the county and state often demand such sacrifices, and the Journal most earnestly appeals to the patriotism of our leading citizens to bring about an improvement in the material of a legislative ticket this year. Lancaster county demands for the emergency men of the highest character and of acknowledged ability and force on the republican ticket for both houses.

World's Export Trade.

The export business of the United States is now almost as great as that of Great Britain, the figures for 1899 being $1,253,486,000, or within thirty-four million dollars of the total from the United Kingdom. In 1875, however, the figures were: United States, $497,263,737; Great Britain, $1,087,497,000. The protective tariff has done wonders.

High Figures for Bonds.

The outstanding 2 per cent currency option bonds of the United States are quoted at 103. The 2 per cent thirty-year gold bonds, which will be issued under the new currency bill, it is expected will sell at 105. These high prices are complimentary, indeed, to the stability of the financial system of the country. The bonds of no other country command such high figures.—St. Louis Star.

Big Profits in the South.

Down where Bryan is certain that the country will vote for free trade, some of the new mills built up under the protective tariff are making immense profits. One cotton mill built at Clover, S. C., eight years ago, had on June 30, 1899, net earnings amounting to $36,940, or 41 per cent for the year, on the capital stock of $89,000. Previous to that time the stockholders had already got out of the mill in dividends more than their total investment.

Watterson Denounces the Goebel Law.

In its issue of a few days ago the Louisville Courier-Journal contained the following editorial:

"It may be taken for granted that the present Goebel election law will be radically amended, or replaced by one very different from it.

"No party will care to go before the people as the champion of the existing law. It has been fully tried and the gravest fears for it have proved well founded. It is doomed, and those who hoped most from it now recognize that it is a failure and will cooperate with or lead a movement for a satisfactory substitute.

"Certainly those who a few months ago were the most sanguine advocates of the law are its champions no longer. It is they who have suffered most through its failure. The democrats know that at last fall's election they lost thousands of votes through the handicap of this law, and that since the election it has been used at almost every turn to further cripple them. They have had enough of it."

Money in the South.

The south is at last getting on a self-sustaining basis, and is able to move the cotton crop with southern capital. The general development of the industries there, on account of the protective tariff, has led to a great increase in the banking facilities so that the southern banks are now able to furnish the money needed to handle the crop.

In spite of this great improvement in conditions, the south will be expected to vote for free trade, free silver, anti-expansion or any other dose which the leaders of the democratic party sees fit to concoct.

Repudiates Goebelism.

John A. Yates, chairman of the democratic committee of Metcalfe county, Kentucky, has resigned his position. In his letter to Chairman Young of the democratic state committee he says:

"Seeing that the democratic legislature of Kentucky is determined to decide the contests for governor and lieutenant governor in favor of persons who were not elected, and that said legislature (a majority of whom are democrats) has no intention of repealing the Goebel election law, and inasmuch as my mind is made up never again to vote the so-called democratic ticket while the said law is on the statute books, and while Goebelism is in control of the party, I hereby tender my resignation as chairman of the democratic county central committee of Metcalfe county, and ask that the same be accepted at once."

Savings Bank Depositors.

In the state of New York alone the increase in savings bank deposits have amounted to $169,303,762 since McKinley's election. There are in the state now over 2,000,000 depositors, having to their credit $887,480,650.

Jones is an Octopus.

Chairman Jones of the democratic party is connected with one of the greatest trusts in the country, the round bale cotton trust, and has been a director and stockholder in the American Cotton company for years. These trusts are incorporated in New Jersey, the state which Bryan recently spoke of as the "robber's roost."

Increased Money Circulation.

The monthly statement of the comptroller of the currency for February shows that the total circulation of national bank notes at the close of business on the 28th was $249,434,878, an increase for the year of $6,532,511, and an increase for the month of $2,447,685.

Trusts in a Free Trade Country.

The official report comes to the state department at Washington that there is a wholesale movement in Austria toward the formation of trusts. Some of the combinations noted in the report are among the hat makers, paper factories, sugar makers, shoe factories, knit goods and gas plants.

And Austria is a free trade country, where the protective tariff could not by any possibility be the "mother of the trusts." The only tariff there is in the nature of an internal revenue on cigars, tobaccos and a few other articles.

Paying the National Debt.

The monthly statement of the receipts and expenditures of the United States shows that the total receipts for the month of February were $45,631,265, and the expenditures $37,738,472, leaving a surplus for the month of $7,892,793.

In the last eight months the receipts have exceeded the expenditures by $37,763,000, representing a reduction of the national debt by about that same amount.

When the democratic party was in full control the government failed to pay expenses, although it was a time of profound peace. It makes a great difference who is running the machine.

Crocodile Tears for Puerto Rico.

The democrats of congress bewailed the fact that the United States was robbing Puerto Rico by the tariff. But when the proposition came up to devote all the collections from the tariff at both ends of the line to the relief of the people of Puerto Rico, the democrats voted solidly against it. For the sake of an additional plank in their platform they were willing to let the islanders starve.

The system of evolution obtains in the politics of Nebraska. A few years ago the independents resoluted against the lawyers, decided not to nominate or vote for them, and blacklisted them so far as the organization was concerned. Since then by a gradual process the lawyers have gained full control of the whole organization, and none but lawyers are elected to congress and to other important places.

A Southern Expansionist.

Senator McLauren of South Carolina is an out-and-out expansionist, and he voiced the sentiments of a large constituency in the south when he said in the course of a speech a few days ago in congress:

"Our southern manufacturers have already reached out to the markets of the Orient and discovered their advantages. The southern farmer needs such markets for his raw cotton to make its production remunerative. By the acquisition of the Philippines we hold the key of the eastern situation. We need not rely solely upon treaty rights to secure the 'open door,' but can demand equal commercial opportunity with other nations, and if necessary, with the vantage ground we have assert that demand. Will the United States throw away the golden opportunity by giving up the Philippines? I am in favor of holding them, and I believe the southern farmers and manufacturers will sustain me in my position. I believe further that the presence of the United States and of its flag, the emblem of human freedom, progress and civilization, will carry to the millions in the Orient unnumbered blessings which, in the coming years, will be for their betterment and amelioration, and will conduce to the perpetuity and glory of our free institutions and the commercial supremacy of the nation."

A table printed by Bradstreet's shows that 3,553 New York business houses, which had on their rolls 299,957 employes in 1896, have increased the number to 356,278, while the increase in wages in 1899 as compared with 1896 was over $20,000,000.

During the first seven months of the current fiscal year the exports of American manufactures show an increase of $52,000,000 over the similar period in the fiscal year 1899, in spite of the fact that 1899 beat all previous records.

The per capita circulation of the United States has increased from $4.99 in 1800, and $13.85 in 1860, to $25.098 in 1900.

During the past five years the agricultural exports from this country have amounted to $3,100,000,000, and of this 95 per cent was sold to European gold standard countries.

The Gold Standard in Japan.

The "Report on the Adoption of the Gold Standard in Japan," by Count Maysayoshi, minister of finance for Japan, has been received in a translated form at Washington, and contains some interesting information on a subject which is receiving considerable attention in this country. It discusses in detail the history of the currency in Japan, and closes with a chapter entitled: "Effect of Coinage Reform upon the Economic Condition of Our Country." The following is a quotation from the report:

"Since the adoption of the gold standard (in 1897) our currency has been freed from constant fluctuations in its exchange rate, to which it was subject before. Owing to this latter fact, moreover, the relations between the claims of the creditor and the liabilities of the debtor become less subject to sudden and unexpected changes; business transactions are made safe; an improvement in credit took place in the community at large; prices became more constant; in a word, the way was now opened for the steady and orderly growth of our commerce and industry."

The minister of finance refers to the great expansion in the commerce and industries, and especially to the large increase in number and amount of checks and bills passing through the clearing houses. He says that since the adoption of the law capitalists from the gold standard countries have been investing freely in the country, and there is a growing tendency toward lower interest rates, the investors being no longer afraid of the loss subsequent to the fluctuations in the price of silver. A great increase in the commerce with gold standard countries is also noted. Another quotation from the report is as follows:

"Since our coinage reform enabled us to avoid all the evil effects of fluctuations in the price of silver, we stand now no longer, as was formerly the case, under the necessity of making plans for financial matters with the currency constantly changing in value, and sometimes suffering unexpected losses and evils in times when those evils are unusually violent. All those fears of miscalculation and losses have now become a thing of the past. Most particularly in the last few years when national expenditures for things bought abroad, such as war ships, etc., have greatly increased in amount, we have doubtless been able to avoid, on account of our coinage reform, great losses on the part of the national treasury. Besides, since our adoption of the gold standard, our government bonds have been sold in no small amount in the European market, so that their names appear regularly in the price list of the London Stock Exchange. This fact at once converted our bonds into an international commodity, and will no doubt lead to a closer relationship between our home and the foreign money markets."

This glowing report of the improvement of conditions in Japan will be cold comfort to the silver men of this country who have repeatedly declared that the adoption of the gold standard by any country could bring nothing but distress and disaster.

IS IN BLOEMFONTEIN

Town Surrenders to Lord Roberts' Forces.

MEETS WITH NO OPPOSITION AT ALL

Marches in Without Firing a Shot—Mayor Acts as an Escort—President's Home Occupied by the General—British are Happy.

A London, March 14 special says: It is officially announced that Lord Roberts has occupied Bloemfontein. The following is the text of Lord Roberts' dispatch to the war office annoucing his occupation of Bloemfontein:

"Bloemfontein, Tuesday, March 13 —8 p. m.—By the help of God and by the bravery of her majesty's soldiers, the troops under my command have taken possession of Bloemfontein. The British flag now flies over the presidency, evacuated last evening by Mr. Steyn, late president of the Orange Free State.

The above dispatch, though dated Tuesday, was not received at the war office until 7:30 p. m., Wednesday. It was made public a few minutes before 9 o'clock. The delay is attributed to the light telegraphs not being connected with Bloemfontein on Tuesday evening. Extra papers are already out on the streets and the night crowds of London are singing patriotic songs and engaging in demonstrations.

TO THE BITTER END

Action of Lord Salisbury Means Continued War.

A Pretoria, March 14 dispatch via Lorenzo Marques.—Lord Salisbury's reply to Presidents Kruger and Steyn causes bitter disappointment, and State Secretary Reitz says it means that the war will have to be fought to the bitter end.

The answer of Lord Salisbury to the message from Presidents Kruger and Steyn—which was transmitted through the United States government, was received at a late hour Wednesday night by Secretary Hay through Mr. White, our charge at London.

As indicated in the London dispatches the answer was a declination of the appeal. It has been transmitted to Adelbert Hay, United States consul at Pretoria, who will submit it to the two presidents. This marks the end of the first overture toward peace.

FINANCIAL BILL A LAW

President Affixes Signature Upon Its Presentation.

At fourteen minutes to 1 o'clock Wednesday afternoon the president affixed his signature to the financial bill, thus making it a law of the land.

Mr. Overstreet of Indiana, who had the bill in charge, arrived at the White House about five minutes before that time, and was shown into the cabinet room, where he was joined by the president, who, after inquiring if the bill had been compiled with care, affixed his signature to it.

At the same time he recalled to those who stood by the fact that many of the important financial bills which had been passed by the congress had been approved on the 14th of the month. He spoke of the Sherman act, the resumption act and now the bill which was before him.

In signing the bill the president used a new gold pen and holder which Mr. Overstreet had brought with him for the purpose.

Swallows Piece of Steel.

The three-year-old son of Policeman James Boup, of Hastings, accidentally swallowed a two-inch piece of steel, broken from a pants guard usually worn by bicycle riders. The piece lodged low in the throat in the larynx. The little fellow suffered in terrible agony until the steel was removed by physicians. It was necessary to perform an operation, as all other means failed. The child is resting very well and it is believed that he will get over his experience without any serious results.

Firemen Caught Under Walls.

The building occupied by C. B. Cones & Sons, at Indianapolis, Ind., manufacturers of clothing, caught fire and within an hour was burned to the ground, causing a loss of $150,000. Four firemen were caught under a falling wall and one of them, Frank Mankin, was badly crushed and burned. The others escaped with slight injuries.

Elected to Fill Vacancy.

In the vote of Kenton county, Kentucky, to elect a senator to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Goebel, M. L. Harbison, Mr. Goebel's law partner, was elected by 529 majority over J. L. Creasy, his republican opponent.

Kills Himself While Insane.

In a fit of temporary insanity due to ill-health, C. R. Preston, manager of the Vicksburg, Miss., plant of the Diamond Match company, fired a pistol ball through his head inflicting a fatal wound. Mr. Preston is from Detroit.

FOR THE CITIZEN SOLDIERY

Argument Made for More Money for State Militia.

The committee representing the national guard of thirty-eight states, and presided over by General Patrick H. Barry of Nebraska, appeared before the military committee of the national house and presented arguments in favor of the passage of the new militia bill. In case the bill goes through, which now seems likely on account of the favorable attitude of the committee, the appropriation for the states' equipment of the guard will be increased to five times its present size, in which case Nebraska would receive $30,000 instead of $6,000, as under the old law. This would enable the guard of the state to fit up with modern rifles and equipment.

Awarded Full Amount.

In the district court at Clay Center, Neb., S. T. Bratcher was awarded a judgment for the full amount of his claim against the National Aid association. Bratcher and his wife had made application for membership, both applications being duly accepted and approved, but the wife was taken sick and died before being initiated into the order. The husband, being the beneficiary, brought suit for the amount of the insurance. The case has been hotly contested, and has been watched with considerable interest.

Shoots Himself Fatally.

Frank Hakel, sr., a German farmer living in Saunders county, while trying to kill a rabbit in a young orchard near his premises, accidentally shot and killed himself. The coroner was sent for, but on reaching the scene of the accident decided it was not necessary to hold an inquest. Mr. Hakel was sixty-five years old and leaves a widow, daughter and son.

THE NEWS CONDENSED

The pension committee of the house of representatives has practically agreed on a $40 pension for Mrs. Stottsenburg.

Three million dollars is the price paid by Swift & Co., of Chicago, for the packing plant and American holdings of the Eastman company of New York.

The condition of Judge Jesse J. Phillips of the Illinois supreme court, who is ill at his home in Hillsboro, has grown more serious. He can take but very little nobrishment.

The body of Captain Henry Nichols of the monitor Monadnock, who died from sunstroke at Manila, has been buried with naval and Masonic honors in Mountain View cemetery at Oakland, Cal.

Savannah, Ga., is being decorated in anticipation of the visit of Admiral and Mrs. Dewey on March 21 and 22. Every white military company in South Carolina, Georgia and Florida have been invited to take part in the military parade.

A March 13 dispatch from Capetown says General French has arrived at Bloemfontein. This may mean he is either in the Free State capital, or merely in the environs. The Boers are stubbornly resisting Roberts' advance, contesting every inch of ground.

At the request of Fred H. Wines, assistant director of the census at Washington, Fred Jewell, private secretary to Governor Poynter, has made an estimate on the population of the state. Based on the last vote Mr. Jewell's figures gives Nebraska a population of 1,366,524, which is 107,614 more than the census of 1890.

The British government will not allow the Kruger Steyn plea for peace to influence in any way their determination not to spare any effort to prosecute the war. There will be no diminution of measures calculated to maintain the full efficiency of the field force and whatever reinforcements were previously considered advisable will still be sent out.

A dispatch from Mafeking dated Monday, March 5, says the garrison at that place were then living acutely the stress of the siege. They were reduced to the use of horseflesh and bread made from horse forage, while the water was parasitically contaminated. In London at midnight on the 13th, there was an unconfirmed rumor that Mafeking had been relieved.

At a meeting of the trustees of the Iowa college held in Grinnell, President Gates presented his resignation to take effect November next. His wife has been ill for some time, and is now in Colorado. President Gates is obliged to make frequent trips to the west in order to be with her, and has decided that he could remain with the college no longer than it will ordinarily require to secure a successor.

The first issue of the Sheldon edition of the Topeka Daily Capital went to press at 2:37 Tuesday morning. Mr. Sheldon stayed in the office until the press started and carried home with him the first copy of the paper. All the mails were caught and the press was kept running until noon, over 100,000 copies being printed. The rest of the edition will be printed in Chicago and New York. A transcontinental train will also be issued. The circulation has reached close to 400,000 copies.

SHOOTS HUSBAND

CRIME COMMITTED AT CINCINNATI

Woman Claims She had Been Living a Veritable Hell For Years—Husband Was Extremely Cruel and Had Threatened Her Life.

A Cincinnati, O., March 15 dispatch says: Tonight Charles Adams, a passenger agent for the Union Pacific, with offices in the Carew building, who came here with his wife from Omaha last October, with their two young children, was shot and killed by his wife Jessie. The only person present was Gertie Thurman, the sister of the wife, who is an actress under the name of Gertie Hayes.

Mrs. Adams said she had been living a veritable hell for years; that her husband threatened her life; that he would hold her eldest son by the heels, head downwards, out of a fifth story window and had been habitually cruel. He had recently threatened her life, and she provided herself with a revolver for self defense.

Tonight he opened at supper with a terrific tirade of abuse, followed with a blow across the nose, which felled her to the floor and then struck her again. She struggled to her feet, drew a pistol and fired twice. The first shot struck him on the shoulder. The second ball entered behind the right ear and came out above the left eye. It was a fatal shot.

Adams has relatives in Omaha, and the sisters, Miss Thurman and Mrs. Adams, have relatives in Muscatine, Ia. Mrs. Adams is detained at the police station. Adams was under surveillance by the police early this winter for terrifying messenger boys.

FOR THE HORLOCKER CASE

Long Postponed, But Now Ready, Must Come to Trial.

That the Horlocker case will come up for trial at the regular term of the district court at Hastings is now an accepted fact. Both the prosecution and defense have been extremely busy in making every preparation. Fifty-seven witnesses have been subpoenaed.

It is very evident from the array of witnesses for the defense that a fight will be made upon the ground that Miss Horlocker was insane at the time of the commission of the crime with which she is charged, that of attempting the life of Mrs. Anna Morey through the means of chocolate bonbons dosed with arsenic.

KILLS DAUGHTER'S SLAYER

Town of Bannock, in Montana, Scene of Double Tragedy.

At Bannock, Mont., Fred Brown shot and killed Myrtle Lyttle, and Brown was killed by the girl's father, William Lyttle. There had been bad feeling between the Brown and Lyttle families for some time. Brown threatened to kill the whole Lyttle "outfit." The coroner's jury exonerated Lyttle, returning a verdict of justifiable homicide.

Arrested on Charge of Bigamy.

J. Nichol, a Columbus resident for several years, was arrested at Humphrey and put in jail on a charge of bigamy preferred by Mrs. A. L. Laughlin, whose daughter, Miss Lottie, he married in Columbus in November, 1893, alleging a marriage in Lancaster county in 1894. His first wife, it is alleged, is still living and not divorced.

Kills Wife and Himself.

Alfred Gregory, a farmer near Winslow, Pike county, Ind., killed his wife and himself. They leave six children. They are prominent. Gregory was butchering hogs and wanted his wife to heat water. She went visiting and after brooding over the matter all day he committed the deed.

Another Wreck Victim.

Mrs. Sallie Balke of Cincinnati died at the hospital at Kansas City, Mo., of injuries received in the Missouri Pacific wreck near Independence, Mo., on February 27. The body will be taken to Ohio for burial. Mrs. Balke is the fifth victim of the collision.

Heavy Loss for Texas.

Snow fell in north Texas, extending as far south as Waco, something never known before. Fruit trees in bloom and tender vegetables just coming up have been damaged and killed and the loss will be very heavy.

Right Hand Man Surrenders.

Flores, Aguinaldo's secretary of war, has surrendered to General MacArthur. Aguinaldo's infant son, who was captured in November, and who has been suffering from smallpox, is dead.

Snow in Mississippi.

Considerable snow fell at Utica, Miss. The thermometer registered 33 degrees. In all probability the fruit crop has been greatly damaged.

THE MORMONS DID IT.

WHAT WE OWE TO BRIGHAM YOUNG'S FOLLOWERS.

They Were the First to Put Into Operation the Idea of Irrigating Arid Regions—Has Grown Into Vast Proportions.

(Boise, Idaho, Letter.)

Criticise the Mormons as you will, they must be credited with the wonderful system of irrigation by which the wastes of the western states have been redeemed. On July 24, 1847, Brigham Young and his little band of pioneers began the construction of the first irrigation canal ever built in the United States.

Irrigation made of Utah's desert wilderness the garden spot of America. It is doing as much for Idaho, where the mountains are so located that ample valleys, and plains of millions of acres, may be easily and economically watered. On the Nile, in Italy, Spain and elsewhere in Europe, irrigation has prevailed for centuries. Indeed, 60 per cent of the world's breadstuffs and cereals are grown by irrigation.

Where "the vine-clad hills and citron groves" around Vesuvius in sunny Italy are found, a great population has been sustained for many thousand years—and the land has never worn out—its wonderful vitality being due to underlying strata of lava which by some curious chemistry renders the soil immortal.

Idaho's wonderfully productive soil covers lava strata deposited by volcanoes long ago extinct. The rejuvenescence of the land results not alone from this lava, but from rich fertilizers annually brought to it by the irrigation waters. It is almost an aphorism that land is good where sage brush grows. Marvelous must therefore be the fertility of Idaho, for everywhere the green of the sage is seen. Wheat, corn, oats, barley, alfalfa, timothy, rye, flax, tobacco, broom corn, sorghum, sweet and Irish potatoes, beets, cabbages, hops, and fruits, such as prunes, apples, pears, plums, peaches, cherries, apricots, nectarines, grapes and all of the small bush products, grow profusely, particularly do the apple, pear and prune attain to perfection in size and flavor.

Alex. McPherson of Boise City realized $600 per acre from apples. Geo. I. Hall of Mountain Home sold $800 worth of peaches from one acre. T. J. Phifer of Boise City realized $900 from two acres of Italian prunes. Instances like these can be multiplied ad infinitum.

But Idaho does not depend entirely upon agriculture. Its mountains are filled with mining camps which furnish a home market for far more agricultural products than the state is now able to produce.

Snake River Valley contains about 3,000,000 acres and some of the finest pastoral scenes there presented are in the midst of gold placer mining operations. Many farmers there realize handsomely for work during spare hours—washing shining powdered gold from the river's bed.

In a state having so many productive portions to select from it is hard to suggest particular locations, but settlers will find room for any number of new homes.

Different state and private agencies are sending out printed information about Idaho. Perhaps the most conservatively prepared matter is that now emanating from the general passenger agent of the Oregon Short Line at Salt Lake City, Utah. This railroad permeates almost every agricultural region in the state and stands ready to furnish to homeseekers every courtesy in the power of its officers.

At the present rate Idaho will soon be as thickly populated as Utah. It is in the same latitude as France, Switzerland, Portugal, Spain and Italy, and its climate is incomparable.

Vast timber areas furnish lumber of excellent quality. Cyclones and destructive storms never occur. The winters are short and people work out doors all the year. The annual death rate is the lowest of any state in the Union.

Verily Idaho is a wonderful state and destined to become the home place of many times its present population.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucus lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Rudyard Kipling tells a good story of himself. One day, he says, I was sitting in my study in London, when suddenly a gentleman appeared at the door unannounced, followed by two schoolboys. "Is this Rudyard Kipling?" inquired the gentleman. "Yes," I answered. He turned round. "Boys, this is Rudyard Kipling." "And this is where you write?" he continued. "Yes," I replied. "Boys, this is where he writes." And before I had time to ask them to take a seat they were gone, boys and all. I suppose they had all literary London to do in that way.

Fish Never Caught.

In Lake Derwentwater, in England, there is a species of fish called vendace which are never caught alive. They are said to frequent the deeper parts of the lake, and are never met with in the rivers. One or two dead specimens of the breed which have been found in the lake are treasured as curiosities. They have a strong resemblance to the sardine, and are about four or five inches long.

Chinese Ingenuity.

An odd contrivance is used in China to protect the carrier-pigeons from the attacks of birds of prey. Tiny bamboo tubes are fastened under their wings, and as they fly the air passing swiftly through the tubes makes a shrill whistle, which serves to frighten off the other birds.

Nothing Kills so Quickly as Loss of Sleep. Rest Needed for Repairs. How to Obtain it Without Fail.

Nothing breaks down a person so quickly as loss of sleep, that boon of mankind which gives the exhausted system rest for repairs.

You are nervous, have a load on your chest, are troubled with unaccountable anxiety and forebodings of evil, and roll and toss all night.

Towards morning you have fitful naps from sheer exhaustion, awake in a cold sweat—unrefreshed, pallid, trembling with bad taste in your mouth and a feeling of great weakness.

It's your stomach, your liver, your bowels.

Keep your digestive organs all on the move properly and your sleep will be restful and refreshing and all repairs will be attended to.

The way to do it is to use a mild, positive, harmless, vegetable laxative and tonic, Cascarets Candy Cathartic. They make the liver lively, prevent your stomach, purify the blood, regulate the bowels perfectly, make all things right as they should be.

"HOW HAPPY I AM to be able to say that I am free from pain after five years of severe suffering from neuralgia," writes Mrs. Archie Young, 1817 Oaks avenue, West Superior, Wis. "I am so thankful to be able to say that your 5 Drops is the best medicine I ever got in my life. When I received it from you last November, I used some of it right away. The first dose helped me. It is impossible to explain how I was suffering from neuralgia. I thought no one could get worse and that death would soon come. I was very weak, and I hardly thought I could live to see my husband come back from his daily labor. Now I can say that I am free from pain, my cheeks are red, my appetite is good and I sleep well all night. Many of my friends are surprised, and say they will send for some '5 Drops.'" Congress Calls Attention to Standard Oil Company.

Representative Fitzgerald, of Massachusetts, Friday introduced the following resolution:

"Whereas, It appears as a matter of public record that the Standard Oil company paid in the city of New York on March 15, 1900, the sum of seventeen million dollars, this amount being an extra dividend in addition to the regular quarterly dividend of three million dollars; and

"Whereas, It is a matter of public record that this last dividend is five million dollars in excess of the last quarterly dividend paid by this corporation; and

"Whereas, It is also a matter of public record that the price of kerosene oil, the sole means of lighting used by the middle and poorer classes of people, during the period of time between the declaration of these dividends was increased 3 cents per gallon, constituting a tax on every home in the land, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That in the opinion of congress this action of the Standard Oil company is in direct violation of the provisions of the Sherman anti-trust law; and therefore punishable by fine and imprisonment, and the attorney general is hereby directed, in accordance with the provisions of that act, to direct the several district attorneys of the United States in their respective districts to institute proper proceedings to bring the above named violators of the law to justice.

HIS LIFE IS IN DANGER

Feeling Against Dinsmore Becoming Very Bitter.

A sensation was furnished Friday evening in connection with the Dinsmore murder trial at Lexington, Neb., over what is alleged to have been an attempt to kill the prisoner, and as a result Sheriff Hays has arrested S. F. Tussong and lodged him in the county jail. According to the stories told, Tussong, who is a member of the board of supervisors of Buffalo county, made threats against Dinsmore and lay in wait for him in the corridor of the jail with a loaded revolver. He is charged with refusing to give up the weapon and with resisting the sheriff and his deputies before he was overpowered and placed in a cell. Tussong is well known in Odessa, his home, in Buffalo county, and his standing among his neighbors is good. The incident for the time being has absorbed all interest.

HE LIKES WESTERN CANADA.

Duhamel, Jan. 24, 1900.

Dear Sir and Friend—We had a lucky trip, made good connections and got to Wetaskiwin Monday afternoon, stayed there all night, bought a pony and saddle for the boy and hired a three-seated rig for the balance of us, and got home for dinner next day; caught the boys cleaning up and getting ready to come after us. Wednesday the snow was all gone and we had bare ground and bright sunshine for a month, and it has been pleasant weather ever since. The ground is frozen about two feet and about six inches of snow—just enough for good sleighing. We had one cold spell in December. The thermometer went down to 32 below zero, but we did not suffer with the cold at all. We have worked every day all winter, are all well and feeling well; have built a log house 18x18, two log stables 16x18, and are now busy on a well. We have 10 cows, three other cattle and six head of horses. The boys send their best respects to Mr. Huchison, and say they will talk to him enough to pay for not writing when he gets up here; will write you again next spring and tell you all about the winter. We all unite in sending you and family our best wishes and respects and hope this will find you all well.

Yours very respectfully,
(Signed) THOMAS TATE.

Growing Strawberries.

As there is no other fruit grown which gives as quick returns with as large a profit, it is to the interest of every family to have a small piece of ground somewhere about the place where a strawberry bed may be planted. The first condition for a strawberry bed is a piece of ground suitable for any garden, as strawberries need a rich, mellow soil to thrive well.

If on the farm, the rows should be planted three to four feet apart so that they may be worked with a two horse cultivator. After the first time hoeing the balance of the work can be done mostly with team. Plant the plants eighteen inches to two feet apart in the row.

In securing plants get only new plants which can be determined by the young, yellowish roots with no black, dry, knoty roots as old plants have. Get them fresh from the ground and plant again as soon as possible. The best tool convenient to every one to plant strawberry plants with is the spade. Set the spade in the ground, press it forward and set the plant in behind, letting the roots of the plant drop deep in the earth, withdraw the spade and make the plant a little deeper than it came out to allow the ground to settle, firm the earth well about the plant and you may be sure of a good stand. It is a good plan to keep the plants in a pail part full of water when planting to prevent drying by sun and wind. After the plants are planted be sure and keep clean from weeds.

VARIETIES.

There are many good varieties but as this is for the guidance of those who have not the time, nor the inclination to plant for experimental purposes, I will name only some of the varieties that have given almost universal satisfaction all over our state as well as those adjoining us. These would be Warfield, Beder Wood, Crescent and Robinson. The Warfield and Crescent not being fertile while the Beder Wood and Robinson are, thus aiding nature to produce the best in size, quality and quantity that can be done.

When freezing weather sets in, the strawberry bed should be covered with a light mulch to keep from freezing and thawing which damages the bed. In spring remove the coarser material leaving the fine litter to keep berries clean of dirt.

At 0:30 Tuesday morning, Frank Wicks and L. D. McCumber went to Adams' elevator in Preston and there they found the lifeless body of Joe Wicks lying at the right side of the dump. Mr. Wicks was lying on his back with his coat rolled up and placed under his head. At first it was supposed that he had been the victim of heart disease, but the position of the body and the fact that the coat had been carefully placed under his head led many to believe that such was not the case, and Coroner Waggoner was notified and arrived at Preston in the afternoon and held an inquest. The body was taken to a vacant store room and a jury empanelled, after which the taking of testimony was begun. Three letters were found upon the body, one addressed to the family, one to Mr. P. S. Heacock his employer, and one to Mr. Herman Zeller. The letter addressed to the family was the only one that threw any light on the matter. It simply stated that the writer was tired of living and had been so for the past two years. The letter to M. Heacock was of a private nature and was not introduced in evidence. From the other letter it was evident that at some time there had been trouble between Wicks and Zeller, and Mr. Wicks took this opportunity to for give Zeller or any injury he may have done him.—Falls City Journal.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C. March 18, 1900. (Special Correspondence) The developments of the week have proved disappointing to Democratic leaders who hoped to gain some temporary advantages from the discussion within the Republican party regarding lines of policy with reference to the islands with which we have come into closer relationship, and especially Puerto Rico. While the Puerto Rican matter has not been finally adjusted, it is probable that it will result in the adoption of a Puerto Rican tariff which will be merely a tariff in name, and turn over to the Puerto Ricans the trifling sums which may be collected on a few articles, thus adopting practically the original proposition of the President and at the same time preventing the establishment of a precedent by which Democrats can assert or demand that the Republican policy shall be one of free trade with all non-contiguous territory over which we may have control at any time, and by that process bring the labor of those islands into competition with the agricultural and other producing and laboring classes of the United States.

Another disappointment to the Democracy has been the recent and quite unexpected development by which the United States has been able to render its good offices in bringing about peace between the Boers and the English Government. That there has been a desire on the part of all interested to see this accomplished has been well understood, but that it would have been not only inadmissible under rules of international procedure to have done this until the recent developments which made it practicable, is equally well known and well understood by all who are familiar with the subject; and those who were clamoring for it were simply doing so for the purpose of embarrassing the Administration and of making political capital. The moment, however, that conditions made such action proper and possible, the action was taken.

Still another disappointment to Democrats is the fact that the Nicaragua Canal matter is likely to be adjusted in a way which will prove entirely satisfactory to all the parties concerned, and encourage immediate action on the part of Congress and an early commencement of the work. While the treaty is still under consideration in the Senate, it is quite probable that it will be confirmed with such trifling amendments as to obviate whatever of objection has been offered by any except those who object merely for political purposes and to find fault with the Republican party.

Another gratifying development of the week has been the announcement by the Treasury Department of the details of the foreign commerce during the month of February. This shows that our export trade continues to grow with amazing rapidity and that the February exports are not only larger than those of any preceding February in our history, but such as to insure the year's export figures the highest place in the record of our rapidly increasing and prospering foreign commerce, which only began to show a balance of trade in our favor when the Republican system of protection became a permanent feature of our national policy.

The bill providing a form of government for Hawaii was under consideration in the Senate for ten days before its final passage. It is believed that the measure will fill all existing requirements of our new territory with satisfaction to both the islanders and ourselves. Some changes and modifications may be found necessary at a subsequent date, after experience has shown what will be most effective and just when put into practice.

A net cash balance of $301,287,666, in the United States Treasury at the close of business last month was in striking contrast with the gross deficiencies that used to be exhibited under the last Democratic Administration. Then it was case of borrow, borrow, borrow. Now we have a comfortable surplus stored up against a rainy day and are lending money in Europe instead of seeking it there at exorbitant rates of interest. F. A. HARRISON.

It is very hard to stand idly by and see our dear ones suffer while awaiting the arrival of the doctor. An Albany(N.Y.) dairyman called at a drug store there for a doctor to come and see his child, then very sick with croup. Not finding the doctor in, he left word for him to come at once on his return. He also bought a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, which he hoped would give some relief until the doctor should arrive. In a few hours he returned, saying the doctor need not come, as the child was much better. The druggist, Mr. Otto Schoix, says the family has since recommended Chamberlain's Cough Remedy to their neighbors and friends until he has a constant demand for it from that part of the country. For sale by S. G. Wright, Druggist.

SHELTER BELTS.

The name makes you think about cottonwoods. In Pioneer days when the distance to nurseries was long and transportation was slow the early settlers looked for some tree near at hand and as land was so cheap the value of the land to plant the grove on was not taken into account, so the cottonwoods were generally chosen, and it answered a good purpose. It was in harmony with the hastily constructed dwellings, and today and for many years to come it will be a good tree to plant mixed with boxelder and oak for shade in pastures.

Fence a lot the size that you want a grove, on high land in the pasture. Plant and cultivate well until large enough for shade, then protect the trunks with screen wire or noxious paint so that the animals will not bite them. For winter protection the evergreens are cheaper, hardier, better, prettier and takes less land, ordinary windbreak for stock the Western red cedar; one row twelve feet apart is good. Eight rods requires one hundred and eleven trees. Plow a land ten feet wide, plant in the middle furrow, keep surface loose and cultivate well. Cattle and horses will not bite them but might step on them. Set posts in the row and put on two wires, leave opening so that if stock needs to pass that they will not climb over the wires. If you want to use more trees set closer together in the row, say ten or even eight feet in one row, if you want more than one row keep the rows fifty feet apart, the trees will stand straighter and easier to cultivate. If you want to make a barn or shed of them make outside row eight feet apart and rest of grove twelve feet apart; cultivate well, do not trim until large enough so that the cattle will not break them, then trim up the inside trees high enough so stock can get under them but do not trim outside row, only enough to make a door for stock to get in.

If you want shelter around the house or anywhere where stock does not run make every other tree Cedar and Scotch pine, in Eastern Nebraska, in winter the Cedar turns brownish and the Scotch pine whitefish, fine contrast; the pine wants to grow tall and the Cedar spreading. In Western Nebraska instead of Scotch pine, use Ponderosa pine and do not forget a few of the brilliant colored evergreens near the house and recollect this: In planting evergreens that their roots are not to be exposed to either wind or sun, scarcely a minute, keep tops dry and roots covered with thin mud while handling, and then they are as sure as any other tree to grow, the ground must not be allowed to bake or crack around them the first year. Keep a dust mulch after first year, keep clean cultivation entire season.

Baxter Routs A Robber.

J. R. Garrison, Cashier of the bank of Thornville, Ohio, had been robbed of health by a serious lung trouble until he tried Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. Then he wrote: "It is the best medicine I ever used for a severe cold or a bad case of lung trouble. I always keep a bottle on hand." Hotel and restaurant waiters of South Omaha have organized a union for the purpose of holding up wages.

The Columbus Journal thinks that 20 per cent on delinquent taxes is a diabolical rate of interest. And so it is.

A Platte county man is making big wages trapping skunks. The lard and pelt of each animal sells for about $1.50.

A stock company with a paid up capital of $1,200 has been organized at Bartlett for the purpose of manufacturing cheese.

The board of directors of the Dodge county bank at Hooper have let the contract for a bank building at a trifle less than $10,000.

Mr. and Mrs. H. P. H. Oehlrich of Columbus are laying plans to spend the summer in Europe. They will start about May 1.

The changeable weather this month has resulted in a large number of cases of pneumonia, pretty equally distributed over the state.

The health officer at Superior has issued his annual manifesto commanding the people to clean the yards and alleys and be quick about it.

About April 1 the salary of the postmaster at Stanton will be raised to $1,400 per annum. The business of the office warrants the increase in pay.

Milford citizens are trying to arouse an interest in the scheme of having a canning factory that shall be confined to putting up tomatoes only.

The Silver Creek cemetery association held a meeting a few nights since, the only one of which a record has been made, in almost seventeen years.

When it comes to peculiar names Wahoo is not so far behind other enterprising Nebraska towns. The capital of Saunders county is proud to be known as the home of one named Wigglesworth.

I. M. Randall and wife of Gering propose to take a trip to the state of Washington the coming summer to visit a son whom they haven't seen for a number of years. The journey will be made by team.

Loren Fairbanks, an old-time Nebraskan, lately returned from Oregon and purchased a farm near Hastings. He has had enough of a country where it rains six months in the year and is cloudy the rest of the time. Stand up for Nebraska.

Recently Irwin Fisher of Dakota county sold thirty-seven head of fat cattle at a straight ratio of $5.10 per cwt. The average weight of the lot was just under 1,500, and he went home with more money than he could carry in his official pocketbook.

The Fremont Tribune claims to be a length ahead of the Rev. Mr. Sheldon in that it has barred smoking from every department of the paper ever since Walt Mason abandoned his job on the editorial staff.

Herman Rexin of Scribner had hard luck trying to break a colt. The first thing the animal did, after submitting to be haltered, was to rear up, go over backward and break its precious neck on the frozen ground.

A team attached to a Kearney omnibus took fright at a loose shingle flapping in the breeze and broke away from the driver. One of the animals collided with a telegraph pole and sustained a fractured leg.

Recently a resident of Plainview paid $150 for a driving horse that suited his fancy. Three years ago the man from whom he made the purchase tried to sell the same animal and the best offer he received was $40.

A stockman at Meadow Grove has a chemical process for preventing the growth of horns on calves, which is much more humane than waiting till the animal is of age and then mutilating the poor beast with a cruel meat saw.

THEY MISS THE POINT

A FREE-TRADE ARGUMENT WITHOUT FORCE.

Large Profits and Low Prices in the Iron and Steel Industry Sustain the Contention as to the Value of the Protective Policy.

The free-traders are seizing upon the opportunity afforded by the bringing of suit by Mr. Frick against the Carnegie company, and by the statements made by him in respect to the enormous profits made by the company to reiterate their old claim that the protection of American industries is a robbery of the American people in behalf of American manufacturers. Just how they would figure it out to show that, with the same degree of activity in the trade and with the same rate of wages, the prices of iron and steel products would have been lower or the profits of the steel companies less during the last two years, if there had been no tariff on iron or steel, does not appear. American manufacturers have exported great quantities of iron and steel products since the enactment of the Dingley law. In foreign countries they have no advantages, either from a tariff or otherwise, over any foreign manufacturer of iron and steel. Yet it has been the American manufacturers who have, in large measure, controlled the foreign markets, who have secured large orders in face of their foreign competitors. If, as has been the case, American manufacturers have, in open competition with all the world, secured the lion's share of the orders for iron and steel products in other countries, what possible shadow of a reason is there for the assertion that the tariff has enabled them to unduly inflate prices? If foreign manufacturers could not offer lower prices or greater inducements to foreign buyers, what reason is there to suppose that they would have done so in the case of American buyers?

The truth of the matter is that the prosperity of this country under our restored system of protection has been so great that our iron and steel plants have been hard put to it to fill orders. They have been crowded with work to their utmost capacities. In such a state of affairs it is inevitable that profits should be large. The tariff has been connected with these enormous profits in these respects only, viz, that it is the protective tariff which has given to us an iron and steel industry, and that it is the protective tariff, as embodied in the Dingley law, which has given to the country such wonderful prosperity that our iron and steel mills have been overcrowded with work. For it is American prosperity which is responsible for the large profits. It is the American demand which keeps the mills running. Foreign orders are not extensive enough to keep our mills running, though they do help to run up the profits.

AGREEABLY SURPRISED.

Wage-Earners Voluntarily Accorded a Share in Employers' Profits.

Five hundred wage-earners in one of the large mills at Paterson, N. J., were agreeably surprised last week when pay day came. Instead of one envelope they received two. In one envelope was the surprise in the shape of the usual pay and a 5 per cent increase, in the other the explanation. This was simple that the company now finds itself able to keep its promise of sharing any prosperity which might come to it with its workers; that trade had improved and a 5 per cent advance was made possible. The advance, of which there had been no intimation whatever, caused much rejoicing.

It is understood that the Barbour Flax Spinning company, which employs several thousand hands, will take similar action, the advance of 5 per cent having been agreed upon by the two companies.

Episodes like these, bringing joy to the hearts of many thousands dependent upon the wages paid are characteristic of the period of McKinley and prosperity. They furnish an agreeable and very instructive contrast to the condition of things which existed during the never-to-be-forgotten time when the country was experiencing the fruits of "Cleveland and tariff reform." Wage-earners in those days sometimes got two envelopes instead of one, but the second envelope always contained an unpleasant surprise in the shape of a notice that "in view of the existing depression it has been found necessary to reduce wages."

To find employers of labor voluntarily admitting their employes to a share of their profits and their prosperity is doubly pleasant and gratifying, for it conclusively proves what has been so insistently disputed by free-traders, that protection operates alike to the advantage of wage-payor and wage-earner.

Where Charity Should Begin and End.

Charity ought to begin at home if it begins anywhere. But it is a long sight better not to have any call for charity to begin at all. The better way is for every one to have plenty of work at good wages, and so be able to pay for everything needed. This is the way it has been with the American people ever since the enactment of the Dingley law started up the fires of the factories of the country and gave to every man who wants it a chance to work. There has been little need for charity. The cold charity doling days of free trade and free soup houses have gone. The doctrine of the protective tariff is not to begin at home, or anywhere, with charity, but to begin at home with the providing of work for those who want it; to see to it that the American people are not robbed of their chance to work, and that the American market is not given over to the products of foreign labor, but is made secure as the market for American products. In this way there is an end put to all need for the bestowal of charity on any one who is able and willing to work.

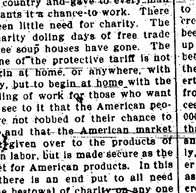
PROOF OF PROSPERITY.

Remarkable Decrease in the Number of the Unemployed.

Probably in no single year in the history of the United States has there been so great a change in the industrial conditions. Think of it! In the great state of New York fourteen months ago more than a quarter of the working people were unemployed and seeking work from day to day to enable them to procure the necessaries of life. Within the ensuing ten months the unemployed numbered less than five in every hundred, and, as the World suggests, at the present time the per cent is "practically small," probably less than 2 per cent. But these statistics do not tell the entire story. The fact must be remembered that the report of the New York labor bureau covers only ten months of the year 1899, from Jan. 1 to Nov. 1. In the early months of 1898, and during the previous two years or more, the depression was far greater. The process of recovery from the awful stagnation and prostration incident to the anti-protection policy of the Wilson-Gorman act had commenced, and some progress toward the restoration of industrial prosperity had already been made previous to Jan. 1, 1899. The full measure of the happy results of the Dingley act can be known only by comparing present conditions with those existing at the period when industrial prostration under the Wilson-Gorman act was most complete. That period is not covered by the report from which the above is quoted.

As we have said, the figures alluded to refer only to New York, but it is safe to say that if the statistics covered the entire country the improvement shown would be equally marked in many states, probably in all of those having important manufacturing industries. We are quite assured that Pennsylvania makes as good a showing as New York. Industrial prosperity has reached high-water mark in nearly every community, and only in localities where a vast excess of unskilled labor abounds are there idle hands seeking employment without being able to find it. These localities are few now and the number is diminishing from week to week.—Wilkesbarre (Pa.) Record.

A Timely Rescue.



No Reason Why.

It may be good policy to encourage the building and operation of fast ocean liners like the St. Paul, New York, etc., which can be taken into the service of the government during a war and converted into cruisers, but such ships should not be encouraged to the prejudice of the freighters, upon which the extension of our ocean commerce depends. If congress can be made to see the matter in its true proportions the shipping bill may be made one of the most popular protective measures ever passed by that body. There is no reason why our industry on the sea should not be protected as well as our industry on the land.—Minneapolis Tribune.

Ought to Satisfy.

It will be difficult this year to convince the voters that there is urgent need of a change when all of them have employment at good wages, and the people are contented and happy. A blind man ought to be able to see that.—Cleveland Leader.

Give Us More Such Lies.

Debs says that the prosperity of the country is a "ghastly lie." All right. Give us more ghastliness we have mixed with our lies the happier we will all be.—Lawrence (Kan.) World.

TRADE WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

Facts Which Testify to the Wisdom of the American Policy.

Analysis of the conditions of trade between the United States and the United Kingdom is very encouraging to us. It is well known that the increase in our cotton manufactures has been immense. New mills have sprung up all over the south, and there has been great expansion of the output of the mills in the northern states. Nevertheless, our imports of cotton goods from Great Britain in 1899 were in excess of those of 1898 by about $1,500,000. This proves two things—firstly, that the present tariff cannot foster an American cotton trust; and, secondly, that the increase in wages and other forms of income has been so great as to demand a supplement of increased imports, in addition to the increased output of home-made goods.

Another curious and eminently pleasing circumstance is that our imports of pig iron from Great Britain were more than three times as large in 1899 as in 1897; they were worth $2,500,000 in the last named year and $1,500,000 in the first. The free-trade theory is that it is better to ship pig iron, which is but one advance from raw material, to be brought to the perfection of manufacture abroad; the protective practice has resulted in large imports of foreign pig to be manufactured by well-paid American artisans. While we have enlarged our imports of pig iron, we have diminished those of manufactured steel; our imports of cutlery were a third less in 1899 than in 1897; our tin-plate imports were greatly reduced; our imports of worsted yarn, worsted tissues and woolen tissues have shrunk in ratios varying from one-third to two-thirds during the last two years. Concurrently with this our imports of machinery for the manufacture of cotton and woolen textiles have risen from $1,220,000 in 1897 to $1,825,000 in 1899. This is the result in large measure of international patents upon the machinery imported. It is also conclusive evidence of a great expansion of American manufacturing enterprise.

We now stand a close second in the trade of the world. A few years more of protection and expansion will give us first place.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Make a Note of It.

Discussing the lumber trade, E. C. Baker of the Baker Brothers' Lumber Company of Plattsburg, is reported to have said recently:

"The lumber trade is in an unusually prosperous condition. There is a great deal more market than we can find product with which to supply it, while prices are constantly advancing. Yet the increased prices do not seem to have interfered with building in any way. The outlook for continued activity is very bright."

This is a decidedly different situation than was the case when the Wilson law was on our statute books. There were no surplus of market during that time. Thousands of lumbermen were idle, and, even so, there was still a good deal more product than there was a market. Lumbermen will do well to make a note of the contrast and to remember it when the time comes again to choose between "Tariff Reform" and the continuance of our present prosperity-bringing Protective Tariff.

Reason for Confidence.

It has grown to be almost proverbial that a presidential year is a bad year for business. In fact, this has often been presented as a reason for lengthening the presidential term. The year 1900 however, bids fair to discount the proverbial claims. Wherever statistics are gathered together the fact appears that the year 1900 has started out with better business than did 1898 or 1899, wonderful as was the showing made by each of those years. Every sign points to a bigger volume of business for the country than ever before. Business men feel reasonably sure that the country will not consent to go back to the starvation days of Democratic tariff reform; they feel reasonably sure of the continuance of our present policy of giving protection to American industries. Therefore they have the confidence to go ahead. With protection as the established policy of the country, with no possible danger of its downfall, presidential years, as well as all other years; will be years of national prosperity.

What to Expect.

The present prosperity of the country has caused no relaxation of efforts on the part of the Republican administration and Congress to increase our prosperity and provide for its continuance. The people know by experience that they can always expect prosperity from the Republican party.—Sonora (Cal.) Independent.

They Will Learn.

The industrial growth of the south is puzzling to those statesmen who have always opposed the national policies which have made this growth possible. In time the people in Dixie will learn to appreciate the principles upon which their industrial prosperity is to rest.—Peoria (Ill.) Journal.

How a Little Boy Was Saved.

Washington, D. C.—"When one boy was about 16 months old he broke out with a rash which was thought to be measles. In a few days he had a swelling on the left side of his neck and it was decided to be mumps. He was given medical attendance for about three weeks when the doctor said it was scrofula and ordered a salve. He wanted to lance the sore, but I would not let him and continued giving him medicine for about four months when the bunch broke in two places and became a running sore. Three doctors said it was scrofula and ordered a blood medicine. A neighbor told me of a case somewhat like our baby's which was cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. I decided to give it to my boy and in a short while his health improved and his neck healed so nicely that I stopped giving him the medicine. The sore broke out again, however, whereupon I again gave him Hood's Sarsaparilla and its persistent use has accomplished a complete cure." MRS. NETTIE CHASE, 47 K St., N. E.

KING DON:

A STORY OF MILITARY LIFE IN INDIA.

....BY MAVOR ALLAN....

CHAPTER V.

The fair Isle of Wight was looking at its fairest on a glorious evening at the end of April, when the mail packet from Portsmouth steamed across the Solent towards Ryde Pier.

The green verdure of budding summer lay thickly on the far-stretching landscape and the tall trees dotted through the island town, rising so picturesquely upward from the sea, and capped by the lofty spire of the parish church.

The long promenade pier was gay with holiday makers, and eastward, the esplanade was bright with patches of spring flowers; while the soft melody of a brass band floated fitfully out over the azure sea.

There were two travelers on board the steamer who regarded the animated scene before them with enraptured eyes, for they were bride and bridegroom on their wedding tour—Roddy and Diana Gordon—and the veriest desert must have seemed a paradise to them in the all-satisfying happiness which union had brought to both. But the fashionable Ryde was not to be their destination.

Their young love as yet demanded the charm of solace of solitude, and it was southward, towards the great bluff white cliffs and the silver strands of Shanklin the island train was soon swiftly bearing them, to the rose-covered cottage which was to hold for them the first mystic name of home.

Home! What a talisman lay in that simple word! And as the young soldier led his happy bride across the threshold his heart swelled with gratitude to the God who had shielded him through perils of pain and bitter bloodshed in far India, to bring him to this haven of peace and perfect love at last.

And presently, as they lingered over dinner, reluctant to bring to an end that first delicious repast, shared in their Eden together, they spoke of Don over whose welfare they yearned with all the tender sympathy born of their own happiness and large-hearted love.

Roddy had brought round his sherry plate and sat down by Diana's side, ostensibly to invite her to peel his walnuts, a task of which Roddy himself had no aptitude; but another diversion occurred by the arrival of the post, the last mail for the night.

One letter was from Don, which had been posted to Cudie Fort and now forwarded by Roddy's father. And as Roddy tore it open and scanned its contents an exclamation of pleasure passed his lips.

"There, little wife, didn't I predict this?" he said triumphantly. And forthwith he read aloud a few hasty lines Don had penned to Roddy on the night of his betrothal to Lillie Dercie.

It was a wonderfully bright letter for Don, full of congratulation on Roddy's forthcoming marriage and calm satisfaction in his own engagement; and it ended with a postscript that stirred both Di and Roddy to the heart.

"I begin to think, old fellow, perhaps you are right, and life is worth living after all."

Happy tears had sprung to Diana's dark eyes, and, seeing them, Roddy's arm stole round her waist, and he drew her head to his shoulder and lightly touched its auburn locks with his lips.

"You are satisfied now, little woman, that Lillie has met her real 'hero' at last?"

She looked up in his laughing eyes with a tender smile, for she knew he was thinking of a time when she believed Lillie to be his own only love, and she answered with contrite sweetness:

"Ah, Roddy, how good God is, if we would only trust Him to shape our lives as He knows best!"

The silence of a deep content fell upon them, and by and by they strolled out to where the great chalk cliffs rose in dazzling whiteness up from the sea into the blue sky, over which the silvery stars of night were coming out one by one, twinkling like tiny globes of fire.

Behind them reared the rugged stretch of undercliff, down the wooded precipice of which the murmuring stream meandered from village to shore, and by whose side ran a series of gigantic steps—a mighty precipice that savored almost of Alpine sublimity.

The lovers for they were lovers still—stood hand-in-hand and drank in the beauty of it all with that rapture which only comes when viewing some scene in the presence of one we love.

Even Gadie, lovely Gadie, with its silvery, shining waters was forgotten. They were here together, and it was the paradise of the world.

Yet ever and anon, as they gazed out on the deep ocean, the thoughts of each would turn to Don; and once Diana spoke, with a wistful little break in her voice.

"Surely, Roddy, you will forgive and forget the past now, and Lillie will bring him back to us once more?"

"Ah, surely, for"

"My ladye fair can rule my soul,
And every thought and deed control,"

Roddy quoted gaily. Then, with tender passion, he clasped the hand he held still tighter, and spoke more gravely. "What was that line you repeated a moment ago, Di?"

"The waters swell before a boisterous storm; but leave it all to God."

As they slowly made their way along the esplanade homeward, the newspaper boys were calling the evening edition of the London papers, which had just arrived from Ryde by the last mail for the night, and Roddy called an urchin to his side, his cheek paling involuntarily as the lusty shout caught his ear: "Rebel firing into Bara Camp, British officer killed; orderly wounded!"

He hastily opened the sheet and stood still under a gas lamp to scan its columns, whilst Diana, with anxious eyes, looked over his shoulder. For, peaceful as it had been on the Indian frontier for some months now, her thoughts were ever quick to fly to Don and Lillie's father, of whom any hour might bring disastrous news.

A hoarse exclamation burst from the lips of both as, simultaneously, their eyes fell upon the following paragraph.

And far, far away the red Afghan sun had set amid somber clouds above the snow-clad summits of Tirah and the white tents of the British camp in the Bara Straits.

There had been rain and thunder all day, and the clouds had gathered in dense masses, edged by the radiance of the hidden moon. And athwart the clouds now and then shot gleams of vivid lightning, falling with weird solemnity upon a coffin draped with the Union Jack, carried shoulder high by stalwart Highlanders.

The cortege was preceded by pipers playing the low and wailing dirge of "Lochaber no more," and followed by a string of officers and soldiers wearing long, spectral-like cloaks, and walking with slow steps and heads downbent.

Soon—ah, how soon!—it was all over, and all that was left of their gallant comrade was committed to that lonely nullah, "In sure and certain hope of the resurrection of eternal life."

No farewell shots were fired; but the captain's own detachment presented arms, and the pipers awoke the dim valley once more with their pibroch; but it was "The Land o' the Leal" now that they played.

And as Don Gordon turned from that lonely grave, and pictured the image of her who held the dead so dear, for one wild moment he felt he would sooner, far sooner lie there, too, than face the anguish of Lillie's pure eyes; while in his heart rang the chaplain's words, like the cry of a lost soul:

"Deliver us not into the pains of eternal death."

CHAPTER VI.

It had been a morning of languorous heat, and now noon—the long, breathless Indian noon—was at its meridian, when, on a day in May, Don Gordon arrived at Rawal Pindi and rode out under a burning sun to Lillie Derwent's house.

The durwan met him with evident surprise and the intimation that "the gates were closed" (polite Hindostani for "not at home"); and for an instant Don's heart stood still, with a vague fear of he knew not what.

Then suddenly he remembered it was the hour of siesta, a time when visits are never paid in India; and, reassured, he dismounted from his horse, and, presenting his card with the observation that "the memsahib would be sure to see him on receipt of that," he passed through the vestibule with masterful step and went unannounced into the drawing room to await Lillie's coming.

How long he waited he knew not, he walked to the window and noted, as the mind will note the veriest trifles at moments of tense excitement, that the great adjutant birds were still dozing in the sunshine, and the peacocks were spreading their gorgeous plumes on the terrace, as when last he looked out upon it from this same window.

The oleander, with its clusters of pink, the baubel, with its perfumed bells of gold, the jasmine and acacia, luxuriant in their wild beauty; the blue jays and the crested yellow sparrows, flitting from shrub to shrub; the brilliant butterflies, sailing through the voiceless air—all was unchanged, only the fair Indian home would know its master never more.

Never more! There was something terrible in the conviction, something appalling to Don to remember that death, chill and stern and awful, lay beyond this warm young world of budding beauty.

A sharp groan fell from his lips, stifled even as it escaped them; for the portiere had rustled, and he turned quickly to find he was no longer alone.

Lillie had come to him just as she had risen from her siesta. Her golden hair, fet loose for coolness, streamed over her white muslin robe, and round her waist was a broad sash of black ribbon, the sight of which sent a fresh pang to her lover's heart.

"A great sorrow nobly borne is a great dignity." As Don looked at her he realized, almost with a feeling of awe, that such dignity had fallen upon Lillie now. The wife—calamity she had so dreaded had come to pass, yet she had not sunk beneath the blow.

The passion of her grief was spent and resignation had come. Anguish had left its pallor on her cheek, but the hopelessness of despair was not past.

Don looked at her, marveling at her fortitude and calm; then the next instant his arms were closing round her like a vise and straining her to his beating heart, for her calm had given way, and she had flown to the shelter of his embrace, with a tender, sobbing cry.

"Oh, Don, Don, my all on earth now!" she cried.

He held her tight, and kissed her again and again. It was as if he dreaded the moment might come when he should never hold her thus any more, and he was drinking to the full this sweet cup of bliss. Presently she withdrew herself, for there was something almost fierce in the fervor of his caresses. She sank on a divan, and put out her hand to him to sit by her.

"Tell me," she said faintly, "all about it."

And Don told her, with low voice and averted eyes that story which the press paragraphs, so comprehensive, yet so cruel in their brevity, had already burnt like a searing iron into heart and brain.

It was shortly before the mess-hour. Several successive shots had been heard in the valley, and two had penetrated one of the mess tents and wounded an orderly whilst in the act of laying a table. Captain Derwent and himself were returning from a stroll along the banks of the nullah, when a bullet whizzed between them which struck Captain Derwent, and he dropped instantly at the narrator's feet, shot through the heart.

Every effort was being made to track the perpetrator of the crime and avenge the captain's death; but so far the rebels had escaped.

"And you yourself were the only one near when he died?" she said, through the tears which were now streaming silently down her pallid, lovely face.

"Yes. And owing to the dense undergrowth, it was impossible for me to follow the direction the shot came from. Directly he fell I did my utmost to stop the bleeding, but I saw at once it was useless. Death had been instantaneous. I got help from the camp then, and we carried him down to his tent. Next night we buried him close to where he fell." Don's voice was husky and strained, and suddenly, at sight of his ill-concealed emotion, she checked her tears and laid her golden head upon his shoulder with a trustful tenderness that went to his heart.

"My poor Don! how you, too, must have suffered!"

He caught her to him with a passionate caress, all the more passionate because the thought assailed him how once not love, but mere ambition, had urged him to lay siege to this confiding heart.

"I have suffered," he said, very low, "more than I can say, Lillie."

She looked up in his face and saw what he spoke truly.

His brow was lined and his cheek pale; his brown eyes had a haggard look she had never seen in them; and, remembering with a great rush of joy, how, too, might have never come back from that wild pass which had made her fatherless she returned his embrace with all the sweet naivete of a child who clung now to her sole protector.

THREE CONVENTIONS

Fusionists of Nebraska Gather in Lincoln.

POPS EXCLUDE MIDDLE-OF-THE-ROADERS

Mr. Deaver and His Contesting Delegation Not Allowed In—Delegates and Alternates Selected to Go to Conventions—Other News.

The three fusion conventions met in Lincoln Monday, March 19 to select delegates to the populist national convention at Sioux Falls and the democratic and silver republican national conventions to be held at Kansas City.

The only thing to mar the peace of fusion was the gathering of 100 or 200 anti-fusion populists, who came mostly from Omaha, headed by D. Clem Deaver. The mid-roaders, as they are called, had with them ex-Congressman M. W. Howard, of Alabama, and Jo A. Parker, of Kentucky.

The mid-road pops were not permitted to sit into the populist convention, and Mr. Deaver was supplanted on the populist national committee by E. E. Thomas of Omaha. Mr. Deaver and his delegates were kept out of the hall by a strong police force which stood at the door. As an additional precaution tickets of admission properly countersigned were required.

The work of the conventions comprised the selection of delegates who were instructed for Bryan, the adoption of platforms and listening to speeches by Mr. Bryan and other speakers.

The populists named Hon. William V. Allen and Governor Poynter as delegates at large, and the following district delegates and alternates were chosen:

Silver Republicans.

The silver republicans met at the Lincoln hotel with a good representation present. The principal business before the delegates was the selection of a plan by which the delegates to the national mass meeting should be given some evidence of appointment. The Kansas city meeting is to be a gathering of all silver republicans. To prevent every body from taking part it was agreed that the delegates to the present convention shall go and also the members of the state committee.

In addition the various committeemen are to certify the names of those in their territory who desire to go and these shall be given authority by the state committee.

The convention passed resolutions of the usual order with declarations in favor of the public ownership of utilities and the election of United States senators by the people. Other democratic doctrine was also incorporated in the resolutions.

DELEGATES TO CINCINNATI

Mid Roaders Will Nominate a Ticket in June.

Finding in advance that they would not be permitted to enter the convention in the auditorium, the middle-of-the roaders met at Walsh hall in the evening before they had an opportunity to put into effect their expected bolt.

In the three committee on credentials reported that Douglas county was present with 105 delegates, and that Franklin, Lancaster, Adams, Pawnee, Seward, Gage, Buffalo, Blaine and Saunders were also represented.

They issued a manifesto address, listened to speeches from ex-Congressman Howard, of Alabama, and Jo A. Parker, of Kentucky, selected delegates to the Cincinnati convention and named an executive committee to manage the party's affairs.

After thanking the visiting populists from the south and also expressing appreciation for the work of the chairman and secretary, the convention adjourned at 11 o'clock to meet again on Wednesday June 27.

HAS TWO GOVERNORS

Kentuckians Kept Guessing on When Will Happen Next.

A Louisville, Ky., special says. The two governors of Kentucky were entertained in Louisville Sunday. Messrs. Taylor and Beckham insisted that they had come to Louisville on purely personal business and that their visits had no political significance. They spent the day quietly though both received numerous calls from their political and personal friends.

Governor Taylor and his assistants among the republican party leaders are very close-mouthed as to the nature of the mission on which surveyor of the port, C. M. Barnett, and Collector of Internal Revenue Sapp left for Washington after their conference with Governor Taylor, but there is little doubt in Washington to do with the attitude of the national administration toward the republican state officers. The latter do not conceal their purposes to hold on to their positions until the United States supreme court has passed upon the question of their right to hold them. They do not intend to surrender the state buildings and records after a decision by the state court if appeals of that court should decide against them.

MISSING OFFICER

Sergeant Krisor Disappears and Canteen Money Gone.

Stories respecting loose conduct of the Tenth infantry canteen at Omaha have led to an investigation. It is reported upon the best of authority that one of the non-commissioned officers, Sergeant Krisor, has disappeared and with him a large amount of canteen money variously estimated at from three hundred to three thousand dollars. All efforts to locate the missing soldier have proved futile. He will be run down if possible. Among other things charged by the civilians at the fort is that all forms of gambling are indulged in within the canteen contrary to the rules and regulations; that soldiers have been permitted to draw all their pay with which to purchase canteen checks, whereas the regulations permit only one-fifth of a soldier's pay to be drawn for that purpose.

RUNAWAY GIRL RETURNED

The Beatrice police were instrumental in securing the return to her parents of a girl named Eva Dankeering, who ran away from her home in Johnson county Saturday. The girl, it appears from the story told by her relatives, became enamored of a traveling showman and came to Beatrice last evening. On arriving in Beatrice the girl went to a distant relative to whom she told a tale of woe and was given shelter. When her father appeared the girl appeared willing to return home and the two left for home on an afternoon train.

Editor Argus:

Just a few words in reply to a letter directed to Trustees of M E church at Table Rock and published in your issue of March 22.

As to the intention of the donor of the cemetery grounds, folk wings is a copy of the conditions made in deed as taken a few days since from the record on file in the office of the County Clerk at Pawnee City.

First the surveyor's description of location of the ground, deeded to the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal church at Table Rock, to have and to hold the same as a church lot and public burying ground.

Now I lived in the home of the donor of this cemetery ground for more than twenty years, and know whereof I speak when I say that it was not his intention that the title of said land should ever be transferred to any association which might in a few years become scattered by death and removals, leaving the ground without an owner; as for instance: twenty years ago there was quite a strong society of methodists at Clear Creek with regular preaching services and a thriving Sunday School; now they are thinned out by death and removals till but few remain, which only proves that it is possible that in the next twenty years the population of Clear Creek might change as to demand or justify the erection of a church there for a society of Methodists, present outlook to the contrary notwithstanding.

Be that as it may, the cemetery at Clear Creek with the exception of the Church lot is just as much the property of the people of Clear Creek now there as though they had a warranty deed to the same, and it never cost any one a cent for a place there in which to bury their dead.

Furthermore it was not the expectation of the donor of said grounds that it would be necessary for the Trustees of the Methodist church to give their time and money to the improvement of the grounds, but that the people for whose use the ground was given would be generous enough and kind enough to do what was right fair and just, but taking Mrs. Greiner's letter for one side of it and this for the other, it seems that his confidence was misplaced in both cases.

Secondly, Mrs Greiner says that when an effort has been made to raise means to improve the grounds the people have responded generously.

That is as it should be and I believe the same thing can be done again and again. And now that there is a regularly organized association there, so long as it exists there will be some one whose business it will be to go ahead in this matter, and as often as they will solicit funds they will find people at Table Rock who are enough interested in the matter to furnish their part of the means necessary for the improvement and beautifying of the grounds as they have done in every instance in the past. Let me say, that a committee has been appointed by the M. E. church at Table Rock to make a more complete survey of the cemetary ground which will be done within a short time and when done parties who feel that they would prefer to have a deed to their lot in the cemetary can get it by paying cost of making out the deed. The Church trustees decided to do this because one of the points of faultfinding has been that no deed could be had, to even so much as a burial.

Respectfully,
O. W. Grifling,
Chm. Committee.

HOUSE BILL IS BEST

Compromise Reached on Relief for Puerto Rico.

THE SENATE CONFEREES NOW GIVE IN

Lump Sum of Over Two Millions Goes to Island—Limit Proposed by the Upper House Thought Best to be Abandoned.

A Washington, March 20 dispatch says: The conferees on the Porto Rican appropriation bill have agreed upon a compromise measure. The senate conferees receded from the senate amendment limiting the appropriation to the revenues collected on Porto Rican importations until the first of last January and restored the clause in the house bill applying to future revenues. The bill as agreed upon reads as follows:

"That the sum of $2,005,453, being the amount of customs revenues received on importations by the United States from Porto Rico since the evacuation of Porto Rico by the Spanish forces on the 18th of October, 1898, to the 1st of January, 1900, together with any further customs revenue collected from Porto Rico from the 1st of January, 1900, or that shall be hereafter collected under existing law, shall be placed at the disposal of the president, to be used for the government now existing and, which may hereafter be established in Porto Rico, and for the aid and relief of the people thereof, and for public education, public works and other governmental and public purposes therein until otherwise provided by law, and the revenues herein referred to already collected and being collected under existing law, are hereby appropriated for the purpose herein specified, out of any moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Secretary Root has authorized General Davis at San Juan to give employment upon public works to surplus labor in Porto Rico. The war department has prepared an order to carry out this plan, but it was learned that Secretary Root had telegraphed the instructions to General Davis from Havana.

INFANT THROWN IN A WELL

While drawing water from his well at an early hour Tuesday morning Preston Keiser, living near Humboldt, drew up the body of a newly born female child, which from appearances had been thrown into the well only a short time before. He at once notified the proper officials and Coroner Wagoner of Dawson was summoned. The child was fully developed and had evidently been alive when born and cast into the well while yet breathing. The officials think the mother is a young woman who lives in the vicinity.

M'KINLEY'S FUTURE CALLING

To Become Professor of International Law in College.

Bishop Hurst in his sermon at the opening of the session of the New Jersey Methodist conference, in speaking of the American university at Washington, said that President McKinley would at the conclusion of his service as a public officer accept the position of professor of international law at the university.

Committed to Reform School.

County Judge Wintersteen at Fremont committed to the girls' reformatory school at Geneva Ruth Grace Parsons, a girl under fourteen years of age, for incorrigibility, her father having made complaint. The girl created a scene in court by proclaiming that she was the mother of an unborn child, and that two young men of prominent families were responsible for her ruin. On her affirmation that she would swear in court to the young men being her seducers, the judge suspended her sentence until the youths in question could be brought before him. One of the young men has already left for parts unknown. The girl is held in jail.

Dgred to Death by a Hull.

The mutilated body of E. C. Stout and his wife, who lived on a farm near Nescopec, Columbia county, Pa., were found buried under the snow in their barn yard. In the same yard where the bodies were discovered a savage bull is kept and it is the supposition that while at work in the yard Mr. Stout was attacked by the brute. It is thought his wife attempted to help him.

Kills Husband and Self.

At Sandusky, O., Mrs. Leonard Wagner killed her husband and then shot herself. The tragedy occurred about three miles from town and nothing was known of it until Tuesday evening. Mrs. Wagner had evidently arisen from bed and shot her husband and then herself. The cause of the crime is believed to have been jealousy.

MANILA THE CENTER

The Insurgents Hold a Conference in That City.

A Manila dispatch says: General Otis considers Manila the most troublesome center in the situation. The insurgent junta here, in conjunction with that in Hong Kong, is growing active. The military authorities have been forced to put a stop to Mabini's intercourse with the public. The local foreign press considers his recent utterances calculated to incite the Filipinos to a continued revolt and prejudicial to American control. Flores, who has just arrived here, says he comes trusting to American leniency, and that he would not have dared to have come to Manila if Spain were yet in control. He cherishes the hopes and aspirations which actuated him when in the field, and desires to watch congressional action upon the question of the Philippines. The insurgents, he says, do not expect to vanquish the Americans, but are maintaining a resistance with the idea of forcing congress to accord them the best possible terms.

A number of representative insurgent leaders, from different parts of Luzon have recently been in conference in Manila. Some have been placed under arrest, but the others thus far have not been interfered with. Louis Spitzell, head of the firm of Louis Spitzell & Company, contractors to the Chinese government and himself a suspected filibuster, came from Hong Kong to Manila last week and was temporarily detained in custody on suspicion. It is asserted upon good authority that three loads of arms and ammunition have recently been landed on the east coast of Luzon. Captain Taylor, of the Thirty-ninth regiment recently captured twelve new Mausers near Calamba.

Runaway Boys Return.

Quite a number of Nelson, Neb., school boys from eleven to fifteen years have evidently been reading yellow-covered literature and have had a cave or two for a rendezvous which finally culminated in five of them running away from home a few days since. Their possessions averaged 65c and a revolver each, but the cold snap struck them and they all, except one, like the traditional cat, came back. One is reported to have frozen ears and toes. The one to stay got into a through car at Superior and went to Denver, where report says, his parents will send for him.

Studying the American Twang.

Our American twang is a subject which has recently been occupying the attention of the Laryngological society. After considerable research it has been established that the cause of the twang is not climatic, nor is it the result of the nasal catarrh and affection of the larynx, which are so common in America, though these may be caused by the twang. The most probable theory is that the twang is the result of carelessness on the part of Americans in adopting the nasal sounds of the French settlers and the gutturals of the Dutch and Germans. At any rate, it is possible to cure it.

Old Bonds Turned In.

The total amount of old bonds turned into the United States treasury in exchange for the new 2 per cents was $27,000,000, making the total to date $72,000,000. Of the entire amount, all but $2,363,800 was on behalf of national banks, which already have the bonds on deposit to secure circulation or public deposits or both.

Kentuckians Call on President.

Messrs. Barnett, Shpp and Hampton, of Kentucky, were among the president's callers Tuesday. They did little except execute that their visit was entirely a social one and that they were not the bearers of any appeal from Governor Taylor for aide in the gubernatorial contest.

Germans Building a Church.

Work has commenced on a fine church building two miles west of Sterling for the Emmanuel Lutheran Germans. The building is to cost upwards of $3,000 and to be a modern in every way and be heated by a furnace. This will make the fourth German church for Sterling's Germans.

Wagon Works Burned.

The Flint wagon works at Flint, Mich., was totally destroyed by fire, causing a loss of over $200,000. The plant was insured for $150,000. This is the most severe blow to Flint the city has ever received. The origin of the fire is a mystery.

Nominated by Acclamation.

Congressman James M. Miller of Council Grove, Kan., has been nominated by acclamation for the republican convention of the Fourth district.

Secretary Returns.

Anti-Ramapo Bill Passed.

The senate has passed the assembly anti-Ramapo bill, 42 to 4. Ramapo is a gigantic fraud in New York City.

DINSMORE TO HANG

The Judge Overrules Motion for a New Trial.

JULY 20 IS THE DAY OF EXECUTION

Attorneys Will Appeal to Supreme Court —Convicted Man Protests Innocence Before Being Sentenced—Editor Harris Acquitted by Jury.

Frank L. Dinsmore, the convicted murderer, was refused a new trial in his case at Lexington, the court overruling the motion of his attorneys. The date set for his execution is July 20, 1900. The case will be carried to the supreme court by the attorneys of Dinsmore.

When Judge Sullivan asked Dinsmore if he had anything to say why sentence should not be passed the condemned man answered:

"I have nothing to say except that I am absolutely innocent."

Dinsmore was brought from Lexington to Kearney under a heavy guard and placed in the Buffalo county jail. If nothing favorable to Dinsmore turns up between now and July 20 he will be hanged at Lexington.

In sentencing Dinsmore Judge Sullivan selected the day of the first anniversary of his marriage. An appeal will be taken to the supreme court by Dinsmore's attorneys for a new trial.

EDITOR HARRIS ACQUITTED

Jury Says He Killed Hart Blenkiron in Self-Defense.

A verdict of not guilty was brought in by the jury in the Harris-Blenkiron murder case after being out a little over an hour. Before and during the trial public sympathy has been pretty general for Harris, and the verdict rendered was expected and gives general satisfaction.

Ex-Consul Macrum Summoned.

The house committee on foreign affairs has decided to investigate the allegations made by Charles F. Macrum, ex-consul to Pretoria, South Africa, relating to the opening of his official mail by the British authorities.

Representative Wheeler of Kentucky introduced a resolution to this end, which was referred to the committee on rules.

After some consultations Chairman Hitt, on behalf the foreign affairs committee, agreed to investigate the charges without the direction of the house, if that would be satisfactory to Mr. Wheeler, the author of the resolution.

Mr. Wheeler assented and has wired Mr. Macrum to come to Washington as soon as possible to appear before the committee.

Physician Kills Himself.

Dr. Emory C. Jones, a prominent physician of Farmersville, Ill., committed suicide at the railway station in Virden by shooting himself in the head. He was at the station with his brother awaiting the arrival of the train. He was apparently in high spirits. Suddenly he excused himself, went to the opposite side of the station and shot himself. He had been in poor health for two years.

Struck by an Engine.

At Exeter, Neb., Tuesday afternoon while freight train No. 72 on the Burlington was switching the engine ran into a team, resulting in the killing of one of the horses, which belonged to T. B. Farner, being driven by his son, who was hauling coke. The driver was unable to see the engine on account of a coal shed until it was upon him. He turned the team and only one horse was killed.

New Governor of Guam.

Lieutenant Commander Seaton Schroeder, at present secretary of the naval inspection board, has been selected to succeed Captain Leary as naval governor of the island of Guam. Commander Schroeder expects to sail on the Solace from San Francisco for Guam about the middle of May and he will relieve Captain Leary before July next.

Fireman Dies From Injuries.

James Under, the fireman who was so seriously injured in the wreck where a bridge went down near White Cloud, Kas., March 8, died at his home in Nebraska City. Everything possible was done for him by physicians and surgeons, but the shock to his system and blood poisoning were too much to overcome. He was fifty years of age.

Grants Two Divorces.

Judge Adams, at Santiago, disposed of two divorce cases in addition to the work of setting the various divorce cases for trial and starting the Horlocker case well on its way. Elizabeth Prall was given a divorce from her husband, Walter A. Prall, for non-support, and Gertrude B. Perris was divorced from Charles E. Perris on the ground of desertion.

HORLOCKER CASE IS BEGUN

Jury is Secured and the Trial is at Last Well Under Way.

At Hastings the scenes in the trial of Viola Horlocker, charged with attempting poisoning of Mrs. Anna Morey, reached the dramatic stage Wednesday. At 11 o'clock the jury was secured. It is composed of farmers, with but a single exception. The jurors are comparatively young, level-headed and conservative men, and are regarded with satisfaction by both the defense and prosecution.

When court opened at 1 o'clock to begin the trial the court room was packed with eager spectators, many ladies standing throughout the afternoon proceedings. Miss Horlocker came in accompanied by her sisters, Mrs. Cheever and Mrs. George S. Hayes.

Mrs. Morey, the prosecuting witness, followed, accompanied by Mr. Morey and a number of leading friends. The former broke down and cried on entering the room.

The most trying moment of all for the principals in the case was during the presentation of the defense to the jury by Mr. Batty, when he bitterly assailed Mr. Morey, accusing him of being responsible for the defendant's condition of mind when she committed the act with which she is charged. Both the defendant and Mrs. Morey were visibly affected, but Mr. Morey maintained a calm exterior.

Mr. McCreary made the statement of complaint, and said the testimony would show the defendant guilty.

Mr. Batty made the statement for the defense. He said:

"We know nothing of the things the state expects to prove, but we do know that we have proof to convince you that this poor girl is not guilty of any crime, even though all these things be proven against her. We will prove that she inherited from her mother the mental and the physical condition which was responsible for this state of affairs.

"Several witnesses were examined to show presence of defendant at the home of the Morey's at a certain hour. Mrs. Morey was on the stand. She described her home; said she was acquainted with defendant, and saw her in Bostwick hotel; that she returned home after dinner and found package at door way; there were no marks on the outside, but a card on the inside. She took the box in the room and opened it. She found it contained candy, of which she ate a piece. She went into the stable and found a number of pupils among them Miss Kirby. In describing the effect of the candy after eating witness said first it caused burning in the stomach, followed by nausea. The burning sensation in the stomach, with nausea, continued for several days.

Instructs to Acquit.

At Cincinnati, O., Mamie Reting, who shot Edward Grafeon on the street after he had refused to marry her and legitimatize their child, was acquitted. The defense was temporary insanity. It was shown that the defendant had made several attempts at suicide and was the victim of insomnia. The prosecuting attorney at the close of the testimony asked the court to instruct the jury to find her not guilty on the ground of insanity. This was done.

Young Man Hangs Himself.

Andrew Phillipsen, aged about twenty-four years, son of Hans Phillipsen, committed suicide by hanging himself in his father's barn about a mile northwest of Staplehurst. He was discovered by his sister, and his father, who was in Staplehurst, notified, and a physician called; but life was extinct. The young man had been in poor health for a long time, and was not considered of sound mind.

Burial of Maud S.

The body of the famous trotting mare Maud S. was buried with proper honors in the horse cemetery on the Banner farm at East View, Westchester county, New York. Her grave is beside that of Dexter, 2:17¼. Close by are buried Pocahontas, Peerless, Lady Palmer, Flatbush Maid, Rarus and other famous horses.

Judge Commits Suicide.

Judge Conrad D. Hausemann committed suicide at Hellville, Ill., by taking morphine. He was a county official for twenty-seven years and died poor, despite that during the civil war he made $200,000 selling goods to sutlers in the army. Family troubles caused his suicide.

Dies at the Age of Ninety-five.

Daniel Robinson, aged ninety-five, died at Plainview, Neb., of old age. He was a member of the Baptist church. He has two daughters living in Plainview, Mrs. H. Hammond and Mrs. A. F. Cass. His intellectual faculties were clear up to his death.

Guarding Against Plague.

Although there has been no authentic case of plague discovered in San Francisco, the municipal department is taking every precaution to guard against its introduction to the city. A large force of men was set to work to hunt out disease-breeding spots and have them cleaned.

THE STORY OF HER LIFE

Trials of Miss Viola Horlocker Dramatically Told.

In the trial of the Horlocker-Morey poisoning case at Hastings Friday a number of witnesses for the defense were examined, the most of the testimony tended to show the good character of the defendant, and her emotional and erratic temperament. The story of her life was told, not by her, but by her friend and confidant Miss Eva Stewart.

Miss Stewart recited the story as given her by defendant without a falter and in a clear and distinct voice, choosing her words carefully and with the precision of the trained elocutionist.

There was not a sound in the court room and the spectators hung on every word like it was a thing of rare preciousness and to be preserved forever.

Miss Stewart said she had been on very intimate terms with Miss Horlocker for two or three years. The defendant made a confidant of witness. They met about Christmas, when they walked together to defendant's home, and remained with defendant that night. When they were about to retire Miss Horlocker took the witness' hands in hers and said she had a confession to make; that she was in love with a married man, her employer; that she had never thought of Mr. Morey other than as a friend until one day he came to her in the office and complained of feeling lonely and downcast and said how happy it would make him if he had someone like her, who seemed so strong and comforting, to lean upon. Then, when he spoke to her a little door in her heart flew open that had never flown open before; that after that Mr. Morey often detained her in the office after the others had left and that he had often taken her in his arms and kissed her passionately; and that she had returned his kisses; that they had often gone out together and that he had taken her to his wife's apartments; that these relations continued between them until an item appeared in one of the local papers referring to the conduct of a certain business man and young lady, but not mentioning any names.

Then Mr. Tibbets called their attention to it and told them that they had better not be seen together any more for the sake of the reputation of both of them. Mr. Morey then turned away from her and would have nothing more to do with her; that one evening he followed her to the door and she begged him if it was a satisfaction to refrain from his kisses and caresses, and he said it was; that it was a duty he owed to his wife; that he had the greatest respect for her (Miss Horlocker) and hoped she would respect her womanhood. She replied, "My God, has it come to respect, when it was all love before." She then kissed his hand, saying that friends could do that much.

It was related that at one time when defendant was suffering from headache Mr. Morey told her he knew something about hypnotism and he believed he could help her; that he hypnotized her and relieved her of the pains in her head.

A COAT OF TAR

Mr. and Mrs. L. Figg, of Gretna, Victims of a Mob.

FEATHERS WERE USED LIBERALLY

Had Caused Several Separations and Much Trouble—Citizens Become Incensed and Mete Out Summary Punishment.

At Gretna, Neb., a mob, masked and otherwise disguised, went to the residence of L. Figg, took Mr. and Mrs. Figg and tarred and feathered them and then quietly dispersed. For some time feeling has been intense against the Figgs, who hold very queer ideas regarding religion, persuading women, it is charged, to leave their husbands and go to live with the Lord. Thus they were instrumental, it is alleged, in separating Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Browning and Mr. and Mrs. Bert Donohoe; also Mr. and Mrs. Woods, all among the best people and highly respected. One of the women, Mrs. Donohoe, it is charged, even refused to go to her home to see her deserted child when sick and almost at death's door.

The matter is being discussed upon the streets, some favoring the treatment inflicted, while others say that it was not the right thing to do, and that the law should have been allowed to take its course. No one seems to know anything about the affair, but it is stated that warrants are in the hands of Sheriff McAvoy, and it is hinted that some sensational developments will be divulged within a day or two.

The intruders broke down the door to the sleeping apartment of the Figgs and told them to get up. On refusing, the covers were stripped down and they were pulled out into the middle of the floor. Their night clothes were stripped off and then commenced the application of the tar.

A notice was served on the Figgs to leave town or suffer a repetition of the punishment.

LAWYERS GET ANGRY

Sensation Furnished in Trial of Viola Horlocker.

When the state rested its case in the Horlocker-Morey poisoning trial Thursday afternoon, the prosecution had woven about the defendant a strong fabric of circumstantial evidence. The most damaging character, and the defense was unable to choke any of it on cross-examination.

The court room was crowded almost to suffocation, and the day was not without its sensational incidents. While Mr. Morey was on the stand the defense persisted in a line of questions to which he was not permitted to reply, as they were not proper in cross-examination. When court adjourned at the noon hour he approached Mr. Batty, and after a few words relative to the latter's course applied an epithet which the attorney resented by attempting to strike him. Several persons stepped in between them and no encounter was prevented.

A Pittsburg, Pa., dispatch of March 23, says: The Carnegie Steel company, limited, becomes a stock company, with a capital variously estimated at from $200,000,000 to $250,000,000, the famous "Ironclad agreement" is wiped out, and litigation between the partners in the Carnegie company is dropped, and H. C. Frick, the former president of the company, virtually secures all he has contended for. These facts are embodied in an authorized statement issued tonight by the Carnegie Steel company, limited.

Farmer Loses by Fire.

Setting fire to some weeds near his barn and going to his house to read, caused a fire by which J. S. Sanborn, a farmer near Rising City, Neb., lost a $500 barn, corn cribs worth $150, 600 bushels of oats, 1,250 bushels of corn and agricultural implements worth about $300, besides several tons of hay and straw, and 1,250 bushels of corn belonging to his neighbor, Otto Hoffman. In all about $1,800 worth of property was burned. The barn was insured for about $400.

Arraigned on Charge of Murder.

Mrs. Etta Horton was arraigned before Justice D. W. Neill, at Humboldt, on a charge of murdering her newly born child, which was found in a well in the north part of town on Tuesday morning. Her interests were looked after by Lawyers E. A. Tucker and I. E. Smith, upon whose request a continuance was granted until Tuesday, March 27.

A SUCCESSFUL FARMER.

Began with Small Farm—Now Does Extensive Mixed Farming.

Within three miles of the town, going eastward, is the farm of Mr. W. Creamer, one of the municipality's largest and most prosperous mixed farmers. Mr. Creamer came to this county in 1880 and settled on a portion of the land which comprises his present enormous farm of 1,280 acres. In common with many others of a similiar period, he experienced all the hardships and difficulties common to the absence of railway and market facilities. In no wise daunted, by energy, industry and indomitable will he was able to surmount all obstacles and has achieved an unparalleled success, and is known throughout the district as one of its pre-eminent farmers. His operations extend over 1,280 acres, two sections (the thought alone of so much land makes the eastern farmer dizzy); 800 acres of this is broken and the remainder is excellent pasture land and wood. This harvest he took off a crop of 500 acres of wheat and 200 of other grains. Four hundred acres are plowed and ready for wheat next spring. Mr. Creamer is, as has been stated, a mixed farmer of no mean proportions, having at the present time forty horses, sixty head of cattle and fifty pigs. The most modern farm buildings are found on his premises, the main building being a barn fifty-five feet square on a stone foundation, containing stabling for sixteen horses and a large number of cattle. The loft is stored with twenty-nine loads of sheaf oats for feed, and tons of hay. There is also a cutting box. Another building of large dimensions is the granary, in which, after teaming large quantities to market, he still has stored 3,000 bushels of wheat. A crushing machine is in the building. There are a number of lesser buildings containing chicken house, pig pens and cattle sheds. The farm residence is a handsome frame structure of ample proportions; in connection with it is a woodshed. The water supply is unexcelled; besides house supply there is a well in the stables and a never-failing spring situated in a bluff, which never freezes. Surrounded by a thick bluff of poplars, extending in a semi-circle to the west, north and east, the winter storms are broken and accumulation of snow unknown. Added to his farming operations, Mr. Creamer conducts a threshing outfit for the season. His success is only one instance of what can be accomplished in western Canada.—Baldur (Man.) Gazette, Nov. 16, 1899.

There will be thousands remove to western Canada this year to engage in the pursuit of farming.

Pronounced "Ma-Neel-a."

The soldier boys are teaching the Coloradoans some things about the pronunciation of names relating to places in the Philippines. Manila, as a word, is a most prominent example. Americans have always said Ma-nil-a, with the "i" pronounced short. But this "i" should be spoken like long "e," and thus the word is called "Ma-neel-a." All the soldiers, in talking to their friends, would speak in familiar terms of Ma-neel-a, and soon the new pronunciation was being heard on all sides.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. Political Equality Our Final Goal and When Shall we reach it in Nebraska.

In setting out to reach a certain goal the wise one, in considering his chances of success, will give due heed to the obstacles which may be strewn along the pathway. So we, as a band of women earnestly endeavoring to reach the goal of Political Equality, should pause to consider what stumbling blocks may be in the way before us.

First, our old enemy, "you can't carry a musket" bobs up serenely with a persistency worthy a better cause. In every discussion of Women Suffrage some Solomon always endeavors to crush us with the overwhelming information that we cannot carry a gun in defence of our country and, therefore, we are not entitled to a share in the government thereof. He even insinuates we are not as brave as we might be, and that we are more afraid of a mouse than he of a cannon. This may all be perfectly true, but let me tell you, my friends, that his show of bravery depends largely upon at which end of the gun he is standing!

For my part, I am not at all anxious to shoulder a musket and march off to war. But no ones knows what he might do until he is tried. So far the necessity for my doing so has not yet arisen, and I trust it never will arise.

War, in the great majority of cases, is wholly unjustifiable, and in almost every instance could be avoided if proper steps were taken in that direction. Nations plunge into war upon the slightest provocation, and not until the conflict is ended and time is had for sober second thought, after thousand of brave men have yielded up their precious lives to a mistaken sense of duty; after hearts have been broken and fond hopes shattered, do they pause to consider what might have been. Who knows but had there been a few cowardly women sitting in the council of the nation the sad tragedy might have been averted; for women, more alive to the horrors of the battlefield, than dazzled by its dash and glitter, would pause long before she would vote for a measure to let loose the demons of war. Is war such a grand, glorious affair that we need strive to bring it about in order to show off our bravery? Is it not time nations were beginning to emerge from the dark era of murder and conquest into the broad light of common brotherhood? Aye, and the day is fast approaching. In the good time coming, when arbitration shall have replaced the gun and sword there will still remain a field upon which mankind may acquit itself with honor—the field of conscience; and the only weapon one need wield will be the little strip of white paper he places in the ballot box, and in that day, and or that same field woman will stand side by side with man, his equal mentally, morally and politically.

Another stumbling block is fear of ridicule. This may not seem of any great moment to some, but to others ridicule is a two edged sword from which they shrink in fear and trembling. Let us not underestimate its strength, but do all in our power to rescue those who are overawed by its baneful influence. Still another obstacle is found in the fact that the suffrage question is seldom taken seriously. For some reason it is considered as a burlesque and has ever served as a but of ridicule among would be wits. Now, this is not as it should be. And to those present here tonight let me say that we wish it put on record, here and now, that we are not advocating this cause for fun, but we are not in earnest, desperately in earnest, and should anyone doubt this statement, let him step into one of our meetings some afternoon and listen to the discussions going on there and he will soon be convinced that W. S. A. is as far removed from a burlesque, as the east is from the west. But of all the obstacles that bar our pathway Indifference looms up more darkly forbidding than all the rest. Indifference, though manifested in a greater or less degree by all classes of society, is, perhaps, more marked among the farming population than in any other. Ask the average farmer if he believes in Political Equality, and he will be about as much interested as if you had profounded the question: "Do you believe Adam was the first man?" Neither concerns him. Do not mistake me to mean he is equally indifferent upon all other subjects. Quite the reverse. Ask him how many hogs he has ready for market, what price he asks for a ton of hay, or any other question relative to farm affairs, and he is wide awake on the instant. Why? Because these are subjects that interest and finally come rn him, subjects upon which he must be informed if he would be a successful farmer. As has long ago been said: "Where a man's treasure is, there will his heart (or mind) be also." This is not saying that, outside [illegible] farmer is an ignoramus formed upon a great variety of subjects. But it is true that they do not manifest much interest in the matter we are now considering. And what is true of the farmer is also true of his wife. Usually she is an intelligent woman capable of assuming all the many duties that devolve upon her; and could it once be brought home to her conciousness that Equal Suffrage concerns her, individually, she would not be slow to declare herself in favor of it. Considering the fact that our farming population constitutes a large percentage of the voters in this state, it behooves us to endeavor our utmost to break through the shell of indifference which inclases our brothers and awaken them to the fact that we want, and must have their co-operation in this matter which so vitally concerns us.

When shall we reach the goal of Political Equality in Nebraska. That depends largely upon our ability to overcome the stumbling blocks before mentioned. So far we have made a very creditable start up to last October No. braska had 40 W. S. clubs. Since that time 65 more have been added, making a cum total of 105 clubs. For the present the work of organizing has been dropped, but will be regained next summer; so that it will not be long until the state is thoroughly organized.

Now a word to the brothers here tonight: Whether this state is ever carried for Equal Suffrage depends largely upon you. And we feel assured that we shall have your hearty co-operation in this matter. There are many ways in which this help may be given. In your places of busines many of you come in contact with men whom this society can not reach. Then use your best efforts to convert such ones to our cause. A few words spoken in the right season may bring forth greater results than you anticipate. Perhaps a few of you are farmers; then help us break down the wall of indifference between your neighbors and our cause. You can no doubt reach them much more effectively than we.

Be present at our public meeting and by your every word and act show yourselves in our favor. I don't know how you feel about it, but as for myself, if I were a voter and my husband was denied the right of franchise, you may rest assured that I would just hustle around and use every opportunity to promote his interest in that direction, even if I had to make the opportunity myself. May you see the matter in the same light and do a little hustling in our favor, remembering that the W. S. A. is in the race to stay and is bound to reach the goal sooner or later.

It is very hard to stand idly by and see our dear ones suffer while awaiting the arrival of the doctor. An Albany(N.Y.) dairyman called at a drug store there for a doctor to come and see his child, then very sick with croup. Not finding the doctor in, he left word for him to come at once on his return. He also bought a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, which he hoped would give some relief until the doctor should arrive. In a few hours he returned, saying the doctor need not come, as the child was much better. The druggist, Mr. Otto Scheiz, says the family has since recommended Chamberlain's Cough Remedy to their neighbors and friends until he has a constant demand for it from that part of the country. The San Francisco health authorities who are puzzling their brains to know what means to adopt to successfully cope with the bubonic plague, which has recently made its appearance in the Chinese quarter of that city, could find a very simple remedy if they would adopt the heroic measures of the Russian government in dealing with the dreaded "black death," in the Chinese colonies. There the coolies, who are found to be infected with disease are taken out and shot. The poor wretches are marshalled together and made to stand up in a row. Then a file of Russian soldiers appears, and, marching up to within a few feet of the miserable coolies, they take careful aim and fire. "It saves time and prevents the disease from spreading," is the laconic comment of the Russian officer who has charge of the "cure" for the natives. When the terrible mortality of "black death" during its previous visitations is taken into consideration it is scarcely to be wondered at that Russia has adopted such drastic measures to abate the plague. Out of 230,908 cases of bubonic plague in Bombay there were 164,188 deaths. This is only one of many instances, but it affords a fair average of the awful death which makes the bubonic plague feared above all other diseases in Europe and Asia with a fear akin to terror. If the assertion of Surgeon Wyman of the United States army be true, however, the United States has little or nothing to fear from the bubonic plague. According to his idea, the plague is essentially a dirt disease. It thrives on filth and uncleanliness. The crowded and unsanitary condition of India and China cause the disease to thrive in those countries, but in the cities of the United States, where modern methods of sanitation prevail, it would become harmless and die for want of material on which to flourish.

An official dispatch from Buskman Kop, dated March 31, says: The Boers today captured a British convoy and six guns. The force was commanded by Col. Broadwood. It consisted of the 10th Hussars, the Household Cavalry, two horse batteries and a force of mounted infantry under Col. Pilcher, which was garrisoning Thaba N'Chu Friday, but which was obliged to leave Friday night on account of the approach of a large force of Boers. The British marched to Bloemfontein water works, south of the Modder River, where they camped until 4 o'clock Saturday morning. At early dawn the Boers opened a hot shell fire from the rear. Col. Broadwood sent off the convoy and batteries, the rest of the force remaining as a rear guard. The convoy marched into a carefully prepared ambush in a deep spruit, where a strong force of Boers was concealed. The whole detachment, together with five guns of Q and one gun of H Battery, were captured. The casualties were trifling. The men were entrapped before a shot was fired. Gen. Colville's division, which left Bloemfontein early Saturday morning and arrived at 12 o'clock, is now shelling the Boers.

PUERTO RICO TARIFF.

VIEWED IN THE LIGHT OF COMMON SENSE.

The People of the Island Would Not Suffer Through the Temporary Imposition of Low Tariff Duties—A Convincing Statement.

The Journal has seen no reason for omitting shrill cries of anguish over this matter. We have not expected that the world would fold together as a scroll if the Puerto Ricans did not have free trade with the United States. We cannot go so far as to say, with yet another contemporary, that a low tariff against Puerto Rico means that "we might as well turn our soldiers loose in the island to butcher the inhabitants." Even a high tariff would, perhaps be more humane than that. What the Journal believes is that Puerto Rico is part of the United States, and that a tariff should no more be imposed against imports from there than on articles sent from New York city. But we are prepared to wait without showing signs of hysteria till the Supreme court of the United States makes a decision that confirms our belief.

In the meantime if the Puerto Ricans are compelled by congress to charge a low tariff against us at their custom houses and we against them for the sake of enough revenue to support the government of the island what of it? A raving contemporary says that a duty of 2 cents the pound on rice will compel the Puerto Ricans to pay $380,000 annually. That is a little over 40 cents for each Puerto Rican, and there are five other articles on which the increase may be as much—about $2 the year per capita. We regret that it is anything but unfair to the Supreme court says this is illegal, and no congressman says this is illegal, because of congressional fear of what we regard as a mistake will affect nothing.

Now as to exports from Puerto Rico on which it is proposed to charge a duty here. The current understanding has been that Puerto Rico was not selling a dollar's worth of its products elsewhere than in the United States, and not much here; that it once had free trade with Spain, and lost that market when the island was ceded to us. But the fact is that Puerto Rico did not have free trade with Spain. Coffee shipped from Puerto Rico to Spain paid a duty of $5.70 the hundred pounds, and as to her other products the Spanish tariff was relatively as high, or more than twice what is suggested to be imposed in the United States on imports from the island. Puerto Rican coffee, in fact, is in any event to be admitted free into our markets. Moreover, of the duties collected in Puerto Rico when it was a Spanish province about 40 per cent went for the support of the government of Spain; under the United States both the revenue from duties on exports from Puerto Rico, collected in our custom houses, and the revenue from duties collected at the island will be expended in the island.

Nor is it true that the markets of Spain have been closed to Puerto Rico since the cession. The figures furnished by our government to cover the first thirteen months of our occupancy show that Puerto Rican exports to Spain ($969,729 worth), Italy, France, the United States, Germany and to other countries amounted in value to over six millions of dollars, nearly above the average of the period from 1887 to 1891, thought somewhat less than the total for the one other year for which the figures are available. Besides, general exports to the United States from the island are rapidly increasing.

It is not accurate therefore to state that the Puerto Ricans are standing starving in the midst of a mass of unexportable and unsalable products because we do not give them free trade with this country. We ought to give them free trade if the island is decided to be an integral part of this country, and we ought to give them some form of government at once, for uncertainty tends to prevent the highest prosperity and development, and because the people deserve at least that much at our hands of right. But it is unnecessary that our local free trade contemporary should beat its breast and mix ashes in its flowing locks as might become a sincere mourner. It is not sincere, and there is no funeral.—Detroit Journal.

BRADFORD'S WOES.

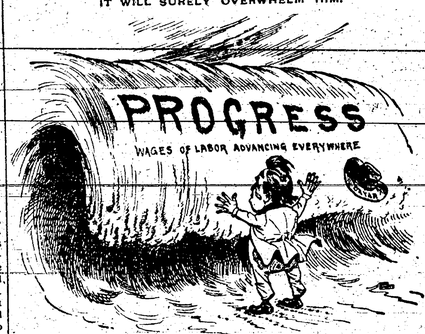
Caused by the Fact That Americans Are Wearing Clothes Made in America.

"Prospects in the American trade generally are not encouraging, for the exports of cotton goods are likely to fall away, America having got machinery by which she can produce special effects themselves."

Such is the dismal forecast of the Bradford correspondent of the Financial Times of London. For the year 1899 cotton goods formed the principal part of Bradford's trade with the United States, the gross value amounting to nearly $3,000,000, but the export of woolen goods fell off from about $2,200,000 in 1898 to only about $6,000 in 1899. Five years ago Bradford sent us in one year over $8,000,000 worth of worsted coatings, while the amount for last year was a trifle over $360,000. The Dingley tariff is to blame for it. Through its operations the demand for domestic fabrics has increased, and the trade losses lamented by Bradford and other European woolen centers are represented by the immense gain for American labor and material through the purchase and use of cloths made in our own country.

Now it appears that by reason of the tariff on fine cotton American mills are being equipped with machinery that will turn out these goods so successfully as to seriously diminish the amounts purchased abroad. It would seem that there is no end to the ravages wrought by the Dingley tariff in that portion of our foreign trade which is included in the imports. Not so the exports. They keep right on growing year by year. The tariff is a two-edged sword which cuts both ways for our prosperity.

IT WILL SURELY OVERWHELM HIM.



HAMPERING FOREIGN TRADE.

Not Only That Part Which Relates to Home-Produced Articles.

The placing of an order with a Maryland company for 2,000 tons of steel rails for use in Norway foreshadows the opening of a hitherto untouched market for our manufactures of iron and steel. This is the first sale of American steel rails in that part of the world, and it is another evidence of the steady advance of our manufactured products in the markets of Europe. The foreign country which is not buying American rails, locomotives and other railway supplies is the exception instead of the rule.—New York Mail and Express.

It is becoming more and more evident from such frequent recurring instances as that cited above that the free-traders have much reason to feel agrieved at the manner in which the Dingley tariff "hampers foreign trade." Anything which hampers the trade of foreigners is always offensive to the American free-trader. Here is a clear case of hampering the trade of the ironmongers of Norway by the introduction "in their midst" of a big order of American-made steel rails. Surely this is the policy of protection in directly responsible for under the workings of that policy the ironmongers of the United States have grown so strong that they can invade all the markets of the world with their products, and thus hamper the trade of foreigners everywhere. When to this unpleasant state of affairs is added the enormous reduction that has taken place in the marketing by foreigners of their competitive products in the United States by reason of the protective duties of the Dingley tariff, it is impossible to deny that foreign trade is impaired, and that there is much ground for the sympathy felt for the unfortunate foreigners by the free-traders of America.

An Unanswerable Argument.

The excess of exports over imports for three years of President McKinley's administration has been: 1897, $286,-263,144; 1898, $615,431,676; 1899, $529,-874,813.

That the United States sold far more than a billion dollars' worth of products more than it bought during this period, despite the fact that a state of war existed during a greater part of it, is an unanswerable argument in favor of the protective tariff. During the last two years, under a wise and careful Republican administration and an adequate tariff for protection of American industries, the people of the United States have sold more goods abroad than under any three years of Democratic administration.

During the past two years the excess of the sales made by the people of the United States in foreign markets over the purchases in foreign markets over one billion of dollars, has been greater than in twenty years of Democratic administration.

During the past two years the people of the United States have sold in excess of their purchases in the markets of the world five hundred millions more than the entire excess over imports during the eight years that Cleveland was president.—Quincy (Ill.) Whig.

A FREE-TRADE TRUST.

English Wall Paper Manufacturers Organize a Combine.

The following bit of news, contained in a special cablegram from London, will be interesting to those that contend that free trade is the proper remedy for the trust evil:

"The English wall paper trust, forming since last September, is now complete, with a capital of $30,000,000. Practically every manufacturer in the United Kingdom is in the combination."

As England already has free trade, and has had it for many years, the theorists there cannot throw the responsibility for the formation of the wall paper trust upon the tariff. We may properly ask how it is, if it is the tariff protection that enables trusts to thrive in this country, that a number of them can thrive in the British isles, where there is no tariff protection?

The wall paper trust, which is described as embracing practically every manufacturer in the United Kingdom, is a more comprehensive trust than any that has yet been formed in this country, with the exception of the Standard Oil trust, and the Standard Oil trust has no protection upon its product. The great Rockefeller trust has been organized and maintained without any aid from tae protective tariff.

In England the wall paper manufacturers are not protected against importations from abroad by duties on wall paper, and yet it seems that they can combine every manufacturer into a trust and fix their own prices for what they sell.

There must, then, be something besides the tariff that is responsible for the trusts, and if that is the case, the introduction of free trade would not prove to be an effective remedy. On the contrary, free trade would probably serve to extend the operations of the trusts. With the duties abolished we should see international instead of merely national combinations to control the output and price of many articles.

The protective tariff operates to keep the foreign trusts out of the United States, leaving us with only our own creations to deal with—and the way will be discovered to curb and control them effectually.—Minneapolis Tribune.

Had for the Calamity Party.

Prosperity stories have taken the place of calamity croakings in Kansas, and Mr. Bryan is wondering what he can do to regain his former hold upon the ears of those who no longer find him interesting. The story is told of an old farmer who, at the point of a shotgun, compelled a creditor to accept payment of a note before it fell due. "Why did he do that?" some one asked the narrator. "Oh, he wanted to stop the interest," was the reply. John W. Breidenthal, the state bank commissioner, tells of a banker out in the short grass country who wrote a letter asking if there was any law that would compel him to receive money for deposit in his bank. "I wrote him," said Breidenthal, "that if he had more money than he knew what to do with, I knew of no law in Kansas that would compel him to take more. You see, they are paying their taxes, and the county treasurer wanted to make a deposit out of his bank, but he would be mandamused before he would submit to it."

All this looks bad for the political party and candidate who hope to win by reviving the free-trade and free-silver issues of the Chicago platform.

KING DON:

.....BY MAVOR ALLAN.....

They sat thus for a long time, speaking in broken tones of that time which had been fraught with such bitterness to both. She loved him for the perils he had passed through, and he loved her that she did pity them."

"My dearest," said Don at last, "there is only one thing I can ask you to do now to insure your happiness and—and your safety. Give me the right at once to shield you from harm, and to care for you as only your husband can."

"You mean—?" She faltered, while a faint color fluttered to her wan cheek.

"I mean let us be married without delay, darling." Don finished the sentence for her. "I cannot bear to think of your going home to England when Mrs. Franklin goes, nor yet of your being left here alone—and I may have orders to leave Pindi at any moment."

"Oh, Don, I could not marry you just yet," she said, her voice breaking in a tremulous sob. "It would be too cruel to my poor father!"

"Would it not be more cruel to me than to the dead, to live in constant fear of someone annoying you, or something happening to you, when I was not at hand to protect you?" he asked. And his voice quivered.

"Yes, yes!" she sighed. And involuntarily a memory of Prince Clement Sing flashed through her overwrought brain. How might not he take opportunity of harassing her now her father was gone, especially as he claimed to have the dead man's sanction to address her. And impulsively she told Don of the Prince's visit.

"But he went away in quite a friendly mood, saying if I ever wanted help I might count on him. It was a great relief. I was terribly afraid he might go away angry. He is so passionate and so powerful, I imagined all sorts of harm he might do."

Yet her tender heart recoiled from thinking of her own welfare, whilst her father's grave "lay so freshly dug."

"Dear Don," she said, putting her little hand tenderly in his, "perhaps you cannot understand my feeling; but I seem to feel his presence still, as if his spirit stood quite near me now, and I think it would hurt him if you wanted to be happy without him so soon."

The hand she touched trembled.

"No; I don't understand that," he said, almost roughly. "I am afraid I can only think of the dead as dead and buried in their graves."

"No, no! don't say that!" she said, and she drew his hand to her lips and her hot tears fell upon it. "You who have proved so strong and true through all your trials, won't you take the solace of the belief that there is eternity to reward us for all our grief and parting? Dear Don, how else could we say, O death, where is thy sting? O, grave, where is thy victory?"

He arose and paced the length of the room twice before he came back and stood once more by her side.

"Lillie," he said, and she knew by the tone of his voice he had been struggling with some strong emotion, "come to me now, and teach me how to believe these things, while my heart is still fresh to your sorrow. Promise me, Lillie!"

"Don, dearest, if I went home to England with Mrs. Franklin for a few months, wouldn't you come and fetch me there? But to marry you now—oh, Don, I cannot!"

"Then heaven help me!" he answered bitterly.

Again he rose, and she saw by the workings of his face how the indomitable will of the strong man, which had never before brooked rebuff, struggled for supremacy, even over his love.

He came back to her, and when he spoke his voice was low and tense.

"Then it's all been in vain, Lillie. You love me, you say; but you cannot love me so much as I love you, for if you had asked me to do what I have asked you I would not have forsaken you."

She rose and flung herself in his arms.

"Oh, Don, my love, why do you speak so? What makes you so wild and strange? Don, Don, I have not forsaken you! You are all I now have in the whole world!"

His jealousy could not be but stayed by her passionate fervor, and, suddenly, at touch of those clinging arms, some of the old calm imperiousness of the Don of old came to his aid.

"My darling," he answered, drawing her nearer, "I want you, I need you—you do not know how much! Why would you defraud me of what is mine? If we part now, God knows how next we may ever meet."

Fateful words to haunt her in the long, long days to come.

But now, overcome by his mastery and pleading, she resisted no longer; and as she spoke the words of yielding he sought, he kissed the lips which had uttered them with a fierce, consuming joy.

CHAPTER VII.

The wedding was over. It had been a very simple, very quiet affair. Indeed, it had quite taken the little community of the garrison station by surprise, for Don's disposition was so naturally reserved. He had spoken little of his engagement, and only a few brother officers and a small number of Lillie's personal friends were in the secret.

The bridegroom had obtained long leave, and with great reluctance had at last yielded to Lillie's appeal to spend the honeymoon in England.

He had given in on the one stipulation that Gadie Ha should not be included in the program; and Lillie, with that touch of sympathy "which makes the whole world kin," understood the jealous pain it must bring to remember that Scottish home of his childhood which he had looked some day to call his own.

The winding up of her father's affairs, and the disposal of some of her own property, was indeed her only incentive for the homeward journey at all; for, with the bond of ever-deepening love, her life henceforth would be lived for Don alone.

It seemed a strange, commonplace ending to that gay existence of coquetry and ambition and almost heartless worldliness which once had constituted the sum total of her thoughts and actions.

As Lillie Gordon stood in her pretty bedroom, watching her maid pack away the simple white silk gown she had worn for the marriage ceremony, her thoughts leaped back to those days of long ago, and it seemed scarcely possible she could be the same Lillie who had held love so lightly in that bygone time.

The wedding had taken place at 6 o'clock, with no reception afterwards, owing to the bride's deep mourning.

The previous night Don had partaken of his farewell dinner as a bachelor with his jolly comrades of the Derbyshire mess, and now was absent making some last necessary arrangements at his quarters, as he and his bride were to leave by the night train for Bombay, where they would catch a hired troopship homeward bound.

There was a knock at the bedroom door, and Mrs. Franklin's sweet voice sought admittance.

The young widow was to stay on at the bungalow for a few weeks longer, as her child's health was in too precarious a state to undergo the long sea journey home, and she had gladly accepted Lillie's invitation to remain.

Lillie answered the knock herself. Despite the black crape gown she now wore, the young bride looked radiant, with a subdued happiness that made all else forgotten but the joyous vesanty of her blue eyes and love-lit face. The other woman, who had lost her dearest on earth, looked at her with a momentary pang of jealous grief. She little knew she was coming to chase the joy from those blue eyes forever.

"My love," Mrs. Franklin spoke apologetically, "I am so sorry to trouble you, but Prince Clement Sing has just arrived from Simla, and demands to see you. I explained to him you were busy, and asked if I could not deliver a message; but he insists on seeing you alone."

"Has he heard of our—our marriage?" queried Lillie, while a deeper color tinted her cheek.

"Yes. He evidently knew of it, for he spoke of you as Mrs. Gordon," answered the other lady, smiling. "I think, dear, perhaps it would be more diplomatic of you to go to him. To tell the truth, he was so emphatic about seeing you he quite frightened me."

"He will not frighten me," said Lillie, lightly. "Really, he is a very tiresome individual, and I hope I shall get rid of him before Don comes back, for I know Don cordially dislikes him."

She picked up an ivory fan from her dressing table and went, with a proud, firm step, down the broad staircase.

Her dignity as Don's wife seemed to have already added a subtle increase of matronly power to her slim, young figure.

Prince Clement Sing was standing in the middle of the big drawing-room, and the look on his face made her step falter in spite of herself—it was dark and almost lowering with suppressed fury. Then she recovered her self-possession with an effort, and went forward with a pretty obeisance and outstretched hand.

"This is an unexpected pleasure, Prince; and had you come a little later you would not have found me here. My husband and I start for Bombay tonight."

"I fear you will not count it a pleasure when you hear on what errand I have come," he answered grimly. "I only regret for your sake that I have come too late."

"May I ask what you mean?" she said, somewhat haughtily.

"I mean, madam, I know you sufficiently well to feel sure you would have hesitated to ally yourself to one whom you would feel it not worthy to breathe the same air with you if you knew what I know concerning him."

Lillie drew up her small person to its full height, and, in her indignation, laid aside the air of deference which usually marked her demeanor towards her royal visitor.

"Nothing you can say for or against Captain Gordon can have the slightest weight with me!" she said, with proud scorn.

She still stood, because the Prince also remained unseated, and as she spoke she put out her little hand to the chair-back and stayed herself by it, for she was trembling between annoyance and alarm.

"It is unchivalrous to contradict a lady," said Prince Clement, with a slow, cruel smile; "yet I find myself in that unfortunate position—obliged to repeat my statement, that I have it in my power to tell you what I know would entirely alter your sentiments towards the man you have unfortunately married."

"Then tell me nothing!" she cried, with a little burst of passion. "I decline to listen to you!"

She made a movement as if to sweep a proud curtsey and pass from the room; but, with a quick stride, the Prince covered the distance between them and laid a commanding hand on her arm.

"You shall listen to me! I heard of it too late to prevent this unholy marriage, but at least I will not be cheated of my revenge. I loved you—you flouted me; and now I can make you suffer, and you shall suffer!"

She shrank beneath his iron touch, for, despite her calm exterior, her heart beat high with unknown terror in the clutch of this fanatic, with whom revenge was virtue.

"Then I ask your highness to say what you intend to say quickly, and allow me to retire," she said, with a brave coolness she was far from feeling. "I beg to remind you again that we are leaving Pindi in two hours' time, and I expect my husband to join me here every moment."

"Let him come!" returned the Prince —and he laughed a scathing little laugh. "Let him come and deny, if he can, the reason why your father's murderer has never been found!"

Her hands clung convulsively to the chair, and she staggered; but only for an instant. She lifted her blue eyes to his, full of imperious scorn.

"Will you kindly speak more plainly, Prince? If you compel me to listen to you, I at least deny your right to speak in riddles."

It was open warfare between them now; but, in the tortured excitement, she was growing reckless of consequences, if Don were only by her side to protect her! She felt she would have given the world to summon her kitmutgar—native footman—and drive Prince Clement Sing from her presence there and then.

"I will speak all too plainly," he answered, bowing low. "It was Captain Gordon himself who shot Captain Dermont."

"You dare say this to me?"

The words came in panting breaths through her parched lips; her bosom heaved, and she stood like a lioness at bay.

"I dare, because it is the truth!" he hissed. "Ask himself. He is here to answer."

For the portiere had been driven aside, and within the threshold of the door stood Don, in all the bravery of full-dress uniform he had worn for his wedding, and which he had not yet had time to change.

A Change for the Better.

Lady Violet Greville, commenting on the emancipation of women, says that in the early days of Queen Victoria a married woman never took an airing on foot, even in the park, unless attended by her maid, and it is only within the last fifteen years that girls of good family could walk alone in certain quiet and respectable streets. There was once a time when to drive alone in a hansom would have subjected a lady to the imputation of being fast and immodest. Now there is scarcely anything women cannot do.

FAR FROM DEFEAT

Recent Successes Making the Boers More Bold.

THEY PROPOSE TO BE AGGRESSIVE

A London dispatch of March 28 says: The Boers are having a little good luck and are showing some boldness again, as a raiding party estimated at 400 is believed by the British forces at Warrenton to have crossed the Kimberley-Bloemfontein wagon road Monday and to have headed for Jacobsdal, with the intention of cutting the railway ten miles west.

Commandant Olivier appears to have gotten his five thousand men and twenty-five miles of wagons into rugged country, where he can make an easy rear guard defense. Charles Williams, the military expert, says:

If this column gets through substantially Commandant Olivier will have carried out the great feat of the war, seeing that he ran every chance of being grounded between the upper millstone of Lord Roberts' army and the nether millstone of the broken Basuto frontier. He will have done it within fifty miles or so of Lord Roberts' main strength. Certainly it looked for a week as though Lord Roberts' held Olivier in the hollow of his hand. If Olivier gets through to Kroonstad with even 3,000 men it will be an important addition to the Boer gathering there. His escape is attributed in part to the worn-out condition of the British army horses.

Lord Roberts' transport appears to have been badly dislocated by the loss at Riet river, before Cronje's surrender of the wagon train, and in addition to this the army with which he proposes to advance toward Pretoria is nearly double that of the earlier rapid movements."

Ten thousand transport, cavalry and gun animals are due to arrive at Cape ports during this and next week.

It is given out at Cape Town that Lord Roberts' advance may be delayed for months. Although such statements should be received with reserve, it seems positive that he intends to go to Cape Town to meet Lady Roberts, who is due to arrive there in ten days.

The war office has issued another table of British losses, showing an aggregate of 16,652, which does not include 4,000 who have been invalided home.

WILLING TO STAND TRIAL

Legality of Texas Anti-Trust Law Soon To Be Tested.

Henry Clay Pierce, of the Waters-Pierce Oil company of Waco, Tex., after a brief consultation with his lawyers, called at Judge Scott's court room and stated to the judge that he came to Waco to answer to the indictment brought out of the Texas laws against trusts which he is accused of violating under an indictment returned six years ago. The indictment is a noted one, among the defendants named therein being John D. Rockefeller, Henry M. Flagler, and all the other prominent officers of the Standard Oil company. Mr. Pierce entered into a recognizance in the sum of $8,000 for his appearance at the next term of court. The indictment grew out of certain contracts alleged to have been made by representatives of the Waters-Pierce Oil company with local merchants, which, it is claimed, acted in restraint of competition. The offense under the Texas anti-trust law is a felony and punishable by both fine and imprisonment.

DECLARES LAW ILLEGAL

Newspaper Articles Need Not Be Signed In California.

A dispatch from San Francisco says: Judge Hunt decided that the Morehouse law passed by the last legislature and requiring all newspaper articles to bear the signature of the writers, has no place in law, as one of its provisions is that in case of an award to an injured party a portion of the award must be placed in the hands of the state treasurer. Judge Hunt holds that this is a penal provision and any prosecution must be instituted by the people of the state and not by individuals.

FIGG WILL NOT PROSECUTE.

Sarpy County Victim Allows Case to Be Dismissed.

A Papillion, Neb., dispatch says: In county court Louis Figg announced that he would not prosecute the two men, John Woods and William Browning, arrested on the charge of being star actors in chapter one, when the two leaders of the Pigrites were given a coat of tar and feathers by irate neighbors. The cases were therefore dismissed.

The deputy sheriff of Fremont and a large number of witnesses for both sides were on hand. Woods bringing along friends and his two daughters, through whose testimony he claimed he could prove an alibi.

After the dismissal of the case Louis Figg was asked why he did not leave Pirtetna and what he expected to do. To the judge and the crowd in the court room he said:

"I propose to stay in Gretna and will not give up my religion. I am a property owner there and have lived in that community a good part of my life. As to my future course," he added earnestly, "I intend to go right on preaching my faith as I have done in the past. Threats will have no effect and if my neighbors choose to lynch me for adhering to my religious convictions, all well and good. But I wish to state that I will go right on in the good work, regardless of the consequences."

Expert Testimony.

The evidence heard Tuesday at Hastings in the case of Miss Horbocker, charged with the attempted poisoning of her employer's wife, was entirely of an expert character and was in support of the theory of degeneracy and lack of will power on the part of the defendant to resist the homicidal impulse engendered by the mental shock occasioned by the breaking off of her relations with Mr. Morey. A number of physicians testified.

VILLAGE ELECTION,

No Saloon in Table Rock for Two Years at Least.

There was a slight falling off of votes Tuesday from that of one year ago, when the issue was the same, license or no license, and 209 votes were cast. This year 197 electors deposited the white expression of their verdict on the saloon question, but not all these votes were counted, for the reason that in some cases the voter voted for more candidates than there were offices to fill; others were rejected for reasons which the law declares will vitiate a ballot. One elector was so determined that his verdict should be weighed and considered that he signed his name to his ballot, to give it force and dignity, and thereby caused the judges to write "rejected" across it.

The contest was quietly waged, notwithstanding the interest felt in the issue by nearly every citizen, and there were no quarrelings of any kind whatever on the streets. Considering the number of votes cast, there were few scratched ballots, nearly all voters confining themselves to the issue. The result was a victory for the anti-license ticket, all its candidates being elected, and insuring the absence of a saloon in our midst for two years, as three members of the board were elected for two years, and two for one year. The vote stood:

Morton, anti-license	100
Sutton, " "	103
Longwell, " "	104
Covert, " "	103
Higgins " "	101
Taylor, Citizens	83
Lane, "	70
Kovanda, "	75
Fuller, "	82
Freeman, "	76

The two year men elected are J. O. Morton, Wm. Sutton and J. D. Longwell.

Some one might ask what is meant by the mind: I would answer by the mind of a man we understand that in him which thinks, remembers, reasons or wills.

The almost universal habit of reading is one of the most significant "signs of the times." It is fraught with the greatest consequences of good or ill to our people. According as books or papers are good or bad will the mind of the reader be improved or debauched thereby. The bad elements of society are continually being made worse by the corrupt literature that is spread broadcast through our land.

Just in the proportion as corrupt specials and "blood and thunder" novels have power to destroy all there is good and pure in human life, so has good literature power to uplift and ennoble human life.

There is no doubt but that the waywardness and final destruction of thousands of our young people is due to the evil influence of the books they read.

A few pages in a single volume fall, as it were, by chance, under the eye of the boy as he reads in leisure hours. The words of the author are an inspiration to his soul. They fascinate his attention, and charm his mind. The result is the boy has found a purpose in life, and he goes out from the simple reading of a book to pursue an honorable vocation through a long, a living life. Books go thus see to have almost supreme power over the mind of man. How necessary is it then that every home should have a well-selected library, for it is here that the mind and soul are to be fed, nourished and strengthened for the real struggle of life.

One has said show me a man's associates and I will tell you what kind of man he is. Associates, or the company a person keeps, has much if not more, influence over his or her life as any one thing.

Take the young man for instance, let him be ever so good and pure, and if he associates with those who are low and degraded, he will soon become like them. He may at first be somewhat shocked at the language they use, but step by step he is drawn in the downward course. He may only be induced at first to go to some place of amusement, then perhaps to smoke cigarettes, but gradually indulgence makes him less secure against the wine cup. He is told that there is no harm in the social glass, no harm in moderate drinking. Every step taken now makes the next one easier. If he is employed, his expensive pleasures to same his income. He must have more money. He filches his employer or his parents, or resorts to dishonest schemes to obtain money. His associates lead him on until he has lost his last penny. Driven to despair he takes the fatal step, commits some crime and the curtain goes down upon a life wasted and ruined through the evil influences of associates.

On the other hand—take the companionship of those who are good and noble, and have a purpose in life. How they inspire us with a warm resolve to struggle on with the difficulties of life, or help us to be cheerful under adverse fortune, or to confirm our faith in God and his goodness.

How necessary is it then that we strive to throw around the children and young people of our community good influences; help them to keep good company; inspire them with "energy" in life. For if they possess this quality (energy) the watchword of their lives will be "Forward." In season and out of season they will labor at their chosen work, climbing over difficulties, overcoming resistance, thrusting aside obstacles, mounting the ladder of a pure, noble life round by round.

Then at last they take the shining way that leads to the stars, and through their gates, onward still to the gates of pearls, and the throne of eyeria ting whiteness.

Republican County Convention.

The republicans of Pawnee county held a convention Saturday at Pawnee City, and nominated two candidates for members of the legislature, one candidate for county attorney and named delegates to the state, congressional and senatorial conventions. County Chairman H. C. Lindsay called the convention to order, and Dr. W. H. Wilson was chosen as temporary chairman. On assuming the gavel Mr. Wilson made a speech which aroused the enthusiasm of the delegates to a high degree after which N. A. Steinauer was selected as secretary. A credential committee was dispensed with, there being no contests, and the chairman of the various delegations sent a list of elected delegates to the secretary. The temporary organization was made permanent and J. C. Dort was nominated for county attorney by acclamation. Mr. Dort thanked the convention for the honor and promised to perform the duties of the office impartially if elected. Then a motion was made nominating J. F. Wenzl and Andrew Scott by acclamation for representatives, and the motion carried with a whoop. Mr. Wenzl thanked the convention, but Mr. Scott was not present.

Resolutions were passed endorsing Hon. E. A. Tucker of Humboldt for delegate to the national convention, and Hon. E. J. Burkett for Congress. Capt. R. P. Jennings was called to the platform and made a speech which aroused cheer after cheer, and at its conclusion every old soldier in the hall (a good proportion of the delegates) shook hands with him.

The following delegates were chosen:

State—R H Henderson, C E Milks, W M Gifford, F D Kirsch, W J Halderman, F E Johnson, J. W. Moore, H C Lindsay, J T Trenery, C A Schappell, C J Wood, W H Wilson, N E Leonard, N. A Steinauer, J W O'Laughlin.

Congressional—C A Barclay, E R Huff, C H Harris, John Deihl, J A Combs, W M McConnell, J F Griffith, Wm. Hall, W M Pyle, Wm. B Castle, W F Huff, F H Taylor, C H Barnard, J M Hurd, W E Atkinson.

Senatorial—T H Stoup, J S Harrod, J W Prowant, L P Wenzl, S K Cox, J A Baker, J W Brown, F C Harrington, Jacob Weber, W D Hartwell, Anton Wenzl, M H Marble, R P Jennings, F E Washburn, R H Church.

Mission Creek—O C Hansen.
Plum Creek—C E Milks.
Turkey Creek—S A Isaac.
Steinauer—L P Wenzl.
Miles—S K Cox.
West Branch—D B Drake.
Clay—J M Waddell.
Pawnee City—H L Dodge.
Clear Creek—M Walsh, Jr.
Table Rock—C I Norris.
Sheridan—J M Hurd.
South Fork—J W O'Laughlin.

At the meeting of the central committee held after the convention, H C Lindsay was chosen chairman, H H Bull, secretary and C I Norris, treasurer.

The convention was one of the most harmonious ever held in the county, the nominees are gentlemen who have served one term each in the offices for which they are named, and when November comes the people of the county will go to the polls and endorse their nomination by a rousing majority.

Discovery of Florida.

In 1512 the celebrated Spanish explorer, Juan Ponce de Leon, with a company of adventurers, sailed from Puerto Rico, of which he was then governor, in search of a fountain whose waters would restore youth and beauty, which a tradition of the natives asserted was to be found on a distant island. After visiting the Bahamas and seeking for the fabled fountain in vain, he descried, on Easter Sunday, land which he supposed to be another island. This, from the day of its discovery (Easter day being called, in Spanish, Pascua Florida), and also because of the luxuriant vegetation and flowers that covered its banks, he called Florida. On April 8, 1512, he landed some miles north of the present site of St. Augustine, and took possession of the country in the name of the Spanish king. Some months were spent by De Leon and his followers in searching for the fountain of youth; but he finally returned disappointed to Puerto Rico, leaving the search to be continued by one of his followers. In 1513 he was appointed governor of Florida, and in 1521 he took a colony thither; but shortly afterward he was severely wounded in a conflict with the natives and returned to Cuba, where he died.

JOUBERT IS DEAD

Head of the Transvaal Army Succumbs Suddenly.

PRETORIA MOURNS HIS SUDDEN DEMISE

A Pretoria, March 28, dispatch says: General Joubert died last night at 11:30 o'clock. He had been suffering from a stomach complaint. The town is plunged into mourning for the true patriot, gallant general and upright and honorable gentleman.

A London dispatch dated, March 29, says: The Pretoria correspondent of the Daily Mail, telegraphing yesterday, says:

"General Joubert died of peritonitis. The funeral will take place Thursday. The government is pleading with the widow to allow a temporary interment here, with a state funeral. Joubert always expressed a desire to be buried in a mausoleum built on his farm. His successor in the chief command will probably be General Louis Bothia, now commanding in Natal.

In connection with the announcement of the death of General Joubert, it is interesting to know that General White, who commanded the garrison that defended Ladysmith, in speech at Capetown yesterday evening, declared that Joubert was a soldier and gentleman and a brave, honorable opponent.

General Pietrus Jacobus Joubert, commandant general of the Transvaal forces, better known as Piet Joubert, or "Slien Piet" (Slim Peter), was born sixty-eight years ago. He was descended from an old French Huguenot family which settled in South Africa many years ago. He was born in Cape Colony, but was taken by his parents when seven years old to the Orange Free State, where he was taught from early childhood to shoot straight and hate the British.

The circumstances of the death of General Joubert are not explained in a dispatch from Lourenzo Marques, which recalls the fact that William Cox, a newspaper correspondent, who was recently released from imprisonment at Pretoria, and who has arrived at Durban, said General Joubert was apparently suspected of half-heartedness and that his life would be in danger at the hands of the burghers if Pretoria was besieged.

SECRETARY POWERS HELD

Evidence Not Favorable and He Is Bound Over Without Bail.

The fourth day of the examining trial of Republican Secretary of State Caleb Powers was held at Frankfort, Ky., Tuesday with the court room cleared of all people, excepting attorneys, newspaper correspondents and officers of the court. The attorneys for the defense held a consultation and afterwards called County Attorney Polsgrove.

Immediately after the consultation Governor Brown, for the defense, announced that no testimony would be introduced for the defense, and that they would wave further examination. The pardon issued to Powers by Governor Taylor was tendered by ex-Governor Brown as a bar to the prosecution, and he asked that the defendant be dismissed.

Colonel Campbell said the commonwealth denied Governor Taylor's right to issue a pardon at the time the pardon was granted. Governor Brown moved that the prisoner be dismissed upon the evidence. The motion was overruled. Bail was asked for. Judge Moore said:

"It is not my belief that Powers fired the shot which killed Governor Goebel but from the evidence, it is my opinion that he was connected with the conspiracy to kill him. I shall therefore order that he be held over without bail to the Franklin county grand jury that the case may be further investigated."

CAUSE A REIGN OF TERROR

Three Drunken Men Go Shooting in a North Carolina Town.

Hot Springs, N. C., was terrorized by J. W. Floyd, Guy Turner, and Duke Lamb, three drunken men who took charge of the streets, shooting at everyone they met and defying officers of the law. Jack Paris, a deputy policeman, was shot in the head and seriously wounded. Richard Ralston, a bystander, was shot in the abdomen and received injuries that may prove fatal. Floyd was shot in the arm by Chief of Police Rector. All three were finally lodged in jail, and fears are expressed that a mob may do them violence.

MACRUM'S MAIL OPENED

Secretary of State Hay Quoted As Saying As Much.

The statement that England had apologized for the opening of Consul Macrum's mail at Pretoria, was made by Secretary Hay to Representative Berry, of Kentucky, one of the democratic members of the house foreign affairs committee, Representative Berry called at the state department Tuesday to talk over the charges made by Mr. Macrum and it was during this interview that Secretary Hay made the confession.

"I saw Secretary Hay," said Mr. Berry, in talking of the proposed hearing, "and he said that the whole groundwork of Mr. Macrum's charges rested upon the fact that three letters had been opened by English officials in South Africa.

"Secretary Hay said that England's attention had been called to this violation of international law and that Lord Salisbury had made an investigation and then had sent an apology to this country. The apology was delivered at the state department by Lord Pauncefote."

Mr. Macrum called upon Chairman Hitt and consulted with him as to when he would be ready to appear before the committee. As a result of the conference the committee will be called to meet within a day or two.

The whole committee will hear the testimony and the proceedings will be public, instead of the charges being heard privately by Messrs. Hitt, Adams and Berry, as was originally intended.

COURT GRANTS HIS APPEAL

Attorney General Not Done With Case Against Soldiers.

At Omaha, March 28, special says: Today Attorney General Smyth filed application for appeal in the habeas corpus case of the soldiers Fair and Jockens, which was granted.

The attorney general makes fourteen assignments of error, the principal one being, first, The court erred in ruling that "an order given by a military officer to his private will be his full protection in a criminal prosecution, unless the illegality of such an order is so clearly shown on its face that a man of ordinary sense and understanding would know when he heard it read or given that the order was illegal."

The other paragraphs assign error in ordering the prisoners released from custody.

Sergeant Fair and Private Jockens both appeared before the court and entered into their personal recognizance in the sum of $1,000 for their appearance in case the appeal is decided against them.

Testimony All In.

Mr. Ragan will be followed by Attorney Hutton for the state, Messrs. Batty and Stevens for the defense and Mr. McCreary will close for the state.

THE TEEMING WEST.

Western Canada Fertile Lands Being Filled with Excellent Settlers.

The saliest fact that presents itself in taking a birdseye view of the Canadian West, is that of intense activity in every department. Whether the glance be turned upon the district east of Winnipeg, the Red River Valley south or north, the Dauphin and M. & M. W. district, the Southwestern, or whether it take in the great central division along the main line of the C. P. R., stretching away out to the Rockies and from there bending north and south to Prince Alberta and Edmonton, McLeod and Leithbridge, whether the examination be made in any of these directions the same activity, growth and hopefulness are observable.

The Canadian West is not only a good place to locate permanently, but it is also a good place to invite one's relatives and friends to come to. This is the spirit that seems to animate the West at the present time, and its effects are to be seen on every hand. To enumerate the towns where handsome and substantial blocks and residences have gone up this year would be simply to give a list of the towns and villages along the railway lines. And this movement has not been confined to these centers of population, but in many cases it has been overshadowed by the improvement in farm buildings.

So far as one can see, this is no passing phase, no repetition of any temporary boom following a period of good crops and fair prices. It is a movement more spontaneous, more general, more marked than anything that has gone before, and seems to indicate that the great West, like Samson, bursting the encompassing bands, has awakened to a period of activity and development that will surpass anything we have known in the past and which will only be paralleled by the opening out of some of the most fertile of the western states of the union.

Look at some of the figures. Over a thousand schools in Manitoba, and the number going up by leaps and bounds; something like 500 schools in the territories. Winnipeg as representing the gateway of the West, the third city in the Dominion in regard to bank clearings, postal business and probably in regard to customs, the customs return at Winnipeg running about 30 to 40 per cent larger month by month than in the fiscal year of 1897-8, the largest previous year for actual business entries, when over $900,000 was paid through the Winnipeg office for duty; the C. P. R. and Canada Northwest land sales together running over $1,500,000 for the year. These and a thousand more signs show how the West has leaped into new life.

This is an inspiring and cheering spectacle, but it brings with it great responsibilities. The business men realize this, the banks realize it and have regarded their agencies through every bustling little town clear out to the coast; the churches realize it, and one denomination alone has opened an average of about thirty new stations in each of the past two years, and will increase this in the year now entered upon; the government departments realize it, and there is talk of redistribution and additional members. The educational branches realize it, and new schools are springing up everywhere. Over 12,000 settlers came in from the United States alone last year, and these, with the people who came in from the East, prove the most rigorous westerners. They lose no time in developing their farms, in filling their grazing lands with stock, and in every district is to be found evidences of thrift and prosperity.

Friendly Insects.

A party of young people sat on the porch one evening last summer and amused themselves by trying to kill a dragon fly that was darting about in the air. It made frequent swoops in the vicinity of their heads, when they all made a great ado, as though some venomous creature were after them. The dragon fly is in reality a most useful creature, and where it abounds mosquitoes and flies are relentlessly pursued. It would be a good idea if these friendly helpers would be domesticated, for when one can capture a dragon fly and offer him a common house fly, he seizes it with the utmost eagerness and devours it in an instant. The lady bird is often killed by those who are not aware what a voracious devourer of insects it is. The lady bird industriously hunts for the eggs and young insects that live on the under side of leaves.

VIOLA NOT GUILTY

Jury In Horlocker Case Brings In Verdict Acquitting the Defendant.

Viola Horlocker, who for nearly two weeks has been on trial in district court at Hastings charged with administering poisonous candy to the wife of her employer, is again a free woman, and at liberty to go where she chooses, or where her family and friends choose she shall go.

The verdict that released her from the embrace of the law's strong arm was handed to the court at just twenty minutes past 11 o'clock Friday morning, less than an hour from the time the court had finished reading its instructions and given the case to the jury.

At the close of the argument of the prosecution Judge Adams read his instructions to the jury and it retired to the jury room to deliberate.

At 11:20 a. m., just fifty-three minutes after leaving the court room, the jury asked to be returned to render their verdict. Telephone messages went flying over the city and in five minutes people were hastening toward the court house from all directions.

At 11:40 defendant and attorneys entered the room.

Miss Horlocker was absolutely colorless as she entered the room. Her lips were drawn and she gave evidence of the terrible mental strain under which she was laboring.

As soon as she was seated the jury filed in and took their places in the jury box. There was an instant of intense silence, and then the court said:

"Gentlemen of the jury, have you agreed upon a verdict?"

"We have," came the response.

The foreman then handed the papers to the judge. Deputy Clerk Hratton took the verdict, and after affixing the filing stamp, handed it back to Judge Adams, who read it aloud:

"We, the jury in the above entitled case, being duly empanelled and sworn, do find and render that the defendant, Viola Horlocker, is not guilty."

"Gentlemen, is this your verdict?"

"It is," was the response.

The defendant threw up her hands and uttered a cry. Mr. Batty, her old, gray-haired counsel, was at her side in an instant and, throwing his arms about her, hugged and kissed her fervently. Mr. Stevens went forward to extend his congratulations, but he was not so demonstrative. Her sisters had hurried to the jury box and were shaking the hands of the jurymen. Miss Horlocker arose and followed them, and as the jurymen passed from the box she grasped each by the hand and said: "God bless you; oh, God, I thank you for this."

The verdict, though not unexpected, was coolly received by the spectators, and beyond a few handclaps there was no outburst or other demonstration than that made by Miss Horlocker's family and her attorneys.

Shoots Himself at Falls.

A sensational suicide occurred at Niagara Falls, N. Y., in the river by Goat Island, near the spring. A man waded out as far as he could, shot himself three times in the head, pitched forward into the water and was swept down between Luna and Goat Island, going over the falls at the Cave of the Winds.

From papers and letters left behind he is thought to be Hippolyte Schneider, of Pittsburg. Letters in French were found addressed to Madame Lillian Russell, Infanta Dalilia and the Westinghouse company, of Pittsburg.

In one letter he blames the woman Lillian Russell for his death and leaves her all his property. The letters were rambling and indicate that the man was insane. Naturalization papers were found on him, dated March 9, 1892, at Pittsburg.

Corn Feel as a Solomon.

Here is another of the inimitable stories of President Kruger. A question about a division of some property as to which two brothers had a dispute, was referred to him, and it was agreed that his judgment should be accepted. After hearing both sides, said he to the elder one: "I decide that you, the senior, should have the dividing of this property; but," he added with a twinkle in his eye, "I also decide that your brother shall have his choice of the two portions!"

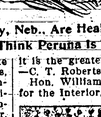
PERUNA PROTECTS OUR HOMES.

The Roberts Family, of Falls City, Neb., Are Healthy and Happy—A Rare Sight in These Days. They Say, "We Think Peruna Is The Greatest Medicine On Earth."

No man is better known in the State of Nebraska than Mr. Carl T. Roberts, contractor and mason. A typical American—active, shrewd and full of business sagacity. He is not only a provider for his family, but a protector. In a recent letter to Dr. Hartman he writes among other things, as follows:

"Our boy, James, had the membranous croup and repeated attacks of lung fever. Our boy, Charlie, was also subject to attacks of pneumonia and pleurisy. Our third boy, John, was subject to fever and ague (malarial) and liver trouble. Your remedy, Peruna, cured my boys entirely, and now I have three of the healthiest boys in the State of Nebraska, which I attribute to your medicine. My wife had a stomach trouble which Peruna also cured. Altogether for my whole family we have used nineteen bottles of Peruna, and have thus saved $500 in doctors' bills. I am a contractor and mason by trade, and am known all over Nebraska. I have had a stomach trouble, which has been greatly relieved by your remedy, Peruna, for which I am still taking it. We think it is the greatest medicine on earth."—C. T. Roberts, Falls City, Nebraska.



Hon. William Youngblood

Hon. William Youngblood, Auditor for the Interior, writes from Washington, D. C., to Dr. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio, as follows: "I've often heard of your great medicine and have persuaded my wife, who has been much of a sufferer from catarrh, to try Peruna, and after using one bottle she has wonderfully improved. It has proved all you have claimed for it, and I take pleasure in recommending it to anyone who is afflicted with catarrh." Peruna has become, in a multitude of households, absolutely indispensable.

Mr. T. G. Walker, Carneiro, Kansas, writes: "It is with pleasure that I report that I am better than I have been for many years. I believe Peruna is without a doubt the best medicine that ever was used in a family. It has cured my nervousness, with which I had been afflicted for a great number of years."

It is a fact of ever-increasing astonishment that so many otherwise sensible and provident people will, for the neglect or simple precaution as to have a bottle of Peruna at hand, bring upon themselves the needless suffering and foolish expense that a practitioner of medicine is forced to witness every day.

As soon as the value of Peruna is fully appreciated by every household, both as a preventive and cure of these afflictions, tens of thousands of lives will be saved, and hundreds of thousands of chronic, lingering cases of disease prevented. Peruna is the household safeguard.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C. March 24, 1900. (Special Correspondence) Coal miners are striking in Saxony and Bohemia, and they teach a lesson that should not be lost on American wage-earners. The United States consular agent at Eibenstock, Mr. Ernest L. Harris, writes that "if the strikers hold out for any length of time many a manufacturer will be unable to fill his orders, and the poor people of the country will be brought face to face with distress and want." Consul Hughes, of Coburg, says that prices of all local goods are bound to go up. The various branches of the trades are having meetings to increase the cost for export, and American buyers will find products higher in price than they were last year and the delivery time much longer." "If the foreign manufacturers can not fill American orders, then so much the better for American manufacturers. Inversely, a strike in this country that checks our production simply plays into the hands of the foreign manufacturer and merchant, besides bringing our wage-earners "face to face with distress and want."

According to the Moniteur Officiel du Commerce, an official publication of the French government, the Philippine market received, prior to the Spanish-American war, all sorts of articles from England, Spain, France, Belgium, etc. The United States, which exports to those islands had been relatively of very insignificant importance, has since taken a prominent place in the victualling of Manila, which place is daily growing commercially. The business men of Manila, after a few months of observation, became convinced that, in order to hold their own against the American competitor, they would have to replenish part of their stock of trade with American goods, so that now one can see in all the stores of Manila, besides the foreign goods formerly imported, also a number of articles which the American manufactures try to introduce in large quantities.

Writing of one of the latest British free trade trusts—the wall paper combine—Consul Wilbur, of Dublin, says it compels every dealer to buy all stock from the trust, and to sell no other for ten years. He adds that "Some dealers are skeptical as to the ability of the combination to maintain a monopoly and keep prices firm. The prices have not been materially advanced (perhaps 5 to 15 per cent), except on low-grade goods." In those goods the percentage of advance is greater. In order for American wall paper to compete, it would seem to be necessary for the makers in the United States to come to some agreement with the combination. The effect of the free trade trust would, therefore, seem to be an absolute monopoly of the British market at higher prices and to compel American manufactures to enter into a deal with the Englishmen or lose their export trade.

Comptroller Dawes and his force are working at high pressure to meet the demands for new bank notes and the transfer of one class of bonds in place of another to secure circulation. It is now quite apparent that the new financial act is going to furnish a considerable increase in the money in circulation, and in such form that its reliability and safety can never be questioned.

Action on the subject of "trust" is to be taken by the subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee, which has been appointed by Chairman Ray. The Republican leaders are anxious to go on record on this subject during the present session of Congress, but they find it difficult to devise a plan which will be effective and yet within constitutional limits. It is possible that an amendment to the Constitution may be recommended, giving Congress plenary power over corporations.

It is believed that the Filipinos will make a strong effort to hold out against Uncle Sam's forces until November, as they have it in mind that Bryan will be the next President. special cable, in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, of March 20, brings this fact out strongly and clearly and has attracted considerable attention in Washington. The St. Louis Republic (Democratic), in its issue of March 11th, shows the "frightful condition of Filipinos under insurgent rule," and their utter unfitness to govern themselves, much less those foreigners whose business interests have led them to settle in the islands. Bishop Potter, who went to Manila a confirmed anti-expansionist, has returned fully convinced that America can give the islands a much improved government, and he has shelved his former views.

The South is helping largely to build up our favorable trade balance this year through its exports of cotton, which has recently been quoted at nearly 10 cents a pound in New York. This will add to the money value of our foreign trade, improve the condition of Southern farmers, and generally tend to increase prosperity elsewhere through the more liberal purchases that Southern States will make in the East and West. F. A. HARRISON.

The preliminary examination of Mrs. Etta Horton was held before Justice Smith of Humboldt Monday morning. It will be remembered that Mrs. Horton was held by the coroner's jury on a charge of infanticide. At the preliminary all the evidence was introduced that had been brought forward at the inquest and served to show that circumstances pointed to the defendant as the guilty party. When the state rested its case several physicians were sworn and asked hypothetical questions bearing on the case. It was their opinion that the defendant had not been delivered of a child and the court failing to find the evidence of the state sufficiently strong to bind the defendant over to the district court, she was accordingly discharged. —Falls City Journal.

Planting the Apple Orchard.

The following suggestions are very simple, and will be found useful when put in practice. Location: Under good care the apple tree will grow and bear on most any slope, yet the eastern slopes are the most desirable, and the western and the southwestern are the least desirable. Windbreaks: In all cases the orchard should not be allowed to suffer the full force of the wind. A windbreak on the south and west is always beneficial and a shelter belt is a benefit on any side where it will check a full sweep of wind. Preparing the land: The land should be plowed deep, subsoiling preferred. Deep fine and put in good tilt for grain crop. Mark the land out both ways with a corn-planter or marker, then establish the distance between the trees by a certain number of rows. In this way the corn or potatoes or any cultivated crop that is planted in the young orchard will always fit the tree rows. Dig the holes with a spade or by plowing deep furrows. The holes must be deep enough to admit the roots in their natural position. Before planting, dip the roots in thin mud mortar and never allow them to dry. Plant the tree firmly from three to five inches deeper than it stood in the nursery, allowing one inch of the surface soil to remain loose to prevent baking and to take in the rainfall. Lean the tree slightly to the southwest, placing the largest and lowest limbs on that side. By this plan and by selecting low headed trees danger of sun-scald is much lessened. The tree should have a central body with limbs on all sides. Forked trees are worthless. All bruised and unnatural roots should be cut off. Shorten the top by cutting off one-half of the last year's growth. Distance to plant: In the eastern part of the state apple trees should be planted from 25 to 30 feet apart. Farther west and northwest where there is more sunshine and dryer atmosphere, they should be planted from 20 to 25 feet apart.

Varieties: For general planting in the eastern part of the state the most reliable are Yellow Transparent, Duchess, Whitney, E. Harvest, and Red Astrachan for summer; Wealthy, Malden Blush, Porter, Utter's Red for autumn; Jonathan, G. Golden, Winesap, Ben Davis, Janet, Gano, Mo. Pippin, N. W. Greening, Salome and Iowa Blush for winter. Farther west, Yellow Transparent, Duchess, Whitney, Wealthy, Janet, Winesap, Walbridge, Iowa Blush and N. W. Greening.

A better idea of varieties might be had for any certain locality by consulting the Nebraska State Horticultural report of 1899, which divides the state into nine fruit districts and gives a recommended list for each district.

Spreads Like Wildfire.

When things are "the best" they become "the best selling." Abraham Hare, a leading druggist, of Bellville, O., writes: "Electric Bitters are the best selling bitters I have handled in 20 years. You know why? Most diseases begin in disorder of the stomach, liver, kidneys, bowels, blood and nerves. Electric Bitters tones up the stomach, regulates liver, kidneys and bowels, purifies the blood, strengthens the nerves, hence cures multitudes of maladies. It builds up the entire system. Puts new life and vigor into any weak, sickly, rundown man or woman. Price 50 cents. Sold by S. G. Wright Druggist.

COUNTED BY BILLIONS.

ANTI-PROTECTION THEORIES UPSET BY FACTS.

This Country Has Passed the Two Billion Dollar Mark—Alike in Its Foreign Commerce and in the Amount of Money in Circulation.

The United States has reached the two billion dollar mark alike as to its foreign commerce and its volume of money in circulation. This is an unpleasant fact for two classes of theorists. It is unpleasant for free-traders, because the development of our trade with foreign nations up to and beyond the two billion dollar mark knocks the life out of a cherished free-trade belief and shows that the free-trader was hopelessly, absurdly at fault in his contention that a protective tariff was fatal to foreign trade expansion. Equally unpleasant, indeed actually distressing, is the fact of a two billion dollar volume of money in circulation to those who have based their political hopes and ambitions upon the effort to show that "16 to 1" was the only thing that could make money plenty and cheap.

Curiously enough, the facts that make both the Cobdenites and the Bryanites look silly are the product of a single month in the history of the United States under "McKinley and Prosperity." On the 14th of January of this year it was announced by the treasury bureau of statistics that in the year 1899 our foreign commerce had crossed the two billion dollar line, while on the 1st of February the treasury bureau of loans and currency made known the fact that the total money in circulation had also crossed the two billion dollar line, while gold and gold certificates alone had crossed the 800 million dollar line. The total foreign commerce for the year 1899 was $2,076,345,242, while the total money in circulation on February 1 was $2,002,149,355. The use of ten figures with which to show the business conditions of the country is indeed becoming surprisingly frequent. The tables of the December summary of commerce and finance show, for instance, the total resources of national banks at $4,475,-363,964, the latest report of the comptroller of the currency shows the deposits in savings banks to be $2,230,-366,954; the total resources of all banks in the United States are given by the same report as $5,196,177,381, and the latest number of the summary of commerce and finance shows the December clearing house returns of all cities outside of New York at $3,012,806,144, and those of the city of New York at $5,-348,285,867.

The announcement that the money in circulation in the United States has for the first time crossed the two billion dollar line also calls attention to the fact that the amount of money for each individual is greater today than ever before. The treasury bureau of loans and currency publishes each month a statement of the amount of money in circulation, and by combining with this the actuary's estimate of population, presents a monthly statement of the amount of money in circulation per capita. The statement puts the population on February 1, 1900, at 77,116,000, the money in circulation at $2,002,149,355, and the circulation per capita at $25.98. This gives a larger per capita than in any earlier month in the history of the country. On February 1, 1899, it was $25.42, on February 1, 1898, $23.42; on February 1, 1897, $23.05, and on February 1, 1896, $22.47.

No period in our financial history has shown a more rapid growth in the amount of money in circulation than that covered by the past three or four years. The total money in circulation today is 33 per cent greater than at the beginning of the fiscal year 1897, and the gold and gold certificates in circulation 61 per cent greater than at that time, the actual increase in money in circulation during that period being $493,424,155, and of gold and gold certificates, $305,886,000, practically two-thirds of the increase, therefore, having been in gold.

THE LABOR VOTE.

Always an Uncertain Quantity When the Country Is in a Prosperous Condition.

The Republican party naturally expects a large increase in its voting strength this year as a result of the great prosperity which the country has enjoyed under the present Republican administration. When the people have passed from a condition of depression and extreme hard times under one party to a condition of unparalleled activity and good times under another party, the reasonable conclusion must be that the former party will lose and the latter gain at the next general expression of popular sentiment. As labor has been one of the chief beneficiaries of this changed condition, it is natural to suppose that there would be an especially large gain to the Republican party from the labor vote—particularly in the manufacturing districts. The ripe student of political history, however, will not accept this view implicitly.

When President Harrison was defeated for re-election the country was in a prosperous condition. Nearly all the mills were running full time and wages were good. It was difficult to believe that the wage-earners in any number would vote for a change. But they did. The Democrats piled up some of the largest majorities in sections dotted with mills and furnaces. A great many wage-earners listened to promises that times for themselves and everybody else might even be better, and they voted to usher in a condition of things which, instead of helping them, swamped everybody.

Again in Ohio last year, Golden Rule Jones, on a platform wholly theoretical and unsubstantial, drew almost his entire support of over a hundred thousand votes from the manufacturing cities of the state. An almost unexampled business boom was in progress. Everybody with the will and the strength to work were hard at work and prospering. The state campaign was generally regarded as a skirmish line fight for advantage this year, and hence the wage-earners were adjured to stand by the party of sound money and protection. But, nevertheless, Mr. Jones made what, in the circumstances, was a surprisingly large inroad on that vote.

This unnatural and unreasonable course on the part of labor is due to two causes. Demagogues make their appeals specially to the labor vote, and laboring men are too often suspicious of the party which makes business good, because of an absurd belief that whoever helps capital to prosper is an enemy of labor. The Republican party's gains this year, therefore, may be expected to come chiefly from business men and farmers, who know the advantages of living under a sound money and business stimulating administration, and are not willing to take chances under any other kind—and from Democrats who cannot indorse their own party's narrow-sighted policy against national expansion.—Kansas City (Mo.) Journal.

READY FOR ALL COMERS.

THOSE RECIPROCITY TREATIES

Absurdity of Creating a Tariff by Law Only to Repeal by Means of Treaties.

We are not at all surprised to hear that Germany finds fault with our Italian treaty, nor shall we wonder if Italy finds fault with the French treaty and so on throughout the list. No other result was to have been expected from such a system. To construct a tariff adapted to the country's interests and needs—a tariff which treats all foreign nations on a basis of absolute equality, and which can be understood and reckoned with by our producers and exporters on a basis of simplicity and accuracy—and then to set about the amendment and modification of that tariff in a dozen different and bewildering directions strikes us as the most notable modern instance of the opening of Pandora's box. It introduces into our financial equation the factor of a mischievous confusion. It lays us open to the charge of favoritism and discrimination. It sets in motion the machinery of an interminable and pestiferous complication, at home and abroad. It can give satisfaction, content and security nowhere.

The very idea of setting up a tariff law only to honeycomb and dismantle and emasculate it afterwards through the medium of a swarm of special treaties strikes us as objectionable in the last degree. If the tariff is imperfect, unsuited to our necessities and policies, why not modify it in congress? Why amend this schedule to satisfy Germany, and that schedule to placate France, and so on to the end of the catalogue, and conclude by satisfying no one, not even ourselves? Section 7 of Article 1 of the Constitution of the United States provides that "all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the house of representatives." It goes on to say, however, "but the senate may propose or concur with amendments as in other bills." Section 2, article 11, provides that the president shall have the power, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, to make treaties. The question, then, is whether we can, by calling these tariff arrangements with foreign countries "treaties," use article 2 of the constitution to nullify article 1 of the same instrument. Apparently the arrangements under discussion did not "originate in the house of representatives." Apparently their purpose is to "raise revenue" when we have, under the operation of the reciprocity clause of the Dingley act, a set of laws which refer solely to the raising of revenue, but which have not originated in the house of representatives, nor been submitted to that body's judgment and authority.

It is no part of our purpose, however, to make free with the constitution. We recognize the monopoly of the members from Podunk, Wayback and Possum Fork in that respect. But it seems to us a very grotesque and to say ridiculous situation, which puts the house of representatives in the predicament of formulating a tariff which somebody else can tear into tatters and which subjects American producers and exporters to the bewildering uncertainties of laws that reduce the chameleon to a dull, neutral and unchangeable complexion.

In our opinion it would be well for the senate to reject the whole lot of these absurd "treaties," and for congress to abolish the High Thingabob Plenipotentiary Nonsense under which they have been bred. We have a congress to make tariffs for us, and foreign nations should be left to approve them or not, according to their fancy and caprice.—Washington Post.

Work Ahead of Mischief.

A recent dispatch from Louisville, Ky., reports that the jeans clothing business in that section is booming. Shipments last month showed a gain of 25 per cent over those of January, 1899, and manufacturers have more orders for spring shipments than they ever had before. There are eight or ten jean mills in the vicinity of Louisville, and all are sharing in the general prosperity.

There is very little doubt that the present trouble in Kentucky would have taken on a very much uglier aspect if there had been as many idle discontented men hanging about to swell the mob on the one side or the other, as there would have been when Wilson law free trade had closed our factories, put business at a standstill and thrown men out of work. Men with work to do haven't time to hang around looking for trouble, and our policy of a protective tariff sees to it that man have work to do—all they went of it. It sees to it in Kentucky as well as in the rest of the country. The result is peace and quiet, instead of discontent and mob violence. Work instead of mischief is only another way of saying protection instead of free trade.

If They Will Only Think So.

Shakespeare or somebody else said that a man "who is robbed and doesn't know it, is not robbed at all." Bryan's continuous calamity yelps would indicate that he thinks that if he can make the people believe that they are being robbed, it's just as good as if they were really robbed.—Republican

KING DON:

A STORY OF MILITARY LIFE IN INDIA.

.....BY MAYOR ALLAN.....

CHAPTER VIII.

"He is here to answer!"

As the Prince spoke those fateful words Lillie turned and would have flown to Don's side, but at sight of his face she stopped short, paralyzed with amazement or fear or anguish. Which was it? Had she followed the first impulse to fly to him and beg him to deny this vile slander, what might Don's answer not have been? But he saw her hesitation and that spasm of conflicting emotions which swept her face, and he strode forward, like a man who knows his doom pronounced and goes recklessly to meet it, realizing there is no escape.

"I have heard, and I will answer," came his deep, rich tones.

He spoke no other words of greeting to his untoward visitor. He looked neither at him nor his wife, but straight before him, as if he saw written there the self-denunciation he was fated to speak.

"It is true that I was with Captain Derwent at the time of death; that in a moment of passion I had pointed my revolver at his breast; but, as heaven is above us, I know it was not my shot, but a rebel bullet, which killed him."

Lillie had spoken no word. She stood as motionless as one turned to stone; and though he would not meet her eyes, Don felt them to be fixed upon him with an agony that was harder to bear than the fiercest words of accusation.

"Sir"—Don wheeled round now upon his adversary, and his voice grew harder and stronger—"what I did I tell you was done in a moment of passion—a moment I shall regret to my last hour. I do not know by what means you have got your information, but to accuse me of taking his life in cold blood I will not suffer—and I defy you to prove his death was by my hand!"

"I have no desire to prove it further," was the contemptuous reply of the Prince, whose calm complaisance now was as intense as was Don's hot passion. "I have not the shadow of a doubt I could do so if I chose. My faithful sepoy, who followed you when you left Pindi for the camp, and shadowed every step you took whilst you were there, could testify to each word of your last converse with Captain Derwent. He could tell how you declared you would kill both myself and Captain Derwent sooner than allow this lady to become my wife."

He bowed to the motionless Lillie.

"He could swear that, when Captain Derwent repeated his refusal to your own suit, you deliberately fired your revolver, and he fell at your feet, crying: 'For Lillie's sake, Gordon, have a care!' All that I could prove. Can you deny it?"

For one instant there was tense silence, then Don's voice came, strained and hard:

"If your sepoy could prove all this, why did he not come into camp and denounce me before the whole army? And for what purpose was he following me from Pindi, may I ask?"

"You may." And the Prince's smile was not a pleasant one to see. "You must know, Captain Gordon, where one of our royal house loves. It is not customary for another man to lift his eyes. My jealousy of you was roused, and my sepoy was sent to watch you and warn Captain Derwent of my displeasure. As for your first question, your movements were a secret with him alone until he had my sanction to divulge them. He will never receive that sanction, for now, with this unfortunate marriage, my interest in the subject has waned. You may rest assured you are free to pass as an honorable soldier for the rest of your natural life."

The supreme earcasm of the Prince's words was lost upon the haggard man who faced him.

"Since you are so generous," said Don, with some calm scorn in his voice also, "I fail to see the object of such refined cruelty in bringing about this—this painful and untimely scene."

His tones broke a little in spite of himself. The sight of Lillie's immovable features was killing him.

"My object"—and now Prince Clement Sing laughed shortly and moved to the doorway—"my object was merely to bring home your guilt to you, and to humiliate yonder foolish creature, who might have been a princess, and has made herself the wife of a felon. I have the honor to bid you both adieu."

"Stay!" Don's voice shook with the frenzy of his passion. "I will allow no man, not even Prince Clement Sing, to call me by that name! Your sepoy shall be made to own it as a perjury!"

"Find him and prove that, by all means, if you can," was the sneering answer; "for who will believe that the shot to which you have confessed was not, as he says, the shot which caused Captain Derwent's death? I repeat, your ignoble secret is safe with me."

The Prince waited for no reply. For a long moment there was silence—a silence full of the bitterness of death.

Lillie still stood there motionless, it seemed almost without breath or being. She was not looking at Don any longer now. Her blue eyes were gazing into vacancy, with an expression of horror in them, as if they gazed in reality upon that ghastly scene the Prince had painted—her husband's revolver pointed at her father's breast. The silence and the anguish of it all grew more than Don could bear.

"Lillie," he cried.

She made no movement. It was as if she had become unconscious of his presence or even life itself.

"Lillie! For mercy's sake, Lillie, look at me! Lillie! Lillie!"

He had gone to her side now and touched her cold hand, and at the touch she swayed a little and would have fallen senseless, but he caught her in his arms and laid her on the low divan. He threw himself on his knees beside her, and looked at her with his breath coming in hard, quick gasps.

Despair and shame overwhelmed him to suffocation, and paramount through it all came the proud fear for that self which had hitherto ever been first with him—all his life long—the self for which he had often sacrificed the happiness of others or well-nigh forfeited honor, for which at last in a moment of frenzy he had even sold his soul.

He saw himself in that awful moment for what he was, and even with Captain Derwent's dead body at his feet he had failed to see himself.

Scorned and shamed before men, it brought near to him another tribunal, higher and all-powerful, at whose portals he must needs stand at the last day, and he bowed his head in the first real prayer that had ever rent his bleeding heart.

"My God, my God, be merciful!"

How would she for whom he had sinned look at him when those closed eyes opened? Would she not shrink from his touch as from some unclean thing? Would her love not fall before this blow he had dealt it, or was it that love possessed of a divine pity which would not turn even from the hand that struck it? He took the ivory fan which had dropped from her nerveless fingers and wafted it softly over her pallid face.

Her long, thick lashes quivered, the white eyelids opened at last, and her blue eyes were looking into his.

He covered his face with his hands and bowed his head on the cushion beside her, for he could not dare to look at her now. She put out a trembling hand and touched his thick, brown hair.

"Don," she whispered faintly, "tell me it is not true!"

"I cannot!" The hoarse reply pierced her very soul. Her hand dropped. She burst into sudden and passionate weeping. With a strong effort Don recovered his self-control and spoke with labored intensity.

"It was not my shot that killed him—as God is my judge, I swear to you it was not; but, in a fit of anger, I fired, and it might have killed him. He insisted you were to marry that dark fellow, and he would not listen to me, and I lost my head. Lillie, Lillie! don't look like that! Don't! I cannot bear it!"

She had stayed her convulsive sobs, and her blue eyes were regarding him in a way that made his proud lips quiver.

"You did that, yet you came back to me and told me nothing of it, and you made me marry you!" The words broke from her in low, halting sentences, as if they choked her to utter them.

"Lillie, be merciful! It was my love for you that made me reckless. What good would it have done to tell you of our quarrel? For I never dreamt you would come to know of it."

"Oh, why did you make me marry you?" she wailed. And now she broke down once more and wept bitterly.

"Lillie!" he cried, beside himself with remorse and suffering, "you don't believe me guilty of his death? Don't tell me you doubt me!"

"I do not doubt you," she spoke at last; "but you have deceived me, and oh, Don, it has broken my heart!"

He looked at her wildly, and seemed to realize, with a new sense of desolation, that it was indeed true. He had shattered alike her faith in him and her love.

"Oh!" he cried out, "if you had loved me as I love you, you would understand and be pitiful!"

"I do love you," she answered brokenly—"you as you should be, as God meant you to be, not what you are."

"Don't!" he cried again. "Oh, if you only knew what a purgatory remorse has made my life ever since that fatal night, you would pity me and forgive!"

"I do forgive you," she said, after a silence that seemed an eternity to the man who hung upon her words; "but life can never be the same again—never, never!"

She staggered to her feet and flung back the long strands of her flaxen hair from her face with a despairing gesture. With a wild rush of memory it had dawned upon her that this was her wedding day, and that in an hour's time she was expected to leave her maiden home a happy bride.

Her wedding day! Was it indeed only a few hours since she laid her hand in Don's and vowed that him she would love and cherish and obey till death them did part?

She turned now and looked at him, with the misery of that remembrance writ large upon her face, and Don winced beneath that look as if she had struck him a blow.

"Oh, that we could undo this day!" she said.

He knew then the thing he dreaded had come upon him. He had lost her love, and he was yet to lose herself. And a fierce despair fell upon him. He strode towards her and took her in a passionate embrace.

"No, I will not let you say it!" he cried hoarsely; "for I could not live without you, Lillie!"

CHAPTER IX.

Bombay at last!

"Oh, the terrible strain of those nights and days since the garrison of Rawal Pindi had bidden the newly married pair 'God speed,'" and that journey had begun which should have been one all too swiftly passing dream of happiness, and held nothing but the long-drawn-out agony of tortured hours—hours spent together in closest companionship, yet in which they were kept apart by the widest gulfs.

Don thought there could well be nothing bitterer than that stage of the journey which was over. The forced inaction on board the trains, the fierce satisfaction of arranging every little detail for his wife's comfort, always with the knowledge that that right to do so would all too soon cease to be his, the constant strain to keep up appearances before servants and officials, the utter inability to break down the barrier of pain when they were alone.

Sometimes he told himself it had been better to speak that last goodby at Bombay and prolong the agony no longer; but as a drowning man clings to the rope of succor, he had not the courage to be the one to cut the cord which bound them. She had consented she should take her home, and he would go through with it to the bitter end. His thoughts never went beyond that end. After their farewell had been spoken, what mattered it wither he went?

And now they were on board the big steamer at last, and the May day was dying in a golden haze over land and sea. The pilot had long since gone ashore in the tug steamer, and the great Indian land of glory and death was sinking fast astern into the world of waters.

Lillie stood on the poop and looked her last upon it with a bursting heart. She had come hither a gay and happy girl, she was going hence a broken-hearted woman, a wife in name alone.

Don was below, conferring with the steward anent their luggage and cabins. She was free to let fall those salt tears she hid from him with proud, Spartanlike fortitude. If she suffered, she suffered in silence, and perhaps Don never guessed how deep that suffering was. He came up by and by, and found her still standing by the taffrail alone. She had checked her tears and recovered her habitual calm; but though she had drawn her veil down through its thin texture Don saw how pale and worn her lovely face looked.

"You are tired," he said, compassionately. "Shall you go below at once?"

"I would rather stay here a while. I am not in the least weary."

She Used Smokeless Powder.

He—That's a peculiar ring you are wearing. Has it a history? She—Yes, it's a war relic. He—Indeed! Tell me about it; pray. She—Oh, there isn't much to tell. I won it in my first engagement.—Chicago News.

Kansas City Convention Hall Totally Destroyed.

RUINED IN LESS THAN A HALF HOUR

Movement Already Begun for Immediate Rebuilding—Other Property Destroyed, Making a Total Loss of $400,000, Partially Covered.

A Kansas City, April 4 dispatch says: Convention hall, Kansas City's pride, wherein the democratic national convention was to have been held on July 4, was laid in ruins in less than thirty minutes' time this afternoon from a fire that started from an unknown source at 1 o'clock. The fire burned with such fury that it was evident almost at the start that the structure was doomed, and the firemen soon turned their attention to saving the surrounding property.

A stiff breeze was blowing, and before the fire was subdued at 2:15 o'clock the Second Presbyterian church, one of the finest edifices in the city; the church parsonage, the Lathrop public school, a two-story, thirteen-room building, all on Central street, and a half block of three-story flat buildings on Twelfth street were rendered a total loss. Several residences were damaged to a greater or less degree, and for a time it was feared that seven-ty blocks of buildings in the residence district would go.

The aggregate loss is $400,000 apportioned as follows: Convention hall, $235,000, insured for $155,000; church, $50,000, insured; parsonage, $5,000, insured for $20,000; Williamson block, Twelfth street, $80,000, insured for $45,000.

Plans are on foot to rebuild convention hall immediately, and make it ready for the democratic convention in July. While the fire was still in progress members of the Commercial club, through whose efforts the hall was conceived and built, mingled in the crowds of spectators and began soliciting funds for a new structure.

This evening $25,000 had been subscribed and Secretary Channing of the club called a mass meeting of citizens for tomorrow night to devise ways and means of raising an additional $50,000. The hall association has $10,000 in the bank, and will have the $155,000 insurance for immediate use, the insurance companies have spontaneously agreed to waive the sixty days' limit and make settlement on demand. The Kansas City Lumber company, that furnished four-fifths of the lumber for the old building, have agreed to duplicate their order at once at the rate in existence two years ago, and the Minneapolis firm that furnished the steel girders for the immense roof have been telegraphed to duplicate their order.

As near as can be learned the fire originated in the boiler room.

ENGAGED FOR FORTY YEARS

Happy Ending of a Long Courtship at Deadwood.

Forty-one years ago at Springfield, O., David Arnold, now of Deadwood, S. D., and Miss Elizabeth England exchanged vows of love and promises of marriage, says a Hot Springs, S. D., dispatch. Last week they were married after they had reached the ages of sixty-one and sixty-four years. Shortly after their engagement Arnold came west seeking his fortune. Twice since then he has urged fiance to keep her promise but Miss England's parents were in bad health, and she thought her duty was to them. She was left an orphan some months ago. Arnold has accumulated considerable money and property and is able to take care of his bride.

BOLD PLAN OF BOERS.

Propose to Invest Roberts at Bloemfontein.

A London dispatch says it looks as though the Boers had conceived the audacious plan of attempting to invest Lord Roberts at Bloemfontein, or at least to endeavor to delay his northward advance by harrassing the British lines of communications.

On his side Lord Roberts is centralizing his forces and preparing to take every advantage of the bold but risky tactics of the enemy. He is not likely to strike at any of their forces until he is certain of delivering a crushing blow. The situation in the absence of and official dispatches from Lord Roberts, is both mystifying and interesting.

Cuba Customs Receipts.

The war department has made public a comparative statement of the customs receipts in Cuba for the months of January and February, 1899, with those of January and February, 1900. The statement shows receipts of the island for January and February, 1899, were $2,014,933, those of January and February, 1900, were $2,772,619, an increase for the two months of 1900 over the same period of 1899 of $757,685.

CELEBRATING HER VICTORY

Holiday in the City of Mexico Generally Observed.

Tuesday the anniversary of the victory of the Mexican army, commanded by General Porfirio Diaz, over the imperialist forces at Puebla, thirty-three years ago, was observed as a general holiday in the City of Mexico, the public buildings being decorated handsomely. The day was celebrated by military maneuvers on the plains of San Lazarus near that city in the presence of President Diaz and hundreds of distinguished guests, cabinet ministers, members of the diplomatic corps and visiting Americans and Spaniards. The president, dressed in the uniform of a general of division and accompanied by a brilliant staff, reviewed the troops, which were composed of several brigades of infantry, batteries of artillery and battalions of sappers and miners and the Chapultrec military and academy cadets, handled by General Bernando Reyas, minister of war.

Bankers regard the president's message to congress as a strong financial measure. The Mexican Herald says: "The holders of Mexican bonds will find cause for congratulation in the solidity of the country's financial position and lovers of progress will see in the devoted care given to education an evidence of true enlightment. No cause is closer to the heart of the president and his advisers than that of the public schools. Mexico has demonstrated that government-owned telegraphs can be made successful. The administration of that branch of the service is excellent.

"The postoffice also shows a gain and in those ways one may test with scientific accuracy the activity of the business movement here."

THE CANNON ARRIVES

Relic of Struggle With Spain Loaned to the City.

The captured Spanish cannon loaned to the city of Lincoln by the war department, has arrived in the city and will be turned over to Mayor Winnett as soon as the city council appropriates a sufficient amount of money to pay the freight. It was obtained from the government through the efforts of Congressman Burkett, who acted on the suggestion of Mayor Winnett. The city council has signified its willingness to pay the expense bill and to arrange for mounting it as soon as a site has been agreed upon. Sometime ago Governor Holcomb appointed Messrs. H. H. Gere, C. H. Morrill and William McLaughlin a committee to select a location, and their report, when made, will probably be adopted.

An effort will be made to get a history of the gun, showing where it was made, when it was used, and when and where the capture was effected. This history will be shown somewhere on the mounting, if plans of those interested do not miscarry.

MAKE POLICEMAN PRISONER

Bound, Gagged and Robbed by Thugs at Cleveland.

While shadowing a suspected robber at Cleveland, O., Patrolman Fitzgerald was taken captive by seven men in a house in an alley near the corner of Ontario and Summit streets. Fitzgerald had followed the suspect into the house. He was immediately seized, overpowered and bound and gagged by the thugs. After taking his money, watch, billy, revolver and a pair of handcuffs, the men left the policeman to get free as best he could. After half an hour Fitzgerald succeeded in severing his bonds with his knife and went to the Central police station. The men are supposed to be members of the Lake Shore gang of freight car robbers.

SHOT AT HIS HIGHNESS

Young Anarchist Makes Effort to Kill the Prince of Wales.

A Brussels, April 4 dispatch says: An attempt to assassinate the Prince of Wales, who, accompanied by the princess, left London this morning for Copenhagen for the purpose of attending the celebration of King Christian's birthday, which occurs on the 8th, was made at the railroad station this afternoon. The prince was not hurt. The would-be assassin is a tinsmith named Sipide, a resident of Brussels, sixteen years of age. His pockets were found to be full of anarchist literature. Young Sipide offered British killing of Boers as a justification for his attempted crime.

Elevator and Grain Burn.

The elevator of P. S. Heacock, at McCandle's Siding, four and one half miles above Shubert, Neb., burned. Over 6,000 bushels of grain were destroyed. There was $2,000 insurance on the building and grain. The net loss is $2,000. The fire started on the roof and is supposed to have been caused by a spark from the smoke stack.

Republican Senatorial Convention.

The republican senatorial convention of the First District, is hereby called to meet at the opera house in Table Rock on the 24th day of May, 1900, at 1 o'clock, p. m., for the purpose of selecting a candidate for State Senator for said First District, and for the transaction of any other business which may properly come before said convention. The basis of representation at said convention is apportioned between the two counties as follows.

One delegate for each one hundred votes, or major fraction thereof cast for Judge Reese for Supreme Judge at the last general election. Under this apportionment Richardson county would be entitled to 31 delegates and Pawnee county 15.

W. H. Wilson, Committee for Pawnee.
E. A. Tucker, R. Richardson.

The republican congressional convention will be held at Lincoln this evening. There will be no opposition to Mr. Burkett's renomination.

The Pawnee Chief man must have been dreaming of Missouri and rollicing with a nightmare in which he imagined himself the funny man of a hyppodrome, when he wrote the report of the republican convention that appeared in his paper last week.

Dewey's announcement that he will be a candidate for president is quite generally looked upon as the prompting of Mrs. Dewey, an ambitious woman and a sister of John R. McLain. The further announcement that he is a democrat is causing some apprehension that he might defeat Bryan for that party's nomination. But the latter's adherents are still asserting their favorite's nomination by acclimation.

Tomorrow is the bond election when the people of the district will be asked to decide whether this district shall have a new school building or not. The election will be held at the school house from 3 to 5 o'clock p. m. The sum asked for is $10,000, payable in twenty years, to bear 5 per cent interest, payable annually. The last assessed valuation of the district was $109,507, so the 5 per cent of the valuation may be voted, but not more. The law in regard to the qualification of voters—section 4665 compiled statutes 1899—is as follows: "Every person, male or female, who has resided in the district forty days and is twenty-one years old, and who owns real property in the district, or personal property that was assessed in the district in his or her name at the last annual assessment, or who has children of school age residing in the district, shall be entitled to vote at any district meeting." The statutes further provide that no bonds shall be issued unless two-thirds of all qualified electors present shall have declared by their vote in favor of it. How will you vote?

In almost every neighborhood there is some one whose life has been saved by Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, or who has been cured of chronic diarrhoea by the use of that medicine. Such persons make a point of telling of it whenever opportunity offers, hoping that it may be the means of saving other lives. For sale by S. G. Wright.

Woes of the Kentuckian.

He shunneth water as a mad dog, and drinketh much whisky.

When he desireth to raise Cain he planteth a neighbor, and lo! he reapeth twenty fold.

He riseth even from his cradle to seek the scalp of his grandsire's enemy and bringeth home in his carcass the ammunition of his neighbor's wife's cousin's uncle's father-in-law, who avengeth the deed. Yea, verily, his life is uncertain and he knoweth not the hour when he may be jerked hence.

He goeth forth on a journey "half shot" and cometh back on a shutter shot.

He riseth in the night to let the cat out and it taketh nine doctors three days to pick the buckshot from his person.

He goeth forth in joy and gladness and cometh back in scraps and fragments.

He calleth his fellowman a liar and getteth himself filled with scrap iron, even to the fourth generation.

He emptieth a demijohn into himself and a shotgun into his enemy, and his enemy's son lieth in wait on election day and lo! the coroner ploweth up a forty-acre field to bury the remains of that man.—Richmond Times.

What might have proved a big fire was checked by prompt action Saturday morning. Some boys set fire to a pile of rubbish in the rear of S. G. The fire company has divided the city in to districts for convenience in locating and reaching the scene of a fire. The division streets are Houston and Pennsylvania. All that territory lying north and west of Houston and Pennsylvania is district No. 1; that lying east and north is 2; south and west is 3, south and east to bridge is 4, and all below the bridge is 5; when a fire alarm is rung the district in which the fire is located will be designated by taps of the bell—one tap for district No. 1, two taps for No. 2, etc. The new pump is expected to be here in a couple of weeks and subscribers to the fund are asked to be prepared to pay their subscriptions promptly.

For twenty-one years Mr. and Mrs. S. G. So on Monday evening about one hundred gathered at the home where for some hours joy and gladness prevailed. In behalf of the guests Mr. Talcott presented Mr. and Mrs. Wright with an elegant silver tea set, as a testimonial of the esteem in which they are held. It was late when the party broke up, but all friends wish for them many happy returns of the day when they were united in wedlock.

Mrs. Laura Gregg spoke at the Presbyterian Church Sunday night from this text "Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven," emphasizing each word in turn, brought out these points: Nothing worth having is obtained in this world without it is earnestly sought for. Individual responsibility; each one must seek for himself. No one else can eat, drink, or grow physically or mentally for us. If we succeed in any line we must make that first, in our thoughts and plans. In the beginning God gave man and women dominion over every living thing, and in his kingdom each is responsible, and when man restores to woman her God-given right and brings the mother heart into our laws and government, then there will be hope of the millenium. Woman's struggles for freedom is slowly but surely bringing about this condition, and soon man and woman together will drive from out land the evils that a hundred years of man's government have fastened upon us.

"Indeed! And what kind of a bonnet?" "An imaginary bonnet, sir." The visitor asked no more questions.

Died.—At her home, one and one-half miles north of Table Rock, at 6 o'clock on Thursday morning, April 5, 1900, Mrs. Mary McCaslin, aged 57 years, 1 month. Mary G. Morton was born in Lee county, W. Va., on March 5, 1843, where she resided until a child of some years when with her parents she came west to Missouri and afterwards to Nebraska, where she has been a continuous resident since 1857. Her father, J. B. Morton, deceased, built the first house in Pawnee City; in that place she was reared to womanhood and was married to the man whose name she bears. Unto them seven children were born, two dying in infancy; five were grown to the estate of manhood and womanhood, one son and one daughter being married; the other son and two daughters reside at home where death so ruthlessly has called the guiding star and love of this home to the unknown realms of the valley of the shadow of death. Amid a number of relatives, with her faith firmly fixed upon Jesus and the hope of a life beyond, she quietly and hopefully succumbed to the dreadful disease which has caused her so much pain and suffering for a number of years, making it impossible for her to go out among her friends as much as she otherwise would, being of a genial nature and much attached to old neighbors. In her earlier years Mrs. McCaslin was for many years a member of the M. E. church at Pawnee City, and a few years ago she, with her daughters, united with the Presbyterian church of this place. The funeral services were held at the home on Friday, conducted by her pastor, Rev. W. H. Parker.

Delightfully summery-looking garments are illustrated and described in the fashion pages of the Designer for May, and with their assistance surely every woman, miss, little girl and child should be tastefully and becomingly arrayed for warm weather. The millinery is equally attractive and appropriate to the season, and, like the fashions, is shown not only in black and white but in colors. "When Bride Bells Ring" offers most helpful suggestions for the costuming of the June bride and her attendants, and is profusely illustrated. "Summer-Flowering Bulbs," are treated of in the May "Floriculture" pages, while "Concerning the Hair" is the subject of the "For Her's and Beauty" article. Fiction includes a short story, "His Wife" a conclusion of "The Evolution of a Contented Woman" and a juvenile story, "The Magic Curl." "Novelties in Tatting" give illustrated directions for making thirteen attractive fancy things in this style of work, and "Crocheting and Knitting" add six others in those particular lines. Bright little ed torials on topics of the day are contributed under "Among Ourselves," and the latest in literature is discussed in "Book Notes." The newest and prettiest articles in "Fancy Work" are pictured and described in the article that bears that title, and artistic suggestions for the "Summer Cozy Corner" occupy two pages. That useful aid to Mothers, "The Kindergarten in the Home," is given its usual space, while to equally useful "Points on Dressmaking" tells with pictures and type just how to construct the latest stocks and collars for feminine wear. Little folks will enjoy a "May Day Festival" and their elders will appreciate the hints on etiquette, nursery governmest, household management and cookery receipts, of which there is a goodly supply.

THE PERPETUAL PROMISE.

All through the lily perfumed air
The bells of Easter chime
With pardon for our sin sick souls,
The seven and seventieth time.

Hasten while bells of promise peal,
While surpliced cherubs sing,
Lay on the altars of our Lord
Contrition's offering.

The rare pale flowers of love, of faith,
O Christ, the crucified,
Will show 'twas not in vain for us
A loving Savior died.

If any earthly friend for us
In jeopardy had stood,
Ah, would we have to plead and beg
For our poor gratitude?

And must the King of Heaven sue
Or suffered he in vain,
Upon sad Calvary's cruel cross,
With all a mortal's pain?

Oh, lay sin's heavy burden down;
He died that we might live;
He'll hear the cross and send a peace
The world can never give!

POLLY PRY.

MARGARET'S NEW LIFE.

AN EASTER STORY.

The old gray house was filled with sounds of hurrying to and fro, of confusion and sobs and moaning cries, but Margaret knew nothing of it all. The girl had slipped away from every care and was out in the fields delighting in the first faint flush of dawn and the pure air on her cheek. It had been a long while since Margaret had been out of doors.

There was such joy in every step that she could not stop with the fields, but kept on down the road until she came to the village where the bells were ringing with gladness for Easter morning, and the children were carrying flowers to church. Margaret entered softly and took her old place in the dim corner, facing the window pictured with the story of Mary in the garden. How good it seemed to be there!

The altar cloth was glistening white, the dim aisles were sweet with the perfume of lilies that filled the chancel, a few silent worshipers knelt at their prayers, and Margaret bowed her own head with thoughts as pure and sweet with gratitude as the breath of the flowers.

Now as she knelt in the quiet of that holy place, Margaret wondered to hear with the chiming bells, soft silvery strains of music, such as were never heard in the little church before, and to feel the touch of some one's hand laid on her hair. She looked up to see the beams of the morning sunshine streaming down upon her and the stained window palpitating with glorious light and color, but wonder!—as she looked again the stained window was no longer there at all; instead opening before her on every side was a lovely garden sweet with flowers.

"This is too good to be true," she cried, rising in a kind of rapture as she felt the soft balm of the garden air in her face.

"Nothing is too good to be true," said a voice at her side, but Margaret could not discover any one.

"May I enter this rich garden?" Margaret asked of herself, thinking of her poor, shabby dress, so faded and patched, which she was always glad to hide in the dim corner of the aisle. But as Margaret, doubting, asked this question, the sun shining upon her dress, showed it to be glistening white as the altar cloth and the lilies in the chancel. In her confusion the girl put her hands to her eyes to see if she were awake or dreaming, but every moment the vision grew more radiant.

The broad stream of light now appeared a pathway along which angel children were passing to and fro, and they smiled on Margaret and embraced her and drew her tenderly with them, saying:

"Margaret, dear little sister! We are so glad you are here! Have you come to stay with us?" and they made music for her delight and showed her beauties of the garden past words to express, then went their way to appointed tasks.

As Margaret walked on in the garden, borne about by a kind of winged ecstasy rather than by any touch of her feet, she came upon the Gardener taking care of His garden, and He turned and looked at the girl.

"Sir," entreated Margaret, falling upon her knees, "may I stay with you? May I help you take care of this garden?"

"Margaret," said the Gardener, taking her by the hand and then Margaret knew it, and her life hand on her hair and His voice at her side.

"You may help me, Margaret, in another garden. You may work for me in the garden of human hearts and cultivate sweet and beautiful thoughts and make them grow."

"But I am so tired of the old life—of the pain, the poverty, the hardship of it all!" and Margaret began to weep bitterly. "I cannot go back to the old life!"

"My child, it is a new life I give unto you."

"But I must leave you!"

"I shall be with you always."

"But we must leave this heavenly garden!"

"Margaret, my child, the garden shall be where we are."

It was in the old gray house at sunrise, on Easter morning, that the father was saying with humble gratitude:

"Thank God, our child is given back to us."

"The Lord is merciful," sobbed the mother. "Blessed be His loving kindness."

So Margaret was once more given health and strength, and as she went about her daily tasks the radiant vision of Easter was always present with her and these words were always singing themselves in her heart:

"A new life I give unto you—I am with you always—the garden shall be where we are."

At Easter Breakfast.

"Where's Johnny?"

"He's dyeing eggs," somebody responded.

Mabel opened her eyes in wonder.

"Do dying eggs come from dead chickens, mamma?"

DECISION AGAINST TAYLOR

Kentucky Court Decides Against Republican Claimant.

A Frankfort, Ky., April 6 dispatch says: The court of appeals today handed down a decision in the governorship case in favor of the democrats. The decision is by six of the judges—four democrats and two republicans.

Judge Durelle was the only judge dissenting. The other two republican judges, Bargum and Guffy, gave a separate opinion from the democratic judges, but which agreed with the democratic members in its conclusion.

Judge Hobson wrote the opinion of the court. The concurrence of Judges Burnam and Guffey with the four democratic judges was a surprise generally, but to the republicans especially, and there is much speculation now as to whether the talked of appeal to the supreme court will be prosecuted.

Ex-Governor W. O. Bradley, chief counsel for Governor Taylor, tonight authorized the statement that an appeal on behalf of Governor Taylor and Lieutenant Governor Marshall will be carried to the supreme court of the United States.

Mr. Bradley and Judge W. H. Yost, counsel for the republican state officers, were in consultation with Governor Taylor for several hours this afternoon, and the above statement was made at the close of the conference.

CAPTURE MORE BRITISH

Boers Succeed in Capturing Five Companies of Enemy.

A London, April 6 dispatch says: Lord Roberts reports that five companies of British troops have been captured by the Boers near Bethany.

The following is the text of Lord Roberts' dispatch to the war office announcing the capture of five companies of his troops:

"Bloemfontein, Thursday, April 5.—Another unfortunate occurrence has occurred resulting, I fear, in the capture of a party of infantry consisting of three companies of the Royal Irish fusiliers and two companies of the Ninth regiment of mounted infantry near Reddersburg, a little eastward of Bethany railway station, within a few miles of this place. They were surrounded by a stronger force of the enemy with four or five guns.

HORSES BURNED TO DEATH

Oriental Livery Barn at Lincoln Completely Destroyed.

Between twenty-five and thirty head of horses were burned to death in a fire that consumed the barn at 321 South Thirteenth street, Lincoln, Neb., known as the Oriental barn. The barn with its contents was burned, and the buildings at 1219 and 1225 K street were badly damaged. The loss will probably exceed $5,000, with insurance probably reaching a trifle more than $2,000. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Indorse D. E. Thompson.

The Lancaster county republican convention held Friday indorsed D. E. Thompson for United States senator by a vote of 481 to 20. A legislative ticket was placed in the field, pledged to support him, there being no opposition. Congressman E. J. Burkett was also indorsed.

The convention indorsed Col. J. H. McClay for delegate-at-large to the national convention and instructed the delegates to the state convention to use their influence in securing the election of Capt. L. W. Billingsley for district delegate to the national convention. The platform reaffirmed the principles of the republican platform of 1896 and commended the administration of President McKinley.

Trouble in Puerto Rico.

A San Juan, Puerto Rico, April 6 dispatch says: At 4 o'clock yesterday evening the natives made a concentrated movement at Puerto Tiera. Different mobs, totaling about 2,000 men, attacked the foreign-colored men.

Any English-speaking negro was subjected to attack, particularly the natives of St. Thomas and St. Kitts. One Puerto Rican was killed, one was seriously injured, and three negroes of St. Kitts were dangerously wounded.

The affair was the outcome of the pier strike and the pretense of the attack, apparently, was that the English islanders were usurping Puerto Rican labor.

Fell on the Knives.

At Geneva, Neb., Tony Miller met with an accident while operating a two hundred and sixty pound rocking meat cutter in J. Wright's meat market. While working the machine the floor gave way, letting one side of the block down and throwing the cutter to the floor knives up, upon which Tony fell, receiving several deep gashes. The surgeon took thirty-one stitches to close the wounds.

Arrest of Embezzler.

L. P. Hunner, wanted in Buffalo county, Wis., for embezzling $130,000, was arrested in Republic, Wash., by a deputy sheriff from Wisconsin. Little can be learned there of Hunner's alleged crime. It is said he was president of a bank.

THE PLACE FOR A POOR MAN.

Alameda, N. W. T., Canada,
Dec. 22, 1899.

Mr. B. Davies, Canadian Government Agent, St. Paul, Minn.—Dear Sir: As I promised you about two years ago that at some future time I would let you know what I thought of western Canada and the chances of a poor man making a start and supporting a family at the same time, so will write a few facts concerning my own experience the past twenty-one months; and what I have done, any able-bodied man can do, provided he will work.

I left Traverse country March 20, 1898; landed in Alameda at noon the 21st with $3.55 in my pocket, a stranger and among strangers, and when my family came in October, 1898, my wife had nearly $10, or barely enough to pay freight on her stove, sewing-machine and clothes and beds. I commenced work March 28; also made entry for homestead same day (the man I started work for loaning me $15 to pay entrance fee), and I have earned or at least received $478.10 in wages since then and have been idle at least two months of the twenty-one since I came. The homestead I took had twelve acres broke by a former occupant. I paid $20 to have it replowed in July, '98, and the seed wheat for it cost me $8.25. I let it to a neighbor for one-half in elevator, clear of all expense except the seed, and this fall I received $70.10 for my part of the crops of the twelve acres, so my total receipts the past twenty-one months have been $548.10, and my expenses, besides living for self and family, have been as follows:

Entrance fee ($5 being paid for cancellation)	$ 15.00
Summer fallowing 12 acres	20.00
Seed for same	8.25
Cost of house, besides my own labor on same	75.85
20 acres of breaking and double-discing same	60.00
	$179.10
My half of wheat	70.10
Net expense on homestead	$109.00

We moved on our homestead July 10, 1899, have thirty-two acres in good shape for crops in 1900. My wife joins with me in sending best wishes to you and yours.

You can truly say to any poor man who pays a big rent to get a farm (somebody else's land) or works for wages to support a family, that I have personally tried both in Minnesota and tried hard to make a success of it, but found to my sorrow that after working hard a poor living was all I could get out of it, and after nearly two years of western Canadian life I will say that I am very thankful to you for helping me to decide to try it in Canada. Yours respectfully,

W. H. KINKADE.

LONDON IMPATIENT

Fear Boers Will Profit Over "Bobs" Inaction.

RECOVERING RAPIDLY FROM REVERSES

Burghers Seem Satisfied to Keep British From Advancing—Boers Invest Positions of Immense Strength—Still On Defensive.

A London, April 6 dispatch says: The war office issued no news and little was allowed to come through from the correspondents at Bloemfontein. According to the Standard's representative there is no sign that the Boers intend taking the offensive. General Clem is so disposing of his forces as to guard against any surprise attack which, although improbable, is evidently not regarded as impossible, judging from the preparations of Lord Roberts.

As usual, whenever there is any check in the progress of the British campaign, the war office is being severely censured for failing to maintain the necessary supply of remounts for the army. It is possible that Lord Roberts has difficulties other than remounts with which to contend. Much anxiety is felt as to the water supply, despite the statements cabled home that there is no fear of a water famine. Dissatisfaction exists over Lord Roberts' delay.

The enemy now evidently hopes to retard the advance by threatening the railway behind Lord Roberts. So far as the Natal railways are concerned, repairs are being made beyond Elandslaagte, and the idea, so often repeated, is that an advance is imminent.

A dispatch to the Daily Telegraph from Ladysmith says that the Boer interesting positions reveal immense strength, ingenious construction and immunity from the British shrapnel and lyddite fire.

SAPHO PLAY NOT INDECENT

Olga Nethersole and Her Manager Acquitted at New York.

A dispatch from New York says: Miss Olga Nethersole and Hamilton Revelle, actors, Marcus R. Mayer, manager of Miss Nethersole, and Theodore Moss, manager of Wallack's theatre, were found not guilty of maintaining a public nuisance in presenting the drama, "Sapho." The charge to the jury by Judge Fursman of the criminal branch of the supreme court was highly favorable to the accused, and the jury were out only twelve minutes. It is announced that the interrupted season of the play in this city will be resumed.

Monkey Starts a Fire.

A fire alarm was sent from the residence of Dr. J. W. Puckett at Geneva. A few neighbors had run in with buckets and had the fire under control before the firemen arrived. The origin of the fire is a mystery, as no one was at home except a Philippine monkey, which is suspected by many of being guilty of the mischief. The building was damaged to the amount of twenty-five or thirty dollars, but the monkey did not lose a hair.

Sheldon Heads the List.

Governor Stanley presided at a mass meeting held at Topeka, Kan., for the purpose of inaugurating a movement to raise a million bushels of corn to send to the famine sufferers of India. The Rev. Charles M. Sheldon was the principal speaker and started the subscriptions by pledging $1,000—of his share of the profits resulting from the Sheldon edition of the Capital—for fifteen hundred dollars and a carload of corn were pledged at the meeting.

About Wiped Out.

The business portion of Ravenna, Mich., was destroyed by fire starting from an explosion of coal gas in a saloon. A portion of the residence section also burned. The total loss is estimated at an upward of $300,000 with small insurance. Every business building in the village except William Patterson's general store was consumed. Help was summoned from Grand Rapids and the fire engine was sent on a special train.

ALABASTINE

WHAT ALABASTINE IS.

Alabastine is the original and only durable wall coating on the market. It is entirely different from all kalsomine preparations. Alabastine is made ready for use in white or fourteen beautiful tints by the addition of cold water. It is put up in dry powdered form, in packages properly labeled with full directions on every package. It takes the place of scaling kalsomines, wall paper and paint for walls. Alabastine can be used on plaster, brick, wood or canvas, and a child can brush it on.

WHAT "KALSOMINES" ARE.

Kalsomines are cheap and temporary preparations, manufactured from whiting, chalks, clays, etc. They are stuck on the walls with decaying animal glue. Alabastine is not a kalsomine. It is a rock-base cement, which sets, and it hardens with age. It can be re-coated and re-decorated without having to wash and scrape off its old coats. Alabastine is utilized to a great extent in hospitals, as it prevents the accumulation of dirt and the congregating of disease germs, being a disinfectant in its nature.

CHURCHES AND SCHOOL-HOUSES.

The interior walls of churches, school-houses and all public halls should never be coated with anything but the durable and pure Alabastine. So evident has this fact become, that hundreds of tons are used annually for this work. The genuine Alabastine does not rub or scale off. It is cleanly during the long period of its usefulness. Every owner of a building should use it. Ask your paint dealer or druggist for card of tints, and write for free copy of our interesting booklet to Alabastine Co., Grand Rapids, Mich.

REJECT THE "JUST AS GOOD."

The dealer who tells you that he can sell you the "same thing" as Alabastine or "something just as good," either is not posted or is trying to deceive you. In offering something he has bought cheap and is trying to sell on Alabastine's demands, he may not realize the danger to himself as well as to you. Beware of all new substitutes. Desires risk suit for damages by selling and consumers by using an infringement. Alabastine Co. own the right to make and sell wall coatings adapted to mix with cold water.

Women's Political Duties.

PROF. RENA MICHAELS ATCHISON.

The most reasonable argument advanced against allowing women to exercise the elective franchise was given by Dr. Parkhurst of New York in an article in the Ladies' Home Journal a few years since, in which he said that women do not seem to possess the sense of personal responsibility. Any one who has read the recent manifesto of the Chicago anti-suffragists must acknowledge that Dr. Parkhurst was perfectly correct in his judgement concerning some women. Certainly no document was ever penned that exhibited in a more conspicuous degree a lack of a sense of a personal responsibility for the social, industrial and political conditions which the writers and signers live, and at the same time a more total ignorance of, the meaning and intent of the elective franchise.

Any man, native or naturalized, not idiotic, insane, a pauper or a criminal is allowed to vote. No man can claim to vote. Imagine the gentleman in broadcloth and fine linen who think voting is such a bore that they never honor the polls with their presence unless some anti-woman petition needs around a carriage for their countenance—imagine these gentlemen signing a petition similar to the one sent out by the anti-suffragists protesting against other men voting because they do not wish to vote. Yet such a document would be just as proper as the manifesto of the anti-suffragists. It is not impossible that such a manifesto may yet be issued, for these gentlemen, of whom we have unfortunately a large class, who consider voting an unnecessary bore, as well as the ladies who look with such supreme condescension upon the ballot-box are the ripe soil for the rapid growth of monarchical ideas. Men and women are willing that others shall vote for them, are willing that others shall think for them, and whenever that class is large enough whatever the nomenclature of the government you have a full-blossomed monarchy.

One of the striking features of all anti-suffrage petitions is the plea that woman's place is in the home. It is very natural that women who never look beyond themselves and the gratification of their own pleasures and desires should consider their own wishes the boundaries of other women's rights and duties. But how does it help on that they do not insist that their seamstresses and laundresses, the saleswomen and cash-girls, and the thousands of other wage-earning women should stay within the charmed precincts of their own frequently cheerless and laf en homes? This plea is a very specious one to say the least.

Women accustomed to work with brain and muscle are neither too fastidious nor too indolent to go to the ballot-box. They are quite willing to help clean up the "dirty pool" of politics. If a woman is a good dirt inspector in the first ward of Chicago she might be equally efficient in helping to clean the Augean stables of city and legislative halls.

If women would "rise to be children nor try to be men," but think seriously and study honestly the social, industrial and political conditions under which they live, they would not as easily be the dupes of political or ecclesiastical tyranny. Instead of spending their energies in a futile attempt to block the wheels of the in-vitable progress of democratic ideals; they would be helping be the only effective power in a republic—the ballot—to make this a more safer and freer country.

A new form of needlework, very beautiful in its results, is shown in the May Delineator. Instead of accomplishing embroidery by colored stitches of various lengths, as heretofore, very pretty results are obtained by sewing carefully to a proper background small strips of colored silk cut out in the shape of leaves or petals or stalks. An attractive feature of the article describing this method of work, is that there is a full page printed in colors showing the effect of this dainty idea. Thackery once wrote, "Reckon among the blessings which Heaven hath bestowed on thee, the love of faithful women. Purify thine own heart and try to make it worthy of theirs. All the prizes of life are nothing compared to that one. All the rewards of ambition, wealth, pleasure, only vanity and disappointment, grasped at greedily, fought over fiercely, and over and over again found worthless by the universe." Such were the ideals that sad hearted but cheerful visaged Thackeray worshiped. His own experience with married life was unutterably sad; for though his wife was living, yet he suffered more than the pangs of a widower for 25 years. His wife after 25 years in an insane asylum, died only six years ago. The pathos of it is very tenderly told by Clara E. Laughlin in the May issue of The Delineator.

(Written for last week) Next to the news that Table Rock had gone dry, the talk at the Methodist church Wednesday night were the most cheering and hopeful of anything we've heard for some time, and it does one's heart good to look into the faces of Rev. Eugenia and Dr. St. John. Mrs. St. John spoke first on the "Outlook" and with her we could see all the straws were blowing our way. At Aurora and South Bend, places they had been working lately, one having seven saloons and the other four and expecting the fifth, neither daring to hope they could get rid of them this spring, had both gone dry. For six months they had been in this evangelistic work and have seen the salvation of many souls, some saloon keepers among the number. They had witnessed over four hundred conversions and had pledged a thousand against the use of liquor and tobacco and many young men to the White Cross work. She spoke of the strong stand nearly all churches are taking now on the liquor question, urging their members to vote as they pray; the many lodges and insurance companies refusing to take in drinking men, and fourteen hundred lines of business occupations that utterly refuses to employ any man that drinks. Any railroad man having drinking or gambling under his jurisdiction will get his time at once if the company finds it out. She gave an instance that occurred on Tuesday of this week: Three men out at the end of their line concluded they were far enough from home so one would know and report them if they had a good time (as they considered it) went into a saloon and called for the drinks. A spotter with pocket camera snapped them in the act of drinking. The picture reached home before them and their time checks awaited them. A committee of men, not temperance fanatics, but business men appointed by the government to investigate the matter, reported that more than one-half of all the crime committed in our country could be directly traced to the liquor traffic. She gave a glimpse of the other side, stating that a hundred years of government by the men had not resulted in the chivalrous protection of the home and children we ought to have but if we could patiently keep on in time we should be allowed to stand side by side with our brothers and the mother and children have a part in this home protection. Dr. St. John spoke a few moments showing such a fine appreciation of his wife that we could but think if there were more such husbands it would not be long till these great evils were crushed out by the united efforts of men and women, and they should have dominion over every living thing" as God commanded in the beginning. E. E. LINN.

BUNKER HILL.

Mr. Joseph Werner died at his home on the afternoon of Easter Sunday after a long and distressing illness. He leaves a widow, one son and four daughters to mourn an irreparable loss—besides many friends and neighbors who highly appreciated his excellent qualities. His remains were laid to rest in the Bohemian cemetery on Tuesday. Mr. Werner was born in Bohemia in 1841; came to America in 1860 and to Nebraska in 1867; took a homestead where he lived constantly ever since. He was married to Miss Matilda Novak in 1870. He was a loving husband and father, a kind neighbor and an honest man.

An inch of rain fell here during the afternoon and evening of Easter and it has rained a good deal since, so all fears of a drouth have subsided.

Mrs. E. D. Howe, with Master Tom, left last Saturday for Omaha, where she will visit her sister, Mrs. Combs.

We are informed that Miss Emma Curry, of Pawnee City, has resigned the Bunker Hill school for next year.

"HAMPERING" TARIFF

THE COMMERCIAL RESULTS OF THE DINGLEY LAW.

While Restricting Imports of Competitive Commodities It Has Swollen Our Foreign Trade to the Largest Dimensions Ever Known.

The manner in which our foreign commerce is "hampered" by the operations of the Dingley tariff is strikingly illustrated in the statistical reports for the month of February, 1899. Not only does the record of exports for the month surpass that of any previous February, but the imports show a substantial increase of the average of February imports for the past eight years. It should be noted, however, that the increase in imports is for the most part of the healthiest type—namely, of non-competitive articles to be used in our domestic manufacturing industries. The Dingley tariff has taken good care of the competitive class of imports, with the result that the proportion of American-made commodities used by Americans is now much larger than at any previous period of our history, and the proportion of foreign-made commodities of a competitive character used by Americans is much smaller than at any previous period of our history. The effect of this changed condition of things is seen in the unprecedented activity in all lines of domestic production; in the employment of the largest amount of labor at the highest rate of wages ever known; in the increase of the aggregate of domestic manufactures from something over $9,000,000,000 in 1890 to a total for 1899 estimated at not less than $12,000,000,000. Such is the domestic industrial record of the Dingley tariff.

Now as to the foreign trade record. Bear in mind that the free-traders with one voice warned the country that the restoration of the American policy of protection to American labor and industry was certain to ruin our trade with the outside world. Let us see. The exports during the month of February, 1900, have averaged $5,000,000 for every business day in the month, and the total exports were $119,765,762, or more than 25 per cent greater than that of any preceding February. Not only are the exports larger than those of any preceding February, but the excess of exports over imports is also much larger than in any preceding February, surpassing those of 1898 by nearly 25 per cent, and being more than 50 per cent in excess of that of any earlier year. February is a month of heavy importations, and it frequently happens that the imports exceed the exports, so that an excess of $50,991,612 of exports over imports in February makes the record of the month a remarkable one, despite the fact that the importations, which amounted to $68,774,150, were slightly larger than those of any preceding year except 1892.

The relative importance of the February (1900) record will be more clearly seen when it is stated that the average February exports during the last ten years were $76,000,000 per month, while the total exports of February, 1900, as already stated, were $119,765,762. On the other hand, the average February imports of the preceding decade were $61,000,000, making the average February excess of exports over imports during that time $15,000,000, while that of February, 1900, is $50,991,612. This makes the total exportation for the eight months ending with February about $75,000,000 greater than that of the corresponding months of the fiscal year 1899, and makes it apparent that our total exports in the fiscal year ending June 30 will exceed those of any preceding year by probably $100,000,000 and carry the total commerce of the year considerably beyond the two-billion dollar-line.

February—	Imports. Dollars	Exports. Dollars.
1893	72,762,238	59,931,984
1894	48,725,094	65,175,331
1895	56,315,981	53,982,734
1896	62,478,116	77,701,904
1897	59,287,377	79,821,086
1898	53,074,649	94,417,453
1899	60,258,452	93,837,151
1900	68,774,150	119,765,762

Eight months ending with Feb.	Imports. Dollars.	Exports. Dollars.
1893	557,073,919	586,873,360
1894	420,276,457	638,826,851
1895	466,233,616	557,885,668
1896	541,194,833	602,666,873
1897	422,315,394	734,398,213
1898	383,691,179	813,284,869
1899	427,203,833	843,433,266
1900	555,069,617	919,873,086

Home Non-Protected Trusts.

Trusts seem to be thriving quite well in Austria, a country which maintains no Protective Tariff except on a very few commodities, such as cigars, tobacco and canned and bottled food articles. According to a report from Consul Frank W. Mahin, at Reichenberg, the Austrian hatmakers have organized to promote their interests; the paper factories have formed a union; makers of sugar and saccharine products have a close organization, and have but recently discussed the practicability of increasing prices; the shoe manufacturers have a compact union, and one central corporation at Budapest is acquiring all the gas plants throughout Austria.

In the absence of a general scheme of Protection, such as that which obtains in the United States, how is it possible for Austro-Hungary to engage so extensively in the formation of trusts? Isn't there a screw loose in the theory that trusts flourish only under a Protective Tariff.

AS A MONEY MAKER.

Those prophets of disaster who denounced the Dingley tariff because in the early months of its operation it failed to accomplish the impossible as a revenue producer preserve a discreet silence on this subject nowadays. During the time when the country was overstocked with foreign goods rushed in under the low duty rates of the Wilson free trade tariff, the enemies of protection could not restrain their jubilation over the diminished volume of customs receipts. They could not see, or would not see, that revenue from this source must necessarily suffer until such time as the country could consume the immense bulk of commodities brought here from abroad in anticipation of the higher rates of duty certain to be imposed by a Republican administration. They wilfully ignored the presence of abnormal conditions and took much satisfaction in asserting that the Dingley law was a dead failure in the matter of revenue production.

The facts show that the framers of the Dingley tariff were right in entitling that law as "an act to provide revenue for the government and to encourage the industries of the United States." During the eight months of the present fiscal year the receipts of the treasury department have exceeded the expenditures by about $35,000,000, which is considerably in excess of the amount that any tariff bill was expected to yield. The customs revenue law is producing almost as much money today as is the internal revenue system, even with the war taxes added. The following table shows the income of the government during the past eight months:

July	$16,571,451	$18,054,258	$26,561,090

As a money-maker for government and people the Dingley tariff is a monumental success in economic legislation. Nothing like it was ever known in the history of the world.

HER NEW EASTER HAT.

Labor's Golden Era.

This is to be a great railroad building year, this fourth year of "McKinley and prosperity." According to the "Railway Age."

Although more miles of new railroad were built in the United States last year than in any year since 1890, there is every indication that the present year will witness even greater activity. In the aggregate there are nearly 59,000 miles of projected road, grouped by sections as follows:

New England States, 447 miles; Middle States, 2,240; South Atlantic States, 9,752 miles; Gulf and Mississippi Valley States, 6,798 miles; Central Northern States, 5,623 miles; Northwestern States, 6,197 miles; Southwestern States, 21,207 miles; Pacific States, 6,377. Total, 58,841 miles.

In 1899 4,588 miles of track were laid in the United States on 340 lines, and in Canada, 696 on twenty-one lines, and in Mexico, 254 on ten lines.

The grading, building and equipment of nearly 60,000 miles of new railroad lines in a single year will involve an outlay of capital amounting to about two billions of dollars. All of this great sum will go to swell the aggregate of money paid out for labor and the products of labor. Add to this the increased demand for labor involved in the operation of 60,000 miles of new railroad, and the sum total of increased employment and increased wage payments mounts still further up into the billions. It is the golden era of well paid labor.

THE IRRECONCILABLES.

Gold Democrats Find Nothing in Present Conditions Which Commands Their Approval.

The painful position of the Gold Democrats is indicated by the action of a group of these homeless wanderers in the world of politics at a recent meeting in Indianapolis. They hate Bryanism as badly as ever, at least they say they do, for in their recital of principles they express their abhorrence of all the leading features of the Bryanistic crusade of four years ago, including the assaults made by the Chicago platform of 1896 on individual freedom, the right of private contract, the independence and integrity of the federal judiciary, the authority of the president to enforce the laws and to denounce the advocacy of the radically wrong and fundamental dangerous demand for the free, unlimited and independent coinage of silver and gold by the United States at the ratio of 16 to 1, and its repudiation, at the instigation of Republican and Populist allies, of the Democratic doctrine of tariff for revenue only.

There can be no compromise with those who propose to support Mr. Bryan or any other candidate on the Chicago platform.

But it must not be supposed that these Gold Democrats love McKinley more because they love Bryan less. No; they find everything to condemn and nothing to approve in the acts of an administration accountable for the most stupendous achievements in prosperity and progress that the world has ever known. This is the way they look at it:

Recent events lead us to fear that the continuance in power for another four years of the Republican party, under its present masters, with its centralizing policies, protective tariff legislation and capitalistic tendencies, would be disgraceful and calamitous, and, above all, the people of the United States cannot safely tolerate even a suggestion that the inhabitants of any of our territory are not entitled to the right of trial by jury, to the independent protection of the writ of habeas corpus, to the freedom of religion, to the personal liberty granted by the constitutional prohibitions against slavery, or to any one of those sacred rights of person and property which are guaranteed to all, not only by the express words of the constitution, but by those fundamental principles of liberty on which our whole system of government rests.

One would think that the superior creatures who got together at Indianapolis could find it in their hearts to say something decent about a party and an administration which has placed upon the federal statute books a law permanently establishing the gold standard, a financial policy on account of which these same Gold Democrats were wild with anxiety in the dark days of 1896. Common gratitude for a great service rendered in warding off the menace of cheap dollars would seem to call for some slight manifestation of appreciation and approval on the part of those who lay awake nights four years ago because of this identical menace, and who have been shuddering more or less about it ever since.

But no; there is nothing good in Republicanism, nothing good in Bryanism; and there you are. It looks as though the country would have to depend for absolute safety and certain salvation upon a political remnant that will not cast one-tenth of one per cent of the total vote next November.

No British Subtitles.

A writer in the Atlantic Monthly for March, J. W. Root, presents figures showing that England does not subsidize its steamer lines, only pays a low price for the carriage of mail matter. And we all know figures do not lie.

Unaccountably the Mail and Express states that a subsidy of $194,660, to be paid annually for ten years, has just been given to Elder, Demaster & Co. by the British government for a fortnightly steamship service between Jamaica and Great Britain. The Mail and Express, which evidently has not seen the Atlantic Monthly, does not seem to mention this last British subsidy as a notable incident, but is outraged at the proposition to make Americans who have invested in banana lands on the island of Jamaica pay one-half the subsidy, although they are supporting a direct line to the United States. This is to be done by imposing an increased tax on banana lands.

KING DON:

....BY MAVOR ALLAN.....

He fetched a camp stool and placed it for her under the shelter of the mainsail, and she took it with a little tremulous word of thanks. She did not beg him to sit by her, as one she would so naturally have done, and apparently Don dreaded a tete-a-tete likewise, for he made no offer to do so.

"Are you a good sailor?" he asked presently, stopping before her in his short walk to and fro.

"Yes, I think so—at least, I stood the passage out very well."

"The captain is rather afraid we are in for rough seas. There's too much wind, and he fears a storm before morning."

"I don't think I dread it much, so long as there is no lightning or thunder," she answered. "Do you?"

"I?" he queried. "Oh, I don't care a straw on my own account whatever happens."

She shivered in his clasp.

"Oh!" she cried, more to herself than to him, "how could we ever live together after this?"

He felt her shiver, and the awful bitterness of this retribution for his sin seemed greater for that to could bear.

"Lillie, be merciful, and my devotion to you shall be my atonement."

He was fighting for his love now as one to whom the loss of it meant life itself.

And Lillie? Her love and her grief were tearing her heart asunder. She withdrew herself from his arms in silence, and he let her go, while a flush of pain and humiliation swept his face. He knew so well then what would come next.

"We must part," came her verdict at last, in a low and broken whisper. "Some day perhaps I may learn to forget, and I will come back to you; but not yet. Oh, I could not bear you to be with me yet—I could not, I could not!"

Her voice broke in a bitter sob, and as Don heard it the last remnant of hope died out in his storm-tossed heart.

"I will not be a burden to you," he said, with great bitterness. "A bullet can end it all and make you free. Nothing matters now."

There was no longer passion in his voice, only the reckless heaviness of despair. He turned and walked toward the doorway, and his firm step never faltered.

"Don!" Her sweet voice pierced that terrible moment of silence which followed on his wild words with an agony that overwhelmed and stayed him. "Don, what are you saying? Do you forget our love are not our own? We are bought with a price, and one day we shall have to give account for what we have done. For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ."

Ah, there was a time when the thoughtless Lillie had been the last to remember that solemn warning. The great trouble had brought home to her its awful truth, and Don was only to learn it, too, across the sea of suffering and self-sacrifice. The yearning appeal touched him now simply through the intensity of her love, and he stopped short and faced her once more.

"Lillie, I will agree to part, as you wish; but I ask you, for our own sakes, for society's sake, to let our wretched secret be our own. Try to dissemble a little, if you can, and keep up the farce of our happy marriage." He laughed a little, bitter laugh. "When once we reach England, I promise to leave you free and never trouble you more; but if you humiliate me further here, God knows my will may give away."

"Oh, my love!" she cried out, piteously, "don't speak to me so! It breaks my heart!"

At the endearment he stood a moment irresolute, then strode back to her side and stretched out his hands.

"Lillie," he said hoarsely, "it is madness to talk of ever parting. We cannot live without each other!"

"Don't, don't! We can make no atonement for sin without sacrifice. My poor father—"

"Then at Southampton we part," he said.

In speechless agony she looked a mute affirmation. And for answer Don laughed—the bitter laugh of an overwrought mind, and hurried out to prepare for the wedding journey. Did ever bridegroom haste on such mission with so heavy a heart?

Her lips quivered. It was the first approach to those other wild words he had last spoken on her wedding day. Grief held her silent now. Some invalid soldiers were joining the sailors in the forecastle bunks in lusty singing, and the plaintive words came floating aft:

We've wandered mony a weary fit
Sin' auld lang syne.

Don had stooped over to replace the wrap that was dropping from her shoulders, and as his hand for an instant came in contact with her neck she felt it tremble. The sun was going down in a coppery mist of crimson and gold. It fell aslant Don's face, and she saw it was pale and drawn. He turned from her now, and lighting a cigar, stood by the taffrail looking away from her. Moments—long moments—which seemed to her to grow into hours, passed, and he stood there still without moving. Only now and then the cigar sent up a pale wreath of smoke upon the freshening breeze. A lurid glow where the sun had gone down streamed out far and wide upon the horizon; then the glow faded, the fiery purple tints passed from cloud and wave, and suddenly it was night. With a shiver Lillie rose and stepped to Don's side.

"I am going below now," she said, coldly. "Good night."

The cold formality which had become already habitual to both seemed for the moment beyond Don to assume, for he took her hand, but did not release it.

"The storm is coming," he said. "Look!" Sea birds darted screaming along the crests of the waves, the vessel pitched and rolled helplessly in the trough of the billows, and over all the sky hung like a black pall. Don spoke again, and now more tenderness had crept into his voice.

"I wish for your sake the squall was over. You must try and go to sleep."

She shook her head.

"I don't feel like sleeping," she answered. She would have withdrawn her hand, but Don's clasp upon it tightened.

"Shall I come and sit with your for a while?" he asked gently.

"Lillie!" he spoke hoarsely, "don't—don't turn from me like this! It is more than I can bear! Won't you—won't you kiss me good-night this once?"

She drew back swiftly. Love and pride were struggling fiercely in her breast; but pride dominated.

"All that is over now," she said with haughty bitterness. She turned to leave him.

"Lillie!" he cried again, and at the passion in his voice she stood still, trembling, "don't say it is all over. I have tried to endure this and I cannot. Let my love atone. Be pitiful, forget my wrong, and take me back into your heart!"

She looked at him, and for an instant their eyes met—Don's wild in despairing entreaty, Lillie's blinded with sudden tears.

"How can I ever forget what has broken my heart?" she said bitterly.

She rushed from his side then and down to her cabin; but Don stood on where she had left him, seeing nothing, feeling nothing but the blackness of his own despair. Love had driven him to break down the barrier and speak the anguish that was dragging his soul down to the very abyss of reckless remorse; but now she had repulsed him nothing mattered. She had shrunk from him as from some unclean thing, and death was more welcome than life.

Blinded by the salt spray and deafened by the roar of the elements, he leaned on at the taffrail when all others had gone below and he alone stood there on deck. For suddenly, with awful swiftness, the full fury of the storm had burst. The sea had become a sheet of boiling foam. The wind raged and shook the gallant vessel, which ever and anon rose with a long, steady lift to breast the watery precipice, while cleaving the darkness came flash after flash of lightning and the dull roll of thunder, rising louder and nearer above the wild roar of wind and wave.

And still through it all Don leant on, clinging to the taffrail unmoved, careless, almost expectant every moment might be his last.

It was in a slight lull of the tempest's fury Lillie stole back on deck. The rain had been descending in hammering torrents, but now it came and went in gusts. The thunder was rolling away fainter and fainter; only the sea raged sullenly on. The wind lifted up its unwearied voice and the good ship plowed on its way.

The pitiful yielding to self-reproach had followed swiftly on Lillie's cold and bitter leave-taking of Don, and now love was battling for victory to speak some little word of wifely tenderness, despite that ever-haunting remembrance of the dark Afridi nullah where her father's blood had been shed.

Clinging to the companion rail she strove to peer through the darkness towards the spot where they had parted. Yes, he stood there still. But as she paused irresolute, looking at that figure on the taffrail so apparently unmoved, an awful fear clutched her heart. Creeping stealthily towards him on hands and feet, under the shadow of the bulwarks, was the snake-like form of a swarthy seaman, an Indian knife gripped between his teeth; and a hoarse cry—a cry that rang above the storm from stem to stern of the great ship—burst from Lillie's parched lips. The cry was one word: "Don!"

Her husband started and turned. Too late!

Through the darkness flashed a gleam of steel, and the Indian's knife, uplifted to plunge with deadly aim in his unconscious victim's back, was buried in Don's breast. For an instant waged a fierce, unequal hand-to-hand struggle. With the rolling ship the two figures swayed madly to and fro.

COLOR SENSE OF SAVAGES.

Peoples Among Whom It Is Little Developed.

In his lecture on "The Sense of Primitive Man," delivered at the Royal Institution, Dr. W. H. R. Rivers spoke about primitive color vision. He devoted his introductory remarks to the importance of the color sense in the study of the relation between language and ideas, and referred to the deficiency in color sense which Dr. Gladstone and later, Geiger, held to exist among the ancients, and to the theory of an evolution of color sense in man within historical times. He then gave some account of the vocabularies employed for colors by several savage races. The simplest he found was among the Australian natives in the Seven Rivers district, a number of whom had only three terms; natives from the Pitt-roy River showed much the same characteristics. The next simplest was that of Kiwai, on the Fly River, where there was no name for blue apart from black. The last two he mentioned were those of Murray Island and Mabung, which were more extensive. In these four vocabularies four stages might be seen in the evolution of color language exactly as deduced by Geiger, red being the most definite, and the colors at the other end of the spectrum the least so. It was noteworthy, too, that the order of these peoples in respect to culture was the same as in regard to development of words for colors. The Eskimo, Dr. Rivers observed, differed radically from the language of the tropical peoples he had examined in possessing an extremely well-developed color vocabulary. He next discussed the epithets used for color in Homer, and concluded that the features of his color language were essentially of the same nature as those found among primitive peoples of the present day. Speaking of the objective examination of color sense in the Torres Straits, he said the people showed no confusion between red and green. The investigation of their color names, he thought, showed that to them blue must be a duller and darker color than it was to us, and, indeed, the tintometer had afforded evidence of a distinct quantitative deficiency in their perception of blue, though the results were far from proving blindness to blue. Dr. Rivers then discussed some of the objections that had been urged against the theory of a historical evolution of color sense, coming to the conclusion that it was not to be lightly put aside, though it could not be regarded as fully demonstrated. Finally he considered some of the factors that determined the special characteristics of primitive color language, giving some instances from widely separated parts of the world, in which names of colors seemed to be derived from the same natural objects.—London Times.

Her Cure.

He—"I understand you have been attending an ambulance class. Can you tell me what is the best thing to do for a broken heart?" She—"Oh, yes. Bind up the fractured portions with a gold ring, bathe them with orange-blossom water and apply plenty of raw rice. Guaranteed to be well in a month."

CRUSHING DEFEAT

600 KILLED; 900 TAKEN PRISONERS

Third Victory of Boer General DeWet—Three Reports Received in London Confirming Disaster—"Bobs" in Serious Straits.

A London, April 11th special says a dispatch to the Daily Mail from Brandford, dated Sunday, says:

"Yesterday General De Wet inflicted the third defeat of the British within a week at Meerkatsfontein, killing and wounding 600. He captured 900 with twelve wagons, losing five Boers killed and nine wounded."

"It is officially announced that a battle has been fought south of Brandfort, in which 600 British troops were killed and wounded and 800 taken prisoners.

The Daily Mail publishes the following, dated April 10, from Lorenzo Marquez:

"The Netherlands Railway company professes to have received a telegram reporting a Boer victory near Kroonstadt, the Boers capturing 900 British."

Commenting upon this, the Daily Mail remarks:

"There is a Meerkaatfontein about five and a half miles southeast of Kroonstad, but if the report be true, this can hardly be the place."

A Pretoria, April 9, dispatch says: The British casualties in the fight at De Wet's dorp were 100 killed and wounded and 400 captured. The Transvaal volksraad has been summoned to meet in ordinary session on May 10.

Heavy cannonading is reported at Fourteen Streams. The British are using a naval gun. Lord Methuen is moving in the direction of Hoopstad.

TO CHANGE CONFESSION

Turmoil in Presbyterian Ranks Over Faith Paragraph.

A Little Falls, N. Y., dispatch of April 10 says: The Utica presbytery, now in session in this city, was thrown into a turmoil today by an address from the Rev. Dr. Taylor of Clinton, formerly pastor of the Presbyterian church at Rome, N. Y., who advocated the elimination from the confession of faith of paragraphs 3 to 7 of chapter 3. These paragraphs cover the doctrine of election and reprobation, in repudiation of which Dr. Hillis of Brooklyn resigned from the Chicago presbytery. The Rev. W. B. Brokaw, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Utica, supplemented Dr. Taylor's address by saying the session of his church had passed resolutions favoring a change in the objectionable paragraphs. A resolution to eliminate a paragraph was referred to the committee on bills and overtures.

BANKER BLOWS BRAINS OUT

Commits Suicide Rather Than Carry Out Court Order.

An Oakland, Cal., dispatch says Banker H. H. Pitcher, who has charge of the Livermore bank in the capacity of manager and cashier, blew his brains out at his Livermore home.

Pitcher was a trustee of the estate of the late Thomas Varney, deceased, valued at $600,000. His trust was being investigated in court. Pitcher was to produce his books in court and testify as to how he handled the bank and the trust. Rather than appear in court he blew his brains out. He did not leave any message.

Taken to the Asylum.

Sheriff Simmering of Hastings, Neb., has taken Emmanuel Lapp to the Lincoln asylum. Last year Mr. Lapp, who is a well to do farmer, with a good farm and home near the village of Holstein, changed the location of the various buildings, including the house in which the family lived, and since that time he has imagined that he is turned around and that it will be necessary to put the buildings all back in their former position in order to bring him right. He is perfectly rational on every other subject and said, when leaving for the asylum, that it was a shame to take him there.

A Big Contract.

It is definitely known that McArthur Brothers of Chicago and Kilpatrick Brothers & Collins of Beatrice, Neb., get the contract for building the Union Pacific cut-off from Dufoto to Laramie, Wyo., a 1,500-foot tunnel in the crest of the Sherman hill and a rock causeway on Dale creek. The work will require a large force of men and two years' time to complete. The contract calls for a double track, with tunnel double track width. The project will necessitate the expenditure of about $2,500,000. It is announced that operations will commence about May 1.

LOSS OF LIFE FULLY FIFTY

Full Effect of the Floods in Texas Being Realized.

An Austin, Texas, dispatch says. The flood situation here is improving somewhat, but the reports from points below indicate that the full effect of the immense volume of water is being felt in Wharton and Lafayette counties, everything being inundated and much loss of property and live stock being reported. In Bastrop county the flood has caused much damage to property interests and something like fifty washouts and losses of bridges are reported by the railways. Advices from the area surrounding the county seat of Bastrop county are to the effect that there has been some loss of life among the farming class, as their homes were inundated without warning, by the tidal wave, but outside of an unconfirmed report that eight lives were lost nothing can be learned. In the southern part of this county several people are missing, the number representing a family of six Italians and two negro families.

BURNS IN THE NIGHT

Elevator at York Entirely Destroyed by Fire.

The elevator at York was entirely destroyed by fire. The fire occurred during a heavy rain, which was accompanied by considerable lighting and many are of the opinion that that the building was struck and set on fire by lightning. The elevator was owned by D. P. Chessman and is a total loss, as he carried no insurance. McCloud and Miller, who operate the east elevator, had about $12,000 worth of grain, principally wheat and rye in the elevator destroyed, which was covered by 60,000 insurance. Their loss is quite heavy. The rain which was falling during the fire saved other buildings from being destroyed, as a strong wind prevailed.

END OF LONG STRIFE

Rev. Dr. McGiffert Quits the Presbyterian Church.

A New York dispatch says: The Rev. Arthur C. McGiffert has formally withdrawn from the Presbyterian church. His resignation was conveyed in a letter to the presbytery of New York, which met in regular semi-annual meeting, and Dr. McGiffert's request that his name be dropped from the roll of the presbytery was granted. Dr. McGiffert's letter of resignation is in accordance with an announcement made by him to the presbytery three weeks ago.

Wabash Wins.

A dispatch from Omaha says that in the United States circuit court, the order of Judge Thayer was filed in the case of the Omaha & St. Louis railroad against the Burlington & Missouri railroad. The case was heard at St. Louis Saturday upon the application of the plaintiff for mandatory injunction against the defendant road and G. Holdrege, general manager, to compel the agents of the road to accept, at Council Bluffs, a carload of agricultural implements, consigned from an Ohio point to a station of the Burlington & Missouri in Nebraska.

Suffocates in Jail.

A man, supposed to be Morris Hedderman, a private in Company A, Fourth regiment, U. S. cavalry, war of '61, was suffocated in the Auburn, Neb. jail. He had been arrested for attempting to enter a private home. After being placed in jail he evidently set fire to his bedding, for when the jailor returned at about 6 o'clock with the man's supper he found the fellow dead.

Beckwith Commits Suicide.

W. C. Beckwith, aged 37, a locomotive fireman, from Pacific Junction, Ia., committed suicide by sending a bullet through his brain on the fourth floor of the Withnell block, at Fifteenth and Harney streets, Omaha, Neb. The bullet entered the left temple, killing him instantly. Melancholia was the cause of the deed.

Irish Editor Fined.

Arthur Griffiths, editor of the United Irishman, of Dublin, Ireland, which was suppressed last Saturday, was Tuesday sentenced to fourteen days imprisonment or a fine of a sovereign for assaulting Ramsay Collins, proprietor of the Irish Figaro. He decided to take the imprisonment.

Chicken Thieves at Exeter.

Interest is felt at Exeter, Neb., over the appearance of chicken thieves. During the past few days several chicken coops have been partly robbed, and thieves have again made their appearance, this time at the home of Otto Phillips, and took part of his flock of chickens.

Eight Inches of Snow.

Brown county, Neb., was favored with a heavy rain Tuesday, terminating in snow during the night. The heaviest snow of the winter fell. It is estimated that eight inches fell, and all melted, filling the streams with water and putting the ground in excellent condition for putting in crops.

The Table Rock Argus,

P. H. Taylor, Publisher.

Republican Senatorial Convention.

The republican senatorial convention of the First District, is hereby called to meet at the opera house in Table Rock on the 26th day of May, 1900, at 1 o'clock P. m. for the purpose of selecting a candidate for State Senator for said First District and for the transaction of any other business which may properly come before said convention. The basis of representation of said convention is apportioned between the two counties as follows:

One delegate for each one hundred votes, or major fraction thereof cast for Judge Reese for Supreme Judge at the last State election. Under this apportionment Richardson county would be entitled to 23 delegates and Pawnee county 15.

W. H. Wilson, Committee for Pawnee.
E. A. Tucker,

Now it is reported that Prof. Andrews will accept the chancellorship of the Nebraska university.

The Pawnee City military band will accompany the Jacksonian club to Omaha to the national democratic convention at Kansas City on July 4. Next to Table Rock's band the Pawnee band is the best in the state and it will be enough in itself to make the Jacksonian club the rest of the convention.

The fusion primaries for the selection of delegates to the county and commissioners' conventions and the nomination of candidates for precinct officers will be held May 16th at the town hall. The county convention will be held at Pawnee City on Thursday, May 17th, and the commissioners' convention at Steinauer on Saturday May 19th.

G. Sommerhalder has reason to be proud of the magnificent endorsement extended to him at the commissioners convention. The office of commissioner is one of the most important offices in the county and Mr. Sommerhalder has discharged his duties in an able, honest way and will receive the same endorsement at the polls given him at the convention.—Steinauer Star.

Before adjourning Wednesday the supreme court took occasion to disappoint the hundreds of educators of the state who have been anticipating a favorable decision in the suit involving the constitutionality of the high school law. The court, in an opinion written by Chief Justice Norval, holds that the act is invalid and that high school districts have no right to collect moneys from the county treasuries for tuition of students residing outside the high school districts yet attending such high schools.—Lincoln News.

A Washington dispatch of yesterday says: Diplomatic relations between the United States and Turkey may be broken off any day. The question of the claim of the United States for $100,000 damages for the destruction of American church property during the Armenian outrages has reached such a state of exclusion and final demand for immediate payment has been made. A note was sent to the Turkish government today and its language couched in no uncertainable terms, does not threaten war in case the demand of the United States is not complied with, but emphatically states that unless there is a speedy settlement of the claim diplomatic relations between the two countries will be severed. No specific time for the payment is set. Turkey is simply and plainly told to make payment immediately."

Have you ever noticed that grocerymen, as a rule, are fat? Grocers are generally thin. Nearly always a grocer's face is furrowed with lines of care; that is, if he has been in the business any great length of time. It shows his hair and causes his hair that does not fall out to become gray. The women are responsible for this. The grocer drinks a good deal with women, and the women happily a great deal with the grocerymen. He will lean down and chew the rag, and kick about the goods that have been delivered or such a matter that he does both and it is really a wonder that all grocerymen don't drop off and blow away instead of dying after the fashion of the general run of mankind. Women are a great trial besides on the grocerymen than they are on the men who run stores where the packages are goods and nobody is off the scales. And the grocerymen will tell you so. The next time you go to your store refuse to buy your groceries and see if you can't get more trade and consideration in the grocerymen's eye. Nearly always it is there. It is all the grocerymen is amused to do always—jump into him.—Beatrice Sentinel.

Kansas City, Kas., April 12.—A marriage service by telegraph, with the bride and groom 200 miles apart, was carried out between Kansas City and Hulbull, Okla., at noon today. The groom is S. Andrew Candell, of Washington, D. C., attached to the department of agriculture of the United States government, and the bride is Miss Penelope Cundiff of Perkins, Okla., the daughter of a prominent farmer of that place. Mr. Candell and Miss Cundiff became engaged six months ago and the wedding was set for May. Last week, however, Mr. Candell was called to Harrisonville, Mo., by the death of his mother. His duties made it necessary to start back to Washington tomorrow. He asked Miss Cundiff to come to Kansas City, so that the wedding could take place today at the home of his sister. Miss Cundiff was unable to reach Kansas City in time and arrangements were made with the Western Union telegraph company to have the marriage ceremony conducted by wire. A direct line between Kansas City and Hulbull was placed at the disposal of the couple. Mr. Candell secured Rev. Albert H. Lloyd, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church, and accompanied by two friends, went to the telegraph office. Miss Cundiff was accompanied to the telegraph office by her parents and sister. The questions and responses were wired back and forth and repeated at each end to the couple by the telegraph operators, the ceremony requiring twenty-five minutes time.

In almost every neighborhood there is some one whose life has been saved by Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, or who has been cured of chronic diarrhoea by the use of that medicine. Such persons make a point of telling of it whenever opportunity offers, hoping that it may be the means of saving other lives. For sale by S. G. Wright.

J. H. Hornbeck has a walking argument in favor of Republican prosperity for the farmer. He drives a team of horses which cost him $99.25. One of them was purchased in Democratic times and cost him $9.25. The other was purchased a few weeks ago and cost $90. There is but little difference in the apparent value of the horses, but there is some good argument there all the same.—Breckenridge Bulletin.

Forty years ago Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Heywood were united in marriage in Table Rock, and the anniversary was celebrated at their home last night by a large gathering of friends. The grim reaper, Death, has been busy in our midst during the past few weeks and six pioneers of Table Rock have fallen victims to his power. First M. M. Stover, then Mrs. McCaslin, Mrs. Samson, Mrs. Burrow, Mr. Werner, and "Uncle Henry Cooper," as he was known to nearly everybody. For a long time Mr. Cooper has been in feeble health, suffering from cancer of the stomach, and last fall he had a long sick spell and it was feared then the end was at hand, but he grew better, and was able to be about town some, but his usual vigor and strength were gone, never to return. Last week he was worse and continued to grow weaker until his death, which occurred at 4 o'clock yesterday morning. Henry Cooper was born May 3, 1827, in Cayuga county, N. Y; was united in marriage to Phoebe Jane Wendover on October 20, 1847; they moved to Bronson, Mich., from which place he enlisted to serve in the civil war, in 7th infantry, Co. I, Michigan volunteers; he was wounded in the battle of the Wilderness and taken prisoner; was an inmate of Anderson and Libby—enduring the horrors of these prison-pens for six months. He came to Pawnee county in 1869, and to Pawnee City, to Table Rock. The deceased was the father of eight children, six of whom ten are dead, Robert and Emory. Of her children living seven are married: Mrs. Jessie M. Tinker, of Almena, Kas.; Mrs. Myra A. Combs, of Burchard, Neb.; Mrs. Eva A. Grimling, Table Rock, Neb.; Willard W. Samson, Bisbee, Ariz.; Mrs. Carrie L. Buhl, Denver, Col.; Mrs. May E. Talbot, Table Rock, Neb.; Mrs. Nellie G. Harrison, Grand Island, Neb.; Clyde, the youngest child, is living at home. Mrs. Samson united with the M. E. church in 1856, was an earnest, faithful worker in the church, and a loving and devoted wife and mother. The funeral services were held in the M. E. church on Friday afternoon, conducted by Rev. G. M. Gates, and the remains were buried in Table Rock cemetery.

A Paris correspondent remarks sagely that the largest item of expense in a trip to the exposition for Americans will be the ocean passage. Well, that depends. Another one of those occasions which have become known and associated with the Rebekah lodge as good times, happened on Tuesday evening of this week. In answer to an invitation twelve members of Capitola lodge No. 15 of Table Rock, arrived in the city on the afternoon train and were entertained by the local Rebekahs until time for the return trip early the following morning. The visitors were met at the depot by a committee appointed for that purpose and escorted to the lodge-room, where an excellent supper was prepared and served. Social intercourse held away until 8:30, when the lodge was duly called to order and took up the work of administering the Rebekah degree to three candidates, Mrs. May Emmett Satterwhite, and Fulton Gantt. The local team did the work and went through it the entire routine just as the best team in the state would do. It is a recognised fact that the Falls City Rebekah team has no superior within the boundaries of Nebraska. The work done, the goat was looked up and a general good time was the order for the balance of the evening. What was called a lunch, but in reality a square meal, was served. The event was the source of much pleasure to all, and has been jotted down in the minute book as one of the occasions in the history of the lodge to be cherished in memory. To Capitola lodge, come again. The visitors were: Mesdames Wood, Faulkner, Penrod, Calvin, Norris, Fellers, Fisher, Wheeler, Misses Gertrude Norris, Nellie Cotton, Minnie Parish, and Minnie Fuller.—Falls City News.

A NEW CHANCELLOR

Dr. E. Benjamin Andrews is Elected by the Regents.

SELECTION IS CONSIDERED A GOOD ONE

Choice Not Unanimously Made, But University People Think Dr. Andrews Will Make Strong Chancellor.

Dr. E. Benjamin Andrews, superintendent of the Chicago city schools, was Thursday chosen by the regents to fill the position of chancellor of the university of Nebraska. Four votes were cast in the affirmative when the question came before the board and two in the negative. Four being a majority of six, Dr. Andrews was declared duly elected.

The only objection came from men who feared that his election would be considered a partisan move. It was this that made Regents Morrill and Gould, the republican members of the board, decline to vote for his election. Confidence is expressed that Dr. Andrews will accept. A dispatch from Chicago states that Dr. Andrews declines to say whether he will accept or not.

The conversation heard among the professors and student indicates that Dr. Andrews will be warmly welcomed to the university.

Elisha Benjamin Andrews was born at Hinsdale, N. H., on January 10, 1844. He prepared for college before the war but his plans were interrupted by his enlistment to fight for the union. He served as a private, corporal, sergeant, quartermaster sergeant and second lieutenant. He was wounded at Petersburg, on August 24, 1864, losing an eye.

After the war was over he entered Brown university, graduating in 1870. For four years after 1875 he was president of Denison university, at Granville, O. From 1879 to 1882 he was professor of homiletics in Newton theological institution. In 1882 he was elected to the chair of history and political economy in Brown university, going from there to Cornell in 1888 to take the chair of political economy and finance. A year later he was elected to the presidency of Brown, which he held from 1889 to 1898.

CLARK CANNOT STAY

Montana Man Must Vacate His Senate Seat.

The senate committee on privileges and elections has decided unanimously in favor of the unseating of Senator Clark of Montana.

The report is to declare the seat of Senator Clark vacant and not to expel.

The decision was reached after a two hours' sitting, at which all the members of the committee were present except one. The absentee was Senator Caffery of Louisiana, and he wired his vote in opposition to Mr. Clark.

The ballot was not taken until all the members present had expressed themselves upon the question, some of them speaking at some length, and all expressing different shades of opinions.

Pat Him Out of Misery.

Bud LeCompte, a young man living near Frankfort, Ky., walked into the home of his brother-in-law, Hiram Stafford, and fired three bullets into the latter, who had been sick in bed a month past, killing him instantly. The neighbors believe LeCompte crazy. He said to Stafford when he walked in to the room, "You are going to die, anyway; I will just put you out of your misery."

Insane Man Murders Mother.

J. Albert Merritt, aged sixty-four, one of the most successful dry goods merchant of Kington, N. Y., shot his mother through the head, and then shot himself, dying instantly. It is thought Mrs. Merritt will die. Mr. Merritt's father died while insane, and two uncles and a niece on his father's side committed suicide, and two uncles on his mother's side killed themselves.

Feeding Value of Sorghum.

The Nebraska Experiment Station has just issued Bulletin No. 62. This treats of the feeding value of the sorghum plant both for summer pasture and winter feed. The bulletin may be obtained free of cost by writing to the Agricultural Experiment Station, Lincoln, Nebraska.

Found Dead by the Lake.

The body of Truman D. Harker, president of the First National Bank of Storm Lake, Ia., was found in about ten inches of water on the lake shore near that city. After the bank closed he took his gun and started duck hunting. There were no marks of any kind on his person and the gun by his side had not been discharged. His accounts are in excellent shape.

PUERTO RICAN BILL PASSES

House Concurs In Senate Amendments —Vote 161 to 153.

The Puerto Rican tariff bill passed the house Wednesday, the vote being 161 for and 153 against. Upon the final vote nine republicans voted against the bill, while two or three democrats voted for it.

HARDLY WORTH HER DEBTS

Newspaper of Havana Declares the Island Bankrupt.

The Nuevo Pais, a Havana, Cuba, newspaper, says of Cuba: "Taking $31,800,000 as the annual assessment income of urban and rural properties of the island, according to the assessment of 1897, and capitalizing it at 10 per cent, $318,000,000 would be obtained as the total value of the properties of the islands. Subtracting $248,000,000, the amount of the existing mortgages on said property, about $70,000,000, the value of the unincumbered property, would remain. This, however, does not take into account the properties destroyed during the war, which far exceed that amount. It would therefore appear that the actual value of the properties does not equal the amount of the mortgages existing on them."

French to Have Their Own Way at Paris Exposition.

The French authorities have decided that all exhibits at the exposition are to be open to the public on Sundays, and the United States exhibits are, naturally, within this regulation. These exhibits are under cover in buildings erected by the French government, over which the United States authorities have no control, therefore they must abide by the rules established. The United States pavilion is not within this category and the question of its being opened or closed on Sunday the French officials have left entirely to Commissioner Peck's desire. He will probably announce his final decision in the matter soon.

Bank Closes Down.

The bank of Reinhard & Co. at Columbus, O., founded in 1868, has suspended business. The bank was closed at noon and about the same time John G. and Henry A. Reinhard filed deeds of assignment to Thomas J. Abernathy, who qualified by giving bonds aggregating $325,000.

John G. Reinhard, cashier of the bank, made the following statement:

"The suspension was caused by persistent rumors which have been afloat for about four weeks reflecting on the financial condition of the bank and its owners. In one month's time our deposits have dwindled down from $350,000 to $98,000, and there were scarcely any new deposits. Depositors will be paid dollar for dollar."

Aged Farmer Falls Dead.

Carl Hofer, a well known and well to do farmer, living a few miles east of Creighton, Neb., fell dead from heart trouble. He ate a hearty dinner and went out to the field to work and had only driven a few rods from where he had hitched on to a disk when he fell over dead. He was an old soldier, about sixty-five years of age, and leaves a wife and children. He was buried by the Masons Thursday.

House is Built of Steel.

A complete house, built of steel, is a portion of the cargo of the Dutch ship Wilhelmina, which has just sailed from Philadelphia for Japan and Russia. The structure is in sections and when erected will be two stories in height. It is consigned to Prince Yoshibito of Tokio, who believes a steel residence will better withstand the earthquakes which are characteristic of the district in which he lives, than one of native construction. The steel house was built at Pittsburg at a cost of $21,481.

POINTS OUT THE SUSPECT

Man and Woman Accused of Poisoning Face Each Other.

A somewhat dramatic scene was enacted in the Winold poisoning case at Cincinnati when Charles O. Winold and Fatha Gillen were brought face to face in the office of the chief of police. Winold had denied all knowledge of the girl. She was not told that she was to confront him, but as soon as he came within her sight she became very much agitated and shrank from him. When he was seated Chief Deitsch addressed the girl, saying:

"You are accused of poisoning the Winold family. Did you do it?"

"I did not," she promptly replied.

"Who did?"

"That man there," she exclaimed, pointing at Winold, and thus showing that she recognized him.

Winold's bond was fixed at $10,000.

A HINT FOR SPRING.

When Housekeepers Are Brightening the Interiors of Their Homes.

When the backbone of this remarkable winter is broken, housekeepers are remarking the dingy look of the home interior. The question of new wall coverings is up. Paper is dear and short lived; kalsomines are dirty and scaly; paint is costly. The use of such a cement as Alabastine, for instance, will solve the problem. This admirable wall coating is clean, pure, and wholesome. It can be put on with no trouble by anyone; there is choice of many beautiful tints; and it is long lasting.

As spring weather comes there is need of still greater attention shown the cows.

"A FLAMING TRUTH"

President Kruger Says Such is God's Word.

BRITISH HARD PRESSED AT WEPENER

Pretoria Advices From Natal Are That the British are Retreating and That Federal Troops are Taking Their Old Positions.

A Chicago News copyright special dispatch to the World-Herald from Pretoria, dated April 11, via Lourenzo Marquez April 12, says: Your correspondent sends this from his tent, near Pretoria: Everyone is ready for the first emergency. It is reported here that another great battle is proceeding at Wepener. Fighting began at daybreak yesterday. Hourly reports are sent to headquarters here and they seem to be encouraging.

President Kruger, when interviewed by your correspondent today, said that the war situation is today exactly what it was six months ago. The president says that God's word, as emphasized by the prophets, will be abundantly vindicated by the course of the campaign, which he believes will end in victory for the Boers. "The word of God," he says, "will again prove to be a convincing, flaming truth in the face of all mankind."

Associated Press advices from Wepener, where a British force is surrounded, say the battle continues favorable to the federals. About 1,500 British troops are said to be there.

At Pretoria a heavy cannonade was heard in the direction of Bultfontein, situated midway between Winburg and Boshof in the Orange Free State and north of Brandfort.

Advices from the Boer headquarters in Natal say that after a heavy bombardment the British are retiring in the direction of Ladysmith and the federals are going to their old positions.

FALLING WALLS CRUSH 30

Four-Story Brick Collapses in Pittsburg, Pa.

A four-story brick building on the corner of Wood street and Second avenue, Pittsburg, Pa., occupied by Armstrong, McKelvey & Co., wholesale paint dealers, collapsed shortly before 10 o'clock Thursday. A score or more people were in the building at the time and many, it is feared, are buried in the ruins.

A hundred men are tearing away at the debris striving to release the buried men and to get out the dead bodies. It is believed that no one person in the building escaped, unless one or two on the top floor may have escaped being crushed to death. The building fell without warning and collapsed, the fall being out toward Third avenue, blocking up the street.

COIL GIVEN TEN YEARS.

Arrests for Perjury May Result in Sensational Sequel.

At Chadron, Neb., the motion for a new trial in the case of the state against George Coil, who was found guilty of murder in the second degree at the February term of court for killing Tom Ryan last fall, was passed upon.

After hearing both sides Judge W. H. Westover overruled the motion for a new trial, and sentenced Coil to ten years in the penitentiary and instructed the county attorney to investigate several affidavits which, the court said, showed upon their face they were absolutely false, and it is possible that several arrests may be made for perjury.

WOMAN SHOOTS NEIGHBOR

A Quarrel Near Superior, Nebraska, May Result Seriously.

Frank McBride, a farmer living south of Superior, was shot in the face with a 38-calibre revolver by Mrs. Stephenson. The ball struck the cheek bone and was deflected into the mouth, making an ugly and dangerous wound, but not necessarily fatal. The parties connected with the affair are neighbors, and have at different times disagreed, the shooting following an altercation caused by a few chickens getting out of their jurisdiction. A warrant for the arrest of Mrs. Stephenson is out.

It is high up in the mountains east of Ponce. It was formerly the resort of wealthy planters and merchants of Cuba and other islands. All the gambling games of the Mediterranean principally were in full blast. Summer was the harvest time, for those who could afford it got away in the mountains during the rainy season. The site of the old hotel built nearly 100 years ago is exceedingly beautiful.

Words That Were Once Vulgar.

A century and a half ago "fun," a word of Irish origin, was considered "shockingly low." "Mob," too, was a word "no self-respecting gentlemen would use" till Pope boldly wrote, "the mob of gentlemen who write with ease." Of "humbug" a writer in 1750 said: "I will venture to affirm that this 'Humbug' is neither an English word nor a derivation from any other language. It is, indeed, a blackguard sound. It is a fine makeweight in conversation, and some great men deceive themselves so egregiously as to think they mean something by it."

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

Mrs. Margareth Fritz Wilcox, Okla., writes: "I extend my sincere thanks for the good advice you have given me. I do not believe I would be living now if it were not for you. I had suffered with flow of blood for four months, and the doctors could help me but little. They operated on me three times. It was very painful and I only obtained little relief. I was so weak I could not turn in bed. Then I applied to Dr. Hartman. I did not know whether he could help me or not, but I followed his advice, and used only three bottles of Pe-ru-na and Man-a-lin. Behold the Man with the Hoe! He goeth out in the early hours and in the morning he toils in the sweat of his slanting brow. His neighbors drive to and say one to another, "Behold the Man with the Hoe! How he toils and makes garden—that his seed may bring forth an hundred fold and bless him with young onions, early radishes and all the fruits of the field." And as the Man with the Hoe digs he sings with great fervor and seizes the wriggling worm and places it with dire results between a two-step on the bosom of the waters. And the people pass by on the other side and wink unto the ones and say, "Behold the Man with the Fish-pole! What a lazy good-for-nothing he is. Then just as the boy had dropped off into a peaceful slumber about forty-five of the ants took a recess from their regular work and crawled up under the boy's pants and bit him in several dozen places at once. Boxing bouts which have been held in the basement of the South Division High school, Chicago, under the supervision of Principal Smith, have found favor in the eyes of the Board of Education authorities. Superintendent Andrews not only indorses the exercise, but says that he believes that boxing is the best sport in which the students can partake.

Who are the ten greatest men in the nineteenth century? This is a favorite conundrum just now across the water, but we have seen only one attempt to solve it in print. It is by a Dublin, Ireland, editor, and names Lincoln, statesman; Napoleon, soldier; Darwin, scientist; Thackeray, novelist; Pasteur, medicine; Froebel, educator; Beethoven, musician; and Morse and Stephenson, first masters of electricity and steam.

Consular reform is brought perceptibly nearer than it ever was before by the action of congressional committees. Both in the Senate and in the House of Representatives a favorable report has been made upon bills dealing with the organization of the consular service. The bills differ in details, but are one in purpose. They aim to make the foreign service of the United States something like a profession, for which men may fit themselves with a reasonable assurance of finding employment, and from which, when their fitness has been proved, they may not be dislodged by political caprice or the restless ambition of some one who wants a place.

In Europe there are many young men whom fate has destined to be the rich men of the next century. For a long time it was supposed that Lord Belgrave, who inherited the wealth of the Duke of Westminster, would head the list, but since the duke's death it is reported that his fortune has been greatly overestimated. At present this young man is but 20 years of age, but it will not be many years before he will become one of the richest men in the world, according to accepted belief in England. At the same time he has succeeded to every rank in the British peerage from baron to duke, as well as to three of the finest estates in the united kingdom, and a racing stable that cannot be surpassed.

A recent review of the progress of the University of Illinois reveals the fact that there are six different colleges and four schools united under one head. These are the College of Agriculture, College of Literature and Arts, College of Science, College of Engineering, College of Law, College of Medicine, the School of Library Science, School of Pharmacy, School of Music and the Preparatory School. The following official figures indicate the remarkable growth of the institution in number of students, during the last thirteen years: 1887-88, 377; 1888-89, 425; 1889-90, 493; 1890-91, 510; 1891-92, 583; 1893-94, 714; 1894-95, 810; 1895-96, 865; 1896-97, 1,075; 1897-98, 1,585; 1898-99, 1,824; 1899-00, 2,250.

There is a general desire for a decision by the Supreme Court of the United States to determine the question whether the new island possessions are a part of the United States, or its property. It was thought that a suit brought by a New York firm of importers to recover duties paid on Puerto Rican goods might furnish a basis for the desired interpretation; but this suit has been halted by the refusal of the lower court to grant the injunction which was applied for. A case has now arisen at San Francisco, occasioned by the collection of tonnage dues on vessels from Hawaii, in the same manner as from foreign countries, which may afford an opportunity for the settlement of the broad constitutional question.

The free town library, one of the best educational gifts to the nineteenth century to the world, bids fair in the twentieth century to become still more than it is now a stimulant to intellectual progress. Collections of books for the scholar and the rich there have been from the earliest times; but a library belonging to the whole community, rich and poor, learned and ignorant, laborer and professional man, is purely a product of the last half century. Fifty years ago there were about a score in Massachusetts. Today all but seven of her 350 towns have a free library. In the whole country there are not less than 10,000 such libraries. But a mere collection of books, without a faithful librarian, however valuable, is like an undeveloped mine, practically of no use. The town librarian is, like the library itself, a product of the closing century, and has become a new intellectual leader in the community.

PUERTO RICO TARIFF

IT INJURES SPANISH OPPRESSORS OF LABOR

Who Have Been Piling Up Large Stocks of Produce—Article Free Goods With This Country—A Clear Statement of Facts.

An important point in the Puerto Rican question still seems misunderstood by a large number of people. Three-quarters of the land in Puerto Rico is owned by Spanish grandees and other European aliens, and who live in Europe, where all of the net earnings from the products of their lands are sent. This is a system that has impoverished the islanders, and brought them to their present unfortunate industrial and social condition. From 15 to 20 cents a day is the average pay of laborers in Puerto Rico, and three-quarters of the population —if not more—are laborers who cultivate the land and harvest the crops for their European owners.

Two and a half years ago, when our relations with Spain were becoming acute, these Spanish and European owners of the lands in Puerto Rico foresaw a probable war, the early withdrawal of Spanish authority, and eventual free trade between the United States and Puerto Rico. They therefore have been warehousing their staple crops of sugar and tobacco, so that now vast quantities are in store and accumulating, ready for shipment under free trade with the United States. To some extent American sugar and tobacco trusts have financial interest in, or complete ownership of, these crops.

Of this there can be no doubt; the Puerto Rican working people have nothing to lose by the imposition of the duty upon the products of their island entering the United States. Their work has been done and paid for at the prevailing rates of wages for labor —from 15 to 20 cents per day. The protests against the tariff that come from Puerto Ricans were from those who represented the owners of the lands and the warehoused crops. The protests are not coming from the laboring people of the islands who will be the beneficiaries of the act.

The imposition of this tariff creates a fund of several million dollars which is drawn almost entirely from aliens or American trusts. This money goes back to Puerto Rico for the employment of Puerto Ricans by our government in the permanent improvement of the island. The wages our government will pay will be higher than those paid by the land owners, and will tend to raise the rates of wages all over Puerto Rico. This would be impossible under immediate free trade, so, it must be plain, free trade would only benefit those whose oppression of Puerto Rican labor would remain undisturbed, and who could thus all the better compete with the products of American labor in the same articles. Immediate free trade could only benefit aliens and trusts. The temporary tariff benefits all Americans and only injures aliens and trusts.

A couple of years of this, and the Puerto Ricans will be in receipt of wages approximating to those paid to the laborers on the sugar and tobacco plantations in the United States, from 75 cents to a dollar a day, and at the end of the two years in which the tariff is to remain in force the free admission of Puerto Rican products into the United States will not have a disturbing effect upon those products of the mainland with which they will compete.

It is impossible, in view of these facts, which are confirmed by official reports from the officers of the United States stationed in Puerto Rico, for any sincere or informed person to point out where the imposition of the tariff upon the products of Puerto Rico for two years will injure either Puerto Ricans or Americans. On the contrary, it is a distinct benefit to all whom the United States desires to benefit. The more this subject is studied the more this will become apparent. This is a case where expediency is synonymous of justice to our fellow countrymen in Puerto Rico and at home. That is our first duty, and the tariff performs it.

FOREIGN TRADE GAINS.

March Figures Show Exports More Than Doubled Since 1893.

Total exports of American products and manufactures in March, as shown by the figures of the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, were $134,313,348, against $104,559,039 in March of last year, $75,574,185 in March, 1896, and $68,516,571 in March, 1893. Thus last month's exports were more than double those of March, 1893 and 25 per cent greater than those of March of last year, and larger than those of any preceding March in our history.

The total exports in the nine months ending with March, 1900, were $1,053,832,675, against $947,919,405 in the corresponding months of last year, $825,905,396 in March, 1897, and $516,499,635 in the same month of 1896, having thus doubled in fifteen years and increased over 53 per cent since 1893.

Exports of agricultural products are about the same as last year, the notable increase of more than 100 million dollars in the nine months in question being largely in manufactures. It is apparent that the total exports of the fiscal year 1900 will exceed those of any preceding year in our history. Imports also show a marked increase over last year, the principal gain being in manufacturers' materials, while manufactured articles for use in the mechanic arts also show an increase. Thus the return to a protective tariff system has been followed by enormous gains in our exports, as well as by increased activity in our manufacturing interests at home with a consequent increase of employment and wages.

GOVERNOR AS A WITNESS.

Democratic Executive of Idaho Testified Against Miners.

A petition endorsing the actions of Governor Steunenberg of Idaho and requesting that the federal troops be continued in Shoshone county, where the mining riots occurred, and which was signed by 1,388 reputable business men and citizens of the Coeur d'Alene district, was kept from the records of the investigating committee of the house of representatives by the votes of the Democratic members of the committee. The investigation is supposed to determine whether the troops have been kept there contrary to the constitution, and contrary to the wishes of the people. Nothing could have had more direct bearing upon the subject than this petition, yet the Democrats by their action in keeping it out have demonstrated that it is political capital, and not facts pertinent to the labor trouble, which they are looking for. The motion to admit this evidence was made by Mr. Capron of Rhode Island, seconded by Col. Dick, of Ohio. In the absence of Chairman Hull and one or two others of the Republicans the Democrats were enabled to cause a tie vote and defeat the motion.

Witness Henry E. Howes, a merchant of Wallace, was badgered by Representatives Lentz and Sulzer, who endeavored unsuccessfully to compel him to reveal matters which had come to his knowledge as a grand juror, and which he had taken solemn oath never to reveal. Objections were made to these unprofessional questions, which were sustained by all of the committee with the exception of the two members asking them.

On one occasion after Col. Dick had interposed an objection to the character of Mr. Sulzer's questions, the latter replied, rather warmly, "You are trying to protect the witness." To this Mr. Capron rejoined: "No, we are trying to save you. You need some one to keep you from asking a witness to divulge something which he has sworn not to divulge. I am trying to save you who profess to be a lawyer."

"It is not against organized labor, but against organized crime, that the state of Idaho has been waging war."

This was one of the strong statements made by Governor Steunenberg at the hearing in the Coeur d'Alene riots by the military committee of the house of representatives. Marked silence and attention were distinctly notable as the governor told of innumerable cases of anarchy, crime, riot and lawlessness that had sometimes led up to murder and assassination. Earnestly and quietly he stated his facts, and so convincingly that they must even have impressed Representative Lentz, who has been endeavoring, but fruitlessly, to show a misuse of the United States army and of the power of the president.

"Covert threats," said the Democratic governor, "are constantly being made by those engaged in the riot of April 29, which resulted in the destruction of some $250,000 worth of property and the assassination of two men, that as soon as the troops were removed they will gratify their revenge upon those citizens who have been induced to assist the state in its attempt to ferret out crime. In the beginning of the present prosecution upon the part of the state a great many good citizens were induced to testify and give evidence upon the representation that they should be protected, and I have no doubt but that each and every one of these would be compelled to leave the country and sacrifice their homes and property should the protection which was assured them be taken away by the removal of the federal troops.

"This is not a conflict between labor and capital or a question of wages, but it is a conflict between the state of Idaho and certain criminal organizations which seek to cloak themselves under the cover of labor organizations."

Value of Merchant Vessels in War Times.

When in 1898 the United States became involved in war with Spain, one of the first things the government found it necessary to secure was merchant ships. It was found that the growth of our coastwise trade had brought into existence a considerable number of vessels in many ways adapted to various military and naval uses for which merchant ships are required in time of war, such as for scout work, and the like. In the latter service the ships of the Prairie class were conspicuous. These vessels, of which there were but four, had belonged to the Morgan line, and ran between New York and New Orleans, connecting at the latter point with the Southern Pacific Railway. They were of about 5,000 tons register, each capable of steaming sixteen or seventeen knots an hour. They were furnished with guns, manned by the Naval Militia, and a number of times were under the enemy's fire, from which they emerged with records alike creditable to the ships and to those who manned them.

All of these ships were built in the United States; our laws ever having provided that none but American-built vessels may engage in our domestic commerce. Of course, if this trade had been open to the ships of all nations, as has been suggested at times, they would have been of no use to our government in time of war. But the number of these vessels that were capable of being transformed into government use was altogether too few, and so recourse was necessarily had to our ocean-going vessels. Here the lack of American ships was sharply accentuated, much to the people's surprise and humiliation. It was found that the four "crackerjack" ships of the American line, in the transatlantic trade—the St. Paul, the St. Louis, the Paris and the New York—of 11,000 tons register each, and each capable of steaming at the rate of 21 knots an hour, were of incalculable value to the United States. They were immediately impressed, their crews voluntarily entering into the nation's service, they were quickly provided with formidable guns for which they were equipped, and swept the Atlantic from the Grand Banks to the Bahamas.

But ships were needed for a great many other purposes, such as carrying troops to Cuba and Puerto Rico, also for supply and hospital needs, for colliers, and for a number of other reasons all directly connected with the war. Having practically stripped our coast of all its available ships, and having exhausted everything American that was available in our foreign trade, our government was at last obliged to resort to foreign ships. None could be chartered, as that is contrary to the rules of war. Neutral powers are expected to see to it that their merchant ships are not used for military or naval purposes by either belligerent.

After the government had chartered or purchased every available American craft that could be utilized, no less than 70,509 tons of foreign merchant steamships were bought for the war department, and 56,309 tons of foreign merchant ships were bought for the navy department, making a total of 126,818 tons of foreign merchant steamships thus purchased by our government for use in a war that ceased within three months of its inauguration.

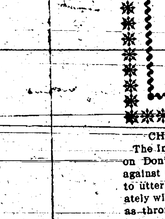
While it is impossible to charter foreign steamships, it was quite difficult to purchase those of the higher types and of the greatest utility—these could not be purchased at any price from their foreign owners. The consequence was, the government was forced to take the best it could get, and in fact some of the purchases made were of a character that would never have been looked at, had it been possible to secure first-class ships. Had American ships been doing the bulk of our carrying they would have been at the immediate command of the government.

Some of the wealthiest and most powerful steamship lines in our foreign trade actually sold some of their vessels to Spain for use against the United States—the very vessels our trade had created were turned against us! Had the enemy been a powerful maritime nation instead of weak Spain not only would our own available supply of merchant steamships have been entirely inadequate, but even the purchase of foreign steamships would have been an impossibility.

It is now found that only 8 per cent of our imports and exports are carried in American ships. The foreign ships carrying the balance earn, it is conservatively estimated, $200,000,000 a year, at the expense of the American people. In five years this means a billion dollars, and in a quarter of a century five billions, for our ocean transportation account, sent out of the country to pay foreign shipowners. The magnitude of the subject, from an industrial and economical as well as from a naval and military point of view, is manifest. No wonder, in these circumstances, congress feels the need of legislating at the present session for an American merchant marine.

A Mother's Tears.

"I Would Cry Every Time I Washed My Baby."



"When be was 3 months old, first festers and then sores broke out on my baby's neck. The sores spread down and back until it became a mass of raw flesh. When I washed him I would cry, realizing what pain he was in. His pitiful wailing was heart-rending. I had about given up hope of saving him when I was urged to give him Hood's Sarsaparilla, all other treatment having failed. I washed the sores with Hood's Medicated Soap, applied Hood's Olive Ointment and gave him Hood's Sarsaparilla. The child seemed to get better every day, and very soon the change was quite noticeable. The discharge grew less, inflammation went down, the skin took on a healthy color, and the raw flesh began to scale over and a thin skin formed as the scales dropped off. Less than two bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla, aided by Hood's Medicated Soap and Hood's Olive Ointment, accomplished this wonderful cure. I cannot praise these medicines half enough." MRS. GUERINOT, 37 Myrtle St., Rochester, N. Y.

KING DON:

....BY MAVOR ALLAN....

The Indian now, with a savage grasp on Don's throat, had pinioned him against the gunwale, and Don, unable to utter a sound, was fighting desperately with his hand for dear life. Then, as through a thick mist, he saw Lillie's sweet face near him, convulsed with anguish, and terrified officers rushing forward. A great lurch of the vessel blotted out the rest. Locked in his antagonist's ruthless embrace, he felt himself whirling backwards into the boiling sea and the waters closing over him.

"Sentry, let go the lifebuoy! Bosun's mate, call away the lifeboat crew!"

Quick as the order, it was obeyed. The great ship was swiftly hove to. But what agony of heart was every second of delay to the paralyzed young bride!

Officers and men had now gathered on the scene, scanning the choppy sea with telescopes and speaking in tense, awed tones as they watched the gallant cutter straining might and main to reach those black specks which rose so often to the surface only to disappear. Lillie stood apart, speechless, almost sightless, in that wild endeavor to pear through the gloom of night, while the remorseless deep was lit up with a spectral terror by the lurid light with which the lifebuoy was charged. Once the ship's surgeon went to her side and begged to take her below. She only shook her head. She was past speaking now.

At last! at last! A thrill of excitement passed from lip to lip. The lookout man on the mizen-mast had descried the rescue of both the drowning men—alive or dead, who could tell?

Impatience to know the worst was checked as the boat came alongside, in deference to the young wife, who stood in their midst waiting—waiting for what?

She followed blindly as they bore Don's prostrate form to his cabin and laid him on his couch. The seaman was dead. Had Don, too, passed away across the mystic ocean, whence the voyager no more returns?

In the weird lamplight that still, unconscious face looked indeed as if it already bore the stamp of death; and, with a despair terrible in its calmness, she turned from doctor to steward while they unfastened coat and vest and laid bare the ghastly wound and its streaming blood.

"Tell me," she said, "is he dead?" Oh, what a whole history of pain and pathos lay in that brief question!

The doctor looked the sympathy he felt. He was a bluff, stoic Scotchman, inured to scenes of sorrow and suffering, but there was something in that pathetic picture of the strong young man struck down in his prime, and the lovely girl wife in her uncomplaining strength of endurance that touched him infinitely.

"He is not dead," he answered. "Be assured I will do everything that is possible to save him," he added cheerily, as his busy fingers sped at his work.

She stood aside in breathless excitement.

"This is a nasty wound," he spoke at last; "but fortunately the salt water has stanched the bleeding. It is after effects I am more afraid of. I should like to get two trained nurses, who happen to be on board, to undertake the case. They are very clever. I could thoroughly rely on them."

For an instance there was tense silence.

"Could you not rely on myself for one?" was the answer which faltered through her parched lips.

"Are you strong enough?" he queried kindly. "If it is a matter of expense, I think you will find I will arrange——"

She interrupted him with a little gesture almost of scorn. All her life she had known nothing of the bitterness of poverty, and now it seemed like a mockery to her to mention expense in conjunction with her love and Don's life.

"We'll make a compromise," said he soothingly. "You shall relieve my nurses from duty now and then; but you must remember his life depends on constant care night and day.

That settled the question definitely, and Lillie allowed herself to be led away to partake of a strong cup of tea and some refreshment to fit her for the long hours of watching which lay before her, for she insisted on the nurse not being summoned at least till morning, as the doctor himself meant to be in close attendance on his patient at night. In his heart he deeply pitied the fair young bride, who evidently loved so deeply the stalwart bridegroom stricken down to the very gates of death.

Yes, Lillie loved Don, even as she had never loved him till now. It was not until he lay before her thus, in the extremity of helplessness, till pride and pity both forgotten, and nothing but infinite tenderness filling her soul, she realized the depth of that love, she realized the depth of that love, she realized the depth of that love, which could forgive even as Christ forgave, and rest on the atonement of the Redeemer alone. She watched by his pillow while the long night dragged on, and he still lay unconscious, motionless, almost breathless.

She shed no tears, but now and then she prayed—prayed, as perhaps she had never prayed before. Sometimes she put her fingers on his pulse to feel if it still beat, and so she waited, waited, while the doctor came in and out, expecting every moment that change which did not come, but which must come at last.

If came when the wild night was waning towards the daybreak, with a quickening of the languid pulse and the faintest tinge of color to the pallid cheek. She stooped over him, believing, with all a novice's delightful hope, that these signs were signs of improvement; but the color mounted to a heet; the pulse throbbed faster and faster, and suddenly he started up and looked at her with strange wildness in his eyes.

"I will go! I will go!" he cried. "But you will believe me?"

She sprang up and threw her arms about his neck, uttering incoherent words of love and passion; but he had fallen back on his pillow, painfully flushed now, and his breath came in hot gasps.

"She will not kiss me! My darling will not kiss me! Never again!" he moaned. "What was it she said? 'All that is over now. How can I ever forget what has broken my heart?'"

The words died away in a sobbing whisper, and the doctor, coming back at that moment, found him thus, tossing restlessly from side to side, unconscious still, but actively unconscious, with the frenzy racking his brain.

CHAPTER X.

Days, many days, went by, and still Don lay in the same state. Sometimes shivering, sometimes burning with fiery heat, sometimes slumbering in the deepest torpor; often wakefully alert with the activity of a distraught mind, wandering back to scenes and times of which his watchers knew nothing—even back to days of early boyhood, when he and Roddy had fished together in Gadie's silvery stream, and never dreamed of jealousy or severance in years to come.

By and by, as the days lengthened into weeks, there came lucid intervals, and when he awoke weak and wellnigh speechless, but perfectly conscious of his surroundings. And if at those times Lillie chanced to be his nurse he would lie and gaze upon her with a look of dog-like devotion in his great brown eyes, often even try to utter some feeble words of gratitude or contrition for her being there. Whilst even as he strove to speak that deadly oblivion would return and blot out past and present alike.

And meanwhile Lillie watched by him and waited upon him with a jealous steadfastness that scarce could brook to share her vigils with his other nurses—they who could minister to the sufferer's wants perhaps more efficiently than Lillie's self, but could experience none of the young wife's bitter joy which made every little duty an act of devotion.

For she saw his strength ebbing hour by hour as the fever worked out its course. She saw his wanderings become more frequent, those fatal torpors more prolonged, and those moments of weak consciousness grow fewer and fewer. And gradually, but all too surely, the awful fear began to dawn upon her that Don and she were to be called upon to part by a decree more relentless than hers. Yet, oh, it could not be that he should die—die and leave her thus, without knowing she had come to realize her life was bound up in his for time and for eternity! That his sin must be her sin, and its atonement hers also as well as his!

Who shall gauge the bitterness of those pleadings which burst from her aching heart through those long vigils of waiting? For it was known to her God alone. There came a night at last, as they neared the white cliffs of England, that after continuous hours of fitful slumber Don opened his eyes and fixed them upon her face. It was upproaching the hour when she usually relinquished her post to the nurse, and she was kneeling by his side in silent prayer, her cheek resting upon his pillow, her locked hands leaning gently on his breast.

A strange reluctance to leave him had fallen upon her, and more than once she had passionately pressed her lips to the short, silky brown curls about his temples.

"Lillie," he spoke wistfully.

It was barely above a whisper, but she heard it with a great bound of her beating heart, for she knew this was real consciousness at last.

"Lillie," he repeated faintly, so faintly that she had to stoop close to his lips to catch the words, "where are we now?"

"We are very nearly home. In a few hours we shall be in the Solent."

She was astonished that he manifested no surprise. It was as if his active brain had been speeding onward with the ship's throbbing engines; as if he, too, while his fragile barque drifted towards the unknown shore, had been dimly conscious of the great sea of time and space.

"Lillie," he spoke again, with labored difficulty, "when we reach Southampton will you wire to Roddy and Di to come to me?"

Hot tears welled up into her eyes and fell upon the wasted hand he strove to lift and lay on hers.

"We will go over to the Isle of Wight to them. Wouldn't that be better, Don?"

"If you will not mind the trouble," he said, with all the trustful dependence of a little child. And then suddenly, with fluttering breath, he spoke again, so faintly she could scarcely hear. "I dreamt just now you kissed me. Lillie, would you promise not to leave till the end?"

She broke down then, and flung herself upon his breast.

"Oh, Don! Don! Don't you understand? I will never leave you—never, never!" she cried.

His fingers closed upon hers with a feeble pressure and a look almost of rapture swept his face. Then, still holding her hand, he fell asleep.

RICH IN MEMORIES.

The Long-Neglected Harrison Mansion Finds a New Owner.

The long-neglected Harrison mansion at North Bend, O., has been purchased recently by Mrs. O. H. Hall of Cincinnati, for the sum of $15,000, and is to be preserved in commemoration of the illustrious men who have been sheltered within its walls. It was built in 1814 by Gen. William Henry Harrison, who prescribed it to his bride. There he dwelt until he went to the White House, and where his nine children and his illustrious grandson, Benjamin Harrison, were born. At the time the house was built Harrison was governor of the Northwestern Territoy, and as the conqueror of Tecumseh was a national hero. Those were exciting days, times of great personal danger, and no conveniences, and the Harrison mansion, simple as it was, was regarded then as aristocratic and stately. The hospitality of its halls was famous. Not a day passed that it did not afford entertainment for many guests. It is said that on occasions no less than sixty guests sat down together at the long mahogany tables in the great sun-lit dining hall. It is said that the bride was not content unless her cook served three kinds of meat on the festive board at times when cattle were scarce, when settlements were hundreds of miles apart. But wild duck and the fish in the rivers were plentiful, and no group of strangers or guests ever passed the gate in their day's journey who were not begged to remain and share the prodigal generosity of their host and hostess. In those days the estate, now sadly dwindled to seven acres, was composed of 600 acres. From Gen. Harrison the estate passed to his son, John Scott Harrison, a gentle, amiable man, with no financial ability. He lived there until his death in 1878, his property gradually diminishing until at his death he was actually a dependent. Benjamin Harrison was born there and it was his home until his marriage, when he moved to Indianapolis. For years the old house has been vacant. The gardens have been overrun with wild, insolent weeds, the fields deserted, the great rooms and halls lonely and dead. Not even the ghost of former laughter and hospitality has echoed for years along its spiral staircases. The spider, pitiful tenant, has swung his tent ropes from rafter to rafter. The lofty heads of the old oaks sigh among their lofty crests at the saddened picture.

PLEDGES BROKEN

Sultan of Turkey Arouses Uncle Sam's Ire.

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS MOST CRITICAL

Passports to Minister May Soon be Tendered—Repeated Failure to Pay Awarded Indemnity Claims After Giving Solemn Promise.

There is no longer any question that the diplomatic relations between the United States and Turkey are in a critical state, growing out of the sultan's bad faith, says a Washington special of Wednesday. He promised to pay the indemnity claims of the American missionaries for the destruction of eight buildings of the Euphrates colleges at Harpoot, and several buildings belonging to the American missionaries at Marash during the Armenian massacres of 1895. Mr. Straus, the United States minister to Turkey, is at present in the United States on leave of absence. As has already been announced he presented his resignation, but the president regarded the services of Mr. Straus as indispensable, definitely extended his leave, subject to the call of the secretary of state, whenever circumstances may necessitate his return.

Diplomacy appears to have exhausted itself at Constantinople, the sultan having promised to pay the indemnity claims, amounting to some $90,000, which promise was again renewed prior to Mr. Straus' departure and although sixteen months have elapsed since the promise was first made, that promise still remains unfulfilled. What action the government will now take to enforce the sultan's promise is not definitely known, but as the situation is critical, it may result in Secretary Hay sending the Turkish minister at Washington his passports. The question involved between the two countries is no longer one resting upon disputed points of international law, but upon the sultan's broken faith.

NOT AS BAD AS PICTURED

No Deaths Result From the Kansas Twister.

The rain and wind storm in western Kansas appears to have passed off without having accomplished any serious damage. Storms were reported from several localities, but so far as can be learned, the damage was confined to the turning over of half a dozen small buildings. Putnam three buildings were destroyed and a few cattle killed, and at Burton two buildings were blown down. The telephone wires were broken north of Sedgwick City west to Hutchinson and telegraph offices being closed, it was impossible to get word from the storm direct. This led to wild rumors of loss of life and heavy destruction of property.

HAS HIS ARM BLOWN OFF

Distressing Accident to a Fighter at Santiago.

A. R. Root, who is the traveling representative of the Modern Brotherhood of America, had his arm blown off by a shotgun at Stanton. He was with some friends at H. N. Way's livery barn preparing to go hunting. Stepping out of the office they left him alone trying to remove the shells from his gun. A report was heard and on returning they found him with his hand hanging to his left arm by a shred of flesh, the bone having been blown away by the charge of shot. Root enlisted at the opening of the Spanish war in the regular army and served in an infantry regiment and participated in the Santiago campaign.

Andrews Good as Accepts.

Dr. E. Benjamin Andrews will accept the proffered chancellorship of the university of Nebraska unless conditions which have not entered into his consideration present themselves. He stated Tuesday night that he was favorable to the acceptance of the position, but had not notified the regents of the university of his decision, preferring not to consider it final yet. Dr. Andrews said his attitude was forced by the state of his health.

Miller Found Guilty.

William F. Miller of Franklin syndicate fame was found guilty in the county court of Kings county, N. Y., of grand larceny in the first degree for taking from Mrs. Katherine Moeser $1,000 which she invested in his 520 per cent scheme "to get rich quick." The prisoner was remanded for sentence a week from next Friday. His counsel stated that the case would be appealed.

Death in a Tenement House

A large tenement house occupied by Italian and negro families near Rockpoint, Pa., was destroyed by fire and four men burned to death. Many occupants escaped by jumping from the windows. The cause of the fire is not known.

EARLY HEARING IS URGED

Kentucky Contest Cases Docketed in the Supreme Court.

The cases involving the Kentucky governorship have been docketed in the United States supreme court. A brief statement in which counsel for both Taylor and Beckham joined was filed at the same time, asking for an early hearing. In this agreed statement it is set forth that "both Taylor and Beckham as governor, John Marshall as lieutenant-governor on the republican side, and J. H. Carter as president pro tem of the senate and John B. Castleman as adjutant general on the democratic side are each and all claiming the right to and are actually attempting to exercise the powers of the respective offices severally claimed by them, thus producing great confusion in Kentucky, by reason of the doubts as to which of the persons named has the lawful right to exercise the authority pertaining to the several officers named, all to the great injury and detriment of the people of the state.

"By reason of these fact and others which might be enumerated, it is of the utmost importance to the people of the state of Kentucky that the question of right to office involved in the aforesaid litigation be determined. The question of law involved in said causes are of very great and grave interest and importance, involving the nature and extent of the powers of an election contest tribunal and the powers of the judiciary with relation thereto."

REGARDS IT AS AN INSULT

Spanish Minister Replies to the Dewey Committee.

Mayor Harrison of Chicago received from Duke D'Arcos, the Spanish minister at Washington, the following reply to an invitation to attend the Dewey celebration in Chicago:

"Washington, D. C., April 14.—Sir: I return to you here inclosed an invitation from the city of Chicago, for the celebration of the second anniversary of the battle of Manila, which, I take it for granted has been sent to me by mistake, for it is the first discourtesy I have met with since I am in the United States.

"It is impossible for me to believe that you have advisedly asked me, the representative of Spain, to go to your city and rejoice with you on the destruction of the Spanish ships and on the death of so many brave sailors, my countrymen. That would have been simply an insult; and as I do not deserve it, and it cannot have been your intension. I am perfectly sure as I say, that all this is the result of an error.

"I have the honor to remain, sir, very respectfully yours, ARCOS."

In reply Mayor Harrison has written the minister, explaining that the invitation was sent through the carelessness or ignorance of a clerk, and extending sincere apologies for the unintentional discourtesy.

APOLOGIZES FOR MAYOR.

Minister Storer Explains the Chicago Oversight.

The United States minister, Bellamy Storer, visited Premier Silvela at Madrid and apologized for the action of Mayor Harrison of Chicago, in sending an invitation to the Duke d'Arcos, the Spanish minister at Washington, to attend the Dewey day celebration there.

Mr. Storer said his government regretted the incident, which was the result of an error committed by a municipal clerk, and promised it would not be repeated.

Handsome Easter Gift.

Easter gifts aggregating $30,000, donated for the work of church extension, were announced at York, Pa., by General Secretary H. H. Weber of the board of church extension of the general synod of the Evangelical Lutheran church in America. These gifts are in the shape of general loan funds, just founded, and are to be used exclusively in the territory west of the Mississippi river.

Burned Fatally.

Mrs. Dan Huff, who lives on South Sixth street, Beatrice, Neb., near the river bridge, was fatally burned by the explosion of coal oil. Her daughter had risen before the rest of the family and had started a fire in the kitchen stove. Mrs. Huff did not know there was fire in the stove and poured oil therein to start up a fire. The explosion followed.

Republican Senatorial Convention.

The republican senatorial convention of the First District, is hereby called to be held in the opera house in Table Rock on the 24th day of May, 1900, at 1 o'clock, p. m., for the purpose of selecting a candidate for State Senator and said First District, and for the transaction of such other business which may properly come before said convention. The basis of representation at said convention is apportioned between the two counties as follows:

One delegate for each one hundred votes or major fraction thereof cast for Judge Reese for Supreme Judge at the last state election. Under this apportionment Richardson county would be entitled to 27 delegates and Pawnee county 15.

The United States senate has decided the seat occupied by Quay to be vacant.

The democratic State convention will be held at Lincoln on July 11th, after the National convention.

The Ohio republicans held their state convention Wednesday, nominated a state ticket, selected delegates to the national convention and shouted for McKinley and Mark Hanna.

Senator Daniel of Virginia, when asked the other day if the Kansas City convention would reiterate the platform of 1896, said: "I hope the democratic party will have the courage to make a platform at Kansas City for the year 1900."

County Treasurer Strunk reports that tax receipts for the past week have been exceedingly heavy. Farmers spot down the hard cash, and no matter what the assessment, by annual reply, "That's all right; we can pay when we have the money, unless we can't kick these good times."—Republican.

The only serious charge that can be brought against G. M. Lambertson is that he is a lawyer. Of course this will handicap him at the beginning of the campaign should he be nominated, but when people appreciate the fact that a man can be a lawyer and still be an ornament to society, they will support Mr. Lambertson with enthusiasm.—Walt Mason.

The United States is now the world's greatest producer and exporter of meats, which forms one of the most important features of our export trade. In 1887 the total exportation of provisions and live animals was $104,771,940, and in 1899 their total was $207,105,637, having thus doubled meantime, and forming in 1899 17.2 per cent of the total exports of that year. And all this under a protective tariff.

Mrs. W. J. Bryan returned yesterday from Texas, accompanied by her children. Mr. Bryan will return this morning and will probably remain several days. Mrs. Bryan said there was no truth in the report of their intended removal to Texas. She said they went to Texas for the benefit of the health of their daughter Grace. She also denied the report sent out from Washington about the serious condition of Mr. Bryan's health. She said he was in good health and spirits.—State Journal.

The republican state convention to be held at Lincoln next Wednesday afternoon, promises a warm contest, the central fight being between Rosewater and Thurston, for delegate to the national convention, involving the membership of the national committee. There are numerous candidates for state offices, and a strong effort will be made to nominate G. M. Lambertson for governor, and the Argus hopes it will succeed; for the talented gentleman would make an ideal candidate and an honest, capable governor.

Last Tuesday a tramp appeared in town and went to a number of houses for a hand out. At some places his actions frightened the ladies. After dinner he succeeded in getting on a good spree, and about three o'clock the marshal gathered him in and placed in the city jail to sober up. At about half past six Marshal Rohrweg went to the jail, intending to take the fellow to a restaurant, and give him his supper and turn him loose. On entering the jail he spied red smoke, and when the cell door was opened, out burst a cloud of smoke. Upon investigation it was found the fellow had set the mattress of the cell on fire and the smoke had smothered him. He was found dead on the cell floor, the mattress all burned up, and the frame still smoking. A dorter was lost, Saturnach, but the was extinct.—Auburn Post.

London, April 26.—The British troops have relieved Dalgetty's forces at Wepener, but the Boers, who invested the town have fled northward, and undoubtedly escaped. Thus Lord Roberts, while succeeding in the main object of his latest move, of relieving Dalgetty and of clearing the southeastern Free State of the enemy, has failed in what to England was almost as important, the cutting off of the Boers' war of retreat. The semi-circle of British troops near Wepener all but inclosed in the Boers. The only open gap was in the north on the road to Ladybrand. Yesterday Lord Roberts tried hard to close this gap, by hurrying General French and the cavalry in that direction. The Boers saw the move, however, and were too quick for the cavalry. Early yesterday morning the British found that the enemy had eluded them and had taken the northern road towards Ladybrand.

"What was the next station?"

"You mean what is the next station."

"No. What was is, isn't it?"

"That doesn't make any difference. Is is was, but was is but, necessarily is."

"Look here what was is, what is is. Is was is or is is wa."

"Nonsense. Was may be is, but is is not was. Is was was, but if was was is, then is isn't is or was wasn't was. If was is was is was, isn't it? But if is is was then—"

"Listen. It is,—was was,—and is was and was is; therefore is was is and was is was, and if was was is, is is is, and was was was and is is was."

"Shut up, will you? I've gone by my station already!"—Life.

The Best in the World.

We believe Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the best in the world. A few weeks ago we suffered with a severe cold and a troublesome cough, and having read their advertisements in our own and other papers we purchased a bottle to see if it would effect us. It cured us before the bottle was more than half used. It is the best medicine out for colds and coughs.—The Herald, Andersonville, Ind. For sale by S. G. Wright.

No girl can afford, either for own present happiness or for the comfort of mind of him whom she marries, to wed a young man during the formative period of his life, which is between twenty and twenty-five. And she who withholds from a young man her consent to marriage until he has reached the first year of the beginning of wisdom is a mighty sensible little body and acts in a manner which she will never have cause to regret as long as God gives her and her husband life.—Edward Bok, in the May Ladies' Home Journal.

Spreads Like Wildfire.

When things are "the best" they become "the best selling." Abraham Hare, a leading druggist, of Bellville, O., writes: "Electric Bitters are the best selling bitters I have handled in 20 years. You know why? Most diseases begin in disorder of the stomach, liver, kidneys, bowels, blood and nerves. Electric Bitters tones up the stomach, regulates liver, kidneys and bowels, purifies the blood, strengthens the nerves, hence cures multitudes of maladies, builds up the entire system. Puts new life and vigor into any weak, sickly, rundown man or woman. Price 50 cents. Sold by S. G. Wright Druggist.

On Monday evening the Christian Endeavor society met at the Parsonage to bid her good bye, and as a token of the high esteem in which she is held by them, they presented her with a fine gold ring and a silk umbrella.

The report of an explosion a little after 8 o'clock on Monday evening, caused some uneasiness in the minds of a number of our citizens for a few minutes, and set adrift innumerable conjectures as to its origin. One man frantically inquired of Sam Wright if it was true that the gas plant at Pawnee City had blown up; another wild report was that two engines had come together with such force that the report could be heard in the auditorium at Lincoln; Wes Kerns asserted that it was only a pop ordor for trying to convince himself that General Prosperity had failed to show up in Nebraska, while Andy Lane asserted it was only the fizzle-out of Lin Fulton's congressional boom. Bill Taylor says it was the after-clap of the municipal election; Charley Norris had an idea that Gen. Peary had come in contact with the north pole. Jim Murphy says it was the echo of the centrifugal force of Fred Hassler breezily chasing "U" in an effort to everlastingly get a non-elusive grip on the emoluments of the only official conveyancer of fusionistic doctrines in Pawnee county. Judge Marble intimated that whatever it was he'd soon have it before the court for he placed a warrant in the hands of Constable Ward for its arrest. A special from Wymore in today's State Journal says: The tornado which passed through this county east of here Tuesday afternoon seems to have done more damage than was at first reported. At the home of H. Barrens, four and a half miles south and one mile east of here, his large barn was carried from its foundation and completely demolished. The harnesses which were in the barn were later found half a mile north, but the horses were not injured. A stalkcutter which stood near the barn had one wheel taken off clean. On the farm north of Barrens' the storm swept through a field of wheat and a strip thirty feet wide across the entire field was left without a spear of wheat in sight. On the farm of William Fye, eighty rods of fence was carried away. Reports are still coming in from the storm-swept section which indicate that much damage was done.

A young lady friend of the Argus heard a new story on the train the other day which she relates with much amusement. It was not intended for her ears, but she appreciates it just the same. He was accommodated by the gentlemanly ticket agent, and took his seat in the car; and the sensation of seeing the barns and fences, and the telegraph poles running races with each other and the train, elicited such remarks from him as "By Hookey!" "See Whiz!" "By Gosh!!!" etc., and caused a ministerial gentleman on the seat behind him to say: "My young man, you're on the road to hell!" Full to the brim of the influence of his first ride on a train, he replied, "I don't care a gosh darn, I've got a return ticket."

The Table Rock friends of L. S. Fellers were shocked to hear of his death, which occurred at his home in Peru last Friday afternoon after a short illness. The remains were brought to Table Rock on Saturday afternoon, accompanied by J. C. Mardis, E. G. Conklin, O. H. Sears and J. W. McAdams, members of the Peru A. O. U. W. lodge, of which Mr. Fellers was a member. The funeral services were held at the Presbyterian church at 11 o'clock, Rev. W. H. Parker preaching the sermon, and the A. O. U. W. lodges of Table Rock, Humboldt, Pawnee City, and Peru, attending in a body and conducting the services at the grave, Hon. E. A. Tucker, of Humboldt, acting as Master Workman. Lewellen Fellers was born August 12, 1863, on the homestead near Table Rock and spent his boyhood and young manhood there; about the age of 22 he was married to Miss Anna Belle Hansen; to this union three children were born—Nelle, Elsie and Victor, Elsie dying in infancy. For five years after marriage they lived on the old home farm, and in 1891 moved into town where he engaged in business; he was an esteemed citizen, a loyal Christian worker and united with the Presbyterian church in 1883. Ten months ago he moved to Peru and engaged in the harness business. He leaves a wife, two young children, two brothers, and two sisters. He died in the faith of his father—face toward Zion, among his last words being: "Heaven is nearer; it is well," and looking up he said "O, come quick," as if angelic forms hovered near. To the afflicted ones the sympathy of the entire community is extended.

CARD OF THANKS.

I desire to extend my thanks to the members of the A. O. U. W. lodge, and other friends for the many kindnesses extended to us during the affliction through which we have passed. MRS. L. S. FELLERS.

ANDREWS ACCEPTS

Decides in Favor of U. of N. Chancellorship.

NOTIFIES CHICAGO SCHOOL TRUSTEES

Informs Them That He Will Not be a Candidate for Re-Election and Asks Leave of Absence—Will Come to Lincoln in September.

A special from Chicago says: Dr. E. Benjamin Andrews has accepted the chancellorship of the university of Nebraska. He has not resigned his position as superintendent of the public schools, but will withdraw from active participation in the position May 1, under leave of absence. He notified the board of education that he would not be a candidate for re-election.

Dr. Andrews asked for a leave of absence extending to the close of his term, without salary. The members of the board of education voted him the leave with salary. His letter was laid before the body at the opening of the session. It read as follows:

"I have been elected chancellor of the university of Nebraska, and meaning to assume said duties after the close of my present term of service with the board, I hereby respectfully notify you that I am not and shall not be a candidate for re-election as superintendent of schools. Furthermore, the condition of my health and eyesight constrains me to request a leave of absence, without salary, for the entire months of May and June, if possible, and if this is too much, for such and as large parts of these months as possible."

Trustee Brenan moved the granting of the leave of absence with salary and the appointment of a committee to prepare suitable resolutions on the dissolving of the relations. The motion was carried unanimously and without debate.

"There is nothing to say about the matter," said Dr. Andrews. "I have accepted a position that I consider more congenial to my tastes. As to my work in Chicago, I do not care to go into any elaboration. I have nothing personally against the members of the board or the city authorities. Some criticisms of mine on this line have perverted into criticism of persons. This is unjust and unwarranted. The worst defect in our school administration is rooted in the faults of the municipal system and not in personal faults. This rickety articulation between the school system and the general municipal scheme often has been pointed out and is deplored generally.

"I am going to take a rest during my leave of absence. I shall begin my work in Nebraska about September. I shall spend the summer either in Europe or on some New England farm."

UNIVERSITY CLUB BANQUET

Acting-Chancellor C. E. Bessey will be present, and talk on "The University of Nebraska—Its Past and Its Future."

A PECULIARLY SAD DEATH

Mrs. C. C. Pool Succumbs to Pneumonia Husband Absent.

Mrs. C. C. Pool died at her home in Lincoln. She had been ill only one week and her death came under peculiarly sad circumstances. Her husband is deputy state auditor. He left home last week to go to Sacramento, Cal., hoping to relieve a pulmonary complaint. He was very weak when he left Lincoln, but stood the trip as well as could have been expected. After he had gone his wife became ill with pneumonia. Her illness was kept from her husband, but on Monday she became better and for the first time her husband was apprised of her condition. Tuesday she grew worse rapidly and died of heart failure. She was thirty-three years old, and leaves six children, the eldest being fourteen years old, and the youngest only eight months old. As Mr. Pool is considered to be in a very feeble condition his friends have believed that his return home is not advisable.

MONEY TO FOUND COLLEGE

Mrs. Eliza Chrisman of Kansas Leaves Quarter Million.

A special from Topeka, Kan., says the will of Mrs. Eliza Chrisman, who died in Topeka recently, has been filed in the probate court. It bequeaths the greater part of a fortune estimated at $250,000 for the founding of the university of Topeka.

The bequest is contingent on the Methodist churches of Kansas raising an equal amount within ten years. Mrs. Chrisman also leaves $35,000 cash to the Ohio Wesleyan university, $5,000 for a new parsonage for the First Methodist church of Topeka and $3,000 to the woman's missionary society. The will provides that Rev. A. S. Embree, her former pastor, shall be administrator of the estate at a salary of $5,000 per year.

NOT SUBJECT TO SERVICE

Discharged Soldiers Object to Doing Work on Ship.

The transport Tartar, which has just been released from quarantine at San Francisco, is to be turned over to its owners by the government. When the Tartar was a few days out from Manila the thirty-seven discharged soldiers who were being brought home, were given various tasks to do by Quartermaster Captain Davis, but the soldiers rebelled, and claimed that, having been discharged, they were traveling as ordinary citizens. On the vessel's arrival here the matter was submitted to General Shafter, who has decided that the men were in no way amenable to the army regulations and should be released when the vessel left quarantine.

MAY HAVE SERIOUS RESULT

Turkish Porte Insists on Higher Tariff Duties—Powers Object.

The porte has, according to a Constantinople dispatch, replied to the third of the collective notes of the powers on the subject of an increase of 3 per cent in duty. The reply announces that it is the intention of the government to adhere to the plan of increasing the duties on account of the bad condition of Turkish finances.

The ambassadors have decided to issue another note to the porte, again stating the objections to such an increase without a previous understanding with the powers.

The tenacity of the porte threatens to have serious results.

PITTSBURG PETITIONS

Smoky City Claims Right to Christen a Cruiser.

At a meeting of the Pittsburg, Pa., chamber of commerce a resolution was adopted petitioning Hon. John D. Long, secretary of the navy, to give the name of "Pittsburg" to one of the new armored cruisers of war to be constructed for the United States navy. The reasons given for granting the honor are that Pittsburg is the heart of the greatest iron and steel producing interests in the world, has a population of 1,608,964 within a radius of sixty miles, according to the census of 1890, and has a total ascertained tonnage by water and rail of nearly 59,000,000 ton—larger than any other city in the world.

Veterans to Take Land.

Veterans of the civil war from Illinois and Indiana met in Terre Haute, Ind., and in a party left for Taney county, Mo., where they will register and investigate the lands recently secured by reason of the government grant to veterans of the war. Forty veterans were in the party, and if the land shows traces of mineral wealth a company will be formed for their development.

Dividend From Broken Bank.

Depositors of the defunct Commercial bank at Rising City, Neb., which failed several years ago, were agreeably surprised recently by the receipt of an 8 per cent dividend. This is the first dividend paid to depositors since the failure of the bank, and it is understood that it is to be the last.

THE CUBAN CENSUS

NATIVE WHITES ARE IN THE MAJORITY

Findings are Agreeable Surprise—Illiteracy Among Natives Not so Pronounced as Supposed—Qualified Native Voters Fully 140,000.

"Census returns and electoral law will be published late this afternoon. Election June 16."

The compilation of the Cuban census returns, which was made in Washington under the personal direction of General Sauger, have been made public.

The figures are very instructive, and in the opinion of the war department officials, fully justify the decision to allow municipal suffrage in Cuba at this early stage. The officials are gratified to find that the native Cubans constitute so large a portion of the population; that the whites so greatly outnumber the blacks, and that so large a proportion of the native population can read and write. In their opinion there seems to be no room for the objection that the proposed basis of suffrage would result in turning the island over to the control of Spain.

The total population of Cuba is 1,572,797, including 815,205 males and 757,592 females. There are 447,376 white males and 462,926 white females of native birth. The foreigners number 115,760 males and 26,458 females. There are 111,898 male negroes and 122,740 female negroes. The mixed races number 125,500 males and 145,305 females. There are 14,694 male and 163 female Chinese. The population of Havana City is 235,981, and of the province of Havana 424,804. The population of the province of Matanzas is 202,444 of Pinar del Rio, 173,064, of Puerto Principe 88,234, of Santa Clara, 356,536, and of Santiago, 327,715.

Of the total population of the island, 1,108,709 persons are set down as single 246,321 as married, while 131,767 live together by mutual consent. There are 85,112 widowed persons.

Of the total population, according to citizenship, 20,478 are Spanish, 1,292,367 are Cubans, 175,811 are in suspense, 79,536 are of other citizenship, and 616 are unknown. The Spanish by birth number 120,240. Of the children ten years of age and over, 49,414 have attended school. Of the total population 443,426 can read and write; and 19,158 have a superior education.

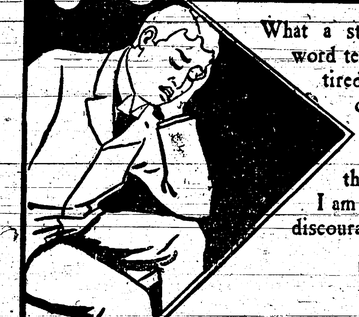
FAGGED



What a story of suffering that one word tells. It says: "I am all tired out. It seems to me I can hardly take another step. I haven't a particle of ambition. I can't do half the work I feel I must do. I am weak, nervous, depressed, discouraged."

That's Impure Blood

Now you know what the trouble is, you certainly know the cure, a perfect Sarsaparilla. "Sarsaparilla" is simply the name of the medicine, for in a perfect Sarsaparilla there are a great many remedies. Some act by taking out the bad; others, by putting in the good.

You want a Sarsaparilla that will make your blood pure this spring, a Sarsaparilla that will make it rich and strong, a Sarsaparilla that is a powerful nerve tonic. You want the strongest and best Sarsaparilla that can be made.

That's AYER'S

"The only Sarsaparilla made under the personal supervision of three graduates: a graduate in pharmacy, a graduate in chemistry, and a graduate in medicine."

"Last July my oldest daughter was taken sick, and I was on my feet, it seemed to me, night and day for weeks taking care of her. I had no other help than that which my husband gave me, and by the time daughter began to mend I was down sick myself. I was discouraged, and did not care much whether I lived or died. My husband got me a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and its effects were magical. Two bottles of this medicine put me on my feet and made a well woman of me."—JANE M. BROWN, Bentonsport, Iowa, Jan. 19, 1900.

Bloodhounds were used and he was captured and brought to jail. Shortly after midnight masked men stormed the jail and secured the negro, who confessed. A rope was placed around his neck and he was dragged 200 yards toward the woods. Bullet after bullet was fired into Peters' body while he was being dragged and before the woods were reached he was dead. The body was then hanged to a tree.

Joseph Werner.

Read at the funeral of Joseph Werner by J. B. Pepoon: Joseph Werner was born in Bohemia in 1841. He came to America in 1866, and to Nebraska in 1897. I got acquainted with Mr. Werner soon after he took his homestead, this place here where he has lived continually ever since. He was a plain, unmarried but was united in marriage to Matilda Novak in 1876. To them have been born five children, Frank, Mary, Emma, Anna and Matilda all of them are living. It is impossible for the younger people of this country to imagine how this country looked when the settlers first came here. On all the uplands of the country there was not a house or shed of any kind in sight, nor a tree or hedge or fence or even a corn stalk to be seen, and when I came not even prairie grass as the old grass had been burned and the new grass had not yet started. Nothing but the bare ground and a very dreary and desolate looking country it was indeed. In the vicinity lived Mr. Poole and his family, Mr. Thomas and James Robison, Mr. Armstrong, Mr. McMahon and Mr. Allen and their families. The Kovandas, Mr. Werner, Mr. Shaw, Mr. Boone, Mr. Eberman and myself were among the first settlers in the neighborhood. When Mr. Werner first went to work on his place for a few years he used oxen instead of horses to do his work with. I mention this to show you that some of Nebraska's pioneers commenced with almost nothing and worked up to comfortable competence during their lives.

Of the man, Joseph Werner, whom we have come here to honor and to pay our last respects I shall have very little to say. You all know him, have known him for years, and you all know that he has been an upright citizen, a loving husband and father, a kind neighbor and an honest man. This is eulogy enough. I expect in a few years to be lying in my coffin as Mr. Werner is lying here today, and when my friends and neighbors go to pay their last respects to my memory, if they will think as well of me as we all think of Mr. Werner today then I will be content. That would be all the praise and honor I could wish or hope for. Burns the Scottish poet says,—

"To make a pleasant fireside clime
For weanst and wife.
That's the true pathos and sublime
Of human life."

Mr. Werner has left a widow and children.

That is what this man Joseph Werner did; and that is why we today honor and respect his memory. And I would say to his wife and children that in the circle of all our wide acquaintance we do not know of any man who is held higher in the true regard of his fellowmen, of his friends and neighbors, than is Joseph Werner. Loving husband and father—kind neighbor—honest man—goodbye.

Card of Thanks

We desire to express our sincere thanks to our friends and neighbors for the kindness expressed in having deeds and comforting words, extended us during the illness, death and burial of our beloved husband and father.

Spreads Like Wildfire.

When things are "the best" they become "the best selling." Abraham Hare, a leading druggist, of Bellville, O., writes: "Electric Bitters are the best selling bitters I have handled in 20 years. You know why? Most diseases begin in disorder of the stomach, liver, kidneys, bowels, blood and nerves. Electric Bitters tones up the stomach, regulates liver, kidneys and bowels, purifies the blood, strengthens the nerves, hence cures multitudes of maladies, it builds up the entire system. Puts new life and vigor into any weak, sickly, rundown man or woman. Price 50 cents. Sold by S. G. Wright Druggist.

When Mrs. Rebecca Mitchell gave her talk to children in the Presbyterian church she gave them each a pair of prohibition gloves and to help them remember and wear them I have written this little rhyme:

Prohibition Gloves for Helping Hands

We'll wear prohibition gloves on every helping hand
Week days, as well as Sunday,
For truth and right, we ever will stand,
And have no sad blue Monday.
We will not fight, nor steal, nor cheat;
Nor have we sorrow at all;
For well we know, these things will grow,
Though at first they seem quite small, sir.
Intoxicating liquors we never will drink,
No gum, or tobacco, smoke, or chew.
For eyes, ears, and stomachs, are worth more than these we think,
And to ourselves we ever would be true
Our Heavenly Father, God, we love,
For all His blessings given
Our neighbors as ourselves, for this the golden rule.
Their lives will surely leaven
Our parents well obey, for this is God's command,
And thus his promise gaining,
Our days be lengthened in the land,
With peace, and plenty reigning.
Prohibition gloves we'll wear on every helping hand.
Week days as well as Sunday,
For truth and right, we ever will stand,
And have no sad, blue Monday.

National Suffrage Bazaar.

The National American Woman Suffrage Association is making preparations for a grand suffrage bazaar, to be held in Madison Square Garden, New York, opening Monday December 3rd and continuing throughout the week. Some kind of an entertainment will be provided each evening, but it is expected that the chief attraction will be the sales. It is the intention to have a great variety of articles and in quantities to supply all kinds of purchasers for the whole six days. The object is to secure a large fund for doing National work and it is desired that the suffragists in all States in the Union shall contribute their ingenuity and talent to this common effort and when the receipts have been secured every State, through its representative in the National Convention, shall have a vote as to how the money shall be expended. Madison Square Garden is one of the best known buildings in New York City. The famous Horse Fair has been held there for a number of years. No building in the United States could be better adapted to the use of a bazaar. Every conceivable kind of useful and ornamental article from potatoes up a dish-rag to beautiful works of art will be gladly received. In fact, the management announces that if there is anything from a silk dress to a house and lot which any one is willing to contribute, or anyone wishes to purchase, to let them know. For further particulars address Rachel Foster Avery, 1483 N. 52nd St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Remarkable Cure for Rheumatism.

Kenna, Jackson Co., W. The Expense of Voting.

In almost every legislature in which a woman suffrage bill is pending, some economical law-maker will object to the measure on the ground that it will increase the expense to the State.

Of all unjust objections to the enfranchisment of women, this is the most undemocratic. It might be urged with equal consistency against the enfranchisement of young men at the age of twenty-one, and of the foreigners who take homes in this country and become citizens.

Indeed it might with the same justice be urged against any republican form of government, for a vast amount of money which passes through legitimate channels in every election might be saved, and another vast sum, which serves as a corruption fund might never be expended, if we were ruled by a monarch.

If it is expensive to allow women to express their opinions in government, it is equally expensive to allow men to do the same.

But it is the theory of a democratic republic that the voice of the whole people should be heard in the affairs of the nation, and that the money honestly spent in registering the will of the citizen at the ballot box is one of the necessary and righteous expenditures of the commonwealth; and the refusal of a legislator to vote for woman suffrage on the pretext of the expense of it, when women are paying their full share of the taxes, is either the densest ignorance of our theory of government, or a cowardly excuse to cover some ignominious reason.

THE MARGIN CLOSE

THE SENATORS STICK TO PRECEDENT.

The Final Vote 33 to 32—Lifelong Intimates Aid in Turning Him Down.

—Politics Play No Part—Strong Arguments Made.

Hon. M. S. Quay was Tuesday refused a seat in the United States senate on the appointment of the governor of Pennsylvania on a vote of 33 to 32. The entire time of the senate was devoted to debate upon the question, many of the greatest lawyers and orators in the body delivering speeches.

On the floor of the senate was every member of the body now in the city and scores of members of the house of representatives. The great throng listened with deep attention to the brilliant argument of Mr. Spooner in favor of the seating of the former Pennsylvania senator and to the dramatic and fiery eloquence of Mr. Daniels (Va.), who appealed to his colleagues to do what, on his oath as a senator, he deemed right and vote to do justice to him who was knocking at the senate doors.

Senators throughout the chamber eagerly followed the roll call, for all knew the vote would be close. The first sensation was caused by the failure of Mr. Pettigrew of South Dakota to answer to his name, although he was in his seat. When Mr. Vest's name was called he voted, "no" in a clear, distinct voice, thus dashing the last hope of the friends of Mr. Quay, who had expected confidently that the distinguished Missourian would vote for his long time personal friend. In perfect silence it was announced that the senate had denied to Mr. Quay the seat which he has sought for some months past.

MUST REDUCE RATE OF FARE

Supreme Court of Michigan Decides Against Railroads.

The Michigan supreme court in a suit against the Wabash railway by State Railroad Commissioner Osborne, decided that carrying baggage, express and mail is legally a part of the carrying power of passenger trains and that on the company's reports of earnings, made to the commissioner for the year 1898, it must reduce its passenger fares from 3 cents to 2½ cents per mile in Michigan. The sliding scale law which passed the legislature in 1891 provides that the compensation of railroads for transporting passengers, the earnings of whose passenger trains were over $2,000 and less than $3,000 per mile, should be 2½ cents per mile.

The company contended that the law covered passenger fares alone, and that the statute was void, being a state regulation of interstate commerce.

SUFFERS FIRE

Three Wilcox Business Buildings and Their Contents Burn.

W. H. Treasure's merchandise store, Harry Porter's restaurant and confectionery store and George Betz's drug store at Wilcox, Neb., were consumed by fire. The fire started in Betz's drug store and was soon communicated to the other buildings adjoining it.

Mr. Treasure's stock and building were worth about ten or eleven thousand dollars, with about $6,500 insurance. Harry Porter's loss was $1,000 with $700 insurance. The building was owned by Oscar Brown, worth about $700, with $400 insurance. Geo. Betz had a light insurance on his stock. The amount could not be learned. Oscar Brown also owned this building, which was worth about $600, with $300 insurance. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Maine Reaches Southampton.

The hospital ship Maine has arrived at Southampton, Eng., from South Africa. A small group of friends of those on board awaited her arrival and vigorously waved their hands and handkerchiefs as they recognized Lady Randolph Churchill on the deck of the steamer. Lady Randolph, who was in the best of health, wore a blue serge dress and straw sailor hat with a ribbon inscribed "A. H. S. Maine." (American hospital ship Maine.) Immediately after the vessel was moored the officers boarded the Maine and within an hour all the wounded men were removed in ambulances and placed on board a train bound for

TOUR OF AUTOMOBILES

One Started Through England and Scotland to Educate John Bull.

Eighty automobiles, carrying between 200 and 300 persons, started from Hyde Park corner, London, Monday, for a 1,000 mile tour of England and Scotland. Thousands of people assembled to witness the strange looking procession. The procession extended over eight blocks. A. J. Steele, a well known automobile enthusiast, said: "This tour is intended as an object lesson to Great Britain. We want our people to get out of their trance as far as the automobile proposition is concerned. America is ahead of us and the continent laughs at us. We want to redeem ourselves. The tour is in no sense a race. It is merely a parade for the education of the people and a demonstration of how successful automobiles may be for long distances on all sorts of roads."

MAY HAVE TO STEP IN

Events on Panama Isthmus that May Require Intervention.

The capture of Bocas Del Toro and threatened attack on Colon may compel forcible intervention by the government of the United States to preserve the "perfect neutrality" of the isthmus, guaranteed by the United States in the treaty of 1846.

A treaty exists between the United States and Colombia by which, in exchange for certain concessions made to the United States, this country guaranteed "positively and efficaciously" the "perfect neutrality of the isthmus of Panama," and also guaranteed the rights of sovereignty and property of the republic of Colombia in and over the territory of the isthmus as included within the borders of the department of Panama.

Bradley Asks an Appeal.

Ex-Governor W. O. Bradley, representing the republican minor state officials, Tuesday prayed an appeal to the court of appeals from the judgment of ouster rendered by Judge Cantrill last week. The appeal was prayed as in the case except that of Breckinridge against Pratt. Mr. Pratt, the republican contestant for attorney general, did not ask for an appeal.

Flood Situation Bad.

The flood situation around Mobile, Ala., shows a more desperate condition and the loss is growing greater. The Louisville & Nashville railroad, which has heretofore been free from any damage and has been hauling the freight and passengers of the Illinois Central, Northwestern and Mobile & Ohio railroads for the past six days, is now a sufferer also.

IS CUT TO PIECES

BODY IS FOUND NEAR GRAND ISLAND

Was Tramping to Omaha, and Home is Supposed to Be in Minnesota—Believed He Was Stealing a Ride and Fell from Bumpers.

A man tramping his way across the state toward Omaha met with a horrible death at Grand Island. His name, it appears, was Henry McAnneny, and it is believed his home was in Minnesota, the address, "630 Winona street, Minn.," being found on his person. He was better dressed than the ordinary tramp and appears not to have been a genuine hobo. Wednesday he inquired whether an extra freight out of the city would be good for travel in his line and was told by a man whom he addressed that it probably would not be very swift to get outs. It believed he caught this train and seated himself on the bumper. The place where the body was found is just at the foot of a grade and it is believed that when the train pulled away from the slack in the cars it gave such a bump that he was thrown from the bumpers to the track.

The body was cut in two at the base of the spinal column, the legs being about a hundred yards away from the trunk. Blood and particles of flesh indicate that the lower portion of the body was dragged that distance when his feet became disentangled from what ever held them. The head and upper portion of the body were lying along the north side of the track two telegraph pole lengths west of the limbs, the latter lying in the middle of the track. The body was first seen by a farmer lad, who took stock to a pasture. A few minutes thereafter a freight train from the east came along and the remains were cared for.

REFUSES TO DIVIDE MONEY.

Young Man Arrested in Omaha Loaded Down With Gold.

E. W. Finnegan, a young man residing in Colfax county, Neb., was arrested at Omaha Wednesday afternoon shortly after the arrival in Omaha, and is being held at city jail on the charge of carrying concealed weapons, but back of this there is a serious quarrel in the Finnegan family. The young man recently became of age and received $7,500 as his share of an estate. After drawing the amount from the bank, he learned that a brother-in-law with whom he had been living was determined to collect $3,500 for his board. This proposition was not looked upon with favor by young Finnegan, and he left home between two days, and came to Omaha. When searched at the city jail $7,273 was found on his person, nearly all in gold.

SENT TO PRISON FOR LIFE.

Plea of Insanity for Iowa Murderer Ineffectual.

At Muscatine, Ia., dispatch dated April 25 says: The jury in the case of George Wright returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree and fixed his sentence for life in the penitentiary.

This was Wright's second trial. Last July Wright shot and killed Mrs. Nellie Crippen, the attractive young wife of his foreman, with whom he had maintained secret relations for some time. The crime was committed upon the eve of the departure of the woman and her husband for a new home in another state. Wright has a family. His attorneys pleaded insanity.

INDEMNITY FOR LYNCHING

Favorable Report on House Bill in Behalf of Foreigner.

The judiciary committee of the house has directed a favorable report on the bill providing means of indemnifying foreigners injured in person or property through mob violence or otherwise in this country.

The measure grows out of the lynching of Italians in Louisiana and the representations made by Italy through Baron Fava, the Italian ambassador. As affairs of this kind were of frequent occurrence, each time threatening diplomatic complications, the president recommended a general measure of redress and the bill now reported seeks to carry out this recommendation.

BOERS GET AWAY

Scamper to Safety When Danger Threatens.

PURSUIT IS LIKELY TO BE IN VAIN

A London, April 28 dispatch says: "Commandant General Louis Botha the Boers appear to have found a capable successor to Joubert. As the result of his insight and quick decision it may be assumed now that the retreating commandoes have gotten safely away with the transport. It is true that Lord Roberts' dispatch leaves much unsaid as to the whereabouts of other forces than those of General French and General Rundle.

Nothing is said about the troops of General Brabant, Hoto Carew, Hunt and Chermside, but the indications from Aliwal North show that several small commandoes are still hovering in the vicinity of Springfield, causing a certain amount of danger, and the advices from Dewet's dorp, outlining the duties of General Chermside, justify the conclusion that it will still be necessary to employ a considerable body of troops to keep the Free State clear of Boers.

The position is that the Boers began their raid a month ago by compelling Colonel Broadwood to retire on Bloemfontein, and then got safely away to the northward, practically without loss, but with the advantage of seven British guns, together with a hundred prisoner captured.

Meanwhile the advance to Pretoria has not begun. Small wonder is it that muffled complaints and criticisms are beginning to be heard here and there against Lord Roberts.

Urged to Take No Fort.

Resolutions calling on its 20,000 members and their families and friends to refrain from taking any part in the Dewey demonstration at Chicago, were adopted today by the board of business agents of the building material trades council. HULL, ONTARIO, BURNED.

Whole City Fire Swept and Damage to Property $20,000,000.

At Ottawa, Ont., April 27, dispatch says: Five square miles of territory burned over more than 2,500 dwellings, factories, mills, stores and other buildings destroyed, entailing a loss estimated to reach $20,000,000 and between 12,000 and 15,000 men, women and children homeless, is a summing up of the havoc wrought by the fire which has been raging at Hull and in Ottawa since it o'clock yesterday morning, and at midnight was practically under control.

Most of the lumber piles in Ottawa and Hull have disappeared and are now mere heaps of charred wood and ashes. Half a dozen churches and schools, a number of mills and the Hull waterworks, Hull court house and jail, postoffice, the convent, almost every business place and about 1,000 dwellings and shops in Hull have been destroyed. Indeed, practically nothing is left but a church and a few houses beyond it.

The fire at this time also sprang across the Ottawa river and caught the sheds in the rear of the Mackey Milling company on Victoria island, and in a few minutes the lumber piles on Victoria, Chaudiere islands, one of the power houses of the Ottawa Electric company, Victoria foundry and half the buildings on the two islands, were in flames.

In this city it was estimated that besides the mills, factories, etc., burned, 1,500 residences were destroyed. The loss is estimated at $15,000,000 and the insurance at $7,500,000.

North Bend Elevator Burned.

The Dowling & Purcell elevator east of the depot at North Bend, Neb., burned to the ground. A strong wind blowing from the south threatened the whole of the business district, but by desperate work the flames were confined to the elevator. The Cherney & Watson lumber yard, adjoining the elevator property, was badly scorched, but not a board was burned. There was a large quantity of grain in the building. The loss will be nearly six thousand, well insured.

Michigan Forest Fires.

Forest fires are burning between Nestoria and Saron, Wis., along the line of the South Shore railway, the most numerous being between Sidnaw and Lake Gogebic, where trains are rarely out of sight of the flames. The Elephant's Revenge.

An extraordinary incident occurred at the Jardin des Plantes. The elephant-house adjoins that in which the camels are located, and a young camel recently introduced had great attention lavished on him to the neglect of a big elephant, which had hitherto had most of the public favor in that quarter. The elephant grew more jealous day after day, and matters came to a climax when, failing to attract the attention of a dainty little maid, who was caressing his young rival, the elephant filled his trunk with water and deluged the offending damsel from head to foot.

About the Sahara Desert.

The Sahara is not a barren waste, as is popularly supposed. Not long ago there were 9,060,000 sheep, 2,000,000 goats, and 280,000 camels in the Algerian Sahara alone; and the oases furnish a million and a half of date-palms.

DAN. GROSVENOR SAYS:

"Peruna Is an Excellent Spring Catarrh Remedy—I am as Well as Ever."

Hon. Dan. A. Grosvenor, of the Famous Ohio Family.

Hon. Dan. A. Grosvenor, Deputy Auditor for the War Department, in a letter written from Washington, D. C., says:

"Allow me to express my gratitude to you for the benefit derived from one bottle of Peruna. One week has brought wonderful changes and I am now as well as ever. Besides being one of the very best spring tonics it is an excellent catarrh remedy." Very respectfully, Dan A. Grosvecor,

Hal P. Denton, Chief National Export Exposition, Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "I was completely run down from overwork and the responsibility natually connected with the exploitation of a great international exposition. My physician recommended an extended vacation. When life seemed almost a burden I began taking Peruna, and with the use of the fifth bottle I found myself in a normal condition. I have since enjoyed the best of health."

Almost everybody needs a tonic in the spring. Something to brace the nerves, invigorate the brain, and cleanse the blood. That Peruna will do this is beyond all question. Everyone who has tried it has had the same experience as Mrs. D. W. Timberlake, of Lynchburg, Va., who, in a recent letter, made use of the following words: "I always take a dose of Peruna after business hours, as it is a great thing for the nerves. There is no better spring tonic, and I have used about all of them."

ALABASTINE Is a durable and natural cement-base wall coating. In 5 lb. paper packages, made ready for use in white and fourteen beautiful tints by mixing with cold water. It is a cement that goes through a process of setting, hardens with age, and can be coated and recoated without washing off its old coats before renewing.

ALABASTINE Is entirely different from all the various kalsomines on the market, being durable and not stuck on the wall with glue. Alabastine cements should insist on having the goods in packages properly labeled. They should reject all imitations. There is nothing "just as good."

ALABASTINE

Prevents much sickness, particularly throat and lung difficulties, attributable to unsanitary coatings on walls. It has been recommended in a paper published by the Michigan State Board of Health on account of its sanitary features; which paper strongly condemned kalsomines. Alabastine can be used on either plastered walls, wood ceilings, brick or canvas, and any one can brush it on. It admits of radical changes from wall paper decorations, thus securing at reasonable expense the latest and best effects. Alabastine is manufactured by the Republican Senatorial Convention.

The republican senatorial convention of the First district of Nebraska will be held in the opera house in Tekamah on the 5th day of May, 1900, at 1 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of selecting a candidate for state Senator for said First District and for the transaction of any other business that may properly come before said convention. The basis of representation at said convention will be as follows:

One delegate for each one hundred votes or major fraction thereof cast for Judge Reese for Supreme Judge at the last State election. Under this apportionment Richardson county would be entitled to 22 delegates and Pawnee county 15.

W. H. Wilson, Committee for Pawnee.
E. A. Tucker,

The state republican convention was held at Lincoln on Wednesday afternoon, and was one of the largest in point of attendance ever held in the state. Interest centered in the contest between Rosewater and Thurston for delegate to the national convention. Some of the delegates were in favor of leaving both the gentlemen at home or sending both and the latter sentiment prevailed and they were both elected. The other delegates elected were McClay of Lincoln and Rehardt of Stanton county. The state ticket nominated is as follows:

Governor, C H Dietrick, of Adams.
Lieutenant governor, E P Savage of Custer.
Secretary of state, G W Marsh of Richardson.
Auditor, C Weston, of Sheridan.
Treasurer, W Steuffer of Cuming.
Attorney general, F N Prout, Chase.
Commissioner public lands and buildings, G D Polmer-Nuckolls.
Superintendent public instruction, W R Fowler of Washington.

Training the Wills of Children.

This paper was read at the Mother's Meeting held at Ida Norris' April 20th, by Miss Fannie Jennings.

The will is the person considered as manifesting that faculty of the mind which chooses, decides, resolves and carries them into effect. The will is born although it is in an almost dormant state in early life. It is an error to say or think the will "arises" from impressions in youth; a will can never be created in a child from external experience; it must be allowed to develope itself from the inborn germ of will then when the child reaches the stage at which the will rises to present itself as "master of ceremonies" or where the first outward indications that the child is beginning the master of his own activity, is the time for the parent to discover this will. Then comes the most difficult as well as the most important part of our subject, "Training the Wills of Children," the most difficult because of the exceedingly complicated character of every act of will; the most important because of the vast influences which are upon the child's moral or religious ideas. Not only is it true that a being is capable of will but it is true that the most wide y separated views touching human responsibility and destiny have grown out of ap arantly slight differences of opinion with regard to the nature and freedom of the will. Will is based upon and grows out of desire. It is born little by little from reflex, impulsive and instinctive movements as we see in the child as it rolls and kicks and throws its hands without purpose. These are involuntary; soon these acts become voluntary and it will clap its hands with a purpose and reach with some object in view. When the will has become so developed as to be termed desire or attention the child is at the stage to be trained. His attention is very easy to obtain but very hard to retain. This double fact in its nature renders him capable of education—a gradual process which must consist largely in the formation of right habits in him through imitation to which he is so excessively prone. By a judicious use of a child's susceptibility to imitation suggestions we may make of it almost what we please. This seems not far from the truth when we consider the child's wonderful susceptibility to passive impressions as the first to reproduce it in his own unfolding activity. To the child it is surely more difficult to keep himself from moving than to move considering the restlessness of the average child. This ability which they exhibit is to me one of the most certain signs of the presence of a will. A child of six months or even five will remain from reaching for an object that is beyond their reach, also a child will withdraw threatened with punishment for coming over the [illegible] ned crying is able to desist. The lesson I have spoken to particularly to you is that will training is practical and itself is indulged in until it has attained a healthy growth when the mother concludes that it is time some thing is to be done and by force of inflicting punishment the child is made to obey; but is the will child-god? Will is obedience? It is the yielding of one will to another. Children can't [illegible] to feel neither know why they should obey. Moral passion is an all important principle but it must be [illegible] in the [illegible] ; in the [illegible] ; in the [illegible] ; which does away with a very painful operation and attending danger, and is certainly to be desired rather than the old fashioned way of opening the eyeball and removing the lens, which then leaves it an imperfect organ, and only a small per cent of these cases are successful. A great deal has been said about this and the methods employed by Drs. Seymour and Cox have been questioned by doctors in the west. Having a large number of these patients whom we are successfully treating at the present time, some letters from them should certainly be appreciated as being genuine, as the parties can be seen at any time in their offices or at their homes. The first one used is indeed valuable as the improvement has been very rapid and the results obtained almost marvelous.

WHAT LINCOLN PEOPLE SAY:

CATARACT CURED BY ABSORPTION

Dear Doctors: When I came to you with my friend, Mr. Anderson, the shoe man, at 1238 O street, of this city, I was contemplating a trip to Chicago to have my eyes operated on. Knowing that I was totally blind in the right eye, and that my left eye was beginning to fail, I knew it would only be a short time until I would be totally blind. It gives me great pleasure to say that after four weeks' treatment, I can now count your fingers readily when held before my right eye, and my left eye is indeed very much improved. While the treatment is slightly painful, it is a thousand times better than having the eyeball opened, and I heartily indorse your method of restoring sight without an operation. Thanking you for what you have done for me, and feeling that continued treatment will entirely restore my sight, I am, yours very truly,

P. SKOLPBERG.

Another party who has greatly improved and gives the strongest possible endorsement, is Mr. James Newland of Beatrice, Neb.

DR. W. I. SEYMOUR, 1219 K street, Lincoln, Neb.

Dear Doctor: I had resigned myself to becoming totally blind before I could be operated on, as every specialist I had visited told me this was the only way to get relief. After three weeks of your successful treatment I feel positive that I shall regain my sight without an operation, as I am greatly improved and my blind eye is coming back to me surely and steadily. Thanking you from the bottom of my heart for your wonderful treatment, I am, yours very truly,

JAMES NEWLAND.

Mrs. T. H. Roton is the wife of the foreman in the "State Journal" press room and is known to thousands of people in this city, and this letter will enable those who have known of Mrs. Roton's trouble to learn the facts from her or her husband, if inclined to do so.

Dear Dr. Seymour: I am pleased to say that your treatment of my eyes with glasses has been indeed very satisfactory. I have had a great deal of trouble for years and have tried in vain to get relief, but until meeting you have never been successful. Allow me to thank you most heartily for your assistance, and I shall be pleased to recommend you to my friends. At times life has hardly seemed worth living with the terrible agony I have suffered with my eyes, and, in fact, there was nothing in life world I so longed for as relief from my suffering. My eyes have never looked badly and my friends could not understand why I should suffer so. I have employed the assistance of many eye specialists, but all have failed. I am now so much improved that I can read and write to a moderate degree, and your assurance that I shall be able to dispense with glasses wholly or in part, gives me the greatest of pleasure. I find that I can already go about without glasses, while I have been absolutely obliged to wear them heretofore, and even then have suffered greatly. My husband joins me in thanking you, as my general health has been much improved, and I feel so much better in spirit that we are a much happier family and we appreciate the help you have been to us. Yours very truly,

MRS. T. H. ROTON.

PTERYGIUM REMOVED WITHOUT THE KNIFE.

Pterygium are often pronounced even by physicians to be cataracts and when fully developed are even worse, as they are apt to cover the eye, and when removed leave it so badly scarred that perfect sight can seldom be obtained afterwards. In their incipiency, or early growth, the treatment heretofore has been to either ligate them, which consisted of tying thread around them and allowing them to come off, or cut them off with a pair of scissors. Dr. Seymour has been able to perfect many cures by the use of glasses alone, and the treatment of the following patients consisted purely of glasses and painless medical applications. The letters speak for themselves.

Dear Dr. Seymour: I have been treating with you now since January and feel that my eyes have been very much benefited. Both my daughter and myself, who are troubled with a scum growing over our eyes, which is pronounced by the doctors a pterygium, feel that your treatment is certainly wonderful, as we have improved so much, particularly my daughter, Mrs. Albee, who had her eyes operated upon recently by an eye surgeon, which only seemed to make them worse, besides causing her a great deal of suffering from the operation.

The growths have almost entirely disappeared, and there has not been the slightest pain in connection with the treatment. As for myself, my forehead and upper right side of my head was very sore, and painful when touched, but is entirely relieved, and as you know I am very grateful for the benefit you have been to me.

You have asked us for this reference, that others troubled in this way, who have the skepticism as to your relieving such growths without an operation, might come and ask us our experience. While we do not enjoy the publicity of our names being used in the paper, still we feel that if we can help others who have suffered as we have at the hands of incompetent, unskilled eye specialists, we will be only too glad to tell anyone who comes to us how firmly we believe in your superior methods. Thanking you for the great benefit you have been to me, and wishing you abundant success, I am, yours very truly,

MRS. SUSAN ERHART,
MRS. F. E. ALBEE,

Mrs. M. A. O'Riley well known to many Lincoln people, who formerly lived on South Eleventh street and suffered so severely by fire, speaks for the benefit of her many friends and acquaintances in this city.

LINCOLN, Neb., March 2, 1900.—Dr. W. I. Seymour, 1219 K st., City.

Dear Dr. Seymour: It is a great source of comfort and satisfaction to me to have regained my eye sight by the use of proper glasses. I did not realize until my attention was called to it that my eyes had failed me so in the past few years, but was fully aware that something serious was the matter with them as they gave me great pain. You have treated my eyes, and given me glasses that I can use beautifully at a long distance and also write and sew with the same lenses. I hope that friends and acquaintances who are having trouble with their eyes will not fail to see you while there is an opportunity. Thanking you again for your kindness, and the great relief from my headache, I am yours very truly,

MRS. M. A. O'RILEY.

LINCOLN, March 15, 1900.—Dr. W. I. Seymour, 1219 K st., City.

Dear Dr. Seymour: I want to thank you for the great help you have been to my little daughter Maggie, who suffered so much, from headaches and found school work very difficult on account of her eyes being continually sore, and in fact could not see as other children. Since you have treated her and made her a pair of glasses, she is greatly benefited and is getting along very much better in her studies. Her headaches are entirely gone, and we feel that we in leed have much to be thankful for, and are very grateful to you for your skill. Some of our friends have said the price we paid seemed rather high for glasses, but we take a more sensible view of the matter, as we know you could not afford to furnish glasses for the same price we could buy common spectacles for, and feel that what we paid you was fir your knowledge and skill and that it was the best investment we ever made. If there are people enough of their eyes to look more carefully into the matter, it would be a great saving of both money and sight. Yours very truly,

MRS. M. KELLEY,

PATIENTS IN NEW YORK.

LINCOLN, Neb., March 14, 1900.—Lincoln people who are treating with Dr. Seymour, may imagine that his business is confined to this city, but such is not the case. He treats by mail many hundreds of people, and has patients as far away as New York city, as shown by the following letter, and because one lives at a distance it does not follow that they cannot receive the benefit of his skill. Write at an early date if you are suffering from any eye, ear or throat trouble, and your correspondence will promptly be answered promptly.

"No. 18 Greenwich Avenue, New York City. Dr. W. I. Seymour:

"Dear Sir:—I have improved quite a good deal since I've taken your medicine. My throat still bothers me a great deal in the mornings, but it does not make me so sick. The rest of the day it hardly troubles me at all, unless I am out of doors. It seems to choke me continually then, but otherwise I feel ever so much better. Your medicine has certainly done me a great deal of good in the short time I have been taking it. Thanking you for the help you have already been to me, I remain, Yours truly,

LENA NISSON."

Dear Doctors: Allow me to thank you for the benefit I have received at your hands, and as I am in the United States postal employ in this city, I realize that my livelihood, and in fact the welfare of my family, depends upon my sight, which has been giving me a great deal of trouble of late. I feel that I am on the road to improvement and should be glad to assist you in any way in my power, as I believe most heartily in your methods and know that your success and work is appreciated by the Lincoln people.

I have been a great sufferer with headaches for a long time, but since taking your treatment have had no pain either in my eyes or head. The glasses furnished seem to be giving me great relief and I am daily becoming much more encouraged in the belief that I will be permanently cured. Yours very truly,

J. J. DIEFENDORF,
Twenty-ninth and B.

Burlington & Missouri River Railroad in Nebraska.

ASHLAND, Neb., March 15, 1900.—Dr. W. I. Seymour, 1219 K street, Lincoln, Neb.

Dear Dr. Seymour: I knew that I had a peculiar case, especially my right eye, which was out of balance and troubled me very much. I put myself under your care and after one month's treatment feel very much encouraged. I believe your method superior to anything in this line that I have ever heard of. I feel satisfied that you and Dr. Cox will soon effect a cure of my eyes. Thanking you both for encouragement and help, I am, yours truly,

W. F. HIRNES,

Saline County Abstract Association, W. G. Hastings, president; J. N. Van Duyn, secretary; W. H. Davis, assistant.

WILBER, Neb., March 10, 1900.—Dr. W. I. Seymour, Lincoln, Neb.

Dear Sir: I have your favor of yesterday, regarding the condition of my eyes since my late visit to your city and to your office. I desire to state that I have not been examined by nor received treatment from any person for the ailment, and on the whole consider that notwithstanding the fact of the great amount of work done since there, that there is a general improvement, and honestly think that if I had properly adjusted glasses that my eyes would regain their strength.

I desire again to thank you for the interest that you have manifested, and will at an early day call upon you, with full confidence in your ability to give me more "light." Yours truly,

J. N. VAN DUYN.

DE WITT, Neb., March 10, 1900.—Dr. W. I. Seymour, Lincoln, Neb.

Dear Sirs: I am pleased to acknowledge the receipt of the glasses and hope to receive much benefit from them. My sister now expects, with me, to visit you next week; will let you know later what day. My eyes are at present feeling quite well.

You have ever since been of great assistance to me and I am indeed very grateful for your treatment of my eyes. I have spent a great deal of time and money endeavoring to secure something that would give me relief, and have been to your city on various occasions to have glasses fitted to my eyes, but have never received the satisfaction and comfort that you were able to give me on my first visit. With kindest regards, I am, Yours respectfully,

C. W. RIBBLE.

MANY NERVOUS TROUBLES RELIEVED.

Dear Dr. Seymour: Learning from many of my friends how much you had helped them, I was induced to come to you for treatment, and it is a matter of considerable satisfaction to me to say that the combined treatment received from you and Dr. Cox has been of the greatest assistance to me. I am feeling better physically, and my sight is very much improved. I was beginning to fear that I should lose my sight entirely, but since treating with you, feel that I shall again be a well woman and my sight restored to a better condition than it has been for years. My eyes have never pained me, but I have been extremely near sighted, and realized that I was gradually losing the use of them. My husband joins me in expressing to you gratitude for my improvement, and thanking you for past assistance and anticipating still more as I continue with you. I am, yours very sincerely,

MRS. W. L. HUNTER.

DR. W. I. SEYMOUR, 1219 K street, City.

Dear Dr. Seymour: Allow me to express to you my thanks for the great benefit you have been to my little girls, particularly the younger one, who has found school work very hard, and in fact almost impossible. Since you have been treating her with glasses her sight has notably improved, and we are very grateful to know that the simple remedy will be the means of helping her so much to gain an education, which seemed rather doubtful to us before learning the real nature of the trouble, as she had such difficulty in reading that we feared there might be something else the matter, but have learned since meeting you that it was altogether owing to her poor sight that she made such slow progress in her school work. Thanking you again, I am, Yours very truly,

Dear Doctor: I am attending public school here, and wish to thank you for the great help your glasses have been to me for the past two years. Mamma joins me in thanking you for what you have done for me, and I hope that any of my schoolmates who are having trouble with their eyes will not neglect this opportunity to see you. Thanking you again for your kindness, I am, Yours very sincerely,

DR. W. I. SEYMOUR, 1219 K street, City.

Dear Dr. Seymour: Having suffered a great deal with headaches, and feeling that my eyes were the cause of the same, I improved the first opportunity of consulting you, and since being treated and fitted with glasses by you, I am very much better in health and eyesight, and thank you heartily for the wonderful assistance you have rendered me. Wishing you continued prosperity, and commending your treatment whenever possible, I am, Very truly yours,

LINCOLN, Neb., March 10, 1900.—Dr. W. I. Seymour, 1219 K street, City.

Dear Dr. Seymour: Your treatment for my eyes has surely been a great help to me, and I am now pursuing my regular work with much more comfort and ease than I have been able to do for a long time, as my health has been affected by the strain on my eyes. Thanking you for the relief you have been able to afford me, and assuring you that should I need any further assistance, I will accept your invitation to call without further expense, I am, Yours very truly, who is well known to thousands in the city and will gladly tell any who are suffering, and in need of treatment, of his experience with Drs. Seymour and Cox. Those needing help should not fail to look up these references before calling on the doctors.

A PROMINENT LINCOLN MAN

Dear Doctor Seymour: I was one of the many people who were skeptical and opposed to treating with any one I had not known for many years; but the prevailing sentiment in your favor, and personal acquaintance with many people whom you had so greatly benefited, finally induced me to come to you for treatment for my little daughter and myself, and I wish to thank you for the great help you have been to her eyes. We had both been fitted with glasses, but did not realize that they were only giving us very slight benefit as compared with what good glasses might do when properly fitted. I had been to a noted oculist and paid a fancy price and must admit that the glasses helped me, but have since realized that they were only a step in the right direction. From the first treatment you gave us we have been greatly benefited. As for myself, I think it marvelous that glasses can contain such wonderful strengthening and healing power when properly made and fitted. I also want to add my strong commendation for the benefit I have received from the hands of Dr. W. Calvert Cox in the treatment of my ear, nose and throat trouble. I have not felt so well in years, and before coming to you believed that I had almost a hopeless case, as I did not know what it was to enjoy a moments peace or draw a long breath in comfort. Doctor, some people have said to me that I paid too much, but as I said to you on my second visit, I would not take $50 if I gave you back for the good done in two visits, and I think it is the best money I ever spent in my life. I am certainly getting much better and I thank you from the bottom of my heart for the scientific knowledge which has given you ability to save me such wonderful relief. My friends and acquaintances notice the great improvement in my condition, and I cannot use words too strong to express to you my gratitude and heart felt thanks. Yours very truly,

O. P. NEWBRANCH,

DR. W. I. SEYMOUR, 1219 K St., City. Dear Dr. Seymour: When I came to you in January my right eye was entirely blind and my left eye so poor that reading was almost impossible. I felt that I was in a very critical condition, and for a man of my age stood very little chance of regaining my sight. You have entirely restored the sight of my left eye by treatment and the use of your glasses will now see better with it than I have for years. The right eye is also very much improved, and I am indeed very grateful to you for what you have done. My sons join me in thanking you for your many courtesies, and none of us lose an opportunity of advising those who have trouble with their eyes to take advantage of your wonderful skill. Thanking you again, I am,

Mr. Jacob Frederick,

Dr. W. I. Seymour, 1219 K St., Lincoln, Neb. Lar Dr. Seymour: Since taking treatment with you my eyes have been steadily improving, and I can see better to do my work than ever before in my life. I think it wonderful how you can accomplish so much by your treatment, and am very grateful for the help you have been to me. Yours very truly.

JACOB FREDERICK,

LINCOLN, Neb., March 14, 1900.

Dr. W. I. Seymour, 1219 K St., City.

Dear Dr. Seymour: Allow me to thank you for the great benefit you have been able to render myself and family. My two daughters join me in expressing gratitude for the great help you have been to them in relieving their headaches and eye trouble. I was referred to you through a physician in this city, and wish to thank him through this means for sending me to you. I have learned from others that there are many physicians here who condemn you without knowing anything about your work, and send their patients to local eye doctors. In fact I have treated with others in this city for myself and daughters, and am so satisfied that your method is far superior to any now used in Lincoln to my knowledge. Any friends and acquaintances who are having trouble with their eyes cannot afford to let this opportunity pass, as I know from experience that your treatment has been of inestimable value to myself and family. Thanking you most sincerely, I am,

Yours very truly,

MRS. THOMPSON,

WIFE OF WELL KNOWN LINCOLN MAN.

Mrs. A. P. Anderson, the wife of one of Lincoln's prominent men, who is known to thousands of people, and who himself has been treating with Dr. Seymour writes as follows, and such references as these cannot be questioned by the most skeptical.

Dear Dr. Seymour: Having heard a great deal of your success, and being a continual sufferer with my eyes, I went to Omaha to visit you recently, not knowing of your move to Chicago. I was fitted there with glasses, but have found it necessary to change, and am glad to say that the treatment I have received at your hands, is indeed satisfactory. Trusting that I shall now receive permanent relief, and thanking you for what you have done, I am, Yours sincerely,

MRS. A. P. ANDERSON,

LINCOLN, Neb., March 14, 1900.—Dr. W. I. Seymour, 12 19 K st., City.

Dear Dr. Seymour: It would certainly be hard for me to ever estimate the value of good eye sight, as it has not been my lot in life to see as other people do or to enjoy any comfort in this way. I have suffered extremely at the hands of various eye specialists, who have tried in vain to give me relief, and finikly abandoned my right eye entirely, believing it to be totally useless. I can say for the benefit of my friends and acquaintances, that for the first time in my remembrance I can see with it, and since treating with you experienced wonderful help and relief. My sight is improving and my friends and relatives are universal in their comments as to how much better I can see to read and get around than ever before. Anything I can say in your favor would not half express the gratitude I feel for what you have already done for me, and the treatment of my wife has been the most humane and satisfactory that I have ever experienced. Yours respectfully,

ELSIE WILLIAMS,
2927 Q st.

Dear Dr. Seymour: Being actively interested in the method you use and being a nurse by profession, I will say that I have seen many people make serious mistakes by entrusting their eyes to incompetent hands. I wish to thank you a thousand times for the assistance you rendered me in fitting my glasses and treating my eyes. I suffered with severe headache and can say for you—you are the most skilled oculist I ever met. I take pleasure in recommending you to my friends and acquaintances, and would like to say more in your favor if space would permit. Yours very truly,

MRS. J. G. BECK.

GRAND ISLAND, Neb., Feb. 22, 1900.—Dr. W. I. Seymour, Lincoln, Neb.

Dear Doctor: I received the glasses you sent me. They are very fine and I think that after I have worn them a while I shall be able to see very much better. My head is a good deal clearer and I think I can hear better. Am not so bewildered as I was in Lincoln. Then I could not tell what people said to me or know the old familiar places that I used to know when I lived there. Am in hopes that by spring I shall be nearly well. That prescription that Dr. Cox gave me—you said was for my nerves—has helped me a good deal. I can walk around better and use my arm much better. It is nearly gone now and I would like to know if I ought to have some more of it, for I am sure it is helping me. I am very anxious to get well and have my hearing for I want to be of more use in the world than I am now. I was always well before. I had this spell. I am well pleased with the glasses and ask the Lord to bless you in all your work. Will not take up more of your time. With much respect, I remain, your friend, MRS. ESTHER COATES.

WHAT ARE CATARACTS? A LEG OR AN EYE, WHICH?

People Believe They Have Them When Such Is Not the Case.

A Subject Discussed by Educators in an English School.

DISEASE IS NOT SO COMMON. DECIDED IN FAVOR OF AN EYE

Boy, People Would Rather Lose a Leg Than Be Deprived of the Use of an Eye.

An eye specialist, who meets all classes of people, has many amusing incidents in his life, some of which can be attributed to the ignorance of the general public regarding their own anatomy. It is an every-day occurrence in stating their trouble to the doctor for people to say that they have a cataract or that they have been told they have one by some celebrated physician whose renown must have been confined to a very small circle before, as he was born in Arkansas, and whose greatest hobby seems to be the cataract, but in reality a cataract is a cloudy or opaque appearance of the crystalline lens, which acts as a curtain drawn before a window, as a full-fledged cataract completely darkens the sight.

A peculiar defect of the eye called pterygium is frequently mistaken for a cataract, when in reality it has nothing to do with the actual sight; however, if allowed to grow they will sometimes pass over the cornea and cover a portion of it. This particular trouble is one that is quite common and the cause of much annoyance, as these growths are continually becoming irritated and red, giving the eye a blood-shot and bad appearance.

In following up the trouble it was learned that people who are exposed to dust and outdoor work are apt to be affected in this manner and especially is it common among seafaring men though of course, it is not confined to any particular class of people, and any one is liable to have this defect.

This abnormal growth, which gives the eye such a disagreeable expression and which is a continual source of annoyance, can be perfectly cured by properly fitted glasses, which are the only satisfactory method of getting rid of them and at the same time it does away with the necessity of an operation, which for so long has been considered the only way to remove them. In cutting them off, there is usually a rough place left, and the disease is liable to manifest itself again. By means of scientifically prepared glasses the cause of the defect is directly treated and the eye is not only protected, but the strain is removed, which keeps the pterygium growing.

Even cataracts are not as serious as many other eye troubles, as it is possible, by a very delicate operation, to open the eyeball and remove the lens intact and the sight may then be restored by an artificial lens, made in spectacle form.

People should not become discouraged because they have been told that they have a cataract, as a skilled specialist can often counteract, to a great degree, the effect of a slight cataract. If genuine, by treating the eyes properly with glasses which will add and strengthen the vision until such time as an operation may become necessary. These few statements should be particularly interesting to people who are affected with these growths on the eye, as they were gathered in an interview with Dr. W. I. Seymour, now so widely known throughout the state, and who does not make assertions without being able to prove their truth beyond a doubt in the minds of the skeptical and this, without charge, to those who accept the invitation in the same broad light in which it is offered.

"In traveling over southern Texas, one would gain the impression that a large portion of it is swamp, particularly at this time of the year, as water stands everywhere. Upon approaching Galveston, we passed through swampy land for many miles, then deliberately struck out over Galveston bay, over a bridge made of driven piles and reached the city, after a trip of travel over a portion of the great gulf of Mexico. This quaint old city is built on a long, narrow island, the water being very shallow except on the south side, which is deep enough for the largest ships to land at the wharves. Galveston is frequently called the 'Oleander City' because of the great number of oleander trees to be found there. Some streets and avenues are completely lined with these low bush-like trees, which, when covered with their exquisite pink wax-like flowers, look like huge bouquets and lend a charming touch of color to the scene. Very few trees beside the oleander will grow in Galveston, as the soil is very poor and sandy and the high winds that prevail there at times, seem to stunt and dwarf the few cedar trees that do scrabble up along the beach. Speaking of Galveston beach, I must say it is one of the finest I have ever seen. It extends the whole length of the island—something over thirty miles—and is so hard and smooth that it is a delight to drive or wheel over it. In fact, it is even more comfortable to ride over than an asphalt road, and its popularity as a drive may be evidenced by the long line of carriages, buggies and conveyances of all descriptions that pass up and down its smooth surface every pleasant evening.

"Galveston is said to be the home of the pirate, Lafitte, who was supposed to have buried all his wealth in a certain grove of trees where he had his home. The grove still stands and, in fact, was bought by some credulous mortal, who thought he would find the hidden treasure, and no doubt the land about would expect to find in a city of 40,000 population.

YELLOWSTONE FALLS

ONE OF OUR SOUTHERN SEAPORTS.

(From the Omaha World-Herald.)

Dr. W. I. Seymour of this city, who is known to many of our readers and who is spending the winter in Texas, writes an interesting letter from there regarding the great Texas seaport and other cities in the Lone Star State.

"Of course I am following the optical business, as usual and have been trying to interest the people down here in my method of straightening crossed eyes and have succeeded in making quite a stir among the cross-eyed in the community.

"I have promised a number of my friends letters about the State of Texas and, perhaps, you will be interested in knowing something about the great Texas seaport, Galveston, and my impressions in regard to Houston, in which city I am spending the winter. This city is decidedly on the improve, being the largest commercial city in the state, and the prospects for a ship canal from the Gulf of Mexico to this city seem to be very bright, in fact, an appropriation has already been secured for this purpose and the work of widening and deepening Buffalo river —on which Houston is situated—will soon commence.

"This is a great cotton market. In fact, cotton is the back bone of this country, as corn is of Nebraska and the low price means hard times in proportion. Money seems to be very close here, or rather the money in the state seems to be in the hands of less people than is the case in Nebraska. The middle class does not predominate here as in the northern states.

"I have visited all the principal cities in the state and find many features of interest in each one. Dallas and Ft. Worth; in the northern part of the state, are lively, busy towns, after the northern style, and in the southern part of the state San Antonio, Houston and Galveston represent the older and more conservative cities, and are very unlike any northern town. In both architecture and business methods. Business is conducted on a smaller margin and closer lines—the floating population being much smaller than it is in Nebraska cities.

"Houston is fifty miles inland, and there are four competing roads, which give desirable rates to Galveston, the great seaport town of Texas. I spent several days down there wandering

GERMAN LUDWIG FERDINAND VON HELMHOLTZ.

ONCE VISITED CHICAGO

A Man to Whom the Entire World Is Indebted for Some of the Greatest Discoveries of the Age.

How vastly the world is indebted to the patience and genius of men of science few think, even when profiting most by their discoveries. For many years no one in civilized parts has been troubled with his eyes without owing his relief in almost every instance, either wholly or in part, to the inventive abilities and magnificent skill of Herman Ludwig Ferdinand von Helmholtz, whose biography, bearing his name for a title has just been written by Dr. John Gray McClintock. Helmholtz, one of German's most illustrious men, was the first human being to gaze upon the living retina of one of his fellows. Of the most profound mathematical skill; a great physiologist and master of physics as well, he contrived the simple concave mirror with an orifice at its central point, which, by casting the light into the patient's eye and away from the observer's, made it possible to study what had theretofore been invisible until after death.

Von Helmholtz was born in 1821 at Potsdam, near Berlin. He was a direct descendant, through his mother, of William Penn, the founder of Pennsylvania, and there was French Huguenot blood mingled with the Teutonic strain as well. He was in Chicago during the Columbian exposition, and on the voyage home met with the fatal accident which caused his death, falling down the cabin stair on shipboard as the result of an attack of dizziness. He lived, constantly growing worse, until September 8, 1894, passing his 73d birthday.

In appearance Von Helmholtz was a man of singular majesty and impressiveness. It seems to be true that men who devote their lives to the pursuit of demonstrable truth, with thought of personal glory or profit, assume the highest type of expression of which the human countenance is capable. In spite of features in no way impressive, in more instances than one—though not in the case in hand—the intellect, chastened and refined by the unceasing search for living facts designed to assist the passage of mankind from savagery to the highest plane of civilization, shines through the countenance until it becomes a matter of universal comment. This has been true of Darwin, Huxley, Tyndall, Pasteur, Bernard and countless more. It is a fact of great significance.

It must not be supposed that Helmholtz, in his investigations, achieved nothing higher than the invention of the ophthalmoscope, the apparatus already mentioned. This is merely the most popular of his many products. One of the greatest mathematicians, he discovered the use of the muscles of accommodation in the human eye and made possible in this way the scientific treatment of all defects of human vision. His researches into the theory of light resulted in the complete reform of the scientific color scheme, substituting carmine, green and violet for the supposedly primary colors, red, yellow and blue. His is the name foremost among the men who have made scientific optics possible.

From optics he went to acoustics, performing for the human ear and the science of sound all that he had previously done for the human eye and science of color. It is to him that the modern world is indebted for an almost complete knowledge of the construction and mechanical operation of the inner ear. Himself a musician of great skill and acquaintance with musical literature, his attainments were precisely those which enabled him to produce the most brilliant results. He has shown how it is that the ear distinguishes between all the innumerable varieties of tone which may come to it, as well as exhibiting the devices which evolution has left for its preservation in perfect health and action. There was no portion of the auditory channel that did not receive his distinguished consideration; and he stopped short of an explanation why it is that music so affects the sensibilities only because his province was in physiology and not in psychology.

In addition to this, he investigated the quality of the human voice, and brought out the underlying principles attendant upon the production of the different sounds, especially those of the vowels, and showed a remarkable interrelation between the human voice for making sounds and the human ear for hearing those thus made, accounting scientifically for the abstruse pleasure which the human voice bestows above every possible musical instrument. Such men as Helmholtz redeem the human race from its faults of baseness and self-seeking.

Helmholtz is authority and revered even by the eye specialists of today as Edison is by the electrician. Not so widely known, perhaps, as his work along the lines presently confined to scientific circles, and left by the public to be understood by the practitioner whose direct interest in his discoveries was dealt out to his patients in the form of scientific treatment as prescribed by this noted specialist. Thousands and tens of thousands of people living today owe their eye sight to the wonderful work of this man. During his recent visit to Chicago he was greatly honored by the medical profession, and in speaking of him Dr. Seymour says he was a man of very strong personality, impressing all at once as being a man of rare ability and genius, which cannot be questioned when the result of his life's work is considered.

NO EXPRESSION IN THE EYE.

Is in the Eyelid According to an English Oculist.

There are no expressive eyes. The expression of the eye is really in the lid. The eye itself, independent of the surroundings, has no more expression than has a glass marble. A prominent English oculist makes this daring statement, and he defends his position with emphasis. "The eye has no expression whatever," he says. "How can you explain the fact that the eyes of one person are more expressive than those of another?" I am asked. They are not. The difference consists in certain nervous contractions of the lids peculiar to the individual.

"Observe for yourself and you will see that I am right. Watch the eyes of a man I am greatly interested in something and my attention is suddenly called to him. It is unnecessary to speak to him. My upper eyelid raises itself just a little, but the eye proper does not change much in appearance. If the interruption is but momentary, the elevation of the lid will be but momentary. If the surprise caused by the interruption is continued the lid may be raised even a little more, and, in fact, the whole of the forehead, including the eyebrows, is raised and wrinkled. But the eye remains the same.

"When a person is excited much the same emotions are gone through," continued the doctor. "His eyes are open wide. In cases of intense excitement, to their greatest extent, but the forehead is not wrinkled, and the ball of the eye is as expressive as a bit of glass. No more.

"Observe the face of one who laughs. You will see that the lower eyelid has no muscle of its own, and it is only by the contraction of the adjacent muscles in smiling or laughing that it is made to move. That is why there are many wrinkles about the eyes of merry persons.

"The expression of deep thoughtfulness is produced by the drooping of the upper lid. The lids of some persons fall so low that the pupil of the eye itself is the same. If the meditation lower the subject that worries the thinker the expression is again quite different. The eyelids contract and the eyebrows are lowered and drawn together. This is true of a reflective mood.

"As to emotional moods there is the expression of anger, for instance. The eyes, instead of closing, are open wider than they are normally, but the brows are closely knit.

"By expressing sadness the entire upper eyelid comes about half way down and the folds of the skin collect there, giving the lid a thick, heavy appearance."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

While Dr. Seymour does not wholly agree with this, although there are many good arguments presented, there still remains the fact that much expression of the eye is brought about by the changing of the iris or, in other words, the enlarging and contracting of the pupil has much to do with the expression of the eye. In the occasion of great excitement the pupils of nervous people are very apt to dilate very much, and, in fact, the expression of the eye is changed wholly by the large or small opening caused by this change of the iris, which may give one eye the appearance of being several shades darker when the pupil is enlarged. It is true that there is more expression attached to the lids than is commonly believed, but it is a combination of the two which makes the expressive eye. People who have exceedingly small pupils, as a rule, have expressionless eyes, while the person with a constantly changing pupil is very often a person of many emotions and far more interesting as a study than the person with the small contracting, selfish, pupil, which is many times caused by the morphine habit, or the use of liquor or tobacco. The study of this particular feature by the physician is most interesting, as a single glance of the patient will often suffice for him to determine physical conditions, and even traits of character, if he is a man of experience or has studied the continued changes taking place in this tale-telling organ, the eye.

HOW TROUBLES OF HEARING EFFECT OUR HAPPINESS.

By Dr. W. Calvert Cox.

When asked the question why so many deaf persons are afflicted with irritability of temper and other signs of want of control over the nervous system, my reply is that one of the most serious and exhaustive strains on the nerves is the constant effort to hear which is always present with the deaf or partially deaf person. What is known as nervousness is simply the effort of nature to protect herself from imperfect or improper action of some part of the human economy. The special senses all have their source at the base of the brain and it can readily be understood how the failure in any of them would be a strain on all the others coming from this great center of life and nervous force. Many persons who have partial failure of hearing fail to appreciate how much so they are and become much annoyed at slight causes without really knowing why; the strict attention required to hear, putting so continued a strain on the perceptions as to eventually break down the general health and showing its effect especially on the nerves by producing what is called an irritable temper, a condition demanding our sympathy rather than our censure. How frequently we see a person suddenly throw their head to one side with an inquiry on their countenance accompanied by the well known exclamation of the deaf "heh!" the hand arched back of the ear to condense the sound. If you will notice a case of this kind you will find a tired look in the eyes due to the continuous watching to catch sounds and as the day progresses showing more and more evidence of weariness. There is no doubt the human race would be much better natured if it could hear perfectly. One thing seems strange and that is why many persons neglect the first signs of this terrible affliction, thus throwing away the opportunity of having a life cheered by the presence of others instead of becoming isolated because of the difficulty of holding conversation with them. It is a very easy matter to detect whether a person has been deaf for a length of time by simply observing how they watch the lips of those with whom they converse; in fact, many can carry on a conversation without hearing any but a few words. In conclusion the best advice that can be offered anyone is, attend to any slight difficulty of hearing when first noticed, as then it is readily cured and life made entirely different from what it would be if the hearing was neglected.

CATARRH, WHAT IS IT?

The technical meaning of the word catarrh is a running discharge and is applicable to the liquid exudation from any living surface of the body. This broad application of the term has, however, been restricted to the condition of inflammation of parts of the human body covered by mucus membrane and principally to those parts connected with the respiratory organs.

This inflammation is specific, its origin being produced by a germ which being deposited on a suitable mucus surface soon propagates and spreads its poison to the adjacent parts. Thus, it will be seen, that it follows a natural course in beginning at the most exposed and least dangerous surfaces, such as those of the nasal cavities, with their tortuous turbinate tissues, spreading to the pharynx and post nasal structures to finally reach the deeper, more protected vital portions of the body, such as the bronchial tubes and the lung tissue itself. It thus most frequently begins with a simple influenza, or so called cold in the head, causing swelling and congestion of the membranes of the nose and frontal sinuses, or cavities, which exist in the bones over the brows, and every one is fully aware of the sensations of this very common source of catarrh, than which there is no better location for germ culture; the germ once deposited is hastened to maturity by the continued warmth and moisture, no artificial means of culture for germs production being equal to the natural one.

These germs are constantly floating in the air ready to settle on suitable tissue; the mechanic is breathing them while he is warm or over-heated at his work, the merchant is inhaling them in his store at the same time living in the depressing atmosphere caused by the exhalations from the lungs of the numerous customers doing business with him, and in fact at all times we are all exposed to the infection of catarrh even from early infancy.

Catarrh in its incipiency is much more annoying than dangerous, but sooner or later the disease reaches the throat, bronchial tubes and air vesicles of the lungs, producing in the latter congestion, and later catarrhal pneumonia, which unless cured promptly soon dengenerates into pulmonary consumption.

When first attacked with catarrh the mucus membrane becomes irritated and sneezing, coughing, stoppage of nostrils, accompanied by discharge of mucus more or less sticky in consistency is present. This disease at times takes a different course and attacks the mucus membrane of the stomach and causes what is sometimes called gastric catarrh, a disease accompanied by much distress and disorder of digestion, and one very stubborn to cure.

CAN CATARRH BE CURED? YES!

Catarrh can be cured, but only by means of treatment directed to the source of disease. As the disease soon becomes constitutional and is essentially a blood disease very soon after its attack, consequently local treatment alone will not eradicate it from the system, but medication causing the poison of the germs is needed as well as treatment which destroys the germs themselves; nothing of an irritating character should be used, as the tissues are already in an irritable condition and require soothing at once; opium, morphine, cocaine, all have faults which prevent their use. To overcome these objections in treatment, I found the use of non-irritant germicide to be the essential point to start with, and on this foundation I have built up the modern method of cure so successful in my hands.

W. CALVERT COX, M. D.

Some Convincing Evidence.

The following letter is from Mr. Oscar Heath, a prominent plumber of this city, who has had a great deal of trouble with his nearly all his life, and has treated with many specialists in the hope of regaining his hearing, but never with any success until he placed himself in the hands of Dr. W. Calvert Cox. His friends and acquaintances are conscious of his steady improvement. The following letter should indeed be an encouragement to those who have given up in despair, as the new methods advanced by Dr. Cox, are far superior to any ever employed until a very recent date. While at the office of Dr. Cox, Mr. Heath in a conversation told of the great benefit he had received, which he afterwards condensed in the following letter of reference for the benefit of those who are anxious to learn from some one having experience, what hope there might be for them.

LINCOLN, Neb., March 9, 1900. 1972 S Street.

Dear Dr. Cox: When I first came to you it was necessary to holloa very loud in order to make me hear at all. My first visit was on Sunday, and by the following Tuesday I noticed a marked improvement. My friends can now converse with me much easier than ever before. I went to the theatre the other evening, and could hear very well and converse with p[illegible] sitting beside me, a thing which has been impossible for years. I could hear much of the conversation on the stage, and realize that I am getting a great deal better. This is very remarkable to me, as I have been deaf for nearly twenty years, and as a boy in school lost much of my education through this defect. I have treated with a great many prominent specialists, but never before received the benefit I have at the hands of Dr. Cox. I think his method superior to any I have ever seen used, and perfectly painless. While I do not wish to cause the displeasure of other physicians, I feel it no more than right that I should acknowledge the great benefit received, if it will encourage others who are hesitating for fear they will receive no benefit.

Yours sincerely, OSCAR HEATH.

Was Afflicted for Long Time.

LINCOLN, Neb., March 14, 1900.

Dr. W. Calvert Cox, City. Dear Doctor: I have been afflicted for a long time with catarrh of nose and throat and suffered the usual annoyances of the disease. In January of this year I placed myself in your care for treatment, and I am now more than pleased with my progress toward a cure. I am better in every way and feel free to recommend all sufferers from this disease to place themselves in your care.

Very sincerely,
C. C. NORTH.

Mrs. North Adds Another Testimonial.

The following very complimentary statement comes from Mrs. S. A. North, No. 827 H street, and was published in the State Journal February 18:

"Yes, Drs. Seymour and Cox are treating me. Dr. Seymour has made new glasses for me, and Dr. Cox has been treating my ears. I have now been treating with them for two weeks, and am perfectly happy over the wonderful improvement that has been made in my hearing. Before I could not hear ordinary conversation in the room at all, although when anyone stood close to me I could hear them. After my second treatment Dr. Cox asked me if I noticed any difference, and I was perfectly amazed, as I could hear every word he said very distinctly, although he was not speaking in an unusual voice. I thought last night when I went home I would watch myself and found that I could hear the clock tickin and also the conversation of those in the room, something most remarkable to me, as I had heard so much of the sounds that I might add that I simply consulted the doctors to ease my own conscience, as I had heard so much of their skill, but at the same time I had no faith in the fact that they could help me. I am extremely grateful for this marvelous improvement and I only hope that my friends and acquaintances who knew of my affliction will embrace the opportunity of consulting such successful specialists if troubled with either defective sight or hearing."

On Jan. 21, 1900, a gave you my testimonial as to my improved condition of hearing, and as my son has today made an acknowledgement of the great benefit received from his treatment with Dr. Cox, I wish to add a few lines more, in which I wish to say that my hearing has indeed been perfectly satisfactory. I can hear much better and am not annoyed so much with the roaring in my head. Yours very truly,

Dear Doctor:—For many years I have been a sufferer from catarrh and have tried many times for relief but without success, until on the 13th, I applied to you for treatment. It is now one month since I began treating with you and am pleased to say that my catarrh shows a marked improvement in every way. My breathing is better, my cough no less frequent, my discharge is no longer stopped up, and in fact I feel that I am almost cured, for all of which I can thank you. Yours truly,

Dear Dr. Seymour:—Since you have been treating my wife's eyes, I have been making regular visits to your office and Dr. Cox has been treating my deafness. I would indeed be very ungrateful for the help he has been to me if I did not use every opportunity to recomend his treatment. My family and friends all notice how much better I hear, and I heartily recommend Dr. Cox to anyone who has trouble with their hearing. I had eaches in my case hopeless and could not have believed it possible that my condition could have been so greatly improved.

OUR EYES ARE CHANGING

NATURE INTENDS THEM TO LOOK OUTWARD—WE TURN THEM INWARD.

IN A STATE OF EVOLUTION

The Conflict Between Nature and the Brain Is What Causes the Strain—Nature Is Overtaxed —Theory of Dr. Prentice.

Dr. Charles Prentice of London has advanced an odd theory regarding the eyes of human beings, says the New York Press. His says careful and comprehensive experiments have convinced him that man's eye still is in a state of evolution which is not complete, and that the troubles from eye-strain arise largely from the efforts of nature to correct the faults and to bring about normal vision. "If," he says, "this evolution of the optic axis were complete there would be no eye-strain and the energy now necessary to sustain it could be utilized in performing other functions more perfectly, thus adding comfort and years to life. How much this strain is, or how much our years are shortened and our peace and happiness disturbed by it, it is impossible to calculate, but it must be great, from the fact that the nerve centers of vision are so extensive—in fact, they are many times greater than those which furnish energy for our legs, and the legs may use five than a million foot pounds of energy a day."

One reason for this "natural" eye-strain is in the fact that in the natural state the eye of human beings diverge; that is, they look outward and away from each other. This is the same as in the case of the herbivorous animals and birds. It gives them a wide vision and as a security against approaching danger. The flesh-eating beasts, on the other hand, have converging vision. Indian and African tribes have diverging vision, and converging strabismus—the double squint where one eye looks toward the other—is hardly ever found among them.

The artificial life which civilized man leads and the artificial nature of his pursuits cause eye-strain, therefore, because his work requires that his sight be directed to near objects, and the result is that the brain is fighting the eyes all the time—the eyes trying to look apart away from each other and give wide vision, and the brain forcing them to converge and give close vision. Regarding this Dr. Prentice says:

"Those following the various pursuits of civilization a great share of the time have their eyes fixed on near objects—for illustration, say thirteen inches. The refraction of the crystalline lens has to be increased thirteen inches and the eyes converged many degrees, which is accomplished by the excessive use of brain energy or nerve strain. In various pursuits these positions and strains are kept up day after day for months and years, until the strain or nerve impulses will not easily and completely suspend themselves when the person seeks for distant vision, and then we have a tending inward of the eyes and sometimes myopia. When we think of it we can see that excessive nerve-strain such persons are relieved of by change of scene into the open country. The strains which keep up many degrees of convergence and about thirteen inches of refraction are relieved, being relaxed, and thus the nerve centers are much relieved. This may be a greater factor of relief to nervous persons than the so-called change of air.

"The tests are effective in showing the anatomical defects that necessitate brain-strain to bring about good vision, for two reasons: first, nerve impulses that have been kept up for years become persistent, and will not suspend during tests; secondly, the various muscles and parts become more firmly fixed in their assumed shapes by the material deposits under the nutrition of the high intervention and their shapes and positions are statically fixed for the time being.

"Some eight years ago it occurred to me that the eyes of the dead would come nearer to showing the true anatomical condition, but not absolutely, owing to the material deposits just mentioned, so I instituted investigation of the eyes of the dead in morgues, dead houses and other places. I have thus obtained a record of over 3,000 cases. In from twenty-four to forty-eight hours after death the eyes turn outward from each other almost without exception. Sometimes one eye turns up more than the other; again both eyes may turn upward and outward. I have not in any single case seen eyes in the dead which appeared to me to be perfectly straight."

Vision of Animals.

In 1895 he opened correspondence with ten zoological gardens and with animal keepers about the vision of animals. After collecting all the facts he found that only two cross-eyed carnivorous animals had ever been seen by these persons in charge of whose hands thousands of beasts passed every year. The eyes of herbivorous animals, he found, generally look outward from each other.

"A large portion of such animals are unable to look at an object with both eyes at the same time," he says, "because the lines of vision diverge from each other. In some birds the eyes are so situated that they look in opposite directions, or nearly so. Birds and beasts with such divergent eyes present the side of the head to an object to get the best view of it. They are of a timid disposition, with small means of self-defense except wide range of vision, which gives them timely warning of approaching danger. The eyes of carnivorous animals are in such relative position that the lines of sight are nearly so divergent as they are in the herbivorous; their relation is such that they are rotated inward so that both eyes can center their vision on a single point at the same time. This class of animals have nervous, irritable, and sometimes vicious disposition. Their field of vision is not so extensive as that of herbivorous animals, but this deficiency is made up for by their exceeding activity and physical combative powers. For many years I have been deeply interested myself by observing the eyes of lions, tigers and other carnivorous animals as they lay half asleep on dull, lazy days. As the eyes opened I was able to observe a slight, quick converging movement, which is perceptible in a majority of cases, especially in the older and larger beasts. After death there is a decided divergence of the eyes in all such animals."

In 1895, with the aid of the United States army, he secured examinations of 1,000 North American Indians. The test consisted of a prism, base down, before the eyes. There was a general tendency of the eye to diverge. A similar examination of 500 Africans of the Soudan showed the same tendency. In making this examination of 1,500 aboriginals only three cases of convergent strabismus were met.

In commenting on the peculiar theory of Dr. Prentice Dr. Seymour says: "Dr. Prentice has been considered a crank for many years among oculists, and his theory has been commented on in every convention, many having sided with him, while the majority have drawn good points from his argument and as for me, I have learned from experience and actual contact with people who have been his patients that he has been the cause of relieving many who have come to me for relief until consulting him. We have in our system a complete Prentice outfit for determining muscular weakness, and of the hundreds of people who come to us, ther are few that do not pass through it at some time of their treatment, many discoveries being made that have never been observed by other specialists. Hea ached and nervous troubles are many times relieved by his method when all others fail. Yes, I think Dr. Prentice has done his share toward relieving humanity, and it must be admitted that it is scientific men with brains, as the common expression goes, who make the world of science move. Every crank contributes something to the sum total of researches. Dr. Prentice is indeed a brilliant man and his efforts have certainly contributed to the advancement of optical science."

Leaving Hot Springs, I continued my trip to Sheridan, Wyo., which is a pretty little city, beautifully located at the foot of the Big Horn snow-capped mountains. Here again I had the pleasure of meeting Dr. Browning and wife, Mr. C. N. Dietz and Mrs. Victo. White. Mr. Dietz has a delightful summer residence near the top of this range of mountains, some 8,000 feet in altitude, where even in the hottest weather in August the nights are cool and frosty. Leaving here I went directly to Butte, Mont., the most wonderful city of its kind in the world.

"Joining a party of friends here, we returned to the entrance of the Yellowstone at Cinnabar, which is the gateway to the park. Here we were met by our camping outfit, which consisted of carriages, tents, etc., and we commenced our journey of about 150 miles through the park. Leaving Cinnabar in the morning and entering the golden gate we raised about 3,000 feet in a drive of about ten miles. The sublime grandeur of the scenery dawns as we enter this natural gateway of rocks, which on one side is a sheer precipice of many hundred feet, the road being cut out of solid rock along the side.

"The American people do not seem to appreciate the many natural beauties of this country as much as they should." These remarks were addressed to a Bee reporter by Dr. W. L. Seymour of this city, who has just returned from an extensive trip through the northwest.

"I have read much and heard a great deal about the Yellowstone park, but had a very dim conception of what a visit to this fairyland of America really meant until I actually visited it. I left Omaha during the extremely hot weather in August, my first stop being in Deadwood, S. Efforts are being made to find coal near Wilber.

Arbor Day was generally observed throughout the tree planting state.

Three Omaha saloons were robbed of five slot machines. How horrible!

E. E. Cole is the new postmaster at Brownville. He is said to be a worthy young man.

The Dodge State bank has been organized at Dodge. It has a paid-up capital of $10,000.

Fremont's street fair will follow the Lincoln function, the date being September 10 to 15 inclusive.

The new opera house at Harvard was opened one evening last week, minstrelsy by a local company holding the boards down.

If it doesn't stop raining at just the wrong time, Nebraska's corn crop this year will exceed 300,000,000 bushels. Stand up for Nebraska.

The school children of Lincoln have organized for the purpose of keeping the city clean. They will act in squads in conjunction with the city improvement association.

Lincoln has four flourishing schools of magnetic healing, and still the people roar for the pain that is in their bones, and the black wagon does as much business as ever.

Madison people believed their school building unsafe. Bonds were voted, and a new $15,000 structure will be built upon the site of the old brick building, which will be torn down.

The Lincoln members of the order of the Woodmen of the World, are making an attempt to secure the location of the headquarters of the order in Lincoln. They are at present in Omaha.

A movement for a celebration of the anniversary of John Brown has been started in Lincoln. The anniversary is May 9. The colored people are greatly interested and a meeting has been called.

The rains of the past fortnight have retarded farm work somewhat, but fall wheat and oats and grass never looked better at this season of the year than now. The ground generally is thoroughly soaked.

The creamery station built at Burwell, and leased to the Beatrice Creamery company for ten years was formally opened for business one day last week with something over 2,000 pounds of milk. At noon a free dinner was served by the ladies in Woodman hall, after which there were exercises, consisting of music, recitations, and speeches.

The United Mutual Hail Insurance Company, of Lincoln, paid, April 18, $2,700 on losses in addition to what has already been paid, making a total of $12,833 more paid on losses than any other company doing business in the state, and on an income of $29,542 less than the next largest company. The report of the insurance department shows that the loss by hail was twenty-three greater than all other losses combined on farm property.

The storm cloud which recently passed over the country in the vicinity of Wymore, Beatrice and Lincoln meshed the farm of H. Barrens, four and a half miles southeast of Wymore, wrecking the large barn, cut a swath thirty feet wide through the wheatfield of a farm near by, and wrecked eighty rods of fence on William Fry's farm.

The house-wrecking concern which has a force of men at work tearing away the last remaining evidences of the beauty and grandeur of the two great expositions in Omaha, has already arranged to do a similar work for gay Paris. On the day that the Paris exposition was formally inaugurated, contracts for the razing and dismantling of the splendid buildings were completed.

An elegant oak case for the preservation of war flags and relics has been placed in the office of Adjutant General Barry at the state house. It is a massive case reaching nearly to the ceiling and is richly carved, with heavy fluted oak columns at each corner. The new case was designed and built in Lincoln, and it cost the state $408.

PAYNE ON TARIFF.

LEGISLATION NEEDED FOR INSULAR POSSESSIONS.

Follows Lincoln and Webster.

Hon. Henry C. Payne of Ohio, the Wisconsin member of the Republican national committee, has been in Los Angeles where he was interviewed by the Los Angeles Times, of which Gen. Harrison Gray Otis is president and general manager. Speaking of the Puerto Rican question, Mr. Payne said:

"It is a momentous question, but the great body of the people has confidence, I find, in the ability and good faith of the administration and is resting confident in the belief that the president and the Republican majority in congress will do what is right by Puerto Rico. President McKinley's declaration in his message that it was 'our plain duty' to have free and unlimited trade with Puerto Rico was an attractive program and met with a sympathetic response. But it is the president's duty to change his mind, just as it is any other mans, when he sees, after a careful study of a question, that another policy is demanded by wisdom and justice. The fact is that the president and nearly all his advisers in Washington, a great majority of the Republican senators and representatives, arrived at the conclusion that the first legislation with regard to our insular possessions, it we may call them such, should be in the line of securing the open door principle, and that principle should be that these new possessions shall not hold the same relations to the country as do the territories that have become incorporated and are incipient states. I think the more thoughtful people of the country are opposed to any plan to bring these islands in as integral parts of the nation. Call it what you please, we must come down to colonial policy of some form. There is great anxiety on the part of the administration to get started right in this matter. Certain newspapers declared that the president's change of front was due to the pressure of the tobacco and sugar interests. That charge seems to me ridiculous in view of the fact that these interests want absolute free trade with Puerto Rico. I was born and brought up in Massachusetts, and I always believed in Daniel Webster's interpretation of the constitution, instead of that of Mr. Calhoun. Some Republican newspapers seem inclined to line up with Mr. Calhoun and the Dred Scot decision, in considering this Puerto Rican matter, shouting that 'the constitution follows the flag'; but I believe the country can more safely follow the teachings of Abraham Lincoln and Daniel Webster. Underneath the trifling tariff charges proposed, there lies this old constitutional question, which is of tremendous and lasting consequence. You remember that John C. Calhoun and the champions of slavery maintained that the constitution went with the flag into all territory acquired by the United States, and therefore the slaveholder had the right to carry his slaves and keep them in any territory. This view was maintained by the infamous Dred Scot decision of the United States Supreme court, to the effect that the United States can acquire territory only for the purpose of forming states, and that all acquisitions must be treated as integral parts of the union. Webster and Lincoln took the opposite view that new territory, acquired in one way or another, is not an integral part of the union till it has been duly incorporated and until then the government has constitutional power to regulate its affairs. Here is the real issue involved in all this Puerto Rican discussion, and I firmly believe the thinking people of this country, after careful consideration, will prefer to follow Lincoln and Webster, whom history has vindicated, rather than Douglas and Calhoun. This little flurry about Puerto Rico will soon be over. It will not affect the result of the presidential election. The administration stands well with the people. It has fulfilled its pledges to them, and more, too. On the money question it has done better than it promised. It has builded better than the Republican platform. It has restored confidence and has revived business to the extent that we have more prosperity even than we had in 1892, which was high tide. I cannot doubt that such an administration will be sustained."

The Labor Delegate.

The labor strike is comparatively a new thing in the south. But the walking delegate follows prosperity and the strike on the Southern railway is indicative of his progress in that section.

On the Suspect List.

Ex-Gov. Stone of Missouri is the man who engineered the conspiracy against Silver Dick Bland in 1896 and he occupies a place on Mr. Bryan's suspect list this year.

TRADE EXPANSION TO CHINA.

The correspondence between the United States and foreign governments that led to pledges from the powers of Europe to maintain the "open door" in China shows in detail the steps that were taken on the part of this government. The language of the initial notes indicates that each was framed to fit the supposed attitude of the power addressed, and that the negotiations were skillfully planned and executed is proven by the tenor of the replies and by the successful outcome.

The correspondence extended from September 6 last to the 20th of March, the last date marking the successful completion of the undertaking. The nations addressed by the United States were Great Britain, Germany, Russia, Italy and Japan. The object was to obtain from each of the various powers claiming "spheres of interest" in China a declaration substantially to the following effect:

"(1) That it shall in nowise interfere with any treaty port or any vested interest within any so-called 'sphere of interest' or leased territory it may have in China.

"(2) That the Chinese treaty tariff of the time being shall apply to all merchandise landed or shipped to all such ports as are within such 'spheres of interest' (unless they be 'free ports'), no matter to what nationality it may belong, and that duties so leviable shall be collected by the Chinese government.

"(3) That it will levy no higher harbor dues on vessels of another nationality frequenting any port in such 'sphere' than shall be levied on vessels of its own nationality, and no higher railroad charges over lines built, controlled or operated within its 'sphere' on merchandise belonging to citizens or subjects of other nationalities transported through such 'sphere' than shall be levied on similar merchandise belonging to its own nationality transported over equal distances."

On Nov. 30, 1899, a month after the date of the note, a formal answer was received from the British government, addressed to United States Minister Choate in the following language:

"I have much pleasure in informing your excellency that her majesty's government will be prepared to make a declaration in the sense desired by your government in regard to the leased territory of Wei-hai-Wei, and all territory in China which may hereafter be acquired by Great Britain, by lease or otherwise, and all 'spheres of interest' now held or that may hereafter be held by her in China, provided that similar declaration is made by other powers concerned."

Some opposition was feared from Germany, but after some preliminary correspondence, on Feb. 19 the following most satisfactory answer was received from that government:

"I have the honor to inform your excellency, repeating the statements already made verbally, as follows: As recognized by the government of the United States of America, according to your excellency's note referred to above, the imperial government has, from the beginning, not only asserted, but also practically carried out to the fullest extent, in its Chinese possessions, absolute equality of treatment of all nations with regard to trade, navigation and commerce. The imperial government entertains no thought of departing in the future from this principle, which at once excludes any prejudicial or disadvantageous commercial treatment of the citizens of the United States of America, so long as it is not forced to do so, on account of considerations of reciprocity, by a divergence from it by other governments. If, therefore, the other powers interested in the industrial development of the Chinese empire are willing to recognize the same principles, this can only be desired by the imperial government, which in this case upon being requested will gladly be ready to participate with the United States of America and the other powers in an agreement made upon these lines, by which the same rights are reciprocally secured."

The answer from Russia recited the fact that the settlement of the collection of customs belonged to China herself, and that the Russian government had no intention of claiming privileges for its subjects that were denied to foreigners—this, however, being on the understanding that other powers would make a similar declaration. The Russian note closed as follows:

"With the conviction that this reply is such as to satisfy the inquiry made in the aforementioned note, the imperial government is happy to have complied with the wishes of the American government, especially as it attaches the highest value to anything that may strengthen and consolidate the traditional relations of friendship existing between the two countries."

The French note was exceedingly brief. It was received Dec. 16 last from M. Delcasse, the minister for foreign affairs, by Ambassador Porter, and is as follows:

"The declarations which I made in the chamber on the 24th of November last, and which I have had occasion to recall to you since then, show clearly the sentiments of the government of the republic.

"It desires throughout the whole of China, and, with the quite natural reservation that all the powers interested give an assurance of their willingness to act likewise, is ready to apply in the territories which are leased to it, equal treatment to the citizens and subjects of all nations, especially in the matter of custom duties and navigation dues, as well as transportation tariffs on railways."

NEW CURRENCY LAW.

$50,000,000 Increase in Bank Note Circulation—New Bank Charters.

An increase in the bank note circulation of about $50,000,000 is already in sight. This is based upon actual deposits of bonds in the treasury under the new law, without any estimate for further deposits.

The bond-secured circulation alone, which stood Jan. 31 at $210,166,789, has increased only to $234,644,100, which is about $23,000,000 less than the increase would be if the notes had been issued to which the banks are entitled. Putting the bond-secured circulation, therefore, at $260,000,000, when the notes are all issued, and allowing $35,000,000 for notes in process of retirement, the total circulation without any further increase of bond deposits, should stand at about $295,000,000, or nearly $50,000,000 more than Jan. 31.

What the further increase in bank note circulation will be in the near future is a subject of some difference of opinion. It is not likely to exceed another sum of $50,000,000 within a year, and will probably be less.

The 2 per cent bonds pledged to secure circulation have risen to $106,453,200, and those pledged to secure public deposits to $26,295,100. The manner in which the old bonds have been withdrawn may be judged from the decline of the old fours on deposit on Jan. 31, from $127,652,550 to $52,710,850 on April 7, the 3 per cent bonds, from $59,563,920 to $23,145,900; the 5's, from $16,656,100 to $7,448,850, and the long 4's from $17,947,750 to $11,722,350. The latter class of bonds are not available for refunding, but suffer as a basis for bank note circulation by the double tax on the notes as compared with the new bonds.

The number of bank charters applied for has already exceeded the 500, and if they took the entire circulation to which they are entitled, upon the basis of a capital of $25,000 each, the increase in circulation would be $12,500,000.

The application for 500 national banking charters does not by any means represent an increase by this amount in the banking institutions of the country. The extension of the national system to small banks is leading many well-established state and private banks to enter the system, and it is estimated that at least 60 per cent of the applications come from these existing institutions. The application in some other cases may, also, be carried to the point of opening banks to business, while others are practically owned by larger banks, and will possess much of the character, although not the official stamp of branch banks.

ANTI-EXPANSION VIEWS.

The Stay-at-Homes Seem to Think They Know It All.

Arthur Hugh Frazier, late of the United States Volunteer Signal Corps, who has returned from duty in the Philippines, quotes the remark of ex-Gov. Boutwell that the "Philippine campaign a bank or run a laundry with a certainty of success that cannot be foretold of any other people, whether English or American," and says of it: "An ex-soldier feels tempted to rub his eyes and wonder where these commercial paladins concealed themselves during his sojourn in their midst."

He goes on to say that the soldiers whose time in the Philippines has expired returned home with the "impression that the able-bodied workers, the trusted confidential clerks and bank tellers, were Chinese; the merchants and planters Spanish, English or German; leaving to the natives undisputed sway in the back-driving business and similar intellectual pursuits." But what is the opinion of these returned soldiers worth? Has not Erving Winslow, the secretary of the Anti-Imperialistic League, laid down the broad general principle that a man who has never been in the Philippines is a far better judge of the condition of things there than a man who has?

British Aristocracy Blamed.

Many people attribute their recent reverses to degeneracy. The life of luxury does not produce vigor. Indigestible suppers, constant nervous strain and lack of exercise upset the stomach. The blood that makes heroes must come from healthy stomachs. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters purifies the blood and strengthens the stomach. It cures constipation, indigestion and dyspepsia.

Some people dye their hair because it is gray, and some because of lack of gray matter in their understanding.

That Tired Feeling

Just as surely indicates that the blood is lacking in vitality and the elements of health as does the most obstinate humor that the vital fluid is full of impurities. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures that tired feeling by enriching and vitalizing the blood, creating a good appetite and invigorating every organ of the body.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"I had that tired feeling all the time. Was as tired in the morning when I rose as I was when I went to bed. I took four bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla and it made me feel like a new man. I could work hard and not feel tired. I recommend Hood's to all who need a good medicine." A. P. CHARTER, Creston, Iowa.

KING DON:

....BY MAYOR ALLAN....

A new strength—the strength of despair—had come to her, and the doctor and nurse alike marveled at the courage and promptitude with which she assumed the duties of her position when the sleepless night was over at last and the good ship steamed slowly into Southampton docks.

There she indited telegrams, arranged for Don's removal to the little steamer for the Isle of Wight, and gave orders anent their luggage, all with a fortitude and forethought that would never have been called upon till now. The sympathy of the whole ship went with her, for the calamity which had befallen her and her great endurance beneath it had won her golden opinions from all.

The captain stepped forward and grasped the little hand she proffered in silent gratitude for his condolence when the moment of farewell came at last. He had a letter to deliver into her keeping which, owing to Don's illness, he had refrained from doing before. He explained that the letter had been found upon the dead body of the Indian when recovered from the sea; and as Captain Gordon's name was mentioned in it, he thought Captain Gordon's wife should have it.

Lillie took it and put it in her pocket, with a wan little smile of thanks. Vivid as was her remembrance still of that ghastly scene the night of the storm, her thoughts had seldom dwelt on the swarthy seaman's dastardly deed which had added this twofold agony of Don's illness to her sorrow-laden soul. Indian life had irked her to the deep-rooted thirst for revenge of the native if he believed himself wronged; but Don was ever so universal a favorite she could not fathom the seaman's attack. She had neither time nor heart to read the letter now.

Yet it was not till the channel packet moored alongside the Cowes pier, and she saw Roddy and Di, in response to her telegram, hurrying forward to greet her, the unnatural strain upon her endurance and calm gave way, and she fell on Diana's neck with the bitter, broken cry which meant the whole world to her.

"He is dying."

* * * * *

All that night Don's life was despaired of. His feeble pulse went down to the lowest ebb; and, as if that brief period of consciousness had sapped the last spark of vitality, his exhaustion was so great that at times they scarcely could tell if the breath of life had not gone out forever. There was no question of proceeding to Shamklin, where Roddy and Di had fondly expected to welcome bride and bridegroom to their cottage home.

To the big hotel overlooking the azure sea they carried Don to die. True, the fever had left him now, but it had left him prostrate, helpless as an infant. He slept continuously, knowing not the difference between night and day, sometimes dimly conscious of a loving hand ever ready to minister to his wants, but too weak, too far out on that limitless gulf that flows between the worlds to dream of what awaited him on either shore.

And Lillie? She must have suffered even if she had not loved him, and her love during those long weeks of nursing had become to her both life and food.

She sat by him while night waned and dawn broke. "Why seek rest when sleep was impossible?" she argued. And so they let her have her way, passing in and out of the sick room, always to find her sitting there, with her blue eyes fixed upon Don's face, motionless, almost breathless in her piteous despair. But just as the sun was rising and bathing the fair world without in a blaze of golden light Diana stole to her with some refreshment, to find her sitting up in her chair, a hectic flush on her face, her eyes aflame with mingled excitement and grief. A letter lay open on her lap. It was the letter the captain of the troopship had given her, and which had lain in her pocket forgotten until now, when a chance thought recalled it.

It was written in Hindostanee, and bore the straggling signature of one who had so ruthlessly wrecked "the White Lily's" peace. The signature was Sing, and was it wonder, as Lillie laboriously waded through its brief contents, passion and pain and remorse overwhelmed her bleeding heart?

"I command you to remove the despicable Feringhee (Englishman) Captain Gordon out of my path," ran the Prince's scroll. "Dotard! poltroon! that you were to take Captain Dewent's life in his stead! Your excuse that the darkness of the night and Captain Gordon's conduct led to your failure avail you nothing. You have robbed me of a friend, and let my foe go free. Expect neither reward nor mercy from me."

She understood it all now. The Indian whose knife had pierced Don's breast was no other than the sepoy, who, in the secret service of the Prince, had followed Don into Tirah. His orders had been to shoot Don, but in the gathering dusk of the nullah he had mistaken Captain Derwent for his intended victim. He had thereupon graphically reported Don's every word and action to try to account for the excitement which led to the misdirection of his own rifle. But Lillie, never weighed not at all with the haughty potentate, whose imperious will had thus been frustrated.

And the sepoy, with that blind devotion to his master which is the Indian's truest point, had willingly faced death, disguised as a seaman, again to make attempt to carry out the Prince's desire.

She realized with a shudder the awful strength of her royal lover's deep-rooted jealousy. She felt anew the agony of remorse doubly-fold.

In vain Diana, with her larger faith and greater endurance, tried to solace her. She knew intuitively that Di, in her noble abandonment of self, would have sacrificed her grief for the father who was dead in order to teach the comfort of repentance at the foot of the cross to the living husband's suffering soul.

And now Don was dying—dying! and that supreme privilege would never be hers. She might never hold his hand and say: "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." She had told Don she forgave him, yet she had bidden him go and work out his own repentance and salvation, bereft of earthly comfort and companionship—Don, whose nature she knew was so weak to resist temptation or endure hardship, who knew nothing of the strength of self-reliance or the trust in a redeemer.

Ah! what was her forgiveness worth?

Colonel Gordon from Gadie arrived at West Cowes on the second day following Roddy's message of Don's condition. Though his son undoubtedly held the first place in the old laird's heart, his nephew Don had ever received a large share of his affectionate solicitude, and he was profoundly moved by the young officer's illness.

Yet it was he who resolutely drew Lillie from the sick room, leaving Roddy and Diana to watch with the nurse through that time of dread crisis. He saw the strength of the girl wife was all but sapping beneath the awful strain, both physical and mental; and it was in those short, calm converses by the wide seashore at the brave old soldier's side that Lillie learned the greatest of faith's secrets—"He doeth all things well."

And it was then—then, when her heavy-laden heart had found relief in submission to that Higher Will than her own, the vital wave of Don's life, having ebbed to its furthest limit, began to flow back. The doctor's verdict went forth that it was possible Don might live.

Oh, the agony then of those nights and days! those alternate hours when life and death struggled for supremacy, and each hung in the balance!

Once more Lillie hovered almost incessantly by Don's pillow, living only in that hope of the first look, the first word of recognition. She hungered for it with an eager intensity that had no thought of self in it now.

She longed to pour out in his ears the comfort of that proof of the Prince's guilt and his own innocence. She told herself not even death could appal her now if but that brief communion of souls might be theirs, for suffering had taught her even resignation's wondrous hope.

"I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me."

* * * * * *

The sun was setting over the green, sloping hills and glinted on the fleets of yachts and little boats in the harbor and on the castle at its mouth. Away beyond the dividing River Medina rose Norris castle, with its fair parks extending to the shore, and still further were just visible the two square turrets of the little island home of the sovereign lady, Queen Victoria.

It was a fair, fair scene, and as Lillie stood at Don's window looking out upon it, her heart swelled with mingled patriotism and emotion. Ah, surely God, who was so merciful, would grant that Don, too, might yet revel in the fairness she now looked on?

Then suddenly, as she turned, she saw Don's eyes were open, and he was gazing upon her with the rapture of full consciousness which once before lit his face on board the great steamer. She went to him and fell on her knees beside his bed.

"My darling," he said faintly, and his weak arms went out to her and gathered her nearer and drew her head down to her breast. "Where are we?" he asked then, after a moment of silence that was too full for speech.

"We are home," she answered, in a voice of joy.

Through the near bay-window his eyes fell on the distant towers of Osborne, and suddenly, at that touch of memory, he kissed her passionately, with all the ardor of hope and life.

"My queen is here," he murmured.

Yes, like the Israelites of old, these two had needed to pass through the wide red sea of suffering ere they gained the promised land.

(The End.)

LIFE IN SAMOA.

Description of the Island People by Mrs. Strong.

Mrs. Isabel Strong, step-daughter of Robert Louis Stevenson, lived with the Stevenson family during most of their life in Samoa, and she was closely associated with Mr. Stevenson in his literary work. She told recently of the beauty of the island, and said it could really be called the "Emerald Isle," on account of the luxuriance of its tropical vegetation. Orchids grow there like buttercups and daisies in an English meadow. Stevenson had a great love for the place, and he considered it restful and full of inspiration. The natives looked upon him with veneration, and his mother, who always wore a white cap, they called an exiled princess, confusing the cap and the crown as symbolic of royalty. Mr. Stevenson became friendly with many of the natives and one of his pleasures was to see the effect upon them of highly civilized customs, as for instance, inviting twelve or more of the warriors to a course dinner, served with great formality. The warriors would come in native costume and never appeared ill at ease, always waiting for Mr. Stevenson to begin a course and then imitating exactly. Contrary to the life of most savage people, the women of Samoa do not do the heavy work, and under the teaching of Mr. Stevenson they became still more exempt from unnecessary burdens, and lived much the same domestic life as civilized women. In their dress they still retained, however, many savage traits, and it was not an unusual thing to see the children going to church attired only in a hat and a wreath of amilax. When Mr. Stevenson died, the natives built a coral road from his home to his grave, and this they call "the road of loving hearts." They have also built a hospital in his memory, and Mrs. Stevenson partly supports it, sending a yearly contribution. The natives have always been afraid the body would be removed from Samoa, and they guard the grave with great care.

A CHEROKEE ALPHABET.

It Has Been Invented by a Full Blooded Member of the Tribe.

The new hieroglyphic alphabet is a novelty. It is the invention of a full blooded Cherokee Indian, by name Sequoayah. He has for a long time sought some method of writing the Cherokee language, hitherto only spoken. He found that the English letters would not express the sounds of that tongue, nor would his fellow Cherokees take up the white man's letters. To overcome this difficulty he decided to invent a new alphabet, easy to learn and at the same time expressive of the sounds of the Cherokee language. The Indian eye will not easily come down to mere lines, so he used pictures of things to indicate the letters or sounds of letters. He succeeded at last in forming an alphabet of sixty-eight signs by which he could express all of the sounds of his native tongue. At the same time the letters are so large and distinct from each other as not to be easily confused. He first tried his new alphabet on his wife, and found that she could easily remember the sounds and learn to read. Then he called in half a dozen of the Cherokee warriors and tried his letters on them. Here again he succeeded. He wrote a few sentences in Cherokee, and they read them after a little training.

SULTAN PROMISES.

Under Pressure He Says What He Will do.

AGREES TO REBUILD AMERICAN MISSIONS

Lloyd Griscom, the United States charge d'affairs at Constantinople, has cabled the state department that the Turkish minister for foreign affairs has communicated to the ambassadors that the porte will not raise tariffs without previous agreement with the powers.

A Constantinople April 23, dispatch says an imperial irade has been formulated by the Sultan authorizing the rebuilding of the property of the American missionaries at Kharput and the construction of an annex to the Roberts college at Constantinople.

The state department had no official confirmation of the above dispatch from Constantinople announcing the sultan's irade regarding the proposed rebuilding of the American mission property at Karput. The news was received with considerable satisfaction however, being regarded by officials as a friendly act on the part of the sultan and possibly an earnest of full and final settlement of the indemnity claim. No one in authority was willing to discuss the matter in detail, but it is understood that the action of the sultan does not necessarily indicate that the claim for indemnity is abandoned or that the incident is closed.

BLOODY FIGHTING IN LUZON

Insurgent Activity in the Philippines Has Been Renewed.

A Manila dispatch says the past week has been one of the bloodiest of the war since the first days fighting around Manila. Authentic reports, mostly official, show a total of 378 Filipinos killed, twelve officers and 244 men captured and many more wounded. The number wounded is hardly guessable. Considering that the Filipinos entirely lack hospital facilities, a great majority of the wounded will die. Probably the week's work finished 1,000 insurgents. The American loss was nine killed and sixteen wounded. Two sergeants and one private were killed in ambushes while escorting provision trains.

The insurgents have been driven back in almost every province in Luzon. General Pilar's band, numbering 300, which was out of sight for three months, the leader being reported killed, has reappeared in its old field about San Miguel. Pilar is supposed to be again in command. He gave the American garrison at San Miguel, consisting of three companies of the 35th infantry, with a Gatling gun, a three hours's fight during a night attack. The loss of the insurgents in this engagement is not included in the foregoing total, as they removed their dead and wounded, but presumably it was considerable.

Arrest Them on Suspicion.

The dead body of Charles Burke was found on San Francisco at midnight in front of a house on Natoma street, occupied by John Dempsey and wife, who said he had been killed by falling down the front steps. His watch and $28 were found secreted in the house and the Dempseys were arrested. On March 14 William Gill was found dead in the same place, under similar circumstances and the Dempseys gave the same explanation of his death as they have offered in the case of Burke.

The negro was pursued, and if captured can hardly escape lynching.
